Senator Laird: In accordance with the terms of the agreement, and it will have to start all over again.

Senator Flynn: Why?

Senator Laird: Because there simply will not be time to negotiate everything all over again.

Senator Grosart: Why?

Senator Laird: That is my sole reason for—

Senator Flynn: They are not concerned about this amendment.

Senator Laird: If it is amended it must go back to the House of Commons, and I am afraid of what would happen to it there.

Senator Grosart: If it is wrong, why should it not go back?

Senator Laird: I must say that I am in entire sympathy with the desire of the committee to protect the rights of third parties. However, I am afraid that if we do it legislatively we will run into the difficulty of the bill, as amended, not making the grade in the other place. And there is this time limit. It is for that reason, and that reason alone, I must vote against the amendment.

Senator McElman: May I ask a question of Senator Laird? You said that this bill has to go back to the National Assembly in Quebec City?

Senator Laird: Yes.

Senator McElman: What do you mean by that?

Senator Laird: All I know is that I have heard through hearsay that the National Assembly must deal with it again and confirm it, after we confirm it here. Senator Bourget, the sponsor of the bill, is actually my authority for that. If he has anything to add on the subject, he may do so.

Senator McElman: Do you not find it inconceivable that a bill passed in this house would have to be approved by any provincial legislature?

Senator Laird: Of course, they are parties to the agreement.

Senator McElman: Oh, it is the agreement to which you are referring, not the bill?

Senator Laird: You see, the agreement is part of the whole deal.

Senator McElman: I understand now.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, I wish to say a few words about the amendment moved by Senator Flynn.

You will recall that when I rose during the debate on second reading of this bill, I said an important principle was at stake. I must say from the outset that I am very disappointed by the reasons which Senator Laird has just given us to explain why he is opposed to the amendment moved by the opposition leader and to ask honourable senators to reject it. Senator Laird says it will delay future negotiations with the Inuit and the Crees. Not so. It has already been decided, they have their arrangements. The amendment moved by Senator Flynn will not delay in any way arrangements already made with the Inuit and the Crees.

One must fully understand the issue. When Senator Laird says that if the amendment is accepted it will delay settlement between the Crees and the Inuit, I suggest he has misinterpreted or misunderstood the agreement. He adds that if the bill is referred to committee with Senator Flynn's proposed amendment, by doing so we shall cause this bill to die on the order paper at the end of the session. But if Senator Laird were to study the report of the committee of the other place, he will see that several members of the Commons have also put this matter before the minister with an amendment similar to that proposed by the opposition leader. What has been the answer of the minister? As Senator Flynn said earlier, he thought the amendment moved in the committee of the other place should not be accepted because there was, he said, a guarantee in the agreement, under subsection 2.14 regarding Quebec's commitment to negotiate, not to recognize the extinguishment of rights, because rights are being extinguished—not to recognize a compensation, but to negotiate with third parties who did not take part in the agreement.

If my information is correct, I do not think the minister would look unfavourably upon the amendment moved by the opposition.

Furthermore, I think the Senate should for once not create a precedent but impress on the Government of Quebec that it should correct an injustice and say the same things it was saying when it was in the opposition. But now that he is in power, the Minister of Natural Resources is telling a different story. I would remind honourable senators that when the Parti Québécois was in the opposition, through its parliamentary leader, Mr. Jacques-Yvan Morin, it had expressed on behalf of the Parti Québécois certain reservations about the passage of the bill before the National Assembly precisely on that matter which is under consideration and which we are discussing tonight. Just recently, Mr. Morin told reporters that he had not changed his mind on the positions he had taken when he was the Leader of the Official Opposition.

I regret to say, also, that the reasons given by Senator Laird for not supporting the amendment disappoint me greatly because we have before us a most important principle to stand for.

Senator Perrault suggested yesterday that the Senate should pursue its goals which are to protect the rights of minorities, regions and provinces. Well, honourable senators, we are faced with a case of minority rights, and they are being denied rights they have under certain titles they will be able to prove. I am not impressed, as I say, by the suggestion that certain inconveniences could arise if the bill were passed as amended by the Leader of the Opposition, that it could create problems for certain parties. But at least the Senate would have played its role as a protector of minorities. It would be extremely disappointing in face of such a clear and patent case, as the Leader of the Opposition explained, that the Senate should again make up reasons for suggesting it cannot play its role because inconveniences might arise if the amendment were accepted.

Honourable senators, we have to correct a grave injustice that third parties who are not party to the agreements will have to suffer if the Senate does not intervene by passing the amendment that is now before us. I regret to say that I would not be very proud of the Senate if for subordinate reasons it were to let the opportunity go by to stand for the principle of protecting minority rights. I hope, honourable senators, that before you vote against the amendment you will think about it twice because it is our duty, as I said, to carry out our responsibilities, and particularly to safeguard a principle that is dear, that is important to third parties who are not party to the agreement. So, obviously, I wholeheartedly support the amendment put forward by Senator Flynn.

● (2140)

[English]

Hon. H. Carl Goldenberg: Honourable senators, I do not propose to debate this issue. I merely rise in fairness to the committee of which I have the honour to be chairman.

The point raised by Senator Flynn was that the term in the clause to which he objects, namely, "All native claims, rights, title and interests, whatever they may be," covers everything. He said that at the committee meeting. I was asked to invite someone who could give us a legal opinion on that, and therefore contacted the Minister of Justice. I was told that Mr. Paul Ollivier, the Acting Deputy Minister, would be in a position to answer questions in this regard since he was, in one way or another, involved in the drafting of the bill. I just want to report to the Senate what Mr. Ollivier said, and I quote from the proceedings of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs of June 21, 1977.

SENATOR FLYNN: No; the clause provides: "all native claims, rights, title and interests, whatever they may be . . ." That covers everything.

MR. OLLIVIER: I would say that it does not cover the right to compensation, but that right only arises following the extinguishment, so we do not extinguish the right to compensation.

Senator Flynn: On a point of order. Senator Goldenberg seems to indicate that I said that there was unanimous agreement with my interpretation of that. If you want to say that some people disagreed, I accept that. I know that full well.

Senator Goldenberg: I certainly did not say that everyone was in agreement. I said most distinctly that this was the point made by Senator Flynn in committee, and it was a proper point. In answer to a request by the committee I called upon someone who could give us a legal opinion, and this person was the Acting Deputy Minister of Justice who was involved in this.

I will repeat what I have said. I am quoting Mr. Ollivier's reply to Senator Flynn.

MR. OLLIVIER: I would say that it does not cover the right to compensation, but that right only arises following the extinguishment, so we do not extinguish the right to compensation.

Again, Mr. Ollivier, in answer to further questions, said:

I must say that I do not see how we can extinguish a right to compensation before the right arises and it only arises as a result of extinguishment.

I repeat, honourable senators, in fairness to the committee—and Senator Flynn may laugh, although I do not think it is a laughing matter—that the committee did get this opinion from the Acting Deputy Minister of Justice.

Senator Flynn: May I put a question, Senator Goldenberg? How does he interpret the reason given by Mr. Bérubé for refusing the amendment? He said that the agreement would be changed if we were to say that their right of compensation does not disappear. How can you reconcile the view of Mr. Ollivier with that of Mr. Bérubé, who is the Minister of National Resources of Quebec and who said that if we adopt this amendment we are going to change the agreement?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: In making a brief statement on this bill I want to assure honourable senators that I have been in active contact with the minister responsible in the other place, the Honourable Warren Allmand, who has made a very concerted effort to try to accommodate differences of opinion, and has attempted to negotiate the best possible arrangement with the Province of Quebec, as did his predecessors in that office.

Like all agreements, this one represents, inevitably, a meeting of minds. It may not represent perfection, either for the federal government or for the Province of Quebec, but it is the kind of compromise agreement which will undoubtedly confer substantial benefits upon the indigenous peoples of one of our important Canadian provinces.

I would like to review chronologically some of the considerations which have arisen during the process of negotiating this agreement. The extinguishment of native title in the territory covered by the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement was a fundamental issue between the Governments of Canada and Quebec throughout the negotiations on the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement. This is well known to all honourable senators. It is well known not only to members of the Senate committee but to members of both houses of Parliament. Quebec has held to its position that the extinguishment of all native interests in the territory was a pre-condition to its negotiating and signing an agreement with the Crees and Inuit. Canada recognized that other groups might have some interest in the territory, and, therefore, it was the federal government which insisted, after hard bargaining, on the inclusion of section 2.14, to protect the rights of native non-signatories, as a condition of extinguishment. There was a major challenge to the federal negotiating team to make certain that other groups who might have an interest in the territory be protected.

● (2150)

Upon the signature of the agreement, Canada and Quebec undertook to pass the necessary legislation to bring the agreement into effect. The agreement provides that such legislation must not impair the substance of the rights, undertakings and obligations provided for in the agreement, the obligation to compensate people who may not be formally within the terms of the agreement at this point. The proposed amendment goes beyond the agreement in purporting to impose additional obligations on one of the parties, namely, the Province of Quebec.

At the request of the Chairman of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, our distinguished colleague, Senator Goldenberg, and after a personal discussion which I had with the Honourable the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs, the minister wrote to the Honourable Yves Bérubé in the Province of Quebec to determine whether Quebec would accept an amendment to Bill C-9 as proposed in the committee. By letter dated June 14, Mr. Bérubé wrote the minister indicating that the proposed amendment, or any other amendment along the same lines, would not be acceptable to Quebec.

Senator Asselin: Did he say why? Did he explain the reason?

Senator Perrault: This position was taken by Mr. Bérubé, and I will—

Senator Asselin: Did he say why?

Senator Perrault: Please allow me to finish my statement, senator, and I may be able to answer some of your questions. I understand the complete text of this letter was tabled in the committee.

It is clear that if the bill were amended as proposed, or along similar lines, the Government of Quebec would consider the federal government in breach of the agreement. This could have the effect of delaying or even endangering the benefits to which the Crees and the Inuit of Northern Quebec are entitled under the agreement. It must be remembered that these two groups comprise about 90 per cent of the native population in the territory.

Another potentially dangerous consequence of any amendment is the effect on the current negotiations with the Naskapis of Schefferville who are not party to the agreement, but who are negotiating a settlement pursuant to section 2.14 of the agreement. They are now negotiating as a group under the terms of this compromise agreement including the condition—this protection of native rights—insisted upon by the federal negotiators. In the negotiations thus far Quebec and Canada have offered to the Naskapis substantially the same benefits as the Crees and Inuit will enjoy under the agreement. This is an indication that this section does have substance and is meaningful, and is going to result in benefits for those who may not be formally within the terms of the agreement. These benefits go far beyond any compensation which Quebec could be obliged by federal legislation to give the Naskapis. This point is extremely important. We have one group whose benefits are now under negotiation as a result of the federally-negotiated section 2.14, and negotiations are proceeding extremely well.

I have been advised by the minister that there remain approximately 1,200 natives, although that number could be higher—it is an approximate figure—living in the territory who are not parties to the agreement. While they may have some rights in the territory, most of the land traditionally used and occupied by them is outside of the territory and is not affected in any way by the extinguishment provisions of the bill. Quebec is obliged to negotiate with these natives, as well as any native groups living outside of the territory, if they can establish rights therein. Canada has agreed, both in section 2.14 of the agreement and in the 1973 policy statement on native claims, to participate in the settlement of any valid claims in the area. So the federal government has not adopted the attitude of some sort of Pontius Pilate. It is not right to say that the Canadian government is not concerned about the rights of these native groups. The Canadian government, the federal government, remains very much concerned that justice be done to all of these groups both within and outside the formal terms of the agreement.

In summary, what is the situation that we have before us tonight? Quebec has made its position very clear. Any amendment that compels, or has the effect of compelling, the Province of Quebec to enlarge its undertakings is not acceptable. The minister, I understand, has gone to the Quebec government four times now suggesting how we would like additional strengthening of this proposed agreement. The Government of Quebec has not been receptive to the idea of moving beyond the present negotiated point.

Senator Flynn: That proves that we are right.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I have yet to see any bill come before Parliament which represents absolute perfection, or any agreement which represents perfection. We can review many negotiated agreements, settlements and treaties—for example, the Columbia River Treaty where both Canada and the United States, each side, felt that somehow a better agreement could have been achieved and the right of their citizens could have been more fully protected. But compromise is the very essence of negotiated agreements.

Senator Grosart: But here we are dealing with the human rights of native peoples.

Senator Perrault: If the amendment is approved, and the bill returned to the Commons, Quebec will undoubtedly claim breach of contract and stop all action on ancillary legislation flowing from the agreement. There is serious doubt, in view of the late date, that there is even sufficient time to review all of the problems before November 11, and therefore it is very possible that the agreement, which is a good agreement, could fall. This accord, this agreement, may not meet all of the conditions which some honourable senators or some members of the other place may like to see. But it certainly does not meet all of the negotiating conditions originally established by the Province of Quebec. We have, in fact, a good agreement after tough negotiation.

Honourable senators, in all candour I must say additionally that the willingness of the Province of Quebec to negotiate a settlement of claims with those native peoples within the agreement and those outside the agreement goes beyond the actions of almost any other provincial government in this country, and I suggest that honourable senators check the status of Indian rights and native land claims in the other Canadian provinces. I would like to see evidence from any other province where the kind of agreement we are discussing tonight has been placed on paper, and where there has been an expressed willingness by that provincial government to settle claims such as these on terms such as these with their indigenous peoples.

Senator Asselin: They have no hydro project.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, we have to be realistic and frank about this. Like all agreements, this one represents a meeting of minds. It does not aspire to perfection. It is a compromise as a result of five years of tough bargaining between provincial and federal authorities. The negotiations began, indeed, with the previous provincial Government of Quebec, so this is not a position evolved solely by the present Government of Quebec. Indeed, the negotiations began when there was a different Premier and Government of Quebec in office.

I repeat, the agreement does not represent perfection for either side, but it is a compromise agreement which offers substantial benefits for indigenous peoples in one of our provinces. If this agreement falls to the ground, those indigenous peoples will find their possible benefits placed in great jeopardy. This is not a callous washing of hands, a denial of human rights by the federal government; it is not an attitude that disregards the rights, the needs and the claims of indigenous peoples who may be outside the agreement. Indeed, the opposite position is held by the federal government. There is no such attitude of abandonment of these native peoples by the federal government at all. And there never has been by the present Minister of Indian Affairs, who has pledged that, if necessary, federal resources and powers will be brought into play to protect the rights of all those affected by this agreement.

● (2200)

On motion of Senator Grosart, debate adjourned.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 3, 1977

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, June 23, the debate on the motion of Senator Langlois for the second reading of Bill C-58, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1978.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I do not know whether I am in order in rising after 10 o'clock. Perhaps I should rise with leave.

We are dealing, of course, with an appropriation act, badly named, I might say, Appropriation Act No. 3 for 1977. I repeat the criticism I made once before. This is, of course, only the second appropriation act referring to the estimates of expenditures for the year 1976-77. I am wondering if the Leader of the Government or the deputy leader has taken any steps to bring to the attention—I am making suggestions that the Leader of the Government may be interested in if he cares to listen.

Senator Perrault: I am listening with rapt attention.

Senator Grosart: I am wondering if either the leader or the deputy leader has taken any steps to bring to the attention of those responsible, the draftsmen, Treasury Board, or whoever it might be, the absurdity of this situation where Appropriation Bill No. 1 for this year dealt with supplementary estimates (D) for last year. Surely it is time we caught up with the fact that we are now working in terms of the federal government fiscal year, not on the calendar year. We have changed it. Surely it is about time we changed this absurdity. Perhaps in due course the leader or the deputy leader will let us know if any steps are being taken to remedy this situation. It is very simple. All it means is that the next bill will be properly numbered, and that is the end of it. It does not require legislation. It requires nothing but a common sense decision on the part of somebody to number these bills in a sensible way.

This bill deals, of course, with only $14 billion. Perhaps I should apologize for using the adjective "only" in connection with it, but in terms of the kind of expenditures we are faced with and the decisions of the present government $14 billion is an "only." This is only a portion of the total of $44 billion, which are the estimates for the current year. The $14 billion is an essential part of the $19 billion of the total of $44 billion which requires endorsement by vote of Parliament. The expenditure of the other $5 billion was endorsed when we had Appropriation Bill No. 2, so-called, before us.

As the deputy leader, in introducing the bill, made it clear, the estimates this year have had a more thorough examination by our Standing Senate Committee on National Finance than at any time in many years. I compliment the chairman of our National Finance Committee, who I see is in his seat, on that great improvement in the examination of the estimates by the Senate. I understand it is his intention, and the intention of the committee, to extend that examination. I will refer to that in a moment. The committee has held three long sessions, examining the minister and the officials of the department, in considerable detail about these estimates.

However, one of the most interesting things that I think all of us who have been involved in the estimates have discovered is that they are a tremendous mine of information and a source of questions. I see Senator Benidickson here, who I think has the same reaction as I have. Every time he looks at them he finds a new question. The same applies to myself and to other members of the committee.

I think there is now general agreement in the committee, and in the Senate, that the way the National Finance Committee is proceeding makes good sense; that is, we are dealing with government expenditures in two ways, one in a general overview, which is what has taken the three sessions so far against usually one session in the past, and, secondly, the examination of individual departments or programs of departments. I think nothing indicates more clearly the absolute necessity of Parliament examining in more detail the estimates put before it than the results of the work of the National Finance Committee.

In the case of the Department of Manpower, the minister has told us that 52 of 56 recommendations of the committee have been implemented, or will be implemented, by the department, meaning that up to the time our committee looked at the procedures and programs of that department in depth there were these many things that needed to be changed. Only today, with respect to the examination of another program, the Accommodation Program of the Department of Public Works, the minister came before the committee and, in a long statement, said in effect, "You have shown us things that should be corrected, and we are relying on you to back us up to get support for these kinds of changes."

I merely say that these things indicate the depth of probing that needs to be done if Parliament as a whole—I am not just speaking of this chamber, but Parliament as a whole—is to get the kind of control of spending that Parliament is always asking. There is always a good deal of criticism of the government, that the government seems to resist any attempt by Parliament to get control of spending. On the other hand, it seems to me there is some reason to believe that Parliament itself could have done, and could do, a great deal more to get control, even if it had to be faced with majority votes against any proposal that was made. And that would apply, of course, to the committee.

Looking over the estimates again, and recalling some of the comments I have heard from honourable senators, I find many questions still unanswered. I am not saying the answers are not available. Let us start with the introductory clauses, subclause 3(2), where there is a provision that, no matter what we do here, the spending authority is in reality retroactive to the start of the fiscal year. Obviously commitments have been made. Of the vote, a total of $5 billion of $19 billion has been authorized. I suppose the departments and the Treasury Board will say, "We haven't actually spent any money that has not been authorized," although I doubt if that would stand up. Certainly they have committed it, and those commitments have the effect of spending, of course; they are commitments of the Government of Canada that will be honoured, and therefore we are in this absurd position, on almost July 1, of authorizing expenditures retroactively back to April 1.

It may be said that none of this money has been spent. Well, if it has not been spent, or if it is not the intention to spend it, what is the sense of the retroactive clause? It is either meaningful or meaningless, and it is obviously meaningful.

There is provision, for example, for $800 million, which is under the estimate of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, which provides for a well-known recent situation; namely, vote 15 under the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, which deals with the Energy Supplies Allocation Board. It provides for payments—I will not go into them in detail—to persons importing crude oil or petroleum products. The purpose of such payments is to restrain prices of petroleum products to consumers, particularly in the Atlantic provinces, Quebec and that part of Ontario east of the Ottawa Valley line. That amount is $800 million. I am sure honourable senators will be interested in knowing the net expenditure by the department, because we are aware that funds to match some of this are provided by the surtax on exports of crude oil and petroleum products.

● (2210)

It seems to me that the government is not very wise in including it in the estimates in this form. It increased by $800 million the total expenditures attributed to government planning when that is not actually the case, because the government in raising some of this money by another tax, and the tax is being paid by the Americans. That is the kind of thing about which we do not hear, and often it is not raised before the ministers or officials. Only the other day I was asked a question about this by an honourable senator.

For example, we have some $400 million now provided for the research activities of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. Again, the question that honourable senators have asked me—and I am sure they have asked it of others—is: Where are we going on this? What is the end result of these fantastic expenditures? I am not opposing them. I am not saying there is anything wrong with them. But we should know what these expenditures are going to provide in the future in the way of necessary energy sources in the electrical field, because there are those who say that it is not all that significant.

We have had some evidence that atomic reactors, as a source of energy, are not anything like as important as they were once thought to be. That is not my view, because I think that we are going to be in a position before long where we will rely almost entirely on coal or atomic reactors, and the evidence seems to be that energy from atomic reactors will in the long run be cheaper and less likely to pollute than coal.

However, that is the kind of thing that I suggest comes out of any kind of study of the estimates. Yet we do not seem, in any of the discussions in the other place or here, to get these broad overview reactions.

I am not suggesting that these kinds of questions should be answered now by the Deputy Leader of the Government, although he usually responds very well to any questions that we raise.

I could mention many other items that raise the same kind of questions. For example, there is provision for the federal government to acquire further land at the Pickering site. One wonders if they are going to go ahead still acquiring land after the problems which arose, but the provision is there for the government to acquire more land in Pickering when obviously they have more land than they know what to do with, as at Mirabel. There are such questions also as to the provision made in the estimates for the Treasury Board to acquire—I hope not as an investment—4.5 per cent CNR preferred stock. I do not think anyone here would recommend that as an investment.

I am merely raising these points to indicate the kind of study that these estimates seem to require. Another item, of course, would be the Treasury Board contingency fund, which is now up to $180 million. It was originally funded at high levels to provide an undisclosed cushion of available funds for negotiations with government employees. It seems to me, under the present AIB regulations, that it might not be needed. But again, I have not seen a full explanation, although the question was raised in committee.

I mention these items merely to suggest the justification for the announcement by the chairman that the National Finance Committee is engaged at the moment in the study of the factors involved in the committee's enlarging its activities. It is not an easy problem to solve. Again I compliment the chairman on the fact that he has tackled the problem and has come up with some suggested solutions which are under discussion in committee.

One announcement that was made in this chamber was that these estimates, and particularly bills arising out of the estimates, should automatically be referred to the committee of the whole. This has been discussed. Honourable senators will recall that for the first time in a very long time Appropriation Bill No. 2 was referred to the Committee of the Whole for a particular reason, that the bill was a different bill, different in substance, from the interim supply bill that had been referred to committee. There was a difference, so there was reason on that occasion.

The Deputy Leader of the Government was good enough to tell me that he was prepared to move, if it was felt necessary, that this bill go to the Committee of the Whole. I am authorized to say to him that we do not regard it as necessary in this case, largely because of the time factor, and so on. We do so, as my learned friends of the law would say, without prejudice. We are glad that the government has accepted the principle that a bill such as this, an appropriation bill, even though the estimates on which it has been based have been discussed by our committee, can still go to the Committee of the Whole if there appears to be reason why it should. However, I say to the Deputy Leader of the Government in this chamber, as I have said to him privately, that we on this side of the house do not consider it necessary in this particular case.

Hon. Léopold Langlois: Honourable senators, due to the lateness of the hour, I shall be as brief as possible in my remarks—

The Hon. the Speaker: I must inform honourable senators that if the honourable Senator Langlois speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Langlois: My honourable friend opposite referred to this request which was made to the numbering of the appropriation bills on the basis of a fiscal year instead of a calendar year. The request was again made in March last when we had Appropriation Bill No. 2 before us, and which covered interim supply for the three months from April to June.

At that time I gave the assurance that this matter was going to receive consideration, and it did. It is still under active consideration. However, I understand that we shall have to wait at least until we have disposed of the estimates for 1977-78 before we can decide on the matter, otherwise this year we would have two bills entitled "Appropriation Bill No. 2."

• (2220)

I am confident that when we deal with the estimates for 1978-79 we will be able to adopt the practice of basing the numbering of supply bills on a fiscal year basis as opposed to a calendar year basis.

Dealing with my honourable friend's remarks concerning the funds necessary to pay the contributions to importers of crude into the area east of the Ottawa River, which was known at one time as the Borden line—and as he so indicated this evening—these expenditures are offset in part only by moneys collected from American importers of crude from western Canada. These exports of crude to the U.S. are being phased out, with the result that the funds derived from that source are declining. As we proceed with the phasing out of our exports to the U.S. on account of the shortage of reserves on this side of the border, the offsetting of expenditures to cover imports of crude for the area east of the Ottawa River will diminish.

If my honourable friend wishes to know the net result, I would be pleased to provide that information to him, either publicly or privately. I can undertake this evening to endeavour to obtain the net result at this time. That might not, however, be the net result in two or three months from now because of the fact that the offsetting of these expenditures diminishes as our exports to the U.S. diminish.

Coming back to his remarks regarding the acquisition of lands for the Pickering Airport Project, that is another area where, if my honourable friend would give me the time, I could secure the information for him. That could be done in a matter of a day or so.

As far as the purchase of CNR bonds is concerned, I think that information has been supplied to the house already. I would only be repetitive were I to provide that information again. I am at the disposal of my honourable friend to inform him to the best of my knowledge of that situation.

As far as the matter of interim supply bills being committed to the Committee of the Whole, as my honourable friend acknowledged when Appropriation Bill No. 2 was before us, I agreed that that bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole, which it was, and I think it was a very good experience. I have had the occasion since to tell my honourable friends opposite, and particularly my honourable friend the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, that I would be ready to accept other such experiments in the future, provided I am given sufficient notice of the wish of the opposition in that respect so that I may arrange to have the necessary officials in attendance. I should have liked to have done so on this occasion as it would have been the last occasion on which we would have had our good friend Mr. Bruce MacDonald, Deputy Secretary of the Program Branch of the Treasury Board, appear before us in that capacity. As honourable senators are no doubt aware, he is to assume the post of Deputy Minister, Department of National Revenue, effective July 1. I should like to take this opportunity to thank Mr. MacDonald for the splendid work he has done in the past in informing us about the estimates and explaining the expenditures to us. I want to thank him for the devotion he has given to his job over the past years and to wish him well in his new post.

Senator Benidickson: I think all members of the committee would want to join with you in expressing that vote of thanks.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Langlois moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

HELSINKI AGREEMENT—PRINTED INFORMATION—INQUIRY ANSWERED

Senator Thompson inquired of the government pursuant to notice of May 18, 1977:

1. What specific efforts has the Canadian government made to promote the export of Canadian printed information to Eastern European Communist countries in view of the Belgrade Conference to be held in June to examine the implementation of the Helsinki Agreement with respect to Basket III, section 2, headed "Printed Information"?

2. What Canadian newspapers, including Canadian ethnic publications, are distributed in Eastern European Communist countries?

3. What are the countries and in what number are these publications distributed in each of these countries?

Senator Perrault: The answer to the honourable senator's inquiry is as follows:

1. The provision on "Printed Information" in Basket III, section 2, as it applies to Canada, relates to the intention of Canada to facilitate the dissemination in Canada of printed information from other participating states. It does not deal with the export from Canada of printed information.

2. The Canadian government itself does not distribute Canadian newspapers. The Toronto Globe and Mail is the only Canadian newspaper on which we have information regarding commercial sales.

3. USSR: 50 copies of the Globe and Mail daily in 1976, now increased to 60 copies apparently for sale at certain newstands in Moscow, Leningrad and Kiev plus 4 subscriptions to two institutions in Moscow. Czechoslovakia: 11 subscriptions of the Globe and Mail apparently for sale in Prague.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

(See p. 1000)

REPORT

ON

THE WHITE PAPER

ON

CANADIAN BANKING LEGISLATION

THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON
BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

CONTENTS

Summary

I GENERAL INTRODUCTION

II CANADIAN PAYMENTS ASSOCIATION

- (a) Introduction
- (b) Constitutional Aspect
- (c) Reserves
- (d) Quebec Savings Banks Act
- (e) Responsiveness of near-banks to monetary control
- (f) Membership
- (g) Recommendations

III RESERVES FOR CHARTERED BANKS

- (a) Introduction
- (b) Amount and form of reserves
- (c) Primary Reserve
- (d) Secondary Reserve
- (e) Payment of Interest on Primary Reserve
- (f) Reserves on Term Deposits
- (g) Reserves on Foreign Currency Deposits used Domestically
- (h) Recommendations

IV ENTRY INTO BANKING

- (a) Incorporation of new banks
- (b) Ownership of bank shares by Provincial Governments

V FOREIGN BANKS

- (a) General considerations
- (b) Restrictions
 - (1) as to size
 - (2) number of offices
 - (3) share of commercial lending
- (c) Reciprocity and foreign ownership
- (d) Banking Consortiums and affiliated interests in other banks
- (e) Other proposals
- (f) Transitional provisions
- (g) Constitutional aspect
- (h) Limitations on borrowing on guarantee of parent
- (i) Recommendations

VI BANK BUSINESS POWERS

- (a) Financial Leasing
- (b) Factoring
- (c) Residential Mortgages
- (d) Data Processing
- (e) Securities
- (f) Trust and Quasi-Trust Activities
 - (1) Mutual Funds
 - (2) Registered Retirement Savings Plans
 - (3) Registered Home Ownership Plans
 - (4) Real Estate Investment Companies
 - (5) Portfolio Management
- (g) Bank Investments in Canadian Corporations
 - (1) Banking Operations
 - (2) Non-Financial Business
- (h) Extension of Credit against Security
- (i) Non-banking Activities of Special Social or Economic Benefit

VII BANK CORPORATE POWERS

Canada Business Corporations Act

- (a) Methods of financing
- (b) Financial disclosures
- (c) Loans to Directors
- (d) Appointment of Bank Auditors
- (e) Limitation on Holding of Bank Shares
- (f) Adequacy of Capital and Liquidity

VIII INTENDED SUBJECT MATTER OF REGULATIONS

APPENDIX A

Comparison of White Paper Proposals for cash reserves with Senate Committee's suggestion

APPENDIX B

Chartered bank reserves	Schedule I
	Schedule II

SUMMARY

The following is a summary of the major points and recommendations reported upon by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce in respect of the White Paper on Canadian Banking Legislation, August 1976.

Canadian Payments Association

- The White Paper proposes that a Canadian Payments Association be established by companion legislation to the Bank Act. All institutions accepting deposits transferable by order, including near-banks such as trust companies, caisses populaires and credit unions, will have direct access to national clearing facilities on a cost-sharing basis and will have certain borrowing facilities at the central bank. The White Paper proposes to require members to provide cash reserves to the extent of 2 per cent on the first $500 million of notice deposits and term deposits with an original term of one year or less, or longer if encashable, and 4 per cent on the excess over $500 million. The White Paper proposes that these reserves would be provided not only for clearing purposes and would bear equitably on all institutions including banks and near-banks, but also would provide a framework for monetary control. While in favour of the general principle of forming a Canadian Payments Association in order to give near-banks direct access to the national clearing system, the Committee is not in agreement with the necessity of extending monetary control at this time to near-banks, does not agree with the magnitude of the cash reserves as proposed and recommends that clearing members be required to maintain cash reserves based on chequable deposits (deposits transferable by order), only, in an amount reasonably necessary for clearing settlement purposes.

- The Committee recommends that each clearing member should be required to maintain two reserves for clearing purposes

(a) A Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve calculated by estimating a member's clearing settlement requirement based on its clearing drawdown experience in the previous year plus an adjustment to provide for estimated growth in requirement; but in any case this reserve should not be less than 1 per cent or more than 3 per cent of the member's chequable deposits (deposits transferable by order).

(b) An Overdraft Security Reserve which would be equal in amount to the Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve. This reserve would consist of interest-bearing Government of Canada bonds and treasury bills. Temporary borrowings could be made by a member against its Overdraft Security Reserve to cover occasional overdrafts, if any, in its Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve.

- The cash and investments for the above recommended Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve and Overdraft Security Reserve would be deposited by clearing members with the proposed Canadian Payments Association and by it with the Bank of Canada.

- The Bank of Canada would act as the depository for the said cash and investments in the reserves of members of the proposed Association.

- The Committee recommends that the Bank of Canada pay to the proposed Canadian Payments Association a reasonable rate of interest on the amount of cash balance in the Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve on deposit with the Bank of Canada and that the proposed Association allocate to each member its proportionate share.

- The Committee recommends that membership in the proposed Canadian Payments Association either as a full clearing member or as a non-clearing member should be compulsory for all financial institutions which accept deposits transferable by order.

Further, the Committee recommends that near-banks above a certain size be clearing members unless they elect to be non-clearing members. A non-clearing member would elect to clear through a clearing member and would keep its clearing settlement reserve accounts with that clearing member. The clearing member would be required to match the non-clearing member's reserve accounts by equivalent amounts of cash and securities in its reserves with the Canadian Payments Association.

- The Committee also recommends that the reserves which would be provided by chartered banks under the proposed Canadian Payments Association be considered as part of and an offset against their primary cash reserve and secondary reserve for purposes of calculating their reserves under the Bank Act.

Reserves for Chartered Banks

- The White Paper proposes that the legislative requirement for the equivalent of the present primary reserves required by chartered banks under The Bank Act be transferred to the proposed Canadian Payments Association Act. The Committee, however, recommends that the statutory requirements for the primary and secondary reserves required from chartered banks remain in their present general form under The Bank Act and the Bank of Canada Act.

- The Committee recommends that mandatory primary cash reserves required of chartered banks under the Bank Act be reduced from the present 12 per cent of demand deposits and 4 per cent of notice deposits payable in Canadian currency to 10 per cent and 3 per cent respectively; that the secondary reserve rate be maintained unchanged within a range of 0 per cent to 12 per cent of Canadian dollar deposit liabilities as at present, and that a substantial proportion of such secondary reserve, such as 20 per cent, be permitted to be made up of a broad range of short-term federal and provincial government and government guaranteed securities.

- The primary cash reserve is intended for liquidity purposes, but the amount in the past has been greatly in excess of requirements; the Bank of Canada invests these excess reserves and earns interest on such investments. The Committee recommends that the Bank of Canada pay interest to the chartered banks on the primary cash reserve required by the Bank Act (exclusive of the amount of cash required for clearing settlement purposes and subject to a deduction for expenses in connection with the handling of such reserve and the investment thereof.)

- The Committee is not in favour of the proposal to relieve banks of the requirement to maintain primary cash reserves against notice deposits of a term in excess of one year which are encashable, unless there is some requirement for banks to match the maturity of the increased amount of term deposits with investments in mortgage loans in order to maintain an adequate flow of funds into residential mortgages. A reduction of the primary reserve requirement from 4 per cent to 3 per cent of notice deposits as recommended above would narrow the rate differential between banks and near-banks.

- The White Paper proposes that reserve requirements with respect to foreign currency deposits used in Canada be at the 4 per cent rate. The Committee is of the opinion that this would put Canadian chartered banks at a rate disadvantage in competing with foreign controlled financial institutions in Canada which are not subject to reserve requirements under The Bank Act. The Committee recommends that this proposal not be implemented unless the Bank of Canada pays interest to the banks on such reserves.

Entry into Banking

- The Committee recommends that if the White Paper proposal to permit incorporation of new banks by letters patent is adopted, an appropriate committee be established to review applications for incorporation, to permit interested parties to make representations and to make recommendations to the Minister whether or not incorporation should be granted.

Ownership of Bank Shares by Provincial Governments

- The Committee is not in favour of the White Paper proposal to permit provincial governments to hold, own or vote, directly or indirectly, capital stock shares of banks.

Foreign Banks

- The White Paper proposes to provide a basis for Canadian affiliates of foreign-owned banks to operate under Canadian banking legislation with a view to achieving a balance between maximizing competition and ensuring that control of the financial institutions remain predominantly in Canadian hands.

- The Committee recommends the approval of the White Paper proposal, subject to modifications below, to place the following limits on the growth of foreign owned banks in Canada:

- restriction of the combined market share of such banks to 15 per cent of total commercial lending in Canada
- a limit in growth of an individual foreign bank's Canadian subsidiary to $500 million of assets or 20 times its authorized capital based on approved increases in its authorized capital to $25 million.

- The Committee recommends that any limitations on size be indexed to the growth of Canadian bank assets in Canada to permit such banks to grow reasonably after they reach the above limits on size.

Your Committee also recommends the approval of the White Paper proposals to restrict foreign bank subsidiaries to one place of business, or with the approval of the Minister of Finance a maximum of five branches, but that further increases be permitted as may be deemed advisable under reciprocity arrangements with other countries.

- The Committee is opposed to the proposed denial of the possibility of borrowing in the Canadian market on the guarantee of the foreign parent; the Committee recommends that such borrowing not be prohibited, but be limited to 50 per cent of the Canadian affiliates' total combined borrowing liabilities and shareholders' equity.

- The Committee recommends that "affiliate" and "foreign bank affiliate" be defined in any amending legislation in relation to the operations of a foreign bank subsidiary and its parent in a joint venture or consortium in Canada (in association with other banking interests either a foreign bank, a foreign bank subsidiary or a Canadian bank).

Financial Leasing

- The Committee recommends the approval of the White Paper proposal to permit banks specifically to engage in financial leasing of equipment on a non-operating full pay-out basis, but recommends that dependence on a residual value of the equipment should be limited to 10% of the acquisition cost and not 20% as proposed in the White Paper, and further that banks be permitted to engage in financial leasing operations through separate wholly-owned subsidiary companies.

Factoring

- The Committee recommends the approval of the White Paper proposal to permit banks specifically to engage in factoring, and that banks be permitted to conduct factoring through separate wholly-owned subsidiaries.

Residential Mortgages

- The Committee recommends that the present limit on a bank's mortgage portfolio be raised from 10% of Canadian dollar liabilities and debentures to 15%, instead of the limit being removed altogether as proposed in the White Paper.

Investment in Shares of Banks by Credit Unions and Caisses Populaires

- The Committee recommends that centrals, federation or regional unions be deemed to be associated with their member credit unions and caisses populaires, and the Committee recommends that their combined holdings of shares in a bank, directly or indirectly, be limited to 10% of the outstanding shares, and not 25% as proposed in the White Paper.

Investments in Canadian Corporations

- The Committee recommends that the time limit for banks to dispose of excess investments in Canadian corporations and joint ventures be extended from two years as proposed by the White Paper to five years in order to permit an orderly divestiture.

Data Processing

- The Committee recommends that the proposal in the White Paper to place a restriction in the Bank Act concerning the limitation of banks to providing data processing services directly related to the making of payments not be approved, for the reason that sufficient restriction and protection against unfair competition is already embodied in the Combines Investigation Act and the proposed amending legislation (An Act to Amend the Combines Investigation Act—Bill C-42 presented for first reading on March 16, 1977).

Securities

- The Committee recommends the adoption of the White Paper proposals to specify areas for dealing in securities where banks will be permitted or excluded, such as, for example:

- Excluded—underwriting corporate securities

- acting as agent in private placements.

- Permitted—distributing corporate securities as members of a selling group; distributing federal securities

- underwriting and distributing securities of federal government agencies, securities of provincial and municipal governments as well as securities of international agencies of which Canada is a member.

Quasi-Trust Activities

Mutual Funds

- The Committee recommends the adoption of the White Paper proposal that banks be prohibited from the management of mutual funds in order to avoid potential conflicts between the bank as commercial lender and fund manager.

Registered Retirement Savings Plans and

Registered Home Ownership Savings Plans

The Committee recommends the approval of the White Paper proposal to restrict banks to offering registered retirement savings plans (RRSPs) and registered home ownership savings plans (RHOSPs) in the form of deposit plans only. Banks will also be permitted to offer bond and equity plans in respect of RRSPs and RHOSPs provided the proceeds are handed over for management to a fund operating at arm's length from the bank; this is to avoid possibilities of conflict of interest, the bank acting as a vendor of bond and equity RRSPs and RHOSPs, and acting as fund manager.

Real Estate Investment Trust and

Mortgage Investment Companies

- The Committee recommends the approval of the White Paper proposal that banks be permitted to continue to act as advisors for real estate investment trust (REITs) and mortgage investment companies (MICs) on the condition that the REITs and MICs have a board of trustees or directors, the majority of whom are independent of the bank.

Portfolio Management, Investment Counselling and Securities Advising

- The Committee recommends the approval of the White Paper proposals to restrict banks from portfolio management and investment counselling other than for real estate investment trusts and mortgage investment companies, and to permit advice on particular securities to small clients or infrequent investors with no other contracts in the financial community.

Other Financial Activities

- Except as authorized by the Bank Act for investments in such companies as mortgage loan companies and bank service corporations, the White Paper proposes that banks would not be permitted to acquire more than 10% of the voting shares of Canadian corporations engaged primarily in financial activities. Provision is made in the proposals of $5 million limit to be exceeded temporarily, for investments of $5 million or less and for ownership in venture capital corporations. Provision is also made for disposal of excess investments to be divested within two years; provisions for the limit on and disposal of venture capital investments are to be subject to regulations.

- The Committee recommends the approval of these White Paper proposals but recommends that the time limit for disposing of excess investments and mature venture capital investments be extended from two years to five years.

Extension of Credit Against Security

- The Committee recommends the approval of the White Paper proposal to modify the Bank Act to meet developing and changing needs such as extension of facilities to give security and borrow on mineral reserves, on feed for livestock and for the purpose of overhauling of agricultural equipment.

Non-Banking Activities of Special Social or Economic Benefit

- The Committee recommends the approval of the White Paper proposal to regularize the sale by banks of urban transit tickets, lottery tickets which are sponsored by federal, provincial and municipal governments and on a non-profit basis, tickets for projects of a non-commercial and public service nature. The Committee recommends however that banks should be permitted to sell tickets on a remunerative basis only for projects of a certain restricted and specified nature.

Bank Corporate Powers

- The Committee recommends the approval of the following White Paper proposals designed to improve and clarify the corporate powers of banks in the following areas:

- Coordination with the Canada Business Corporations Act

- Coordination with the Combines Investigation Act

- Broadening of methods of financing by banks

- Improvement in financial disclosures to shareholders and to the public

- Extension of provisions concerning loans to directors

- The White Paper notes that the appointment of individuals as auditors of banks has given rise to some difficulties where the individuals have been unavailable on short notice in connection with bank business. The White Paper proposes that banks be permitted the option of appointing either individuals or firms. The Committee recommends that firms of public accountants be appointed as auditors, but with the bank being required to designate the name of the partner it wishes to direct the audit work.

- Your Committee recommends that the government institute a study on the adequacy of capital of banks, embracing such matters as liquidity, leverage and capital structure, with a view to developing minimum standards for Canadian banks applicable to both domestic and foreign operations.

Regulations

- The Committee recommends that particular attention be given to the matter of attempting to administer the Bank Act through regulations.

The Committee further recommends that a draft of the proposed regulations be issued for public examination at the time the Bill to Amend the Bank Act is presented.

Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce

Relating to the Subject Matter of the White Paper on the Revision of Canadian Banking Legislation—proposals issued on behalf of the Government of Canada by the Honourable Donald S. Macdonald

Minister of Finance

August 1976

28 June, 1977

I

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

In August 1976 the Minister of Finance issued the White Paper on the Revision of Canadian Banking Legislation. This White Paper was tabled in the Senate on Thursday, 21st October, 1976.

On November 3, 1976 the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce was authorized by the Senate to examine and report upon this document and the subject matter of any bill arising therefrom, in advance of such bill coming before the Senate or any matter thereto.

In accordance with the Order of Reference, your Committee has given careful consideration to the said White Paper and in connection therewith had the benefit of the services and expert assistance of Mr. Charles Albert Poissant, C.A., and Mr. John F. Lewis, C.A., of Thorne Riddell & Co., Chartered Accountants, advisers to the committee and retained its legal counsel, Mr. David W. Scott, Q.C., of Scott & Aylen.

For purposes of brevity and identification "White Paper on the Revision of Canadian Banking Legislation—proposals issued on behalf of the Government of Canada by the Honourable Donald S. Macdonald, Minister of Finance, August 1976" will be referred to in this report as the "White Paper" and the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will be referred to as "your Committee" or "the Committee".

Your Committee has studied carefully the contents of the White Paper and has in the course of such studies received and listened to representations from various organizations and other interested parties. In addition to the representations and submissions made during the hearings, your Committee received a considerable number of letters and other communications from companies and associations who did not appear before your Committee. Copies of many submissions made to the Minister of Finance, pertinent to the White Paper, were also made available to and were studied by your Committee.

Your Committee devoted several meetings to a study of the White Paper and held ten other meetings at which witnesses appeared before your Committee as follows:

December 1, 1976: Association of Canadian Financial Corporations

December 8, 1976: Trust Companies Association of Canada

December 15, 1976: The Canadian Bankers Association

February 15, 1977: La Fédération des Caisses Populaires Desjardins and other federations; National Association of Canadian Credit Unions

February 16, 1977: Federation of Automobile Dealers Associations of Canada

March 9, 1977: Montreal City and District Savings Bank

March 23, 1977: Citicorp Ltd.; Barclays Canada Limited

March 30, 1977: Toronto-Dominion Bank

April 27, 1977: Midland Financial Services Limited

May 18, 1977: British Bankers' Association; Grindlays Bank Limited

The proposals in the White Paper, as outlined in its Summary, are "based on the assumption that Canadians want a banking and financial system which is national in scope, controlled by Canadians and as competitive as possible", (*), which your Committee agrees reflects the views of Canadians.

However, it is your Committee's opinion that, as may be determined from this report, it is quite possible that some of the changes proposed in the name of "competition" may not result in lower prices to the consumer and may not be acceptable under the existing political and economic structure in Canada.

The proposals are divided into four main groups:

- (1) establishment by a Special Act of Parliament of a Canadian Payments Association which would include banks and near-banks in the evolving national electronic payments system for clearing purposes,
- (2) conditions of entry of new or existing Canadian-owned institutions to the banking system,
- (3) recognition and control of subsidiaries and branches of foreign banks in the Canadian banking system, and
- (4) changes in and additions to the business powers and structure of banks.

The White Paper deals with a number of matters affecting not only banks but also other financial institutions. Central and most significant recommendations, however, deal with the question of reserves deposited with the Bank of Canada and the establishment of the Canadian Payments Association. These two questions are interrelated and your Committee's response to them necessarily involves a balancing of competing interests in what, in its view, represents the best interests of the public.

The single most significant recommendation is that for the first time it is proposed, through the vehicle of federal legislation, that near-banks (i.e. credit unions, caisses populaires, mortgage loan companies and trust companies) will be required to deposit reserves with the Bank of Canada. Due to the fact that only chartered banks and savings banks pursuant to the provisions of The Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act have been required to do this historically, the significance of the departure will be apparent. Apart from the constitutional question, (which is dealt with hereafter), which this raises, it also raises important philosophical questions from the standpoint of the role of the central bank.

* White Paper Page 47

The White Paper proposes that the Canadian Payments Association be the legal body which requires the deposit of reserves by banks and near-banks. This Association which would be established by companion legislation to the Bank Act is intended to provide a uniform clearing system which would be available to all institutions, banks and near-banks, which accept deposits transferable by order, in order to establish uniformity and equality in the clearing process. Clearing by definition requires the deposit of some form of security in order to ensure that cheques cleared will be honoured ultimately and thus basically to make the system work. Presently near-banks effect clearing by depositing funds with chartered banks as security to ensure that their cheques will be honoured. Any clearing system contemplates establishment of some form of clearing balance by deposit.

The White Paper suggests that in the proposed Canadian Payments Association clearing should be done directly by clearing banks and near-banks, and that both be subject to the same cash reserves to be deposited with the central bank.

This represents a radical departure because heretofore near-banks have not been required to deposit reserves with the central bank. Evidence has clearly established that it is unnecessary to deposit these reserves with the central bank in order to establish an effective clearing system. The White Paper, however, indicates that the reserves under the proposed Canadian Payments Association would not merely perform the clearing system function but also would, in the case of near-banks, put them on an equal footing with banks in terms of central bank reserves. This would enable the central bank to assert monetary control over all financial institutions if the deposit balance in the future, which is clearly weighted in favour of the chartered banks, changes from its present position. It is claimed monetary control could not be effected by central bank requirements applying to the chartered banks alone, if the deposit balance shifted materially.

This basic White Paper reasoning breaks down insofar as conditions in the financial community are concerned today. Not only is it agreed by everyone who appeared before your Committee that "reserves" are necessary for clearing purposes but further it appears to be agreed that at this time it is unnecessary to require the near-banks to put up reserves to enable the central bank to be able to assert its statutory role in the area of monetary control. The reason is that at the present time the chartered banks have such an overwhelming share of the overall cash deposits in the system that monetary control can be effected by requiring reserves from chartered banks alone.

Apart altogether from the question of legitimacy of imposing a monetary control type of reserve requirement on the near-banks, response to the White Paper has shown that the chartered banks feel strongly that the present level and nature of reserves is unnecessarily high and constitutes an undesirable drain on the money supply.

It has been concluded by your Committee that the public interest would be best served by attempting to extract from recommendations in the White Paper elements relating to clearing and reserves and at the same time introducing modifications in respect thereof which flow from the justified criticism advanced in some of the evidence submitted to your Committee.

Accordingly this report will recommend that the Canadian Payments Association contemplated by the White Paper be established by companion legislation but instead of imposing a "chartered bank-type reserve" upon the near-banks which would be members of the Association, both the chartered banks and the near-banks should be required to deposit with the central bank much more modest and realistic "clearing settlement cash reserves" the purpose of which would be for clearing settlement only. Your Committee's recommendations contemplate that these reserves be calculated as a percentage of deposits transferable by order only. These reserves would be for settlement purposes only and their restricted size would dictate that they would perform no role in the central bank's monetary control function. This control would continue to be effected through chartered bank reserves.

At the same time your Committee recommends in Sec. III(h) of this report, that while maintaining the same basic format in respect of fixed percentage primary cash reserves and variable percentage secondary reserves for chartered banks, the amount of Government of Canada treasury bills required in the secondary reserve should be decreased and at the same time a broader range of securities which might be held as part thereof should be permitted. Your Committee also has recommendations to make concerning the payment of interest on cash reserves.

The Canadian banking system is held in the highest regard in international banking circles from the point of view of stability and liquidity. Monetary control being efficient and effective, your Committee's recommendations retain the principle of the mandatory reserves in cash and securities adequate for the Bank of Canada to exercise its monetary control and at the same time increasing the scope of the chartered banks in the development of the economy.

II

CANADIAN PAYMENTS ASSOCIATION

(a) INTRODUCTION

The clearing system in Canada is operated by the chartered banks as of right and inter-bank deposits transferable by order are cleared through their own established clearing system which they control and operate. Near-banks that are deposit-taking institutions that accept deposits transferable by order have no direct facility through which they may clear such chequable transactions. It would be impractical for them to establish such a clearing system in competition with chartered banks; neither can they compel the chartered banks to join in such clearing system as they might attempt to establish nor can they compel the chartered banks to permit them to use the existing clearing system. There is no existing legislative authority which they might invoke to achieve such end. Accordingly, the near-banks enter into agreements with a chartered bank, a member of the existing clearing system, to act as their agent in carrying out their clearing operations. These agreements are voluntary agreements with no impelling legislative authority to require the chartered banks to make such agreements. The required security by way of cash reserves and other charges to guarantee clearing obligations are provided by the near-banks.

In their brief and their submission made to your Committee, the Caisses Populaires approve of the creation of the proposed Canadian Payments Association and advise that they will become full members of that Association (Brief p. 44). Generally the near-banks approve of the creation of the Payments Association. One of the principal attractions of the association to these institutions is the trend now and for the future towards a national electronic payments system. Their attack and criticism is in relation to the reserves required to be put up by all members of the Association.

Thus the Caisses Populaires distinguish between reserves required for clearing purposes and Primary Cash Reserves required under the Bank Act (Brief p. 44) and are opposed to the White Paper requirement that near-banks must also pay to the Bank of Canada Primary (Cash) Reserves. The Caisses also want membership in the Payments Association to be voluntary. The White Paper contemplates that such Association will be established by separate federal legislation and all chartered banks and near-banks accepting deposits transferable by order are required to be members.

However, clearing members may elect to be non-clearing members, in which event those who so elect must clear through a clearing member. Your Committee approves this elective right. But your Committee proposes only the requirement, in the proposed Canadian Payments Association Act, of a Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve payable to the Association by every clearing member and by the Association to the Bank of Canada which shall act as a depository therefor (in accordance with agreements to be made between the parties, the terms of which are developed later in this report) calculated on a percentage basis of the deposits transferable by order of such member. A non-clearing member who must clear through a clearing member, the facilities for clearing through the Payments Association not being directly available to such non-clearing members, must pay such cash reserves to the clearing member who in turn must pay it to the Association for deposit with the Bank of Canada.

Your Committee recommends that the Primary (Cash) Reserves and Secondary Reserves presently in The Bank Act remain in such Act and apply only to Banks incorporated under The Bank Act.

All the near-banks wish to have the right to use the clearing system envisaged by the White Paper but object to other features, particularly the heavy burden of providing Primary (Cash) Reserves. Your Committee agrees that such Reserves are not required for purposes of liquidity or monetary policy. The Committee, however, recommends a clearing security interest-bearing reserve to be provided by near-banks (see Sec. II(h)) as a stand-by to their clearing settlement cash reserve based on the amount of their deposits transferable on order. This represents a substantial reduction in the amount of cash reserves proposed in the White Paper.

(b) CONSTITUTIONAL ASPECT

The proposals in the White Paper calling for the establishment of a Canadian Payments Association are appealing to near-banks including Caisses Populaires, credit unions and trust companies. The reasons for this are at least four in number:

1. Near-banks presently have no legislative right to participate in the clearing system operated by the Canadian Bankers Association. They must rely on co-operation from the chartered banks and their ability to negotiate such clearing arrangements with the chartered banks;
2. Near-banks obviously would find it impractical to establish a competing clearing system since effective clearing depends on a unitary structure which is national in scope;
3. Near-banks have recognized that if direct participation in the clearing process is desirable at the present time it will become imperative in the future as an electronic system of payments evolves; and
4. Near-banks, particularly the Caisses Populaires and Credit Unions, have developed such a large share of orders for the transfer of deposits in Canada that it is no longer realistic to continue to consider them as institutions dependent upon the services of a chartered bank to effect their clearing needs.

For the above reasons, the prospect of a new Canadian Payments Association to which the near-banks will have direct access is welcomed by them. The joint brief of les Caisses Populaires Desjardins to the Minister of Finance on this subject stated at Page 4:

"At the present time, the clearing system is operated by the Canadian Bankers Association and only the chartered banks are allowed to participate directly in the clearing process. Near-banks wishing to have their instruments cleared have had to make special arrangements with a chartered bank. It has appeared increasingly desirable in recent years that near-banks be allowed to participate directly in the clearing mechanism . . ."

In addition, some of the near-banks have given approval to the proposed participation in the system of the Bank of Canada. In the same brief, Les Fédérations des Caisses Populaires observed on Page 4 of their brief:

"We are equally pleased to see that the Bank of Canada would be a member of this new Association with a special status. The presence of the Bank of Canada at the centre of this new corporation should assure an orderly and fair evolution of the clearing system in a manner that will take account of the characteristics of each member of the Association. If this is a new role for the Bank of Canada, we are nevertheless convinced that it is one which the Bank is fully capable of fulfilling competently and objectively . . . ”

Notwithstanding their present disinterest to participate directly in the clearing system and their anxiety to change this state of affairs in order to enable them to achieve full participation; and further, notwithstanding their acceptance of the role of the central bank in the management of the proposed Canadian Payments Association, some near-banks have raised questions as to the constitutional validity of the provisions of the White Paper respecting the Canadian Payments Association and the reserve requirements associated therewith. Their concern is particularly directed to the question of whether Parliament has jurisdiction to enact legislation which would have the effect of requiring these provincially incorporated institutions to deposit reserves with the central bank. Based on evidence adduced before your Committee it would appear that the objection is particularly directed to reserves which are intended to meet liquidity and monetary control considerations and are unrelated to the clearing function.

There is no clear and concise definition of banking in The Bank Act or in related statutes. From time to time, the banking community has invited the Government to provide such a definition. In response to the White Paper, the Canadian Bankers' Association has proposed to define the business of a bank as distinct from any other financial institution as “the receiving of deposits transferable by order to third parties”.

If this represents a legitimate definition of the business of banks as distinct from other institutions, then legislation such as the proposed Canadian Payments Association Act which relates to this aspect of the business of banks would be a legitimate exercise of the Federal power under Section 91(15) or 91(18) of The British North America Act. Other institutions suggest other definitions of the business of banking in the direction of its commercial lending function; however, there are other financial institutions which do engage in commercial lending which are not engaged in the business of banking, at least as it is conventionally known.

The difficulty is that there are very few services offered by banks which are not, in one form or another, offered by other financial institutions, although there are no financial institutions which offer the composite service of a bank.

Those among the near-banks who question the authority of Parliament to propose legislation such as the Canadian Payments Association Act argue that the reserves associated therewith are not necessary for the effective control over monetary conditions in Canada by the central bank and that, in effect, the reserve requirement is a sham intended to establish a basis for the purported exercise of jurisdiction over provincially incorporated institutions which are currently developing a greater share of the deposit-taking function in the financial community.

The authority of Parliament in the area of currency, coinage, interest, banking and bills of exchange under Section 91 of The British North America Act is extremely broad. The payments and clearing system has an extra-provincial or national aspect at its root which militates in favour of Parliamentary authority in this area. It appears that your Committee should assume the validity of federal legislation in this area when the powers enumerated under Section 91 of The British North America Act are combined with the national character of the proposed Association and the desire of the near-banks to participate in a national clearing system to which access is not presently available to them except indirectly by agreement with a chartered bank.

(c) RESERVES

The Trust Companies Association of Canada points out that it estimated the total reserve requirements proposed by the White Paper on $5.1 billion of eligible deposits would amount to over $120 million at a net loss of revenue to Canadian trust companies of approximately $7 million per annum.

The Federations of Caisses Populaires Desjardins and similar groups estimated that the White Paper proposal would require the caisses to keep additional reserves of $60 millions unproductive at the Bank of Canada on which they would lose interest of more than $5 million per annum.

The National Association of Canadian Credit Unions estimated that the amount of reserves suggested would impose an additional burden on credit unions in the NACCU system of approximately $40 million in idle balances, at a cost of $3.6 million per annum.

From the evidence submitted by witnesses, as indicated by the above, your Committee has concluded that the magnitude of the reserves proposed in the White Paper would be disruptive and would create unjustifiable hardships on many institutions.

The reserves proposed by the White Paper are of the type and magnitude said to be required for monetary control and liquidity purposes. As developed later in this report, the proposed Canadian Payments Association should only need reserves to provide assurance to participants in the clearing system that cheques which they have cleared and which are drawn on other member institutions will be honoured.

The reserves proposed by the White Paper are greatly in excess of the amount required for clearing purposes and are based on the historic development of reserve requirements for chartered banks to provide adequate cash reserves for all three conceptual minimum requirements for clearing balances, liquidity requirements and monetary control.

From the representations made to your Committee it is apparent that chartered banks have many more cheques drawn on their current accounts than do the Credit Unions, Caisses Populaires, and the trust companies. For example, in the year 1975 the annual average amount of deposits in current accounts of chartered banks ($13.1 billion) had a turn-over rate of 158 times in that year, whereas by contrast in the Caisses Populaires Desjardins the turn-over ratio was only 2.25 in 1974.

The Caisses Populaires Desjardins in their brief indicated that "clearing is a response to functional needs which vary from one situation to another, from one type of users to another and from one region to another. The amount of deposit [reserve] for clearing purposes has no direct relationship with the level of deposit liabilities of an institution; it must rather be established from time to time, by agreement and in the light of experience."*

It is apparent from the evidence submitted to your Committee that the Credit Unions and the Caisses Populaires deposit and cash for their clients more cheques of chartered banks than vice versa, and that over-all on a yearly basis the Credit Unions and Caisses Populaires are in an over-all favourable position vis-à-vis chartered banks regarding clearing flow. However, there are periods during the year when they experience drawdowns against clearing balances. For example, the Canadian credit union system experienced drawdowns on 43 per cent of the business days in 1974 and 1975, that of 240 normal business days in a year the drawdowns were less than $18 million on 222 days and drawdowns exceeded $18 million on only 18 days. The largest single drawdown was $32,620,000.

In the opinion of your Committee the above examples indicate that in establishing a formula for clearing settlement balances the range of differences in clearing requirements between near-banks and banks, and between one institution and another should be taken into account.

In these circumstances a fixed percentage is not justified, but a range of rates is needed to reflect these differences.

Your Committee suggests that the best way to arrive at a formula would be for a member's requirements for a clearing settlement balance to be based on such member's drawdown experience for the previous year, subject to a minimum-maximum range.

Your Committee, based on its studies and the representations made to it by witnesses, is of the opinion that the following method of establishing clearing balances would be workable and would not create undue hardship on members of the proposed Canadian Payments Association.

Your Committee suggests that the clearing settlement balances be maintained by members consisting of cash and securities as follows:

1. Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve—amount of projected requirement based on previous year's drawdown experience.
2. Overdraft Security Reserve—equal in amount to the Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve to cover unusual clearing settlements.

This suggestion is outlined more fully as follows:

1. (a) Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve

A Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve calculated by estimating a member's settlement requirements based on the member's actual settlement drawdown experience in the previous year plus an adjustment to take care of estimated growth; but in any case this reserve should not be less than a minimum of 1 per cent or more than 3 per cent of the member's chequable deposits (deposits transferable by order).

(b) This Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve would be required to be restored by daily deposit with the depository of the cash reserve as required in order to reinstate the deficiency caused by drawdowns.

(c) The Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve requirement would be recalculated at least semi-annually.

(d) New members who do not have a sufficient experience base would be required to maintain the maximum 3 per cent clearing settlement cash reserve until they have established a sufficient record of experience.

2. Overdraft Security Reserve

Your Committee is of the opinion that in addition to a Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve which would be based on average clearing requirements, there should be an additional reserve to take care of unusual fluctuations in requirements or periodic overdrafts which might occur in a clearing member's account. Therefore, your Committee suggests that members also be required to maintain an Overdraft Security Reserve. This latter reserve would be equal in amount to the Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve and could consist of interest-bearing Government of Canada bonds or treasury bills. Since the securities in this Overdraft Security Reserve would earn income for the member, it should not create any undue hardship for a member. Temporary borrowings could be made by a member against the securities in the Overdrafts, Security Reserve to cover occasional overdrafts, if any, in its Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve.

3. The amount of reserves within the 1 per cent to 3 per cent range required by a member should be decided by the Board of Directors of the proposed Canadian Payments Association or upon its direction by the Bank of Canada, the amount to be based on the criteria outlined in Para. 1 above.

Your Committee suggests that the cash and investments required for the above suggested Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve and Overdraft Security Reserve should be deposited by members with the proposed Canadian Payments Association and by it with the Bank of Canada. The Bank of Canada

* Brief on "White Paper on the Revision of Canadian Banking Legislation"—submitted by Les Fédérations des Caisses Populaires—page 10.

 "Credit Union Clearing Settlement Accounts" prepared for National Association of Canadian Credit Unions by R. A. Eckert would act as a depository for the reserves of the proposed Canadian Payments Association pursuant to agreement between the Canadian Payments Association and the central bank, the terms of the same to include the authority to receive, administer and manage the cash reserves and securities in accordance with the purposes for which such reserves were provided. If the Canadian Payments Association directs the Bank of Canada to set the clearing settlement cash reserves of the member institutions in accordance with the definitions above described, this agency function would be covered by agreement as well.

Your Committee also suggests that the Bank of Canada should continue to act by agreement with the proposed Canadian Payments Association as agent in the regional and national clearing system in very much the same manner as it functions at present in the clearing process with the Canadian Bankers' Association.

Your Committee has found that not all financial institutions place the same meaning or interpretation on such terms as "chequable deposits", "encashable on demand", "notice deposits", "demand deposits", "savings deposits" and "chequable personal savings deposits". The figures below for chartered banks include demand deposits and chequable personal savings deposits; it is unclear if the figures for trust companies are on a comparable basis. Therefore, it would be important to include in the legislation a clear definition of "chequable deposits".

Your Committee suggests that a study should be made to determine the past and present clearing requirements of all banks and near-banks in order that this information will be available for the purpose of establishing actual clearing requirements and arriving at a reasonable reserve ratio for each prospective participant in the proposed Canadian Payments Association.

Your Committee is of the opinion that the reserve requirements would probably result from time to time in there being considerably larger cash balances on deposit with the depository than would be necessary for clearing purposes. In this respect, your Committee believes that arrangements should be made for the Bank of Canada to pay to the proposed Canadian Payments Association a reasonable rate of interest on such excess cash balances. This would result in the optimum utilization of members' resources and would also emphasize that the primary purpose for requiring the reserve deposits is to meet estimated clearing requirements, and not to provide reserves for other purposes.

Since the amount of these proposed clearing cash reserves would be based on the past experience and projected requirements of members, some members would be putting up relatively greater reserves than others. In order to maintain equity in this matter, your Committee suggests that members should be credited with their respective share of the net interest revenue earned by the proposed Canadian Payments Association on the amount of Clearing Settlement Cash Reserves in excess of clearing requirements; such interest, we suggest, should be allocated in proportion to members' undrawn balances calculated on a daily basis.

The recommendations of your Committee with respect to the Canadian Payments Association may be found in Sec. II(h) of this report.

In the opinion of your Committee any reserves recommended by your Committee which would be applicable to chartered banks under the proposed Canadian Payments Association Act, i.e. Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve and Overdraft Security Reserve, should be considered as part of and an offset against their primary cash reserve and secondary reserve respectively for purposes of calculating their reserves under the Bank Act. This is because the Chartered Banks at the present time already carry in excess of $3.4 billion on deposit with the Bank of Canada as part of the primary reserve requirement and in excess of $4 billion in securities carried with the Bank of Canada as part of the secondary reserve requirement which is probably six or seven times the maximum average amount required for clearing purposes.

COMPARISON OF WHITE PAPER PROPOSALS FOR CASH RESERVES WITH SENATE COMMITTEE'S SUGGESTION

Your Committee has prepared the following comparison based on the estimated requirements for cash reserves to be provided by groups under the proposed Canadian Payments Association and those suggested by your Committee.

	(MILLIONS $)		SENATE COMMITTEE'S SUGGESTION
	WHITE PAPER PROPOSAL		Chequable Deposits	Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve
	Eligible Deposits	Cash Reserve		Min. Max. 1% 3%
Chartered banks	$81,000	$4,420	$16,000	$160 $480
Trust and Mortgage Loan Companies	5,100	120	800	8 24
Credit Unions	5,700	119	1,900	19 57
Caisses Populaires	6,000	120	2,500	25 75
Quebec Savings Banks	1,100	32	300	3 9

Details and sources are shown on Appendix A attached to this report.

(d) QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT

No particular consideration appears to have been given to the Quebec Savings Banks Act which governs the Montreal City and District Savings Bank. So far as reserves are concerned, it is the opinion of your Committee that the reserves required of this bank under that Act appear to be adequate and for this reason we do not see the necessity for any changes. The proposed Canadian Payments Association Act would apply to the Montreal City and District Savings Bank.

However, if the recommendation of the Committee concerning clearing balances under the proposed Canadian Payments Association Act are accepted, your Committee suggests that any reserves provided by the Montreal City and District Savings Bank as clearing settlement balances should be considered as part of and an offset against such bank's reserves required under the Quebec Savings Banks Act.

(e) RESPONSIVENESS OF NEAR-BANKS TO MONETARY CONTROL

As has been mentioned in the introduction, the White Paper indicates that one of the purposes of the Canadian Payments Association and of the reserve requirements for near-banks is to provide a framework for monetary control;

"It provides a framework that will ensure for the future that the central bank will continue to have effective control over monetary conditions in Canada, even should substantial shifts in the relative importance of deposit-accepting institutions occur." (Page 20, White Paper)

Representations have been made to your Committee that the combined size of chartered banks is so dominant that monetary control can be maintained through the chartered banks without involving the near-banks directly and that, in any event, near-banks are responsive to monetary control through the mechanism and influence of the banking system.

The reserve requirements that apply to chartered banks are different from those that apply to other deposit institutions. Only chartered banks are required to hold primary cash reserves in notes of or deposits with the Bank of Canada which do not yield any return.

Under the recommendations of your Committee, in this report, Clearing Settlement Cash Reserves and Overdraft Security Reserves are all that near-banks would be required to carry under the proposed Canadian Payments Association Act. They already are subject to liquidity requirements under provincial legislation. True, they do not lose possession of their securities required as liquidity reserves and can earn income on these investments. It is said that any changes made in chartered banks' reserve requirements under the Bank Act indirectly affect the near-banks and this responsiveness by near-banks contributes to the implementation of monetary control in Canada without requiring near-banks to provide chartered-bank type reserves.

Your Committee considers that the key question is the degree of responsiveness of financial institutions other than banks to changes in monetary action by the Bank of Canada which are applied directly upon the banks and thus indirectly on the other financial institutions.

In the opinion of your Committee the question of the responsiveness of the near-banks to the implementation of monetary policy is well supported by the following extracts from a statement of Mr. Gerald K. Bouey, Governor of the Bank of Canada, at the Canadian Conference of Banking in Montreal, September 15 and 17, 1974.

"The technical powers given to the Bank of Canada have in fact proven broadly adequate for the Bank's purposes. Largely through its control over the supply of cash reserves to the chartered banking system, the Bank of Canada has unquestionably been able to exert sufficient influence over the process of monetary expansion to have a major impact on the degree of ease or tightness in financial markets. So much is evident from the record. It is clear that the effects of Bank of Canada operations on the growth of money and credit and on the level of interest rates have not been confined to the chartered banks but have been felt pervasively throughout the financial system.

"As I need hardly tell this group, the Bank of Canada can, by varying the supply of chartered bank cash reserves, influence the operations not only of the banks but of near-bank financial institutions as well. Changes in the supply of cash reserves relative to the banking system's demand for them have the immediate consequence of putting downward pressure on short-term money market and institutional interest rates when reserves are run at relatively high levels, and upward pressure on these rates when the central bank is less generous in providing cash reserves. If the central bank is a reluctant provider of cash to the banking system so that heightened competition for money balances is pushing short-term interest rates upward, the near-banks must meet these rates or else suffer pressure on their own cash positions. These pressures would result from a tendency for funds to slip away as depositors sought the higher returns available elsewhere and as borrowers tried to take advantage of relatively cheap near-bank sources of credit."

"These conditions for the reasonably effective implementation of monetary policy are met in Canada as things stand at present. The chartered banks are dominant enough in the relevant areas of deposit-taking and short-term credit extension to give the Bank of Canada, through its management of their cash reserves, an adequate degree of leverage and precision for monetary control purposes."

"Up to the present, then, I am afraid that I cannot blame any short-comings in monetary policy on deficiencies in the technical arrangements that link the Bank of Canada to the rest of the financial system. The absence of cash reserve requirements applicable to depository institutions other than the chartered banks has never, to my knowledge, frustrated the efforts of the Bank of Canada to bring about as sharp a curtailment of the pace of monetary expansion and as large an associated rise in short-term interest rates as we were prepared to contemplate in the circumstances of the time."

This conclusion is shared by Professor A. K. Kelly, Associate professor of Economics, University of Regina, in a study prepared for the National Association of Canadian Credit Unions, February 1976 in which he states: "On the assumption that the chartered banks do not frustrate monetary policy, we conclude that the operations of the credit union system are consistent with the objectives of the Bank of Canada, a conclusion voiced by Governor Bouey”.

Apparently this responsiveness of the near-banks to the monetary policy has been consistent for many years, as evidenced by the following testimony in 1963 of Louis Rasminsky, then governor of the Bank of Canada before the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance (The Porter Commission):

“It is true that a contraction of the cash base of the credit system brought about by the central bank must directly or indirectly affect a significant proportion of the institutions engaged in the business of extending credit if it is to be effective. My own reading of the evidence is, however, that the effects on financial institutions and markets have been in fact quite pervasive even though membership in the reserve system has been limited to the chartered banks and even though there has been a good deal of rigidity in chartered bank lending and deposit rates.”

The following statement of The Trust Companies Association indicates very distinctly the view of the near-banks in general concerning monetary policy: “Policy places the emphasis on controlling the money variables, not legislating financial institutions. Thus, since central bank action aims to act directly on the money stocks and flows with the purpose of affecting circumstances indirectly, the most effective type of monetary policy is the kind which is targeted directly on institutions handling monetary instruments only. For the sake of effective monetary policy it is considered more efficient to have immediate and direct control over narrowly defined monetary assets contained within an accessible set of financial institutions”.*

Your Committee as a result of its studies concluded that near-banks are responsive to the monetary control policy which is implemented by the Bank of Canada working through the chartered bank system and that it is not necessary at this time for near-banks to provide cash reserves to effect monetary control.

(f) MEMBERSHIP

The White Paper proposes that all institutions in Canada accepting deposits transferable by order be required to join the Association, either as full clearing members or as non-clearing members.

Generally your Committee is in agreement with this proposal, but is of the opinion that full clearing membership should be required of banks incorporated under the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act and all financial institutions which accept deposits transferable by order and which meet certain minimum criteria as to size and volume. If advisable, there could be elective provisions for financial institutions, other than banks, which might find the terms of full membership too onerous and might prefer to transfer to non-clearing membership.

Institutions which do not qualify as to size and volume would become non-clearing associate members. They would have their clearing operations performed by a clearing member, very much in the same manner as chartered banks handle the clearings at the present time for trust companies, credit unions and caisses.

A tentative evaluation of data which is presently available indicates that the amount of “chequable savings deposit accounts” carried by some trust companies is very small, and therefore such institutions would not need to be full clearing members. This would probably also apply to most of the mortgage loan companies.

Your Committee suggests that definite criteria as to dollar and unit volume of interbank or inter-member clearings and the amount of deposits transferable by order (chequable savings deposits and demand deposits) be used in applying minimum standards for admission to full clearing membership. Such criteria should be established by the terms of the Canadian Payments Association Act subject to variation by resolution of the Board of Directors of the Association.

(g) RECOMMENDATIONS

As a result of its study of the White Paper proposals, and of representations made, your Committee has the following recommendations to make concerning the proposed Canadian Payments Association Act.

1. Your Committee recommends the establishment of a Canadian Payments Association as proposed in the White Paper which would provide direct access by near-banks to the national clearing system under certain terms and conditions.
2. Your Committee is not in favour of requiring near-banks to maintain cash reserves of the magnitude proposed in the White Paper for monetary control purposes, but recommends that reserves be required of members of the Canadian Payments Association for clearing settlement purposes only.
3. Your Committee recommends that each clearing member should be required to maintain two reserves for clearing purposes:

(a) A Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve

A Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve calculated by estimating a member's actual clearing settlement requirement or drawdown experience in the previous year plus an adjustment to provide for estimated growth in requirement; but in any case this reserve should not be less than a minimum of 1% or more than 3% of the member's chequable deposits (deposits transferable by order).

(b) An Overdraft Security Reserve

The Overdraft Security Reserve would be equal in amount to the Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve. This could consist of interest-bearing Government of Canada bonds or treasury bills. Temporary borrowings could be made by a member against its Overdraft Security Reserve to cover occasional overdrafts, if any, in its Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve.

* Brief submitted by The Trust Companies Association of Canada—“Review of the Bank Act (1977)” page 43.

4. Your Committee further recommends:

(a) That the cash and investments required for the above recommended Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve and Overdraft Security Reserve be deposited by members with the proposed Canadian Payments Association and by it with the Bank of Canada. The Bank of Canada would act as depository for the cash and securities in the reserves of members of the proposed Canadian Payments Association.

(b) That the Bank of Canada pay a reasonable rate of interest to the proposed Canadian Payments Association on such cash deposits and that the proposed Association allocate to each member its proportionate share of such interest.

5. Your Committee recommends that the reserves which would be provided by chartered banks under the proposed Canadian Payments Association Act, i.e. Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve and Overdraft Security Reserve, should be considered as part of and an offset against their primary cash reserve and secondary reserve respectively for purposes of calculating their reserves under the Bank Act. (This recommendation is repeated under Reserves for Chartered Banks in Sec. IV(a).

6. Near-banks above a certain size would be clearing members unless they elect to be non-clearing members. A non-clearing member would elect to clear through a clearing member and must keep its clearing settlement reserve accounts with that clearing member. The clearing member would be required to match the non-clearing member's reserve accounts by equivalent amounts of cash and securities in its reserves with the Canadian Payments Association.

7. Your Committee recommends membership in the Canadian Payments Association should be made compulsory as follows:

Full clearing membership

(a) banks chartered under the Bank Act

(b) banks incorporated under the Quebec Savings Banks Act

(c) financial institutions which accept deposits transferable by order, which meet stipulated criteria as to volume and size and which do not elect to be non-clearing members.

Non-clearing membership

All other near-banks which accept deposits transferable by order and which do not meet the criteria as to volume and size and others which have elected to be non-clearing members.

Special Member—The Bank of Canada

8. Your Committee recommends that all other requirements for reserves applicable to chartered banks remain in the Bank Act and not be transferred to the proposed Canadian Payments Association Act.

III

RESERVES FOR CHARTERED BANKS

(a) INTRODUCTION

The White Paper proposes that the present primary cash reserve which applies to chartered banks would be removed from the Bank Act; banks chartered under the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act along with near-banks, as discussed earlier, would be subject to cash reserves under the proposed Canadian Payments Association Act.

What is referred to in banking circles as the "primary reserve" is entitled "cash reserve" in the Bank Act; in this report your Committee refers to this reserve as either the "primary reserve", "primary cash reserve" or "cash reserve".

Primary Reserve

The following comparison illustrates the changes in rates of primary cash reserves as proposed by the White Paper:

	PRESENT RATE	PROPOSED RATE
(a) DEMAND DEPOSITS	12%	12%
(b) NOTICE DEPOSITS
(1) including: Can. $ notice deposits, term deposits 1 year or less;	4%	2% on 1st $500 million 4% on excess term deposits over 1 year encashable
(2) term deposits over 1 year, not encashable	4%	nil
(c) FOREIGN CURRENCY DEPOSITS USED IN CANADA	nil	4%

It will be noted from the above that the main changes proposed by the White Paper are (a) to omit any reserve requirement on term deposits with an original term in excess of one year which are not encashable, and (b) to require a 4% cash reserve on foreign currency deposits used in Canada.

Cash reserves consist of Bank of Canada notes (currency) and deposits with the Bank of Canada.

Secondary Reserve

The White Paper proposes that the present secondary reserve requirement, which applies only to chartered banks, should remain in the Bank Act, and no changes are proposed by the White Paper in this secondary reserve.

The secondary reserve would continue to apply to banks chartered under the Bank Act and would consist of cash, Government of Canada treasury bills and approved day loans to investment dealers, as at present. The amount of the secondary reserve is fixed by the Bank of Canada under the provisions of the Bank of Canada Act as a percentage of Canadian dollar deposit liabilities and may be in a range of 0% to 12%.

The secondary reserves at the present time, for Canadian chartered banks, are fixed at 5% of their total deposit liabilities.

It is your Committee's opinion that, as indicated earlier in this report, the proposed Canadian Payments Association should only deal with clearing settlement balances for banks and near-banks, based on deposits transferable by order. Your Committee believes that the present primary cash reserve and secondary reserve requirements are workable in both principle and in practice, that they should apply only to chartered banks and that both requirements should remain in the Bank Act and the Bank of Canada Act.

Your Committee has studied the proposed changes in the reserve requirements as they might apply to chartered banks. The main aspects of these reserves are dealt with under the following headings:

- (a) Amount and form of reserves
- (b) Primary reserve
- (c) Secondary reserve
- (d) Payment of interest on primary cash reserves
- (e) Reserve on term deposits
- (f) Reserve on foreign currency deposits used domestically

(b) AMOUNT AND FORM OF RESERVES

The primary reserve requirements (12% on demand deposits and 4% on notice deposits) has, in the past, appeared to be effective and adequate both for settlement and other purposes. These primary reserves compare favourably with the primary reserve requirements in other countries. However, for purposes of comparison with other countries it is necessary to take into account the secondary reserve for Canadian chartered banks.

In the United Kingdom the primary reserve is set at 12½% of all eligible liabilities. For the most part eligible liabilities include deposits of a maturity of two years or under. The assets in the reserve consist of cash on deposit with the Bank of England, government treasury bills, secured call loans and other interest-bearing short-term investments. London clearing banks, (which represent 60% of total assets and liabilities of all U.K. banks) maintain 1½ per cent of their eligible liabilities in cash on deposit with the Bank of England. *

In the United States the Federal Reserve System reserve requirements for national and state member banks vary according to the account type and maturity of a bank's liabilities and are graduated in the case of demand and time deposits. The over-all reserve requirement on notice deposits ranges from 3% to 10% and on demand deposits it ranges from 10% to 22% for Reserve City Banks and from 7% to 14% for other banks*. This flexibility provided by scaled reserve requirements takes into account the amount, volatility, and maturity of deposits.

On the other hand it is difficult to compare the effectiveness of the reserve requirements in Canada and the United States because of the different structure and regulatory requirements. By comparison in Canada the chartered banks are fewer and mostly relatively large in size and have a broad national base built on the multi-branch system. This tends to provide a more stable base geographically and in the mix of industrial clients. In the United States, U.S. commercial banks fall into four main categories: National Banks, State Member Banks, Insured Non-member Banks and Non-insured Banks; these banks are subject to reserve requirements of Federal Reserve and State Bank supervisory authorities. In addition there are Bank Holding Companies whose activities appear to have been outside the traditional scope of bank regulation.

In the United States, a change in the reserve requirement does not have the same dramatic effect as a change in the rate of secondary reserve requirements for Canadian chartered banks. Because of the separate reserve requirements of State Banks and Federal Reserve banks and because reserve requirements are changed to a great extent individually on a regional basis, reserves are not all changed simultaneously; the effect therefore of reserve changes does not hit the financial system on a national basis at the same time. By contrast, the Canadian banking system is much more sensitive to small changes in reserve requirements.

Studies submitted by witnesses indicate that the structure of U.S. reserve requirements for various institutions and jurisdictions does seem to have three consistent elements:

- (1) the more volatile the deposits, (e.g., a demand deposit compared to a time deposit), the higher the reserve.
- (2) somewhat similar to the above, the closer the maturity date on a fixed term time deposit, the higher the reserve.
- (3) the larger the deposit, the higher the reserve.)

The advisability of having larger cash reserves available as the amount of demand deposits increases and as term deposits increase and as term deposits approach their maturity date has some merit. Similarly, in the interests of equity, a lower reserve on time deposits in excess of one year might be fairer for those banks which have a relatively greater proportion of their deposits in term deposits.

In Canada, the reserve structure has been built up historically as a result of gradual developments in the Canadian financial system.

* Study submitted by National Association of Credit Unions, prepared by Chasney Financial Consulting Ltd.—"Reserve Requirements of U.S. Financial Institutions."

 Reference: "Reserve Requirements of U.S. Financial Institutions"—see previous page

* Bank of England quarterly Bulletin, December 1971, "Reserve ratios: further definitions" pages 22-26.

As part of the decennial review of banking legislation for 1967, in his testimony before the Commons Committee of Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs in connection with the proposed amendments to the Bank of Canada Act, October 31, 1966, Mr. Louis Rasminsky, the then Governor of the Bank of Canada, gave the following reasons for creating the present format of the primary cash reserves and the secondary reserves:

- (1) The previous 8 per cent minimum cash reserve would be replaced by requirements of 4 per cent applying to term and notice deposits and 12 per cent applying to demand deposits. The reason given for this change was to enable banks to compete more actively with other financial institutions for term deposits.
- (2) Because the above rates for the primary cash reserve would be fixed and not variable, to replace this power to vary the required level of cash reserves it was then proposed that the Bank of Canada should have the power to impose and vary a secondary reserve requirement. This was to provide an alternative means of impounding chartered bank liquidity as a part of monetary policy.

This secondary reserve requirement was set at a range of 0% to 12% and commenced initially in 1967 with a maximum of 6% of total deposit liabilities. The maximum rate which it reached was 9% in 1970 and gradually has been reduced to the present rate of 5%.

Your Committee is of the opinion that the principle of having both a fixed primary cash reserve and variable secondary reserve should remain unchanged, subject, however, to changes in the percentages, amount and format as discussed in Sec. III(h) of this report.

(c) PRIMARY RESERVE

As already pointed out, the White Paper proposes that chartered banks continue to maintain primary cash reserves. The proposed reduction from 4% to 2% on the first $500 million of notice deposits would represent a reduction of only $10 million per bank, or approximately $100 million reduction in primary reserves for all banks out of a combined total primary cash reserves of approximately $4.5 billion.

The purpose of this lower rate on the first $500 million was to make it easier on the smaller near-banks and new banks; it would not result in a relatively large reduction for chartered banks.

In its hearings and as a result of its studies your Committee has considered arguments in favour of a reduction in primary cash reserve requirements as well as a reduction in secondary reserves.

For example, the following statements in the study by the Economic Council of Canada: "Efficiency and Regulation" pages 68 & 69, are pertinent:

"At present, the Bank Act requires 12 per cent of demand deposits and 4 per cent of notice deposits be held as primary reserves. It is very difficult, however, to justify these levels for purposes of monetary policy. To the extent that reserve requirements contribute to the workings of monetary policy, this contribution could be offset by the present difference between reserve ratios levied against demand deposits and term deposits because any change in the composition of deposits alters the required reserve holdings. In addition, the difference between these types of deposits is, in many cases, more apparent than real; cheques can be issued against notice deposits and, to our knowledge, notice is seldom required for withdrawal."

Improvements in money management, information systems, technology and the reliance on the Bank of Canada as a lender of last resort have, in recent years, permitted the chartered banks to maintain their cash reserves very close to the statutory minimum.

For example, on June 8, 1977, the chartered banks carried cash assets of $4,500 million against a minimum primary reserve requirement of $4,334 million.

This was made up as follows:

Bank of Canada notes (currency on hand in the system)	$1,130 million
Deposits with the Bank of Canada	3,370 million
	$4,500 million

Your Committee has recommended earlier in this report that the Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve be set at a maximum of 3% of deposits transferable by order. Based on the aggregate amount of demand deposits held by all chartered banks on June 8, 1977, of $15,480 million, on the above recommended basis, the maximum Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve would amount to only $480 million. It is obvious that the amount of the primary cash reserve carried by chartered banks is greatly in excess of the suggested Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve which would be required for clearing purposes only.

Based on its studies, your Committee has concluded that a reduction in the percentage of primary cash reserve requirements would improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the Canadian banking system by leaving more cash in the banks for investment and loans, thereby increasing their earnings.

At June 8, 1977, the primary reserve requirement was as follows:

	RATE	(BILLIONS) DEPOSITS	(BILLIONS) RESERVE
Demand deposits	12%	$ 15.5	$ 1.86
Notice deposits	4%	65.2	2.60
		$ 80.7	$ 4.46

(Source: Bank of Canada Weekly Financial Statistics, June 16, 1977)

Your Committee suggests that a reduction of approximately 20% in the amount of the primary reserve would appear reasonable in the circumstances.

For instance, a reduction of the above reserve percentages from 12% to 10% on demand deposits and from 4% to 3% on notice deposits would result in a reduction in the statutory minimum reserve requirement of $963 million or approximately 20% in amount.

Such reduction could be translated into a proportionately higher amount of deposit liabilities, subject to the rate of growth which might be permitted by the Bank of Canada within its policy for monetary control from time to time.

The main beneficial results of a lowering of the reserve percentages as suggested above, in the opinion of your Committee, would be to make the chartered banks more competitive with near-banks due to the narrowing of the rate differential disadvantage caused by the primary cash reserve requirement.

Your Committee is also of the opinion that a reduction of the primary reserve percentage requirements along the lines indicated above would permit a reduction in interest rates on loans which could be passed along to the consumer, or an increase in the rate of interest which could be paid on deposits. Any changes in rates would have to be made on a gradual basis so as not to disturb financial markets.

Your Committee is aware, of course, that the Bank of Canada could offset these benefits by reducing the excess cash of banks through either selling treasury bills and other securities in the market or by shifting the percentage requirement for secondary reserves.

(d) SECONDARY RESERVE

The secondary reserve requirement under Section 72(4) of the Bank Act and its related section 18(2) of the Bank of Canada Act is in a range of 0% to 12% of total Canadian dollar deposit liabilities. The secondary reserve is presently set by the Bank of Canada at 5%. Combined with the primary reserve which presently averages around 5.5%, this results in overall reserve requirement of 10.5% of total deposit liabilities.

Since the maximum utilization of the secondary reserve requirement was 9% (reached in 1970), which was 3 percentage points below the maximum, there would appear, on first examination, to be sufficient range in the present secondary reserve requirement of 0% to 12%.

The types of securities presently permitted to be carried with the Bank of Canada under the Secondary Reserve are as follows:

- (a) notes of, and deposits in Canadian currency with the Bank of Canada
- (b) treasury bills of Canada payable in Canadian currency issued for a term of one year or less

(c) day loans to investment dealers with whom the Bank of Canada is prepared to enter into purchase and resale agreements.

As a result of its studies your Committee is of the opinion that the amount of treasury bills presently carried in secondary reserves is in excess of the amount necessary for monetary control and that this could be replaced to a certain extent by other liquid and easily marketable short term investments.

Your Committee is of the opinion that the Secondary Reserve requirement should be broadened to permit the inclusion of the following additional types of short-term investments:

- Provincial treasury bills
- Short term bonds of Canada
- Short term bonds of the provinces
- Short term municipal bonds guaranteed by the provinces
- Export paper guaranteed by the Export Development Corporation

This would permit the banks to improve the rate of return on investments carried in the secondary reserve.

The inclusion of the above types of investments would provide a broader scope for investment which could, such as in the case of government guaranteed export paper, assist materially in developing the Canadian economy.

If this broadening of the type of securities permitted in the secondary reserve is accepted, it is probable that the Bank of Canada would require some provision that there would be at all times a sufficient amount of Government of Canada treasury bills held by banks which would be readily available for monetary control purposes. So, for this reason your Committee is of the opinion that at least 80% of the content of the secondary reserve be made up of securities provided for in Section 72(4) of the Bank Act (i.e. cash, treasury bills and day loans) and the remaining balance up to a maximum of 20% be made up of the type of short-term investments mentioned above.

(e) PAYMENT OF INTEREST ON PRIMARY CASH RESERVE

The White Paper does not propose that interest be paid on the primary cash reserve. The banking community has suggested that, because the primary cash reserve is in excess of requirements, interest be paid on such excess.

Your Committee has examined the question of payment of interest on cash reserves held by the central bank.

While most, if not all, the central banks of other countries do not pay interest on primary reserves, on the face of it there does not appear to be any compelling reason for not paying interest other than to create additional income to the exchequer of the country; this might be deemed by some to be an additional tax on chartered banks. However, there are some compensating factors which tend to equalize competition for deposits with other financial institutions when banks are required to provide interest-free reserves on certain types of deposits.

Also, if normal competitive interest rates were paid on primary reserves there might well be a tendency on the part of the banks not to be as aggressive in using their surplus cash to develop the economy. It is generally accepted in all banking circles, both in Canada and in other countries, that cash balances required for clearing settlement purposes do not receive interest from the depository. However, there do not appear to be any compelling arguments that excess cash reserves, over and above a reasonable amount required for clearing purposes, should not earn interest. In the opinion of your Committee the payment of interest on the difference between the amount required for clearing purposes and the total cash reserve required for general liquidity purposes should not offend or be detrimental to monetary policy in maintaining the most efficient and productive use of funds within the economic milieu of the moment and the liquidity policy of the particular bank.

In the United States, the State banks in most states may hold at least some portion of their reserves in interest bearing U.S. Treasury or municipal securities or demand deposits in correspondent banks. This would seem to conform with the Secondary Reserve for Canadian banks.

As has been mentioned earlier in Sec. III(b) of this report the large majority of reserve assets maintained by U.K. banks are in interest-bearing securities. The London clearing banks which represent approximately 60% of the total assets and liabilities of banks in U.K. keep a minimum of 1½% of their eligible liabilities in cash reserves on deposit with the Bank of England. This is apart from notes of the Bank of England and coin held in banks' tills which do not count as reserves. The rest of the reserves are held in qualified short-term interest bearing investments. Interest is also paid on special deposits which are called from time to time by the Bank of England.*

In addition there is a type of interest bearing secondary reserve that may be called for from time to time; this consists of a special cash deposit with the Bank of England on which a low rate of interest is paid related to the current short-term lending rate.

Canadian chartered banks, in recent years, have tended to keep their primary cash reserves and their secondary reserves down to the minimum level.

However, even if there were no minimum cash reserve requirements, banks would require substantial cash assets for clearing purposes, for working capital and for their daily float throughout their branch system. It is possible that the amount of cash reserves which they would carry, which would not be earning interest would be considerably higher than their minimum requirements. It is even possible, as has been shown in past years, that without minimum reserves requirements, banks would keep from time to time for functional and policy purposes cash reserves considerably higher than the legal minimum.

For example, as pointed out by a Canadian economist: "It is significant that from 1934 to 1954, when banks were required to hold 5% of their note and deposit liabilities in the form of non-interest-earning bank cash, they in fact held about 10% in that form".*

The Economic Council of Canada makes the following comment on the matter of payment of interest on primary cash reserves:

"Reserve requirements, as well as many other regulations, can be viewed as a form of tax on deposit institutions."

Your Committee notes that the Bank of Canada's net income, all of which was paid to the Receiver General of Canada for the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada amounted to $583 million in 1975 and $703 million in 1976. Obviously, a large part of this net income results from the investment by the Bank of Canada of the interest-free primary cash reserve deposits put up by the chartered banks.

It appears from the Statement of Income of the Bank of Canada for 1976 that of the net income earned probably as much as approximately 30% of such net income was earned from the investment of the primary cash reserves on deposit with the Bank of Canada.

A special advisory committee of bankers was formed by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York to study "The Problem of Membership." Your Committee was impressed by the comments and recommended solutions to the problem made in the report of that Committee issued in April 1977. The following are extracts from this report indicating the references to the question of interest as a solution to the problem.

"The present structure and form of System reserve requirements imposed on member banks constitutes a major burden on these banks and is primarily responsible for the increasing withdrawals from membership witnessed in recent years. These withdrawals, and the tendency for newly formed banks not to join the Federal Reserve, have resulted in an erosion of the percentage of deposits in the banking system subject to reserve requirements set by the central bank and, therefore, in the portion of the money supply under the direct control of the monetary authority. In a strongly competitive banking climate, these adverse trends are likely to accelerate."

"Stated as they are, these principles leave open a number of important questions concerning the manner in which they might practically be implemented. This report does not attempt to address all these questions, since a full and fair consideration can only be undertaken within the framework of a legislative proposal dealing with the membership problem

* Bank of England quarterly Bulletin, December 1971, "Reserve ratios: further definitions" pages 22-26.

* E. P. Neufeld, "The Financial System of Canada" (MacMillan of Canada, 1972) pp. 106-7

 "Efficiency and Regulation"—(Economic Council of Canada) p. 68 and related issues. It does, however, discuss two broad alternatives that have been identified as promising approaches. One is the direct payment of interest, at rates comparable to alternative uses of funds, on all or some portion of member banks' balances held as required reserves. The second is to permit holdings of U.S. Treasury securities to count toward a portion of required reserves. Either alternative could, and should, be accompanied by some adjustment in the present level and distribution of reserve requirements."

"In considering the two alternatives specified above (payment of interest on the required reserve balances of member banks and counting holdings of U.S. Treasury securities as required reserves) certain observations are appropriate. Many bankers have expressed a preference for the second alternative as a way to avoid possible public controversy over the appropriate interest rate on reserve balances. While this concern merits consideration, a practical approach to the problem is an interest rate formula linked to market rates. With this approach, the direct payment of interest on reserve balances appears to hold greater potential for eliminating the reserve burden, without adverse implications for monetary policy."

Your Committee is of the opinion that the conclusion expressed above is relevant to the subject of paying interest on the primary cash reserve of Canadian chartered banks. Furthermore, it would promote the objectives stated in the White Paper to encourage foreign banks to apply for a charter under the Bank Act.

The payment of interest on the primary cash reserve would nullify the advantage which foreign banks presently have over Canadian banks because the former are not required to put up non-interest-bearing reserves for their Canadian operations, which are required of Canadian banks under the Bank Act.

As a result of its studies your Committee is of the opinion that the Bank of Canada should pay interest on the deposits with the Bank of Canada provided by the chartered banks under the statutory primary cash reserve requirement, exclusive of the amount of cash required for clearing settlement purposes and subject to a deduction for the expenses in connection with the handling of such reserve and the investment thereof.

(f) RESERVES ON TERM DEPOSITS

The White Paper proposals concerning the primary cash reserves required by chartered banks under the Bank Act appear to relieve banks from maintaining reserves on time deposits having an original term to maturity in excess of one year that are not encashable on demand.

There is a body of opinion that banks have been able to hold on to their market share in one-year-plus deposits, despite offering lower interest rates than the near-banks; this is probably due to their relative accessibility and safety. (*)

* "Ottawa looks for Tighter Control" by André Marsan, vice-president of Research Securities of Canada, Ltd., in the November-December 1976 issue of The Canadian Banker Vol. 83, No. 6, 1976—adapted from an article in the October 1976 issue of Le Banquier et Revue IBC.

If banks have held on to their share of this term deposit flow while offering a lower interest rate than the near-banks, one can easily project that their share of the market will greatly increase if they can offer the same rates as trust companies and mortgage loan companies.

The same writer predicts that by 1987, banks will have increased their share of the consumer loan market from 58.3 per cent in 1976 to 80 per cent, and their share of the mortgage loan market in Canada from 21% in 1976 also to 80 per cent by 1987.

A reduction of the reserve requirement on term deposits from 4% to 3% as suggested by your Committee in addition to the present 5% secondary reserve requirement would result in a decrease of the rate differential disadvantage for banks from approximately 50 or 55 basis points (0.5%) at present to approximately 40 basis points (0.4%). This differential should still provide a sufficient competitive edge for trust companies, caisses and other near-banks to prevent a substantial disruption of their established market.

In comparing the position of the trust companies and mortgage loan companies with the position of chartered banks it must be appreciated that trust and loan companies are limited in expansion of their deposit borrowings to between 20 and 25 times their capital base, whereas chartered banks have no such limitation. Also, many of the larger banks have their own subsidiary mortgage loan companies which are not required to put up interest-free cash reserves.

Naturally, mortgage loan companies owned or controlled by chartered banks are subject to the limitation of the above ratio of deposit borrowings to capital.

It is your Committee's opinion that the proven ability of trust and mortgage companies to channel a steady flow of 5 year term deposit funds into residential mortgages could be substantially hampered if banks were permitted to attract such term deposits without reserve requirements. The term market has been the trust and mortgage loan industry's chief source of funds for the mortgage market. The banks' rebuttal is that they would find it difficult to have any large proportion of their customers switch to term deposits without a call or encashable feature; however, in the opinion of your Committee the lifting of the 4% reserve requirement completely would probably permit the banks to attract a substantial share of the five year term deposit market away from the trust and mortgage loan companies on which the trust and mortgage companies depend.

It has been suggested by witnesses that this could restrict the supply of mortgage funds and might result in higher mortgage rates, if banks channelled a large part of these funds into commercial lending.

If the requirement for banks to maintain reserves on non-encashable deposits for a term over one year is lifted, banks would be able to compete with near-banks on an equal basis as far as rates are concerned. The branch system of the larger banks and their built-in banking-customer market would lead your Committee to conclude that the banks would increase substantially their share of the term deposit cash flow and of the mortgage loan market in Canada.

Your Committee is of the opinion that the complete removal of reserve requirements for chartered banks on term deposits over one year which are not encashable on demand could disturb the competitive position of trust and mortgage companies for term deposits to an extent sufficient not only to disrupt their flow of such funds into the residential mortgage market but might even seriously jeopardize the future existence of many institutions in this field.

Your Committee's recommendation in this matter may be found in Sec.III(h) of this report.

(g) RESERVES ON FOREIGN CURRENCY DEPOSITS USED DOMESTICALLY

The White Paper proposes that cash reserve requirements with respect to foreign currency deposits used domestically be set at 4%.

The White Paper does not offer any reasons for proposing this new reserve requirement, nor does it explain the meaning of the concept of the use of such deposits in financing transactions in Canada. Also, apparently there would be technical difficulties in trying to determine the actual use to which banks' borrowing clients allocate the proceeds of such loans.

It has been pointed out to your Committee that a considerable amount of competition for this type of deposit comes from foreign-controlled financial institutions which are not subject to the control of the Bank Act and are not required to provide reserves with the Bank of Canada. The banking community has pointed out to your Committee that the imposition of this proposed reserve requirement on Canadian chartered banks would put them at a rate differential disadvantage of almost ½ of 1% (38 basis points) in the interest rate they would have to charge when competing with foreign-controlled near-banks (assuming the current interest was 9% per annum).

This means, for example, that a Canadian chartered bank which receives a foreign currency deposit of U.S. $100,000 would have only U.S. $96,000 to lend after deducting the proposed 4% reserve. To obtain the same net earnings as a competing near-bank, a chartered bank would have to charge an interest rate of 9.38% (38 basis points or 0.38% more) compared with 9% charged by a near-bank. As can be seen, the bank would be at a distinct disadvantage in competing with institutions which would not be required to maintain non-interest bearing cash reserves.

It has also been pointed out in representations made to your Committee that such a reserve requirement could create difficulties for the smaller banks because all deposits, whether in domestic or foreign currencies, are essential to growth.

A part of the reserves required of Canadian banks are based on Canadian currency deposits employed abroad which are received from non-residents. Your Committee, in the light of this requirement and based on the concerns of the banking community in representations made to your committee, finds it difficult to assess the reasons for adding this new reserve requirement in respect of foreign currency deposits used domestically.

In the opinion of your Committee, based on its studies, and the evidence submitted, it does not appear to be fair to place Canadian banks at a legislated disadvantage when competing with foreign-controlled competitors. The disadvantage results from the loss of revenue to the banks having to put up a non-interest earning cash reserve of 4% on foreign currency deposits used domestically. Your Committee suggests that if such a reserve is required, this rate differential might be overcome in large part by having the Bank of Canada pay over to the chartered banks the interest which would be earned by the central bank on the investment of such cash; an alternative, in your Committee's opinion, would be to exempt from reserves the following classes of foreign currency deposits used in Canada:

- (a) Foreign currency deposits with an original term in excess of one year which are not encashable. This would be in line with the White Paper's proposal to exempt similar Canadian dollar deposits.
- (b) Funds advanced in foreign currency to the federal, provincial and municipal governments. This would equalize competition from foreign banks because the latter can lend to governments in Canada without reserves and without withholding tax cost.
- (c) Funds advanced in foreign currency where the term loan agreement calls for not more than 25% to be repaid in the first five years. This also would equalize competition from foreign banks who can lend to Canadian corporations without the reserve burden and without withholding tax cost.

(h) RECOMMENDATIONS

1. Your Committee recommends that the present primary and secondary reserves required of chartered banks under the Bank Act and Bank of Canada Act remain in such Acts, subject of course to the following recommendations.
2. Your Committee recommends that mandatory primary cash reserves under the Bank Act be reduced from the present 12% of Canadian dollar demand deposits and 4% of Canadian dollar notice deposits to 10% and 3% respectively; that the secondary reserve be maintained in a range of 0% to 12% of Canadian dollar deposit liabilities as at present, and that a substantial proportion, such as a maximum of 20% of such secondary reserve, be permitted to be made up of a broad range of short-term federal and provincial government and government-guaranteed securities, as follows:

Provincial treasury bills
Short term bonds of Canada
Short term bonds of the provinces

Short term municipal bonds guaranteed by the provinces
Export paper guaranteed by the Export Development Corporation

3. Your Committee recommends that the Bank of Canada pay interest to the chartered banks on the primary cash reserve required by the Bank Act (exclusive of the amount of cash required for clearing settlement purposes and subject to a deduction for expenses in connection with the handling of such reserves and the investment thereof). By reason of the provisions of Sec. 18(1)(o) of the Bank of Canada Act, this will require amendment to Section 72(1) of the Bank Act to authorize and direct the Bank of Canada to pay such interest.
4. Your Committee is not in favour of the proposal to relieve banks of the requirement to maintain primary cash reserves against notice deposits of a term in excess of one year which are not encashable, unless there is some requirement for banks to match maturity of term deposits with mortgage loans in order to maintain an adequate flow of funds into residential mortgages up to the amount of the ceiling proposed in this report of 15% in respect of residential mortgages.
5. Your Committee rejects the White Paper proposal to require that chartered banks maintain a 4% cash reserve with respect to foreign currency deposits used in Canada, unless the Bank Act either:
 - (a) provides for payment of interest on such reserve in order to relieve the rate differential disadvantage situation in which Canadian banks would be placed in competition with foreign-controlled near-banks, or
 - (b) exempts from the 4% reserve requirement foreign currency deposits with an original term in excess of one year which are not encashable
 - (c) exempts funds advanced in foreign currency to the federal, provincial and municipal governments
 - (d) exempts funds advanced in foreign currency where the term loan agreement calls for not more than 25% to be repaid in the first five years.
6. Your Committee recommends that the reserve requirements of the Montreal City and District Savings Bank as provided under the Quebec Savings Banks Act should remain under that Act and that no changes in the amount of reserves should be made.
7. Your Committee calls attention to its recommendation in Sec. II(g) of this report that any reserve requirement that would be applicable to a bank for Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve or Overdraft Security Reserve as a member of the proposed Canadian Payments Association Act should be considered as part of the bank's primary cash reserve and secondary reserve respectively for purposes of calculating its reserves under the Bank Act and Quebec Savings Banks Act.

IV ENTRY INTO BANKING

(a) INCORPORATION OF NEW BANKS

One of the unique characteristics of the Canadian Banking system is that the establishment of new banks is rigorously controlled. The distinction between our system and systems elsewhere is not merely the establishment of concise and demanding criteria for entry but also, and perhaps more important, that each application for incorporation of a new bank is subjected to detailed public scrutiny by reason of the fact that banks must be incorporated by act of Parliament thus exposing the promoters to the salutary process of assessment by parliamentary committee. In the opinion of your Committee, this has not only tended to demonstrate the strengths of particular groups seeking a bank charter but has also provided an opportunity for exposing shortcomings which under other systems might well have gone undetected.

The White Paper proposes that incorporation of all new banks be by letters patent subject to the approval of the Governor-in-Council on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance. This is of course in line with the development of company law in the direction of incorporation of all bodies corporate by letters patent.

As a result of its study, your Committee is of the view that, provided some replacement for the public scrutiny afforded by the present parliamentary review system is found, no strong opposition to the incorporation of banks by letters patent exists. The importance of this public scrutiny, however, cannot be overemphasized and it is the opinion of your Committee that any system of incorporation of new banks by letters patent must have engrafted upon it a process for public assessment by some appropriate committee or tribunal in order to ensure that ease of entry into the banking system does not develop at the expense of the maintenance of the highest standard of quality in new banking institutions.

The choice of an appropriate vehicle for public assessment of applications for the incorporation of new banks will be to some extent dictated by the fact that, initially at least, a significant number of applications can be expected. On the other hand, this volume is likely to diminish to more manageable proportions with the passage of time. These circumstances may militate in favour of some form of ad hoc committee with representation from both the government and the banking community as an alternative to the establishment of an administrative tribunal of the conventional variety. The important point is that a move to the incorporation of banks by letters patent should not be effected without establishing a continuation, in some appropriate form, of the present process of public hearings.

RECOMMENDATION

Your Committee recommends that the White Paper proposal that banks be incorporated by letters patent be accepted subject to the requirement that there be established some appropriate committee or other tribunal charged with the responsibility of conducting a public review of applications for incorporation of banks so that interested parties will have an opportunity to appear and make representations. The intention is that such committee or tribunal would report to the Minister with its recommendation on the question of the suitability of the applicant for incorporation as a bank after there has been an opportunity in such public forum to assess the support or criticism of other institutions or the public.

Your Committee suggests that a copy of the recommendation to the Minister be filed with the application for Letters Patent. The Minister of Finance would consider the recommendation of the committee or tribunal and thereafter make his recommendation to the Governor-in-Council before letters patent of incorporation may be issued.

(b) OWNERSHIP OF BANK SHARES BY PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

There has been considerable opposition to the proposal in the White Paper that provincial governments be allowed to hold and vote capital stock of chartered banks. The White Paper states on page 22:

“The provisions of the present Act which preclude ownership of bank shares by governments will be altered to authorize one or more provincial governments to hold and vote up to 25 per cent of the shares of a new bank, but this percentage will have to be reduced to 10 per cent within ten years.”

This prohibition against the acceptance of a subscription for and transfer of a share of the capital stock of a bank is contained in Section 53(3) and (4) of the Bank Act.

The White Paper claims that there might be some possible short term benefits from the financial assistance which a provincial government might render to a new bank in its initial organizing stage. However, your Committee is of the opinion that it is neither necessary nor advisable for a provincial government to acquire voting stock in return for financial assistance.

Several good reasons have been presented to your Committee for not permitting government shareholdings in banks, the main one being that the credit policy of a bank might be influenced or weakened.

Your Committee believes that if financial assistance from provincial governments is required or deemed desirable in the initial stages of development of a new bank, there are other ways of accomplishing this, such as by way of guarantees, loans and income debentures rather than through the acquisition by a province of voting shares.

RECOMMENDATION

Your Committee recommends that the government of a province not be permitted to hold, own or vote, either directly or indirectly, any shares of the capital stock of a bank.

V

V FOREIGN BANKS

(a) GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS

The objectives of the proposals in the White Paper with respect to the operations in Canada of foreign banks are summarized as follows: “to provide for more equitable and effective competition between Canadian and foreign-owned institutions, to provide opportunity for Canadian affiliates of foreign banks to operate under Canadian banking legislation, to provide economic and financial surveillance by Canadian authorities and to provide a basis for reciprocal treatment for Canadian financial institutions abroad, while ensuring that Canada’s banking system remains predominantly in Canadian hands”.*

These objectives appear to have been received and acknowledged with satisfaction by both Canadian and foreign-owned financial institutions.

Canadian chartered banks hold a dominant position among financial institutions in Canada with a total of approximately $110 billion in assets booked in Canada, including $20 billion foreign currency assets booked in Canada compared with approximately $2 billion in assets of foreign controlled financial institutions in Canada. According to the White Paper there are about 120 Canadian corporations in which foreign banks have an equity interest and which appear to be engaged in financial activities. About 60 foreign banks have an equity interest in these corporations. Approximately half are United States banks and the remainder, except for seven, are from countries which are members of the European Economic Community.

It is expected that many of the foreign banks will seek incorporation of bank subsidiaries under the Bank Act. This will provide a new and very strong competitive force in Canada.

The principle of requiring or encouraging foreign banks to incorporate their financial operations in Canada into a Canadian bank subsidiary which will be subject to the provisions of the Bank Act appears to meet with adequate acceptance.

The White Paper states that any foreign bank affiliate engaging in both the making of loans and the accepting of deposits transferable by order will be required to incorporate as a bank under the Bank Act.

At the same time, the White Paper proposes the following limitations on the size and potential growth of such foreign banks’ subsidiaries;

1. A foreign bank will be limited to assets of 20 times its authorized capital up to a maximum of $500 million. To increase the authorized capital from $5 million to

* Page 26, White Paper

$25 million will require the approval of the Governor in Council at each step of the increase.

2. It will be limited to one place of business, but subject to the approval of the Minister of Finance as to the number and location of branches of a foreign bank subsidiary, it could be permitted to open branches to a maximum of five.
3. The policy, subject to review, will be to limit total operations of foreign banks' subsidiaries to 15% of total commercial lending in Canada.

(b) RESTRICTIONS

Restrictions on Size

The restriction on the size to which a bank may grow, namely to about $500 million in assets, may appear to be too restrictive in some cases, in as much as some Canadian affiliates of foreign banks apparently have already exceeded that amount.

Your Committee has the following comments and opinions with regard to this limitation:

A foreign bank's subsidiary whose assets, including the assets of affiliates in Canada which are being merged into the new bank, exceed $500 million at June 30, 1977 should be permitted to retain as its growth base the amount of such assets at June 30, 1977.

As the present Bank Act officially expires on June 30, 1977 (subject to the recent proposed nine month extension) the restriction, if any, should be limited to the greater of $500 million and the bank's assets in Canada at June 30, 1977.

Your Committee is of the opinion that this limit of $500 million per bank should not be static, but should be raised from time to time as the overall Canadian banking community grows. This could be accomplished by indexing as follows:

Initially a new foreign bank should be allowed to grow without restriction for its first five years of operations or up to the time when its total assets reach $500 million or its growth base is in excess of $500 million at June 30, 1977.

Thereafter, all foreign controlled banks which have reached the five year development stage or $500 million in assets, whichever comes first, or whose amount of growth base is in excess of $500 million at June 30, 1977 (including their operations in Canada prior to being incorporated as a bank) should be allowed to grow at a rate which does not exceed the rate of growth of total aggregate assets of all Canadian chartered banks based on the previous fiscal period.

Allowance should be made to permit banks which exceed the growth limit resulting from indexing in any one year to get "on side" within 12 months.

Restrictions on Number of Offices or Branches

The White Paper states on page 28, "The foreign bank affiliate will be limited to one place of business but, subject to the approval of the Minister of Finance as to the number and location of branches, could be permitted to open branches to a maximum of five."

As result of its studies and representations made by witnesses, your Committee wishes to point out some of the arguments in favour of and against such limitations:

IN FAVOUR OF LIMITATIONS

(1) Foreign banks should be restricted to one office initially until the banking authorities have gained some experience as to the nature and size of the proposed operations of a new foreign bank's subsidiary.

(2) Most foreign banks coming into Canada would only take the more profitable commercial loans and more easily accessible major corporate businesses in such cities as Halifax, Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver, Winnipeg, Edmonton and Calgary.

AGAINST LIMITATIONS

(1) While most foreign controlled banks in Canada would not be interested in establishing a large branch system across Canada, it is possible that the proposed restriction might deprive some Canadian centres of improved services on a more competitive basis. Such limitations might result in reciprocal limitations in other countries including some individual states in the United States of America.

(2) Limitation might tend to promote one city as the main banking centre for such new banks if they believed that they might be restricted to one location for all time. This might be to the detriment of efficiency and development, because foreign banks would tend to choose such location having regard to long-term growth, location of the main money-market activity or other reasons if they were to be restricted to one location. However, they might choose another location which would be more logical for their first office from the point of view of geography, efficiency and client orientation if they were not be so restricted in the future.

(3) The restriction on the number of branches would seriously impair a foreign bank's subsidiary's ability to be competitive in the retail banking field and to provide a broad or complete range of banking services.

(4) The degree of penetration by foreign banks into the Canadian financial system should not be determined by the number of branches but by financial criteria.

(5) Instead of a statutory limitation on number of branches, specific guidelines should be established to approve additional branches as benefit to Canada is demonstrated.

After due consideration of the problems involved in the proposed limitation in the number of offices or branches of a foreign bank's subsidiary, your Committee is of the opinion that any such limitations should remain flexible so as not to prevent the achievement of reasonable reciprocity arrangements with other countries.

Restrictions to share of commercial lending

The restriction to limit the total operations of foreign banks to 15% of total commercial lending in Canada might meet the objective of providing effective competition. However, the definition of what constitutes "total commercial lending in Canada" has not been provided and it is unclear if this includes the financial activities such as leasing, factoring and sales finance companies, guarantees, letters of credit and other forms of credit.

In the opinion of your Committee the proposal to limit the foreign bank subsidiaries' share of the market to 15% of the total commercial lending in Canada appears to be reasonable and should provide sufficient scope for such banks to accomplish adequate growth both individually and collectively.

This opinion is subject, of course, to an adequate definition as to what constitutes total commercial lending in Canada being provided.

In the opinion of your Committee it might also be advisable to reserve a portion of this 15% market share for applicants from foreign countries which presently are not represented on the Canadian banking scene.

Your Committee is also of the opinion that there should be a limit on the number of foreign banks from any one country which may be allowed to operate in Canada through chartered bank subsidiaries, provided such can be applied within the principle of reciprocity. Your Committee is aware that there are problems in administering limits of this nature.

Indeed some concern has been expressed to your Committee that opening the door to the extent of 15% of the commercial lending market might be merely the thin end of the wedge, and that this limit would eventually be increased.

(c) RECIPROCITY AND FOREIGN OWNERSHIP

The problem of reciprocity with other countries is a complicated one because of the difference in the relative size of the total assets of Canadian chartered banks compared with the total assets of banks in some other countries.

For example, at September 1975 total assets of Canadian banks amounted to approximately $104 billion which is only about 10% of the total assets of U.S. banks. U.S. authorities estimate that foreign bank installations chartered and licenced within the continental United States now number about 180 with total resources approaching $60 billion. The latter figure represents more than 6% of all U.S. bank assets. However, foreign branches of American banks outside of U.S. hold roughly three times the total assets of all non-American owned bank agencies, branches and affiliates operating in the United States. This would put a rough estimate of $180 billion on the amount of foreign assets of U.S. banks. At September 1975 the assets of Canadian-bank-owned banking institutions operating in the U.S. amounted to $6.6 billion.* This represents approximately 6.3% of the total assets of Canadian chartered banks at that time.

* "Foreign Banking in the United States" by Peter Rose, published in the Canadian Banker and ICB Review May-June Vol. 3, 1976.

In the same article it is mentioned that the Committee charged with developing guidelines for the regulation of foreign banks operating in the United States has emphasized the principle of "mutual non-discrimination". In the interest of preserving Canadian control of the Canadian banking system in the opinion of your Committee it is obviously necessary to interpret and limit "mutual non-discrimination" and reciprocity within some over-all restrictive limitations, because of the relatively greater size and financial strength of the U.S. banks both collectively and individually.

Also, proximity with the U.S. and the fact that U.S. industrial companies own and control such a large percentage of Canadian resources and industry make Canadian banks extremely vulnerable to competition by foreign banks operating in Canada.

It is interesting to note that in the United States the Federal Reserve Board is reintroducing legislation with a view to bringing foreign banks which are operating in the United States under Federal supervision; among other provisions, this latest proposed legislation would require such banks, most of whom are presently only subject to State legislation, to maintain reserve requirements with the Federal Reserve Board, to take out deposit insurance and to divest themselves of underwriting activities which relate to securities of United States institutions and corporations. Apparently the legislation would require foreign corporations to divest themselves of investments in non-banking businesses which are predominantly located in the United States; exempted however, would be world-wide business activities if the majority of such business is done outside the United States.

(d) BANKING CONSORTIUMS AND AFFILIATED INTERESTS IN OTHER BANKS

The White Paper states: "To avoid indirect conflicts the parent bank of a foreign bank subsidiary will not be able to establish or retain any other affiliates in Canada, other than those permitted to the bank subsidiary itself as a bank under the Bank Act." (White Paper—page 27)

It has been interpreted by some witnesses that this would apply not only to non-banking subsidiaries in Canada but also to the establishment of separate banking subsidiaries in Canada by two foreign banks if one of them had a significant shareholding in the other; also, it is claimed, it would be inconsistent with the recent growth of consortium banking in international markets.

There appear to be two aspects of the problem concerning the interpretation of "affiliates."

(a) Banks being deemed to be affiliated because one bank owns shares in another bank, either directly or indirectly;

(b) Banks being deemed to be affiliated because they hold an interest in the same consortium bank or banking consortium

These concerns affect not only foreign banks but also Canadian banks.

Concern has been expressed that because one foreign bank might have a minority share interest in another bank, one of them might be precluded from incorporating a chartered bank subsidiary in Canada if the other bank already had established a banking presence in Canada. Representation has been made to your Committee that the deciding factor as to whether a foreign bank might be allowed to incorporate a banking subsidiary in Canada should be in the degree of control of the proposed Canadian subsidiary by the affiliated foreign bank or banks.

In the opinion of your Committee, the problems of foreign banks being prevented from incorporating a bank subsidiary in Canada because of affiliation with any other bank through inter-company shareholdings is an area for which it might be extremely difficult to draft fair and acceptable legislation for all applicants for bank charters.

"Banking consortiums include banks from a number of countries for whom the consortium provides a framework for rapid communications and handling of large financial transactions. This flexibility provides national banks with greater international connections as well as the scale to handle larger loans because risks are distributed among banks in a number of countries."*

Some Canadian banks are participating in consortiums with foreign banks to develop projects in other countries, and some such consortiums provide funds for projects and governments of Canada. Some of these consortiums conduct their affairs through incorporated consortium banks with the participating banks owning the shares.

It has been represented to your Committee that the White Paper could be interpreted in such a manner as to prevent international consortiums from incorporating a bank in Canada or to discourage Canadian banks from participating in foreign banking consortiums.

For example, a strict interpretation of the White Paper proposal might result in all members of a consortium bank such as the International Energy Bank being deemed to be related or affiliated with one another and the fact that one of the participants is a Canadian bank might prevent both the International Energy Bank itself and any of its corporate shareholders from establishing a presence in Canada through the incorporation of a banking subsidiary.

Your Committee believes that the financing of large development projects in Canada can be assisted through banking consortiums which might include Canadian banks as well as foreign banks and that it would not be in Canada's interest to discourage or prevent the formation of such consortiums. Similarly, your Committee is of the opinion that the legislation should not restrict or discourage foreign banks from inviting Canadian banks to join with them in banking consortiums which might be formed for the purpose of financing special projects or programs in other countries.

A foreign bank subsidiary may be inhibited from joining a banking consortium in Canada because it is either close to or has reached the limit of its permitted commercial operations.

Your Committee suggests that the legislation might be drafted in such a manner that foreign banks taking a participation in a bank consortium or other similar joint venture for special and national projects not be deemed to be part of an "affiliated interest" for the purpose of deciding if a foreign bank might be permitted to incorporate a banking subsidiary in Canada.

Your Committee agrees that more favourable or less restrictive legislation should not be provided for foreign owned or controlled bank subsidiaries than is permitted to Canadian owned banks.

Also your Committee is concerned that the legislation should not contain exemptions for foreign institutions which would have the possible effect of weakening the dominant position of Canadian owned banks in Canada. It would appear that the affiliate rule may well interfere with the establishment in Canada of consortiums in which Canadian and foreign banks are partners and that this would be to the detriment of Canada. Your Committee is of the view that relief from the strict operation of the affiliate rule should be provided by legislation in respect of consortiums in the interest of Canada, at the same time ensuring that such relief does not provide a competitive advantage to particular banks whether foreign or domestic incorporated under the Bank Act in respect of their domestic operation.

The importance of this is such that in the public interest some solution should be found as a result of which the financing of undertakings in the natural resources field or in other areas in Canada might be provided through the association of foreign banks with Canadian banks in joint ventures and consortiums leading to a sharing of the financial burden. Your Committee has given much thought to this, but any further development of this matter will have to await the tabling of a new Bank Act in order to ascertain what, if any, proposals on this subject are put forward by the Government.

(e) OTHER PROPOSALS

Your Committee notes that the White Paper proposes that power to increase the limits on size of foreign bank subsidiaries by regulation will be accorded to the Governor in Council. Your Committee is of the opinion that any increases in the limits of size or otherwise in relation to capital or assets should be permitted only within the limits set out in the Bank Act, and that these limits should not be allowed to be exceeded by regulation.

* "Multinational Co-operatives—An Alternative for World Development" by J. G. Craig, Western Producer Prairie Books 1976

In order to provide adequate and definite control over the growth of foreign bank subsidiaries, your Committee is of the opinion that all limits, restrictions and conditions which apply to all such banks generally should not only be set out in the Bank Act but should also be listed in each bank's charter; this would be particularly important, in the opinion of your Committee, if incorporation was permitted by letters patent.

(f) TRANSITIONAL PROVISIONS

Your Committee is of the opinion that the transition towards incorporation of foreign bank subsidiaries under the Bank Act should encompass adequate and fair "transition" provisions and should include provisions such as tax free roll-overs, modification of thin-capitalization provisions under the Income Tax Act, and deemed continuity of corporate existence for qualification of securities under the "legal for life" tests contained in a number of statutes governing financial institutions, such as the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act.

While the White Paper states that "provision will be made for a conversion period", your Committee notes that there does not appear to be any indication that there will be any allowance for a "grandfather clause" or early presence type of benefit. Your Committee also observes from representations made by foreign banks that the White Paper appears to be ambiguous as to whether the restriction on borrowing on the guarantee of a foreign parent will apply to foreign bank subsidiaries which become incorporated under the Bank Act or only to affiliates of foreign banks which do not become banks.

These are very important questions which were brought up by witnesses and which should be dealt with in the legislation. There will be ample opportunity to deal with these questions when the Bill to amend the Bank Act is presented and ample time for your Committee to review these matters if they are not dealt with in the legislation.

(g) CONSTITUTIONAL ASPECT

The White Paper indicates that it is the intention of the government that any foreign bank affiliate which is engaged in both the making of loans and the accepting of deposits transferable by order will be required to incorporate as a bank under the Bank Act or to cease engaging in such combination of activities. This is in keeping with the implicit definition of banking as being a chequable deposit function and is consistent with the theme of the White Paper.

On the other hand, it is also apparently the intention of the government in the case of those foreign affiliates, either federally or provincially incorporated, which decide not to be incorporated under the Bank Act as banks by reason of the fact that they are not engaged in "Banking" activities other than the making of loans, that they shall be federally regulated as well at least to the extent that they shall not be permitted to borrow money in the Canadian market upon the guarantee of their foreign parents. This raises the question as to whether or not Parliament has authority to enact legislation affecting these provincially incorporated institutions.

The question is difficult to resolve because it is not clear from the White Paper what particular legislation it is intended to adopt to control these provincially incorporated foreign affiliates. The White Paper contemplates that legislation in this area can be defended on the basis of the federal banking power as well as federal authority in the area of international trade and commerce, aliens, census and statistics. Reliance on the banking power is somewhat tenuous as the institutions which would be purported to be controlled would not be engaging in the combination of functions, i.e. making loans and accepting deposits transferable by order which the White Paper claims are aspects of banking. It is doubtful that a provincially incorporated financial institution which coincidentally happens to be a foreign affiliate is necessarily engaged in international trade and commerce; the other sections of the British North America Act relied upon in the White Paper are equally illusive. Accordingly, it is far from clear that there is jurisdiction in Parliament to legislate in this one narrow area relating to the government's intention to attempt to control borrowings of provincially incorporated foreign bank affiliates on the guarantee of their parents.

It does not appear that such power can be exercised by the federal authority except through the terms and conditions imposed on the foreign bank seeking to incorporate a bank in Canada under the Bank Act. In the case of foreign bank affiliates which do not seek incorporation as a bank subsidiary in Canada and in the case of foreign financial institutions not controlled by foreign banks, in the opinion of your Committee it would appear that the only way to prevent such financial institutions from borrowing money in Canada on the guarantee of the foreign bank parent or of any foreign bank would be by charging them with carrying on the business of banking in Canada without being incorporated under the Bank Act.

(h) LIMITATIONS ON BORROWING ON GUARANTEE OF PARENT

The proposal in the White Paper to deny to "affiliates of foreign banks" the possibility of borrowing in the Canadian market on the guarantee of its foreign parent or another company associated with the parent has been considered at length by your Committee. Representations have been made by witnesses and in briefs submitted to the Committee, and your Committee is aware of arguments both in favour of and against the proposal.

Although the White Paper is unclear on this point, your Committee assumes that this restriction would not apply to foreign bank subsidiaries incorporated under the Bank Act.

It would appear to your Committee that foreign controlled financial institutions which are not required to put up the same cash reserves which are required of Canadian chartered banks would be able to operate with a competitive advantage. However, the evidence presented to your Committee is not conclusive on this point. As stated earlier, in the opinion of your Committee the White Paper is unclear as to its authority or the proposed method for denying affiliates the right to use the guarantee of a foreign parent in any borrowing in Canada. However, your Committee questions whether the intent of the White Paper in this direction is to equalize competition between near-banks and banks, or to induce foreign banks to incorporate their Canadian operations under the Bank Act.

In summary your Committee is of the opinion that any foreign controlled financial institution operating in Canada whether it is incorporated as a bank or not should be required to have its liabilities guaranteed by the parent company. This has become the trend in some foreign countries, such as U.K. If foreign banks were allowed to operate through branches in Canada this problem would probably be academic because all of the assets of the parent would be behind the liabilities of the Canadian branch.

Rather than prohibiting the possibility of borrowing with the guarantee of a foreign parent, your Committee suggests that a more reasonable approach would be to limit the ratio of the foreign affiliate's guaranteed borrowings to total borrowing liabilities and capital. A limit of this nature would encourage the Canadian affiliate or subsidiary of a foreign bank to import more capital funds either as foreign borrowings from the parent or others or as an infusion into new capital stock.

If the limit was set at 50% of total borrowing liabilities and shareholders' equity, when borrowings on the guarantee of the parent reached the 50% level, new capital funds would be imported into Canada. In the opinion of your Committee this would encourage a reasonable balancing of imported funds consisting of loans and shareholders' equity with borrowings on the Canadian market on the guarantee of the parent.

For example, a near-bank has $30 million in notes payable guaranteed by its parent and has other liabilities and shareholders' equity amounting to $30 million for an aggregate of $60 million in combined liabilities and shareholders' equity. The guaranteed notes payable of $30 million would represent 50% of liabilities and capital. Therefore, if guaranteed borrowings on the Canadian money market increased by another $5 million, it would be required to raise an equal amount of $5 million in either non-guaranteed borrowings or in direct loans or new capital from its parent.

(i) RECOMMENDATIONS

Your Committee is generally in accord with the thrust of the proposals in the White Paper to control operations of foreign banks in Canada.

1. Your Committee recommends the approval of the White Paper proposals, subject to modifications below, to place the following limits on the growth of foreign owned banks in Canada:
 - (a) restriction of the combined market share of such banks to 15% of total commercial lending in Canada
 - (b) a limit in growth of an individual bank to $500 million of assets or 20 times authorized capital based on approved increases in authorized capital to $25 million
2. Your Committee recommends that indexing be provided so that when a foreign bank subsidiary reaches the above limit in size it be permitted to grow at a rate governed by the rate of growth of combined assets in Canada of all Canadian owned chartered banks.

3. Thereafter, your Committee recommends as follows:
 - (a) Initially, a new foreign bank subsidiary should be allowed to grow without restriction for its first five years of operations or up to the time when its total assets reach $500 million or where its growth base is in excess of $500 million at June 30, 1977.
 - (b) Thereafter, all those which have reached the five year development stage or $500 million in assets, whichever comes first or whose amount of growth base is in excess of $500 million at June 30, 1977, (including their operations in Canada prior to being incorporated as a bank) should be allowed to grow at a rate which does not exceed the rate of growth of total aggregate assets of all Canadian chartered banks based in the previous fiscal period.
 - (c) Allowance should be made to permit banks which exceed the growth limit resulting from indexing in any one year to get "on side" within 12 months.
4. Your Committee further recommends the approval of the White Paper proposal to restrict foreign bank subsidiaries to one place of business, or with approval of the Minister of Finance a maximum of five branches, but that further increases be permitted as may be deemed advisable under reciprocity arrangements with other countries.
5. Your Committee also recommends that the general principles of reciprocity and significant benefit to Canada be used in considering foreign bank applications for entry, but that limits be placed on the number of banks allowed from any one country, keeping in mind the principle of reciprocity being sought in the White Paper.
6. Your Committee recommends that "affiliate" and "foreign bank affiliate" be defined in any amending legislation in relation to the operations of a foreign bank subsidiary and its parent in a joint venture or consortium in Canada (in association with other banking interests either a foreign bank, or a foreign bank subsidiary or a Canadian bank).
7. Your Committee is not in favour of the proposal in the White Paper to deny affiliates of foreign banks the possibility of borrowing in the Canadian market on the guarantee of its foreign parent or another company associated with the parent. Your Committee recommends, however, that such guaranteed borrowing be limited to 50% of the Canadian affiliates' total combined borrowing liabilities and shareholders' equity.
8. Your Committee recommends that the provisions for limits on size and growth of foreign bank subsidiaries be set out in the Bank Act, and not by regulation.
9. Your Committee further recommends that all limits, restrictions and conditions which apply to foreign bank subsidiaries should not only be set out in the Bank Act but also should be incorporated into each such bank's charter.

VI BANK BUSINESS POWERS

(a) FINANCIAL LEASING

"In Canada, subsidiaries of foreign banks as well as other Canadian corporations have been active in this field. United States national banks are permitted to provide financial leasing services. The Canadian banks have not, however, participated in the financial leasing of equipment other than, in recent years, through partially owned affiliated companies." (Page 30, White Paper)

While competition from banks undoubtedly would affect companies in the field at present commercial realities dictate that financial leasing has become, to a great extent, a financial equivalent of credit or term lending and an accepted banking responsibility or service and that banks should be permitted to engage in financial leasing.

The White Paper recommends that banks be permitted to engage in leasing "on a full payout basis—except to an amount not exceeding 20 per cent of the acquisition cost".* This is in itself a form of contradiction as was pointed out by one of the associations which appeared before your Committee. This association also pointed out that residual leasing is infrequently offered by leasing companies in Canada, and only when special circumstances prevail as it is considered too risky by Canadian lessors with experience in the market.

The concept of allowing a 20 per cent residual value in a lease apparently has been borrowed from the definition of financial leasing included in the Regulations pertaining to Federal Reserve Board Banks (United States).

The banking group, when appearing as witnesses before your Committee, indicated that Canadian banks do not go into leasing situations where there is any dependence on the residual value of the equipment, although it was conceded that the function that the 20 per cent residual value performs is to enable the lessor to bid a lower price to the lessee in terms of rent.

Another trade group, representing automobile dealers, presented some convincing arguments against allowing banks to engage in leasing of automobiles and trucks. After studying the matter, your Committee is of the opinion that this problem would be resolved if the proposed residual value were decreased to a maximum of 10% and that reduction thereby of the allowable residual value from 20% to 10% would appear to be appropriate to get down to a "salvage" value in accordance with a true functional equivalent of credit.

There is a body of opinion that banks, if they are permitted to engage in financial leasing, should be able to do so at their option through a separate subsidiary, because this would minimize the competitive advantage which banks would have in exercising their banking role and through their extensive branch system. Your Committee agrees with this view.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. Your Committee recommends the approval of the White Paper proposal to permit banks specifically to engage in financial leasing of equipment on a non-operating full payout basis.
2. Your Committee recommends that, in financial leases negotiated by banks, the dependence on a residual value of the equipment should be limited to 10% of the acquisition cost and not 20% as proposed in the White Paper.
3. Your Committee recommends that banks which engage in approved financial leasing operations be permitted to conduct same through separate wholly-owned subsidiary companies.

(b) FACTORING

The White Paper proposes that banks be specifically authorized to engage in factoring.

Some banks have engaged in factoring through partly-owned affiliated factoring companies, although factoring has not been permitted specifically to banks under the Bank Act.

Foreign banks have been operating in factoring in Canada through non-banking subsidiaries and affiliates.

In the opinion of your Committee it seems appropriate to permit Canadian banks to engage in factoring, either directly or through a subsidiary, because it is now considered in most countries to be a normal banking service. Your Committee received no objections to this proposal.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. Your Committee recommends approval of the White Paper proposal to permit banks specifically to engage in factoring.
2. Your Committee recommends that banks which engage in approved factoring operations be permitted to conduct same through separate wholly-owned subsidiaries.

(c) RESIDENTIAL MORTGAGES

Presently the mortgage portfolio of a bank is limited to 10% of its deposit liabilities and debentures. It is proposed in the White Paper that such ceiling on mortgage portfolios be removed.

The White Paper states that:

"While some of the larger banks are approaching the 10 per cent ceiling, the conventional residential mortgages held by the banks as a group at the end of 1975 amounted to only 5.8 per cent of the total Canadian dollar liabilities and debentures."

"As there continues to be a growing need for residential mortgage funds, particularly for small and medium-priced homes, it is desirable that banks not be constrained by arbitrary limits.” (Page 32, White Paper).

* White Paper, page 31

In the interests of liquidity and of matching mortgages with the proceeds of term deposits or debentures of a comparable maturity, it would appear to your Committee advisable that some limit be placed on the amount of investments in mortgages at any one time in relation to total deposit and debenture liabilities; there should also be a reasonable matching or proceeds from term deposits with mortgages. This might have the effect of resolving to some extent the problem envisaged by the trust and mortgage companies that the removal of the 4% reserve on such non-callable term deposits would divert the normal flow of mortgage funds into commercial lending. This subject was dealt with earlier in this report under “Reserves on Term Deposits” in Sec. III (f).

Some criticism was expressed to your Committee of the fact that the banks as a group were not providing their fair share of the funds for residential mortgages, and although permitted to expand their mortgage portfolios up to 10% of their deposit liabilities and debentures, no one bank in particular had yet reached the 10% limit. It has been suggested that some provision should stipulate that banks should be required to allocate a minimum of 10% of their deposits and debentures to the residential mortgage market. This procedure perhaps would indicate a positive social role for the banks.

Your Committee is of the opinion that from a liquidity point of view there should be some limit on the percentage of a bank's deposit liabilities which might be invested in residential mortgages, and suggests that, rather than taking off the 10% limit completely, an increase to 15% would be reasonable until the next decennial review of the Bank Act.

The rationale for the adoption of the 10% ceiling in 1967 was apparently to restrict the impact of new competition which would be provided by banks entering the mortgage market. Indications are, however, that the trust and mortgage loan companies, caisses populaires and the credit unions more than held their own in competition with the banks. While chartered banks' share of the mortgage market rose from 3.7 to 11.3 per cent from 1967 to the end of 1974, the combined share of the trust and loan companies and of the credit unions also rose—from 24.6 per cent in 1967 to 35.6 per cent by the end of 1974. (Source: Economic Council—“Efficiency and Regulation, 1976—page 83).

While the chartered banks as a group have increased their mortgage holdings to 5.8% of their deposits, it appears reasonable to raise the 10% limit because at least three of the banks are approaching their 10% limit and it would not seem equitable under existing conditions to restrict the competition from the banks which have been the most aggressive in providing mortgage funds.

An increase in the limit from 10% to 15% should provide adequate room from growth. Your Committee, however, is of the opinion that some restriction is necessary in order to provide for control over liquidity, and if there is no limit, such as 15%, that there should be a requirement for a reasonable matching of maturities of the proceeds from term deposits with investment in mortgage loans.

RECOMMENDATION

Your Committee recommends that the present limit on a bank's residential mortgage portfolio be raised from 10% of Canadian dollar deposit liabilities and debentures to 15%.

(d) DATA PROCESSING

The White Paper proposes to restrict banks to providing data processing services directly related to the making of payments, that is, to “banking-related” data processing services.

The Banking community has represented to your Committee that this restriction would not affect any data-processing services which they carry on at the present time. However, they make the following points:

1. This would put a restriction on competition to protect the soft-ware companies which now have established themselves and do not require protection.
2. Development of new banking and data processing services in the future might be severely restricted to the detriment of the public by narrowly confining the services provided by banks to a very circumscribed area of the functions.

It is suggested by the bankers that if the independent computer service firms are requesting that they be protected from “unfair competition” this should be dealt with under the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act.

Your Committee notes that the Combines Investigation Act was amended in 1976 by an amendment (Section 31.4(4)) whereby banks are restrained from engaging in “tied selling” of such services as data processing, “except where it is engaged in by a person in the business of lending money for the purpose of better securing loans made by him and is reasonably necessary for such purpose.”

Your Committee is of the opinion that the above provision in the Combines Investigation Act is sufficient protection to the Data Processing industry from possible “unfair competition” from banks and that it is not necessary to provide for duplicating legislation in the Bank Act.

It should be noted that the proposed legislation to amend the Combines Act proposes to rest the responsibility for the enforcement of competition policy in the Combines Investigation Act or its successor.

RECOMMENDATION

Your Committee recommends that the proposal in the White Paper to place a restriction in the Bank Act concerning the limitation of banks to providing data processing services directly related to the making of payments not be approved, for the reason that sufficient restriction and protection against possible unfair competition is already embodied in the Combines Investigation Act; in any event your Committee considers that such proposal would, in view of the proposed amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, be more appropriate to consider in connection with the latter legislation rather than the Bank Act.

(e) SECURITIES

The proposals define more closely the role of banks in the sale of corporate securities.

The White Paper states: "while it would not be appropriate for banks to promote the sale of corporate securities, it should be possible to make these securities available through a bank or banks and so inform the public". It also states "Banks will, however, be permitted to distribute corporate securities as members of a selling group". (Page 35, White Paper)

In a brief submitted to the Minister of Finance, it was indicated that the banking group does not appear to have any general objection to specific provisions or restrictions concerning investment activities of banks other than a general concern "that the specific amendment be drafted so as not to inhibit ordinary money market and commercial operations of the banks".*

On the other side, however, concern has been expressed by the provincial Minister of Finance that in view of the proposed extension of the powers of banks, the Bank Act revision concerning securities should make it explicitly clear that the regulation of securities trading is an area of provincial responsibility.

Your Committee is sympathetic to both of these concerns, and suggests that further consideration be given to them when the legislation is presented.

The Committee is in favour of the adoption of the White Paper proposals to specify areas for dealing in securities where banks will be permitted or excluded, such as, for example:

Excluded—underwriting corporate securities—acting as agent in private placements

Permitted—distributing corporate securities as members of a selling group; distributing federal securities—underwriting and distributing securities of federal government agencies, securities of provincial and municipal governments and their agencies as well as securities of international agencies of which Canada is member.

Your Committee recommends the adoption of these proposals concerning securities, subject to further study when the proposed legislation is in place.

(f) TRUST AND QUASI-TRUST ACTIVITIES

(1) MUTUAL FUNDS

The White Paper proposes that banks be prohibited from the management of mutual funds; this reinforces the concept that the trust function should be completely divorced from the operating and management function in order to avoid possible conflict or appearance of conflict of interest.

In this connection, bankers stated that all of these proposals would require revisions in the existing set-up of one or more of the banks but that as part of a consistent effort to avoid situations where conflict of interest could arise they are prepared to support this proposal.

The White Paper is unclear as to whether banks will be permitted to act as advisers to mortgage-based mutual funds, and in this regard your Committee suggests that this should be permitted in the same manner as Real Estate Investment Trusts and Mortgage Investment Companies are permitted.

RECOMMENDATION

Your Committee recommends the adoption of the proposals of the White Paper concerning Trust and Quasi-Trust Activities, provided that there is an adequate transition period and provided that banks be permitted to act as advisers to mortgage-based mutual funds.

(2) REGISTERED RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLANS AND

(3) REGISTERED HOME OWNERSHIP PLANS

Neither the Canadian Bankers' Association nor the Trust Companies Association of Canada offered any objections to the provisions in the White Paper that the banks be restricted to offering these plans in the form of deposit plans only. These proposals carry out the concept of separating the trust function from the management function in order to avoid possible conflict or appearance of conflict of interest.

In the opinion of your Committee these proposals appear to be reasonable.

RECOMMENDATION

Your Committee recommends that the proposals of the White Paper with respect to Registered Retirement Savings Plans (RRSPs) and Registered Home Ownership Plans (RHOSPs) be adopted.

(4) REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUSTS AND MORTGAGE INVESTMENT COMPANIES

The White Paper proposes that the banks be permitted to continue to act as advisers for Real Estate Investment Trusts (REITs) and Mortgage Investment Companies (MICs) on the condition that the Real Estate Investment Trusts and Mortgage Investment Companies have a board of trustees or directors, the majority of whom are independent of the bank.

Your Committee received no representations against this proposal and is of the opinion that the proposal is reasonable.

RECOMMENDATION

Your Committee recommends the approval of this White Paper proposal.

* Page 10 "White Paper: The Banks' Assessment" Brief of the Canadian Bankers Association to the Minister of Finance

(5) PORTFOLIO MANAGEMENT, INVESTMENT COUNSELLING AND SECURITIES ADVISING

In order to avoid an apparent conflict of interest, the White Paper proposes to restrict banks from portfolio management and investment counselling other than for Real Estate Investment Trusts (REITs) and Mortgage Investment Companies (MICs), and advice on particular securities to small clients or infrequent investors with no other contacts in the financial community. Banks would also be permitted to provide certain administrative services for clients' investment portfolios.

No objections to these proposals were presented by witnesses and your Committee is of the opinion that these proposals are reasonable.

RECOMMENDATION

Your Committee recommends that these proposals expressed in the White Paper should be adopted.

(g) BANK INVESTMENT IN CANADIAN CORPORATIONS

(1) BANKING OPERATIONS

The White Paper's philosophy is that "Banks' operations should be confined within their own corporate structure and subject to all aspects of banking legislation and regulations". (page 38, White Paper) There are however certain exceptions which would permit a bank to own 100 per cent of the voting stock of Mortgage Loan Companies, REIT Service Corporations and Bank Service Corporations. These subsidiaries would be consolidated with the banks' figures for reporting purposes and for calculating a bank's reserve requirement.

Most banks see no need for this restrictive legislation. They would prefer to have the right to establish "financial service corporations" for specialized areas of lending such as leasing or factoring and your Committee concurs with this view.

Your Committee is of the opinion that in some cases greater flexibility in concentrating specialized skills and improved efficiency can result by organizing and marketing in specialized areas through a separate wholly-owned subsidiary. Provided proper identification of the affiliation is made by the subsidiary so that the public is aware of the identity of the parent company, provided such subsidiary is subject to the provisions of the Bank Act, provided its liabilities are guaranteed by the parent company, and provided the subsidiary's figures are consolidated with those of its parent company for reserve and reporting purposes, your Committee is not aware of any compelling arguments in favour of this restriction.

The reasons given in the White Paper are "to clarify and regulate the nature and extent of banks' interests in Canadian corporations".* It is suggested by your Committee that this can be accomplished equally well if approved operations such as financial leasing and factoring are carried on by banks within subsidiaries rather than within divisions or departments by drafting the legislation so as to make clear and to regulate the nature and extent of the banks' interest in such Canadian corporations.

* White Paper, page 38.

RECOMMENDATION

Your Committee recommends against the White Paper proposal requiring banks to confine all their operations within their own corporate structure, subject to certain stated exceptions.

(1) Other Financial Activities

Except as authorized by the Bank Act for investments in such companies as mortgage loan companies and bank service corporations, the White Paper proposes that banks would not be permitted to acquire more than 10% of the voting shares of Canadian corporations engaged primarily in financial activities. Provision is made in the proposals for this limit to be exceeded temporarily, for investments of $5 million or less and for ownership in venture capital corporations. Provision is also made for disposal of excess investments to be divested within two years; provisions for the limit on and disposal of venture capital investments are to be subject to regulations.

Your Committee is of the opinion that these proposals are reasonable, but suggests that the time limit for disposal of excess investments mature venture capital investments should be at least five years in order to permit orderly divestment.

RECOMMENDATION

Your Committee recommends the approval of these White Paper proposals subject to the time limit for disposing of excess investments and mature investments being at least five years.

(2) NON-FINANCIAL BUSINESS

The White Paper proposes that banks not be permitted to acquire more than 10% of the voting shares of any non-financial Canadian corporation, except as authorized by the Bank Act; a two-year period is provided for divestiture of excess investments.

In the opinion of your Committee the two year divestiture period to reduce ownership of voting stock of joint-venture investments down to 10% appears to be unrealistic.

Most joint ventures continue to be in the development stage after two years and the substantial presence of the bank both for control and advisory purposes is usually advisable; it is also doubtful that in many cases a joint venture could be properly valued after two years if the project is still in the development stage.

RECOMMENDATION

Your Committee recommends that a five-year divestiture period should be made available.

(h) EXTENSION OF CREDIT AGAINST SECURITY

The White Paper proposes extension of powers of banks under the Bank Act for giving of security and borrowing.

These proposed changes all appear to your Committee to represent modifications to meet developing and changing needs and your Committee is of the opinion that these modifications will constitute improvements to the present Bank Act.

RECOMMENDATION

Your Committee recommends the approval of these proposals in the White Paper.

(i) NON-BANKING ACTIVITIES OF SPECIAL SOCIAL OR ECONOMIC BENEFIT

The White Paper proposes to regularize some of the services which banks have been performing for a number of years and which are considered to represent a useful contribution to the community in which they are rendered.

These include:

- (a) the sale of urban transit tickets;
- (b) the sale of lottery tickets which are sponsored by federal, provincial and municipal governments;
- (c) the sale of tickets in connection with special temporary and infrequent, non-commercial celebrations or projects of local, municipal, provincial or national interest, as a public service.

While, in the opinion of your Committee, there do not appear to be any objections to a Bank performing such services, the listing of such services might tend to exclude in the future some worthwhile legitimate public service which might be prevented because it was not specifically listed. Your Committee, however, is not against banks performing these public services, but suggests that there should be some more general statement as to the terms and scope of activities permitted. Your Committee, however, is of the opinion that banks should only be permitted to sell tickets for events under the public service category (c) above, provided it is done without remuneration.

RECOMMENDATION

Your Committee recommends the adoption of these proposals, with particular attention to our suggestion as to the broadening of the scope of such activities within the general scope of the objectives referred to, and provided banks be permitted to sell tickets on a remunerative basis only for projects of a certain restricted and specified nature, such as urban transit tickets and lottery tickets which are sponsored by federal, provincial and municipal governments. Sale of tickets for non-profit activities should be without remuneration.

VII

BANK CORPORATE POWERS

The White Paper includes proposals under the following headings:

Coordination of the Bank Act provisions with those of the Canada Business Corporation Act.

(a) Methods of Financing

Additional flexibility in methods of financing including the right to issue no par value shares and shares without preemptive rights, stock under option plans, Canadian $ convertible debentures, foreign currency non-convertible debentures, convertible preferred shares, stock dividends, and the waiver of pre-emptive rights.

(b) Financial Disclosures

Improvement and updating in financial disclosures including the provision for consolidated financial statements and the "equity method of accounting for affiliates" for all investments in affiliates where the bank holds more than 20% of the voting stock or has effective control of the affiliate. Your Committee suggests the basic report formats for financial statement presentation should be in the regulations rather than in schedules to the Act. This would permit an easier method of updating the format as may be required from time to time.

(c) Loans to Directors

Extension of the provisions concerning loans to directors of banks and to firms of which a director or any officer of the bank is a member or director.

Your Committee did not receive any representations but studied various written submissions on these subjects and is of the opinion that these proposals are acceptable and will be improvements to the Bank Act in line with changing conditions.

RECOMMENDATION

Your Committee recommends the approval of the above proposals as detailed in the White Paper, subject to the Committee's recommendations that the required format for financial information be covered in the regulations rather than in schedules to the Act.

Your Committee has the following comments to make on the last three sections of the White Paper on Bank Corporate Powers:

(d) Appointment of Auditors

(e) Limitation on Holding of Bank Shares

(f) Adequacy of Capital and Liquidity

(d) Appointment of auditors

In connection with the appointment of auditors a proposed amendment provides that banks would be permitted "the option of appointing either individuals or firms, but requiring that in the case of the appointment of firms that the bank designate the individual partner it wishes to direct the audit work". (White Paper, Page 44)

Your Committee agrees with the statement in the White Paper that the appointment of individuals has given rise to some difficulties where individual auditors have been unavailable when required on short notice in connection with bank business.

The present Bank Act provides that each of the two auditors shall be a member in good standing of an approved institute, is ordinarily resident in Canada and has practised his profession in Canada continuously during the six consecutive years prior to his appointment.

RECOMMENDATION

Your Committee disagrees with the proposal that banks be permitted an option of appointing either individuals or firms of chartered accountants as auditors but recommends that firms of public accountants be appointed as auditors, with the bank being required to designate the name of the partner of the firm (who is a member in good standing of an approved Institute and has practiced his profession in Canada continuously during the six consecutive years prior to his appointment) it wishes to direct the audit work.

(e) Limitation on holdings of bank shares

The present Bank Act prohibits any one individual or corporation from owning more than 10 per cent of the voting stock of a bank. A similar provision exists in the Quebec Savings Banks Act. The White Paper proposes that for the purposes of the 10 per cent limit, centrals, federations, or regional unions will be deemed to be associated with their member credit unions or caisses populaires and their combined holdings of shares in any bank will be limited to no more than 25%.

In the course of its hearings and through submissions your Committee has received the opinion that the limit should be reduced to 5% of the outstanding shares.

Your Committee is of the opinion that the strength of the credit unions and caisses populaires acting in concert through their respective centrals or regionals has grown to a point where the acquisition by them of a 10% or more voting interest in a chartered bank or a savings bank could result in a conflict of interest and in loss of independence of the bank or savings bank. In the opinion of your Committee there is a possible risk that the direction in which the bank should be operated could be influenced in the interest of such type of associated group acting in concert. The proposal in the White Paper would permit the control of a bank or savings bank to be accomplished without much difficulty.

RECOMMENDATION

Your Committee approves the proposal of the White Paper that centrals, federations or regional unions be deemed to be associated with their respective member credit unions or caisses populaires for purposes of the limit on holdings of banks' shares. However, your Committee recommends that their combined holdings, either directly or indirectly, of the shares of a bank should be limited to 10% of its outstanding shares.

(f) Adequacy of Capital and Liquidity

The White Paper states that the present Bank Act does not regulate the levels of capital or liquid assets to be maintained by the chartered banks.

The White Paper goes on to say that it is not possible to develop an adequate formula for controlling the adequacy of capital or liquidity of a bank. It prefers to have the Bank Act stipulate that "a bank shall maintain adequate capital and liquidity and that the Minister of Finance may make regulations on these matters". (Page 45, White Paper)

Your Committee is in favour of the development of guidelines and the issue of directives to individual banks as proposed by the White Paper. Your Committee is well aware of the close vigilance maintained over banks by the department of the Inspector General of Banks.

It has been submitted to your Committee by witnesses that, placed on a comparable basis adjusted for differences in accounting practices, the leverage ratios (ratio of deposits to capital funds, subordinated debentures, reserves and shareholders' equity) of Canadian banks compares favourably with the United States banks and the United Kingdom banks.

In addition, deposit insurance in Canada tends to provide a substantial additional protection to depositors. In U.K. deposit insurance is only in a proposal stage, a recommendation for deposit insurance having been included in a White Paper for U.K. banks which was released in August, 1976 and which is still in the discussion stage.

Perhaps the most important and least tangible, external influence affecting the Canadian banks is the confidence factor which the market, particularly the international market, assigns to each bank. According to witnesses it seems that Canadian banks have historically enjoyed a higher confidence factor than those of other nations.

The international confidence placed in Canadian banks indicates that the market place is using qualitative as well as quantitative judgment, and on this basis, Canadian banks apparently rate highly.

It would seem, therefore, that any attempt to arrive at a formula for liquidity or leverage based solely on quantitative analysis and ratios might not be the fairest method.

It has come to the attention of your Committee that central banks and regulatory authorities in both the U.S. and the U.K. as well as other countries, are devoting considerable attention to the structure and adequacy of capital of banks. Your Committee suggests that a similar study should be commenced in Canada.

Generally your Committee is of the opinion that the quality of a bank's loan and investment portfolio and the quality of a bank's management as reflected in its earnings record is the first criteria for judging the adequacy of a bank's capital or its leverage ratio.

Your Committee is of the opinion that the strength of a bank lies not only in its quantity of assets or capital but in its quality, quality of its management, the quality of its loan portfolio and the quality of its earning power.

Some concern has been expressed to your Committee that at present the Bank Act does not provide for any limit to the amount or percentage of Canadian-raised capital funds and deposits which a Canadian bank might lend or invest in foreign countries. Submissions to your Committee indicate that a substantial part of the business and profits of some Canadian banks are derived from their foreign operations.

The making of loans in foreign countries of funds raised in foreign currencies outside of Canada should not normally be of particular concern in the context of foreign exchange and monetary supply, provided accepted standards of quality and liquidity are maintained for such foreign loans. However, your Committee is of the opinion that there should be some control over the amount of Canadian funds raised in this country which can be loaned or invested by chartered banks outside of Canada.

RECOMMENDATION

Your Committee recommends that the government institute a study on the adequacy of capital of banks, embracing such matters as liquidity, leverage and capital structure, with a view to developing minimum standards for Canadian banks applicable to both domestic and foreign operations.

VIII

INTENDED SUBJECT MATTER OF REGULATIONS

The White Paper makes it clear that it is the intention of the Government to administer the banking system in many important areas through regulations or by the exercise of Ministerial discretion rather than by substantive and exhaustive provisions contained in the Statute itself. Your Committee has expressed concern about this trend in connection with other subjects of legislation in the past and it would appear to be a particularly important area under The Bank Act and the Canadian Payments Association Act.

Regulations are, of course, not new to the Bank Act and there are many provisions of the present Statute which contemplate either the Governor in Council establishing a regulatory framework for the administration of a particular aspect of the Act or accomplishing the same effect through the exercise of Ministerial discretion. A close analysis of the White Paper, however, would appear to indicate that the Government is opting for a regulatory framework which is not confined merely to administrative provisions to carry into effect the substantive aspects of the Act, but rather goes further and clearly contemplates the establishment of substantive provisions by regulation. In this way, the legislator is deprived of the opportunity of examining the intended provision at the time that the Statute is passed.

The White Paper contains at least twenty-six proposals or subjects which contemplate a regulatory authority and these, of course, must be added to the many which are contained in the present statute which are not intended to be changed. Thus, it is contemplated that the definition of the maintenance by banks of adequate capital and liquidity will be incorporated in regulations promulgated by the Minister of Finance, the limitations on growth and size in relation to the authorized capital of a foreign bank subsidiary will be established by the Governor in Council, reserve requirements on particular classes of deposits will be subject to change on the authority of the Governor in Council, and pursuant to some undefined regulatory authority, the Government will have to be satisfied that, in the case of foreign bank subsidiaries, the parent bank is "of good reputation" and that the subsidiary will have the potential of making a contribution to "competitive banking" in Canada.

It is not possible to come to grips with this problem until the Bill is before your Committee because in some cases, (such as Section 13(1) and Section 14 of the present Act) regulatory authority may be quite inoffensive where the provision of the statute itself limits the regulatory power. It remains to be seen whether the Bill will contain appropriate limitations.

RECOMMENDATION

It is the recommendation of your Committee that when the Bill to amend the Bank Act comes before your Committee particular care and attention be given to this matter of attempting to administer the banking system through regulations, which has been the subject of comment by virtually every segment of the financial community which has responded to the White Paper.

Your Committee also recommends that a draft of proposed regulations be issued for public examination at the time the Bill to Amend the Bank Act is presented.

Your Committee wishes to thank its advisers and staff for the assistance given during the studies and preparation of this report.

Respectfully submitted,

Salter A. Hayden
Chairman

APPENDIX A

COMPARISON OF WHITE PAPER PROPOSALS FOR CASH RESERVES WITH SENATE BANKING COMMITTEE'S SUGGESTION

	WHITE PAPER PROPOSAL		SENATE COMMITTEE'S SUGGESTION
	Eligible Deposits	Cash Reserve Requirement 2% 1st $500 4% on excess	Chequable Deposits	Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve (Min. /Max.) 1% 3%
				Min.	Max.
(1) Chartered banks (notice) (demand)	$65,000 16,000	$2,500 1,920	$16,000	$160	$480
(2) Trust and Mortgage Loan Companies	5,100	120	800	$ 8	$ 24
(3) Credit Unions	5,700	119	1,900	4 19	$ 57
(4) Caisses Populaires	6,000	120	2,500	$ 25	$ 75
(5) Quebec Savings Banks	1,100	32	300	$ 3	$ 9

SOURCES:

- (1) Bank of Canada Review as at June, 1977
- (2) Submission by the Trust Companies Association of Canada as at December 31, 1975
- (3) National Association of Canadian Credit Unions as at June 30, 1976 and Statistics Canada Catalogue 61-006 "Financial Institutions"
- (4) La Fédération des Caisses Populaires Desjardins as at December 31, 1976
- (5) Montreal City and District Savings Bank as at December 31, 1976

NOTES:

(A) ELIGIBLE DEPOSITS

The White Paper states "It is proposed that the revenue requirement on Canadian dollar notice deposits, and term deposits with an original term to maturity of one year or less, or longer if encashable, be 2 per cent on the first $500 million of the institution's liabilities and 4 per cent on the remainder. —It is further proposed that the reserve requirement on Canadian dollar demand deposits, which applies primarily to banks, be 12 per cent of the liability as at present."

In the above schedule the 12% reserve requirement on demand deposits has been calculated only for chartered banks.

(B) Chequable savings deposits have been included in "Eligible Deposits"

(C) Notes of the Bank of Canada in circulation in the system have not been deducted in calculating the above cash reserve requirement under the White Paper proposal. It would appear from the White Paper that the following amounts of Bank of Canada notes would be considered to be part of the proposed cash reserve:

	(Millions)
Chartered Banks	$1,100
Trust and Mortgage Loan Companies	48
Credit Unions	40
Caisses Populaires	60
Quebec Savings Banks	15

In your Committee's suggestion for Clearing Settlement Cash Reserves, Bank of Canada notes in circulation in the system would not be considered as part of a member's Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve.

The above amounts are based on estimates and other information provided by the above sources.

APPENDIX B
SCHEDULE I

CHARTERED BANK RESERVES
AS AT JUNE 8, 1977

DEPOSITS	(millions of dollars)
	STATUTORY MINIMUM RESERVE REQUIREMENT % RATE	AMOUNT
PRIMARY CASH RESERVE
Demand deposits	12%	$1,858
Notice deposits	4%	2,609
Total primary reserve		4,467
SECONDARY RESERVE	5%	4,038
		$8,505
ACTUAL COMPOSITION OF RESERVES		ACTUAL
PRIMARY CASH RESERVE
Notes of Bank of Canada		$1,130
Deposits with Bank of Canada		3,370
Total ($33 in excess of requirement)		$4,500
SECONDARY RESERVE
Cash		$ 33
Government of Canada Treasury Bills		4,123
Day loans to investment dealers		178
Total ($296 in excess of requirement)		$4,334
TOTAL ACTUAL RESERVES ($329 in excess of requirement)		$8,834

SOURCE: Based on reserves and deposits taken from Bank of Canada Weekly Financial Statistics, June 16, 1977.

APPENDIX B
SCHEDULE II

CHARTERED BANKS

Example showing effect of proposed change in Primary Cash Reserve requirements from 12% of Demand Deposits and 4% of Notice Deposits to 10% and 3% respectively, as suggested by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

DEPOSITS	(Millions of dollars)
	PRESENT		SUGGESTED
				DECREASE
Demand deposits	$15,480	12%	$1,858	10%
Notice deposits	65,273	4%	2,611	3%
	$80,753		$4,469	$3,506
				$ 963

SOURCE: based on Bank of Canada Weekly Financial Statistics, June 16, 1977.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 29, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

FISHERIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-38, to amend the Fisheries Act and to amend the Criminal Code in consequence thereof.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Senator Perrault, with leave of the Senate, moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of the Department of External Affairs for the year ended December 31, 1976, pursuant to section 6 of the Department of External Affairs Act, Chapter E-20, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the National Librarian for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 13 of the National Library Act, Chapter N-11, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Science Council of Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 19 of the Science Council of Canada Act, Chapter S-5, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of Canadian Patents and Development Limited for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, pursuant to sections 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit while the Senate is sitting today, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

THE ENVIRONMENT

CONSTRUCTION OF COAL-FIRED POWER PLANT IN SASKATCHEWAN—QUESTION

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the government leader in connection with the 300 megawatt coal-fired power plant now under construction by Saskatchewan Power Corporation on the east fork of the Poplar River eight miles north of the United States border. The Poplar River, as all honourable senators know, flows from Saskatchewan into eastern Montana.

Has the government received representations from the State Department with respect to the Saskatchewan Power Corporation project, either as to the use of the waters of the Poplar River or with respect to the ambient air quality? If so, what is the nature of those representations? Has Canada made any reply? If so, what is its nature?

Finally, what relevance has this project to Canada's position, which is opposed to the water pollution aspect of the proposed Garrison diversion project in the United States, where the essence of the United States position has been that deterioration of water quality of the Red and Souris Rivers in Manitoba is permitted?

• (1410)

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I regret that I do not have that information immediately available.

Senator Flynn: Unacceptable.

Senator Perrault: However, I believe that the information being sought goes beyond a mere interrogation, and perhaps it lends itself more properly to a notice of inquiry. I would ask Senator Austin if I may take his question as such, to be printed under "Inquiries" in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate today and on subsequent days until answered.

Senator van Roggen: May I ask the leader whether he is aware that the IJC is seized of both of these matters, which I believe to be the case?

Senator Perrault: I have no immediate information available, so I must take that portion of the question as notice.

THE CROWN

REVENUES

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I must apologize to Senator Forsey. I have, as I promised, avidly pursued the progress, or lack thereof, of a question that he posed altogether too long a time ago, and I understand that an answer is imminent, so we shall endeavour to perhaps have that tomorrow, if it can be expedited.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

ASSISTANCE TO HAITI—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Deschatelets: Honourable senators, would the government leader tell me if he expects an answer to a question I asked some time ago about Haiti?

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator must be possessed with some sort of extraordinary powers. I have that reply immediately in front of me at this time.

Senator Grosart: Extrasensory!

Senator Perrault: Senator Deschatelets asked these questions on June 2, and I regret the delay in having a reply for him.

Senator Flynn: That is not unusual.

Senator Perrault: The government prepares its replies very carefully, and this often takes painstaking time.

The questions were:

1. Was a request for help recently addressed by the Government of Haiti to the Government of Canada?
2. Do we have presently in Haiti Canadian officials who could report to the government about the seriousness of the situation?

The answers are:

1. On April 26, 1977, the Haitian Government presented a formal request to the Embassy in Port-au-Prince. In response, the Secretary of State for External Affairs announced on May 30, 1977, that Canada is providing Haiti with $2 million in drought relief. The Haitian Red Cross Society is being given $500,000 for immediate food aid requirements, while the balance of $1.5 million is being provided under a special program operated by the Canadian International Development Agency.
2. Apart from Canadian officials in the Embassy in Port-au-Prince which includes an officer responsible for development assistance, a CIDA official experienced in drought relief has been sent to Haiti to manage Canadian special assistance.

Senator Ewasew asked a question in connection with Haiti on the same date. The question was:

1. How much does the federal government give in aid to Haiti annually, through CIDA or any of the other international corporations?
2. How and to whom is this money paid in Haiti?

The answer is:

1. Because disbursements on projects in any countries are spread out over several years, disbursements in any given year do not represent an accurate reflection of Canadian aid commitments for that year. Since the bilateral program to Haiti began in 1973, approximately $8 million (through to 1976) has been disbursed in Haiti. CIDA plans to spend $33 million during the period 1977 to 1982.

In addition, CIDA grants through Canadian non-government organizations operating developmental projects in Haiti averaged approximately $300,000 annually, in the last two years. Haiti has not yet received any EDC credits.

2. All the money that is disbursed directly in Haiti is done through our Embassy in Port-au-Prince, for special activities planned in CIDA's projects, to Haitian individuals and firms on presentation of invoices but only after the mission is satisfied that the terms of the contract have been fulfilled and headquarters approval has been sought. All other funds, however, are disbursed in Canada to Canadian suppliers of goods and services in accordance with usual government procedures.

LABOUR RELATIONS

DECISION OF CANADA LABOUR RELATIONS BOARD RE CERTIFICATION OF INDIVIDUAL BANK BRANCHES AS BARGAINING AGENTS—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I should like to reply to a question asked by Senator Austin on June 23. His question was:

Honourable senators, in view of the decision of the Canada Labour Relations Board of Tuesday, June 14, 1977, that on the basis of the present Canada Labour Code it was appropriate to establish an individual bank branch as a certified bargaining unit, has the government given consideration to whether such a system of certification will ensure reasonable harmony in labour relations within the Canadian banking system and assure banking service without interruption to the public? Is the government prepared to state whether it approves the policy of certifying individual branches, or is the matter under review?

And the final question asked by Senator Austin on that subject was whether:

—the government is prepared to countenance strike action in the banking system, or whether compulsory arbitration is being considered as a matter of public convenience and necessity.

In responding to the question, allow me to say that the Canada Labour Relations Board, as a quasi-judicial body created by an act of Parliament, has the responsibility and necessary authority to independently determine and decide on all certification matters, including the type and appropriateness of bargaining units.

As such, the board, in fulfilling its responsibilities, always seeks to ensure that its decisions are consistent and in accord with its mandate from Parliament which, in part, is to create and foster harmonious labour relations within the federal industrial relations community governed by the Canada Labour Code, Part V.

With respect to the honourable senator's concern that the government assure no interruption of banking services to the public, which obviously implies that there be no strikes or lockouts affecting bank employees, I think it would be highly imprudent for the government to give such assurances, as any such undertaking would be inconsistent with, and contrary to, fundamental rights guaranteed bank employees, or any other group of unionized employees covered by the Canada Labour Relations Code.

It is important to emphasize that bank employees, like all other employees covered by the code, must not be denied the right to organize, to join the trade union of their choice, and to bargain collectively on their wages and conditions of employment. To suggest any curtailment of these privileges would be an unwarranted interference with the fundamental rights accorded them by the Parliament of Canada through labour relations legislation dating back to 1948.

Canada's financial system, with its various chartered banks, savings institutions and lending agencies, is a diverse and competitive system and, even if all local bank branches were unionized, it is not likely that labour relations within the Canadian banking system, as the honourable senator's question seems to imply, would deteriorate to the extent that the Canadian financial system would be seriously imperilled. However, should such a serious situation manifest itself in the future, I am sure that you will agree, that Parliament would face its responsibilities and act in the public interest when the private rights of the parties concerned in the collective bargaining community infringe on the public interest.

Senator Austin: Does the Leader of the Government feel it wise to create the expectation among bank employees that they will have right to strike when so obviously if they do exercise that right, as was done in Ireland two and one-half to three years ago, the whole economy would come to a halt?

Senator Marchand: That does not only apply to bank employees. There are many other sectors that can paralyse the economy.

Senator Austin: I do not think that argues for a right to strike in this case, Senator Marchand.

Senator Grosart: Order!

BANKING LEGISLATION

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Senator Ewasew: Honourable senators, if I might be recognized—

Senator Flynn: I wonder if Senator Ewasew would permit me to put a question to Senator Hayden before he leaves the chamber.

Senator Ewasew: Certainly.

Senator Flynn: I have a question for the Chairman of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee.

Senator Greene: Order!

● (1420)

Senator Flynn: I thank Senator Greene for his help. He is always most helpful, one way or another.

I wanted to address my remarks to the Chairman of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee. Yesterday he tabled in the Senate the report of his committee on the banking legislation, and then last evening he presented a most interesting explanation. I have been able to peruse the report and I think it raises many important questions. It also reaffirms a fact of which honourable senators are quite aware, namely, that the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee is doing extremely good work. However, I wondered if it was Senator Hayden's intention to move that the report be taken into consideration by the Senate for the purpose of having the benefit of the views on it not only of the members of the committee but of all honourable senators who might be interested in the subject or in the questions posed or raised by the report.

Senator Hayden: It is open to any member of the Senate to put a notice on the order paper that he will call the attention of the Senate to a report tabled on a particular date. Therefore, there is nothing to prohibit any senator from bringing forward discussion. Having given an explanation of it last night I see no particular reason why I should then put a motion on the order paper; but if there is a request for me to do so, I will concur in it.

Senator Flynn: As the honourable senator knows, the reason I did not move such a motion myself is that I did not participate in the work of the committee on this particular piece of legislation. Otherwise I would have done so. I would be most pleased, of course, if someone else were to do so, and I did wonder if anyone had indicated to the chairman such an intent.

Senator Hayden: I have had no indication as yet, but if I may take what you have said as an indication that you would like me to put a motion on the order paper, then I will do so now.

Senator Flynn: I would appreciate that. After all, if a report of a committee is merely tabled and explained, it might not be interpreted as reflecting the views of the Senate as a whole, and I should like the Senate to give some kind of opinion on this report, which in my view is a most important report and for which, once again, I congratulate the chairman and the committee.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Hayden: I agree that the report is important, and, frankly, I would find it satisfying to have the views of any senator who wished to express himself on the subject. I would certainly not want anything I have said to be taken as an attempt to discourage such an expression of views. Therefore, on the assumption that we are sitting next Monday evening, I give notice that on Monday next I will call the attention of the Senate to this report which was tabled yesterday.

Senator Forsey: Hear, hear.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

ASSISTANCE TO HAITI—QUESTION

Senator Ewasew: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government. The former President of CIDA, Mr. Gérin-Lajoie, was interviewed briefly on the well-known CTV documentary program from Toronto, W-5. He was asked how much money was being paid directly to the Duvalier family in Haiti, and he really refused to reply, stating that he had no official knowledge of it. The word “official” struck me as being rather odd, because it is our taxpayers’ money that is being spent, and according to the people on that program they were ordered summarily out of the country.

I realize that the leader mentioned how much was spent internally, but for the moment I have not been able to locate that information in our Debates. I should like to know how much was paid, and to whom. If my memory serves me right, that was the purport of my last question.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I have no way of knowing whether that information is in fact available, but certainly an inquiry will go forward.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Senator Petten, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Frith be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator McGrand on the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

JAMES BAY AND NORTHERN QUEBEC NATIVE CLAIMS SETTLEMENT BILL

MOTION FOR THIRD READING—MOTION IN AMENDMENT— DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion in amendment of Senator Flynn to the motion of Senator Bourget for the third reading of Bill C-9, to approve, give effect to and declare valid certain agreements between the Grand Council of the Crees (of Quebec), the Northern Quebec Inuit Association, the Government of Quebec, la Société d'énergie de la Baie James, la Société de développement de la Baie James, la Commission hydro-électrique de Québec and the Government of Canada and certain other related agreements to which the Government of Canada is a party.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I need hardly say that I support Senator Flynn's amendment. In fact, I would go further and say that I am surprised that such an amendment should be necessary at this stage of the passage of the bill through Parliament. I say that because it was with the greatest surprise that I learned that a committee of the Senate, particularly a committee designated as the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, would permit a bill to come before us and report it without amendment when it denies basic human rights to a small group of Canadians. The amendment proposed by Senator Flynn, it seems to me, offers a glorious opportunity for the Senate to take a stand on minority human rights at this time.

It is often said that the protection of minority rights is, or should be, an essential function of the Senate, and I agree that the Senate has not always discharged that responsibility. Indeed, one of the major criticisms levelled at this chamber, the institution of the Senate, is that we have failed conspicuously over the years to take a stand for minority rights. It is assumed by the public, as it is assumed by academics and historians—and this is evident in every assessment of the Senate that I have seen—that the protection of minority rights is an essential function of this second chamber, and I trust that we will not miss this opportunity to demonstrate clearly where the Senate stands on a matter such as this.

Honourable senators will agree, I am sure, that there is no doubt that we are being asked here and at this time to extinguish basic human rights. I refer, of course, to subclause 3(3) of Bill C-9 under the heading “Agreement.”

● (1430)

The marginal note is “Extinguishment of claims,” and the subclause reads:

All native claims, rights, title and interests, whatever they may be, in and to the Territory—

That is the territory described in the bill.

—of all—

“All” is an essential word.

—of all Indians and all Inuit, wherever they may be, are hereby extinguished—

I hope this leaves no doubt that the bill extinguishes existing, or presumed to be existing, human rights. They are not in this case only rights of a minority; they are the rights of a minority of a minority, because the bill basically extinguishes the rights of perhaps 90 per cent of the minority of Crees and Inuits covered by the provisions of the bill.

But it also extinguishes the rights of another 10 per cent who are not party to the agreement, and this is a very small minority. We have had suggestions, such as, “Well, this is a tiny majority.” That phrase has been used in the discussions. If that is put forward as an argument for not considering and not being concerned about the extinction of those rights, surely we have not been reading the history of the protection of human rights.

It could almost be said that the smaller the group involved, the greater the advance in the long history of the protection of human rights. Indeed, in many cases, in many of the most important cases, the rights dealt with have been put forward only as the rights of a single individual. So I hope it will not be said that we are dealing with something that is not very important. Surely the time has not come when this chamber or this Parliament will begin to quantify human rights in terms of the number involved.

It is interesting to note that in both the agreement and the bill the word "surrender" is used. The small minority are "surrendering," which seems to me to be the very reason why they should be given at least the consideration suggested by Senator Flynn's amendment. The amendment is highly realistic. In my view it could have gone much further. The amendment merely seeks to protect, to retain, for this minority of a minority of our native peoples, the right to compensation, a right which is clearly extinguished by the wording of the bill.

Senator Flynn might have gone further—I know his reasons for not doing so—and moved an amendment that those rights be not extinguished; that no rights whatsoever pertaining to this minority of a minority should be extinguished.

Senator Flynn has taken a practical approach to it, and said, "Well, if the rights are to be extinguished, perhaps this makes sense, because we are dealing with a large territory and a large group of people; but at least let the Senate of Canada amend this bill to insist that the minority of the minority retains the right to compensation."

A number of reasons have been put forward as to why this might not be a practical approach at the present time. I am convinced that many honourable senators, in their hearts and minds, are in favour of the amendment, but they hesitate for various reasons. I have every respect for those honourable senators who have put forward reasons, but my own reaction is that they are not realistic. Senator Laird, for example, questioned whether the rights were being extinguished. He said, "I am not clear. I am not satisfied in my own mind, as a lawyer, that these rights are being extinguished." This I do not understand. The wording of the bill is clear and the extinguishment of the rights is clear, because the bill refers not merely to rights, title and interests, which is the usual phrase used in connection with collective rights, but begins with the word "claims." Their claims are extinguished. What is a claim? A claim is a request for something. Claims are extinguished by the bill, and yet it was suggested that this may not really be so. Of course, it is so.

Senator Laird also said that if we amend this bill it will have to be returned to the House of Commons, and this will mean it might be "lost in the shuffle." My only reply is that if the bill is wrong, if it is that wrong in principle, if it is as much of an infringement on basic human rights as I think it is, it had better be lost in the shuffle. In fact, I think the time has come when we in this Senate should be less sensitive and less concerned than we appear to be about the amending of bills and sending them back to the other place.

Senator Forsey: Hear, hear.

Senator Grosart: We hear a lot about Senate reform. As far as I am concerned, one of the measures we might take in this house to start a degree of reform, something that the public would react to favourably, is to start amending bills that we know should be amended and sending them back to the Commons, and to avoid some of the short cuts and cover-ups that we have used. The best thing that could happen to this chamber at this time would be for it to start sending bills back to the Commons with amendments, asking the Commons to deal with those amendments, and not deal with these matters in such various ways as arrangements, agreements, undertakings and so on with ministers.

The question of the time limit was raised. It was said that if we hold up this bill it may affect the terms of the agreement, the timing and so on. I say that if this bill is wrong we should not be concerned with any of those consequences. This approach to a problem as great as this, and a decision as important as this, is an old one. The history of human rights records statements over and over again on this very point. Jefferson in, I think, 1783, at the time of the passage of the new Constitution of the United States, said:

My principle is to do whatever is right and leave consequences to him that hath the disposal of it.

That is exactly what I suggest we do on this occasion; that we do what is right and let the Government of Canada, the Government of Quebec and the three corporations, who are parties to this agreement and, presumably, beneficiaries from it, have the disposal of our decision and do what is right.

Senator Goldenberg made an interesting intervention in the discussion. I certainly respect his views and opinions, as chairman of the committee, but in this case he has not won his point if he was endeavouring to make it by quoting from Mr. Ollivier's testimony before the committee. Mr. Ollivier is the Acting Deputy Minister of Justice. Senator Goldenberg was not debating the point. He merely said that the committee considered whether the right to compensation was extinguished by the act. He said, "This is the evidence we had," and quoted Mr. Ollivier, without comment, as follows:

● (1440)

MR. OLLIVIER: I would say that it does not cover the right to compensation, but that right only arises following the extinguishment, so we do not extinguish the right to compensation.

I will not comment on the legal competence of that passage, but merely say that it seems to me to go contrary to the whole process of legislation. An expropriation act—the Expropriation Act itself and individual expropriation acts—very often provides for compensation. This is a basic principle. If you are going to expropriate somebody's property, which is what this bill will do, by extinguishing the right to the property—which is the same thing as expropriating it—surely the same principles should apply. This goes beyond that.

Many bills provide for the consequences of their coming into force. In Bill S-4, which is presently before us, we extinguish certain rights of 35 corporations, for instance, to protection against forcible entry, seizure and so on, when the act comes into force. While it may be true to say, as Mr. Ollivier does, that the right only arises following the extinguishment, it is common practice in statutes to provide for their consequences, and for what will happen to existing rights of existing authorities, or even of new authorities. The rights of the minister to be exempt from the ordinary provisions of the common law or the statute law are often dealt with. I am, therefore, not impressed with that particular argument.

What the amendment says is that these people should have the right to be compensated. They were not parties to the agreement; the agreement was made without their consent; the bill was introduced without their consent. Surely they should have the right to compensation enshrined in this bill. I think that any one of us personally involved in such a situation as third party to an agreement would insist that the right to compensation be enshrined. Therefore, there should be no doubt as to whether this act extinguishes or does not extinguish the right to compensation.

Article 2.14 of the agreement provides:

Quebec undertakes to negotiate with other Indians or Inuit who are not entitled to participate in the compensation and benefits of the present Agreement—

That is the minority of minorities to which I referred.

—in respect to any claims—

And that is the only word used here.

—which such Indians or Inuit may have with respect to the Territory.

Quebec undertakes to negotiate, but the same paragraph specifically states that that undertaking shall not appear in legislation of either Quebec or Canada.

The final words of the paragraph are:

This paragraph shall not be enacted into law.

Here is the one concession, the one decent thing, that we find in the whole agreement in this respect, but it is not to be enacted into law. Why? I do not know. Certainly, however, there is something behind this positive statement in the agreement that this essential concession “shall not be enacted into law.”

Again, in the same paragraph, we find this:

Notwithstanding the undertakings of the preceding subparagraph—

That is, the undertaking to negotiate by the Province of Quebec.

—nothing in the present paragraph shall be deemed to constitute a recognition, by Canada or Quebec, in any manner whatsoever, of any rights of such Indians or Inuit.

What can we make of those statements other than that there is a clear extinguishment of every possible right that this minority of minorities have in their property at the present time. I suggest to honourable senators that the Senate will do itself honour, and will bring acclaim to this old chamber, if in this particular situation it has the courage and the will to accept this amendment and protect these essential rights of a small minority of minorities of our native peoples.

Senator Frith: May I ask the honourable senator a question? This is not a question to be taken as rhetorical in any sense of the word, but as the question of an innocent seeking information, since I have just now been appointed to this committee.

Can the honourable senator deal a little further with the last part of the proposed amendment to which he has been speaking? The amendment says that the right should not be extinguished and that compensation should be received “on the same basis as it would have been accorded had such person or group of persons been entitled to participate in the compensation and benefits of the Agreement.” I do not have a clear picture as to why the persons that this amendment seeks to protect were not entitled to, or did not, participate.

The second part of my question is: Was there a formula in the negotiations for those who did receive compensation that would be automatically applied, or does “on the same basis” mean on the basis of negotiation?

Senator Grosart: That question should not be directed to me because I do not pretend to be completely familiar with all the terms of the agreement, although I have read it. As the seconder of the amendment, however, my understanding is that for whatever reason—perhaps they did not wish to participate, which would be their right, or perhaps they are persons who did not even know what was going on; I do not really care what the reasons were—this small group did not participate in the agreement. My understanding of the amendment is that whatever the terms of the compensation given under the agreement and the bill may be, they should be the basis of the establishment in this bill of a right to similar compensation for this minority of minorities.

Senator Flynn: That was the point made by the committee in its report.

Senator Grosart: Perhaps the question might be directed to Senator Flynn.

Senator Flynn: I just draw Senator Frith's attention to the last paragraph of the report of the committee, which says that they would want the compensation to be on the same basis, since in the agreement there are compensations not only in money but also in rights on territories.

Senator Frith: That is the meaning of “on the same basis”, then.

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Senator Frith: Do I understand that the supporters of the amendment do not feel there is any distinction of importance to be drawn between the possibility that the group concerned simply did not wish to negotiate and the possibility that they were not notified? Do they see no distinction in principle between those two situations?

Senator Flynn: Again, I would draw the attention of the honourable senator to the last paragraph of the report of the committee as it appears at page 959 of Debates of the Senate for June 21 of this year.

● (1450)

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, if I may attempt to clarify my understanding of the question and its relevance to the amendment, the essential word is "basis." The "basis" has been discussion and negotiation over a long period of time. My interpretation of the amendment is that it merely seeks to ensure that the same process will pertain to those minorities, and that they will have a right—not merely a wish or a hope—to whatever compensation can be negotiated and agreed upon.

Senator Frith: So negotiation is the basis, rather than some automatic formula? It is not some arithmetical formula?

Senator Flynn: No.

Senator Grosart: No.

Hon. Guy Williams: Honourable senators, I rise to say a few words with respect to the matter being debated, which is a serious matter. First, I wish to make it very clear that I am not a Cree. However, I do sit here as a member of this chamber on behalf of the Indian people of Canada.

Reference has been made to this agreement in the media by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, who has said that it is a good agreement. I come from western Canada, but from my contacts with my own people throughout the country, I know that many are very critical of the contents of the agreement—very critical. There may be two or three organizations in each province who do take into consideration the actions of this government pertaining to the well-being of, and changes in legislation respecting, the Indian people. I myself am very critical of the agreement, yet it is an agreement with the people of that area who are involved, and who have negotiated it. It will become history in the very near future, but it may have some ill effects on many other Indian bands and tribes in various parts of Canada.

Allow me to venture to say that it is weak in many of its sections in view of the fact that not one Indian in the James Bay area, with which this agreement is concerned, will actually pocket a penny from the payments, which will total up to $225 million. I am not in whole agreement with this fact.

I cannot speak for the Inuit, as I am not familiar with their way of life, but I do have a certain amount of experience when it comes to the Indian people in Canada, and it is my view that the negotiators on behalf of the Crees missed a point, whereby they did not give consideration to their people who are involved in the agreement. I say that with respect to the fact that those who are 55 years of age and over should have received payments. They are on the countdown and they will in no way benefit as individuals from the terms of the agreement.

I disagree very much with the assurance which I have received from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. All honourable senators know that the agreement will extinguish, or has already extinguished, the aboriginal rights of those Indians and their rights to further claims. To implement the contents of this agreement the Government of the Province of Quebec will have the sole right to give to the Indian people their future destiny. There will no longer be full participation on the part of the federal government. Although they are Indians there have been no reservations in that area, but they have lived on their domain from time immemorial. I am assured by responsible personnel of the department that there will be an enactment by the federal government which will provide reservations for them.

I ask: How can the federal government provide reservations when the area involved in the James Bay agreement has already been changed into municipalities, and is no longer the domain of the Indian people, as was previously the case? To my mind there is no way in which reservations can be designated in municipal locales. Furthermore, they will lack the protection of the federal government, although it says it will protect them. Again I ask: How will they protect them when the responsibility is in the hands of the Government of the Province of Quebec? How can they maintain two major and 21 lesser municipalities? I predict that in the not too distant future some of these municipalities will pass into receivership. They will not have the funds to maintain themselves according to the laws and requirements of the Province of Quebec. When that happens, what will become of them?

I am sure that all members of this chamber fully realize the problems of Canada today, the crisis that we have on our hands and the grave possibility that Confederation may begin falling apart. What will happen to this band of 6,000 Indians and 4,000 Inuit should that province separate from Canada? I agree with the amendment. It will be courageous on the part of this chamber to amend this bill. I speak in support of that amendment.

I have spoken.

● (1500)

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, I have thought a great deal about this bill and about our concerns over it. I think everyone who sat on this committee was extremely concerned about some of the provisions, or lack of provisions, for some of our native people. At the outset, I have to say that I agree with everything Senator Flynn said last night in expressing the misgivings of a great number of us with respect to certain provisos in the bill that we are now considering.

My view, quite simply, is that the federal government should not have entered into this kind of agreement. It should not have committed itself in any way to the extinguishment of the rights of native people—rights which for many, many years it has said it recognized and upheld. To have done so at this juncture of time and in this way is a complete abdication of the responsibilities it assumed many years ago as a federal government.

I must say that the record of the white man in his treatment of his native brother in this country has been a sorry one. This bill does not do much to improve the picture. As it stands, it represents a victory of sorts for the Inuit and most of the Indian people of the territories. It did not come easily to them.

In testimony we heard the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development refer back to the Quebec Boundaries Extension Act of 1912. I will quote a section from that act because this was part of the agreement into which the Province of Quebec entered in order to have some jurisdiction over that northern territory. Section 2(c) of that act of 1912 provides:

(c) That the province of Quebec will recognize the rights of the Indian inhabitants in the territory above described to the same extent, and will obtain surrenders of such rights in the same manner, as the Government of Canada has heretofore recognized such rights and has obtained surrender thereof, and the said province shall bear and satisfy all charges and expenditure in connection with or arising out of such surrenders.

What in fact has the province of Quebec done about that since 1912? It has done precisely nothing. What changed its mind? How did we finally arrive at some sort of agreement and settlement through negotiation with some of our native people?

In the preamble to the James Bay Agreement, we get some hint of what happened. There is an introduction or forward prepared by John Ciaccia, a member of the National Assembly of the Province of Quebec and special representative of the former Premier Mr. Robert Bourassa, in the negotiations with the natives, the James Bay Corporation and Quebec Hydro. He is rather proud of this agreement that has been put together, but he does say in his opening remarks, when referring to the Quebec Boundaries Extension Act of 1912, that in addition to acquiring the territories, Quebec assumed the obligation to settle such land questions and other claims as the native people might raise.

He goes on to say that these questions did not in fact arise at that time. At that time or any time thereafter that the natives tried to present their claims, those natives were totally ignored. However, Mr. Ciaccia goes on to say:

Within the last ten to fifteen years we have been looking North with fresh interest, and with a real awareness of its possibilities. These possibilities—they are possibilities of unprecedented economic development that will benefit the entire population of Quebec as long as we grasp the opportunities to ensure that it is planned and orderly developed, with a human dimension.

In other words, to paraphrase an earlier pioneer, who I am not sure was a Canadian: They must have looked to the north and said, "There is hydro power," or, "There is iron in them there rocks." Or, "We can turn it all into gold one of these days." It was only when they began to realize the economic possibilities of the north that their consciences began to prick them to the extent that they decided they had better do something about the Indian claims.

Even that was not sufficient because the Inuit and the Indians had to press their claims through the courts. The federal government, which never supported their rights earlier, finally got around to offering them some money to help research their claims and process them through the courts. It seems a rather ridiculous position when we consider the government and the minister saying, "We are the trustee for the people, but we will not protect your rights. However, we will give you a little bit of money so that you can fight us through the courts. It is only just and right, of course, that we do fight you."

This is what happened, and it was only because the native claims might be upheld in the courts that the Quebec government and federal government realized that they were going to have to sit down and negotiate. This they have done. They have hammered out an agreement. I do not think it is generous. As Senator Williams says, I think it creates many unhappy precedents for perhaps many other native groups who are going to try to establish their rights. At least, it is an agreement in which the Inuit and most of the Indians of the territories of northern Quebec are reasonably content with, and I do not think, having made that agreement, they should be deprived of the benefits of it after they have fought for those many years.

But there were certain people left out. There are some of the Indian people whose claims are not negotiated at the moment. We know of the Naskapi. It is our hope that the Quebec government will continue to negotiate in good faith with those smaller groups of people. They do not represent a great number in all, but they are important; they are part of the native peoples of northern Quebec and their rights must be protected. However, there is a vast number of others who appear to have been ignored completely, those being the non-status Indians and the Métis.

When is an Indian not an Indian? When the federal government tells him he is not an Indian. What does that make him? It makes him, literally, a nothing, a cipher. He has no status, no recognition. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development takes the position that it has no jurisdiction over such individuals. Yet it is that very department, or one of its predecessor departments, which passed the legislation declaring such individuals to be non-Indians, even though they might be full-blooded Indians. Those people are living in the north, and the testimony before the committee would seem to indicate that there may be as many such people as there are people who are represented by the signatories to this agreement.

● (1510)

I am not prepared to say that they have rights that can be established, but certainly they have the right to be heard. They should at least have been given the opportunity to attempt to establish any rights which they feel they have. They needed the same kind of support from the federal government as did the status Indians and the Inuit. They did not get it.

Representatives of these groups told the committee that they had applied on numerous occasions for federal funds with which to carry out research on their claims, and each time they were turned down on the basis that the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development did not have jurisdiction over them.

What happened? In February of this year, after this bill had been adopted in principle by the other place and was in the process of being considered by a committee of the other place, representatives of the non-status Indians and the Métis met with some of the cabinet ministers here in Ottawa, and the "great white chiefs" in Ottawa looked into their coffers and decided that they might be able to come up with a few dollars to help those groups process their claims. This is a year and a half after the agreement was signed.

This is where the inequities arise. I am not asserting that all these groups who feel they might have a valid claim, a valid right to compensation, have in fact such a claim, but certainly they should have been given the opportunity to establish whether or not they did have a valid claim. They were not given that opportunity.

To review what has happened, the agreement was signed in November of 1975. In December of 1975 there was a slight amendment to the agreement. It was not tabled in the other place until June of 1976, and it really was not dealt with until the beginning of this year. It is supposed to be ratified by November 1, 1977, or the whole agreement becomes null and void.

It is patent foolishness, as far as I am concerned, to take the position that we are now under some great pressure to adopt this legislation. The federal government has had well over a year to deal with the problem and now, two weeks before we are to adjourn, we are handed a bill of this importance, this historic importance, and we are told, "Well, we really have not got time to settle it."

We are going to be back here in August for a debate on the question of a pipeline through the north. I see no reason why we have to be under any pressure to deal with this measure today. I would like to have the matter settled one way or another well before the effective date. I think it would be extremely unfair to the Indian and Inuit peoples who have waited so long to achieve some kind of recognition, although I do not feel that this is sufficient, to have anything happen which might upset or in any way curtail their lawful expectations. As members of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee will be aware, I voted in support of Senator Flynn's amendment moved in committee, which was couched in slightly different language from this. I did so because I agreed absolutely with the principle he was trying to express. I agree with the principle he expressed in putting forward the amendment before us at this time. However, I would have real difficulty in supporting the amendment as it is now before us. I find it raises almost as many questions as it seeks to answer. Senator Frith has already questioned some of the phraseology, and I must say that it does bother me considerably. If we say, "Notwithstanding the extinguishment under certain rights," I cannot understand how we can then go on and say that we will do exactly the opposite. If we are going to extinguish rights, I do not think we can then turn around and say that, in effect, they are not extinguished. That, it seems to me, is almost a contradiction.

The words "any valid claim" are used. What is a valid claim? Does the establishment of a valid claim imply a natural right to compensation, or does it represent a valid right to land, or some hereditary or aboriginal rights? I am also a little concerned about the later phrase that they would be accorded compensation "on the same basis as would have been accorded other groups." That, again, would be almost impossible for the Quebec government to accept. We know that this agreement comprises a variety of rights—rights regarding schooling, hunting, and a variety of other rights for the native peoples who are signatories to the agreement. It does not necessarily follow that if the non-status Indians, or anyone else, were to establish that they did have a valid right, they would in fact want or be entitled to precisely the same kind of compensation accorded other groups.

For those reasons, I am unable to support Senator Flynn's amendment. Having said that, I do not know what we can do to rectify the situation. We should not kid ourselves into believing that this government, or the Quebec government, need in any sense do anything more than they have said they would do, which is to undertake to negotiate.

● (1520)

Some of the people who have tried to uphold this bill which we are proposing have quoted from the agreement the first paragraph of clause 2.14 in which it is stated that Quebec agrees to negotiate. As has been pointed out by senators and many other people, in effect that means very little. Part of the 1912 act was that it undertook to settle claims, and yet it did nothing about it.

We must remember that the second paragraph of that same clause 2.14 is really the one which is significant. It says that:

Notwithstanding the undertakings of the preceding subparagraph, nothing in the present paragraph shall be deemed to constitute a recognition, by Canada or Québec, in any manner whatsoever, of any rights of such Indians or Inuit.

That is referring back to those Indians and Inuit who are not signatories to this agreement. Nothing could be clearer than that. It is folly for us to suggest, or to have the pious hope, that the Quebec government will necessarily negotiate in good faith with these people who might have claims.

Beyond that I do not even see, supposing they failed to do so, what the proper recourse would be in law. I certainly stand to be corrected by those who know the law better than I, but my feeling here is that the government has no right to extinguish the rights of any people who are not signatories to an agreement. I think that that particular aspect of this bill, and of this agreement, could be and possibly will be attacked or scrutinized in the courts by the people who will suffer as a result of this—and they are bound to suffer.

Having said that, I can only hope—and I really do not know what the answer to this is—that we will be able to persuade the minister to give some kind of undertaking by which he will agree not to bring in the provision or not to proclaim this particular clause of the bill for a term certain. I realize, of course, that it could not be left indefinitely, but even if the proclamation of this particular provision of Bill C-69 could be postponed for a certain period of years, it would then be possible for the federal government also to undertake actively to help the native people, those who had not had the opportunity to do so, to process their claims through and to the Quebec government.

If we cannot do that, then I feel strongly that we have failed a great number of our native people and have not done what the minister said he should do, and that the federal government should do, namely, act as a trustee for all native people. For that reason, if we cannot find a better solution than passing this bill as it is, then I must say I will be unable to vote for it.

Hon. Eugene A. Forsey: Honourable senators, I rise simply to say one or two things briefly about this motion and about the speeches we have heard. The first thing I want to say is that after listening to the Honourable Senator Williams and the Honourable Senator Neiman I am inclined to think that the amendment proposed by the Honourable Senator Flynn is very moderate and modest indeed. He could have said much more than he has said and he could have said it in much stronger terms.

Having said that, I want to add that I am not in the least convinced by the qualms which Senator Neiman expressed about the wording of the amendment. I am not competent to decide between two such distinguished lawyers as Senator Neiman and Senator Flynn as to the precise wording that is here; but after some considerable reflection on the subject and having heard the arguments by Senator Flynn in the committee—I was present, though, of course, as a non-member and could not vote—having heard those arguments and having listened to the arguments of the Honourable Senator Grosart and having read the speeches of the other people who took part in the debate, although I must admit I did not read every word of the other speeches, I am entirely convinced by the arguments of Senator Flynn and Senator Grosart and I shall vote in support of the amendment. I hope Senator Flynn will divide the house on this and I shall vote in support of the amendment of the Honourable Senator Flynn. I do not see what else I can do; and even if we are beaten, those of us who support this amendment, even if we are beaten on the division, as might quite possibly be the case, I think it will be of value to show to the native peoples of this country that there are people on both sides of the house in this chamber who take seriously the obligations of this Parliament, of the Government of Canada and of the Senate of Canada for the protection of the native peoples of this country.

Senator Robichaud: Honourable senators, obviously strong views have been expressed on the merits of the amendment to this bill. I also take the matter seriously and in order to be given the opportunity to express my views, which are possibly as strong as some of those expressed here thus far, I should like to move that the debate be adjourned until the next sitting of the Senate.

On motion of Senator Robichaud, debate adjourned.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 3, 1977

THIRD READING

Senator Langlois moved the third reading of Bill C-58, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1978.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication has been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

June 29, 1977

Madam,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Wilfred Judson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 29th day of June, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be,
Madam,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

● (1530)

PRIVATE BILL

CONTINENTAL BANK OF CANADA—SECOND READING

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the second reading of Bill C-1001, to incorporate Continental Bank of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-1001 is a reincarnation of Bill S-30, which was passed by this house in November of 1975. Bill C-1001 has been around Parliament for a long time, perhaps not as long as the thousand and one Arabian Nights, but it has been here for some 18 or 19 months. Honourable senators will remember that this legislation, as it was originally introduced here and passed, and as it is now reintroduced after having been passed in the House of Commons, is to incorporate the Continental Bank of Canada and to allow IAC Limited to be converted into a bank by amalgamation.

A transition period fixed in the bill was to apply for 10 years. In this transition period the assets of IAC would run down, and the assets of Continental Bank of Canada would be built up to the point where within 10 years there would be an amalgamation. IAC would disappear and Continental Bank of Canada would be the sole remaining corporate entity.

In the 18 months or so since the bill was here previously there have been four or five principal amendments, and I propose in the first instance to deal with those amendments alone. Then, for the benefit of senators who have been appointed to this chamber since 1975, I think I should give a general review of IAC, the kind of company it is and the specific provisions of this bill without going into the detail I went into in 1975.

The first amendment, in clause 2(2) of the bill, reduces the share qualifications for directors of Continental Bank from 500 shares of IAC to 100 shares of IAC. This makes it a little easier for people to qualify as directors of the bank.

An overlap was to be allowed in the first bill during the transition period between directors on the board of IAC and people on that board who might be directors of other deposit institutions like banks. Now there is a specific provision that there shall be no overlap, and in fact there will be no overlap because IAC has received in that 18-month period that has elapsed since the bill was first introduced all of the resignations required from people who were on boards of their banks.

The third important amendment is in clause 8(b). It provides that after royal assent all directors of IAC at the time of royal assent will become directors of Continental Bank. In the transition period the bank must always have on its board of directors a majority of the directors of IAC. This, of course, is to provide continuity of corporate policy between IAC and the bank until amalgamation takes place.

The fourth of the principal amendments is contained in clause 9. By the original bill Continental Bank was prohibited from making loans either to IAC or to its subsidiaries. The present bill provides that loans cannot be made by Continental Bank to IAC, in any event, or to any of the subsidiaries of IAC, and there are seven, which carry on a business prohibited by the Bank Act. But it does allow for loans to be made to subsidiaries of IAC who do not conduct business prohibited by the Bank Act. I think this is a beneficial amendment as well.

The fifth and last of the principal amendments that I would mention is in clause 15(4). When the bill came to us first there was one shareholder of IAC who held 19.6 per cent of the issued shares of the company. The Bank Act, in section 54(2), restricts the ownership of shares to 10 per cent of the issued shares of the company in the hands of any one shareholder if those shares are to be voted. Originally this shareholder was given four years to comply with the Bank Act; in other words, to reduce his shareholdings, if he wanted to vote, to 10 per cent or below. That period of grace no longer shall apply, and the restrictions of the Bank Act will therefore apply to this shareholder's shares, and as long as they are over 10 per cent of the issued shares, then that shareholder will not be able to vote.

Those are the principal amendments, and perhaps I should sit down now and ask that the bill be given second reading. But I think that in fairness to those who were not here in 1975 I should make some further explanatory remarks.

The information which I placed on the record in respect of Bill S-30 on October 30, 1975, is still valid except that time has gone on and there have been changes in the statistical information available about IAC. So, I should bring that portion of the explanation up to date. IAC was incorporated by federal charter in 1925; its head office is now in Toronto. It has 3,000 employees and has 11,000 shareholders, 96 per cent of whom are Canadians. It has 275 branches in all parts of Canada, and its issued common shares number 13,500,000. The total assets of IAC are $2.4 billion, and this makes it the eleventh largest Canadian financial institution in terms of assets. The value of IAC's equity is $233.8 million, and this makes it the sixth largest Canadian financial institution in terms of equity. The income of the institution in 1976 was $32 million.

● (1540)

IAC provides a wide range of financial services: wholesale and retail sales financing, inventory financing, dealer and business loans, home mortgages and business mortgages, consumer loans, and leasing capital equipment for transportation, for construction, and for the resource industries generally. Those services are supplied directly by IAC and its seven subsidiaries.

Sixty-five per cent of the business conducted by IAC and its subsidiaries is similar to business now conducted by banks. If the provisions of the white paper with respect to allowing banks to engage in the leasing business are adopted finally in the Bank Act, then 90 per cent of the business that IAC does will be considered to be similar to business conducted by banks.

The reasons given for the proposed conversion of IAC into the position of a chartered bank were given when I explained the bill in 1975, and can be found at page 1342 of Debates of the Senate of the last session. The company considers that it will be better able to serve its customers—the private individuals and the small and intermediate size businesses which it now services. It will be able to attract more funds from individual depositors as well as from institutional depositors.

It believes it will reduce the cost of money, both for itself—that is to say, the bank which will ultimately emerge—and its customers. It will provide banking services to its existing customers, which will be a convenience to those customers. It will be able to use its highly trained staff even more efficiently than it has done heretofore, and it believes that it can make a major contribution, with its new proposals and the new arrangement, to the growth of the Canadian economy.

There were four amendments made in the last session by the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee of the other place. Those four amendments are really included in the area of the amendments I mentioned earlier. But when the bill was reported back with those few amendments in February of 1976, an NDP spokesman moved 11 further amendments, which were really not dealt with by the House of Commons, and as a result the bill died on the order paper in July of 1976.

The present bill will incorporate the Continental Bank of Canada or, in French, Banque Continentale du Canada. The provisional directors will be the present directors of IAC, who number 17. The qualification, as I have already said, will be 100 shares of IAC for each of those provisional directors. I am told that the current market price for IAC shares is around $18, that each director will have to have an investment of approximately $1,800 to serve on the board of the bank.

The head office of the bank will be in Toronto. The capital of the company will be $100 million, divided into 10 million shares with a par value of $10 each, and IAC will subscribe for 50 million of those shares.

Upon incorporation—that is to say, if the bill receives royal assent—a transitional period will begin. In this period, as I have already indicated, the assets and business of IAC will run down and the business of the Continental Bank of Canada will increase.

The maximum period of this transitional period will be 10 years, and the target will be the amalgamation of the two corporate entities.

The balance of the bill gives the rules which will govern IAC and the Continental Bank in this transitional period.

I may say that if the proposals of the white paper on banking are adopted, there is a reference to the possibility of allowing conversion of financial institutions into banks. We have not yet seen what specific provisions of law will be proposed in the legislation to follow the white paper but, if that should happen, the process we are now going through in Parliament might not be required again.

I do not propose to deal with the amendments I have already mentioned because they are the principal ones. However, for the benefit of the Senate, I should place on the record the fact that there are certain provisions in the bill to achieve the purposes which the legislation foresees.

After the amalgamation, for example, the Continental Bank will be responsible for the outstanding maturities of IAC in respect of its long-term debt, and in respect also of its convertible debentures. But it will be responsible for this only after amalgamation. Up to that time, IAC will be responsible for the debt.

In the transition period, both the Continental Bank and IAC are subject to the provisions of the Bank Act, except as modified by this Bill C-1001. In the transition period, the proposed bank which is to be incorporated will do all the banking business, and IAC will do the business that at present a bank is not permitted to do.

There are two subsidiaries of IAC to which I should make specific reference: Sovereign Life Assurance Company and Sovereign General Insurance Company. They have respectively asset values of $88 million and $27 million, and, through the operation of the Bank Act and this proposed bill, IAC will have two years from the time of royal assent to reduce its holdings in those two insurance companies to levels which the Bank Act prescribes for such subsidiaries of banks.

The business of the bank must commence within one year from the time royal assent is given to this bill. IAC, within that year, must apply for an order in council bringing the Continental Bank of Canada into being. But, in the meantime, it will have many things to do, such as making its arrangements with the Bank of Canada, converting its branches, training its staff, securing its supplies, and establishing depositing facilities such as those that are carried on by any of the chartered banks.

● (1550)

Let me say a word about the leasing activity and the mortgage lending activity of IAC and/or its subsidiaries. The Bank Act does not allow leasing by a bank, and it restricts lending on mortgages to ten per cent of the bank's deposit liabilities and outstanding debentures together. IAC in 1976 had a leasing portfolio of $710 million and a mortgage portfolio of $248 million in residential mortgages and $63 million in commercial mortgages. In the transition period IAC will continue to operate in the leasing and the mortgaging business, which it has been conducting for some years, but the maximum amount of business that it will be entitled to do in that transition period will be the actual business that it has on the books at the time of royal assent and the amount of business which it has committed itself to do at the time of royal assent.

Honourable senators, having regard for the temperature in the chamber this afternoon I apologize for keeping you so long on this, because we are considering only, I think, about four or five important amendments. However, I do commend the bill to the favourable consideration of the Senate.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, because this is a private bill, because as such it involves no principle, because it is a reincarnation of a bill that was passed by this house before and has now gone through the same process in the other place, because we have had a lot of explanation—I would not say too much, but a lot of explanation—from its sponsor, and also because it has to be referred to committee, I do not see that we need hold up its second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

BRETTON WOODS AGREEMENTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Douglas D. Everett moved the second reading of Bill C-18, to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-18 is a bill to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act. In effect, its purpose is to ratify the amendments that were made by a number of countries to the articles of agreement of the International Monetary Fund. This is the first major reform of the articles of the fund, and it provides for increases in Canada's subscription to the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Construction and Development, which is better known to honourable senators as the World Bank.

The Bretton Woods Agreement was entered into in 1944, and its purposes were to provide member countries with additional international liquidity; to provide a cushion against temporary economic disturbances; and to make unnecessary resort by member countries to illiberal internal or external policies. The original fund was $8.8 billion, which was made up of gold, deposits and securities from member countries.

The International Bank for Construction and Development, which, as I say, is better known as the World Bank, was at the same time incorporated to provide loans and grants to assist in reconstruction and development. This reconstruction was to take place following the Second World War, and when the reconstruction was largely completed it was decided to change the direction and thrust of the World Bank, and two subsidiaries were incorporated at that time. The International Development Association was incorporated to make soft loans to less developed countries. The International Finance Corporation was incorporated to provide venture capital to private sectors in the less developed countries.

The International Monetary Fund is based on two concepts. First of all, it is based on the concept of fixed exchange rates. The reason for that was that the agreement was first entered into in 1944, and it was a reaction to the competitive devaluations that had taken place in the thirties and created such stringent difficulties with trade at that time. The agreement stated that there would be a fixed exchange rate, and a country could vary that exchange rate by only one per cent on either side.

The other concept on which the agreement was based was the convertibility of United States dollars to gold at a fixed rate. In 1946 the United States held 60 to 70 per cent of the total gold supply, and they were willing to convert it under the agreement at $35 U.S. per ounce. The net result was that we had a gold exchange standard based on the convertibility of the United States dollar.

This system worked reasonably well for approximately 15 to 20 years. The United States dollar became the main medium of exchange between countries, and as trade expanded during that period the supply of those dollars had to be increased to accommodate that increased trade. The result was like that of any other increase of the money supply, and the United States dollar became over-valued. When that happened it became very attractive for people and corporations, especially multinational corporations, to invest in United States dollars abroad, and they did so in large numbers.

● (1600)

When that happened, in order to maintain the fixed rates which were required under the fund, the other countries had to accept the inflow of United States dollars, and thereby suffered an egregious increase in their own money supply. This was largely the basis of the world-wide inflation of the 1970s. Even Canada, you will recall, was affected by that malaise. At that time, there was an enormous inflow of American dollars into Canada—so much so that Canada chose to float its currency, as it had done in the 1950s. This prevented an unwarranted increase in the Canadian money supply, because it slowed the inflow into Canada; but at that time Canada was acting contrary to the IMF rules.

As this process occurred, the claims against the American dollar rose at a very rapid rate. There was a major drain of United States gold holdings as other countries cashed in their dollars, which they felt, rightly, were overvalued. As a result, in 1971, the United States withdrew convertibility of its currency to gold, and subsequently the American dollar was allowed to float.

The IMF, for some time, had been attempting to reduce the role of gold in international transactions, and the reason it was doing this is that the supply of gold is not controllable. As a result, expanding trade required a higher price for gold. It was thought by the officials of the IMF that a more controllable system was possible than just working with the increase in the price of gold, so they introduced what are called "special drawing rights", or SDRs. SDRs are made up of a basket of currencies provided by the member countries, and each country, when it gets into balance of payments difficulties, has the right to withdraw a certain amount of those SDRs in order to provide itself with the liquidity necessary to give it time to get out of its difficulties.

It became clear, as this process went on, that the monetary system had to be reformed. There were several meetings and finally a reform package was agreed to in Jamaica in January 1976. This agreement requires approval by 60 per cent of the members of the IMF with 80 per cent of the votes. It is these amendments to the agreement that we are dealing with today.

First of all, the bill deals with the increase in subscriptions to the IMF and the World Bank. The total IMF subscriptions are increased from $29 billion to $39 billion in SDRs. Canada's quota, or portion, of that increase goes from $1.1 billion to $1.357 billion in SDRs. In addition to that Canada is increasing, as are the other countries, its subscription to the World Bank from $1.136 billion to $1.342 billion in American dollars. The total cash outlay of this entire transaction will be $20.6 million U.S.

The second initiative in the bill is to allow the members of the IMF to choose their own exchange rate systems. This means the end of the mandatory fixed exchange rate system that we have had since 1944. It means that the export and import of inflation that took place in the 1960s and the 1970s will be very much more difficult, and it means that speculators in international currencies will speculate much more against each other than against the currencies of particular countries. Interestingly enough, the initiative follows Canada's lead, taken when it broke the IMF rules and floated its own currency in 1950 and again in 1970. There is a requirement that countries must pursue policies conducive to stable systems of exchange rates, and the IMF will be policing that system. There are people who say that we are courting disaster by getting into floating exchange rates, but I think the evidence is contrary to that. We just went through an incredible upset due to the very great rise in oil prices, and while there were dislocations in exchange rates, and while monetary systems did get out of balance, nevertheless we got through relatively unscathed.

The agreement also abolishes the official status for gold, and when this agreement is ratified, gold, whether monetary or commercial, will be returned to the free market. No longer will transfers between countries take place at the official price of $42 per ounce. In addition to that, one-sixth of the subscription of each country will be returned to the country, and one-sixth of the subscription of each country will be sold for assistance to the less developed countries. Honourable senators will be aware of the IMF gold auctions that have taken place already.

The agreement also broadens the IMF's surveillance powers over all policies affecting the external sector. The old IMF policy was purely and simply to act to maintain the fixed exchange rates. The new policy will encourage the adoption of policies which lead to equilibrium in the balance of payments, and it works this way. A member country can draw the first part of its quota automatically. After that it can purchase additional amounts, which are known as credit tranches; but when it attempts to make those purchases of the additional tranches, the IMF imposes more stringent conditions and higher service charges. The country will find that it will only get funds beyond the initial automatic draw if the IMF feels its policies will lead to the adjustment of its balance of payments problems.

Honourable senators, I think the agreement is a happy one. It is good for international monetary stability, and good for the growth of world trade. It is a complicated document, and I believe it should be referred to a committee. The administration approached me about the possibility of having the bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, but on consulting the rules it is clear that these require the bill to be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. That committee is required to deal with "other matters relating to foreign and Commonwealth relations generally, including: (i) treaties and international agreements." This is clearly an international agreement. I would say, parenthetically, that if the administration feels that this may be beyond the ambit of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs and more within the ambit of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, then perhaps at another session the administration would like to consider whether international agreements relating to monetary affairs should be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

● (1610)

However, at present and for very good reason, I will at the appropriate time move that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Senator van Roggen: May I ask Senator Everett when he will be moving the reference of the bill to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs? My reason for asking that question is that the end of the session is drawing near, and I would like to plan the committee meetings and the witnesses to be heard as soon as possible, in the hope of dealing with this particular matter next week.

Senator Grosart: How would he know?

Senator Everett: I can understand the honourable senator's concern but, on the other hand, I do not know how many senators propose to speak to the bill. When no other senators wish to participate I will conclude the debate and, of course, promptly move that the bill be referred to his committee.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, for Senator Smith (Colchester), debate adjourned.

CURRENCY AND EXCHANGE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Daniel A. Lang moved the second reading of Bill C-5, to amend the Currency and Exchange Act and to amend other acts in consequence thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, I am glad that the order for the second reading of this bill was called after the order for the second reading of Bill C-18, and the reason for that will become evident as I proceed with my brief explanation. This order suits me much better, because I really had to listen to Senator Everett and gain an understanding of the problems which are dealt with under the Bretton Woods Agreements Act and the changes made by Bill C-18 to those arrangements. After hearing Senator Everett, I have a much better idea of the purport of Bill C-5.

Bill C-5 is purely ancillary to Bill C-18. It amends provisions of our domestic legislation to enable us to comply with the changes in the Bretton Woods Agreements. It is interesting to note that the domestic legislation requiring amendment is the Currency and Exchange Act, which is not a statute that I can remember coming across previously in my parliamentary experience. It is certainly not a statute with which a practising lawyer is ever likely to be concerned. Therefore, on first examining it, I did so with some trepidation.

Basically, the act is one of general purport, establishing under Part I the nature of our currency and coinage, the denominations of our coinage, providing that the monetary unit is the dollar and subdivisions of the dollar, and so forth. It also provides for what shall be legal tender in transactions in Canada. Part II is a somewhat unrelated part, which establishes the exchange fund which, as honourable senators know, is a fund established under the authority of the Minister of Finance to aid in the control and protection of the external value of the Canadian monetary unit.

Bill C-5 amends this act in manners to make the Bretton Woods Agreements amendments workable. It does so, honourable senators, in five ways, the enumeration of which I hope will be a sufficient explanation for the purposes of second reading. I might add parenthetically that this is peculiarly a bill which should be examined in a committee at which experts in the financial area are in attendance.

First, the bill permits the use of the SDRs, or special drawing rights, to which Senator Everett referred, as a unit of account in Canadian contracts. A unit of account, as I understand it, is just as a Canadian or United States dollar, or the currency unit of any other foreign country, would be. Secondly, it makes minor modifications to the list of assets which the Exchange Fund Account may hold, which are delineated in Part II of the Currency and Exchange Act. Thirdly, it allows the minister to lend gold held by the account. Fourthly, it provides for the valuation of the assets held in the account and establishes an averaging period of some three years for valuing purpose and for reflection in the public accounts of Canada. Finally, the bill incorporates a recommendation of the Auditor General in connection with auditing procedures, to bring them into conformity with the reporting requirements of other agencies and departments in connection with his periodic audit of the Exchange Fund Account.

With those few words, honourable senators, I will conclude my explanation of this highly technical bill. It is in an area of expertise which is basically financial, rather than legal, and is as much a novelty to me as I assume it is to many other senators.

Senator Grosart: May I ask the sponsor of the bill if he knows the current value in Canadian dollars of an SDR?

Senator Lang: No!

On motion of Senator Grosart, debate adjourned.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE ADOPTED

On the Order:

Consideration of the Fourth Report of the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments.—(Honourable Senator Bonnell).

Hon. Eugene A. Forsey: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might be allowed to speak to this order, as the Honourable Senator Bonnell is not here and as he moved the adjournment of the debate on my behalf last evening when I had to be present at a meeting of this committee in my capacity as co-chairman. May I have leave to speak?

● (1620)

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Forsey moved that the report be adopted.

He said: I don't think, honourable senators, that this should detain us long. It is simply the usual formal motion to provide means by which the committee may meet a couple of times during the summer to look after work that would otherwise accumulate to an undue degree, and in this case, also, it may enable us to perform an undertaking which we have made to the Canadian Bar Association to have a meeting of the committee in the presence of members of the Canadian Bar Association, so that the members of that association who might be interested, more particularly the administrative law section, may have an opportunity of seeing how the committee works. So I hope that the Senate will adopt this report without hesitation and without further discussion.

I do not like asking the Senate to adopt something without discussion, questions and so forth, but in this case I think it may be justified.

Senator Flynn: May I ask Senator Forsey whether, if a general election is called, his committee will be able to sit? Secondly, I understand that Senator Forsey is moving adoption of this report, but has he decided yet whether he will move the adoption of the second report?

Senator Forsey: No, I am sorry to say I haven't made any decision on that. I think the matter is still under consideration—whether active or inactive consideration, I shan't undertake to say.

Senator Flynn: By whom?

Senator Forsey: By members of the committee, I think, and possibly by—I don't know, there may be discussions through what I believe are called in the other place "the usual channels."

As to the question of a general election, I am afraid the Honourable Leader of the Opposition should address that question to the Leader of the Government, and not to me. I am not in the least degree privy to the secrets of the government. I never have even the hope of being made privy councillor, and I certainly have no inside channels of information to members of the government.

Senator Flynn: You may become a privy councillor after you have left the Senate. That is not for now, I hope.

I was merely asking this question in view of the fact that I have had the occasion to discuss in this house the problem of the powers of the Senate to deal with that kind of matter as to whether there is a dissolution of Parliament or not.

You will remember the bill that I introduced some years ago with regard to the intersessional powers of the Senate. A committee like Senator van Roggen's, or this committee, could very well continue its work during a period after dissolution.

I was wondering if the Leader of the Government had given some thought to this idea that I proposed some years ago in the form of a bill which died in a committee, as expected.

Senator Perrault: Frequently, honourable senators—

Senator Forsey: If the leader will allow me just a moment, may I, as chairman of the committee, and as the question was originally addressed to me, and I fear I misunderstood it, say that I am afraid the difficulty there is that this is a joint committee and, while presumably we could make some arrangements to have a Senate committee go on, I do not know what we can do with a committee which represents also the other place.

I fear that even if the Leader of the Government is prepared to accept every possible suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition, it wouldn't cover our situation.

I am sorry to intervene when the honourable leader was about to speak.

Senator Flynn: The point was well taken. Thank you.

Senator Grosart: Senator Flynn is a privy councillor, but he is not privy.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the proposal has been under active consideration for some time.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5.45 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Wilfred Judson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

An Act respecting the organization of certain scientific activities of the Government of Canada.

An Act to amend the Judges Act and other Acts in respect of judicial matters.

An Act to amend the Aeronautics Act and the National Transportation Act.

An Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act.

An Act to correct certain anomalies, inconsistencies, archaisms, errors and other matters of a non-controversial and uncomplicated nature in the Revised Statutes of Canada 1970 and other Acts subsequent to 1970.

An Act to implement conventions between Canada and Morocco, Canada and Pakistan, Canada and Singapore, Canada and the Philippines, Canada and the Dominican Republic and Canada and Switzerland for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax.

An Act to amend the Canada Lands Surveys Act.

An Act respecting Diplomatic and Consular Privileges and Immunities in Canada.

The Honourable James Jerome, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1978.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 30, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

AUDITOR GENERAL BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-20, respecting the office of the Auditor General of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Senator Langlois moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Langlois tabled:

Copies of Report of the Commodity Tax Review Group, dated June 27, 1977, issued by the Department of Finance.

Copies of document entitled "Legislation on Public Access to Government Documents", dated June 1977, issued by the Secretary of State of Canada.

Copies of Order of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, respecting compensation plan between the Treasury Board of the Province of New Brunswick and the group of its Resource Service employees, represented by the New Brunswick Public Employees Association. Order dated June 27, 1977.

Report of the President of the Federal Business Development Bank, including accounts and financial statements and the auditor's report thereon, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to sections 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 10, R.S.C., 1970.

Report on the administration of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 28 of the said Act, Chapter C-9, R.S.C., 1970.

Statement by the Department of National Defence of moneys received and disbursed in the Special Account (Replacement of Materiel) for the fiscal year ended

March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 11(4) of the National Defence Act, Chapter N-4, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Unemployment Insurance Advisory Committee for the year ended December 31, 1976, pursuant to section 109(3) of the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, Chapter 48, Statutes of Canada, 1970-71-72.

Copies of letters exchanged between the Chairman of C.R.T.C. and the Prime Minister of Canada respecting the delay of the C.R.T.C. Report of the Committee of Inquiry regarding the CBC, dated June 23 and 28, respectively.

PRIVATE BILL

CONTINENTAL BANK OF CANADA—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Senator Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-1001, to incorporate Continental Bank of Canada, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday next, July 4, 1977, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Honourable senators, before the question is put I should like to give the usual summary of the work in store for the next week. We are proposing to meet on Monday and Tuesday evenings, leaving all day Tuesday free for meetings of committees, as has been done for the past few weeks. As honourable senators are aware, there are a number of bills now before the Senate and in our committees, and it is most likely that next week we will receive from the Commons the following: Bill C-51, the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1977; Bill C-27, the Employment and Immigration Reorganization Act; Bill C-49, the Canada Pension Plan, and Bill C-17, the Air Canada Act, 1976. Therefore, taking into consideration what we now have before us and what it would appear will come to us next week, it will probably be necessary for the Senate to sit next Friday.

On Monday evening Senator Barrow will move second reading of Bill C-20, the Auditor General Act, which was read a first time today, and we shall continue with Bill C-38, to amend the Fisheries Act and to amend the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, second reading of which will be moved this afternoon by Senator Cook, and any other bills remaining on the Orders of the Day. In addition we shall deal with the amendments made by the Commons to Bill S-3, to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act and the Foreign Insurance Companies Act.

A number of committee meetings have already been set down for next week and, of course, there will be additions to this list as other bills are referred.

On Tuesday the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee is meeting at 9.30 a.m. and 2.30 p.m. on Bill C-25, Human Rights; the Agriculture Committee has called a meeting for 9.30 a.m. to continue its consideration of Bill C-34, The Canadian Wheat Board; and the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee has scheduled an in camera meeting for 9.30 a.m. on the subject matter of Bill C-16. Should Bills C-5 and C-18 have been referred to the Foreign Affairs Committee, that committee will meet to consider these bills at 2.30 Tuesday afternoon. If these bills have not been referred, that committee will continue with its study of Canada-United States relations.

The Agriculture Committee plans to meet again on Bill C-34 at 9.30 a.m. and at 3.30 p.m., or when the Senate rises, on Wednesday.

The Foreign Affairs Committee has arranged another meeting for Thursday at 9.30 a.m. on Canada-United States relations. However, if it has legislation before it, the legislation will take precedence.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, the honourable deputy leader has indicated some bills that will come to us next week. Are there other bills which the government wishes to be passed by Parliament before we adjourn for the summer? If that is not the case, does the deputy leader consider that we might be able to complete our business on Friday, as he intimated that we may sit on Friday next week?

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I am sorry that I am unable to give a definite answer to my honourable friend. However, there is a possibility of one or two bills coming to us next week in addition to those I have just enumerated. As far as the date of recess of the house for the summer is concerned, it is quite possible that we may recess some time during next week. With this in mind it is our intention to suggest that we sit on Saturday if necessary, but this is only a possibility. We hope that we will be able to close shop on Friday, or earlier if possible.

Motion agreed to.

● (1410)

DOMINION DAY

CELEBRATIONS ON PARLIAMENT HILL—PARKING FOR SENATORS' CARS

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I have been asked to communicate to the house information received by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod from the RCMP. Tomorrow, July 1, approximately 70,000 people are expected to be on Parliament Hill for the celebration of Canada Day. Honourable senators will be allowed to park their cars in their usual places, but they will not be allowed to leave by car until the fireworks display has been completed. I suggest to honourable senators that if they find it necessary to come to their offices tomorrow, they do so by foot.

Senator Robichaud: Would the acting leader repeat the number of people who are expected to be on Parliament Hill tomorrow for the Canada Day celebrations?

Senator Langlois: It is expected that 70,000 people will be on the grounds tomorrow.

Senator Forsey: May I ask the acting leader when the name of Dominion Day, which is a statutory name, was changed to Canada Day, and by what act?

Senator Langlois: That is a question of government policy and something on which I do not feel I should comment at this time.

Senator Forsey: The usual disregard for the law.

Senator Flynn: The Constitution, I suggest, is an evolving Constitution.

Senator van Rогgen: We will celebrate Canada Day on Dominion Day.

NATIONAL UNITY

DEBATE ON REGIONAL ASPIRATIONS—QUESTION

Senator Choquette: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask the Acting Leader of the Government whether it is the intention to continue the debate on regional aspirations when the Senate reconvenes after the summer recess? I am assuming that the debate will not be concluded before we adjourn.

Senator Langlois: It is quite possible that this item will be on the order paper once we resume following the summer recess. It may be, of course, that honourable senators will wish to conclude the debate before then.

FISHERIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Eric Cook moved the second reading of Bill C-38, to amend the Fisheries Act and to amend the Criminal Code in consequence thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, if in my explanation I do not do full justice to the provisions of Bill C-38, it will be because of the very short time I have had to study its contents. I received the material only yesterday, and, as the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee sat all day, honourable senators will appreciate my difficulty.

Bill C-38 is an important measure for the fisheries industry. It received unanimous support in principle in the other place. It was described by the lead speaker for the official opposition, the honourable member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), as dealing with pollution, power problems, penalties, poachers, police officers, protection policies and prohibition. That is a somewhat poetic description of the bill, but nevertheless it does cover the ground. The bill provides for the protection of all aspects of the fishing industry, including fish of all types and all classes of fishermen.

Few people realize the extent and nature of the evils and abuses which fishermen and the fishing industry have to suffer. In his very fine speech in the other place, the minister gave some horrifying examples of the activities of poachers, the effects of pollution and other abuses which adversely affect the industry. The thrust of the bill, therefore, is to tighten up and amplify the provisions in the Fisheries Act which provides protection for the fishing industry, and to bring breaches of these provisions within the Criminal Code so that fishery protection officers will be given some teeth to enforce the law.

I should now like to review briefly, but in more specific terms, the changes in the bill. Poaching will be dealt with by provisions whereby, upon conviction, equipment used or intended for use in poaching may be forfeited. Provisions are included for the protection of the habitat of fish from harmful alteration, disruption and destruction.

Stronger measures are included for correcting pollution problems from existing operations. Spills of oil, chemicals, garbage and other waste will be more adequately dealt with by a mandatory reporting requirement related to such incidents, and provisions for clear-up orders and broader civil liability are part of this portion of the bill.

Fishermen will now have a right of civil action for loss of income from all pollution sources except ships. The Maritime Pollution Claims Fund, under the Canada Shipping Act, currently provides protection for fishermen who suffer a loss of income due to pollution from ships. Penalties for the violation of many existing provisions will be increased, and new penalties are provided relating to the pollution of fish habitat and waters frequented by fish.

Ticketing provisions are included to allow for more simple administration relative to minor fishing offences. Fisheries officers will be designated peace officers, which will allow them to deal more effectively with some types of illegal activities. This will also facilitate their job in remote areas, where they will now be able to issue summonses or warrants.

Other miscellaneous provisions extend fish guard requirements to apply nationally, and to clarify both definitions and powers of inspectors and analysts.

I want to draw your attention to a number of positive changes which have been made since first reading of the bill in the other place on February 21 of this year. These changes were made primarily because of representations by provincial governments, industry associations and special interest groups. The bill, which, as I have already said, received unanimous support in principle by all parties in the House of Commons was modified, and consequently improved, during the report and third reading stages. The changes made were numerous, and I will explain a few of the more important ones to convey their general nature.

The all-encompassing provisions of section 20, dealing with the destruction of fish, have been revised to allow for some exceptions as authorized by the minister, or by regulations made by the Governor in Council under the act. Reporting requirements have been clarified so as to deal only with deposits of waste substances "out of the normal course of events". The minister's powers under section 33.1, to close any operation or undertaking, now require the approval of the Governor in Council.

The minister must now offer to consult with a concerned province before ordering any restriction, modification or closure of any work or undertaking. This provision is a direct response to representations made by provinces and industry, and is, I believe, a very progressive step indeed.

One of the most important amendments was made on June 28 at the report stage in the other place. This is the amendment to section 10 of the Fisheries Act, which is found in clause 3 on page 2 of the bill. This amendment is designed to prevent obstruction of, or interference with, seal hunters engaged in their lawful pursuit. To Newfoundlanders, this is a welcome and much needed improvement in the law. Indeed, if an organized minority are allowed to continue their illegal actions, the final results will perhaps be unfortunate for them. It may well be that this amendment will in the long run be more for the benefit and protection of those agitators than it will be for the law-abiding Newfoundland sealers.

● (1420)

In addition, the minister made reference to regulatory changes during the committee hearings. These changes to the sealing regulations would restrict access to the sealing grounds to those who need to go there to carry out authorized sealing activities. Representatives of the media would be allowed to attend the hunt, as in the past, and to report on the fashion in which the hunt is conducted, but access would be denied to those whose intention is to interfere with sealing.

On June 1 last, when speaking to this chamber, I said:

Referring once again to the fisheries, I believe the federal Department of Fisheries has the interests of the Newfoundland fisheries very high on its list of priorities, and is doing a great deal to encourage and foster the industry. I thank the department for this, and trust that it will be encouraged to continue this help.

I should now add that in my view the present minister has shown, and continues to show, a deep appreciation of and sympathy with the problems of the Newfoundland sealers, and this gives Newfoundlanders great satisfaction.

Honourable senators, we are considering a bill which has undergone detailed review and discussion. Should it be given second reading by the Senate, I shall move that it be referred to the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee for further consideration and study.

On motion of Senator Phillips, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, July 4, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, July 4, 1977

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

BILLS TO AMEND—FIRST READINGS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that messages had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-283, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Beauharnois-Salaberry); Bill C-392, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Brampton-Georgetown); Bill C-393, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe); Bill C-394, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Huron-Bruce); Bill C-405, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Lethbridge-Foothills); Bill C-406, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Kootenay East-Revelstoke); Bill C-418, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Laval); Bill C-422, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (London-Middlesex); Bill C-427, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Blainville-Deux Montagnes); Bill C-428, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Saint-Jacques); Bill C-429, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Saint-Léonard-Anjou); and Bill C-433, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Cochrane).

Bills read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Senator Lafond: Next year.

Senator Petten: With leave of the Senate, I move that the bills be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Senator Flynn: All of them?

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE (COUNTERFEIT OF RARE COINS AND NOTES)

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill

C-256, to amend the Criminal Code (counterfeit of rare coins and notes).

Bill read first time.

Senator Petten, for Senator Connolly (Ottawa West), moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Wednesday next.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the National Energy Board's Reasons for Decision concerning Northern Pipelines, Volumes 1, 2 and 3, dated June, 1977, which are tabled in this house simultaneously with their tabling in the other place.

I have the honour also to table the following:

Copies of Reports of the Anti-Inflation Board to the Governor General in Council, pursuant to section 17(2) of the Anti-Inflation Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, reporting its reference to the Administrator of the said Act of certain proposed changes in compensation plans, as follows:

1. Canadian Carborundum Company Limited and the employees represented by the United Steelworkers of America, Local 4151 and Local 5953, dated June 17, 1977.
2. The Village of Glenboro (Administration Group), dated June 17, 1977.
3. The Regional Municipality of Waterloo Regional Police Force and its Regional Police Executive Group, dated June 17, 1977.
4. The City of Winnipeg, Manitoba and its employees, represented by the United Firefighters of Winnipeg I.A.F.F. Local 867, dated June 17, 1977.

List of Commissions issued under authority of section 3 of the Public Officers Act during the year ended December 31, 1976, pursuant to section 4 of the said Act, Chapter P-30, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Orders of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, respecting certain compensation plans, as follows:

1. The Atlantic Consolidated Foods Limited, Atlantic Sugar Division, Saint John, New Brunswick and the group of its employees, represented by the Bakery and Confectionery Workers International Union of America, Local 443. Order dated June 30, 1977.

2. Ekco Canada Company Limited, Burnaby, British Columbia and the group of its Glaco Plant employees, represented by the Bakery and Confectionery Workers International Union of America, Local 468. Order dated June 30, 1977.

Report of the Standards Council of Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, including its financial statements certified by the Auditor General, pursuant to section 20 of the Standards Council of Canada Act, Chapter 41 (1st Supplement), R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the National Farm Products Marketing Council, including a statement of expenses, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 16 of the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act, Chapter 65, Statutes of Canada, 1970-71-72.

Copies of Order in Council P.C. 1977-1706, dated June 23, 1977, amending Part I of the Schedule to the Hazardous Products Act, pursuant to section 8(3) of the said Act, Chapter H-3, R.S.C., 1970.

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, July 5, 1977, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

● (2010)

NORTHERN PIPELINES

DECISION OF NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD—QUESTION

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, may I ask the Leader of the Government if he would inform us as to the recommendation of the National Energy Board? He has just tabled the decision, and I think he said he was tabling it at the same time as it was being tabled in the other place, so we are still in the dark.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is my understanding that the National Energy Board offers the opinion that the so-called "AlCan route" is preferable to other proposals. I understand from preliminary reports that the Board recommends against placing in the Mackenzie River delta and basin any kind of pipeline system at this time.

Senator Flynn: The press was right.

Senator Perrault: I want to remind honourable senators, however, that there were earlier speculative reports that the recommendation would be for the Arctic gas proposal. There have been a number of speculative stories.

Senator Flynn: I am speaking of those reports of today.

Senator Perrault: Yes, I understand that those reports are accurate.

Senator Buckwold: May I ask the Leader of the Government a supplementary question? Will copies of the report be made available to all senators?

Senator Perrault: I would hope so, honourable senators. As you are aware, there will be a substantial parliamentary dialogue on the subject of the National Energy Board's recommendations. Another report will be forthcoming as well.

I am sure that honourable senators are aware of the fact that during August there may be a special debate in the other place on the various pipeline routes. I hope that I may have a discussion with the honourable Leader of the Opposition and other honourable senators with respect to the possibility of a similar debate in this chamber. A major decision regarding pipelines must be made soon. The subject is of importance to all Canadians and to all of us, whether we serve in the Senate or in the other chamber.

Senator Olson: I have a supplementary question. May I ask the Leader of the Government if that debate will commence before the session is adjourned in July, now that we have the NEB report? I understand that other reports are forthcoming, and I am wondering if the other place and the Senate will begin the debate before the adjournment.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the proposal, as of now, is to await the tabling of all reports in connection with pipeline routes. That process will preclude the possibility of holding such a parliamentary debate in the month of July, unless honourable senators wish to remain here until all reports are available.

The proposal will be to have such a debate in the month of August. I shall attempt to obtain the debate timetable proposed for the other place, following which, perhaps, we can have meetings with the official opposition and others to discuss the possibility of a Senate debate and the procedure which should be followed in this chamber.

THE SENATE CHAMBER

MALFUNCTION OF AIR CONDITIONING SYSTEM—QUESTION

Senator Grosart: Will the air conditioning be working by August?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I regret to inform you that the air conditioning system worked for just two hours today. However, part of the machinery has burned out, and consequently we have been advised that there will be no air conditioning in this chamber until Wednesday. Whatever the natural or supernatural cause of the breakdown, its effects are certainly in evidence.

Senator Flynn: Did it happen when the Leader of the Government entered the chamber?

Senator Langlois: The forecast is for cold weather in August.

THE CROWN

REVENUES—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, on October 26, 1976, Senator Forsey asked a question with respect to Crown revenues. I shall not endeavour to read the question in its entirety, but it can be found at page 75 of Debates of the Senate, issue number 8, of this session. The question was with respect to casual revenues or any revenues not provided by Parliament available to the Crown. The honourable senator said:

Something has come to my ears which made me wonder what exactly is going on and I would like to be assured by the highest authority of what the legal position is in this regard.

I must apologize for the long delay in obtaining a reply to this question, for reasons that are not entirely clear.

The British North America Act provides that all “revenues” of Canada form “one Consolidated Revenue Fund” and that this fund is for appropriation by Parliament. In this context, “revenues” are what are called “receipts of public money” and not simply “budgetary revenues”, that is, revenues as shown in the budget.

Turning to the question, “Has the Crown any casual revenues or any revenues not provided by Parliament?” the reply is: It is not known what “casual revenues” are but, to provide an answer, the government interprets the question to be whether the Crown in right of Canada has any receipts of public money which are not acquired in terms of an authority granted by Parliament. The answer is: No.

This answer is based not simply on opinion but on the fact that all receipts of public money are deposited in the Consolidated Revenue Fund and then accounted for. The only exceptions to this rule and practice (and both apply) are misappropriations of public money before it is deposited in Receiver General bank accounts. The sums so misappropriated are small; much of the money misappropriated is recovered and deposited in the Consolidated Revenue Fund; and, clearly, none of it ever becomes “casual” revenues of the Crown.

To have “revenues” not provided by Parliament would first require a source of such funds; that is, somebody must be prepared to pay or give up the money. In addition, there would have to be illegal bank accounts—that is, bank accounts not in the name of the Receiver General—to deal with these funds. Since the first action is unconstitutional, the second illegal, and the Crown (in this sense) can do no wrong, such “revenues” are not really those of the Crown. In other words, it is not possible for the Crown to have any revenues not provided by Parliament.

One final point is that some person or persons masquerading in the guise of the Crown may have found a source of funds not provided by Parliament and be using such funds in the name of the Crown. The government has no knowledge of any such actions because funds not provided by Parliament obviously need not be paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

The simple answer is: No.

May I suggest to the honourable senator that he may wish to study the reply, and perhaps other questions may flow from that study.

Senator Forsey: Thank you very much.

PRIVATE BILL

CONTINENTAL BANK OF CANADA—THIRD READING

Senator Petten moved third reading of Bill C-1001, to incorporate Continental Bank of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

● (2020)

JAMES BAY AND NORTHERN QUEBEC NATIVE CLAIMS SETTLEMENT BILL

MOTION FOR THIRD READING—MOTION IN AMENDMENT— DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, June 29, the debate on the motion in amendment of Senator Flynn to the motion of Senator Bourget for the third reading of Bill C-9, to approve, give effect to and declare valid certain agreements between the Grand Council of the Crees (of Quebec), the Northern Quebec Inuit Association, the Government of Quebec, la Société d'énergie de la Baie James, la Société de développement de la Baie James, la Commission hydro-électrique de Québec and the Government of Canada and certain other related agreements to which the Government of Canada is a party.

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: Honourable senators—

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: Hear, Hear.

Senator Flynn: I am quite sure that the Leader of the Government knows what you are going to say.

Senator Robichaud: Honourable senators, I do not know what the Leader of the Opposition just said.

Senator Flynn: I said that since the Leader of the Government is applauding you in this manner, he must know what you are going to say.

Senator Perrault: I have been enthusiastic for a number of years with respect to the abilities of the Honourable Senator Robichaud.

Senator Robichaud: Honourable senators, there is one thing I intend to say right now and that is that I will speak my mind. I will not borrow anyone else's opinion; I will express my own ideas.

Senator Choquette: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: Bravo!

Senator Robichaud: Honourable senators, the first time I spoke in this chamber I was standing right across from where I am speaking now, and something went wrong with the amplification system. I recall that Senator Jacques Flynn, the Leader of the Opposition, said to me, “Why don't you cross the floor and get to a microphone so that you can be heard?" It happens that tonight I am speaking on a subject I really believe in, and something else has gone wrong. This time it is the air-conditioning system. Perhaps I will speak again tomorrow, hoping something will go well.

During my political life I have often heard parliamentarians say, "I did not intend to speak on this subject but circumstances have forced me to enter the debate." Well, I can truthfully say that I did not intend to speak on Bill C-9, but circumstances have forced me to enter the debate.

[Translation]

This is because, during my political life, I have identified with minorities. And once again, I am prepared to defend their cause because I would not like to see the status of minorities jeopardized by an action which might be taken by the Senate this evening, tomorrow or the day after tomorrow or at any time.

[English]

I believe very strongly that in the Senate we can provide that sober second thought to legislation received from the other place, and I think it should be done when it should be done. However, I have some doubts in the case of Bill C-9. I do not mind admitting that I am not an intellectual who examines every detail of bills passed in the other place, but in this instance I read Bill C-9 very carefully. I am a member of Senator Goldenberg's committee, and I have read everything that was said about this bill in the other place. I cannot see why we should amend it in any way.

Now, I appreciate the amendment which has been submitted by the Leader of the Opposition and supported by Senator Grosart and other senators. I know that they are sincere. I know they want to do the best thing that can be done. But in my estimation, the best thing that could have been done was done when this agreement of some 451 pages was entered into by the parties involved, those parties being: the Grand Council of the Crees (of Quebec), the Northern Quebec Inuit Association, the Government of Quebec, the Government of Canada, the James Bay Energy Corporation, the James Bay Development Corporation, and the Quebec Hydro-Electric Commission. The agreement was signed by the following individuals for the Grand Council of the Crees (of Quebec): The Grand Chief and Chief of the Rupert House Band, Billy Diamond; the Chief of the Fort George Band, Robert Kanatawat; the Chief of the Old Factory Band, Fred Blackned; the Chief of the Eastmain Band, Matthew Shanush; the Chief of the Waswanipi Band, Peter Gull; Councillor of the Mistassini Band, Philip Awashish; Councillor of the Mistassini Band, Smally Petawabano; the Chief of the Great Whale River Band, Joseph Petagamaskum; the Leader of the Nemaska Band, Bertie Waachee, and the Administrative Chief of the Grand Council, Abel Kitchen.

The signatories for the Northern Quebec Inuit Association were as follows: the President, Charlie Watt; the First Vice-President, George Koneak; the Second Vice-President, Johny Williams; the Secretary, Zebedee Nungak; the Treasurer, Pootoolik Papigatuk; a Director, Tommy Cain; a Director, Robbie Tookalook; a Director, Peter Inukpuk, a Director, Mark Annanack; a Director, Sarolie Weetaluktuk; a Director, Charlie Arngak; for the Government of Quebec: the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, Gérard D. Lévesque; for the James Bay Energy Corporation, the President, Robert A. Boyd; for the James Bay Development Corporation, the President, Charles Boulva; for the Quebec Hydro-Electric Commission, the President, Roland Giroux, for the Government of Canada, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Honourable Judd Buchanan.

That agreement was signed on the 11th day of November, 1975. The House of Commons and the Senate have been asked to ratify, to validate, the agreement; to give it force and effect. If we were to amend the agreement we would be denying to the Government of Quebec and the Government of Canada certain terms of the agreement that have already been agreed to. Perhaps I should quote just a portion of the agreement. This is to be found in section 25.2.1 on page 25-7 of the agreement:

• (2030)

The James Bay Crees and the Inuit of Québec forever and absolutely renounce any and all claims, if any, past, present or future, against Québec with respect to royalties, mining duties, taxes or equivalent or similar benefits and revenues, derived and resulting from development and exploitation in the Territory.

This is one of the terms of the agreement that the amendment, which was sought in all honesty by the Leader of the Opposition, would destroy. As I stated a moment earlier, I am strongly in favour of minorities having their rights fully protected in every respect, but I think in this case they are fully protected. Furthermore, we here will provide a sober second thought to make sure that the rights of the Crees and the Inuit people are protected.

The James Bay Agreement, if we want to go back, is the result of a long and often difficult process of planning, consultation and negotiation which lasted for over five years. With so many interests involved and the complexity of issues to be resolved, the negotiations demanded the high degree of dedication and purpose that has characterized the proceedings throughout. The accommodation reached has great significance for the parties directly affected by the agreement, but also wider implications in other parts of Canada, and this is important where similar situations, though not identical, are found. The federal government's role and participation in events leading to the signing of the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement stem from the legislative jurisdiction assigned to the Parliament of Canada under the British North America Act in 1867 for Indians and lands reserved for Indians. Part of this responsibility was to provide protection for the Indian people in their traditional occupancy and use of lands. The Quebec Boundaries Extension Act of 1912, which extended the northern boundary of Quebec to its present limits, contained a provision that the Quebec government recognized the rights of native people in this territory to:

—obtain surrenders of such rights in the same manner, as the Government of Canada has heretofore recognized such rights and has obtained surrender thereof—

This referred to the established practice, dating back to the royal proclamation of 1763, of entering into treaties with Indian groups in many parts of the country. Under the Boundaries Extension Act, Quebec was to bear all charges and expenditures arising out of such surrenders, which were made subject to approval by the federal government.

As a matter of policy, particularly during the past five years, the federal government has been seeking through various changes and means to fulfil its lawful obligations to the Indian people arising from the historic treaties and existing law. Following a full review of its position, the government announced in its statement of August 8, 1973, its policy on comprehensive claims, which were those put forward by Indian and Inuit people, in areas where native interests in lands deriving from a traditional occupancy and use had never been extinguished by treaty or superseded by law. It is basic to the position of the federal government that comprehensive claims must be settled and that the most promising way to settlement is through negotiations. Negotiated agreements must be reached with groups of Indians and Inuit people concerned, and these agreements enshrined in legislation to give them the stability and binding force of law.

In the James Bay matter the federal responsibility began to emerge from that time and it became apparent that the Province of Quebec had serious intentions of proceeding with the hydro development project. In the spring of 1971, when the Quebec government announced proposals concerning that development, and the Grand Council of the Crees of Quebec expressed concern about their territorial rights, periodic meetings began to take place between the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and representatives of the Quebec Indians concerned, and this soon led to frequent contacts with Quebec on the subject.

I realize I am directing my remarks to the history of this affair, and I hope the Leader of the Opposition will question me if he so wishes after I am through.

During 1974 negotiations took place on the basis of an offer announced by the Government of Quebec in January of that year. The federal government welcomed that offer because it contained components considered essential to satisfactory settlement and fully consistent with established federal policy on comprehensive claims.

● (2040)

The James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement is a complicated and far-reaching document dealing with the whole range of issues raised in comprehensive claims from native groups. Far from wiping out the rights of the Indian and Inuit people concerned, and the responsibilities governments have for their future well-being and role in Canadian society, the agreement establishes specific rights and régimes, defines institutional relationships and functions, and provides substantial resources to ensure and strengthen native involvement in local administration and socio-economic development.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, when speaking on second reading of the bill in the other place, said the following, which impressed itself on my mind:

The legislation which I recommend to this House merits the support of all members because it will enable the native peoples of James Bay and northern Quebec to determine their own future, political, economic and social evolution.

Those are the words of the minister, and throughout this document of 455 pages we see in every line that the governments of Canada and Quebec are protecting the native rights of the Crees and Inuit.

The government firmly believes that a satisfactory settlement of land claims along these lines will assist the native people to overcome past disadvantages and barriers which have prevented them from participating in and benefiting from the larger society of which they are a part. A just settlement, which satisfies the particular needs and aspirations of native people in the area concerned, can lay the foundation for a future in which the native people have economic self-reliance, pride and self-respect, a solid stake and their own role in the social and economic evolution of the region in which they reside. For participation in and benefit from such development is part of what native claimants are seeking in areas where comprehensive claims arise—not to block development because the native people do not wish to block development.

An agreement with the Crees and Inuit of the James Bay and northern Quebec area would not have been possible had the Government of Canada not agreed to the extinguishment of all native interests in the territory.

An Hon. Senator: Why?

Senator Robichaud: This is vital. This agreement would not have been possible if such provisions were not contained in the bill, and if we refuse to pass it, we shall jeopardize the operation of the whole agreement.

Throughout the negotiations, the Quebec government made it clear that any agreement would have to provide for the extinguishment by federal legislation of all "native title" to the land in question. If we read the agreement, we shall see that the rewards are magnificent. Had Canada not agreed, the Crees and Inuit would have been left with undefined "aboriginal rights," and would have been deprived of the specific benefits to be granted them under this agreement and confirmed in law by Bill C-9 and Quebec Bill 32. Bill C-9 is the equivalent of Quebec Bill 32.

Recognizing that other native groups might be able to establish an interest in the territory, the federal government insisted that the agreement include a provision protecting the potential rights of native non-signatories, and this led to the insertion of section 2.14. By this section, Quebec is legally bound to negotiate with other Indians and Inuit who are not parties to the agreement concerning any claim they might have with respect to the territory.

I do not hold any brief for the present Government of Quebec. All this was done, and the bill passed, before the present government came into power, and the present Quebec government supports everything contained in this agreement. It is proof of the Quebec government's intention to live up to its commitment to negotiate under section 2.14 of the agreement.

I cite the example of the current negotiations with the Naskapis of Schefferville, who have proved their traditional interest in the territory. Intensive negotiations are under way which should result in an agreement very shortly. Moreover, in his inaugural address to the National Assembly on March 8, 1977, Premier Lévesque stated that the Quebec government will carry on negotiations with other native groups, as it has done with the Crees and Inuit, and as it is now doing with the Naskapis, with a view to arriving at satisfactory settlements.

To date, no other native group has submitted documented proof of its interests in the territory. If one does, both governments, pursuant to paragraph 2.14, will assess the extent of these interests and will be prepared to negotiate compensation for any valid claim. The Honourable Warren Allmand has said that the federal government, for its part, will support these groups and provide funding to them, as soon as they are ready to pursue a claim. So far only the Naskapi have come forward.

● (2050)

The obligation to negotiate under section 2.14 presumes that some form of compensation will be provided to native groups establishing rights in the territory. The compensation, however, will vary with the differing native interests involved, and could extend to such benefits as economic and social programs, and increased local self-government. This type of benefit is not ordinarily ordered by the courts as compensation for loss of rights to land.

The government strongly believes that because of section 2.14 native non-signatories will have a greater chance of receiving compensation for any traditional interest they may be able to establish in the territory. In this respect a historic precedent has been set. This has no equivalent in any other area of the country. No other province of Canada has obligated itself in this way to negotiate native rights. For example, if the Indians of British Columbia could point to such an undertaking in their current discussions with that province, more progress might be made in claims settlement.

The James Bay agreement has established another important precedent. It provides for the inclusion of non-status Indians as beneficiaries. Already over 200 non-status Crees have been enrolled. Any negotiations under section 2.14 could provide for other non-status Indians, having an interest in the territory, to be involved in a similar way. This is another positive aspect of the James Bay agreement, and, it is to be hoped, one which will be followed in other comprehensive claims negotiations in other provinces.

In conclusion, I wish to reiterate the firm belief of the federal government that the James Bay and Northern Quebec agreement is a good agreement. The agreement clearly demonstrates the federal government's recognition of its obligations under section 91 of the Constitution towards all the native people of the territory. It is the result of long and careful negotiations which were aimed at reaching a settlement that would truly meet the special needs of the Crees and Inuit in northern Quebec, and provides a unique opportunity for non-signatories to advance their claims.

The agreement will only come into effect officially upon proclamation of the federal and provincial legislation approving it. Until the passage of Bill C-9, the provisions of the James Bay and Northern Quebec agreement cannot be fully implemented, and the Crees and Inuit cannot enjoy the full benefits to which they are entitled as a result of this agreement. This document should be read, and account taken of the millions of dollars that have been invested over a period of years in this area, where there are 6,000 Crees and 4,000 Inuit. We must decide whether we are going to deprive these people of the monetary resources that we possess in Canada. This is all in this document. If we block Bill C-9 by any amendment, that is exactly what is going to happen.

It is understandable, therefore, that the native parties are anxious to see Bill C-9 passed, and I recommend that the amendment of the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate not be adopted. I say this because I believe in minority rights, and because I believe that minority rights are fully protected in this agreement, signed between officials of the Government of Canada, the Government of Quebec, and a number of Indians who agreed to these terms, and who wanted this agreement.

Are we going to block them, or are we, in this Senate, going to tell the Crees or the Inuit, "You do not know what you need. We are going to decide that for you in the Senate, because we have such a motherly heart. Because we know what you need, we are going to give it to you." Honourable senators, what they want is this agreement. The House of Commons has ratified it, as has the Government of Quebec, and I for one will not block it in the Senate.

● (2100)

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, it had been my intention to move the adjournment of this debate, but I believe that Senator McElman would like to speak now.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, indeed politics does produce strange bedfellows. My constancy over the years in support of Liberal policies and programs is rather well known and needs no elaboration. I hope that my brief sojourn on this particular occasion into the Tory bedchamber in support of this amendment will not result in charges of either molestation or prostitution. In light of this rather unique situation in which I find myself, prudence should dictate that my remarks be reasonably brief, and I will try to be prudent.

Honourable senators, there is one basic question before us in the proposed amendment: Will this bill, if enacted, protect in law the rights of those native peoples who are not party to the agreement? After listening to and reading debates and committee hearings in this and the other place, I am persuaded that the answer to that basic question is: No, the enactment of this proposed legislation will not protect in law the rights of those native peoples who are not party to the agreement. As I understand it, there are some 11,000 who are represented by the signatories to the agreement, but there are some 1,200 who are not represented; some 600 are now negotiating, leaving some 600 still to validate claims or endeavour to do so. Even if it were 60, the same principle should apply.

We are told that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development went on four occasions to the Government of Quebec to obtain their agreement to protection in law for the rights of this minority of native peoples. His efforts were rejected by the Government of Quebec. Is it not obvious from the strenuous efforts by the minister that the Government of Canada believed it important, even imperative, that such protection in law be provided? Yet, we are left only with the requirement under clause 2.14 of the agreement that the Government of Quebec will negotiate with those native peoples about rights that will have already been extinguished—and the assurances of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development that the Government of Canada will ensure that such negotiations will be conducted in good faith, but, I remind you, without the necessary force in law.

One cannot help but wonder what the result of such nebulous negotiations might be some five or ten years down the road of time. The assurances of the minister, albeit sincere, carry little weight in law. Ministers change; governments change; circumstances change; and serious assurances become modulated and fade with the passage of time and the evolution of events. Good evidence of those truths was given in this debate by Senator Asselin. He informed us that when the former Liberal Government of Quebec was dealing with this subject matter in the National Assembly, spokesmen for the Parti Québécois raised precisely the same proposal for the protection in law of the rights of this minority of native peoples not covered by this agreement. The then Government of Quebec was adamant in refusing to give that protection in law. But now the Parti Québécois are a strong majority government. Their position has changed to match that displayed by the former government. Indeed things change.

As I stated earlier, ministers change; governments change; opinions change; assurances change. One might be forgiven, in this circumstance, the comment that the advice of bureaucrats does not appear to change, since obviously the same bureaucratic advice must have been given to and persuaded both the former and the present Governments of Quebec. But, honourable senators, law does not change except consciously and purposefully by parliaments and legislatures.

It was implied in this debate by Senator Goldenberg, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, which studied Bill C-9 at length and in depth, that weight should be given to the opinion given by the witness, Mr. Paul Ollivier, the Acting Deputy Minister of Justice, in reply to questions raised by Senator Flynn, the mover of this amendment. The essence of that opinion by Mr. Ollivier, as I understood it, was that a right to compensation arises only when the right for which compensation is claimed has been extinguished.

Honourable senators, I was present in committee while this point was discussed by Senator Flynn and Mr. Ollivier. I must confess to you that Mr. Ollivier's opinion brought to my mind, in analogy, the age-old question: "Which came first, the chicken or the egg?" And as a layman I felt that a court of law might have as much trouble with his opinion as man has had in trying to answer the riddle of the chicken and the egg. Let me add that in a contest of strength of conviction in their respective opinions and arguments displayed at that committee meeting by Senator Flynn and Mr. Ollivier, Senator Flynn was, in my opinion, the clear winner. It was at that point that the doubts in my mind concerning this very serious question were resolved in favour of the position that has been consistently put forward by Senator Flynn.

With particular reference to the opinion given the committee by Mr. Ollivier, let me draw your attention to a comment made in this debate by Senator Goldenberg. It is found at page 1010 of the Senate Hansard of June 28, and reads:

• (2110)

In answer to a request by the committee I called upon someone who could give us a legal opinion, and this person was the Acting Deputy Minister of Justice who was involved in this.

That is Mr. Ollivier.

Let me stress those last few words of Senator Goldenberg's comment, that Mr. Ollivier was a person, "who was involved in this." Honourable senators, in my opinion Mr. Ollivier was placed in an impossible position in giving his opinion to the committee. Mr. Ollivier is a senior law officer of the Crown. He had been involved; he had been involved in advising the responsible minister in the Government of Canada, involved in the agreement, and indeed involved in Bill C-9, now before us. And out of such involvement how could his opinion have been other than that which he gave the committee? The man was locked in.

Senator Flynn: Indeed.

Senator McElman: Please understand me clearly. It is my understanding that Mr. Ollivier is a first-rate and highly competent and responsible public servant. I cast absolutely no aspersions in his direction. But when you consider the background from which he gave his opinion, I am sure you must agree that Mr. Ollivier was in an impossibly compromised situation before the committee, for which he has only my sympathy.

This instance adds further weight to Senator Lang's proposition that the duties and offices of the Minister of Justice and the Attorney General be separated one from the other.

At this point let me recall to your attention the information given to us in this debate by the Leader of the Government in the Senate, Senator Perrault, to which I referred earlier, to the effect that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development had tried very hard to gain agreement from the Government of Quebec for greater protection in law for the rights of the minority of native peoples not party to the agreement, and that the minister had gone four times to the Government of Quebec for that purpose.

Let me ask: Do you think for a moment that the minister was acting on his own, that he was operating in a vacuum of advice, that he was impelled only by his own personal views? Of course he was not. He was acting in the best interests of the minority of native peoples whose rights were being threatened with extinguishment without the right in law to just compensation. And he was doing so, obviously, with and upon the advice of senior law officers of the Crown.

Again, why did the minister consider it important to make such an extended effort to obtain that protection in law? Because he obviously was advised that it was an imperative. I say to you, without rancour, and with some understanding of the difficulty and complexity of the situation which they faced, "They went for more . . . But they settled for less." In my opinion, that is not good enough.

Let me refer very briefly to the specious argument that was made again by Senator Laird, that time is fleeting at this stage of the session and that we might lose the bill and its beneficial effects if we attempt to amend it. That was repeated tonight by Senator Robichaud. We are asked to swallow both our pride and our principles in one large gulp, and to serve only as an opportunistic rubber stamp. For my part that is an unsupportable scare tactic that has been used at least once too often, and it should be summarily rejected.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator McElman: It is no fault of the Senate that this and other important legislation comes piling on to our desks at this late hour. If a majority in this chamber should decide that amendment of Bill C-9 is required, then we should do so and let the ensuing parliamentary responsibilities of the other place rest with it.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator McElman: Whether they deal with it next week, or when they are back in August, or when they return in the fall, is their own business and none of ours. And if the other place wishes to turn down an amendment of the Senate, that too is their business. Our business is simply to do our duty as we perceive it to be here.

That brings me to my final argument. The Senate is seized with special duties and responsibilities—the protection of the rights of minorities. It is in that sense that Bill C-9 is of most particular interest and concern to the Senate. It is in that particular sense that Bill C-9 presents both a challenge and an opportunity to the Senate. We should accept the challenge and seize the opportunity by protecting in law the rights of this minority of native peoples by approving the amendment now before us.

Let me close by reading a section from The Unreformed Senate of Canada, the 1963 Revised Edition, by Robert A. MacKay. The section is entitled "Minority Rights," and follows immediately the section on "Rights of the Individual". At pages 127 and 128, after speaking of the individual's rights, he says:

There is firmer ground for inference that the Fathers intended the Senate to have responsibilities for protecting minorities. Senator Robertson, when introducing the debate on Senate Reform in 1951, listed the protection of minorities as the first function of the Senate. He admitted it had been rarely called upon to exercise this function, but he thought the existence of the Senate had a deterrent effect against the initiation of measures prejudicial to minorities. There was general agreement that the protection of minorities was an important function of the Senate. But the minorities the Fathers had in mind were religious and linguistic, and the only precise minority rights enshrined in the British North America Act, apart from those adhering as well to the provinces, related to education and to the use of both languages in the federal Parliament and federal courts and in the legislature and courts of Quebec. Actually the Senate has rarely, if ever, been called upon to protect either of these rights.

I should state at this point, it could be; it could be so called upon.

Its responsibility is thus contingent, rather than active.

There are now, however, many other minority groups in Canada—linguistic, racial, religious, economic. On the assumption that democracy rests on a basis of equality among the people of the nation, it may be argued that the Senate, as the upper house, has a moral, though scarcely a constitutional responsibility for preventing discrimination towards minorities. It has rarely been called upon so to act, but one instance in particular is worth noting. In 1944 a franchise bill was introduced which proposed to disenfranchise Canadians of enemy extraction who already had been barred from voting in provincial elections. The bill ran into strong opposition in the Senate. Senator Lambert, nominally a supporter of the Government, declared, "One of the principal traditional responsibilities of this chamber is that of safeguarding the rights of minorities." Senator Euler, also nominally a Government supporter, declared he would fight the bill "to the last ounce of my strength." Senator Calder, a Conservative, declared, "We are here to look after minorities, and it may be that they will be dealt with unjustly by this measure." The Senate amended the bill to debar only persons of Japanese origin in British Columbia, where they had previously been barred by federal legislation.

● (2120)

I interject here that if the Senate could a few years later have recalled its decision, it would not have barred those Canadian citizens either. So reflection down the road is useful. Continuing with the last paragraph of the quotation:

Infrequently as the Senate may have had opportunity of protecting minorities, whether those contemplated by the Fathers or others, and uncertain as it may be that the Senate will act to do so, it is surely of importance to the nation that there should be somewhere in the Constitution a special means of protecting minorities from injustice.

Honourable senators, I believe that "somewhere" in the Constitution is the Senate and I believe that an opportunity for using those "special means" available to us has now been placed before us.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to participate in this debate now, I would move its adjournment.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, as a member of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs I am agonizing with myself as to how I should vote on Senator Flynn's amendment. I can tell you that if I were satisfied the amendment would achieve what I know to be the sincere desire of the Leader of the Opposition, I would support it. However, I am cogitating whether in fact we would be doing more harm than good in rejecting the bill as originally presented? Would we be prejudicing the position of a minority? I am referring briefly to Senator McElman's very able argument, because the minority really is the Cree and the Inuit. These are the minorities which are really affected by this legislation. It is true that there are also some sub-minorities, but in rejecting the bill we ignore the pleas presented to our committee by representatives of the Cree and the Inuit that they had spent years in achieving what they feel to be a good settlement. Again, I am debating whether the settlement was good or not, but it was acceptable to them and they pleaded with our committee not to reject this bill. If we were to send it back to the House of Commons, I believe on the basis of what we have heard from the Minister for Intergovernmental Affairs of the Province of Quebec, the whole negotiations would break down, the deal would be off and the minority groups that we are ostensibly here to protect would find themselves out in left field.

Senator Flynn: No; no one ever said that.

Senator Buckwold: In my opinion, that is what would happen, and that is why I suggest that, although it is the duty and responsibility of this chamber to protect minority rights, I feel that in protecting the rights of the Cree and Inuit we are, in fact, protecting those rights. The provisions of this bill might very well inflict, by the extinguishment of rights, a serious injustice on some groups. In my opinion, however, in the broad picture it would be a mistake to reject the bill.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand: Honourable senators, I would like to say just one thing. I was very impressed by the argument of Senator McElman and by the reply which has just been given. I was also impressed by the role that the Senate is supposed to have, and I am in complete agreement with Senator McElman.

I believe that the reply has been given in part. It is certain that the agreement was made with minorities, the Inuit and Crees. It is to protect minorities that the agreement was made. But does it protect all minorities? This is the problem and this is what we have to resolve. We all agree about the role of the Senate. If we are here simply to say yes to the government, I think that we should not be here. If we are firmly convinced that the basic principles of our federal system are being violated, I believe that we must say so. But what strikes me is this: In any agreement that can be signed in Canada, is it essential that the rights of all possible minorities be protected? Here I say that hundreds and thousands of agreements of all types are signed in Canada.

[English]

In law, all the people of Canada are, in fact, in the labour field, for example; and it is true that in many fields where you have agreements third parties have no recourse, as is the case according to this agreement.

[Translation]

Senator Marchand: If then a positive answer is given to the foregoing, there will be protection for all minorities and all those who at some time may become involved, directly or indirectly. The way Senator McElman put the problem leaves me somewhat uncomfortable because, as Senator Buckwold also suggested, my conscience is somewhat stirred. Finally, does it mean that we are simply rubber-stamping what the other place does? Are we going to put aside that beautiful commitment of ours to protect the rights of minorities? If such is the implication, I not only feel ill at ease, but will vote for the amendment. However, I would have to be told at what point we stop protecting the rights of minorities, and what is meant by minorities. This Senator McElman did not define, neither did the amendment.

Senator Flynn: I explained it.

Senator Marchand: Well then, for that reason I will vote against the amendment as drafted, because there would be no limit to the amendment if passed.

[English]

Senator McElman: Would the honourable senator permit me to ask him a question? Is it not clear my remarks were to the effect that I agree we are protecting the rights of minorities, the Cree and the Inuit? But there are 1,200 others, and this bill takes away their rights, even their right to make a claim.

Some Hon. Senators: No, no.

Senator McElman: Just be calm, both of you; you will have your opportunity.

Senator Flynn: Just be quiet.

Senator McElman: This bill extinguishes their rights and even their right to claim; the word is clear.

Senator Grosart: The bill names: "... claims, rights, titles and interests ..."

● (2130)

Senator McElman: "All native claims, rights, title and interests, whatever they may be" will be extinguished.

I am completely in support of the rights of the Crees and the Inuit as they have been set out in the agreement. I am totally in support of the protection of such rights. I thought I had made that clear. What I am totally against, however, is the removal, by clause 3 of this bill, of the "rights, title and interests." "Claims" are to be extinguished in law and then, pursuant to the agreement, they will have the right to negotiate. Negotiate what? Everything will be gone.

Senator Marchand: I do not wish to intervene in the legal interpretation of the bill as such. There are others in this chamber who are much more competent to do so than I. However, if the Inuit and the Crees—and if I understood you correctly, Senator McElman, this is what you meant—deprived themselves of some rights under this agreement, and they did so voluntarily, then surely that is entirely up to them. If you are referring to third parties who are not party to the agreement, the amendment, to my mind, is not clear. The term "minority" will have to be defined in each case.

Senator Perrault: I wonder if I might put a question to Senator McElman. Is the honourable senator aware that the contacts between the minister responsible for this legislation in the other place and the Province of Quebec—and I understand that those contacts took place on four occasions—were primarily the result of requests by members of the other place and the Senate committee? However, the minister has expressed the view that he considers that aboriginal rights are adequately protected by the present agreement. I understand that he undertook these contacts with Quebec in order to ascertain whether additional amendments could be made primarily to reassure certain parliamentarians. As honourable senators are aware, these contacts were made at the expressed request of certain members of the other place and the Senate committee.

Senator Grosart: Is that bad?

Senator Perrault: It is not bad, no. I mention that just by way of clarification.

Senator Flynn: He said he was in agreement with the amendment.

Hon. Royce Frith: Honourable senators, I should like to thank Senator Smith (Colchester) for his obvious understanding of, and sensitivity to, the views and what appear to be strong feelings of all honourable senators, in allowing a few interventions before he adjourns the debate.

I should like to make two points, and I do so as still the "new boy" in this chamber. The first point is that I hope, when we vote on this amendment, we will not be put in the position—and I know Senator McElman is not trying to put us in this position—of saying that if one votes against the amendment, one does not give a damn about minority rights, and if one does care about minority rights, then one should vote for the amendment. Having listened to the debate, I do not perceive that as being the issue before us.

I should like to express a question that I put last week. For me, the question is whether or not we are talking about the extinguishment of rights of persons who were never given the opportunity to advance those rights, or whether we are talking about the extinguishment of rights which existed but which were not exercised or put forward.

I asked that question of the sponsor of the amendment, and I was referred to earlier debate and proceedings before the committee, as well as a portion of the agreement. Having looked at those references, I do not feel that my question is answered. It seems to me that if we are talking about someone who has rights and that individual is told of his rights and is given the opportunity to exercise those rights and declines to do so, then that individual has no legitimate complaint if suddenly, after the agreement is signed by the parties, he wants protection for his rights. That individual is in a much different position than is someone who was never told of his rights, or given an opportunity to exercise his rights and is suddenly having his rights extinguished.

If a person has certain claims or rights, and if I notify him that he has those claims or rights and he declines to exercise them, then I simply turn and negotiate with those who do wish to exercise their rights, make my agreement and make as a part of that agreement that the person who did not exercise his rights will have his rights extinguished. In those circumstances it does not seem to me that the individual having his rights extinguished has any legitimate complaint. If, on the other hand—

Senator Flynn: That is new.

Senator Frith: If, on the other hand, he always had certain rights, and I never told him that he had those rights and I tried to extinguish them, he has a legitimate complaint. That issue, from what I have read and listened to, has not been dealt with.

Senator Flynn: That's some new legal theory.

Senator Frith: It is not new legal theory. It is as old-as-the-hills legal theory. If, for example, in legal theory—I was about to sit down, but I must deal with the intervention.

Senator Flynn: You might as well.

Senator Frith: If as a matter of legal theory, to use my learned friend's expression, I bring an action against Senators Flynn, Grosart and Marchand and I notify all three that I am suing them, with the result that Senators Marchand and Grosart decide to defend, and Senator Flynn decides not to defend—

Senator Flynn: That is not the same thing at all.

Senator Frith: If Senator Flynn does not wish to exercise his right to defend, and then when the judgment is being signed he comes in and says, "Wait a minute, I do not want my rights extinguished," it seems to me that it is perfectly just, perfectly legal, perfectly traditional, and not new legal theory, to say, "You had your chance and you did not exercise it."

That is what I have not heard, and what I would like to hear—

Senator Flynn: The comparison is entirely wrong.

Senator Frith: —is whether that is the case; in other words, whether this 1,200, this 600, had their chance and did not take advantage of the opportunity to have their rights protected. If the sponsor of the amendment can satisfy the Senate that those individuals had their rights foreclosed, that they were never given the opportunity to advance their rights, or that they advanced their rights and they are now being foreclosed, then I will certainly vote in favour of the amendment. But I have not heard evidence of that to date.

Senator Grosart: As Senator Frith directed the original question to me and did not receive a satisfactory answer, perhaps I can try to help him by saying that the question was not whether this minority of minorities had the opportunity to exercise their rights and didn't. The point is they took the position that they would not sign this agreement. If a director of a company, for example, took the position that he did not wish to sign an agreement which was being entered into by the other directors of that company, surely that director would have certain rights. Surely it would not be an untenable position for that individual to take that the agreement being entered into should not take away any rights he might have. That, surely, is the point here.

Senator Marchand: It happens all the time.

Senator Grosart: It happens all the time, as Senator Marchand said, but in a different context. Of course, it happens all the time, but the very fact that this minority of minorities did not sign the agreement—and that cannot possibly be Senator Frith's argument—surely, the point cannot be that they did not sign the agreement. Perhaps they did not know about it, perhaps they did not care, or perhaps they were notified but said, "We do not agree with those others; we don't agree with the 90 per cent; we do not want to sign the agreement and we won't sign the agreement," but does that extinguish their rights? Surely that is not the argument.

● (2140)

Senator Frith: There are tremendous differences as to what those circumstances are. There is all the difference in the world. If they said, "We don't want to sign the agreement; we don't want to have anything to do with it," then that is one set of facts. If they said, "We won't sign the agreement because nobody told us about it," that is another set of facts. Surely the issue is not just a question of saying, "We did not want to sign the agreement, and it does not matter why." Certainly it matters why. At least, with respect, it matters to me and it will have a big effect on my vote, small though that might be.

Senator Flynn: I will give you a private opinion, if you like.

Senator Forsey: Do you say that on the evidence the kind of facts that you talk about did prevail? Were these people notified? Did they refuse to take any action? It seems to me that the onus of proof rests rather with the Honourable Senator Frith than with the proposer of the amendment.

Senator Frith: It is exactly the contrary, and it is sadly the contrary. The onus of proof—and I am asking for it—is on those who say, "Gentlemen, you are about to extinguish important minority rights." Surely the onus of proof is on those who say we are going to extinguish them to prove that we are in fact extinguishing rights that were advanced and were extinguished, as distinguished from rights that people said they did not want to advance. The onus is clearly on the proposer of the amendment who is trying to tell us that if we do not support the amendment we are extinguishing rights. What Senator Forsey said is as different as black is from white. The onus is on the proposer of the amendment.

Senator Grosart: We are not suggesting anything of the kind. The amendment merely seeks to assure them the right to compensation. I doubt if the honourable senator has read the amendment. It merely asks the Senate to state that if their rights are extinguished, as the bill would extinguish them, then they are entitled to compensation in law. That is all the amendment says. It does not say that we refuse to recognize the treaty, the agreement or anything else; it merely says if their rights are extinguished in the bill, all claims of all Crees, all Inuit—and that is the wording, "all"—are extinguished. Claims, rights, title, interest—they are all gone. The amendment merely says that in that case, if the basis of any claim they might have is extinguished, then the Senate says they should be entitled to compensation, and that is all the amendment says.

Senator Denis: Honourable senators, you are going to protect the minority of minorities. May I read clause 4 of the bill? It says:

(1) Subject to sections 5 and 6, the Governor in Council may, by order, approve, give effect to and declare valid

(a) any supplementary agreement to which the Government of Canada is a party that is intended to alter, revoke, replace or add to the Agreement; or

(b) any agreement to which the Government of Canada is a party with the Naskapi Indians of Schefferville, Quebec, or with any other Indians or Inuit or groups thereof, concerning the native claims, rights, title and interests that such Indians, Inuit or groups thereof may have had in and to the Territory prior to the coming into force of this Act.

So the minority of the minorities is protected by that clause.

Senator Grosart: We do not dispute that clause at all.

Hon. J. J. Greene: Honourable senators, first of all, I would like to thank Senator Smith for his courtesy in giving time to others of us who might have a point or two and who might wish to participate in this debate.

I think one thing that has come very effectively and happily out of the debate is that this is not a question of white hats and black hats. The proponents on both sides of the question on Senator Flynn's amendment are concerned with minority rights, so there are no good guys and no bad guys in this thing. There is one danger which gives me concern about Senator Flynn's amendment, and that is that the relationship between the executive and legislative processes is a sensitive one, and I think we who are part of the legislative process of Parliament have the duty of carefully screening and reviewing legislative action and executive action. But we also have a duty of seeing to it that the process of democracy, as we know it, works. Our intent should not be to prevent the process from working.

It seems to me that on the one hand we have an agreement, voluntarily arrived at, which protects the minority rights of a considerable minority. Senator Flynn's amendment, I respectfully suggest, has the effect of saying, and setting this precedent, that if at any time an agreement is reached which is the best that can be reached between various levels of government and minority groups, then we should never act if there is any possibility that any other minority—minority group—or sub-minority group, call it what you like—might not have been included. If that be the principle which is inherent in this amendment then it has the effect of totally blocking any action by any government at any time if there might be some minority which perhaps at some time should be heard and has not yet been heard.

As a precedent, I think it has a very grave danger of preventing any action. There are always people who are not heard. Not everyone has a spokesman or an organization or a voice to be heard, and certainly from time to time we in the Senate should see to it that those minorities are heard and their views considered before we make decisions. But we should not say that we should never make a decision unless every possible minority has first been heard and considered. If that is the gist of the amendment, then I suggest it precludes not only any future executive action but any effective parliamentary result in the future.

I think we have considered minority groups, and both the government and the other place have considered the eventuality of sub-minority groups, if you like. But there does come a time to make a decision, and the decision is in favour of the minority groups, which are the majority-minority groups, if you like, which have been heard from. I do not think we serve minority groups or their interests well by blocking their rights, because at some time some other possible, unknown, un-named, unheard-of-in-the amendment minority group might want to have something to say. So, in the interests of effective and efficient parliamentary government, honourable senators, I respectfully submit that the time has come to toll the bells and let the roll be called on this very important issue.

● (2150)

Senator McElman: Honourable senators, I rise only to clear away a doubt raised by Senator Frith in his remarks. I refer to his possible interpretation of my remarks that if someone voted against the amendment, I might feel he had no interest in minorities. Let me say that I respect the views and opinions of all honourable senators, whether I agree with them or not, and I would hope that the same might be accorded to any of my remarks and opinions, misguided or otherwise as they may be.

Senator Goldenberg: Honourable senators, I just want to answer a question asked by Senator Forsey and by Senator Frith.

Senator Flynn: Of you?

Senator Goldenberg: That is as to the opportunity afforded to the non-signatories to participate. The evidence before the committee was that they were visited by leaders of the Inuit and were asked to participate in the negotiations, but that they refused to do so.

Senator Flynn: Because they did not want to cede their rights.

Senator Goldenberg: I am just saying that this is what we were told. They refused to participate.

Senator Flynn: They did not want to sign.

Senator McElman: May I ask the honourable senator whether they were visited by representatives of the Government of Canada?

Senator Goldenberg: No, they were visited by representatives of the Inuit and of the Cree who were negotiating and who asked them to participate in the negotiations. For some reason or other they refused.

Senator Flynn: They refused.

Senator Goldenberg: This is before the agreement was negotiated and signed.

Senator Forsey: Would the honourable senator permit me to ask him a question in response to what he said? Is asking them whether they wish to participate quite the same thing as the question I raised? Surely, he would agree that if I am asked to participate in some agreement and I say no, presumably because I have no confidence in the people who are negotiating the agreement or proposing to negotiate it, I am not thereby giving up my rights. I am merely saying, "I don't propose to participate in this agreement." It seems to me monstrous to suggest that because I say, "I don't propose to participate in certain negotiations," therefore I lose all my rights. I never heard such stuff in my life.

Senator Goldenberg: I did not say that they refused to participate in the agreement. They were asked to participate in the negotiations which were going to lead to an agreement, and they refused to participate in the negotiations.

Senator Forsey: Precisely.

Senator Goldenberg: And had they participated in the negotiations they might well have prevented the inclusion of some clauses in the agreement.

Senator Flynn: Oh, no.

Senator Forsey: I said it was to participate in the negotiations. If I said, "participate in the agreement," it was a slip of the tongue, but I corrected myself immediately. I understand the honourable senator to say now that they refused to participate in the negotiations. I repeat my question to him: Does he think that that is the same thing as signing away all rights in the matter?

If I refuse to take part in some negotiations which, let us say, Senator Flynn is conducting, I do not by that refusal deprive myself of all my rights. Surely, it is preposterous to make a claim of that sort.

Senator Goldenberg: I am sorry, Senator Forsey, but all that I said—and I was answering your question and the question by Senator Frith—all that I said was that witnesses before the committee said that they visited these people and they refused to negotiate. I did not go any further. I said nothing about extinguishing rights. I was merely answering by way of reporting what happened before the committee.

Senator Forsey: The extinguishing of rights is surely the nub of the amendment, and therefore the explanation which the honourable senator has given, with great respect, is totally irrelevant to the amendment.

Senator Williams: Honourable senators, I should like to ask my colleague Senator Goldenberg whether these Crees and Inuit he has referred to were involved with or were part of that group who live in that huge area covered by the agreement. That area is 400,000 square miles—almost the total area of the province of British Columbia. Were these two groups part of those who were involved in the agreement?

Senator Flynn: Yes, sure.

Senator Williams: Or were they outside of the area?

Senator Goldenberg: No, they were the parties who were going to negotiate the agreement.

Senator Flynn: They were in the territory.

Senator Goldenberg: They were inside the territory. Moreover, the witnesses added that they even went to see some of those who had only a peripheral interest, because they were not established in the territory, and they refused.

Senator Williams: Honourable senators, the first speaker this evening referred several times to reserve lands. Reserve land means precisely what it says—reserved. If I recall the wording properly, it is: "Reserved in Her Majesty's Crown for the use and benefit of the Indian people." This particular area, this large area of 400,000 square miles, is not reserve lands. That is why when I spoke I referred to it as the domain of those who live therein. I think it is wrong to refer to it as reserve lands, because it is not reserve lands in accordance with the Indian Act.

One of these statements reminds me of the great White Father image. He says, "We know what you want. We will give it to you. That is what the agreement is about."

Senator Thompson: Honourable senators, in terms of what Senator Frith and Senator Goldenberg have said with respect to the suggestion that if people are asked if they want to negotiate that then surely covers the obligation from the point of view of what happens after, I wonder if I could ask Senator Goldenberg to clarify a point for me. When these representatives he referred to went out to talk with the people who had been involved, and some of them said they did not want to come into the negotiations, were they then informed that if they did not come into the negotiations they would lose their rights?

Senator Grosart: A good question.

Senator Goldenberg: Well, senator, I was not present when the Crees and the Inuit met the others who refused to participate.

Senator Thompson: Surely, that is the nub of the point. Why raise the point that they were asked to negotiate, unless we know the answer to that question?

Senator Goldenberg: I do not think that at that time there was any discussion of the extinguishment of rights. They said, "We are negotiating with the Government of Canada; we are negotiating with the Government of Quebec; join us in the negotiations." That is how I interpreted the evidence before the committee. They said, "Join us in the negotiations."

Senator Thompson: Then does not the fact that they did not join in the negotiations really suggest to us that we should be particularly on guard, by means of this amendment, to see that they do not lose their rights?

Senator Marchand: Well, they knew their rights would be affected.

Senator Thompson: Why do you say that they knew their rights would be affected?

• (2200)

Senator Marchand: Do you think that when an agreement is signed and only 20 per cent of the members are present, that the others do not know that their rights will be affected? They know.

Senator Thompson: They know they will lose some rights?

Senator Flynn: There is a difference between civil rights and labour laws. If the honourable senator knows anything, it is labour law. But there is more to this than just labour law. He can't expect us to extend the principles behind labour laws to every other walk of life.

Senator Marchand: A principle is a principle.

Senator Frith: I rise on what I suppose could be a point of privilege, to make it clear for the record that my comments about minority rights, and Senator McElman's intervention, was clearly to say that that was not what he was suggesting, namely, that if you voted against the amendment you did not care about minority rights. Quite the contrary. I said that is not the kind of thing he would ever do. I wanted to make it clear, arising from the intervention of Senator Greene, that we were all agreed that we do not want to shirk our duty in protecting minority rights. The issue before us is our opinion on whether or not we are unjustly doing so.

Senator Neiman: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of privilege and perhaps information. I refer honourable senators to the first hearing of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, when we heard testimony from native groups that are not signatories to this agreement. An explanation given by Mr. Narvey, consultant to the Canadian Association in Support of the Native Peoples, at page 75 of the report of the first proceedings, might be of interest to Senator Frith. In reply to a point raised by Senator Goldenberg, Mr. Narvey said:

The Montagnais of Schefferville were invited to negotiate and refused. The recent ex-president of the conseil Attikamek-Montagnais, Mr. Aurélien Gill, repeated to me on the 'phone the other day what had been said before. The Montagnais are against the concept of the extinguishment of rights.

It appears quite obvious that it was at least made known to them at that time that their rights would be extinguished. There is also an explanation on page 75 as to why the other groups did not become party to the agreement.

Senator Lang: May I trespass further on the question of order and ask Senator Goldenberg another question? When we are talking about rights here, are we talking about rights that are collectively owned by Inuits and Eskimos, or are they a group of individual rights belonging to individual persons? Here we are getting to the nub of the question. I do not know enough about what may be the laws and customs of Inuits or Eskimos to be able to define these rights. It seems to me that if they are collective rights, perhaps the majority of Inuits should be able to bind all Inuits and the majority of Crees should be able to bind all Crees. However, are they individual rights that belong to each individual Cree and Inuit?

Senator Grosart: What about your own human rights?

Senator Lang: I don't know whether these are human rights or whether we are talking about territorial imperative, and whether the territorial imperative is collective or individual.

Senator Flynn: That would require a lecture.

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, I should like to ask Senator Flynn a question concerning the 1,200 natives who did not take part in the negotiations. If the honourable senator's amendment carried and, let us say, the chiefs and the Governments of Canada and Quebec tried to approach those 1,200 people but only 500 or 600 of them were willing to sit down and negotiate, and the balance of them, some 600 or 700, remained indifferent or took the same approach that the 1,200 took initially, what would be his position? Would he feel that the minority rights would not be protected or that the bill should not pass because the negotiations did not include the 600 or 700 natives who would not participate in them?

Senator Flynn: I do not think that question is really one of immediate concern. I will give the honourable senator an example. If I decided, as Parliament, to expropriate a large territory and I were able to find a certain number of people having rights of property of some kind in that territory, I would pay them. I would then offer to pay all those who might have rights and could establish them, either on the same or on an equivalent basis. I would be obliged to pay only those who presented a claim.

Here the situation is such that those who have signed have said, "We are transferring to you only our rights." But in the agreement the Government of Quebec asked Parliament to declare that all the rights of all Indian and Inuit, whether a party to the agreement or not, are extinguished. That is the difference. I can cede to you my rights, but I cannot cede to you the rights of the honourable senator sitting next to me. Parliament, which is sovereign, can do that, however; but normally it never does so without providing that those whose rights are extinguished are entitled to compensation for the loss of those rights.

That is the only thing that the amendment does. It does not create or recognize any right. It says only that the extinguishment of the rights of those who are not party to the agreement or represented by a party to the agreement are subject to compensation if they can establish a claim. That is very simple; not difficult at all to understand, if you put your mind to it.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, I now move the adjournment of this debate. I think I am greatly rewarded for not having done so before because of the warm and enlightened discussion which has gone on since that time.

On motion of Senator Smith (Colchester), debate adjourned.

AUDITOR GENERAL BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Augustus Irvine Barrow moved the second reading of Bill C-20, respecting the office of the Auditor General of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto.

He said: Honourable senators, I should like to make a few remarks on Bill C-20, respecting the office of the Auditor General of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto, which was passed by the House of Commons on June 29.

• (2210)

I should like to acquaint honourable senators with some of the background which has led to the preparation of this legislation, the need for which has been acknowledged by all parties for some time. Indeed, I understand a draft bill was prepared in 1973 on behalf of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, and was accepted in draft form by the former Auditor General, Mr. Maxwell Henderson. This draft legislation dealt mainly with changes to the administrative relationships that exist between the office of the Auditor General and the central agencies of the federal public service. It was not published, since its completion coincided with the appointment of the present Auditor General, Mr. J. J. Macdonell.

On taking office, Mr. Macdonell felt that an independent study of the responsibilities of the Auditor General was required and therefore, on October 30, 1973, he announced to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts that, in consultation with the chairman and vice-chairman of that committee, he had established an independent committee for the review of the office of the Auditor General of Canada. This committee was chaired by the late Mr. J. R. M. Wilson, F.C.A., and the members of his committee were Mr. Marcel Belanger, C.A., and Mr. Lorne Campbell, Q.C.

The committee was directed to "inquire into and report upon what should be the responsibilities, relationships with government departments and agencies, and reporting procedures of the office of the Auditor General, and what should be the statutory and other requirements to ensure that he can meet such responsibilities with the necessary degree of independence."

Mr. Macdonell acknowledged that the establishment of such a committee would delay the consideration of the draft legislation that had been acceptable to his predecessor, but he stated that the work to be undertaken would, in his opinion, complement the valuable work already completed.

The report of the independent review committee on the office of the Auditor General of Canada was tabled in the House of Commons on April 14, 1975.

After intensive study by an interdepartmental committee of officials, and following full consultation with the Auditor General, the cabinet instructed the Department of Justice to frame the draft legislation, which was presented to the House of Commons and referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts for study. The President of the Treasury Board met with that committee during their deliberations on the bill, which received the full support of the Auditor General. The committee recommended certain housekeeping amendments in their report to the house dated June 15, 1977.

This proposed legislation addresses two basic issues concerning the office of the Auditor General: first, the independence of that office, and, secondly, the scope or extent of the audit to be performed.

Since the Auditor General is a servant of Parliament, the independence of his office must be maintained. The proposed legislation reinforces this independence in its provisions concerning the salary of the Auditor General and in the new identification of his office as a "separate employer". Under the terms of this proposal, the Auditor General would be authorized to exercise the personnel management function of the Treasury Board, which includes establishing the terms and conditions of employment as well as the classification standards that the Auditor General considers appropriate for the employees of his office.

The proposed legislation would also authorize the Auditor General to contract for whatever professional services he may consider necessary to fulfill his responsibilities, without the prior approval of the Treasury Board and, in order that he may use the resources provided to him as he considers best, this proposed legislation exempts the office of the Auditor General of Canada from the allotment control provisions of section 24 of the Financial Administration Act.

In addition, should an Auditor General ever feel that the amounts provided for his office in the estimates are not sufficient for him to fulfill properly the responsibilities of his office, he will be empowered to place a special report before the House of Commons for its consideration. Indeed, this legislation empowers the Auditor General to make a special report to the House of Commons at any time on any matter of importance or urgency, consideration of which he feels should not be delayed until the publication of his annual report to Parliament.

In keeping with the recommendations of the independent review committee, an important modification to the previous legislation enables the Governor in Council only to request, but not require, the services of the Auditor General for special investigations or studies. It is proposed that the Auditor General should be able to decline such special assignments if he should feel that they would interfere in any way with the proper fulfillment of his statutory responsibilities.

This new legislation also clarifies the scope of the Auditor General's audit and reporting responsibilities. In particular, I feel that honourable senators will be pleased to note that the legislation incorporates the "value of money concept" advanced in the independent review committee's report. This is contained in subclauses 7(2) (d) and (e) of this legislation. I am pleased to inform senators that the wording of these subclauses was reviewed and approved by both the Auditor General and the late Mr. Wilson, and they both agreed that it supports the intent of the recommendations made by the independent review committee and the responsibilities which that committee recommended should be fulfilled by the Auditor General of Canada. Similarly, both the Auditor General and Mr. Wilson approved the wording of subclause 13(1) of this legislation, which covers the important issue of the Auditor General's access to information that relates to the proper fulfillment of his responsibilities.

Recommendation 15 of the independent review committee's report stated that "the Auditor General should audit the financial accounts of all crown corporations whose expenditures directly affect the budgetary accounts of Canada." Section 67(2) of Part VIII of the Financial Administration Act, which deals with crown corporations, states that "the Auditor General is eligible to be appointed the auditor, or a joint auditor, of a crown corporation."

After study, it was agreed by the Auditor General that the operational advantages which can accrue to the crown corporations through the appointment of private sector auditors should be retained, and also that the provisions of section 67(2) obviate the need for new Auditor General legislation to contain any specific reference to his eligibility to be appointed as the auditor of a crown corporation. One of the advantages of the existing legislation is that the rotation of the private sector auditors of such corporations could be undertaken without the loss of audit continuity in those instances where the Auditor General of Canada has been appointed to the position of joint auditor of the particular crown corporation.

As I have indicated throughout my remarks, the Auditor General was fully consulted in the preparation of this legislation, and I am pleased to inform the Senate that he has stated that it reflects the essence of the independent review committee's recommendations. I am confident that following their review, all honourable senators will be satisfied with the manner in which this proposed legislation addresses this most important function. Accordingly, I must commend the members of the independent review committee for having so clearly identified the salient issues of this function, and for their guidance and recommendations which address those issues.

I feel sure that all members of this house will wish me to express to the family of the late Jack Wilson our most sincere appreciation for the service that he, together with his colleagues, rendered to Parliament by providing the comprehensive report and sound recommendations which form the basis of this legislation. It is unfortunate that he did not live to see it enacted.

Honourable senators, in moving the second reading of Bill C-20, respecting the office of the Auditor General of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto, I commend it to your favourable consideration.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, July 5, 1977

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of the Unemployment Insurance Commission for the year ended December 31, 1976, pursuant to section 130(2) of the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, Chapter 48, Statutes of Canada, 1970-71-72.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Senator Goldenberg, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-25, to extend the present laws in Canada that proscribe discrimination and that protect the privacy of individuals, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Goldenberg moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit while the Senate is sitting tomorrow, Wednesday, July 6, 1977, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Flynn: Would the deputy leader explain why the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce intends to sit tomorrow afternoon? I was not notified that it was sitting tomorrow morning, and I am wondering why this permission is being sought.

Senator Langlois: My information is that notices have been sent out about a meeting tomorrow morning. At any rate, this meeting was announced last Thursday in the house on the adjournment motion, as usual.

Senator Flynn: Agreed, but without a notice it is very difficult to understand why permission is asked to sit while the Senate is sitting tomorrow.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I do not think I have to elaborate on the very heavy burden imposed on that committee due to legislation presently before this house. If we want to get out of this place before the fall season sets in we will have to get our committees working. This is the purpose. I regret that we have to do that, but due to the pressure of business I think it is a must. We have no choice.

● (2010)

Senator Flynn: That was not my question. I was merely asking if the committee is sitting tomorrow and, if so, what the agenda is.

Senator Langlois: I simply wanted to explain.

Senator Flynn: You explain, but you rarely reply to the question.

Senator Langlois: The motion speaks for itself.

Senator Perrault: Most eloquently.

Senator Flynn: As I say, I am a member of that committee, but I did not get any notice that it would be sitting tomorrow afternoon. I would like to know why.

Senator Langlois: I am told that the notice has been distributed.

Senator Flynn: That's fine. But if you didn't know before just being told now, why didn't you simply say you didn't know?

Senator Langlois: I am not a member of the committee.

Motion agreed to.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

LOANS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, on Monday, June 13, 1977, the Honourable Senator Desruisseaux asked the following question:

(1) How much, on what dates, at what interest rates, and for how long, has Canada loaned, advanced, and transferred money as foreign aid or help or for whatever reasons, from January 1, 1945, to December 31, 1976, to what foreign countries?

(2) How much of it has been repaid by what countries and on what dates during the same period?

(3) How much has been written off or erased without payment, on what dates, for what countries, during the same period, and for what reason?

(4) On what authority have such write-offs been given?

Honourable senators, I have a rather extensive partial answer to this question this evening. In view of its length I would ask leave of the Senate to have the reply printed in today's Hansard. The reply is extremely detailed, covering a dozen or so statistical pages.

Senator Flynn: The Leader of the Government would have leave under the new rules that will come into force with the next session. We certainly will not be faced with this same problem from then on.

Senator Perrault: In the other place this reply would certainly be presented in written form. I agree that the new rules here will certainly be an improvement.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of answer see Appendix, page 1077.)

Senator Desruisseaux: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government whether the answer he has provided is complete, that there is no other answer forthcoming?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it would appear that the reply relates to the CIDA portion of our foreign aid program, and I would hope that in the near future we can obtain more extensive information.

Senator Desruisseaux: I think that information would be important, because of the statements made in the press on May 31 about Canada cancelling some of these programs, a proceeding which could involve an amount of some $10 billion.

Senator Perrault: I felt I should bring to the Senate the information available up to this time, and it is my hope that more information can be provided at a later date.

Senator Desruisseaux: Thank you.

NATIONAL GALLERY OF CANADA

ORIGINAL PAINTINGS—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, on Thursday, May 12, Senator Godfrey asked for the following information:

1. How many original paintings are owned by the National Gallery of Canada?
2. How many of those paintings are being presently exhibited at the premises of the National Gallery?
3. How many of those paintings are presently being exhibited or hung in other federal government premises?
4. How many of those paintings are presently being exhibited in places other than the National Gallery or federal government premises?

5. How many of those paintings are presently not being exhibited or hung anywhere?

6. How many of those paintings are presently being restored or are awaiting restoration?

The answers are as follows:

1. Original paintings—2,761.
2. Paintings exhibited at the National Gallery—513.
3. Paintings in other federal government premises—145.
4. Paintings on loan—75.
5. Paintings in storage—2,028 (including those mentioned in 6).
6. Paintings awaiting restoration—22.

JAMES BAY AND NORTHERN QUEBEC NATIVE CLAIMS SETTLEMENT BILL

MOTION FOR THIRD READING—MOTION IN AMENDMENT— DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion in amendment of Senator Flynn to the motion of Senator Bourget for the third reading of Bill C-9, to approve, give effect to and declare valid certain agreements between the Grand Council of the Crees (of Quebec), the Northern Quebec Inuit Association, the Government of Quebec, la Société d'énergie de la Baie James, la Société de développement de la Baie James, la Commission hydro-électrique de Québec and the Government of Canada and certain other related agreements to which the Government of Canada is a party.

Hon. George I. Smith: Honourable senators, it seemed to me that I heard a shout of "carried" when this order was called. If that related to the amendment, I will be glad to spare the Senate the time necessary to consume the wisdom I was about to dispense. If, however, the cry was only intended to indicate that I might as well sit down, that would be a challenge to stand up for quite some time.

Honourable senators, this is a debate which has been going on for some time. It has engendered some warmth, and certainly in the early stages, especially during the speech of the Leader of the Opposition, it must have shed a great deal of light. I am not sure whether my efforts in this respect will be very helpful, or not. In any event, I am optimistic enough to think that they might serve some useful purpose.

I should like to congratulate those rather numerous participants in the debate who have preceded me and hope that I will be able to live up to their liveliness, if not to their wisdom. I would like to begin by taking a very short time to set before us all once more the general circumstances in which we find ourselves and in which we must consider what to do about the bill and the amendment before us. I do this because it seems to me that, perhaps, in the lively discussions and skirmishes which have taken place recently in this matter the general history of the facts and circumstances may have slipped a little from that vividness in our memory which we would like them to have.

It will be recalled, I am sure, that as the minister responsible said in the other place on December 7, 1976, which now is somewhat more than six months ago, this particular aspect of the problem began away back in 1971. In that year the Province of Quebec announced its intention to develop the energy resources of and in the territory covered by the provisions of this bill. This announcement was not accompanied by any indication whatever that the rights of the native peoples in the area were to be taken into serious account. However, expressions of concern about their land rights were put forward by the Crees who lived in the area, or some of them. This led to periodic meetings between officials of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, representatives of the Province of Quebec and representatives of the Crees. During the next two years—I emphasize this lapse of two years—no satisfactory arrangements had been reached between the parties. Thereupon, the Indians and the Inuit brought an action in the Superior Court of Quebec asking for an interim injunction to halt the project which had been announced and which, indeed, was then under way. In November of 1973 a judge of the Quebec Superior Court granted that application, but shortly thereafter, indeed with unusual speed, the Quebec Court of Appeal reversed that decision. This reversal had the effect of allowing the project to go ahead though, of course, the matter could have been carried to the Supreme Court of Canada, as no doubt all the parties were well aware. Following these court proceedings and shortly after, in January 1974, the Government of Quebec made a proposal. The terms of this announcement or proposal were considered by the Crees and the Inuit as containing a basis on which negotiations might proceed, and they did not carry on further with the litigation which they had begun.

About this time the federal government became more intimately associated with the negotiations, no doubt in order to assist in making sure that the position of the Indians and the Inuit was more substantially supported. An agreement in principle was reached in November, 1974. A year later the final agreement was signed after detailed negotiations involving the two governments, the Crees and the Inuit, as well as the various agencies of the Government of Quebec mentioned in the agreement which we now have before us as the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement, which this bill is intended to validate.

● (2020)

According to the minister the land area covered by the agreement, and therefore by the bill, is about 410,000 square miles, which is a very large slice of territory. In fact, it is about 60 per cent of the total area of Quebec, and nearly as large as the total area of Ontario. The area appears to have a population of about 20,000 people, including some 6,000 Crees and 4,000 Inuit, and to use the minister's words, "is rich in wildlife, forest and mineral resources."

It will be seen that there are probably as many people living in the territory who are not party to this agreement as the 10,000 Inuit and Crees who are parties to it. It will be noted that the agreement and the legislation does not purport to apply to any people except Indians and Inuit of whom there are said to be about or perhaps over 12,000. Incidentally, there seems to be a good deal of uncertainty about exact numbers in this whole problem, but looking at the various figures that have been given in the other place, in the committee proceedings there, before the Senate committee and in this debate, it would seem reasonable to believe that there are somewhere in the vicinity of 1,600 who did not sign the agreement, but to whom the agreement purports to apply.

One of the particularly relevant sections of the agreement is 2.14, which reads:

Quebec undertakes to negotiate with other Indians or Inuit who are not entitled to participate in the compensation and benefits of the present Agreement, in respect to any claims which such Indians or Inuit may have with respect to the Territory.

Notwithstanding the undertakings of the preceding subparagraph, nothing in the present paragraph shall be deemed to constitute a recognition, by Canada or Quebec, in any manner whatsoever, of any rights of such Indians or Inuit.

Nothing in this paragraph shall affect the obligations, if any, that Canada may have with respect to claims of such Native persons with respect to the Territory.

Then it ends up with the somewhat surprising statement that:

This paragraph shall not be enacted into law.

The amendment put forward by the Leader of the Opposition deals only with people who did not sign the agreement either directly or by any authorized representatives, and to whom I shall refer hereafter as non-signatories. It may be remembered that I indicated there were probably something in the vicinity of 1,600 of these human beings who are bound if this legislation passes, but who did not sign the agreement.

It will be noted that the above section of the agreement, the one I have just read, binds Quebec to negotiate with the non-signatories about any claims which they may have with respect to the territory, but does not bind Quebec to pay any compensation in respect thereof.

As is stated in the preamble to the bill, its intent is to approve the agreement, give effect to the agreement, declare the agreement to be valid, and to extinguish all native claims of all Indians and Inuit in and to the Territory; that is, it purports to extinguish the native claims, not only of the people who signed the agreement but of the non-signatories.

At this point I think I should draw the attention of the Senate to two other provisions of the agreement, both of which, I believe, have been mentioned in previous discussions. The first is section 2.5 which, among other things, provides as follows:

Canada and Quebec undertake that the legislation which will be so recommended—

Meaning recommended by the two governments.

—will not impair—

And these are the words to which I particularly want to draw attention.

—will not impair the substance of the rights, undertakings and obligations provided for in the Agreement.

I think those words are of particular significance. They have played some part in some of the arguments presented already, and it is important to keep in mind exactly what they are:

... the legislation which will be so recommended will not impair the substance of the rights, undertakings and obligations provided for in the Agreement.

I emphasize "rights, undertakings and obligations."

The other section to which I wish to draw attention is section 2.6, which provides as follows:

The federal legislation approving, giving effect to and declaring valid the Agreement shall extinguish all native claims, rights, title and interests of all Indians and all Inuit in and to the Territory and the native claims, rights, title and interests of the Inuit of Port Burwell in Canada, whatever they may be.

That, of course, is the paragraph in the agreement on which is based clause 3(3) of the bill, which reads, in part:

(3) All native claims, rights, title and interests, whatever they may be, in and to the Territory, of all Indians and all Inuit, wherever they may be, are hereby extinguished—

So, we get to the place where we see it is clear that the Government of Canada agreed that the legislation it put forward to Parliament would contain a clause effectively extinguishing all native claims, rights, title and interests, whatever they may be, of all Indians and all Inuit in and to the Territory.

Remembering again, if you will, that this includes the approximately 1,600 non-signatories, we find ourselves faced with a situation in which all claims, rights, title and interests of all people, whether Indian or Inuit, who live in the area are extinguished.

● (2030)

There is another provision, of perhaps some interest but not central to the discussion, which is a portion of section 2.5. It provides that if there is any conflict between the legislation put forward as a result of the agreement and any other legislation of either Quebec or Canada that affects the territory, then the legislation now put forward will prevail. This, of course, means that if there should be a conflict between this legislation and the Indian Act, it is this legislation that prevails and not the Indian Act.

Perhaps you will bear with me if I simply repeat again that the words I read from the bill would extinguish the claims, rights, title and interests in and to the territory of all Indians and all Inuit whether or not they were signatories to the agreement. There have been some discussions as to the meaning of the word "extinguished." But, clearly, I think and submit, honourable senators, it simply has the ordinary everyday meaning that one would naturally attach to it—that is, any rights that all the Indians and Inuit in the territory have will cease to exist when the bill becomes law.

In the case of those who signed, this is extinguishment by agreement; but in the case of those who did not sign, it is extinguishment by compulsion. That is, it is clearly a compulsory taking of an interest in land, which, after all, is commonly called expropriation.

Senator Flynn: Despoliation.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Compulsory taking or expropriation is, of course, a procedure well known to all western countries. It is a double-barrelled concept, honourable senators. There is the concept of compulsory taking, and then the necessarily accompanying concept, namely, that of compulsory compensation to those from whom the lands or rights are taken. These two concepts go hand in hand, and I know of no western jurisprudence anywhere that provides for compulsory taking of an interest in land without at the same time providing for compulsory compensation.

A good example, one familiar to all of us really, of compulsory taking accompanied by the concept of compulsory compensation is found in the various expropriation acts that exist in Canada. In particular, I should like to draw attention to the federal Expropriation Act, chapter 16, 1st Supplement, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, as amended. The general concept of compulsory taking is set out in section 3, which reads quite simply:

Any interest in land, including any of the interests mentioned in section 5, that, in the opinion of the Minister, is required by the Crown for a public work or other public purpose may be expropriated by the Crown in accordance with the provisions of this Part.

Note, if you will, honourable senators, that the compulsory taking is not confined to actual lands but includes any interest in land, and particularly any interest in land mentioned in section 5 of the act; and there one of the interests is "easement, profit or servitude." That, I suggest, certainly includes hunting, fishing, trapping or any other use of land to which a right has been acquired by usage.

Remember, too, honourable senators, if you will, that under the federal Expropriation Act, as is the case similarly with all expropriation acts, the actual vesting in the Crown of whatever interest in land is taken occurs when a certain notice is registered in the registry of deeds where the land is situated. Section 13 provides:

Upon the registration of a notice of confirmation,

(a) the interest confirmed to be expropriated becomes and is absolutely vested in the Crown;

It further provides that any inconsistent right is thereby lost. In other words, such right is then extinguished, precisely as is the case in the bill now under discussion. But, honourable senators, note how the concept of extinguishing the right is followed immediately by the provisions as to compulsory compensation, for in the very next section the minister responsible is required to make an offer of compensation in writing, based on an appraisal and, of course, to make it to the person from whom the interest in land is taken. The sections which immediately follow then deal with the question of how the compensation is determined, if it cannot be determined by agreement.

Attention is also directed to section 23, subsection (1), which reads in part:

Compensation shall be paid by the Crown to each person who, immediately before the registration of a notice of confirmation, was the owner of a right, estate or interest in the land—

Thus I submit again that it is clear that the concept of compulsory taking goes hand in hand in the closest possible harmony with the concept of compulsory compensation. To put it another way, our law says that when the government takes an interest in land by compulsion, it is compelled to pay compensation and it is compelled to pay an amount which is either agreed upon by the parties as a fair amount or is determined by a proper tribunal to be a fair amount.

I say again that I know of no place whatever in the western world where there is a provision for compulsory taking under the law without a provision for compulsory compensation. But if this bill passes, honourable senators, we will have one such example. It will be observed, of course, that the bill deals with the rights of two groups of people. The first group are those who signed the agreement and by doing so they agreed that their rights could be extinguished in return for the compensation agreed to be paid. The other group are those with whom the amendment is concerned, and they are those who did not sign. The bill by compulsion takes away their rights but does not provide for compulsory compensation. Thus it seems to me to be perfectly clear that in respect of this second group the bill before us does not follow the completely accepted principle of fairness that where there is compulsory taking there must be compulsory compensation. These people must rely upon nothing but the undertaking of the Government of Quebec to negotiate—and to negotiate, mark you, after their rights are extinguished, not before.

● (2040)

It is one thing, honourable senators, to negotiate from the strength of possessing a right, or at least a claim to a right, as you negotiate. It is something else indeed to negotiate after all your negotiating rights have gone. To use the words of Mr. Narvey, one of the witnesses who appeared before the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, which will be found on page 1:74 of the proceedings of that committee for June 7, 1977:

—their rights are being taken away in advance of an agreement as to compensation.

Or to quote Mr. Narvey again, at page 1:76:

Their rights are extinguished, or the bill says so in any case. They then go to negotiate; the Government of Quebec is obligated to negotiate, but there is a fear that its negotiation will consist of saying, "We don't think you ever had any rights. And even if you did you certainly don't have any today."

Perhaps I should have said, by way of explanation, that Mr. Narvey is a consultant to the Canadian Association in Support of Native Peoples. I point out the words I have used are his words, not mine; but it does not seem unreasonable to believe that they probably represent the views of a good many of the people who are concerned in this matter and in respect of whom the amendment is aimed.

Let me ask how any one of us would like to find ourselves in the position of this group of non-signatories. Suppose, for instance, that one of us had an interest in land which the Government of Canada decided it would take by compulsion. Would we for one moment stand quietly in a position where that land could be taken by compulsion, leaving us to the mercy of negotiations for compensation without any compulsion upon the government to pay us anything? The public of Canada would not stand for it overnight if it affected one of us—unless perhaps they have not as much sympathy with senators as they have for the general citizens.

These people are precisely in that kind of situation, and that is the kind of situation we are being asked to approve for them—not for ourselves, but for them—in this bill.

I now invite the attention of honourable senators to the text of the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition:

Notwithstanding the extinguishment under subsection (3) of the native claims, rights, title and interests referred to therein, nothing in that subsection affects the right of any person or group of persons in Canada who was not a party to, or who was not represented by a party to, the Agreement to receive, in respect of any valid claim relating to the Territory, compensation on the same basis as it would have been accorded had such person or group of persons been entitled to participate in the compensation and benefits of the Agreement.

I wish to emphasize that this amendment, as I have read it—if honourable senators wish, I shall be glad to read it again and again—does not in any way attempt to cut down or prevent the extinguishing of the claims, rights, title and interests referred to in the bill. I repeat, it does not attempt to cut down those things in any way. It leaves the extinguishing subsection untouched. In other words, it simply says that extinguishing the claims, rights, title and interests does not extinguish the compensation if there was any right to compensation. It does not even say that the payment of fair compensation will be compulsory. It does not even go so far as to make the concept of compulsory compensation go hand in hand with the concept of compulsory taking or extinction.

It merely provides that the right to compensation is not extinguished in itself. To put it another way, the amendment merely seeks to preserve, in the case of non-signatories, the ordinary principles of fair play and fair treatment which I believe every honourable senator would insist upon for himself and any other citizen of Canada.

Let me turn for a moment to some of the arguments made against the amendment. I do not purport to deal with all of them, because that would take a very long time, and I suspect the patience of honourable senators would in due course begin to wear a little thin. However, I do want to deal with some of them.

One argument made against the amendment is that to adopt it would be contrary to the undertaking in the agreement which I read, that legislation introduced by Canada and Quebec must not impair the substance of the rights, undertakings and obligations provided for in the agreement. Indeed, at page 1011 of Debates of the Senate for June 28 the Leader of the Government said:

The proposed amendment goes beyond the agreement in purporting to impose additional obligations on one of the parties, namely the Province of Quebec.

With the greatest respect, I must and do take the most vigorous issue with any such argument. The agreement deals with that subject matter, in section 2.5, which in part reads as follows:

—legislation to approve, to give effect to and to declare valid the Agreement and to protect, safeguard and maintain the rights and obligations contained in the Agreement. Canada and Québec undertake that the legislation... will not impair the substance of the rights, undertakings and obligations provided for in the Agreement.

And I say as vigorously as I can that there is nothing in this amendment which in any way would impair the substance of the rights, impair the substance of the undertakings, or impair the substance of the obligations provided for in that agreement. It does not impair the substance of any right to the province of Quebec, any undertaking of the province of Quebec, or any obligation of the province of Quebec. It does not in any way prevent the extinction of the rights of all Inuit and Indians in the territory, including those who did not sign. It does not compel Quebec to pay compensation to non-signatories. It does not compel Quebec even to negotiate with non-signatories, because that obligation is already imposed by the agreement. I am unable to find in any way, then, that the provision contravenes the agreement in the slightest way, shape or form. It merely preserves, for these unhappy non-signatories, whatever negotiating strength they may have.

The Leader of the Government also said that any amendment that compels or has the effect of compelling the Province of Quebec to enlarge its undertaking is not acceptable. I say again, there is nothing in this amendment which in any way compels or would have the effect of compelling Quebec to enlarge its undertaking. Quebec gave an undertaking to negotiate with these people. There is nothing in this amendment to enlarge that or to enlarge any other provision with relation to Quebec.

Some argument, honourable senators, has been made that since negotiations are already going on with the Naskapi, who are not signatories to the agreement, that should be sufficient assurance to the others. But I must point out that these negotiations have begun before the passage of this bill and before the Naskapi rights have been extinguished, and have not yet been completed.

● (2050)

Considerable emphasis has been laid by various speakers upon the assertion by the Prime Minister of Quebec to the National Assembly of that province—

Senator Ewasew: Premier.

Senator Smith (Colchester): That is your choice of words. I did him the justice and the courtesy of following his own choice, but you may be right.

Some emphasis has been laid upon the assertion by the Prime Minister of Quebec to the National Assembly of that province that Quebec would negotiate in good faith, which I presume will mean negotiating with a view to paying fair compensation. If that be so, surely there could be no objection to an amendment which merely prevents the extinguishment of the right to compensation if any such right exists.

Senator Robichaud, in his very eloquent address last evening, as reported at page 1039 of Hansard, drew attention to section 25.2.1 of the agreement, which appears on page 397 thereof, and which reads as follows:

The James Bay Crees and the Inuit of Quebec forever and absolutely renounce any and all claims, if any, past, present or future, against Quebec with respect to royalties, mining duties, taxes or equivalent or similar benefits and revenues, derived and resulting from development and exploitation in the Territory.

That is the full text of section 25.2.1. He said:

This is one of the terms of the agreement that the amendment, which was sought in all honesty by the Leader of the Opposition, would destroy.

Honourable senators, with the greatest respect, and with great reluctance, but nevertheless very strenuously, I must take issue with my very old and good friend Senator Robichaud. I submit to you that there is no way that anyone can show even a plausible argument that this amendment in any way destroys the effect or usefulness of that section.

If the bill passes, the rights, claims, title and interests of the non-signatories in relation to that section are extinguished, just the same as they are extinguished in every other particular. If they have any such rights, claims, title or interest, then by virtue of the agreement Quebec is compelled to negotiate with them to compensate them for their loss thereof. It is not the amendment which brings about the obligation of Quebec to negotiate but the agreement itself which does so.

Senator Robichaud also said that had Canada not agreed to the provisions included in the document we are discussing:

—the Crees and Inuit would have been left with undefined “aboriginal rights”, and would have been deprived of the specific benefits to be granted them under this agreement.

With respect, I have to say that I cannot accept this view, for it is based, if it is based upon anything, upon the premise that the native people could not have succeeded in the litigation which went as far as the Appeal Court in Quebec. It is true they lost there, but they won before the single judge of the Superior Court of Quebec, and might very well have won an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, as they knew and as the Government of Quebec knew.

I now turn to Senator Frith for a moment. I thought he enunciated last night a legal theory or legal doctrine which I found it very difficult to follow, and when I had an opportunity to read over again today what he said I found it even more difficult to understand. In effect, as I read it, and as anyone can read it in last night's proceedings, he was saying that if those who did not sign the agreement were aware that they had a chance or a right to sign it and did not do so, and were aware of any rights they had or might have, they were no longer entitled to complain or to sympathy. That was the effect of what he said. That is the first time I have ever heard a serious assertion made that if a person did not want to sell his land or a right in land and refused to sell, he could not expect any compensation when it was compulsorily taken away from him by a government.

Senator Frith's capacity to be generous to a government may be very great indeed, but really I would doubt if it extends to the proposition that if the Government of Canada offers to buy his land and he refuses to sell, the government can then take it without paying for it. I am sure he would recognize that the rights of native peoples to, in or over the lands in question are very serious and very important rights indeed—rights of ownership which, according to their way of life, are just as important to them as any European concept of ownership may be to us.

Let me ask him if he will be kind enough to listen to some extracts from a letter from the Inuit Community Council of Sugluk, dated April 15, 1977, addressed to Charlie Watt, President of the Northern Quebec Inuit Association, as read into the record of the proceedings before the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on June 7, 1977, and found at page 1:34. Here it is:

We cannot go on with the agreement... We cannot give up what power we have. We have been living here for ages and we cannot give up what our fathers worked so hard for. We just cannot sell our ways and life because this is all very valuable to us. We cannot exchange our land for money. We will not let this land go just for money.

Surely, honourable senators, that is as eloquent an expression of the pride in ownership and occupation of one's land as any of us would be likely to make in respect of our own. Do we mean now that, because the people of Sugluk may have refused to sell their land for money, any government can take it from them without paying for it?

It is always an invigorating delight to hear Senator Greene, and as usual his comments of last evening caught my interest very keenly. However, when I came to consider what he said, particularly when I was able to read it today, I could not help but feel that he had misunderstood the situation rather substantially. He seemed to assume that passing the amendment would automatically block the whole agreement, and moreover that it would be paying altogether too much attention to a small minority group, and would also interfere with the smooth co-operation between Executive and Parliament.

Senator Flynn: Rather naive.

Senator Smith (Colchester): He did not appear to deal with the importance of compulsory compensation for compulsory taking of land or rights in land. Therefore, I am afraid I shall have to say, with regret, that, although his remarks were both lively and eloquent, and would have been very convincing if they had been relevant, I do not find them applicable at all to the present situation.

● (2100)

Senator Flynn: What's new?

Senator Smith (Colchester): Well, I give Senator Greene credit for saying something new occasionally.

Senator Flynn: Not this time.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I have dealt at some length with the amendment, and with the arguments made against it by honourable senators. I have also given something of the history of this matter, and have submitted, as I now submit again, that in the case of those who did not sign this agreement this legislation, if passed, will be a compulsory taking of land or rights in land without the usual provision for compulsory compensation, though I do not ask that we provide for compulsory compensation.

I submit, too, that the amendment does not infringe in any way upon the provision of the agreement that the legislation will not impair the substance of the rights, undertakings and obligations provided for in the agreement. It does not go so far, of course, as to provide for compulsory compensation, and it does not lessen or prevent the extinguishment of the claims, rights, title and interests of the non-signatories.

Here, surely, is a proper place to strike a blow for the protection of minorities. Here is a place, surely, to hold out for fair play and simple justice.

A few days ago we were considering a bill which dealt with human rights. I believe it was reported tonight by the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. This bill began with the following declaration:

2. The purpose of this Act is to extend the present laws in Canada to give effect, within the purview of matters coming within the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada, to the following principles:

(a) every individual should have an equal opportunity with other individuals to make for himself or herself the life that he or she is able and wishes to have, consistent with his or her duties and obligations as a member of society, without being hindered in or prevented from doing so by discriminatory practices based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, age, sex or marital status, or conviction for an offence for which a pardon has been granted or by discriminatory employment practices based on physical handicap—

I submit that the amendment as moved is completely consistent with the intentions set out in that ringing declaration, that the bill without that amendment will certainly not be consistent with that declaration, and I submit that here is a chance, by voting for the amendment, to act in conformity with that eloquent statement of good intentions and in conformity with the rights of these human beings who did not sign this agreement. I therefore urge that we support the amendment.

Senator Greene: Will the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator Smith (Colchester): It is always a pleasure to hear a question from the honourable senator.

Senator Greene: As one who has had ultimate executive responsibility in one of the great provinces of this country, whereby he had administrative direction over the entire affairs of that province, and as one who executed his responsibilities with great distinction, which his career exemplifies, does the honourable senator allege that it is possible to function as a responsible government under our Constitution as we know it only if any person or group of persons not a party to any legislative action—

Senator Flynn: The agreement. Don't confuse the problems.

Senator Greene: —or not represented by a party to the agreement in respect of any valid claim, be consulted? In other words, does not the amendment itself involve the complete stultification of any ultimate resolution in the legislative process to any action by a legislature under the system of responsible government? In those circumstances we could never come to an ultimate conclusion about anything, because there might always be someone who has not been consulted, in the present or the future. I ask the honourable senator whether or not he believes that it is possible to function—indeed, could he have functioned as Premier of the great province of Nova Scotia?—under a blanket that says that you can never make a decision unless you consult with each person or each group of persons who, now or in the future, might some day have an interest in any matter.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I thank the honourable gentleman for his kindly reference to myself, and also for the opportunity of saying that in carrying out the duties which he so kindly referred to I never found it necessary to try to take somebody's land without paying for it. That is quite simply all that is involved here.

I also congratulate the honourable gentleman for exercising so skilfully his well-cultivated and long-used ability to produce a red herring whenever he thinks it will do any good.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, we have had an interesting discussion. I was both interested and concerned when the question of minorities was raised, and whether it is a sub-minority, or a sub-sub-minority, or a minority that is well removed and far away, I am still as concerned as I ever was, and my view is that the members of this house, each in his own way, are trying to protect minorities.

In the course of the discussion we had last week one senator suggested that if we were to send the bill back the Indians might be shuffled out of existence entirely as far as the bill is concerned. Later in the same week some Indians got bumped off an Air Canada flight. It has been a rough week for the Indians, and I think they are entitled to have something said for them.

● (2110)

Clause 3(3) of the bill provides that:

All native claims, rights, title and interests, whatever they may be, in and to the Territory, of all Indians and all Inuit, wherever they may be, are hereby extinguished—

There is no question what that means; exactly what is says, but there is no other way to deal with it.

Senator Flynn: Agreed.

Senator Croll: I did not interfere with you, now.

An Hon. Senator: It is one Irishman to another.

Senator Croll: He has first claim to that "Irishman."

They had to extinguish all possible claims for the reason that sooner or later something was going to be built by the Quebec Hydro-Electric Commission or some other organization. They had to go out into the market and raise not $10 million but $200 million, $300 million, $400 million in cash, perhaps not in Canada but in the United States or wherever it could be obtained. They all had their checklist and they all asked: "Are there any mortgages, any caveats, any outstanding claims? Is it possible that there are any liens? Is anyone owed anything on this land or this property? Is it possible?" And a lawyer somewhere had to sit down and write a letter saying: "This property belongs in fee simple; there are no claims whatsoever."

Senator Flynn: The letter could not be written before the legislation had passed.

Senator Croll: In order to deal with this, to begin with, that was the beginning.

What happened in this case is as Senator Smith (Colchester) has described. They came to the Crees and the Inuit, who said: "We do not want to sell the land; it is our home. This is everything we have. This is for us. It is our way of life." The reply was: "Well, we must have it; what do you want for it?" The Crees and the Inuit replied: "We are in no position to deal; we don't know the value of these things today, tomorrow or afterwards. We are not specialists in this." They were told: "Well, you had better get someone to advise you," and at that moment the governments jointly said: "Whatever you need in the way of advice, lawyers, accountants, surveyors, anyone else, researchers, get them and we will pay for them." I may be wrong in my figure, but I believe it was in the neighbourhood of $6 million. There was no way that these people had the money; they needed the protection and were told to go out and get it, which they did.

So they went to court, and when they decided they would have to dispose of the property you may rest assured that smoke signals went across the country indicating to all Crees and Inuit that something was going to be done with the land. Those signals were sure to reach their mark, as could be seen by some of the mail that passed through our post office. Then the negotiations continued, and for five years the agreement was negotiated. It does not make any difference; that is how long it took to reach agreement. Is it conceivable that any Cree or Inuit did not know what was going on? Is that really conceivable?

We must understand when we read the agreement—and Senator Robichaud said he read it—that the government is not dealing with individuals. It is dealing with bands, and their own method of governing. There may be 10 or 12 of them altogether, or perhaps 15 or 20, and they deal with whatever problems they have. Now, any compensation there was went to the bands for the people who were part of them collectively.

It is all very well in this country of Canada. There is a census every 10 years, and half of us are missed. But Indians carry the census in their heads every day. They know who is a Cree and who is an Inuit. They know how many there are, and they know who have claims to a territory. No one is fooling them one bit, because they belong to families.

So I come now to the question—

Senator Flynn: It is about time.

Senator Croll: —of the Committee's recommendation. Senator Flynn put it on record, as follows:

Your committee has nevertheless decided to rely on the good faith of the Government of Quebec to negotiate with such third parties, under the terms of section 2.14 of the Agreement, in order to ensure that, in any case where a valid claim in established, compensation will be accorded on the same basis as it would have been accorded had such parties been entitled to participate in the compensation and benefits of the Agreement.

That was the recommendation and it made a deal of sense, the important words being "valid claim." So I referred to the dictionary and found that the word "valid" was defined as "legally sound, effective or binding, having legal force, sustainable in law; a valid contract." I need not tell you; you know the difference between a valid and an invalid contract.

My friend Senator Smith (Colchester) quoted Kenneth Narvey, who appeared before the committee. Kenneth Narvey was advised by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in April that:

Quebec is legally bound, under the provisions of paragraph 2.14 to negotiate with other Indians and Inuit who are not parties to the Agreement concerning any claims they might have with respect to the Territory.

This is the part which I think will interest most of you:

As proof of the Quebec government's intention to live up to its commitment to negotiate, I cite the example of the current negotiations with the Naskapis of Schefferville, who have proved their traditional interest in the Territory. Intensive negotiations have been carried on since early in 1976, in an attempt to arrive at a just settlement—

I am advised that within 10 days or less they have negotiated and that within 10 days or less a settlement will be announced in the sum of $10 million, of which the federal government will pay $2 million and the Quebec government will pay $8 million.

● (2120)

Senator Flynn: Let's wait ten days to pass the bill.

Senator Croll: Don't forget that this was the band that was encouraged, urged, and asked to make a claim. For a time they resisted. Finally, they were told, "Well, we will pay whatever costs are necessary, if you will go out and see if you have some rights or no rights." They did so. This is part of the deal that they were able to accomplish.

In the course of the discussion something troubled me. I did not like what I read. If you will remember, Senator Goldenberg quoted what Mr. Ollivier said in committee. This can be found at page 1010 of Senate Hansard of June 28:

MR. OLLIVIER: I would say that it does not cover the right to compensation, but that right only arises following the extinguishment, so we do not extinguish the right to compensation.

Again, Mr. Ollivier, in answer to further questions,

I must say that I do not see how we can extinguish a right to compensation before the right arises and it only arises as a result of extinguishment.

And the answer lies in the fact—

Senator Flynn: Don't be so silly.

Senator Croll: The answer lies in the fact that they have negotiated and they have compensated.

Senator Flynn: Don't be so silly.

Senator Grosart: It was all discussed when you were not present.

Senator Croll: At page 1042, Senator McElman had another view entirely, and a surprising view, as far as I am concerned. He said:

Please understand me clearly.

And I hope I do.

It is my understanding that Mr. Ollivier is a first-rate and highly competent and responsible public servant. I cast absolutely no aspersions in his direction.

He is from the Department of Justice.

But when you consider the background from which he gave his opinion, I am sure you must agree that Mr. Ollivier was in an impossibly compromised situation before the committee, for which he has only my sympathy.

Senator Flynn: Very well put.

Senator Croll: Well, Mr. Ollivier does not need his sympathy, and if the suggestion is that he writes opinion to suit the government, or suit the occasion, it is an unworthy suggestion to make under any circumstances.

Senator Flynn: Do not be so naive. For God's sake, come down to earth.

Senator Langlois: Restrain yourself.

Senator Croll: I am not at all naive, but I do not recall a time in my years here when I have come across a member of the Justice Department who gave opinions that worked for the department no matter what he himself thought. I always felt that whatever opinion he gave, he gave as a lawyer having in mind his responsibility, not only to the government but to other lawyers who knew he was giving the very best opinion he was able to give.

Senator Flynn: I am very sorry that you were not in committee that morning. I asked the official of the department if he always gave his own opinion, or that of the department.

Senator Perrault: Is this a question or speech?

Senator Flynn: It is whatever you like to make of it.

Senator Croll: Anyway, Senator Greene, as usual, made a very potent point.

Senator Flynn: Though it may not have been relevant. Agreed.

Senator Croll: There must be some finality to these matters. Some day, some place, some time we must say, "There it is. We have settled it once and for all"—if in not five years, then in six or seven years. But we cannot just go on to deal with claims that are uncertain, nebulous, almost come-by-chance, day after day after day. As a matter of fact, there is a provision, and it has been asserted here on many occasions, indicating that the Government of Quebec will negotiate. I indicated to you that it has negotiated in whichever way it can. As has been said from time to time, all that they say is, "If you have a claim, it had better be a valid claim."

Those people have been asked for many years to exercise their rights. I do not think their rights are extinguished if they did not exercise them. I do not know if they have rights. Rights must be valid. That means legal. They can establish them today, tomorrow, or at any time.

Senator Flynn: Without compensation.

Senator Croll: If they can establish them, there must be some finality, and someone must know that they have an agreement. They can deal with it, and for all purposes the other claims are extinguished and gone.

I cannot urge this any more than to suggest that those people who have been asked directly, those people who have been encouraged, and those people who have been asked indirectly, have had ample opportunity. There is not much more that can be said or done. Someone here raised the matter and said that the department suggested to the Quebec department that they should look into it again, or the department here sent to the Quebec department something that they had been asked to send on. If there was something the matter with this agreement, the federal department should have seen to it. They signed it. They signed it claiming that the matter was dealt with fairly; that the matter was dealt with for all purposes. The band is no different from those people that Senator Marchand dealt with in labour relations, or any group that has a majority and a minority. The majority speaks, and there it is. In most cases the minority falls. In this case the minority, if they can prove they have rights, have rights. They have had an ample opportunity to present their claims. If they did not do it, there is not much that I or anybody else can do. I think it is time that we dealt with this matter with some finality. The members of these governments, although we may not agree with their political views, are honourable people.

Senator Flynn: They certainly do not agree with your views anyway.

Senator Croll: They deal with these matters in the same way. When they give undertakings, they intend to live up to them. They want to do what is fair. They cannot afford to stand out in the world as people who break their word on things as important as this. The federal government, a provincial government, or any other government cannot do that. They must do what is right by these people, particularly because they are a minority of a minority. That is what I think they want to do. That is what I think this agreement does, and I am going to vote against the amendment.

Hon. John Ewasew: Honourable senators, I have been trying to get the floor for some time.

Senator Flynn: Bravo!

Senator Ewasew: First of all, I am for the amendment in principle but not for the same reasons as Senator Smith, and I should like to explain why. I am also partially in agreement with Senator Croll, but again not for the same reasons.

• (2130)

I want to point out, first of all, that it is incumbent upon this house not to be stampeded into being a rubber stamp simply because the government of the day brings forward measures such as this at such a late date. I do not think it is justification for quick passage to say that the agreement provides that the Government of Quebec will negotiate. Who will force the Quebec government to negotiate?

We should keep in mind that the groups in question were subservient to the federal government before the coming into force of the Quebec Boundaries Act. I think it is incumbent upon the federal government, and the Senate in particular, that the rights of these minorities are truly protected for all time and to see to it—and this has not been done—that those who are not signatory to this agreement can still put claims forward without fear of unknown future legal complications, but there should be a time limitation on such claims. I do not think this can go on forever. In all conscience and justice, there would be nothing wrong with the amendment moved by Senator Flynn, provided it had a rider to the effect that such claims have to be established within a period of five, 10 or 20 years, or whatever is deemed an appropriate time period.

Moreover, I think it is incumbent upon us to not to be too concerned about the fact that, should this bill not be passed at this time, it may never be passed, with the result that certain parties will be hurt. We should do our duty as we see it, and we should do so in a non-partisan way.

The amendment, in principle, is correct, but it should have a rider to the effect that there be a time period during which the establishment of any claims must be made. Thereafter, by the application of any law of prescription, as is the case in Quebec civil law, or by a statutory limitation, as is the case in common law, such claims are or would be wiped out forever.

Senator Williams: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to my colleague, Senator Croll.

By his reference to smoke signals was he implying that smoke signals are the only form of communication which the small and large groups of Crees understand? I should also like to know where the smoke signals originated, and their content. I would inform him that smoke signals went out when the fur traders came.

Senator Grosart: Hear, hear.

Senator Croll: I thought it was a light reference. It gave me an opportunity to take a good crack at the mail service in this country, which I did. I hope that got across.

Senator Grosart: And a nice crack at these people, too.

Senator Croll: I made no crack whatsoever directed at the native peoples.

Senator Williams: The poor mail service in that area is not the fault of the Crees, nor is it the responsibility of the Crees. If the mail service is poor, that is your problem.

[Translation]

Hon. Léopold Langlois: Honourable senators, I will open my remarks with a word of thanks to all my honourable colleagues who participated in this important debate.

I do not think I need to remind honourable members of the Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs of the attitude I held when Bill C-9 was being considered in committee.

However, I must inform the other honourable members of this house of my opposition to this bill which I voiced both in the various questions I put to the witnesses and in the suggestions I made.

I concluded my opposition to the bill by proposing that the committee agree to attach to this bill a very strong recommendation addressed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development suggesting that he exert the necessary pressures on the Quebec provincial authorities with a view to having them clarify their position on their future attitude concerning the rights of the parties which did not sign the agreement which this bill is all about.

This was in keeping with the attitude I have always held both in this house and in committee to come charging whenever I thought that a bill did not agree entirely with my views and was not consistent with the dictates of my conscience. I did not hesitate to do so despite the position I hold in this house with the government in power and also on the side of the house on which I sit because I am not prompted by partisan considerations in such circumstances but quite simply by the interest of those who must call on Parliament to have their grievances redressed, or to see their rights upheld, and especially of those who may suffer from legislative action on the part of the Parliament of Canada.

On the other hand, I must add that I opposed and voted against the original amendment introduced in committee by the Honourable Senator Flynn, an amendment that differed in substance from the one that is now being considered in this debate. The original text of that amendment reads as follows, and I quote:

[English]

Notwithstanding the extinguishment under subsection (3) of the native claims, rights, title and interest referred to therein, nothing in that subsection affects the right of any person or group of persons in Canada who was not, or who was not represented by, a party to the Agreement to receive equitable compensation in respect of any valid claim relating to the Territory that has been established in law as a valid claim.

My objection to this amendment was based on the fact that, first of all, I considered that the phrase "any claim relating to the territory that has been established in law as a valid claim" was too restrictive and was negating the value of the proposed amendment in view of the legal proceedings entered upon by the Indians to stop the James Bay project.

Because of my objection, the honourable senator agreed to withdraw the words to which I objected and this is why we have the amendment now before us.

Indeed, as the honourable senators will remember, the Crees and the Inuit of the Territory won their case in the lower court since a temporary injunction was granted by the Quebec Superior Court. This victory was only of relative value since such an injunction is decided mostly on the balance of inconveniences for the parties involved. However, this first judicial victory turned into defeat following the decision of the Quebec Appeals Court, which reversed the judgment of the lower court.

However, it must be noted that the provincial government's victory was short-lived and that soon afterwards, the various decisions of the Appeals Court were submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada. However, before this appeal was finally heard before the Supreme Court, the Province of Quebec had decided to call the Crees and the Inuit to the negotiation table, which produced the agreement involved in this bill.

Given those circumstances, I suggest it is important that we put this debate in its true perspective. I have expressed the view before the committee that an amendment based on the legal recognition of the rights of the native people to that territory as purported in the original amendment presented by the Honourable Senator Flynn would be of no value and would not help in any way the Indians involved in this agreement.

Following my remarks, as I mentioned earlier, the Honourable Senator Flynn changed his amendment.

I now come to the second reason why I refuse to support the amendment proposed by the honorable senator. That second reason for my opposition is the fact that in my opinion, such an amendment would cause irreparable damage to the beneficiaries of the agreement reached between the Government of Quebec and the native people of the James Bay area.

In saying that, I am only reiterating what the spokesman for the Indians, Mr. James C. O'Reilly, their legal counsel in negotiating the agreement, said on pages 109, 110, 111 and 112 of the June 7 issue of the Proceedings of the Committee for Legal and Constitutional Affairs and, if you will allow me to quote from page 108, I will read an excerpt from his testimony as follows; and I will quote it in the language used by Mr. O'Reilly when he came to testify:

● (2140)

[English]

MR. O'REILLY: If I may respond, Mr. Chairman, the reason that was put in was to make it very clear that the agreement was in addition to whatever other benefits they might enjoy as Canadian citizens—for instance, workmen's compensation, or other benefits. It was put in at the suggestion of the government to make that very clear, and it corresponds to a section in the agreement. Section 9 provides for new federal legislation, which is dubbed the Cree Act, to provide for local government on these new Category 1A lands. In other words, this new special act for the Crees will succeed the Indian Act, insofar as the Crees are concerned, for most matters of local government.

And then on page 1:109 Mr. O'Reilly says:

All right. Insofar as compensation is concerned, my opinion is that a right to compensation continues; it is not taken away. The right in the land is taken away.

And then follow a few questions by Senator Flynn, after which Mr. O'Reilly continues:

Because the concept would recognize that there is such a thing as an aboriginal right, they say.

He is referring here to the objections by the Province of Quebec to recognizing aboriginal rights, and here Mr. O'Reilly, after another question by Senator Flynn, adds:

It is there, in the last paragraph of 2.14:

Nothing in this paragraph shall affect the obligations, if any, that Canada may have with respect to claims of such Native persons with respect to the Territory.

Which, to me, means the 1870 orders in council, by virtue of which this land was originally transferred over.

After some further questions by Senator Flynn and by Senator Asselin, Mr. O'Reilly then went on to make the following statement:

They went through three years of court battles maintaining, to this very day, that the Crees and Inuit have no rights. That is going to be their official position, and they are not going to give any kind of an opening which will recognize that any native people have aboriginal rights in the Province of Quebec. That was discussed and rediscussed and hashed over on many occasions. That was consistently their position, and that is part of the problem with which you are faced, I agree, and with which all of us were faced in the negotiations. They say they do not want anything:

—to constitute a recognition, by Canada or Quebec, in any manner whatsoever, of any rights of such Indians or Inuit.

That is the second paragraph of section 2.14. They say, "Whatever the legal situation is, we will battle it when the time comes. We will settle it through negotiation." As honourable senators pointed out, the Naskapis said they felt they needed additional protection. Obviously they prefer to have additional protection, but their agreement in principle right now is invalid if there is no settlement on the matters remaining to be negotiated.

After some further questions by Senator Flynn, Mr. O'Reilly closed this part of his evidence with the following remarks:

Quite frankly, that is certainly not the understanding of the Province of Quebec, because it is giving $9 million to the Naskapis. I do not think it has money to throw around these days.

Honourable senators, I am quoting all of this material in order to put the claim of these Inuit and Indians in the right perspective. At page 1:111, Mr. O'Reilly continued in this way:

If I may, sir, I would add that there were at least eight legal advisers. At one point in time we counted 200 people directly involved in negotiations round the clock with secretarial staff and all the rest. There are at least eight legal advisers on the other side. This was thrashed out backwards and forwards. All parties were asked to comment on the bill after it was in draft form, after it was introduced as Bill C-98, and they sent their comments in. There was a tremendous effort to make a correlation between the provincial bill and the federal bill.

The very great concern I would have as legal adviser, and I suggest it is a consideration for your committee, is that what this honourable committee or others might feel does not affect the substance of the bill others might feel does affect the substance of the bill. The real problem you have is that any possible amendment is obviously going to go back to the House of Commons and then may or may not go, I don't know, to a committee. Then Quebec will obviously look at it to determine what it will do with its bill, because it passed its bill in June, 1976, and the bills are parallel.

[Translation]

Further to the remarks of Mr. O'Reilly, it must also be borne in mind that the agreement must be assented to officially by all parties concerned before a certain date, including the two governments, federal and provincial. I understand that this ultimate date is but a few months or so away.

Therefore, if the agreement were to be delayed by the legislative process, for any reason at all, it is quite possible that the benefits accruing from this agreement to those who have signed it and who represent, as we heard yesterday from the honourable senators who took part in the debate, as I said, approximately 90 per cent of the native people who live in the territory involved or whose livelihood depends on it.

I come now to the third reason why I objected to the original amendment proposed by the Honourable Senator Flynn, and that is, the fact that, to my mind, the amendment would add absolutely nothing to the situation, nor to the substance of the bill now before us, considering not only the provisions of Bill C-9 but any Canadian legislation on expropriation.

The Honourable Senator Smith, a while ago, addressed himself at length to the compensation principles that apply when property is taken over by compulsion, or for reasons of public interest, but I believe he failed to make an important distinction between the rights of our native people and the rights that may exist to property such as, for instance, a stretch of land in the territory.

Indeed, aboriginal rights and probably—as I am used to expressing myself in English when I give an answer to an English-speaking senator, perhaps I should respond to Senator Smith (Colchester) in the language he used when he made his representations earlier this evening.

● (2150)

[English]

Aboriginal rights are not an interest in the land that is recognized as being registrable in the land titles or land registry system. It is, after all, at best an undefined and unspecified interest, which interest must be proven by negotiations that can be entered into. As outlined yesterday by Senator Robichaud, only the Naskapis of Schefferville have come forward to assert their rights and they are—as I have mentioned and as Senator Croll mentioned a few moments ago—about to conclude that very important negotiation or settlement with the Quebec government which would involve payment of some $10 million. I think this is the only way to look at the situation. We cannot make any comparison with the expropriation laws and the processes of these expropriation laws in our country, although there could be a parallel drawn between the principle involved in, for example, our Canadian Expropriation Act and those special statutes which give authority or power to some crown agencies to expropriate. As far as the principle is concerned, in these other statutes, as in the Expropriation Act of Canada, the mere fact that a competent authority—in the case of a province it is the provincial government, and in the case of the dominion it is the federal government—gives notice of its intention to expropriate, means that the right of the property and the use of same pass to the government as soon as such notice is registered in the registry of the district where the property is located. Of course there are processes of negotiations recognized by the law, and there is even recourse to a court of law if the indemnity is not satisfactory to the expropriated person, but the principle underlying this legislation is the same. It applies in this case and it is not denied in any way, shape or form in the bill before us. This is not only my opinion, and it is not only the opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice; it is the opinion given, and not challenged by anybody, by Mr. O'Reilly who is the legal adviser of the Crees and the Inuit.

Senator Flynn: Not challenged by anybody? I challenged it all the time.

Senator Langlois: My honourable friend can take all the merit he wants, but there was no valid challenge offered. My honourable friend always does as he is doing now. He always objects when anyone says something with which he is not in accord. But this is not a challenge. It is merely an objection which he voices and which has no validity at all. Anyone can do that. You don't have to be a lawyer to do it.

Senator Flynn: You said that nobody challenged it, and I did challenge it.

Senator Langlois: It was not challenged at all. You spoke out of turn in committee, as you do very often in this house.

Senator Flynn: I spoke in committee, and I can tell you what you said in committee too.

Senator Langlois: I am not ashamed of that, and I am ready to repeat it any time.

Senator Flynn: You may be ashamed of what you are saying tonight.

Senator Langlois: Oh, no, wait a minute, my friend. Listen, speak for yourself. I speak for myself. I know that when you run out of arguments you use insults, but I am not interested in going on that ground with you. It is not my way of dealing with friends and with colleagues in this place.

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear.

Senator Langlois: Now, after I have dealt with this I think I should go back to my speech in French, and carry on with my third objection to the amendment.

Before passing judgment on this amendment, one must read very carefully the text of Bill C-9, subclause (3) of which reads as follows:

(3) All native claims, rights, title and interests, whatever they may be, in and to the Territory, of all Indians and all Inuit, wherever they may be, are hereby extinguished, but—

And the “but” is very interesting.

—but nothing in this Act prejudices the rights of such persons as Canadian citizens and they shall continue to be entitled to all of the rights and benefits of all other citizens as well as to those resulting from the Indian Act, where applicable, and from other legislation applicable to them from time to time.

It is clear that this does not affect any rights that any Indian, as a Canadian citizen, may have, including the right to compensation, and I cannot find where it could be clearer than this to show that the right to compensation exists in this act. My honourable friend has been referring to what took place in committee this morning. This morning we had a very brief exchange on this bill after we had finished our discussion on Bill C-25, the Canadian Human Rights bill. My honourable friend, Senator Flynn, came out with the argument, "How come that the Quebec government does not accept my amendment if it changes nothing in the bill?" My reply was: "If your amendment does not change anything, how come you insist on it?" It is that simple.

● (2200)

Senator Flynn: I rise on a question of privilege. Senator Langlois is quoting a personal conversation and he is not quoting accurately or completely. I don't know yet what I am going to say about the speech he is making now or about the way he is discussing matters, but I am really incensed.

Senator Langlois: It was a very confidential conversation.

Senator Flynn: I said personal.

Senator Langlois: There were about 20 people present. You were not addressing yourself to me; you were addressing the members of the committee.

Senator Flynn: No sir. We were leaving the committee room.

Senator Langlois: We were still in the committee room. Are you rising again on a question?

Senator Flynn: Yes. I rise on a matter again of privilege. You said three things that were wrong. You said that it was in committee. The committee was over. You said there were 20 people; there were only about three or four of us; and you raised another matter which you did not complete and you did give my answer.

Senator Langlois: What was it that you said?

Senator Flynn: I said, taking into consideration the fact that those who are not parties are asking for the Government of Quebec to recognize that they are entitled to compensation if the government says no, it is in the agreement—

Senator Langlois: Is this a question of privilege?

Senator Flynn: Yes. You said three things that were entirely wrong.

Senator Perrault: It is another speech.

Senator Flynn: It is not another speech. You said three things that were entirely wrong, and you base your argument on a personal conversation. I could reveal a lot of your personal conversation with me that would make you blush.

Senator Langlois: I am sorry that I have hurt your feelings.

Senator Flynn: You have not only hurt my feelings but also lowered yourself in my esteem.

Senator Langlois: Go ahead, be as nasty as you wish. That is your way, not mine.

Senator Flynn: I'm only nasty when provoked.

[Translation]

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I now come back, hopefully in peace, to the bill and to clause 3.

Senator Flynn: Try coming back to the truth.

Senator Langlois: Paragraph 3 of the clause in no way prejudices the rights that signing and non-signing Indians have as citizens of the country under the statutes of Canada or any specific statute concerning Indians.

It therefore follows, through the statutory provision included in this clause, and in the same manner, because of the principles of the Canadian Expropriation Act and the special legislation conferring the authority to expropriate on crown agencies, either provincial or federal, as I said earlier, that these principles continue to apply to the signatories and to the non-signatories to the James Bay Agreement. It is absolutely recognized as the principle of these statutory provisions concerning expropriation that the expropriated party is entitled to a compensation which becomes due as soon as the expropriation notice has been filed at the registration office of the district where the expropriated property is located.

There are also provisions for the publication of such an expropriation notice in the Canada Gazette, or that of Quebec, for instance, according to the case. For example, in the case of expropriation by the federal government of property owned by the provincial crown there must be notice to the attorney general of the province concerned. Moreover, as I said earlier in English, these statutes provide for a negotiation process and an appeal to the courts. Here it is recognized as an absolute principle in the statutory provisions that the right to compensation exists from the moment the notice stating the intention of the government to expropriate is filed. This applies in the present case, which was stated, as I said earlier, by the legal counsel of the government and the Indians concerned, and the right to compensation in this case comes into existence upon the extinguishment of the rights mentioned in the first part of paragraph 3 of clause 3 of the bill.

Not only does the bill before us say nothing about this right to compensation for the expropriated party, but paragraph 3 of clause 3 is quite clear in stating that the bill does not prejudice the rights of the Indians concerned as Canadian citizens to continue to be entitled to all the rights and benefits of all other citizens and to those resulting from other legislation applicable to them from time to time.

We must therefore conclude from all this that the signatories and the non-signatories to the James Bay Agreement are not totally deprived of all their rights, as have suggested certain people who have opposed this legislation. I have listened with a great deal of attention to the speeches made during this debate and especially to the discussions which took place last evening. I think it is my duty to correct some errors made during those exchanges, which errors were surely made in good faith and through oversight in the heat of the debate.

Some reference was made, for example, to the evidence given before the committee about the refusal of a group of non-signatories to participate in the negotiations which led to the agreement. On page 1047 of the Debates of the Senate for yesterday, Senator Goldenberg stated the following in reply to a question of Senator Forsey, and I quote his reply in the original language:

[English]

That is as to the opportunity afforded to the non-signatories to participate. The evidence before the committee was that they were visited by leaders of the Inuit and were asked to participate in the negotiations, but that they refused to do so.

Later on, after some questions by Senator Flynn, the following question was asked by Senator McElman during the debate in the Senate on July 4:

May I ask the honourable senator whether they were visited by representatives of the Government of Canada?

[Translation]

Senator Goldenberg's answer was negative but in agreement with the evidence given before the committee.

However, I had the opportunity during the day to obtain additional information on this matter from officials of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and also from Mr. Jean F. Fournier, executive director, Division of the Office of Natives Claims. Mr. Fournier informed me that not only the representatives of the Department of Indian Affairs but the minister himself, the Honourable Warren Allmand, had been in touch with, among others, the Montagnais of Schefferville to advise them to join the group and negotiate their rights.

While the Montagnais of Schefferville refused to take part in those negotiations, the neighbouring Indians on the other side of the street in the same reservation accepted to get involved in the protection of their rights and to negotiate with Quebec and the Canadian government.

Besides that, I have information that these Indians who were not signatories to this agreement were offered the same technical and financial assistance offered to other interested parties in the Territory.

However, I wish to say now to my honourable colleagues that I do not share the opinion of those who allege that the fact that a group of Indians did not avail themselves of their right when they had an opportunity during the negotiations prejudices in any way their rights. Still there can be prejudice, not having taken into account nor taken advantage of the particular circumstances in which the government of Quebec found itself during that period special circumstances which prompted the Government of Quebec and particularly Hydro-Quebec to try and reach an agreement for the settlement of a conflict which paralyzed an important project, which has even been called the project of the century and which required enormous investments and whose financing outside the country could have become difficult if those negotiations had not been concluded.

Therefore, if these Indians did not take advantage of those circumstances, it may be that it will cause them a certain prejudice because they are on the other side of the fence and no longer have the bargaining power to convince the opposite party to give way to their claims. But that is the only consequence I can see resulting from the absence of these people concerned in the agreement concluded at that time.

Also, while I am on the subject, I would like to elaborate on certain details which were given hastily and in good faith yesterday evening by certain senators without having at hand the necessary details as to the number of the non-signatory Indians who could have rights in the territory concerned. Here is my information.

Senator Flynn: Where does your information come from?

Senator Langlois: From the Department of Indian Affairs.

Senator Flynn: Could you not base your remarks on the work of the committee?

Senator Langlois: No, and that is my privilege, but if you do not wish to be informed, that is also your right; stay ignorant if you do not wish to be informed. It does not bother me.

Senator Flynn: I prefer my ignorance to yours.

● (2210)

[English]

Senator Perrault: For heaven's sake!

Senator Flynn: He is quoting figures.

Senator Perrault: You are rising on no point at all.

Senator Flynn: What the senator says should be based on the committee's evidence.

Senator Langlois: Not necessarily.

Senator Flynn: I want to correct you because I heard the evidence.

Senator Langlois: When you give information in this chamber you base it on information received and you give your source. One has to divulge the source of one's information and I have done so.

Senator Flynn: Divulge it.

Senator Langlois: I am divulging it.

Senator Flynn: I'm listening.

Senator Langlois: According to that information, there are 427 Montagnais at Schefferville who live on a reserve part of the year. They came originally from Sept-Îles, and their additional rights would apply to the southern part of the territory. The minister met that group, according to the same source of information, in March 1977. They oppose Bill C-9 today, yet they seem to have made no effort to substantiate their rights.

There is also a group of 362 Algonquins known as the "Abitibi Dominion" Amos, who gave up their rights, everywhere in Canada, by becoming party to the 1908 Treaty—more specifically Treaty No. 9.

In addition we have the Indians who live in the vicinity of Simon Lake; there are 444 of them. Those Algonquins met the officials of what is known as "The Indian Program" of the department to discuss what research and funding were required to support their claims. I am advised that the department is willing to help them substantiate their claims.

Amongst those who did not sign the James Bay Agreement but are affected by it and live outside the territory—groups which can claim a legitimate interest or submit special claims, according to our information—we find the Obedjiwan and the Attikamek. Unless I am mistaken, those Indians live in the area of the Moisie River, east of Sept-Îles; there are 959 of them who are represented by the Council of the Montagnais Attikamek.

To this day they have made no claims, but have received some $50,000 in financial assistance.

The Labrador Inuit, or approximately 1,300 people, have also received research funds from the federal government to cover their claims. The only claim received to date is from Labrador. It is expected they will claim their rights on the land covered by the agreement.

Finally, there are in Labrador the Naskapi Montagnais, approximately 500 people. They have also received some research funds from the federal government. It is to be hoped they will submit their claims on the Labrador territory in the near future. If this information can be of any use to the honourable senators, I believe anyone interested can obtain it through the Department of Indian Affairs, Division of the Office of Native Claims, of which Mr. J. F. Fournier is the executive director.

Now, I believe it is easy to realize from what I have just said that it is most urgent for all these interested native groups to make a claim concerning this land, that is to say, to submit their claims as soon as possible. I do not think we are in a position—this is a suggestion I am making to my honourable colleagues—to prevent the agreement reached between the Inuit and the Crees from the James Bay area being approved before the above-mentioned deadline. Indeed, in so doing, we would not only prevent these Indians from enjoying the benefits arising from this agreement, but we might also foreclose any future claims from those who were not party to the negotiations. I can easily understand that should the James Bay project be stopped by other legal procedures which might not only delay the implementation of this important project but also contribute to an increase in its cost given the present inflation rate, as well as other more complex financing problems, any bargaining power for anybody, the signatory parties as well as others, could be almost entirely and irrevocably lost. In addition, this is what we must keep in mind, I think. We should not, as was suggested, deny the rights which these first citizens of this country, the native people, are claiming and to which they are entitled, but those are rights, as I said earlier, which are totally undefined. They cannot be compared with property rights or with rights of way on a property which may be established by titles, which may be registered in a registry district, but they are rights which are so vague—to use a word which is improper and inaccurate—and undefined that long periods of negotiation and advance research are required to establish them. They are rights which are not easy, and perhaps impossible, to establish legally. It might be said, for instance, that Quebec was afraid to bring the decision of the Court of Appeal before the Supreme Court, but who can say if the decision rendered by the court would have been one way or the other? Nobody could. But what I find important, even now, was that the Province of Quebec should take advantage of the “bargaining power” it had because it was trapped, up against the wall, and wanted to get rid of the obstacle to the project, I would not say at any cost, but at a high cost. They paid dearly enough to be able to continue the work, to get rid of the threat that was delaying the work and could even have put an end to the James Bay project, that important project, not only for the province of Quebec but for all eastern Canada and even perhaps central Canada.

Now, honourable senators, I am afraid I have exhausted your patience, so I shall quickly put an end to my remarks by saying simply that it is imperative that an impartial judgment be made, bearing in mind the circumstances, all of them, which in time and space surround this bill. It is of a very special nature. I would not want to see, as a result of a hurried decision, perhaps because all factors were not weighed, Canadian citizens who represent a vast majority, in fact almost all Indians who live in the territory, deprived of the rights they have acquired after many years of negotiations. Having said that, honourable senators, I apologize for having taken up so much of your time and recommend passage of this bill without amendments.

Senator Flynn: I move the adjournment of the debate. If you want to listen to me until one o'clock, that is your business, but, after so much silliness, it would take too long.

● (2220)

[English]

On motion of Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

AUDITOR GENERAL BILL

SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Barrow, seconded by the Honourable Senator Godfrey, for the second reading of the Bill C-20, intituled: “An Act respecting the office of the Auditor General of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto”.—
(Honourable Senator Macdonald).

Senator Macdonald: Honourable senators, I yield to Senator Walker.

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, Bill C-20 is really long overdue, dealing, as it does, with the office of the Auditor General of Canada, and matters incidental thereto.

We all remember the Auditor General of 20 years ago—Senator Macnaughton will certainly remember. He was a remarkably able man who always stood up for what he thought was right, regardless of pressure from any side, with the result that the Public Accounts Committee of the other place achieved things which were nothing short of miraculous, including the exposé of the Printing Bureau in Hull, the cost of which, through no fault of the Liberal government, had increased by 300 or 400 per cent, and which took eleven instead of two years to build.

We have also had a good Auditor General in the interim, Mr. Max Henderson. He was not only able but also very abrasive to his friends as well as to his foes. Furthermore, he was completely independent, and free of any indication of deference towards the government in power.

I am very glad to say that Mr. Henderson was succeeded by another man who, from all I hear, is a completely independent, fairminded and fearless man. I speak, of course, of Mr. J. J. Macdonell, F.C.A. Mr. Macdonell set his terms before taking the appointment. He is very conscientious, and will receive very wide powers under this bill which, I may say, did not come about by accident but did so, in fact, at the instigation of Mr. Macdonell himself. It will enable him to carry on untrammelled audits of the different agencies of the federal public service.

This bill does not cover as many crown corporations as perhaps we would like, although it does cover some. Of course, I appreciate that all changes such as this cannot be made at once. There is some benefit in maintaining for these huge crown corporations independent firms of regular auditors, but I look forward to the time, which I think must inevitably come, when the work of the Auditor General will include not only audits of all departments of government but those of crown corporations as well. It is only a question of organization, and under a good minister matters could be so arranged that the Auditor General's department would cover all departments of government including the crown corporations.

● (2230)

Senator Barrow, in moving second reading, very ably set out the purposes of the bill, including the background which led to its preparation. The new Auditor General, Mr. Macdonell, is not to be confused with our distinguished Whip, Senator John M. Macdonald, although they have one thing in common in that they are both plain-spoken and outright and have a free-wheeling, frank form of expression. They are both the same in that respect.

Senator Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Senator Walker: The only difference is that Senator Macdonald is a lawyer and Mr. Macdonell an auditor.

The committee—which was a committee hand-picked, with the consent of Mr. Macdonell, from distinguished chartered accountants—reported in 1975. It met for a long time and finally recommended legislation which was prepared and sent to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Public Accounts for study. This resulted in the report's having the full support of the Auditor General, and it was put into legislative form and is now before us.

It involved two basic issues concerning the office of the Auditor General: first, the independence of the office, which is more important than anything else; second, the scope or extent of the audit to be performed. In this bill, which is very simple and very interesting to read, the Auditor General is identified as a separate employer. This status is most unusual in the public service and it authorizes him to do what he likes. He is responsible to no one, neither the Public Service Commission nor anyone else. He is a separate employer who employs his own staff on his own terms; and they become appropriate employees of his office. Thus it gives him complete freedom in retaining professional services. He can make reports to the House of Commons at any time, which is also provided for in the bill. Therefore, if something drastic happens we will not have to wait for the annual report in order to learn of it. Provided the matter is important enough, we will obtain a report from the Auditor General's office.

The important point of whether the Auditor General should be the auditor of all crown corporations has not yet been decided. However, this measure does make the Auditor General eligible at any time to be appointed the auditor or the joint auditor of a crown corporation. In other words, if a crown corporation needs some investigation, but not to be fully taken over, the Auditor General can be appointed a joint auditor until the investigation is completed.

The Auditor General, I should say, was consulted fully in the preparation of this legislation and is very satisfied, I understand, with it. Finally, I wish to point out—and I commend Senator Barrow for bringing this out—that there is nothing contained in this legislation which would allow the Auditor General to interfere with the policy-making powers of the cabinet, which is as it should be. When the times comes that public servants, no matter how exalted they may be, can set, or try to set, the policy of the government, that will be the time when we shall have something other than a democracy in our country. I can assure you that with this Auditor General as the watchdog over the spending practices of the government we have a very good protection against wrongdoing. The Auditor General reports to the House of Commons and to the Senate, which is as it should be.

I must say that I have no alternative but to support this bill, and I do so in the expectation that it will be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance for perusal and study.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Barrow moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

Motion agreed to.

BRETTON WOODS AGREEMENTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Everett, seconded by the Honourable Senator Lang, for the second reading of the Bill C-18, intituled: "An Act to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act"—(Honourable Senator Smith (Colchester.))

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, at this hour, despite the large number of items remaining on the Order Paper, I believe it might meet with the satisfaction of the majority of senators if I were to move the further adjournment of this debate.

Order stands.

CURRENCY AND EXCHANGE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, June 29, the debate on the motion of Senator Lang for second reading of Bill C-5, to amend the Currency and Exchange Act and to amend other acts in consequence thereof.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, perhaps I should ask the government leader and the deputy leader what their wish is? It is 10.30. I am prepared to proceed if that is the wish; otherwise I would also adjourn the debate. I am at their disposal.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, in view of the work schedule we have before us, I am certainly of the opinion that it would be the feeling of many honourable senators to have Senator Grosart contribute to the debate at this time. It is expected that two bills will arrive from the other place this week, and perhaps another two next week. We face very difficult time limits.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, the bill before us at this time for second reading was introduced by Senator Lang. It deals with amendments to the Currency and Exchange Act and, of course, is the corollary—not entirely but in many aspects—of Bill C-18, the debate on which was just adjourned by Senator Smith (Colchester).

In introducing the bill, Senator Lang said that he had approached his examination of the Currency and Exchange Act with "trepidation"—that was the word he used, referring, of course, to the very complex nature of the bill. I would be inclined to go a little farther than that and say that this is a bill which to some extent has been a bit of a nightmare to me over the years, because it was matters arising out of the use and interpretation of the Currency and Exchange Act that created a certain crisis in about the year 1962, when there was a devaluation of the dollar in the middle of an election in which at that time I was very much interested. It is interesting that some of the amendments proposed in this bill would attempt to, and perhaps would, remedy some of the causes of the crisis that arose at that time.

● (2240)

The purpose of the act, as Senator Lang said, in the first part, is to provide for the establishment of the legal coinage in Canada, and so on. But it is part two that deals with the Exchange Fund Account. This is a very important account in the affairs of Canada, which has had a rather chequered history and has caused some problems over the years. Some of the provisions of this bill are intended to meet those problems, and to prevent them from arising in the immediate future.

The bill deals, first, of course, with bringing Canadian law, as it stands, into conformity with the recently concluded amendment to the so-called Bretton Woods Agreement relating to the International Monetary Fund. Senator Lang suggested that the details were such that they should perhaps be examined in committee by experts. Having reviewed the progress of the bill through the other place in committee and up to this stage, I am not entirely sure that any useful purpose would be served by referring this bill to a committee. I am not sure to what committee it would go. It deals, in one case, with our international obligations under the Bretton Woods Agreement and, in other and very substantial clauses, it deals with certain changes that seem to be necessary in domestic law.

As I said, the bill deals, first of all, with these obligations that we have undertaken under the amended International Monetary Fund Agreement. It then has some technical amendments. The parliamentary secretary, as he is called now, in introducing the bill, said that the government had taken the opportunity in the amendment to the Currency and Exchange Act to introduce the so-called technical amendments. The impression was given that these were not terribly important; they were merely technicalities. But I hope I will be able to indicate that at least two of them really refer to very important policy decisions that have been taken by the government.

Finally, of course, in any discussion of such a bill, there must be some reference to the whole matter of the stabilization of Canadian currency, the external value of the Canadian dollar and its utilization in international trade.

In the international obligations we have assumed, and the necessity to implement them in a bill such as this, there seems to be no very great difference of opinion. The technical amendments—and there are seven of them, according to my count, although they are not numbered as such—are generally not controversial, with the exception of two. I will refer to them in a moment. Senator Lang gave us a quick rundown, but perhaps I should say a little more about them.

The purpose of the first of the so-called technical amendments is to give legal sanction to the Special Drawing Rights (SDRs) that were explained by the sponsors of both bills, which are, of course, units of international currency exchange, and other composite units of exchange—to give these legal status for use in domestic Canadian contracts.

The second just carries this on a little farther, to say that the values expressed by these SDRs by gold and certain foreign currencies—and I will speak of those in a moment—are to be calculated in terms of Canadian dollars. The purpose of this is to remove what appears to be a legal ambiguity that might arise because of the changing role of gold and SDRs which is part of the IMF Agreement. Certain ambiguities might arise because of this changing role of gold and SDRs as international units of account. Other changes are to permit the Governor in Council to determine the current exchange rate values in Canadian dollars, so that the values of the assets held in the Exchange Fund Account can be readily ascertained in Canadian dollars. There is then a three-year averaging provision, which is somewhat controversial, and I will speak of that in a moment.

The fifth amendment is to permit the Exchange Fund Account to hold as assets certain securities of foreign governments with maturity of less than two years. The sixth empowers the Fund to lend its gold holdings.

The last of these amendments is at the request of the Auditor General's office and the Auditor General himself, which would change the present status of the Auditor General's audit report on the Fund from a direct report to Parliament to a report to the Minister of Finance. This has raised some discussion, and it was the subject of some amendments in the other place, which were not carried but were given very sympathetic consideration by the minister, who said that he did not care if it was the wish that the Auditor General report directly to Parliament on the Exchange Fund Account, that he would not object. However, the amendment was not carried.

I refer now to the items of the so-called technical amendments which impinge certainly on overall fiscal and monetary policy. I mentioned the three-year averaging. I do not think it is necessary for me to explain what the Fund is, but this is a fund utilized, under close surveillance by the Bank of Canada, to trade in international currencies.

● (2250)

The main purpose of the Fund is to protect the external value of the Canadian dollar. As was explained by the sponsor, the original Bretton Woods Agreements sought to establish international stability of currencies. Canada broke free of the Bretton Woods Agreements, and for very good reason. We were actually out of step with the undertakings when it seemed to become necessary, from the Canadian point of view, to float the Canadian dollar.

Over the years, there have been deficits in this account. Obviously, in international trading, sometimes you win; sometimes you lose. A rather extraordinary situation developed in that there was no way in which the Auditor General, or the Fund, could report its losses to the public accounts, or the Consolidated Revenue Fund, or the financial statement of Canada, whatever name you want to put on that document. It is, of course, the financial statement of Canada for the fiscal year.

The reason was that, given the IMF undertaking and the long history of stability in currency comparisons, it had never been contemplated that there would be a loss. When the Canadian dollar started to float, losses ensued. From 1970, those losses have been carried as a kind of footnote to the public accounts. This bill provides that those losses will be accounted for, and will be shown, in the public accounts of Canada. The Exchange Fund, again is, in effect, a part of the assets of Canada. It shows in the public accounts as such. However, up until now it has been impossible to show any losses. It made no sense to merely show a net profit in any given year. The result is a carry-over of the deficits in the account from 1970 to the present time. Those losses, presumably, will be written off in due course.

Up until the present time, the Auditor General has reported to Parliament on the operation of the Fund and, as I said, his audited report shows up in the public accounts. Up until now, it has been done on an annual basis. It has now been decided by the government that it would be better to make a report on the state of the Fund only every three years. A reason for that, notwithstanding that there are obvious reservations, is that the Fund will have variations in interest earnings, net profit on various exchange trading, net valuation adjustments, and so forth. Whether it is advisable to show the net position only once in three years or not is subject to some concern. The principle seems to have been generally accepted. The rationale, of course, is that, were it done on an annual basis, the report would merely set out the offsetting credits and debits which, in themselves, might not be entirely realistic.

To give you one example, in November of last year we experienced a tremendous outflow of capital from Canada in the amount of $800 million. In the following month, that $800 million came back. So, the argument is that to account for the Fund on an annual basis would not be realistic in terms of the whole set of transactions in which the Fund is involved, some of which, obviously would have longer term impacts.

Another one of these seven amendments which has caused some concern is the decision to require the Auditor General to report through a minister, or to a minister. No one seems to be quite sure as to what the difference is. Some of us have tried to find out in committee. I have asked that question myself several times in committee, but no one seems to be able to give me an answer.

At the present time, and until this bill becomes law, if it does become law, the situation is that there are two accounts, and only two accounts, on which the Auditor General reports directly to Parliament as opposed to reporting either through or to a minister. The first is the report of the Auditor General on the Consolidated Revenue Fund itself—the public accounts—and the other is his report on the Exchange Fund Account. No particular rationale has been given for this change. The Auditor General asked for it himself. His explanation is that the audits of crown corporations which are audited by the Auditor General—and that represents the majority of them—are reported to the responsible minister, and are tabled in Parliament in due course by the minister with the annual statement of the corporation. The argument put forward was that this fund, given its importance, should not be compared to the crown corporation situation; rather, it should be taken as an entirely different type of fund, with the Auditor General reporting directly to Parliament. The account would then be the subject of a different type of examination by Parliament from the examination it would be given were it merely tabled as part of an annual report of a given minister.

A rather interesting situation developed in that respect in that the act required the audit reporting on this fund to be made to Parliament. Actually, the exact wording is “to the House of Commons.” No one seems to know why that is so. Even the Deputy Auditor General, in giving his testimony before the committee, kept saying that it is a report to Parliament. He later corrected himself and said that it is a report to the House of Commons.

This is a matter, I suggest to the Leader of the Government, with which the Senate might concern itself. Fortunately, from that point of view, this reporting to the House of Commons will disappear should this bill become law. Although the specific problem will no longer be there, the thought behind it remains.

As we all know, every time we have royal assent, for some reason—and, again, no one has ever been able to explain the reason to me—certain bills which have been passed by Parliament, the House of Commons and the Senate, are tendered for royal assent by the Speaker of the House of Commons. They are not regarded as bills that require the consent of the House of Commons and the Senate. That is another matter which the Leader of the Government might wish to look into on some occasion.

Senator McIlraith: There is a reasonable explanation, but I do not think it would be wise for me to go into it at the moment. It is much too lengthy an explanation.

● (2300)

Senator Grosart: I know there is a reason for it, and I am aware of the reason. The very language used at the time indicates it, because it is when the Deputy of the Governor General in Her Majesty's name thanks her loyal subjects for their beneficence—I have forgotten the actual phraseology, but he thanks the loyal subjects outside of this chamber for their beneficence, but he does not thank the Senate for its beneficence on the very same bills.

Senator McIlraith: It is a correct usage.

Senator Grosart: Of course it is, but is it a sensible one? It is a matter that does arise in this connection, but I would say it was hardly sensible that the Auditor General would report on the Exchange Fund Account only to the House of Commons. That seems to have been an error and, whereas this other situation I am dealing with has some tradition behind it, I should still like to see the Senate thanked “for its beneficence” in passing these money bills.

Senator McIlraith: It can't be done.

Senator Grosart: It can be done, but I will not argue that point now. It is late at night.

The third aspect of the bill is the whole question of the external value of the Canadian dollar. We are in a period of very serious problems because of the deficit on our current account transactions internationally. All of the OECD countries last year had a deficit of about $20 billion. That is all the OECD countries. Of that, one-quarter was in Canada—$5 billion. This year that $5 billion has become $10 billion. There were other countries, of course, which had deficits. The United States deficit was $3.5 billion. That was the United States total deficit. Ours was $5 billion. The United Kingdom's was $2.5 billion. We think of the United Kingdom as having serious problems in relation to the International Monetary Fund in all of its external current account transactions, but their deficit was $2.5 billion compared to our $5 billion. Italy's was $2 billion. On the other hand, Japan and Germany had surpluses.

The minister was asked if he was not concerned about this. He said that it was a matter of concern, of course, but that there were explanations and he thought we could live with it. Well, I will not discuss that. I have my doubts as to whether we can live with a galloping deficit now of $10 billion when the total OECD deficit is $20 billion, but that is a matter really outside the scope of this bill.

Apart from these more or less so-called technical and somewhat policy amendments, the bill deals with this whole problem. It attempts—and one hopes it will be a successful attempt—to bring some kind of improvement into our international trade and, perhaps, to use another phrase, merchandise and currency account relations. They are not in good shape at the moment, but there are indications in this bill that there are ways by which improvement can be brought about.

It is rather interesting to note the minister's comments. He was asked why Germany is in such good shape when we are not. “Well,” he said, “Germany has had inflation, too, but Germany has some millions of migrant workers who take the inflation back home.” We don't have that situation. There are exceptions as between our situation and that of other countries.

So we can hope that this bill will give some kind of better control to our international currency transactions than we have had in the past. It may well raise a precautionary note about some of our lending. We have tended to be rather generous lenders from this account to others whose security may not be all that we would wish it to be. It certainly raises questions as to international policy and third nations, but there are other nations to whom we are lending money from this account—in effect, lending money—whose assurance of repayment, principal and interest, may not be all that one would expect in a normal transaction.

This raises the question as to whether the bill needs to go to committee. There are these technical matters. There are only two that have really raised any discussion, and I do not see any expectation that a discussion in any of our committees would really change the situation or bring forward any information that has not already been given to Parliament. However, I leave that to the sponsor or to the Leader of the Government to decide. So far as I am concerned I would not regard it as necessary that this bill go to committee. There may be other views.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Lang: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting. In doing so, may I extend my thanks to my colleague across the way for his elaboration on the contents and implications of this bill in a way which, frankly, I did not gather from the briefing papers I received from the department. I think it is because of his intervention that we now have a far better knowledge of the subject than we would otherwise have had. Therefore, I wish to express my personal appreciation for the work and study he has done and for the experience he has brought to the matter.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN AND BRITISH INSURANCE COMPANIES ACT

FOREIGN INSURANCE COMPANIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—COMMONS AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the amendments made by the House of Commons to Bill S-3, to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act and the Foreign Insurance Companies Act, which were presented on Tuesday, June 28.

Hon. John Morrow Godfrey moved that the amendments be now concurred in.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill was originally introduced into the Senate on February 22. It received second reading on February 24 and was considered by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on March 9, just two weeks after it had received first reading. The insurance industry was well aware of the contents of the bill and made several suggestions of a drafting nature which were accepted by the committee. Amendments were made to the bill at that time, and it received third reading on March 16. Apparently it took about two months before the investment community became aware of the implications of this bill, and it was not until that time that they had their lawyers examine in detail its contents. The result was that they came up with some suggestions to improve the drafting and to clarify certain parts of the bill which were accepted by Mr. Humphrys, the Superintendent of Insurance, and were proposed by the government in the committee of the House of Commons which sat on June 20. If the investment community had been aware of the contents of this bill earlier, before the Senate committee hearing, no doubt the proposals would have been made in time to be considered at those hearing.

• (2310)

There are 24 amendments in all, but since the bill deals separately with Canadian companies, British companies and foreign companies, 12 of the amendments are repetitions. Of the remaining 12, six deal with investment provisions. The first relates to bonds that are secured by a pledge of real estate, plant or equipment. Under the present act, plant and equipment can be accepted as a pledge only if it is owned by a corporation. Currently, some large projects are developed in the form of a limited partnership. Plant and equipment owned by the partnership, although it may be good security, would not qualify under the present wording because it is not owned by a corporation. One of the amendments, therefore, broadens this provision to accept plant and equipment pledged to a trustee as security where the plant and equipment is owned by a partnership as well as where it is owned by a corporation.

A second amendment deals with debentures. The bill, as passed by the Senate, provided that debentures issued by a corporation would qualify as investments for an insurance company, if the common or preferred stock of that corporation also qualified, provided that the indebtedness of the corporation evidenced by bonds, debentures or other evidences of indebtedness, other than mortgage debt, at the date of investment, did not exceed three times the average of this indebtedness, plus capital over the five years preceding the date of investment.

Objections were raised by the investment community and, in particular, legal counsel advising security issuers to the effect that this test, as written, would be difficult to interpret. It is noted that it is to be averaged over five years, but it did not say whether the average was to be taken daily, weekly, monthly or yearly. Furthermore, if the average started on the day of the investment it would mean that you would have to have an audit of the company on the dates the average was to be taken going back five years. Accordingly, it would have been practically impossible for any lawyer to give a legal opinion on a new issue as to whether it would qualify under this clause as an investment by an insurance company.

One of the amendments changes the wording slightly to base the test on a comparison of the total indebtedness of all kinds at the date of investment, with the average of the company's total indebtedness capital, and then they added the word "surplus" as well because some companies operate on retained earnings which represent a surplus, and this is now taken into account, as shown in the financial statement in each of its five financial years preceding the date of investment. So this clears up that ambiguity. You take the average of the investment shown at the end of each fiscal year, and, of course, there has already been an audit for those periods. A further change would make it clear that a company may apply this test on a consolidated basis if it owns subsidiaries. Also, if the company has been formed as a result of a merger or amalgamation, then the consolidated accounts of the merged corporation can be used in applying the test.

A further amendment, having to do with debentures, makes it clear that where it is necessary to determine the earnings of the corporation over a period preceding the date of investment and where the corporation has been formed as a result of an amalgamation, the consolidated record of the amalgamated companies can be taken into account.

With respect to common stocks, the bill, as passed, provides that common stocks would qualify as investments if the issuing corporation had paid a dividend in four of the five years preceding the date of investment, or had had earnings up to a specific standard in four of those five years. It was not clear whether a company could apply the test on the basis of either earnings or dividends, year by year. Accordingly, an amendment was made to make it clear that the test could be applied on the basis of dividends in the five-year period of earnings in the five-year period, but not dividends in some years and earnings in others.

Two other amendments relate to investments that may be deposited in Canada with a trust company by British and foreign companies. One relates to debentures. It provides that in addition to debentures that otherwise qualify, debentures of a Canadian corporation may be deposited if they are guaranteed by a foreign corporation and if the foreign corporation has an earnings record that would qualify its shares as investments, provided that the total indebtedness of the corporation, at the date of investment, does not exceed three times the average of its indebtedness, capital and surplus, as shown in its financial statement in each of its five financial years preceding the date of investment. This is the same test as is required for a domestic corporation. A second amendment in this respect would give the Minister of Finance power to refuse to accept securities payable in foreign currencies as deposits or assets in trust to cover Canadian liabilities or, alternatively, would empower him to impose conditions in respect of the acceptance of any such securities.

Apart from the above changes relating to investments, there were a few other minor ones. One deals with the provision in the bill permitting the par value of shares to be reduced below one dollar. The bill, as passed, would permit this to be done by by-law, where the by-law established a new class of shares. The amendment permits shares to be split, even if a new class of shares is not established. Now under the previous act, you could have par value down to one dollar, but you could only vote the shares for every $5 of par value shares that you had. In other words, if you owned one dollar par value shares, each five shares would have one vote. When this amendment provided that the shares can be below one dollar, a consequential amendment has to be made which similarly limits the right of voting to shares which have a below par value—e.g., if they have a par value of 50 cents it will take 10 of those shares to have one vote. This is done to maintain a balance between the voting power of shareholders and the voting power of participating policyholders.

The bill as passed by the Senate limited the assets that a Canadian company can maintain outside Canada. The provision was that, except with special consent of the Minister of Finance, a company could maintain outside of Canada only sufficient assets to cover its policy reserves, plus a pro rata portion of surplus. An amendment changes the reference to policy reserves to a reference to total liabilities, since the company may have liabilities other than its reserves.

A further amendment would make it clear that the actuarial bases chosen for the valuation of accident and sickness policies must be satisfactory to the superintendent. This is consistent with the provision relating to the valuation of life insurance policies.

Two other minor amendments are for the purpose of correcting cross-references.

● (2320)

Might I say that if the explanation I have given is sufficiently clear and I can answer satisfactorily any questions which any senator might wish to ask, I would suggest that there is no particular reason for sending this bill back to committee.

Senator Grosart: I thank the honourable senator for his full explanation of this amendment. However, the question seems to arise as to whether these were amendments to the amendments that were passed by the Senate, or whether they were not new amendments that someone thought should be made to the act when it was being amended. This raises the question as to how good a job the Senate did on the original amending act. Could we have an indication of the general nature of these amendments? Were they to the amendments or to new amendments to the act?

Senator Godfrey: These were amendments to the amendments that the Senate passed. I do not think the Senate can be criticized. I think it is an illustration that in the parliamentary process technical bills of this kind need an input from not only the industry concerned directly, but other segments of the business community indirectly concerned and the public generally. The Superintendent of Insurance overlooked the fact that it was of equal importance to the investment industry, and for some reason or other that industry was not aware of it. Had they been aware of it, they would have come forward with amendments or suggestions which could have been considered by the Senate committee.

I believe it is an illustration of the efficiency of the bicameral system in that there was sufficient time between passage of the bill by the Senate and consideration in committee by the House of Commons—about three months—for other members of the general public to go through the bill with a fine-tooth comb and, in effect, improve the drafting of the bill. That is really what the amendment amounts to.

Senator Lang: May I ask the honourable senator, following upon Senator Grosart's question, whether he thinks our technique in the Senate of giving notice of bills like this is adequate? Have we failed somewhere to give adequate notice to an interested section of the community, which has resulted in this referral back?

Senator Godfrey: I would say that we did. It did not occur to me or to the committee that in addition to the insurance industry the investment industry was vitally affected by the bill. I suppose it was a slip-up that they were not notified. However, they should have their own methods of finding out. The investment industry must take part of the blame for this, because it took them literally two months before they suddenly woke up to the fact that the bill affected them. Two months is too long a period. It was fortunate that there was a delay in the consideration of the bill by the House of Commons, and they were able to have a useful input. The bill had been improved by their suggestions, which were accepted by the Superintendent of Insurance and recommended to and proposed by the government.

Senator Grosart: Could Senator Godfrey give us an indication of the persons or entities that brought these suggestions to the House of Commons committee? Was it the investment industry or individual firms?

Senator Godfrey: I believe it was certain investment dealers. I do not know their names, but they suddenly woke up to the fact and asked their legal counsel to act for them and to look into the matter, which was done. They went through the bill with a fine-tooth comb and came up with their suggestions. It was probably the investment dealers, one or more of the larger houses.

Motion agreed to and amendments concurred in.

THE SENATE

APPOINTMENT OF SENATORS—DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from Monday, June 27, the debate on the inquiry of Senator Flynn, calling the attention of the Senate to the question of the appointment of senators.

Hon. George I. Smith: Honourable senators, I have some reticence about imposing on your good nature twice in one evening, particularly at this late hour after a dissertation of some length. I hasten to assure honourable senators that I shall be somewhat more brief on this occasion than I was when I spoke before, perhaps because of the advancing hour or perhaps because I do not have as much to say.

When I moved the adjournment of this debate, I did so after asking some questions of the government leader as to reasons why no Conservative senator had been appointed to replace Senator Blois who resigned some time ago. The Leader of the Government was, I believe it fair to say, a little reluctant to answer my question fully, but he did suggest that if I agreed to see him in private or wished to carry on some correspondence with him, he might be prepared and able to give some information, which I rather understood that he would prefer not to give in a public manner. I said I would be glad to consider his suggestion and to discuss it with my leader and colleagues to see what I should do.

That I have done. I have given considerable thought to the matter and have come to the conclusion that it would not be prudent of me to accept information on a confidential basis or on a basis, if not altogether confidential, which might inhibit me from making use of it. I would rather remain in a position where, if information becomes common knowledge, I could be sure that I was not the person who made it so. Consequently, although I thank the Leader of the Government for his very kind suggestion, he might agree that it would be prudent of me not to take advantage of his kindness.

There are one or two comments that I should like to make on the subject generally. It is clear from the remarks of the Leader of the Government, and indeed of others, that there are conditions attached to this question of appointing Conservative senators to replace those Conservative senators who for reasons of death, illness or age have ceased to be members of this chamber.

I recognize, of course, whose prerogative it is to make such appointments or, at any rate, to recommend them. I recognize that that is a prerogative which naturally is very jealously guarded. I think, however, it is a matter of public concern and public interest, and therefore a matter for public comment. I am not going to make very much comment, except to say that if, as seems to be recognized by the general tone of the discussion, it is right that the numbers of the opposition in this chamber should be maintained—some would say even increased—surely it is right to do it without the imposition of conditions. It is either right or it is wrong. If it is right, then it should be done. If it is wrong, then let us accept it as such and see what comes of that.

● (2330)

One apparent condition, from comments that have been made, is that a Conservative senator ought to resign before death takes him or before he reaches the magic age of 75. It seems to me that to make a stipulation of this kind is to deprive a Conservative senator of the right, which is his by virtue of his appointment, just the same as it is the right of every other senator, to serve out his term. It is a right that no Liberal senator is asked to give up in order that he may be replaced by a new Liberal senator.

Anyway, although I appreciate the suggestion that it would be a good thing to go round and remind Conservative senators that it is more important for them to watch the effluxion of time or the fleeting of health than it is for Liberal senators, I just suggest to the Leader of the Government that he embark upon a program of going around to some of his colleagues who might be in a condition to be the subject of such representations and say, "Look here, old man, I don't think you are going to live very long. You had better resign," or, "Look, you are going to be 75 in a little while and you are not as good as you used to be. How about resigning so that we can get a younger man?" One has only to state such a proposition to realize at once that it is not an easy thing to do. I suggest it is really not a fair thing to expect anybody to do in order to bring about something that seems to be right to accomplish.

I therefore close these brief remarks with my thanks to the Leader of the Opposition—

Senator Grosart: The Leader of the Government.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I was only thinking optimistically, as I heard today there was going to be an election this fall.

Senator Perrault: Where did you hear that?

Senator Smith (Colchester): I am sure my colleague was not being pessimistic. He was only doing what comes from practising very careful accuracy.

As I was saying, I thank the Leader of the Government for his suggestion. I would like to take advantage of it, but on reflection I think I should not. I do say I feel that the imposition of conditions in order to achieve something that appears to be right and in the public interest is not a course of action that commends itself to me.

Senator Perrault: I wonder if the honourable senator would permit a question? Would the honourable senator explain why, from the time of the Prime Minister's offer to appoint Conservative senators under certain conditions, I have yet to receive any list of any proposed Conservative appointments? Indeed, I cannot recall any suggestion advanced, except in a most peripheral and oblique way. Even with respect to "Conservative vacancies" in the Senate, or vacancies alleged to the Conservative by the loyal opposition, no names have yet been made known to me for any one of them. I must admit bafflement and some consternation about this fact.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I take it the Leader of the Government is saying that is one of the conditions.

Senator Perrault: No, that is not a condition.

Senator Smith (Colchester): If it is a condition—

Senator Perrault: I did not say it was.

Senator Smith (Colchester): If it is, there are two comments—

Senator McIlraith: He did not say that.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Just a second. Perhaps my honourable friend will be patient with me. If he wishes to ask me a question too I will be glad to answer him. Although I do not mind taking on three or four at once, it might be more conducive to orderliness if we did it one at a time.

I would say, first, that if that is a condition, my comments of a few moments ago are applicable. I think it is a condition which ought not to be imposed. I do not want to be too harsh, and I have tried to be very careful in what I have said. I think it is really not something that should be imposed. There are plenty of Conservatives who are well known to the Leader of the Government here and in the other place, although I must say that the Prime Minister has exhibited too close a knowledge of the weaknesses of some of those Conservatives, which perhaps means that he knows more about Conservatives than he ought to. In any event, I do not think he suffers from any lack of knowledge of Conservatives of very substantial ability who would make good appointments to this house, or to any other public institution.

It is true, I know—and I do not want to have the Leader of the Government feel I am in any way evading answering his question directly—that the proposition was made to one very prominent Conservative, which was not accepted. I know that.

Senator Perrault: I was aware of that.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I am well aware of that. I think, however, before the offer was made it was well known to the Prime Minister, and to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, that that particular person had committed himself to serve out his term as a member of Parliament, and had done so in such a way that it really would not be honourable of him to go back on that commitment, no matter what he might have thought of the proposition made to him. I do not express any view on whether he thought it was good or bad; I merely say that he had made a commitment. He is a man of honour and he felt, I am sure, that he had to keep that commitment.

I have talked almost as much in answering the question as the Leader of the Government did in asking it. I think my real answer is that the imposition of the condition of putting up a list is not an appropriate one. Consultation with the Leader of the Opposition in the other place and in this place would be appropriate, and could very readily be carried out. I believe satisfactory suggestions might arise from such consultation. But it must be perfectly obvious, to bring the obvious to everyone's attention, that the submission of a list is not a very satisfactory way for the leader of the party, whether he is in office or not in office, to deal with matters of this kind.

● (2340)

If my very good and honourable friend who wanted to embark upon the question a few minutes ago still wishes to do so, I shall be glad to entertain his inquiry.

Senator McIlraith: Honourable senators, I was merely trying to be helpful to the honourable senator, and point out to him that he had misrepresented, inadvertently and innocently, what the Leader of the Government in the Senate had said when he used the word "condition." What he did, in fact, was make a helpful suggestion to the honourable senator, rather than outline a condition. There is a distinction. That is the point I was seeking to make, but I apparently did not make it clearly.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I suppose the record will show just what was said. I thank the honourable senator for his desire to be helpful. Certainly, if it turns out that his understanding of what was said is correct, then what he said will have been very helpful because it will have corrected an impression I had which, with all respect to the honourable senator, I have not yet found to be dissipated. I may find that it is dissipated, however, when I look at the matter in print.

Senator Grosart: I wonder if I could ask the Leader of the Government if he did speak of conditions in his statement in reply to Senator Flynn.

Senator Perrault: No, senator, that was certainly not the thrust of my comments.

To clarify the situation, I think I should say, first of all, that the Prime Minister suggested a number of conditions in the case of those senators presently occupying seats in this chamber who may wish to resign, and for the ultimate appointment of replacements. I would go beyond that. I think, for example, of the late and respected Senator O'Leary. There is a vacancy there. I have, however, yet to receive, even in an informal way, any proposals as to a replacement for Senator O'Leary. I could go through the list of Conservative senators, but I am not suggesting that this is a condition at all. It seems to me that the opposition party knows the talents which exist in its ranks far better than the party in government. If there are outstanding people who should be considered for Senate appointment, I will welcome knowing their names. I want to be helpful, and that is the only spirit in which I advanced the proposal.

Senator Macdonald: May I ask the leader a question? He mentioned the possibility of names being submitted to him. Have names ever been submitted to him, or is it the understanding that the names should be submitted from the Leader of the Conservative Party to the Prime Minister's office, rather than through the leader as an intermediary?

Senator Perrault: I think there are two routes. First of all, because it is the Prime Minister's prerogative, the Leader of the Conservative Party should certainly communicate the names of those who he feels are appropriate for consideration for appointment to the Senate to the office of the Prime Minister. However, I suggest that there may be some value in having good communications on this subject with the Leader of the Government here, so that certain names may be made known and appropriate representations made from this chamber as well.

Senator Grosart: In this connection I wonder if I could make my own suggestion to the Leader of the Government. I suggest that he recognize the problems created by some of the suggestions that have been made, one of which is that nobody on this side knows at any given time whether it is the intention of the Prime Minister to recommend a summons from the Queen—which is what an appointment to the Senate is—for a particular vacancy. If the Prime Minister is disposed to make such a recommendation, the proper initiative might be for him to communicate with the Leader of the Opposition in the other place and say, "I am prepared to appoint a Conservative senator to fill a vacancy," and thus start the process of consultation.

With regard to our putting forward suggestions, I will say that I have been asked to do so. I have not put forward any suggestions, and do not intend to. I would regard it as presumptuous of me, as an individual senator, to go around suggesting names without consulting the Leader of the Conservative Party. Such a course of action might create difficulties for him, and I would not want to be in a position of forcing the Prime Minister to choose, in order to replace a Conservative senator, between a suggestion put forward by myself and a suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition in the other place. I merely suggest that if that initiative were taken by the Prime Minister, and perhaps it should be, it might solve this whole problem.

Senator Perrault: I think initiatives may be required on both sides. Certainly there is value in consultation concerning every aspect of this process. The Prime Minister, I am sure, feels a responsibility to consult with the opposition about any appointments of this kind. Perhaps a better system can be evolved, but in the meantime I hope initiatives will be taken on both sides in order to achieve the required result.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Since this has been rather an informal debate, I wonder if I might be permitted to say something more, which I think ought to be on the record.

There was some reference—and I am not prepared now to say precisely what the words were—to my questions in an earlier discussion as to a replacement for Senator Blois. There was some indication that what I thought was being called a condition was not met, namely, that notice of the intended resignation had not been given. I was closely connected with that matter, as was my colleague, the Whip, and the Leader and the Deputy Leader of the Opposition in the Senate. The intention was, I am quite sure, to submit that resignation either to the Whip or to the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate for the purpose of giving that notice. Somewhere, however—perhaps as a result of the somewhat sudden decision, or in the documentation which followed it—that went astray through no fault of any member of this house, or of any person in authority. I should think that in the circumstances, these very difficult consultations with the honourable senator having taken place, it is not really appropriate to say that because notice was not given the condition was not met. Every effort was made and intended to be carried out to see that that particular stipulation was met, and it was the fault of no one that it was not.

● (2350)

The Hon. the Speaker: As no other senator wishes to participate, this inquiry is considered as having been debated.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX*(See p. 1053)FOREIGN AFFAIRS*LOANS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES—ANSWER TO QUESTION

All loans to foreign governments made by CIDA fall into the following two categories except those noted in the footnotes to the table:

- 30-year loan at 3 per cent interest including 7 years of grace prior to the commencement of repayment. Repayment is made in 46 equal semi-annual installments.
- 50-year loan at 0 per cent interest including 10 years of grace prior to the commencement of repayment. Repayment is made in 80 equal semi-annual installments.

There were two write-offs of debts due to the crown by Pakistan shortly after the Pakistan-Bangladesh war. These were loans made to Pakistan for projects in the Bangladesh region prior to the war.

The write-offs were in the amount of $1,136,825.00, authorized by Vote 25b, Appropriation A at #1,1976 and $5,104,852.09, authorized by the Minister for External Affairs on May 23, 1972.

PROJECT DESCRIPTION	DATE SIGNED	AMOUNT OF LOAN	INTEREST	NUMBER OF YEARS	AMOUNT REPAID	COMMENCEMENT DATE OF REPAYMENTS
Antigua
Expansion Of Telephone System	April 24/74	$ 5,200,000.00	—	50	—
Barbados
Water Supply System	August 7/70	2,600,000.00	3%	30	—
Dairy Livestock	Sept. 20/67	250,000.00	—	50	—
Water Supply System II	August 29/75	3,100,000.00	3%	30	—
Sugar Industry	January 29/73	1,650,000.00	—	50	—
Dairy Development II	Sept. 7/73	560,000.00	—	50	—
Seawall International Airport	Sept. 27/73	10,000,000.00	3%	30	—
Belize
Water & Sewage System	Sept. 6/74	7,904,000.00	—	50	—
Grain Storage Marketing Facilities	Nov. 23/76	2,293,000.00	—	50	—
Agriculture	March 14/75	1,000,000.00	—	50	—
Industrial & Tourism	March 14/75	1,000,000.00	—	50	—
Dominica
Banana Industry Development	July 30/73	800,000.00	—	50	—
Poultry Processing Plant	April 25/74	205,000.00	—	50	—
Purchase Of Fertilizer	Nov. 11/76	500,000.00	—	50	—
Improvement Of Port Facilities	Aug. 11/76	800,000.00	—	50	—
Grenada
Supply Of Fertilizer	May 28/75	850,000.00	—	50	—
Guyana
Pure Water System	March 19/71	2,315,000.00	—	50	—
Electricity Corporation	Jan. 19/73	5,150,000.00	—	50	—
Topographical Survey I	Nov. 3/66	2,235,100.00	—	50	—
Installations of Navigational Aids	May 30/74	380,000.00	—	50	—
Well Drilling Equipment	June 12/75	965,000.00	—	50	—
Purchase of Twin Otter Aircraft	Aug. 29/74	1,100,000.00	—	50	—
Twin Otter Aircraft	May 16/68	452,490.98	—	50	—
Purchase of Aircraft	Dec. 22/69	2,397,616.96	—	50	—
Aerial Survey II	May 22/68	1,370,000.00	—	50	—
Aerial Mineral Survey	Oct. 8/70	615,772.96	—	50	—
					30,313.75	March 1977

PROJECT DESCRIPTION	DATE SIGNED	AMOUNT OF LOAN	INTEREST	NUMBER OF YEARS	AMOUNT REPAYED	COMMENCEMENT DATE OF REPAYMENTS
Jamaica
Construction of 9 Bridges	Nov. 4/71	$ 599,000.00	3%	30		Sept. 1974
Feasibility Studies	Aug. 2/67	1,294,065.30	3%	30	168,791.10
Construction Material	Oct. 2/68	304,269.98		50
Prefab Rural Schools	July 13/66	590,354.80		50	14,758.86	Sept. 1976
Prefab Rural Schools II	April 9/68	927,789.20		50
Jamaican Development Bank III	Aug. 23/74	500,000.00	3%	30
Olivier Bridge	Sept. 7/65	400,471.36		50	20,023.56	Sept. 1975
Jamaica Development Bank I	Nov. 11/70	1,290,331.00	3%	30
Water Supply System	Oct. 7/70	500,000.00	3%	30
Line of Credit	Nov. 12/76	10,000,000.00		50
Construction of 9 Bridges	April 13/76	1,600,000.00	3%	30
Jamaican Development Bank II	Aug. 23/74	2,000,000.00	3%	30
Construction 42 Primary School Units	Feb. 18/74	2,000,000.00	3%	30
Purchase of Paper	Nov. 28/73	300,000.00	3%	30
Construction of 11 Bridges	June 8/73	1,020,000.00	3%	30
Montego Bay Hospital II	Jan. 12/72	1,000,000.00	3%	30
Hospital Supplies Montego Bay	Mar. 31/69	729,230.67		50
Water Supply System	Aug. 2/67	1,200,000.00	3%	30	156,521.70	Sept. 1974
Water Resources Program	Aug. 15/69	1,500,000.00	3%	30	65,217.40	Sept. 1976
Road Engineering Studies	Oct. 20/71	3,000,000.00	3%	30
Technical Teacher Education Facility	Aug. 10/73	480,000.00	3%	30
Harbour View Sewage System	Sept. 7/65	819,395.26		50	40,969.76	Sept. 1975
Construction of 6 Bridges	Dec. 18/70	191,096.60		50	9,607.31	March 1977
V.H.F. Radio System	Nov. 1/66	768,584.81		50	26,432.98	March 1974
Rural Housing Supply	Feb. 7/67	173,702.77	3%	30	8,331.35	March 1977
Public Works Project	Nov. 1/66	666,508.20		50
Montserrat
Port Development	Aug. 13/76	550,000.00		50

PROJECT DESCRIPTION	DATE SIGNED	AMOUNT OF LOAN	INTEREST	NUMBER OF YEARS	AMOUNT REPAID	COMMENCEMENT DATE OF REPAYMENTS
St Lucia
Construction Water Development	July 25/74	$ 970,000.00	-	50	-
Water Supply System	Jan. 13/72	308,737.55	-	50	-
St Vincent
Marine Navigational Aids	June 10/75	350,000.00	-	50	-
Water Development	Sept. 21/73	795,000.00	-	50	-
Trinidad
Dairy Development	Aug. 13/69	810,000.00	3%	30	35,217.40	Sept. 1976
Piarco International Airport	Feb. 28/75	10,000,000.00	3%	30	-
Road & Bridge Maintenance Study	Nov. 25/74	400,000.00	3%	30	-
Aerial Survey (Phase II)	Dec. 20/68	750,000.00	3%	30	48,913.02	March 1976
Supply of Hospital	Dec. 20/68	486,000.00	3%	30	31,695.66	March 1976
Prefab Factory Shells	April 26/66	800,000.00	-	50	30,000.00	March 1976
Rural Electrification III	Feb. 5/73	2,313,000.00	3%	30	-
Forest Inventory	Mar. 31/76	300,000.00	3%	30	-
Dairy Development	Mar. 31/68	398,183.95	-	50	5,000.00	March 1977
Air Survey	May 13/66	750,000.00	-	50	28,125.00	March 1976
Rural Electrification I	Dec. 15/65	648,873.44	-	50	32,500.00	Sept. 1975
Lumber	Dec. 15/65	400,000.00	-	50	20,000.00	Sept. 1975
Transportation Survey	Feb. 24/66	392,600.00	-	50	14,722.50	March 1976
Dairy Development	April 26/66	500,000.00	-	50	12,500.00	Sept. 1976
Water Resources Survey	May 13/66	340,000.00	-	50	12,750.00	March 1976
Cargo handling Equipment	July 12/66	336,844.73	-	50	8,421.10	Sept. 1976
Feasibility Highway Study	Dec. 20/68	754,133.36	3%	30	49,182.60	March 1976
Rural Electrification II	Dec. 20/68	1,253,581.96	3%	30	82,565.22	March 1976
Fisheries Development	Dec. 20/68	226,987.81	3%	30	16,304.34	March 1976
Botswana
Power Development Scheme	Nov. 16/70	30,000,000.00	-	50	-
Road Construction	Jan. 20/75	5,000,000.00	-	50	-
Aeromagnetic Survey	July 18/75	2,000,000.00	-	50	-

PROJECT DESCRIPTION	DATE SIGNED	AMOUNT OF LOAN	INTEREST	NUMBER OF YEARS	AMOUNT REPAYED
E.A.C.
Locomotives	Oct. 28/70	$ 14,000,000.00	-	50	-
Port Handling Equipment	Dec. 18/72	33,500,000.00	-	50	-
Ghana
Akosombo Generator Station	July 24/69	6,113,000.00	-	50	-
Transmission Lines	July 24/69	1,750,000.00	-	50	-
Transformers & Equipment	July 17/71	1,317,000.00	-	50	-
Technical Training Centre	May 31/72	3,000,000.00	-	50	-
Water Supplies	July 23/73	3,000,000.00	-	50	-
Road Maintenance Equipment	Jan. 24/75	6,000,000.00	-	50	-
Lines of Credit	Jan. 24/75	5,000,000.00	-	50	-
Topographical Mapping	May 31/73	1,000,000.00	-	50	-
Water Supply System	Dec. 6/74	7,009,000.00	-	50	-
Purchase of Feed Grain	Nov. 30/76	5,000,000.00	-	50	-
Lines of Credit	June 22/71	998,129.00	-	50	-
Topographical Mapping	Sept. 24/71	1,200,000.00	-	50	-
Kenya
Road Maintenance Equipment	July 18/72	3,750,000.00	-	50	-
Construction Technical Teachers College	Dec. 20/73	5,350,000.00	-	50	-
Road Maintenance Equipment II	Dec. 10/74	11,400,000.00	-	50	-
Range Water Development Prog.	Nov. 29/74	2,600,000.00	-	50	-
Rangeland Ecological Monitoring Unit	Nov. 12/74	1,097,500.00	-	50	-
Aerial Mapping Survey	Oct. 22/69	409,873.00	-	50	-
Malawi
Purchase of Locomotives	July 22/71	1,600,000.00	-	50	-
Railway Development Project	Feb. 12/74	26,500,000.00	-	50	-
Malta
Lines of Credit	April 24/74	1,000,000.00	-	50	-

PROJECT DESCRIPTION	DATE SIGNED	AMOUNT OF LOAN	INTEREST	NUMBER OF YEARS	AMOUNT REPAYED	COMMENCEMENT DATE OF REPAYMENTS
Nigeria
Telecommunications III	Oct. 15/68	$ 8,000,000.00	3%	30	173,900.00	Sept. 1975
Locomotives	Mar. 11/71	20,000,000.00	-	50	-
Rehabilitation & Development	Dec. 8/72	3,000,000.00	-	50	-
Kainji Dam Generating Station	May 4/72	1,000,000.00	-	50	-
Telecommunications II	April 4/67	1,600,000.00	3%	30	82,981.00	March 1974
Lines of Credit	May 4/72	5,000,000.00	-	50	-
Telecommunications	Oct. 11/72	1,750,000.00	-	50	-
Lines of Credit	Jan. 28/74	12,000,000.00	-	50	-
Telecommunications System	Nov. 5/65	3,423,789.41	6%	35	1,225,000.00 ①	Sept. 1970
Swaziland
Purchase of Livestock & Equipment	Nov. 30/76	1,200,000.00	-	50	-
Tanzania
Power Transmission Lines	May 27/72	7,550,000.00	-	50	-
Water System	Jan. 31/73	33,700,000.00	-	50	-
Semi Automatic Bakery	Aug. 6/71	1,350,000.00	-	50	-
Electrical Equipment	Nov. 26/70	2,000,000.00	-	50	-
Lines of Credit	May 27/72	2,000,000.00	-	50	-
Topographical Mapping	Mar. 2/73	14,050,000.00	-	50	-
Ruaha Hydro Electric	Jan. 31/73	15,000,000.00	-	50	-
Investment Bank	Mar. 4/75	2,000,000.00	-	50	-
Master Plan Dares Salaam	Dec. 23/66	430,000.00	-	50	5,625.00	March 1977
Forest Inventory	Nov. 26/70	1,041,133.41	-	50	-
Study of Makuyuni Road	Mar. 16/71	286,482.00	-	50	-
Investment Bank	Aug. 3/72	2,000,000.00	-	50	-
Mapping Survey & Material	April 19/69	1,065,213.62	-	50	-
Transmission Lines	Jan. 26/67	1,999,430.80	-	50	25,000.00	March 1977
Uganda
Tourism & Appliance Industries	Jan. 27/72	1,350,000.00	-	50	-
Cattle & Equipment	Nov. 17/69	1,100,000.00	-	50	-

PROJECT DESCRIPTION	DATE SIGNED	AMOUNT OF LOAN	INTEREST	NUMBER OF YEARS	AMOUNT REPAID	COMMENCEMENT DATE OF REPAYMENTS
Zambia
200 Railway cars	Dec. 11/73	$ 4,700,000.00	-	50	-
40 Railway Tank Cars	July 5/73	1,300,000.00	-	50	-
Lines of Credit	Nov. 5/75	10,000,000.00	-	50	-
Railway Board	Nov. 11/70	4,000,000.00	-	50	-
Afghanistan
Twin Otter Aircraft	May 23/71	1,272,153.00	-	50	-
Bangladesh
Earth Satellite Station	Aug. 30/73	8,000,000.00	-	50	-
Purchase of Wheat	May 29/73	10,000,000.00	-	50	-
Burma
Purchase of Twin Otter Aircraft	Sept. 4/76	8,400,000.00	-	50	-
Sri Lanka
Mechanized logging	Jan. 26/71	3,449,000.00	-	50	-
Locomotives	Oct. 16/73	6,076,414.00	-	50	-
Commodities	Aug. 1/74	2,200,000.00	-	50	-
Commodities	Mar. 12/75	2,100,000.00	-	50	-
Purchase of Commodities	Nov. 11/75	12,000,000.00	-	50	-
Agriculture Sector Line of Credit	Oct. 21/76	10,000,000.00	-	50	-
(Asbestos) Commodities	Feb. 18/69	1,000,000.00	-	50	-
Commodities & Equipment	Aug. 13/71	2,500,000.00	-	50	-
Commodities	Jan. 11/66	994,814.55	-	50	-
Industrial Commodities & Machinery	Aug. 15/70	2,300,000.00	-	50	-
Asbestos (Commodities)	Sept. 8/67	499,797.93	-	50	-
Hydro-Electric Development	May 20/68	553,064.50	-	50	-
(Newsprint) Commodities	Feb. 18/69	1,000,000.00	-	50	-
Commodities	Aug. 31/72	1,000,000.00	-	50	-
Commodities & Equipment	Oct. 16/73	1,615,000.00	-	50	-
					37,305.54	March 1976

PROJECT DESCRIPTION	DATE SIGNED	AMOUNT OF LOAN	INTEREST	NUMBER OF YEARS	AMOUNT REPAID	COMMENCEMENT DATE OF REPAYMENTS
Newsprint (Commodities)	May 15/68	$ 1,250,000.00	-	50	-
Commodities	Sept. 21/69	2,000,000.00	-	50	-
Katunayake Airport	Mar. 22/66	1,500,000.00	-	50	56,250.00	March 1976
India
Commodities & Fertilizer	July 18/73	50,000,000.00	-	50	-
Turbine Generator Equipment	Aug. 9/73	3,972,000.00	-	50	-
Potash Fertilizer	Nov. 27/73	10,000,000.00	-	50	-
Potash Fertilizer	Dec. 6/74	10,000,000.00	-	50	-
Purchase of Fertilizer	Oct. 24/75	10,000,000.00	-	50	-
Potash Fertilizer	Oct. 27/76	10,000,000.00	-	50	-
Synthetic Rubber	Mar. 16/73	7,500,000.00	-	50	-
Earth Satellite Stat	Dec. 30/72	1,742,000.00	-	50	-
Commodities & Fertilizers	June 10/72	50,000,000.00	-	50	-
Port of Kandla & Halda	Aug. 12/71	3,600,000.00	-	50	-
Development Line of Credit	July 16/71	20,000,000.00	-	50	-
Industrial Credit	July 16/71	16,500,000.00	-	50	-
Equipment & Material	Feb. 8/68	19,481,128.47	-	50	-
Commodities & Fertilizers	April 7/71	40,000,000.00	-	50	264,250.00	March 1977
Oil & Natural Gaz	April 7/71	15,000,000.00	-	50	-
Diesel Locomotives	Sept. 2/70	5,914,720.50	-	50	-
Commodities & Fertilizers	Aug. 25/70	13,000,000.00	-	50	-
Commodities & Fertilizers	Aug. 22/70	17,000,000.00	-	50	-
Telecommunications Equipment	Sept. 30/69	40,000,000.00	-	50	-
Fertilizer Material	Aug. 6/69	8,000,000.00	-	50	-
Commodities	Aug. 6/69	22,300,000.00	-	50	-
Fertilizer Material	Dec. 20/68	15,000,000.00	-	50	-
Commodities	Dec. 20/68	15,000,000.00	-	50	-
Industrial Commodities	Oct. 27/67	10,000,000.00	-	50	-
Electric Power Project	Oct. 27/67	11,000,000.00	-	50	-
Geological Survey	July 28/67	2,000,000.00	-	50	25,000.00	March 1977
Chemical Fertilizer Material	July 28/67	10,000,000.00	-	50	-
Specific Commodities	Feb. 21/67	11,726,229.30	-	50	148,125.00	March 1977
Mainland Locomotives	Dec. 28/66	6,998,127.38	-	50	87,500.00	March 1977
Diesel Locomotives	April 20/66	2,201,142.00	-	50	82,542.00	March 1976

PROJECT DESCRIPTION	DATE SIGNED	AMOUNT OF LOAN	INTEREST	NUMBER OF YEARS	AMOUNT REPAID	COMMENCEMENT DATE OF REPAYMENTS
Indonesia
Two Twin Otter Aircraft	Mar. 10/72	$ 1,306,665.45	-	50	-
Industrial Commodities	Sept. 6/71	4,000,000.00	-	50	-
Lines of Credit	Oct. 30/72	6,000,000.00	-	50	-
School Equipment	Aug. 11/75	2,000,000.00	-	50	-
Sulawesi Bridges	April 19/73	7,200,000.00	-	50	-
Textbook & Textbook Cover Paper	Aug. 15/73	13,000,000.00	-	50	-
Civil Aviation Project	May 4/73	25,000,000.00	-	50	-
Lines of Credit	May 4/73	22,191,471.21	-	50	-
Lines of Credit	Jan. 28/76	25,000,000.00	-	50	-
Gas Turbine Generating Sets	Feb. 27/75	12,420,000.00	-	50	-
Water Resources Project	Aug. 25/76	10,000,000.00	-	50	-
Korea
Dairy Development	Sept. 15/67	999,241.71	3%	30	130,335.90	Sept. 1974
Laos
Nam Noum II Hydroelectric	June 25/74	2,500,000.00	-	50	-
Malaysia
Power System Expansion	Aug. 27/76	7,500,000.00	3%	30	-
Temengor Hydroelectric Project	June 30/71	3,500,000.00	3%	30	-
Sabah Forest Inventory	Feb. 11/75	557,050.15	3%	30	36,329.34	March 1976
Feasibility Studies Airport	May 21/70	396,276.00	-	50	-
Pahang Tenggara Region	May 21/70	2,426,100.81	3%	30	62,500.00	March 1977
Nepal
Twin Otter Aircraft	Nov. 16/70	2,500,000.00	-	50	-
Pakistan
Exploration Equipment	Nov. 30/74	8,200,000.00	-	50	-
Commodities	Sept. 18/73	30,000,000.00	-	50	-
Fuel Fabrication Olant	Dec. 10/73	1,700,000.00	-	50	-

PROJECT DESCRIPTION	DATE SIGNED	AMOUNT OF LOAN	INTEREST	NUMBER OF YEARS	AMOUNT REPAID	COMMENCEMENT DATE OF REPAYMENTS
Line of Credit	Dec. 22/73	$10,000,000.00	-	50	-
Well Drilling Rig	May 27/76	6,500,000.00	-	50	-
Two Hydroelectric Generators	July 20/74	13,000,000.00	-	50	-
Commodities	July 5/75	35,000,000.00	-	50	-
Line of Credit	April 4/75	5,000,000.00	-	50	-
Line of Credit	Nov. 12/75	10,000,000.00	-	50	-
Earth Satellite Station	April 30/70	7,095,421.00	-	50	-
High Voltage Transmission Lines	June 23/70	4,500,000.00	-	50	-
Nuclear Power Project	Dec. 29/65	23,362,900.00	-	50	876,108.75	March 1976
Motor Vehicles & Data Equipment	July 3/70	71,604.82	-	50	-
Commodities	Aug. 16/69	4,700,000.00	-	50	-
Fertilizer	Nov. 12/69	12,300,000.00	-	50	-
Industrial Commodities	Sept. 2/70	5,500,000.00	-	50	-
Industrial Commodities	Oct. 13/67	6,000,000.00	-	50	-
Chemical Fertilizer	Oct. 13/67	5,000,000.00	-	50	-
Telephone Cables Copper	Aug. 20/68	2,000,000.00	-	50	-
Tarbela fund Agreement	Nov. 23/74	5,000,000.00	-	50	-
Commodities	Feb. 20/69	9,500,000.00	-	50	-
Commodities	Mar. 27/73	10,000,000.00	-	50	-
Phosphate Fertilizer	Jan. 2/75	9,400,000.00	-	50	-
Commodities & Fertilizers	April 24/70	10,500,000.00	-	50	-
Locomotive Spare Parts	April 2/71	1,000,000.00	-	50	-
Single Circuit Transmission Line	Dec. 10/73	41,000,000.00	-	50	-
Phillippines
Lines of Credit	Nov. 12/74	6,330,000.00	-	50	-
Thailand
School Equipment	May 9/67	1,000,000.00	-	50	-
Turkey
Telephone & Communications	Jan. 9/73	9,850,000.00	3%	30	-

PROJECT DESCRIPTION	DATE SIGNED	AMOUNT OF LOAN	INTEREST	NUMBER OF YEARS	AMOUNT REPAID
Algeria
Equipment-Merchant Marines	Sept. 25/74	$ 1,000,000.00	-	50	-
Silo's	May 16/73	40,000,000.00	-	50	-
Preliminary Studies	April 3/69	700,000.00	-	50	②
Fish Refrigeration Facilities	Nov. 13/70	500,000.00	-	50	-
Line of Credit	June 1/73	15,000,000.00	-	50	-
Imped I	Sept. 4/76	2,550,000.00	-	50	-
Imped II	Sept. 9/76	1,000,000.00	-	50	-
Forest Protection & Conservation	Nov. 13/70	600,000.00	-	50	-
Cameroun
Trans-Cameroun Railway	Aug. 21/75	8,000,000.00	-	50	-
Road Development	May 17/74	5,500,000.00	-	50	②
Expansion Port of Douala	Jan. 29/76	29,000,000.00	-	50	-
Lines of Credit	Oct. 2/74	1,500,000.00	-	50	-
Congo Brazzaville
Civil Aviation	Dec. 29/73	4,080,000.00	-	50	-
Congo Ocean Railway	Nov. 30/74	11,675,000.00	-	50	-
Zaire
Forest Development I	July 19/71	870,000.00	-	50	②
Forest Development II	June 11/74	3,800,000.00	-	50	②
Transportation Study	Sept. 9/72	4,993,000.00	-	50	②
Telecommunications	June 19/73	36,000,000.00	-	50	-
Benin
Polytechnique University	Sept. 6/72	11,500,000.00	-	50	-
Hydor-Transmission Lines	Aug. 23/69	4,160,000.00	-	50	-
Panafrican Telecommunications	May 14/75	5,040,000.00	-	50	-

PROJECT DESCRIPTION	DATE SIGNED	AMOUNT OF LOAN	INTEREST	NUMBER OF YEARS	AMOUNT REPAID
Ivory Coast
Geological Survey	May 10/72	$ 3,300,000.00	-	50	-
Educational Television	April 24/76	2,500,000.00	-	50	-
Line of Credit	Jan. 22/74	6,000,000.00	-	50	-
Transmission Lines	May 2/70	6,450,000.00	-	50	-
Mali
Civil Aviation	June 8/73	1,680,000.00	-	50	-
Panafrican Telecommunications	May 14/75	6,720,000.00	-	50	-
Mauritania
Road Construction	Dec. 10/75	4,200,000.00	-	50	-
Morocco
Land Development	Dec. 18/70	500,000.00	-	50	-
Teachers Training Schools	Sept. 8/75	1,745,000.00	-	50	-
Line of Credit	Sept. 13/73	5,000,000.00	-	50	-
National Cadastral Survey	Dec. 20/69	4,385,000.00	-	50	-
Niger
Purchase of Small Boats	Mar. 8/72	1,850,000.00	-	50	-
Transmission Lines	Mar. 21/74	6,500,000.00	-	50	-
Panafrican Telecommunications	May 14/75	4,080,000.00	-	50	-
Construction of Highway	Dec. 18/70	32,500,000.00	-	50	-
Senegal
Motorisation of Boats	July 12/72	2,710,000.00	-	50	-
Civil Aviation	June 15/73	1,680,000.00	-	50	-
Panafrican Telecommunications	May 14/75	3,840,000.00	-	50	-
L'Ecole Polytechnique de Thiès	Feb. 21/75	4,555,000.00	-	50	-
Refrigeration Plant for Fish	July 12/72	880,000.00	-	50	-

PROJECT DESCRIPTION	DATE SIGNED	AMOUNT OF LOAN	INTEREST	NUMBER OF YEARS	AMOUNT REPAYED
Togo
Hydo Electric Lines	Aug. 19/69	$ 4,216,200.00	-	50	-
Tunisia
Commodities	May 13/72	3,000,000.00	-	50	-
Construction of a Dam	Mar. 7/75	55,000,000.00	-	50	-
Irrigation Equipment	June 8/74	1,600,000.00	-	50	-
Lines of Credit	June 8/73	15,000,000.00	-	50	-
Purchase of 22 Locomotives	May 13/72	9,300,000.00	-	50	-
Transmission Lines	June 8/73	23,925,000.00	-	50	-
Korba Transmission Lines	Aug. 23/69	1,175,000.00	-	50	-
Wireless Telephone System	May 13/72	2,300,000.00	-	50	-
Equipment Agriculture Exploration	June 8/74	2,640,000.00	-	50	-
Commodities	Dec. 10/70	2,900,000.00	-	50	-
Airport Equipment	Aug. 24/68	2,600,000.00	-	50	-
Medical Equipment	Nov. 18/72	400,000.00	-	50	-
	Nov. 18/72	1,975,000.00	-	50	-
Upper Volta
Public Transportation	Sept. 9/75	900,000.00	-	50	-
Panafrican Telecommunications	May 14/75	2,750,000.00	-	50	-
Argentina
Feasibility Study	Feb. 21/67	756,000.00	-	50	-
Bolivia
Study of Roads (Rio Beni)	Nov. 17/71	1,717,000.00	-	50	-
Central American Bank
Financing Sub Loans	April 26/67	2,812,000.00	-	50	-

PROJECT DESCRIPTION	DATE SIGNED	AMOUNT OF LOAN	INTEREST	NUMBER OF YEARS	AMOUNT REPAYED	COMMENCEMENT DATE OF REPAYMENTS
Brazil
Hydro Electric	Mar. 12/69	$ 9,320,000.00	3%	30	364,496.23	March 1976
Mineral Resources Survey	July 9/74	4,400,000.00	3%	30	-
International Airport	Mar. 12/69	847,000.00	-	50	-
Chile
Technological Field	June 28/67	4,320,000.00	-	50	-	April 1975
Telecommunications	May 23/68	4,320,000.00	3%	30	365,738.36
Colombia
Pre Investment Studies	April 21/68	1,080,000.00	-	50	-
Fonade	Mar. 18/76	3,000,000.00	3%	30	-
Line of Credit	July 10/75	5,000,000.00	-	50	-
Integrated Rural development	Dec. 17/76	13,500,000.00	3%	30	-
Hydro Electric	Sept. 4/69	16,740,000.00	-	50	-
Cuba
Line of Credit	Mar. 18/75	10,000,000.00	3%	30	-
Dominican Republic
Electrification Program	Mar. 6/72	7,474,000.00	-	50	-
Ecuador
Guyas River Basin	Aug. 5/66	1,260,000.00	-	50	15,555.56	Sept. 1976
Feasibility Studies	Feb. 24/71	2,808,000.00	-	50	-
Electrification Program	April 19/72	8,888,000.00	-	50	-
El Salvador
Acayulta Port Development	Mar. 16/76	3,240,000.00	-	50	637,377.00	March 1971
Expansion Port of Acayutla	Nov. 19/70	2,000,000.00	-	50	94,426.92	Sept. 1975

PROJECT DESCRIPTION	DATE SIGNED	AMOUNT OF LOAN	INTEREST	NUMBER OF YEARS	AMOUNT REPAID
Guatemala
Construction of Coffee Plant	Mar. 16/76	$ 500,000.00	-	50	-
Mexico
Engineering Studies	Mar. 31/66	112,239.00	-	50	-
Nicaragua
Equipment for Reconstruction in Managua	July 30/73	1,900,000.00	-	50	-
Paraguay
Highway Studies	Nov. 9/66	799,843.48	-	50	-
Peru
Feasibility Studies	Feb. 8/68	151,008.74	-	50	-
Financing of Cofide	Sept. 25/75	3,000,000.00	3%	30	-
Line of Credit	Sept. 25/75	5,000,000.00	-	50	-
African Dev Bank
Lines of Credit	July 3/73	5,000,000.00	-	50	-
Ardean Dev Corp
Lines of Credit	Mar. 29/74	5,000,000.00	-	50	-

Notes: 1. 35 year loan at 6% interest including 5 years of grace prior to the commencement of repayments.
Repayment is made in 60 equal semi-annual installments.

2. 50 year loan at 0% interest including 10 years of grace prior to the commencement of repayments.
Repayment is made in 40 equal annual installments.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, July 6, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

HELSINKI DECLARATION—CANADIAN DELEGATION AT REVIEW
CONFERENCE IN BELGRADE—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, on June 28 Senator Yuzyk asked two questions of the leader.

The first question was:

Honourable senators, I should like the Leader of the Government in the Senate to provide us with the names of the chairman and members of the Canadian delegation representing Canada at the Review Conference on the Helsinki Declaration in Belgrade.

The answer is that those representing Canada at the meeting which began in Belgrade on June 15 to prepare for the main substantive meeting which is to take place in the fall are as follows:

Head: W. T. Delworth, former Ambassador to Stage II of the CSCE negotiations at Geneva, Ambassador to Hungary.

Members: L. A. Delvoie, Canadian Embassy, Brussels; Commander J. Toogood, Department of National Defence, Ottawa; C. T. Court, Canadian Embassy, Belgrade.

The second question was:

Can we expect parliamentarians from both chambers to be chosen to participate actively in the Canadian delegation?

The answer is:

A decision on the composition of the Canadian delegation to the main meeting will be taken closer to the event. The government has an open mind on this question. It will, however, want the composition of the delegation to be consistent with the pattern set by other friendly countries.

● (1410)

Senator Yuzyk: I am grateful for this information, and I am pleased that the answer has been put in such a fashion. We are aware, of course, that the United States is sending parliamentarians—that is, members of both houses—to this conference, as well as, Greece. Both those countries are friendly.

JAMES BAY AND NORTHERN QUEBEC NATIVE CLAIMS SETTLEMENT BILL

MOTION FOR THIRD READING—MOTION NEGATIVED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion in amendment of Senator Flynn to the motion of Senator Bourget for the third reading of Bill C-9, to approve, give effect to and declare valid certain agreements between the Grand Council of the Crees (of Quebec), the Northern Quebec Inuit Association, the Government of Quebec, la Société d'énergie de la Baie James, la Société de développement de la Baie James, la Commission hydro-électrique de Québec and the Government of Canada and certain other related agreements to which the Government of Canada is a party.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, it has been up till now—I suppose I am not closing the debate, but if that were the wish of the house I would have no objection—an interesting debate on the amendment I moved, but I would say also that I have the impression it has been a strange debate.

What prompted me to propose that amendment is the report of the committee reporting the bill without amendment and expressing the unanimous concern—unanimous, I insist—of its members with regard to third parties' rights, people who are not party to the agreement which this bill seeks to ratify and which affects those third parties. I repeat, members of the committee unanimously agreed that third parties were affected by this legislation without being party to the agreement, without having the possibility of deriving any benefit from it.

Why did the committee not move an amendment reflecting that concern? I feel two senators have explained why in different ways, Senator Laird and Senator Buckwold. Senator Laird feared that an amendment at this stage of the legislative process could prevent the legislation being passed during this session. A valid reason, but not very serious in my opinion. And then Senator Buckwold said he feared that acceptance of an amendment would lead the Quebec government to make a pretext of that amendment for not abiding by the terms of the agreement vis-à-vis the parties with whom they agreed. As I said, that is a little illogical since on the one hand the report called upon the good faith of the Government of Quebec, and on the other hand Senator Buckwold feared that the Quebec government would see that as a pretext for not accepting the obligations they had assumed under the agreement. But it was acknowledged in the report of the committee that third parties were affected, that there was at least a serious doubt that their rights could be jeopardized and that something should be done.

Therefore we had a debate in which we heard some interesting and some rather naive speeches. But all of a sudden, it was felt that things were changing. The government, I repeat, the government realized that the Senate was concerned, that the Senate might possibly accept and vote for the amendment. So the question of principle vanished. Tactics became the order of the day. What mattered was the faithfulness, loyalty and the protection of the government. Then we noted the strategy in which, first of all, the government leader said: The government does not want any amendment and I call on your loyalty. A call to arms. That faithfully sums up what Senator Perrault said. His speech did not mean anything else: you must support the government, whether or not you believe the amendment to be relevant. The debate continued and as concern was still lingering, because it could not be allayed by such an unconvincing speech, then they called on other combatants who were eager to join in the argument. Senator Robichaud was the first one chosen because, in the public opinion, he is a defender of the minorities in general, and when Senator Robichaud rose, the government leader applauded in advance the speech he was going to make. So what he said did not surprise me. His speech was mostly beside the point. He defended the agreement itself. He said: "The agreement is right". We never thought of voting against the agreement. The amendment does not change at all the agreement as far as the Crees and the Inuit represented are concerned. The problem was not on the agreement itself. Finally, the defender of minorities said: "Well, the small minority which is not party must fend for itself." So that was the first shot to rescue the government which, of course, does not want the amendment to be passed.

Then a second shot, from Senator Croll. Why? Because Senator Croll is reputed to be the defender of the ordinary citizen. So, it is quite natural. They said that if Senator Croll is not concerned about that minority, it is a sign that it has no importance because he is reputed to be the defender of the weak. That is just about what the speech of Senator Croll amounts to, because he spoke in terms that ran somewhat contrary to the report of the committee, though he had approved it.

But that was yet not enough, because there was still some concern in the Senate. So out with another big shot, the biggest of them all, the Deputy Leader of the Government. Yesterday, he delivered a speech he had not written himself, but which he made his, and which was prepared by the Department of Justice.

Senator Langlois: That is totally untrue.

Senator Flynn: Written by the Department of Indian Affairs then. He told us himself that his source was the Department of Indian Affairs.

Senator Langlois: I said no such thing.

Senator Flynn: He recited it with disconcerting fervor, disconcerting, because last night his attitude was totally different from the stand he took in committee. His complete turnaround cannot be qualified in parliamentary terms.

Senator Langlois: You are asked not to preach.

Senator Flynn: Ah! preaching is what my learned friend tried to do to us, yesterday. That was quite interesting. He said, "You know, sir, you are quite right but, on the other hand, you are quite wrong."

We know all about Senator Langlois' sermons. He has to correct everybody and there is not a single word which remains untouched in the official report, if it does not suit him.

At any rate, that is the way I describe the debate until now. That may not be the end; we may see others because you never know if worry prevails. As far as I am concerned, there is no more worry. I know beforehand that the amendment will be defeated. I do not make a personal thing of it. It has been said, "It is Senator Flynn's amendment". That amendment results from the proceedings of the Senate committee to which the bill had been referred. It is not an amendment from Senator Flynn. It is not an amendment from the opposition. It is an amendment resulting from the feelings of the members of the committee. The problem in the Senate is not raised by Senator Flynn nor by the opposition but by a minority which expresses concern that their rights be extinguished with that legislation. That is the matter at issue in the Senate.

● (1420)

[English]

I have described the debate up until now as I see it. A great many things have been said that have no relevance whatsoever to the question that brings about the proposed amendment. For that reason I must again try to summarize the question before the Senate. The question is one of the acquisition by the Government of Quebec of an area comprising 400,000 square miles in the northern part of that province. The Government of Quebec is asking the Parliament of Canada—the Parliament of Canada, not the National Assembly of Quebec—to extinguish all claims, rights, title and interests, whatever they may be and wherever they may be, in and to the territory, and it is doing so on the basis that it has concluded an agreement with two groups, one being the Inuit and the other the Crees. The Government of Quebec is asking the Parliament of Canada, on the basis of its having reached a settlement with two groups, to extinguish all claims, rights, title and interests of all Indians and all Inuit, whether a party to the agreement or not.

I realize that the Government of Quebec needs this authority for the realization of the James Bay project. There is no doubt about that, and no one on this side of the chamber, or anywhere else in Parliament, has taken issue with the fact that the Government of Quebec needs to acquire the territory in question and that, to that end, all claims, rights, title and interests must be extinguished.

The only problem is whether by doing so—and this is precisely what happens under clause 3(3) of the bill—whether by doing so we would be extinguishing the claims, rights, title and interests of persons who are not a party to, or represented by a party to, the agreement. That is the question before the Senate.

I suggest that the committee came to the conclusion that there were third parties—parties who were not included in the agreement. These parties would not be able to participate in any of the advantages contained in the agreement, notwithstanding the fact that they had—and I think the evidence was clear on this point—claims, rights, title and interests in the territory in question.

Are we going to dispossess these people in this way? Are we going to take away their claims, rights, title and interests in this way? That was the concern of the committee. That is why the committee added a rider to its report.

It was strange to see the number of about-turns in connection with this report. The report, after all, was unanimous. To my mind, of those who spoke in opposition to the amendment, only Senators Laird and Buckwold did so in a logical way. There was some logic to their respective positions. Since I have already dealt with their arguments, I see no need to discuss them further.

One has to keep in mind that the parties to the agreement are a certain number of Indians and a certain number of Inuit. These people, by the agreement, have agreed to transfer all their claims, rights, title and interests in the territory in question to the Government of Quebec in consideration of the payment of a sum of money and other valid considerations, such as the right to occupy, hunt, fish, and so forth. But you will realize, honourable senators, that nobody who is party to a contract can give anything other than what he himself possesses. Nemo dat qui non habet. I am sure Senator Goldenberg, who is very well versed in Latin, knows what that means.

[Translation]

No one gives what he does not have, and even the most beautiful woman in the world, they say, cannot give more than what she has.

Senator Goldenberg: That is true.

Senator Riel: It is not a literal translation.

Senator Flynn: To a free-thinker, this translation is quite literal, Senator Riel.

[English]

Anyway, you cannot ask these parties to give what does not belong to them but that which belongs to third parties.

[Translation]

Senator Marchand, for instance, was concerned about the number of people who might not be covered by the agreement. Well, in committee, for example, Mr. Daniels stated that in his view there are as many Indians or Inuit who are not covered by the agreement than there are who are covered. I do not think it is necessary for me to quote his words, but I have his statement here, should anyone question my assertion.

Besides, last night, Senator Langlois provided us with a lot of information, as I said, which be obtained—and I have no objection—from the Department of Indian Affairs. This information shows that approximately 4,000 Indians or Inuit have interests, have maintained they have interests. Therefore, if we consider their numbers, they form quite an important group. As far as Senator Marchand is concerned, there is another matter I would like to raise briefly. Senator Marchand stated that if these 4,000 people did not want to join others, it was too bad for them, just like under labour law. Well, I want to point out to Senator Marchand that from what I know of labour law—

Senator Marchand: Madam Speaker, on a point of order, I did not say such a thing as Senator Flynn suggests.

Senator Flynn: Let us say that I was paraphrasing his remarks, but what I meant is that in any case, when a union is certified by a majority of workers, when they negotiate a collective agreement, even those who do not want to be members of that union benefit from the collective agreement. They may have to pay dues according to the Rand formula, but those conditions which are negotiated by the union apply to all, whether they are members of the union or not. Therefore, this is not quite—

Senator Marchand: This is a simplified explanation.

Senator Flynn: Maybe so, but it had to be given as a result of the remarks you made.

Senator Marchand: I am sorry, but this is not a good interpretation.

Senator Flynn: I believe it is undeniable, anyway, that one cannot argue that because two different groups have been parties to the negotiations, those who have not been—and, in most cases, they had good reasons to do it, as was proved in committee—are deprived of their rights because they did not take part in the negotiations. That is also what Senator Frith suggested but, frankly, I find it unacceptable. First of all, it was established that, in some cases, those people could not afford to make claims, that in some cases they got help later, not from the Quebec government, but from the Department of Indian Affairs. Now, that is a fact. Others said they would not give up their rights. Now, because I refuse to give up my rights, does that mean someone else can sell them for me? That is every bit as ridiculous as to claim that that important minority must be ignored.

And so, will the act affect the rights of third parties? I say, yes. I say in addition that the act is very clear.

● (1430)

[English]

Paragraph 3 of the bill clearly says this:

All native claims, rights, title and interests, whatever they may be, in and to the Territory, of all Indians and all Inuit, wherever they may be, are hereby extinguished—

All Indians and all Inuit. That goes further than the agreement, because in the agreement you can look at the parties who are there and they do not include all of the Indians and all of the Inuit. There are Indians and Inuit, as I have just shown, who are not included in the agreement but who maintain that they have claims, interests and title.

Why, then, are we asked to do this? Simply because the Government of Quebec has said to the Government of Canada—the government, not Parliament—“You will have to ask Parliament . . .”—well, now it is “force Parliament” because of the way the debate is going—“You will have to force Parliament to pass legislation that will extinguish all of these rights, whether they are the rights of parties within or without the agreement.” In other words, it was part of the undertaking of the Government of Canada to ask Parliament to pass legislation that would extinguish everyone’s rights.

It is now clearly up to us, as part of Parliament, to decide whether we will agree to despoil these people simply because the government has agreed to ask us to do so.

It has been said, and this is a most interesting point, that the right of compensation is not extinguished. Senator Langlois said that last night. In doing so he relied on the opinion of Mr. Ollivier, the Assistant Deputy Minister of Justice, who was a party to the negotiations or who helped in the drafting of the agreement and who also, I should point out, appeared before our committee. I suggest to you that, in relying on Mr. Ollivier's opinion, Senator Langlois relied on the opinion of a person who has a vested interest in affirming that the right of compensation is not extinguished. Mr. Ollivier's argument is quite simple. He says the right of compensation cannot be extinguished because the right of compensation does not exist until after the other rights are extinguished. The one follows from the other. Well, I think Senator McElman provided the proper answer to that argument. Senator McElman made a most reasoned and balanced speech in this debate and I congratulate him.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: He has provided the proper answer.

I merely want to add to what Senator McElman said by quoting article 407 of the Civil Code of the Province of Quebec, which Mr. Ollivier and possibly Senator Langlois have long forgotten. It reads as follows:

No one can be compelled to give up his property, except for public utility and in consideration of a just indemnity previously paid.

I suggest that the right of compensation is attached to the right of property, and I do not think that any serious jurist would contest that. It is part of the right of property. I repeat:

No one can be compelled to give up his property, except for public utility and in consideration of a just indemnity previously paid.

Senator Langlois then relied on Mr. O'Reilly, the attorney for the parties who are the signatories to the agreement. Of course, he also has a vested interest. He said, "Oh no, there is no problem." There is no problem! But just think of what Mr. Allmand himself, the Minister of Indian Affairs, said when I questioned him in committee. At page 1:25 of the committee proceedings of June 7, I asked:

But taking for granted that the rights are established and proof is adduced respecting the existence of those rights, would it not have been better to oblige the Government of Quebec not only to negotiate but also to settle on the same basis as the settlement with the parties to the agreement?

Mr. Allmand replied:

Yes, it would have. It might have been better to have some type of arbitration provision. However, that was not possible.

"However, that was not possible." Is that clear enough?

I might add the opinion of Senator Langlois himself who, on June 21, when speaking in committee about the Naskapi, a group which is presently negotiating with Quebec, said:

The Naskapi are not fooled by that. They have asked Mr. Allmand not to proclaim the legislation until the negotiations have been concluded. They realize that once this bill is passed into law, they will lose their bargaining position. There would be no basis upon which the negotiations could proceed.

It is one thing for Mr. Ollivier to compare the situation to the expropriation laws, but at least there is an appeal tribunal in the case of expropriation. Once one's rights are abolished by law, how can one appeal to any court? These individuals would simply be left to the mercy of the government of the Province of Quebec.

He went on to say of the Government of Quebec:

What is the recourse if the government refuses to negotiate? I suggest there is no recourse.

Do honourable senators need additional evidence? They simply have to read the text. When we say "claims, rights, title and interests", that includes everything. As I put it to Mr. Ollivier, if he wanted to extinguish the right of compensation, would he use other words? He could not use other words. "Rights, claims . . .", without qualification, includes everything. It is quite obvious.

Therefore there is no doubt that by this section we are extinguishing the rights of parties outside the agreement, if they have any.

● (1440)

Now, there is another authority. The Government of Quebec has refused the amendment which was moved in committee, to the effect that, notwithstanding the extinguishment of these rights the third parties—the persons not represented, or parties to the agreement if they can establish valid rights—are entitled to compensation. If the right of compensation disappears, of course one would resist that; but if it does not disappear why should Mr. Bérubé say that this would be contrary to the agreement? That is the interpretation of the Government of Quebec, and that is the interpretation of the Minister of Natural Resources of Quebec, namely, that to say that the extinguishment does not include the extinguishment of the right of compensation would change the agreement.

What more do you need in order to be convinced that we are being asked to deprive these persons of their rights without compensation? If there is an answer to that question, I would like to hear it, but I do not think there is.

I moved an amendment, and some criticisms were levelled against it. In some cases I think this was only rationalization, a way of escaping from having to vote for the amendment. In other cases, the criticisms may have been more serious.

Senator Marchand said that the amendment goes too far because it includes everybody. It is quite clear, however, that it applies only to people who would have rights in the territory in question, and who are not parties, or represented by a party, to the present agreement. I do not see how it could go less far than it does, and I do not see how it could be said that it goes too far.

Senator Neiman said that we did not adopt the same wording as was used in the committee. The reason why I added a reference to the same basis of settlement as is provided in the agreement was that objections were raised in the committee. "Compensation", it was suggested, could be understood as being only monetary compensation, and since there were other kinds of compensation provided in the agreement, we should not limit it to monetary compensation. I agree with that, but that does not change the substance of the amendment, and I have no objections to changing it, if it is voted.

Senator Ewasew put a valid question. He asked, "What about limitation of actions?" I have no objection to that. It seems to me that without providing for a limitation of actions, the law of Quebec would say that that is 30 years anyway, since it relates to property, although this may be too long a period. If honourable senators wanted a shorter period, I would have no objection. Indeed, if anybody wanted to move an amendment in order to arrive at a text that would be suitable to the majority here, I would have no objection. If anyone wanted to move that, instead of adopting this amendment now, the matter be referred back to committee for the purpose of drawing up an amendment along these lines, that would be acceptable. But I suggest to you, honourable senators, that as things are now we should not simply refuse to vote for the amendment because of a technicality, since there are ways of correcting such problems.

The decision that you will be called upon to make on this matter goes to the principle of whether we are or are not going to take away all the rights of this minority of possibly 4,000 or more which—and this was the unanimous conclusion of the committee—we would be doing.

I now wish to say just a word about the effect of the passing of this amendment, if it does pass or, after a new reference to the committee, if it passes in a form more acceptable to the majority of the Senate. Do you think for a moment that the House of Commons would not be able to accept this amendment? If the government makes it a question of confidence, asking Parliament to do this dishonest thing, and it wins, very well; but I suggest to you that if Parliament adopted the amendment Quebec would be in a position that would make it impossible for it to renege on its obligations. Quebec already occupies this territory, and already has in fact possession of all the titles and interests of the Indians, Métis and Inuit there. Quebec could not renege unless it were to act in bad faith. The committee, in its recommendations, expressed the desire that the Government of Quebec act in good faith. I think, therefore, that we have to take it for granted that the Government of Quebec, if Parliament passes this amendment, would act in good faith. I ask you, honourable senators, to do the same.

Senator van Roggen: Would Senator Flynn permit a question? Is it his position, the agreement having been signed subject to ratification by Parliament, that it would continue to be binding on the parties to it, even with this amendment, and that this amendment could be passed and the agreement still enforced by the parties thereto in a court? Is that a correct understanding of his position?

Senator Flynn: Let me clarify that, although I thought I had made the point clear. The agreement between the Indians and Inuit and the Government of Quebec and its agencies, as far as these two groups are concerned, refers to the title, claims and interests of the Indians and Inuit, and to the rights that Quebec will acquire, on these rights that they possess.

In the agreement the Quebec government has asked the federal government—not Parliament—to have legislation passed that would extinguish not only the rights of those who have ceded these rights, but of those who have not. As regards the parties that are immediately concerned in the agreement, my point is that the Government of Quebec could not tell the Crees and Inuit, "Because the federal Parliament has refused to extinguish the rights of your colleagues who are not parties to the agreement, we are not going to pay you for the rights you have ceded." I say that if the Government of Quebec were to renege on the obligations it had undertaken towards the signatories because of the third party, Parliament, refusing to be involved and refusing to be an accomplice in the undertaking to despoil these people, I think the Government of Quebec would be acting in bad faith.

Honourable senators, I say to you again that if the government asked you to do something illegal, or something dishonest, or something unjust, simply because it had promised somebody else to do it, you should never consider yourself bound by such an undertaking. It would be up to the Government of Canada in the case at hand to make good in some other way its undertaking to the Government of Quebec.

● (1450)

Senator Ewasew: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of Senator Flynn, in view of the fact that the basic James Bay agreement, to which the federal government acceded, took into account the constitutional position of the Indians, and also concerned itself with the language and customs of the Indians, whereby the signatories thereto were protected as to their schooling and their customs. This is a very important matter in latter-day Quebec, having regard to Bill 1. Would it not be fair to ask if the phrase, "All native claims, rights, title and interests, whatever they may be," could possibly cover rights of language and customs.

Senator Flynn: Possibly. I think that is the reason why Mr. Allmand has been asked to postpone royal assent, or to amend it, until an agreement is reached with the Government of Quebec as far as language rights are concerned. I read in this morning's papers that the Government of Quebec has agreed that the Indians of this territory are entitled to instruction in the language of their choice, namely, English.

Senator Ewasew: My question with regard to that is: Would it then not be possible that only the signatories to this agreement stand to benefit in the linguistic and cultural domain as well as the financial compensation rights? But the traditional rights of language and schooling would then, in my opinion, be extinguished, as are all other rights for those not already a party to this agreement. If this amendment does not pass, such parties then would stand to lose something far more precious than money.

Senator Flynn: It is a delicate question, I agree. What I read in the press did not apply only to the signatories, but to the whole population in this area. I do not think it is possible to imagine that the Government of Quebec would recognize the education rights of only the parties to this agreement, and refuse to recognize those of the rest of the population. It seems to me that would be rather illogical and impolitic.

Senator Ewasew: It can be very logical. If they have done it already to the English-speaking population and the immigrants of Quebec, then why can't they do it to the Indians of this territory?

Senator McElman: Is it not clear, Senator Flynn, that Senator Ewasew read only a part of clause 3(3)? It reads:

All native claims, rights, title and interests, whatever they may be, in and to the Territory—

This has nothing to do with language.

Senator Flynn: I agree.

Senator Ewasew: I disagree with that interpretation, honourable senators.

Senator Langlois: Question.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Bourget, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Goldenberg, that this bill be now read the third time.

In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Grosart, that the bill be not now read a third time, but that it be amended by adding immediately after subclause 3(3) on page 3 the following:

(3.1) Notwithstanding the extinguishment under subsection (3) of the native claims, rights, title and interest referred to therein, nothing in that subsection affects the right of any person or group of persons in Canada who was not a party to, or who was not represented by a party to, the Agreement to receive, in respect of any valid claim relating to the Territory, compensation on the same basis as it would have been accorded had such person or group of persons been entitled to participate in the compensation and benefits of the Agreement.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those in favour of the amendment please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those against, please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the vote is about even.

Senator Flynn: The "yeas" have it.

The Hon. the Speaker: I will ask the questions again. Will those in favour of the amendment please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those against please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

And more than two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Speaker: Please call in the senators.

● (1500)

Motion in amendment of Senator Flynn negatived on the following division:

● (1510)

YEAS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Argue	Grosart
Bell	Haig
Bosa	Lang
Choquette	Macdonald
Cook	Manning
Eudes	McElman
Ewasew	Phillips
Flynn	Quart
Forsey	Smith (Colchester)
Fournier (Madawaska- Restigouche)	Sparrow
Fournier (Restigouche- Gloucester)	Thompson
	Walker
	Williams—24.

NAYS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Adams	Greene
Barrow	Hayden
Bonnell	Hays
Buckwold	Inman
Carter	Lafond
Connolly (Ottawa West)	Laird
Cottreau	Lamontagne
Croll	Langlois
Davey	Lucier
Denis	Macnaughton
Deschatelets	Marchand
Desruisseaux	McIlraith
Goldenberg	McNamara
Graham	Molgat

Norrie
Olson
Petten
Riel
Riley

Rizzuto
Smith
(Queens-Shelburne)
Steuart—36.

Senator Flynn: You should applaud.

The Hon. the Speaker: I declare the motion in amendment lost.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion for third reading?

Senator Flynn: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS BILL

THIRD READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Senator Goldenberg moved the third reading of Bill C-25, to extend the present laws in Canada that proscribe discrimination and that protect the privacy of individuals.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I do not intend to inflict on you a second speech today. However, as I have a few words to say with respect to this bill, I move the adjournment of the debate, even though it has not yet commenced.

On motion of Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

CURRENCY AND EXCHANGE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Senator Lang moved the third reading of Bill C-5, to amend the Currency and Exchange Act and to amend other acts in consequence thereof.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE (COUNTERFEIT OF RARE COINS AND NOTES)

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the second reading of Bill C-256, to amend the Criminal Code (counterfeit of rare coins and notes).

He said: Honourable senators, this is a private member's public bill introduced in the other place by one of the back-bench members, Mr. Bob Kaplan. It purports to amend section 406 of the Criminal Code, a definition section which defines counterfeit money. The definition of "counterfeit money", includes false coins, genuine coins altered to resemble coins of higher value, a coin to which new milling has been added, and a coin cased with silver, gold or nickel to pass for a current coin which is completely of silver, gold or nickel. Those are the general definitions, among others, of counterfeit money that are found in section 406 of the Criminal Code. It is now proposed to add to those definitions a provision which will include a coin that resembles a coin of numismatic interest—that is to say, a copy of a coin of numismatic interest—unless such copy is marked as prescribed in this amending bill.

• (1520)

This bill has the support of the Canadian Association of Numismatic Dealers and the Canadian Numismatic Association. The testimony before the committee of the other place was provided by representatives of those two associations, as well as by a representative of the RCMP and a representative of the Bank of Canada.

I am told that the problem arises from the fact that the minting of copies of coins of numismatic interest is conducted in various countries. The countries particularly mentioned, and where this industry is fairly large, are Lebanon, Switzerland, Italy and Germany. In those jurisdictions, it is legal and appropriate for minting organizations to mint copies of coins which are of interest to numismatists. These copies, in time, find their way into Canada. According to the evidence given before the committee of the other place, there are hundreds of thousands of such coins in the world.

I am also told that investors buy gold coins of this character because the coins themselves are thought to appreciate in value faster than wafers or ingots of gold. The evidence of the RCMP before the House of Commons committee was to the effect that there are millions of dollars' worth of counterfeit currency in circulation in Canada, a great deal of which is of the type of coinage that I have described.

The Congress of the United States recently passed a Hobbies Protection Act, the provisions of which are somewhat similar to those of this bill. The justification for the bill can be stated in the following way: If a coin of numismatic interest is not an original coin, but a copy of that original coin, and a buyer is interested in acquiring it, he should know that he is acquiring a copy and not the original.

Honourable senators, Bill C-256, in my opinion, should be referred to committee. It is incumbent upon me, as sponsor of the bill in this house—and I do so at the request of its sponsor in the other place—to say that I am less than enamoured with its draftsmanship. The bill was amended at the report stage in the House of Commons.

An opinion expressed in the committee of the other place was that there might be cases in which dealers in Canada might buy quantities of copies of coins of numismatic interest from abroad for resale in Canada and, quite innocently, put them on sale without stating that they are copies. By doing so, they might mislead buyers, but it could not be thought of as too serious an offence. Under the relevant sections of the Criminal Code, namely, sections 406, 407 and 408, the offences are indictable offences. There is no provision for procedure by way of summary conviction. The amendment made to the bill by the House of Commons at the report stage was to provide for a summary conviction procedure in such cases as I have just described. That was attempted by adding at the end of the proposed subsection 406(g) the following:

—and everyone who commits an offence under this Part with respect to counterfeit money as defined in this paragraph (g) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

Honourable senators, that is an inappropriate addition to a definition clause. If there is to be provision for the availability of procedure by summary conviction, it should be made available in other sections of the Criminal Code. Perhaps some of the provisions of sections 407 and 408 would have to be modified.

When I told the sponsor of the bill in the other place that to amend the bill in that way would result in destroying the economy of Part X of the Criminal Code, which deals with offences respecting counterfeit money, he readily agreed that the appropriate thing to do would be to withdraw the amendment. I suggest that might be done—and I hope it will be done—when the bill is before committee.

There are other technical changes which the committee will have to look at. To give one example, the bill contains a short title. Bills which amend existing public statutes do not have short titles. This bill will never appear as a separate act of the Parliament of Canada. It will simply amend the Criminal Code.

In addition, there are some consequential technical amendments which the committee should consider. In that respect, I suggest that the proposed subsection 406(g) might be redrafted to make it more clear. I do not fancy myself a great draftsman, but in lieu of what is contained in the first four lines down to the word “unless,” I should like the committee to consider the following wording:

(g) a coin, token or medal that resembles a genuine coin, token or medal of any origin or date, of numismatic interest, unless—

The subsection could then carry on with the details as to how the coin, token or medal should be stamped.

● (1530)

Honourable senators, in view of the evidence which was given before the committee of the other place, and which I have mentioned, I think this is an appropriate amendment to this part of the Criminal Code. It will protect innocent buyers who have an interest in copies of original coins, medals and so on, of numismatic importance. This is, in principle, the kind of bill that the Senate can give second reading to. I shall, of course, move that the bill be referred to committee as and when the Senate gives consent to second reading.

On motion of Senator Grosart, debate adjourned.

FISHERIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, June 30, the debate on the motion of Senator Cook for the second reading of Bill

C-38, to amend the Fisheries Act and to amend the Criminal Code in consequence thereof.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, during the last few days I have awaited and anticipated the opportunity to speak on Bill C-38. Unfortunately, the order was called at an hour when the sitting of the Senate had been extended beyond that permitted by the rules, without any authority, and so on two occasions I had to sit in the pews and wait. Perhaps the motion in amendment of the Leader of the Opposition on Bill C-9 unduly disturbed the government. I had hoped that in the meantime the government would have considered fisheries, but the last two sittings have clearly indicated to us that the government has not considered fisheries.

In his introductory remarks, Senator Cook referred to an alliteration made in the House of Commons by the honourable member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse). May I say that I appreciate that Senator Cook referred to the remarks of the honourable member for South Shore. I have done so frequently in the last number of years, because I have found that he has always been a reliable, accurate and informed source of information. The alliteration referred to by Senator Cook was something of this nature, that Bill C-38 deals with pollution, power problems, penalties, poachers, police officers, protection policies and prohibition. In order to complete that alliteration may I suggest that one word is necessary—“production.” It goes very well with power problems, poachers, protection policies and production—they fit very nicely into the same alliteration. But unfortunately, the honourable member for South Shore could not include that word in his alliteration for the simple reason that the bill does nothing to increase production. Senators who have gone to a supermarket recently will have found that the price of codfish is equal to that of steak, but codfish begins at 4 cents a pound and steak begins—and here I am referring to the total beef—at about 70 cents or 75 cents a pound.

Surely, somewhere in this bill we should have been able to find something, some little suggestion of increased production. Senator Cook in finishing his remarks, which were helpful and informative, indulged in what I would call a crescendo of praise for the present Minister of Fisheries. I assume that when the Senate adjourns for the summer recess Senator Cook will be going back to Newfoundland and visiting various fishery ports. He will find that fishermen in Newfoundland, as do those in the rest of the Atlantic provinces, refer to the present Minister of Fisheries as Mr. Rip Van Winkle—the Mr. Rip Van Winkle of the cabinet. And, when we consider what a mopey, dopey lot the present cabinet are, to be described as the Rip Van Winkle of that lot is really not a compliment.

● (1540)

The bill before us attempts to deal with a number of serious problems concerning fisheries. It will be difficult to cover every aspect of the bill, but I should like briefly to mention just one or two aspects.

It is difficult for anyone who is unfamiliar with fisheries to understand what the terms “poaching” and “poacher” mean.

Basically, a poacher goes out and clandestinely catches fish which he is not entitled to take. He then sells them to a packer for a fraction of their worth. On the one hand, then, the government says that the poacher is not allowed to take these fish, but on the other hand the poacher looks at the situation in much the same way as someone trying to evade income tax. He figures he is only "cheating on the government." Basically, that is the attitude of poachers, I think.

I know from my own personal experience that there are complaints on both sides, because when I was elected to the other place I received complaints both from the poachers and those who did not believe in poaching. I finally came to the conclusion that the person who was really responsible for the situation was the packer, because without the packer there would be no market for the poacher's catch. The packer buys the fish at about one-third of the normal cost; he then mixes the illegitimate catch with the legitimate catch and makes quite a handsome profit. Unfortunately, this bill does nothing to eliminate the problem of the packer who is willing to sell poached fish. The bill is hard on individual fishermen caught poaching, but it does nothing to eliminate the other aspect of the problem, because it does not deal with the packer who purchases the illegitimate catch.

Senator Choquette: May I ask Senator Phillips a question? How would the purchaser know he was buying fish from a poacher? Did you perhaps leave something out of your definition of poaching? I realize that poaching involves fish which are caught illegally, but does "poaching" not imply that a poacher goes to a lake he is not entitled to go to and catches fish of any kind, not just of a particular kind?

Senator Phillips: I can appreciate your difficulty in understanding this situation, Senator Choquette, because it took me several years before I understood it. Basically, senator, assuming your desk was a packing unit and you were attempting to pack lobsters, you would be packing them out of tubs in front of your unit. If you were willing to pack an illegitimate catch of lobsters, all you would have to do is look the wrong way and, all of a sudden, the tubs in front of your packing unit would be filled with the illegitimate catch. No one would be the wiser, and the financial side of it could be looked after later.

I hope I have made the position a bit clearer for you, although I am sure I have not explained it as fully as it might be.

Last evening I suggested to Senator Langlois that perhaps he had lost several pages of his speech. I now find myself in a similar position—looking for certain parts of my remarks.

Senator Langlois: For your information, senator, they were merely simple notes. They were my own, too.

Senator Phillips: If they were simple, Senator Langlois, they sounded that way. I was going to suggest, however, that since I am not following a prepared text you may find me looking through my notes occasionally, and I hope if a time arrives when I am throwing certain pages aside you will encourage me a little bit.

The enforcement of regulations against poachers does merit certain support. I do, however, have certain doubts about the heavy-handed authority granted under this legislation in respect of licensing and other requirements. Under certain clauses of the bill the Minister of Fisheries is given power to make regulations; he is then given further authority to make regulations exempting persons from the regulations. For example, clause 5 of the bill reads:

5. Section 30 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"30. No person shall destroy fish by any means other than fishing except as authorized by the Minister or under regulations made by the Governor in Council under this Act.

I find that a rather strange sentence. It begins with the prohibition: "No person shall." Then, without the benefit of so much as a comma, a semicolon or anything else, the government reverses its stand and says: "except as authorized by the Minister." In other words, except or unless the minister says it is okay. I find it extremely difficult to accept a sentence of that nature. Surely somewhere between "prohibition" and "permission" there must be at least a comma.

● (1550)

In the past I have objected to legislation allowing the minister authority to make regulations. Essentially, this is the heart, the nub, of this bill. It grants permission for the minister to make regulations. I should like to ask the sponsor if the regulations will be tabled in both houses of Parliament.

Clauses 5 and 7 cause me some concern. Clause 5 says:

31. (1) No person shall carry on any work or undertaking that results in the harmful alteration, disruption or destruction of fish habitat.

That is a very inclusive clause. Shall it apply to projects such as dredging? Senator Cook will readily realize the necessity of doing emergency dredging in harbours. What will be the situation as a result of this clause? Will the Department of Public Works have to apply to the Minister of Fisheries to do dredging? How many months will it take to clarify the memorandum passing between the two departments?

What is of even greater concern to me is this wording on page 8 of the bill:

"deposit" means any discharging, spraying, releasing, spilling, leaking, seeping, pouring, emitting, emptying, throwing, dumping or placing [in the aquatic habitat].

In both P.E.I. and New Brunswick, which are heavy potato-growing provinces, farmers normally apply heavy sprays at certain times of the year. Some of those sprays may not be as water soluble as advertised by the companies concerned. However, the farmer buys them, pays an exorbitant price, and applies them. Then, the evening after they have been applied, there may suddenly be a heavy thunderstorm. The spray is washed into the estuaries or rivers which are covered under the provisions of this bill, and the farmer ends up having to pay a $5,000 fine for each day that the spray washes into those estuaries or rivers.

In my opinion the fine is exorbitant. I do not know of any farmer who would intentionally cause that. It may be done accidentally, and if he has to pay a fine of, say, $5,000, $10,000, or $15,000, what will happen? The Minister of Fisheries will end up with an awful lot of potato farms. I have for some time advocated that the Minister of Agriculture should quit, and I cannot think of a more appropriate reason for bringing the Minister of Fisheries into agriculture.

I have a small typewritten note reminding me to ask what is the situation regarding provinces which conduct a spruce budworm spray program. For a number of years New Brunswick has conducted a spray program to kill the spruce budworm. A number of biologists have said that it has resulted in the killing of the salmon run. I should like to ask the sponsor of the bill what is the relationship between the spraying of the spruce budworm and this bill?

The bill provides that a fishery officer shall be a peace officer when performing his duties. Lately we have had a series of bills dealing with various categories of people who are made police officers. The list now includes immigration and customs officers, fishery officers, members of the armed forces, sheriffs, and certain wardens of jails. We could make quite an extensive list. We must ask ourselves why it is necessary to have so many police officers in a country supposedly as free as Canada?

The situation becomes even worse when we realize that most of these people have had no training whatsoever. The best and most effective fishery officers that I have known were those who led rather than directed the fishing. A fishery officer can arrive at a wharf and say, "I have certain authority. I am directing"; or he can arrive and say, "It is to your benefit to follow conservation measures."

● (1600)

I noticed in the debates and committee proceedings of the other place complaints that the number of fishery officers was decreasing. The Department of Fisheries, for some reason, is unable to obtain the number of officers they would like. May I suggest that we use biology students as fishery officers or, if you prefer, conservation officers? Many of these students would come from the communities involved and would be able to talk to the people concerned and present an understanding program to the fishermen. As I have said, you can lead a fisherman, but it is a difficult job to drive him.

The idea of consultation with the provinces concerning municipal pollution has some merit; however, we have had consultation in the past, and it has not really been too successful. Usually it follows this pattern: either the federal or the provincial government does a survey, they report their findings, and the next year the opposite government does a survey, the results of which then take one or two more years to study.

The fact that the municipalities must consider the damage they are doing by dumping raw sewage into harbours has to be seriously dealt with but this bill does not clarify the authority of the federal government, the provincial governments or the municipal governments in this matter, and this is a great weakness. Perhaps this is, to some degree, due to our Constitution. What would happen if the federal government were to tell the municipality of Hull, or, indeed, the municipality of Montreal, to cease and desist from discharging raw sewage into the rivers. I would like to be present for that conversation. I suggest that the federal government would have a very difficult time convincing Mr. Lévesque that sewage installations are necessary.

The ticketing of certain minor offences, as proposed in the bill, is a very worthwhile suggestion; however, I would point out that the idea of saving time for fishery officers must also apply to fishermen. A lobster fisherman has roughly 60 days in which to make his living, and if he had to attend court for perhaps three days out of the 60 it would be a serious thing. I would hope that government regulations would ensure that the fisherman would not have to do this.

A list of the offences included under the proposed new section 61. (2)(b) of the act, as set out in clause 18 of the bill at page 20, was tabled before the committee in the other place. May I ask the sponsor of the bill if he will do the same thing for us?

Clause 11 allows the government to establish a licence fee for the harvesting of marine plants under section 34.2 of the Fisheries Act. In the Atlantic provinces Irish moss washes up on the shores following a storm, and I have gone down to the beach and witnessed families gathering this moss. I recall on one occasion seeing a grandmother, parents and six children gathering it without a licence. The family had hoped to make about $1,600 as a result of that storm. This clause does not specifically indicate that those people will have to have a licence; however, I would ask the sponsor of the bill to suggest that families who normally do this type of moss gathering be exempt from having to obtain such a licence.

The sponsor of the bill also mentioned that the legislation provides for fishermen taking civil action against people who have caused pollution. This sounds very well in theory, but can you imagine fishermen, either on the Atlantic coast or the Pacific coast, beginning to sue paper companies? The fisherman does not have the resources to do so, and so in my view the clause is meaningless. I was amused, though, to read in the committee proceedings of the other house that this question was raised. Evidence must be presented that fish were destroyed, yet apparently it is an offence to bring a dead fish into court. I would ask Senator Cook what type of evidence a Newfoundlander can bring into court under this clause if he cannot bring in the dead fish, which, basically, is what the clause deals with.

Honourable senators, the bill has proposed a good many regulations. It will take a good deal of tact, even diplomacy, to handle or manipulate the regulations in the future. I wish the minister and his bureaucracy success in doing so.

● (1610)

Hon. Eric Cook: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Cook speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate.

Senator Cook: Honourable senators, I should like to thank Senator Phillips for his valuable contribution. It has given us all further knowledge of Bill C-38. I am sure that his comments will receive close and detailed consideration at the committee hearings, should the Senate give the bill second reading and, therefore, I do not think I should make any further observations at this time.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Cook moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

BRETTON WOODS AGREEMENTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, June 29, the debate on the motion of Senator Everett for the second reading of Bill C-18, to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act.

Hon. George I. Smith: Honourable senators, as I rise to make some comments on this bill, I think it is fair to observe it is a bill which deals with a highly technical subject with which most of us do not come in contact in an active way very frequently, although it may well be that in a great many of our daily activities we feel the effects of its provisions and the provisions of the articles of agreement which it makes law.

I was not able to be present to hear the sponsor of the bill, Senator Everett, when he moved second reading. I have, however, read very carefully what he said on that occasion, June 28, and in my view he placed before the Senate the main features of the bill. I do not think it would serve any particular purpose for me simply to repeat what he said, but I might make a few comments about the history of it, and something of the contents of the agreements with which it deals.

To anyone who looks at the bill for the first time, it would appear indeed to be a lengthy one, but on closer examination it becomes clear that it consists of only three clauses. It amends an existing statute called the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, which is Chapter B-9, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970. That statute is an act for carrying into effect the agreements for two institutions now widely known as the International Monetary Fund, and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, commonly referred to as the World Bank. It is perhaps interesting to recall that these institutions were founded as a result of the United Nations Monetary and Financial Conference, which was held at a resort hotel in a small place in New Hampshire called Bretton Woods, from July 1 to July 22, 1944. It was called at the invitation of President Roosevelt of the United States. Those whose recollections go back—and I think most honourable senators' recollections do—to July 1944 will remember that it was a time of great turmoil in the world. The conference was under the leadership of Mr. Henry Morgenthau, Jr., Secretary of the United States Treasury, and a total of 44 nations were represented.

I recall that the head of the Canadian delegation was the Honourable James Lorimer Ilsley, then Minister of Finance. It is a matter of particular pride for some of us to remember Mr. Ilsley was a native of Nova Scotia, and during this time and all the time that he occupied a seat in Parliament he represented the constituency of Kings in that province.

The conference was called, as I said, by President Roosevelt. Its purpose was to formulate definite proposals for an International Monetary Fund and for an International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. Preliminary proposals had been prepared in 1943 by officials of various departments of the government of the United States. These preliminary proposals were circulated to a large number of countries for consideration. In due course, as a result of informal discussions with such countries, it became apparent that it might be reasonable to hope that a broad measure of agreement could be achieved at a formal conference, so one was called at Bretton Woods.

It turned out that this feeling was fully justified by the event. The 44 countries represented there by their authorized representatives signed a final document consisting of two parts: the first part is entitled "Articles of Agreement of the International Monetary Fund"; the second part is entitled "Articles of Agreement of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development".

The importance attached to this conference by those who attended it may be indicated very clearly by a few sentences from the closing address of Secretary Morgenthau. I will not try your patience very long, honourable senators, in doing so, but I think it worthwhile to read a few sentences. He said:

The actual details of a financial and monetary agreement may seem mysterious to the general public. Yet at the heart of it lie the most elementary bread and butter realities of daily life. What we have done here in Bretton Woods is to devise machinery by which men and women everywhere can exchange freely, on a fair and stable basis, the goods which they produce through fair labor. And we have taken the initial step through which the nations of the world will be able to help one another in economic development to their mutual advantage and for the enrichment of all.

He then went on to say what, in his opinion, were "the fundamental conditions under which the commerce among the nations" could once more flourish when the Second World War, then raging, should finish:

First, there must be a reasonably stable standard of international exchange to which all countries can adhere without sacrificing the freedom of action necessary to meet their internal economic problems.

● (1620)

This is the alternative to the desperate tactics of the past—competitive currency depreciation, excessive tariff barriers, uneconomic barter deals, multiple currency practices, and unnecessary exchange restrictions—by which governments vainly sought to maintain employment and uphold living standards . . . The International Monetary Fund agreed upon at Bretton Woods will help remedy this situation.

Secondly, he dealt with the World Bank, and said:

Long-term funds must be made available also to promote sound industry and increase industrial and agricultural production in nations whose economic potentialities have not yet been developed. It is essential to us all that these nations play their full part in the exchange of goods throughout the world.

Each set of articles starts out with a statement of purpose, which I shall not explain at any length, but which is clearly designed to implement those sentences that I have just read. In due course, the articles were submitted to the legislatures of the 44 countries and approved and became law in those countries, and subsequently many other countries have adhered to the agreement.

Though there have been many aspects to the operation of the International Monetary Fund up to this time, there have been, as Senator Everett said, two main features. One feature has been that the par value of the currency of each member of the fund should be expressed in terms of gold as a common denominator, or expressed in terms of the United States dollar of the weight and fineness in gold in effect on July 1, 1944. The second feature was that no member should change the par value of its currency except within certain defined limits, and only after consultation with the Fund. It will thus be seen that gold was really the basis of the currencies of members of the Fund, and that they agreed always to have a fixed value for their currencies.

With reference to the fixed values for currencies, it is true that not always did all members strictly observe this feature. Canada, for instance, on more than one occasion decided to let her dollar float and find its own level of value against the currencies of the world. Other currencies sometimes did the same. Of course, as is well known, that has been the situation with the Canadian dollar for some time now. However, by and large, over many years the fixed currency feature was observed in great measure. Though I am not qualified to say whether its results were good or bad, I think one reading the works of economic experts dealing with the subject over the years would have to come to the conclusion that informed opinion indicates that it has been indeed a stabilizing influence in international monetary matters for many years.

As to the World Bank, while it is frequently the object of criticism, it has undoubtedly played a very large part in assisting the development of underdeveloped countries and in promoting the balance and scope of international trade.

Both the Fund and the Bank were financed by capital contributions or quotas from the member countries. Canada's original quota or contribution to the Fund was $300 million, and her first contribution to the Bank was $325 million, both very substantial amounts of money in terms of our size as a country, our wealth as a country and our gross national product.

An indication of how the needs of both these institutions have grown can be seen at once by thinking of the figures I have just read as the original contributions and looking for a moment at the increase in contributions authorized by this bill if it becomes law. Canada's quota to the Fund at this moment is $1.1 billion in special drawing rights, which means substantially more in terms of dollars. It is proposed to increase this to $1.357 billion in special drawing rights, which you can see is a long way indeed from the $300 million of our first contribution.

As to the Bank, our present contribution is $1.136 billion current U.S. dollars. The bill proposes to increase that contribution to $1.342 billion U.S. dollars in current funds. You can thus see that, not only was Canada's contribution to both these institutions very substantial in the very beginning, but it is now very, very large indeed, and this bill proposes to make it larger. I do not oppose or object to this increase in quota in either case, because it does seem to me that these funds have contributed a great deal to stability in the western world, and thus to the good of Canadians.

There is one other particular feature in the bill. It proposes to do away with the central position of gold as supporting the international currencies and individual currencies of the world, or, at least, of the members of the Fund, and there are now 128 countries who are such members.

There are some people who take the view that this departure from gold will make it more likely that changes which take place in United States monetary policy will have a very large and heavy effect upon the currencies and the monetary conditions, including inflation, in all the other countries of the world. I do not feel qualified to pass judgment upon whether these fears are justified or not, but certainly it seems to me that this is a point that our financial and monetary authorities ought to watch very closely.

In the event, however, it seems to me that we have little choice but to pass this bill if we are to retain our place in the Fund, in the Bank and in the commerce of the world. Therefore, I support the bill and invite others to do so.

The sponsor of the bill spoke about referring it to committee, and I think indicated that if that were done perhaps the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs might be the appropriate committee. It seems to me, however, that the circumstances are such that no really useful purpose could be served by doing so. I suggest, therefore, as my colleague Senator Grosart did last night with respect to its companion piece, Bill C-5, that this bill not go to committee but that it proceed to third reading without that intervening stage.

● (1630)

Senator Frith: May I ask the honourable senator a question for purposes of information. Does he have the figures with respect to the proportion of Canada's contribution as related to the other 128 members.

Senator Smith (Colchester): My recollection is that the total resources of the Fund made up of contributions or quotas by countries amount to approximately $39 billion in special drawing rights, which is approximately the equivalent of $45 billion U.S. dollars at current rates of exchange. I have not quickly to hand the figures for the Bank, but they started off not very far apart in totals. I feel that the comparison today would be somewhat of the same nature as that in relation to the fund.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Petten moved that this bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

VISIT OF DELEGATION OF CANADIAN PARLIAMENTARIANS TO MEXICO, MARCH 21 TO 28, 1977—DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, June 9, 1977, the debate on the inquiry of Senator Molgat, calling the attention of the Senate to the visit of a delegation of Canadian Parliamentarians to Mexico, from 21st to 28th March, 1977.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to speak at any length on the inquiry of the Honourable Gildas L. Molgat, of which he gave notice on April 28th of this year.

My remarks will be brief because, after listening to the excellent reports of this meeting of Canadian parliamentarians with the Mexican delegation by Senator Molgat and Senator Rhéal Bélisle, there is little that I can add other than to say I was pleased to have been a member of the Canadian delegation, and I was more than pleased with the composition of that delegation and the way its members participated in the debates and discussions. I was especially pleased with the strong showing by the Senate and the active part taken by senators during these discussions. Also, I would like to express my belief that these joint parliamentary meetings between Canada and Mexico are worthwhile. They give both the Canadian and the Mexican parliamentarians a better understanding of their mutual problems, many of which can be resolved by sitting down and discussing them at a friendly conference.

Canada and Mexico, both North American countries, have one great thing in common and that is a friend on their borders called the United States of America. But the size of that great neighbour, its strength and its power, give both Mexico and Canada a sense of security to be bordering, and to have as a neighbour, the most powerful country in the world. At the same time, however, this makes it difficult for Canada and Mexico to trade directly, as most of our imports from Mexico and our exports to Mexico have to be shipped through the United States. Similarly, most tourists from Mexico to Canada and from Canada to Mexico travel through the United States. Although both Canada and Mexico realize that their neighbour does cause them some minor problems, I believe that we both find the United States to be a source of great moral strength to our respective societies, as well as our greatest trading partner.

This year's meeting was the result of the decision taken last year by the Congress of Mexico and the Parliament of Canada to hold meetings on a regular basis because of the growing importance of relations between our two countries. The two delegations held discussions in Mexico on a large number of subjects of mutual interest: the state of Canadian-Mexican relations in general; the development of economic relations, including trade, tourism, air negotiations, energy, and the migratory agricultural workers agreements; cultural relations, including the young technicians exchange program; and major international questions such as the new international economic order, commodity agreements, development financing, and fisheries.

The two delegations expressed satisfaction that the trade imbalance between Canada and Mexico had declined during the past year, and they hoped that the continued increase in trade between the two countries would help bring the trade figures further into line. They considered that one way of doing this was through the promotion of mutually beneficial industrial co-operation between the two countries. The delegations expressed the hope that the two governments would encourage suitable investments, joint ventures and technological co-operation so that Canadian experience as well as manufacturing and technical capabilities could be related to Mexican industrial and infrastructural requirements.

The delegations noted that the balance of invisibles between the two countries could be improved through an expansion of tourism. The delegations called on the two governments to ensure that conditions remain attractive to tourists. One factor that would help encourage tourism between the two countries, the delegates felt, was the conclusion of a new air agreement. The members expressed pleasure at the plans that the two governments had drawn for the development of cultural relations between the two countries as a result of the signing of a cultural agreement during the visit of Prime Minister Trudeau early in 1976. They agreed that it was important for the development of bilateral relations for each country to know more about the personality, potential and capacity of the other.

Turning to international questions, the delegates agreed upon the importance of the establishment of a new economic order for the attainment by developing countries of higher levels of economic activity and standards of living. To achieve this goal, they recognized the need for improved international trade. In this context they welcomed the commitment of the industrialized countries to keep under regular review the scope and coverage of the general system of preference in order to improve it. Recognizing the growing economic interdependence among countries, they expressed the hope that the present Tokyo round of multilateral trade negotiations might lead to significant and wide-spread trade liberalization and, in particular, that they would provide an effective framework for the expansion of the trade of the developing countries.

They also expressed the hope that the Conference on International Economic Co-operation and the various international forums dealing with the problems of primary products would produce significant concrete results. They emphasized that progress can best be achieved through co-operative discussions rather than confrontations and that agreements on commodities intended to stabilize prices should include both producers and consumers.

And now, honourable senators, I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate our co-leaders, the Honourable Gildas Molgat and Mr. Gus MacFarlane, M.P., for the excellent job they did on behalf of Parliament, on behalf of Canada, and on behalf of better understanding between our two countries during that conference. I should like to add how pleased I am to have been associated with them at this worthwhile inter-parliamentary meeting.

● (1640)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, as no other senator wishes to participate in his debate, this inquiry is considered as having been debated.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

BILLS TO AMEND—SECOND READINGS

Hon. William J. Petten moved the second readings of Bill C-283, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Beauharnois-Salaberry); Bill C-392, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Brampton-Georgetown); Bill C-393, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe); Bill C-394, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Huron-Bruce); Bill C-405, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Lethbridge-Foothills); Bill C-406, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Kootenay East-Revelstoke); Bill C-418, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Laval); Bill C-422, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (London-Middlesex); Bill C-427, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Blainville-Deux Montagnes); Bill C-428, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Saint-Jacques); Bill C-429, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Saint-Léonard-Anjou); and Bill C-433, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Cochrane).

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I should note for the record, both for my own benefit and that of Senator Lafond, who is not here at the moment, that the position in the past has been that we discourage the practice of having the designations of electoral districts made up of combinations of two and three names. One example in the bills before us is Bill C-393, the electoral district is Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe; another is Kootenay East-Revelstoke.

It has been the rule of the commission charged with the revision of electoral boundaries to give single names to these constituencies. However, there is a tendency for sections of a given riding to have either the current or historical name of that section appear in the official name of the riding. In any event, this is a decision that is more the responsibility of the other place than of this chamber. I merely wish to register my concern about this tendency—a concern that has been expressed previously by Senator Lafond.

[Translation]

Hon. Azellus Denis: Honourable senators, I believe, on the contrary, that designating a riding by two or three names is something democratic, something that pleases the people. The people of those electoral districts were asked. It stems from the fact that two or three parts of the constituency are important; so, in order not to cause too much rivalry, to please all sides, the north and the south of the riding, you give a multiple name to the riding and everyone is happy. Nothing could be more democratic. Adding an extra name or two causes no problem. Besides, even the party of the Honourable Leader of the Opposition has a double name.

Senator Flynn: Progressive Conservative—no worse than Saint-Denis, of course!

Senator Denis: Had another part of the constituency wanted its name to appear in public, or in the archives, I should have been pleased to request an amendment to the name of the Saint-Denis riding.

Senator Flynn: Saint-Denis—a distinction must be made between the riding of Saint-Denis and Azellus Denis!

Senator Denis: Everyone knows there is no Saint Jacques Flynn either.

[English]

Senator McElman: In the light of the discussion between Senator Flynn and Senator Denis, one need only project that practice to the wonderful island of Newfoundland to imagine some of the name combinations one could come up with. For example, "Come-by-Chance—Scratch-ass-Tickle" would be a beautiful designation for a riding in the records of Canada.

Senator Cook: It would make a better name for the member than it would for the riding.

Motion agreed to and bills read second time.

THIRD READINGS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, with leave, I move that these bills be now read the third time.

Motion agreed to and bills read third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, July 7, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Langlois tabled:

Copies of Order in Council P.C. 1977-1911, dated July 6, 1977, appointing Mr. Justice David C. McDonald, Mr. Donald S. Rickerd and Mr. Guy Gilbert, Commissioners under Part I of the Inquiries Act to inquire into certain operations and policies of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Capital Budget of Canadian Arsenals Limited for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1978, pursuant to section 70(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970, together with copy of Order in Council P.C. 1977-1278, dated May 5, 1977, approving same.

Report of Teleglobe Canada, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 16 of the Teleglobe Canada Act, Chapter 77, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, and sections 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

PROTECTION OF BORROWERS AND DEPOSITORS

REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE
TABLED

Senator Hayden: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on the subject matter of Bill C-16, to provide for the protection of borrowers and depositors, to regulate interest on judgment debts, to repeal the Interest Act, the Pawnbrokers Act and the Small Loans Act and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof.

COMPETITION POLICY

INTERIM REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE
COMMITTEE TABLED

Senator Hayden: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the interim report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on the subject matter of Bill C-42, to amend the Combines Investigation Act and to amend the Bank Act and other Acts in relation thereto or in consequence thereof.

AUDITOR GENERAL BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Senator Sparrow, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-20, respecting the office of the Auditor General of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Barrow moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

● (1410)

PROTECTION OF BORROWERS AND DEPOSITORS

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Senator Hayden: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Monday next, July 11, 1977, I will call the attention of the Senate to the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on the subject matter of Bill C-16, to provide for the protection of borrowers and depositors, to regulate interest on judgment debts, to repeal the Interest Act, the Pawnbrokers Act and the Small Loans Act and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof, tabled in the Senate today.

Senator Benidickson: May I ask Senator Hayden if the committee of the House of Commons has finished its inquiry on this bill?

Senator Hayden: As far as I have been able to learn, they have not had any sittings recently.

Senator Flynn: They stopped them.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday next, July 11, 1977, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Honourable senators, before the question is put, I should like to give you what information is now available regarding the outlook for next week. As you know, we thought it would be necessary to sit on Friday of this week, but as some of the bills we expected from the House of Commons have not yet passed that house, and as we have accomplished quite a lot of work this week, it now appears that the best plan is to adjourn until Monday evening. However, we think the practice we have followed for the last few weeks should be continued, and that the Senate should not sit on Tuesday afternoon, in order that the whole of Tuesday can be devoted to committee work. The Senate would, therefore, adjourn on Monday evening to Tuesday evening.

My information is that Bill C-17, respecting the reorganization of Air Canada, and Bill C-49, concerning the Canada Pension Plan, are likely to pass the Commons today or tomorrow, and perhaps Bill C-27, the Employment and Immigration Reorganization Act. We also expect to have Bill C-51, the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1977, before this house next week.

There may be additions to this list, but the committee meetings now scheduled for next week are as follows: On Tuesday, the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee will meet at 9.30 a.m. to consider Bill C-38, to amend the Fisheries Act and to amend the Criminal Code in consequence thereof. The Transport and Communications Committee will also meet on Tuesday, at both 9.30 a.m. and 2.30 p.m., for further consideration of Bill C-41, the Maritime Code bill. On Wednesday, at 3.30 p.m. or when the Senate rises, the Agriculture Committee will hold a further meeting on Bill C-34, the Canadian Wheat Board bill.

There may, of course, be additions to this list as the week progresses and other bills are referred to committee.

Senator Flynn: It may be necessary to sit on Tuesday afternoon of next week. We should not be locked into a schedule which allows for a Tuesday night sitting only. Depending on the circumstances, it may be necessary to sit on Tuesday afternoon as well as Tuesday evening of next week.

Senator Langlois: As honourable senators are aware, we cannot have more than one committee sitting while the house is sitting. We simply do not have the reporting or simultaneous interpretation staff available to service more than one committee while the house is sitting. If it turns out that only one committee is scheduled to sit next Tuesday afternoon, and it is felt that some of the items on the order paper could be dealt with by sitting Tuesday afternoon, then we will do so. For now, we can only play it by ear. If on Monday evening circumstances seem to warrant a Tuesday afternoon sitting of the Senate, then the adjournment will so provide. However, it might be that we will again want to keep all day Tuesday available for committee meetings.

Senator Flynn: I am merely suggesting that we should not be locked into a schedule which allows for a Tuesday evening sitting only.

Senator Langlois: Certainly consideration will be given to that on Monday.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS BILL

THIRD READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Goldenberg for the third reading of Bill C-25, to extend the present laws in Canada that proscribe discrimination and that protect the privacy of individuals.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I have very little to say with respect to the bill itself. I merely wish to comment on the work of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee to which this bill was referred. The committee met to consider the bill on three occasions, with officials of the Department of Justice appearing on the first two occasions, and those same officials, together with the Minister of Justice, the Honourable Mr. Basford, on the final occasion.

It soon became evident that, given the time and the technical advice available, it would be very difficult to carry out an in-depth study of the proposed legislation, the title of which is: "An Act to extend the present laws in Canada that proscribe discrimination and that protect the privacy of individuals."

It is a very complex measure. In fact, it opens up a new field of legislation. Although it was studied to some extent in committee of the other place, the proceedings of that committee were of no help to us in reaching what might be a considered opinion on the bill. It was the feeling of the committee that we would not be able to do justice to the bill, except to recognize that it does open up a new field of legislation. It was felt that perhaps the best thing to do, in light of the circumstances, would be to allow the bill to pass into law to see how it operates in practice. In that respect, we have the minister's undertaking that if, in the operation of the proposed act, it becomes evident that amendments are required, he will bring forward an amending bill in the next session of Parliament.

● (1420)

In a way it is a rather narrow area—discrimination and protection of the privacy of individuals. There are, I would say, not many cases in which the legislation would apply. However, I was concerned with a study of the bill made by Mr. Jed Baldwin, M.P. for Peace River who as you know has taken a special interest in the matter of information to be made available to the public and the protection of individuals. He was worried especially about three particular areas in this bill. The first area of his concern was the question of discretion given to the minister, and I wish to refer you to clause 49 in which the definition of the words "derivative use" is provided, as follows:

"derivative use" means a use of a record for a purpose that, in the opinion of the appropriate Minister, is consistent with the use for which it was compiled—

"In the opinion of the appropriate Minister" seems to me to be sufficiently decisive to give complete discretion and remove the right of appeal to the federal court. I believe this point has been discussed with respect to certain bills being considered by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, of which discussions Senator Hayden is well aware. This is one problem, the problem of discretion.

The second area of concern is with regard to the office of the Privacy Commissioner and the review process pertaining to his or her decisions. Questions arise with regard to the right of appeal. Would the commissioner be obliged to do or not do certain things? Would appeals from the decision of this officer be allowed?

The third area of concern deals with exemptions. There are many exemptions, some of them quite obvious. It is desired to exempt the right to information, for example, as far as police records are concerned. Anyone would agree with that. If a person could obtain from a police force all information it had regarding him or her, it would really destroy the efficiency of police operations. In any event, it is a very delicate and subtle problem, which, as far as I am concerned—and I believe this was the feeling of the committee generally—we could not tackle with any conviction of doing something useful unless we had more time and more technical assistance.

I expressed myself in committee on this point and I wish to put on record that the decision at which we arrived in agreeing that the bill be reported without amendment was that we are entering, first, a new area and, secondly, a rather restrictive area in an experimental fashion, and we wish to see how the legislation will be enforced before we can really make a final decision as to its propriety in all respects. The committee all agreed upon the purpose of the bill and the need for it. But I just wanted to put on record that simply because the bill is reported without amendment does not mean that either the members of the committee or the members of the Senate as a whole have not certain concerns about this matter.

Senator Goldenberg: Honourable senators, I shall be very brief. I appreciate the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition. I do not think he said anything I would disagree with. He stressed the important consideration that this is a new type of legislation. It is the first anti-discrimination code at the federal level, and it extends for the first time to Canadian citizens the right to have access to personal information about them in government.

As Senator Flynn mentioned, a great deal depends on how the act will be administered and what amendments will be required in due course. The minister did promise that he would introduce such amendments as experience will show to be necessary.

I do not think I have anything further to add, having said all I wished to say when I moved second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

BRETTON WOODS AGREEMENTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Senator Petten moved the third reading of Bill C-18, to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE (COUNTERFEIT OF RARE COINS AND NOTES)

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Connolly for the second reading of Bill C-256, to amend the Criminal Code (counterfeit of rare coins and notes).

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I do not think any useful purpose would be served if this side were to prolong the discussion on this bill presented by Senator Connolly yesterday, even though I do think it has implications that go far beyond the subject matter contemplated by the original sponsor of the bill. Senator Connolly did make it clear that the bill, as it stands, requires amendments of several kinds, not only in terms of its draftsmanship but also, to some extent, in respect of its substance.

I agree with Senator Connolly completely that it is rather strange to have this bill presented to us in this form. It is a private member's bill, presented by a member who was at the time, as described by Senator Connolly, a backbencher but who is now, of course, Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance. It seems rather unusual to have an amendment to the Criminal Code of this importance introduced as a private member's bill but, of course, there is no fundamental objection to that.

● (1430)

What Senator Connolly drew attention to specifically was the fact that the provisions in this bill would add certain kinds—for want of a better word at the moment—of counterfeits to the present interpretation section of Part X of the Criminal Code, which is section 406. And because of an amendment that was made to achieve a specific purpose (to make this a summary offence rather than an indictable offence) a clause was added—a clause in the grammatical sense and not in the drafting sense—which makes the perpetrator of certain offences, as defined in this paragraph, guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. As Senator Connolly pointed out, it is rather unusual to have the offence prescribed in an interpretation section. When one looks at Part X of the Criminal Code one sees that it is headed "Offences relating to currency." Under "Interpretation" it defines "counterfeit money," "counterfeit token of value," "current" and "utter" in respect to the act and the prohibitions and punishments provided for in the act. So it merely adds this certain type of counterfeit.

The type of counterfeit that is contemplated is the copy of coins, tokens and medals which are not currency, because the Criminal Code refers only to what I would call "current currency," but it seems to be a clumsy, if not a totally ineffective way of achieving this very useful objective. As Senator Connolly pointed out, millions of dollars are involved in these transactions which, in many cases, are obviously fraudulent—that is to say, the passing off on the public of copies of numismatic coins, medals and so on as being the original, genuine article.

Naturally, I have no objection to the purpose of the bill; it is one long needed. In fact, it came as a great surprise to me to find that it is perfectly legal at the present time under the provisions of the Criminal Code for anybody to copy these things and sell them without any identification to show that they are not the genuine, original article.

However, quite apart from those amendments that Senator Connolly suggested should be made, and which he assured us he had discussed with the sponsor of the bill who agrees that certain amendments should be made, I think the committee will want to go considerably further than that—and I am sure that this was contemplated by Senator Connolly—and deal with the whole section as it stands. In the first place, the title of Part X is “Offences relating to currency.” Perhaps that will have to be changed, because the device used here is to say that this kind of copy now comes under the definition of counterfeit money. Obviously it is not counterfeit money. If it is a medal, or if it is not something that was ever used as money, it is not counterfeit money. It seems to me that there must be an easier way of achieving the objective than by saying that something which is not counterfeit money is counterfeit money, which is what the amendment would do. It would add subsection (g) to subsections (a), (b), (c), (d), (e) and (f), which are already definitions of the type of counterfeiting that comes under the provisions of the bill.

I am concerned about the restriction with regard to the type of copying or counterfeiting that would come under the provisions of the bill in the use of the phrase “of numismatic interest.” On consideration, perhaps the committee will wish to go beyond this, because “numismatic” has a very narrow definition. When further evidence comes before the committee it may wish to say that there are other things, not of numismatic interest, which should be included in this. I refer to things such as small statues, and other objects which could not be described as being of numismatic interest, certainly on the basis of the dictionary definition of that word.

I am also somewhat concerned about the provision that these articles, if they are copied from originals, should be stamped “copy,” because there may be important exceptions which have not been contemplated. For example, I happen to have in my possession the die from which an item of numismatic and other interest was cast about 100 years ago in Canada. These old dies show up at times, and a decision is sometimes made to use such a die to create an exactly identical article, at a new date, because the original is not dated, in much the same way as the second or third edition of a book is printed. If it is printed from the original plates it is not usually called a second edition, but a second issue of the first edition. There is a distinction made in that way in the book collecting business, and perhaps a similar distinction should be made here. At least, it should be made clear that there is a distinction if it is the intention to make one. I am referring again to a reproduction from the original die at a different date.

Upon considering the way this amendment is worded, it appears to me that it might catch a second issue of even coins—and this is done all the time—or medals, which are cast, produced and sold by the mint. Perhaps three or four months later they will take the same die and put out another issue of 100 or 200. Is that to be caught by the provisions of the bill? I think that the committee will want to consider whether that is so or not, or whether it is something that should be taken into account in the redrafting of the bill.

Senator Connolly has indicated, quite clearly, that the provision that the making of this kind of copy that is caught by the bill an offence punishable in a certain way needs to be tidied up, and, as he said, perhaps placed in one of the other sections or in a new section.

With the assurance from Senator Connolly that these matters will be given full consideration in committee, and that that is acceptable to the sponsor, I can see no objection to the important and useful principle of the bill, or to its being given second reading at this time.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I thank Senator Grosart for this thoughtful intervention. I notice that the chairman of the committee to which this bill should properly be referred is in the chamber, and that is helpful because he has heard what Senator Grosart had to say. In any event, I hope that the sponsor of the bill in the other place will be able to read our Hansard of yesterday and today. There have been many thorny questions raised in connection with this bill, and I think the committee will have to wrestle with them.

It might be appropriate on this occasion to say something about the sponsorship in this house of private members' public bills from the House of Commons. Here one does not really assume responsibility for everything that is in a bill. One tries to deal with it as well as possible, and in this case it has involved some criticism by Senator Grosart and myself. This is appropriate for the Senate. If care is not exercised in drafting legislation elsewhere, we have a responsibility to Parliament to ensure that nothing goes into the statutes of this country which is not appropriate for the courts to deal with or which litigants or defendants cannot understand. There was some danger of that in this bill, but I believe that the committee, with the assistance of our Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel, will be able to eliminate that danger.

● (1440)

I believe also there is a responsibility on the part of individual senators to assume this kind of work when asked to do it. I recall seeing how the system worked in the British House of Commons a good many years ago when a new member, Mr. Roy Jenkins, who was later to become a prominent member of that house, was sponsoring a private member's bill. He was in earnest consultation with Lord Birkett who, as honourable senators know, was a distinguished lawyer. They were discussing the precise meaning of the legislation which had already passed the British House of Commons and was then going to the House of Lords. Birkett said, "You know, it is our duty to take on these tasks that come to us from the other place, and to deal with them as well as we can."

Honourable senators, I believe we can perform a service to Parliament by dealing with this bill, and I repeat that I shall be happy to refer it to the appropriate committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Connolly moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, July 11, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, July 11, 1977

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-49, to amend the Canada Pension Plan.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read a second time?

Hon. Chesley W. Carter, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), moved that the bill be now read the second time.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-49 occupies only 18 pages and consists of only 27 clauses, but it is by no means a simple bill. On the other hand, it is not quite as complicated as it may appear at first glance. Bill C-49 makes a number of amendments to the Canada Pension Plan. Two of these amendments are of major importance and three or four others are of lesser consequence, while the remainder are either consequential or of an administrative nature. I think the best and easiest way to understand and evaluate the changes set forth in Bill C-49 is to begin by recalling the main features of the Canada Pension Plan.

The Canada Pension Plan, as you know, became law in 1966 and was designed to reach maturity 10 years later. It is a public, universal, compulsory, contributory plan related to earnings, designed to provide contributors and their dependants with a number of benefits, including a retirement pension, a surviving spouse's pension, a disability pension, a death benefit, and a benefit for the children of deceased or disabled contributors.

The compulsory character of the Canada Pension Plan makes it the largest group pension insurance plan in Canada. The automatic participation of such large numbers makes it possible for the plan to provide a measure of protection and to incorporate a number of desirable features which might not otherwise be feasible. These features include a basic exemption, a "drop-out" feature, and short minimum contributory periods. The year's basic exemption is a provision which relieves contributors of the obligation to pay contributions on the lowest portion of their annual earnings, but at the same time allows them to include such earnings in the calculation of their benefits under the plan. The "drop-out" provision allows contributors to ignore years of low or zero earnings on which their benefits are calculated up to 15 per cent of the months in their contributory period and, in this way, enables them to increase the size of their benefits.

● (2010)

The short minimum contributory periods required before benefits can be paid—that is, three years for survivor benefits and five years for disability benefits—mean that such protection is available relatively early in the contributory period of the wage-earner.

The two major amendments to the Canada Pension Plan contained in Bill C-49 are designed to recognize the contribution of spouses who work in the home and to provide them with a measure of financial security.

The first of these major amendments is a provision to permit Canada Pension Plan credits earned by both spouses during the marriage to be divided equally between them on divorce or annulment of the marriage. This provision to split pension credits upon the dissolution of a marriage is aimed at ensuring for the "spouse at home" a fair share of an asset accumulated by the couple during their marriage, thereby providing some measure of financial security and recognition for the spouse at home and his or her dependants at the time of divorce or annulment.

The conditions set forth in Bill C-49 under which CPP credits earned by both spouses can be divided are as follows:

- (a) the marriage must be of at least three years' duration and the spouses must have cohabited for three consecutive years;
- (b) an application for division of pension credits must be made within three years of the effective date of the divorce or annulment;
- (c) the marriage is dissolved after the effective date of the amendment.

Provided the above requirements are met, the pension credits of the spouses would be added together and divided equally between them for the period beginning with the first year of marriage, or 1966, whichever is later, to the last year of marriage. For technical reasons, the splitting would apply to the period from the first day of the calendar year in which the marriage took place to the last day of the calendar year prior to the year in which the divorce or annulment becomes final.

For periods of separation that occur during the marriage, these could affect the period for which pension credits would be divided. Furthermore, pension credits would not be split for any period during which either spouse was not entitled to contribute to the plan—that is, periods during which either spouse is under age 18, age 70 or over, or when either spouse is in receipt of CPP retirement or disability benefits. Also, pension credits would not be split for any years in which the sum of the spouse's pension credit does not exceed twice the amount of the year's basic exemption; that is, twice $900 in 1977.

In cases where one or both of the spouses is in receipt of a CPP retirement or disability benefit at the time of the splitting of the CPP credits, a new benefit amount would be calculated on the basis of the split pension credits. This new amount would become payable the month after the month of application for the split. Also, when one spouse becomes entitled to CPP benefits as a result of the splitting of pension credits, the normal retroactivity of 12 months provided in the act would apply.

The second major amendment is a provision to permit CPP contributors to "drop out" from the calculation of their CPP benefits any months of low or zero earnings spent at home caring for children under age seven which might otherwise adversely affect their CPP entitlement.

The purpose of this "special drop-out" provision is to ensure that a parent who remains at home to care for young children will not be penalized for that period during which he or she has low or zero earnings. The provision would protect eligibility for, and the level of, CPP benefits earned by such a parent before, during and after the period devoted to raising young children. This provision may therefore be viewed as providing some economic recognition of and financial security for work done in the home.

This amendment would allow for the exclusion, from the CPP benefit calculation, of months of low or zero earnings which occurred in a period since January 1, 1966, when a person had a child under age seven in his or her care, and was in receipt of family allowance benefits in respect of such a child. Also, any CPP pension credits earned during the period of child-raising to which the special drop-out provision applies would be retained in the benefit calculation subject to the following conditions:

- (a) such credits were necessary to establish eligibility for CPP benefits, or
- (b) such credits would enhance the amount of CPP benefits payable.

Bill C-49 provides for regulations describing the circumstances under which the "special child-raising drop-out" could be assigned to the male parent, if he is in fact looking after the child or children. This would assure equal treatment for male and female parents.

It should be noted that the minimum contributory period requirements of the current act would be retained; that is, the number of months dropped out cannot normally reduce the required contributory period below 120 months.

Also, eligibility for disability benefits requires that contributions must have been made for at least five years and one-third of the contributory period, and for five out of the last 10 years.

A contributor is permanently insured for survivors benefits after 10 years of contribution. The amendment would also allow for the adjustment of CPP benefits being paid and, from the effective date of the new legislation, to provide for a recalculation of benefits in cases where a current CPP beneficiary would have been eligible for the special drop-out had it been in force since 1966.

Honourable senators will have noted that although the language of the bill refers to spouses and work in the home, these two amendments are really a further recognition of the principle of the equality of the sexes and a recognition also of women's rights and the contribution they make to society and to the country as a whole through their work in the home and the raising of children.

I should point out here that because of a provision in the Canada Pension Plan Act, both of these amendments, if passed by Parliament, must have the approval of two-thirds of the provinces having two-thirds of the population of 10 provinces before they can be proclaimed in force. The proposal for splitting CPP credits appears to have the necessary support. The special CPP child-rearing drop-out has the support of all provinces except Ontario. Because of its population, should Ontario withhold its approval of this amendment, the implementation of the provision would be effectively vetoed.

The second category of amendments included in Bill C-49 is comprised as follows: one, retroactive payment of retirement benefits to contributors between the ages of 65 and 70; two, provisions for benefit application to be made on behalf of deceased persons; three, equalization of children's benefits in respect of all children regardless of family size.

There have been cases where, through circumstances beyond their control, contributors have delayed application for benefits for a considerable period after becoming eligible, and consequently they have not received benefits available to them for the period between the date of their eligibility and the date of their application.

Senator Macdonald raised this point when the Canada Pension Plan was amended in November, 1974, and I know he will be pleased to note that clause 12 is designed to remedy this situation and to provide normal retroactivity of up to 12 months in respect of all future late applications for CPP retirement benefits. This provision would relate to the period from the effective date of the legislation onward and would only cover those periods after a person ceased to contribute to the CPP.

With respect to post mortem benefits, since the inception of the CPP a small number of cases have occurred where benefits to families or estates have been denied because the contributor, either through ignorance or unavoidable circumstances, died without making an application for benefits. The amendment in clause 11 would remove this limitation and permit applications to be made and retroactive benefits to be paid in respect of deceased persons who were otherwise eligible for the benefits.

The amendment would provide for up to 12 months retroactive payment of retirement pensions prior to age 70, including the month of application. However, the period of retroactivity would not extend back before the month following the last month in which he or she worked and for which a contribution to the plan was made, but not beyond the effective date of the amendment.

With respect to the equalization of children's benefits, under present legislation children's benefits—that is, benefits for orphans or the children of disabled contributors—are reduced when there are more than four eligible children. For the fifth and each subsequent child an amount equal to one-half of the full benefit is paid. The total benefits payable to all the children of the contributor is then added and divided equally among them all. Consequently, the children in large families receive less support per child from the CPP. The proposed amendment in clause 10 would eliminate this limitation and would allow the payment of full benefits to or on behalf of all dependent children of deceased or disabled contributors. The amount of children's benefits payable in 1977 is $44.84 per month per child.

It should be noted here that the Quebec Pension Plan was similarly amended on January 1, 1973, to the extent that each child would be paid the same amount. However, in Quebec this amount is fixed at $29 per child per month.

● (2020)

There are, in addition, three other amendments which can be grouped together, as they are of an administrative nature. These include the following:

- (1) suspension of benefits pending receipt of required information;
- (2) extension of the authority to enter into international social security agreements; and
- (3) payment of per diem allowances to members of the CPP Advisory Committee.

The amendment in clause 21 of this bill will provide authority for the withholding of CPP benefits where this proves necessary to assist the CPP administration in obtaining essential information from the beneficiary. This is intended to help the administration clarify whether the beneficiary is, in fact, entitled to the benefit which is being paid, when the necessary documentation cannot be obtained in any other way. Of course, the benefit will be reinstated with full retroactivity if the information provided confirms the beneficiary's entitlement.

The amendments in clauses 23 and 24 will expand the authority currently contained in the Canadian Pension Plan for the inclusion of the plan under the terms of international social security agreements. With the coming into force of the recent amendments to the Old Age Security Act, the Government of Canada is now in a position to proceed with negotiating such agreements. These could be of great benefit to persons who have immigrated to Canada. Many of these people are now effectively denied all or part of the benefits available under social security programs to which they have contributed in other countries. This is due to limitations which these countries normally place on payments to persons living abroad, except where a reciprocal social security agreement exists.

The amendments in clauses 23 and 24 will improve the government's ability to include the Canada Pension Plan in such agreements by permitting the negotiation of agreements which limit the total amount of combined benefits payable under the agreement. To protect the CPP contributor, the provision guarantees that the combined benefit will never be less than the CPP benefit which would have been payable in the absence of an agreement.

The amendment in clause 25 permits the payment of per diem allowances to CPP Advisory Committee members for days spent on committee work. Currently, such allowances are provided only for the days of formal committee meetings. However, the CPP Advisory Committee is one of the most active of all federal advisory committees. The valuable work which they are called upon to do in their appointed task of examining the role and operation of the Canada Pension Plan requires a great deal of additional time and effort on the part of committee members. This provision will help to defray the expenses which otherwise committee members would have to bear personally.

Honourable senators, there are a number of other amendments in Bill C-49, but they are all of a technical nature and are consequential on the eight amendments to which I have specifically referred. Each of these proposals has been endorsed by the Advisory Council on the Status of Women, the Canada Pension Plan Advisory Committee, and, with one exception, by all the provinces, the exception being the reservation which Ontario has expressed with respect to the child-rearing drop-out provision.

The provisions of Bill C-49 are designed to improve the Canada Pension Plan and thereby make it a better service for the needs of all Canadians. I would therefore urge all honourable senators to give it their wholehearted support.

On motion of Senator Smith (Colchester), debate adjourned.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of the Army Benevolent Fund Board, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 13 of the Army Benevolent Fund Act, Chapter A-16, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Interim Report of the Commission of Inquiry into Bilingual Air Traffic Services in Quebec, dated June 23, 1977, appointed by Order in Council P.C. 1976-1588, dated June 28, 1976, pursuant to Part I of the Inquiries Act (Co-Commissioners, the Honourable Messrs. W. R. Sinclair, Julien Chouinard and D. V. Heald).

Report of the Farm Credit Corporation, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to sections 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1) (g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, July 12, 1977, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

PARLIAMENT

TABLING OF DOCUMENTS—QUESTION

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask the Leader of the Government a question with regard to the report he just tabled concerning the investigation into the use of bilingualism in the air. I understood, although I may be misinformed, that this report was tabled last week in the other place. If this is the case, was it available last week for tabling in the Senate, and, if not, is there some particular reason for that?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is my understanding that the report was tabled in the other place on Friday, and therefore this is the first possible opportunity for tabling the report in this chamber. Generally, an effort is made to table reports of this kind simultaneously in both chambers. There have been two or three examples of this recently, including the study of the National Energy Board with respect to possible gas pipeline routes from the north. The government generally strives to have such documents tabled in both houses at the same time.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

RESPONSIBILITY OF MINISTERS AND BOARDS OF DIRECTORS—QUESTION

Senator Benidickson: Honourable senators, we will all have been impressed by and alarmed at the report last week of the Public Accounts Committee of the House of Commons, particularly with respect to the references it makes to two rather important but somewhat independent agencies, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Polysar. These agencies report to ministers and to boards of directors. In the report there were suggestions that certain individuals be made the victims for certain results that were very unsatisfactory relating to considerable millions of dollars of losses or deficits.

I would ask our representative in the cabinet, the Honourable Leader of the Government, whether careful consideration has been given to the responsibility of ministers and boards of directors in relation to this extensive report, and to the question of whether all or the right people have paid the penalty so far for the depressing, discouraging results produced by these agencies, which do not report to us adequately but which are, ultimately, the responsibility of us and our taxpayers.

Senator Perrault: Together with other honourable senators I have noted the observations of Senator Benidickson. I feel sure that government policy will be enunciated in due course with respect to the matters he has raised. Additionally, however, I would like to take that question as notice, in order that I may bring to the chamber a fuller reply.

● (2030)

Senator Benidickson: I hope that will be before recess.

Senator Perrault: The matter has been discussed, and I understand that there have been one or two public statements by ministers with respect to possible new policy in that area, but I do not have any such policy statement available at my desk at this moment.

AUDITOR GENERAL BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Augustus Irvine Barrow moved the third reading of Bill C-20, respecting the office of the Auditor General of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto.

He said: Honourable senators, I would like to thank Senator Walker for the interesting and informative remarks he made on the second reading of Bill C-20. I unintentionally neglected to acknowledge them when I closed the debate on second reading.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I have a brief observation to make at this stage. My understanding is that the committee—and I am sorry to say this when neither the chairman nor the deputy chairman is present—agreed to report the bill without amendment, providing Mr. E. Gallant, the Chairman of the Public Service Commission, did not wish to appear before the committee with respect to the status of employees employed under the Public Service Employment Act and working for the Auditor General.

A notification of that was sent out by the clerk of the committee, Mr. Cocks, on July 8, to which was attached a copy of a letter written to the Deputy Chairman, Senator Sparrow, on July 7. This is apparently a reply by the Chairman of the Public Service Commission to a request from the chairman of the committee, or the deputy chairman, that he attend if he wishes. He says he is writing to confirm a telephone conversation with Mr. Cocks, and then says, in effect, that while the Public Service Commission has some doubts about the status of employees of the Auditor General's department under Bill C-20, nevertheless, the Public Service Commission feels that perhaps some of their problems might be resolved under subclause 15(3) of the bill, and, if that is not fully adequate, the commission might recommend other remedies.

Honourable senators, my suggestion is that I either read the letter—it is not very long—into the record, or that it be printed in today's Hansard so that the position taken by the Public Service Commission in respect to the rights of some public servants under this act will be on record. Perhaps the leader or the deputy leader will suggest whether that is acceptable.

Senator Perrault: I have no objection.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.
(The letter follows:)

Ottawa, Ontario K1A 0M7
July 7, 1977.

The Honourable H. O. Sparrow,
Deputy Chairman,
Standing Senate Committee on National Finance,
The Senate,
Parliament Buildings,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Re: Bill C-20—The Auditor General Act

Dear Senator,

I am writing to you to confirm my telephone conversation of this afternoon, with Mr. Cocks, the Clerk of your Committee, concerning the above-mentioned Bill. While the Public Service Commission continues to have some doubt as to the effect of the proposed legislation on the status of those employees presently employed under the Public Service Employment Act and working for the Auditor General, particularly with respect to their future promotion within the Public Service and their access to the redress mechanisms provided for under the Public Service Employment Act, we feel that most of these difficulties can be resolved through the terms and conditions to be set by the Public Service Commission under subclause 15(3) of Bill C-20. Should this not be fully adequate to protect the status of these employees, the Commission would be prepared to recommend to the Governor in Council that the Office of the Auditor General be designated as part of the Public Service under subsection 35(2) of the Public Service Employment Act, so as to entitle his employees to participate in closed competition in other portions of the Public Service. Indeed if necessary, the Commission would be prepared to recommend remedial legislation when the amendments to the Public Service Employment Act will be considered.

We trust that through the above-mentioned channels and with special agreements with the Auditor General as need be, the Commission's concerns for the status of the employees will be met.

Yours sincerely,

Edgar Gallant,
Chairman.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: Honourable senators, before this bill is read the third time I feel obliged to say a few words.

I think Senator Grosart has properly referred to the conditional situation that resulted from the meeting last week of the National Finance Committee on a point raised by the Leader of the Opposition. I also have read the letter from the Chairman of the Public Service Commission, and I am glad my friend, Senator Grosart, who takes a great interest in this committee, has raised this point.

I feel obliged to say a few things tonight. I have always had an interest in matters relating to the finances of government, because I had the honour of serving for about eight years under two Ministers of Finance as parliamentary assistant, and four years as Liberal Party financial critic when the Diefenbaker Conservative Party was in power. I had very agreeable relationships, on a personal and an official basis, with the former Auditor General, Mr. Maxwell Henderson, for whom I have a very high regard indeed. He has some criticism of his experience in that office. I will not argue or debate that. He was succeeded by Mr. Macdonell. After Mr. Macdonell had assumed office for a couple of years, he also voiced some very harsh criticisms of government, to the extent that he used rather strong language. I think it is reported that in 1975 he said government finances were "out of control."

Members of the committee will remember last week that I referred our current Auditor General to this. He said, "Yes, I felt obliged to say that. I wanted action." Unfortunately, as so often happens at this stage—prior to recess—in our parliamentary procedure, we do not yet have the printed proceedings of the meeting last week of the National Finance Committee, so I am reporting from memory. As I recall it, Mr. Macdonell did say two or three things that I think the whole Senate should be aware of. He said that he thinks his recommendations in very large part have been accepted eventually by the government. I, as a member of the committee, complimented him for his patience because I thought he was not going to win the fight. The media reported—I did not know this personally—that he had strong opposition to face in such elevated places as the Treasury Board. I thought that I had clipped something to this effect and that I had written to him—or perhaps I telephoned him. My poor memory now makes me cross. However, it was my impression that he was on the right course. I had been interested in this area of government for some time, and at that time I urged him to be persistent.

When the committee's proceedings are published you will read that I thought I had telephoned him. He replied to this effect: "No, senator, you wrote to me in 1975 and you said, 'Hang on, Jim. It is very important that you win on this recommendation to have someone with the status of deputy minister join in helping us parliamentarians when these expenditure figures reach the mammoth amounts of today.'" There are remarks in the proceedings of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to the effect that eventually he got "superb" co-operation from the now president of the Treasury Board, my colleague and successor as minister responsible for northern Ontario, the Honourable Robert Andras—and I do not say that in a political way.

● (2040)

I wish to say that during the course of our committee hearings last week it was I who complimented a former leader of the Conservative Party who, when he was Prime Minister, appointed one of our colleagues, Senator Macnaughton—who at that time was an opposition member—chairman of the all-important Public Accounts Committee of the House of Commons.

I have paid my tribute to Mr. Henderson. I believe he just did not have the same patience as his successor, but he was right on his duty to Parliament.

While speaking of Mr. Henderson, I might mention that I asked a question previously with respect to two agencies of government, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Polysar, to which reference was made in the report of the Public Accounts Committee of the House of Commons. I stand by Mr. Henderson. He wrote a letter to the Prime Minister which, in my opinion, was proper, and then referred by the Prime Minister to the responsible minister. Some say that there was not an adequate follow-up. Some say that Mr. Henderson had a lack of patience at times, but in my opinion he was very considerate and proper in writing to the Prime Minister personally on this item of what he foresaw as an implication of importance. For that consideration I compliment him.

I point out to my colleagues, however, that with respect to this bill we need to examine our role in relation to the office of the Auditor General. I raised the point in committee last week. I said I did not raise it for the purpose of delaying the passage of this bill, but for the purpose of asking our Law Clerk to examine the reasons for some sections of it. The Senate has a duty to approve the estimates. The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance is working for that purpose. We have to approve all the appropriation bills—the main estimates and supplementary estimates. Senator Barrow, I hope, will help me in finding the reference in Bill C-20. I believe there is a clause which provides that the Auditor General, in certain respects, reports only to the House of Commons. Last week I pointed out to the Auditor General that he does, of course, provide each house, as an equal parliamentary body, a copy of his report. He said that was indeed so. He remarked that that was the first occasion upon which he had had the pleasure and honour of coming before a committee of the Senate. He added that he felt that our questioning had been pertinent, intelligent and to his benefit, and that he had great respect for us in our financial examination.

Is it clause 20 that I am referring to, Senator Barrow?

Senator Barrow: It is clause 7(3).

Senator Benidickson: No, I am thinking of clause 20(1) at the moment, but I will return to the clause you mentioned. Clause 20(1), under the heading "Estimates," reads as follows:

The Auditor General shall annually prepare an estimate of the sums that will be required to be provided by Parliament for the payment—

Clause 20(2) provides:

The Auditor General may make a special report to the House of Commons—

The Senate is not mentioned. Then we have clause 22(2):

Each report referred to . . . shall lay each such report before the House of Commons—

I do implore the Leader of the Government to ask the Law Clerk of the Senate to look into this for the purpose, as I suggested, of a future amendment.

Senator Barrow referred to clause 7, which is the overall basic thought. Clause 7(1) reads as follows:

The Auditor General shall report annually to the House of Commons—

The National Finance Committee takes some time to consider the expenditures in the estimates. Appropriation bills—and sometimes we have half a dozen in the session—cannot pass without Senate study and concurrence. I believe our relationship to financial matters should be considered and reported upon by the Law Clerk of the Senate.

I did not speak to the last report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, but I can say that the chairman and deputy chairman covered it adequately last week. I am very gratified and pleased—Senator Grosart spoke to this, I believe—that the National Finance Committee adopted a few years ago, under the chairmanship of our young and capable colleague, Senator Everett, the role of conducting sessionally an investigation in depth of a particular department. We are relatively non-political here. We do not decide our course of action and our debates day by day according to some highlight in the newspapers. We continue steadily with a rather exhaustive study of some government expenditures. We do this in the National Finance Committee, and, I believe, effectively, because so many of our recommendations have the merit of being eventually adopted by the government. I approve that system.

● (2050)

The committee has agreed that next year it will not merely take two or three programs from the blue book for detailed examination, or the supplementary estimates for a day's or two days' examination, but, rather, will, throughout the session, examine any item after the publication of that huge blue book of estimates perhaps—I forget the exact amount—now involving some $42 billion. At the request of a member of the committee, it has been decided that the committee will devote Wednesday afternoons next session to the examination of items which have aroused the public's interest or items which the committee feels are worthy of in-depth examination in the main estimates for 1978-79, which will likely be tabled in January 1978.

Given the way in which our rules are structured, the Senate can and should be much prompter in devoting attention to matters of current appeal and interest, thereby allowing us to provide quick satisfaction on such matters to the public. Let us use our rules. As a consequence of such action, we will enhance the public's image of the Senate.

Senator Grosart: I wonder if I might ask Senator Benidickson if he would agree with me that there is nothing whatsoever in our rules to prevent the Senate itself, or the National Finance Committee, from examining the public accounts of Canada.

Indeed, such examination is specifically provided for in our rules. Rule 67(1)(h) provides for the examination of the national accounts and the report of the Auditor General by the National Finance Committee if there is a motion to that effect. So, there is nothing whatsoever to stop the Senate or the National Finance Committee from examining the public accounts if we feel so disposed.

Senator Benidickson: I agree completely with Senator Grosart. I simply suggest that perhaps we have not done so adequately in our dual parliamentary chamber role. The opportunity is there. We have something in our rules which the other place does not have, that being the ability of any senator to institute a debate on a question by means of giving notice of inquiry. That is something which cannot be done in the House of Commons. If a senator has the energy and the interest to give notice of an inquiry, and if a majority of his peers are in agreement with him and will participate in the ensuing debate, that senator can institute a debate on any given subject. Only 48 hours elapse. Following debate, the subject matter of the notice of inquiry can then be referred to a standing committee, or even a special committee. I cannot over-emphasize that more in the way of that type of debate and action is needed in this house.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

NATIONAL UNITY

REGIONAL ASPIRATIONS—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Perrault, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to the question of meeting more effectively the economic and cultural aspirations of the various regions of Canada.—(Honourable Senator Petten).

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, I yield to Senator Greene.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. J. J. Greene: Honourable senators, it was not my original intent to participate in this debate—for what appeared to me to be the very good reason that we in this Senate did not have the constitutional power or authority to come to any definitive conclusion on the very broad subject matter covered by the terms of the inquiry encompassed in the government leader's notice of inquiry.

However, after reading Senator Perrault's excellent speech, and those of equally high calibre that followed, I have come to the very firm conclusion that I should be remiss in my duty, not only to this honourable Senate, but to the country at large, if I do not make an attempt to make such small contribution, as is within my power, to this debate.

Because, after all, Parliament is not a place which is to be measured by the number of ultimate decisions it has made or the volume of bills it has ground through the mills of its processes. Unfortunately, our press, and sometimes even some of our own members and senators, are inclined to forget this basic concept and would like to measure parliamentary performance by "voting record," "number of bills passed," attendance, and such statistical criteria. This may be quite the proper basis of assessing the legislative performance under a republican form of government, and I regret that those who have erred in this direction must have had their eyes on Washington and forgotten the fact that the Fathers of Confederation, in their wisdom, rightly chose representative parliamentary government as that best suited to the needs of Canada. The difference might be most graphically illustrated by the fact that, when Churchill, who perhaps knew and understood Parliament better than any statesman of our century, rebuilt Westminster after the German bombings of World War II, he deliberately built the Commons of such size as to accommodate only a small proportion of the total number of members of Parliament eligible to sit. He did this so that on a great occasion when there was need for immediate and important parliamentary action there would be in the house a sense of crisis, urgency, immediacy and "important occasion," just as in any forum where there are more people wanting to get in than there are tickets available. So there is indeed the highest authority for the proposition that Parliament is the venue for high and important matters rather than a mill for the grinding out of the normal day-to-day functions of state. So indeed we will come to no final or definitive conclusion on this great subject in this Senate—but, yes, we do have a duty to lead public opinion and the great national discussion which has commenced and will continue in the years ahead.

I know many senators have felt from time to time that the shortcomings of the appointive half of the legislature in a bicameral Parliament is in its lack of ultimate power; certainly, the ultimate power must always rest in the popular half of Parliament. Stanley Baldwin is once reputed to have indicted the barons of the British press, who were besetting him hard at the time on a particular issue, with this charge:

I note the barons of the press are after me—They seek power without responsibility which has been the prerogative of harlots throughout the ages.

We in the Senate may sometimes feel we are in the opposite position. We appear to have responsibility without power—which, in the eyes of the little informed, at times appears to render us some species of political eunuch. No, the Senate does not have constitutional power vis-à-vis the elected half of the legislature; but we do have a very real power which can flow from the only source of real power in a free society, the people themselves. That power will be based on the quality of our performance. I am satisfied that this debate, whose tone was set by the initiative and the quality of the performance of the government leader in the Senate, so ably supported by the high tone and substance of those who have followed, is just such an action where, by its performance, the Senate is performing its function in giving leadership to our country in its highest sense.

● (2100)

I note with interest that the other place followed the lead of the Senate in instituting a debate on the subject matter of this notice of inquiry. I trust that the academics, and perhaps even the press, will compare, speech by speech, the contribution of members of this Senate—my own poor contribution apart—and I think they will find, if they read the speeches in both houses, as I know most honourable senators do, and as I do, that the contribution made by senators is worthy of the Senate and provides the leadership which is needed in this country.

It would be less than candid to state that the current concern in our land was triggered by anything but the election results of a single province on November 15 of last year. However, I suggest it would be politically myopic to think that this is the only area of concern in our Confederation. There are thoughtful and sincere people who love our land dearly in many of its regions, who believe that after 110 generally happy and wonderful years, as compared to the same time frame in any other region of the world, it is indeed time for a new look at our Confederation in the light of our history, present attitudes and future prospects. Many of these concerns refer to the economic prospects of our various regions, as well as cultural issues, as the broad wording of the notice of inquiry which is the subject matter of our debate so clearly indicates.

To those who look tremulously upon the events of November 15 as some sort of crisis or defeat for our Canada, may I suggest that any apparent defeat or setback has historically been but the door of opportunity. A setback gives the opportunity to open the door to the past, review its events and set a new course through that newly opened door for the future. The late John Fitzgerald Kennedy put it this way:

It is time for a new generation of leadership, to cope with new problems and new opportunities, for there is a new world to be won.

So it is with us at this time and in this land.

We can take a look at the past and be thankful for the duality of our linguistic and cultural heritage which was not foisted upon us by a Francophone minority but which was the accord solemnly entered into by our then British governors acting under the direction and authority of the Colonial Office who were at that time lords and masters of this land, for good and rightful reasons, considering the situation as it existed at that time, in the interests, not of the Francophone minority but of the British Crown which was then sovereign over this land. We must recollect that 1761 was not long before that day when the shot at Concord was heard around the world and triggered the American Revolution. The British Crown was anxious to keep the Francophone population from joining with those unruly fellows to the south who were threatening to kick over the traces and go their own way, separate and apart from and independent of the British Crown. To assure the allegiance of the French-speaking people to the Crown in the ensuing conflict, Lord Monk and Lord Carleton, during their respective terms as British governors, assured the French-speaking peoples that if they would stay with the British ship the future of their language, culture and religion would be assured and guaranteed by the British Crown.

It was this covenant which some 100 years later was encompassed in the Constitution of the new country of Canada. It is to this accident of history, the British Crown acting in its own interest, that we owe not only the blessing and opportunity afforded by the basic linguistic and cultural duality of our body politic, but I suggest further that it is to this same genesis that we owe the multiplicity of the Canadian culture. It was the determination of our Francophone people to have the covenant of Lords Monk and Carleton lived up to, and their success in maintaining that promise which resulted in our distinctive dual culture and in our refusal to accept the "melting pot" conclusion which was the choice of our great neighbour to the south. In this milieu it was inevitable that those who later came to this land from other ethnic backgrounds and cultures were able to perceive that they too might become part of, and good citizens of, this new land, while still maintaining the respective cultures of the lands from whence they had come, as part of the integral fabric of their newly chosen land. So I suggest that each ethnic person who has come to this land and been enabled, yes, encouraged to continue here the culture of his forebears, owes that opportunity and blessing to the brave example of his French Canadian brethren who had preceded him and set the pattern which has led to the richness and multiplicity of our current culture, and to that concept of Canada which the late Lester Bowles Pearson so ably termed—unity in diversity.

It is the way of Canadians to have several favourite public whipping boys. Among our favourite victims is the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. We here in Parliament are among the first to pull out the lash when we believe they have erred or strayed and fallen short. I think we equally owe it to them to pay homage when they have served well the cause of maintaining the unity of our country. What Canadian could not but have been proud and grateful for the performance of the CBC on the evening of our 110th birthday when they so effectively presented, not only from an artistic but from a technical standpoint, the panorama of this great land, demonstrating to us all the richness, variety and high quality of our cultural and ethnic heritage. May there be many such performances, for the task of maintaining unity while at the same time encouraging and enhancing our diversity is not an easy one, and requires not only the effort of our legislators and citizens but particularly the best and most dedicated participation of our entire federal public service.

The other side of the coin of our notice of inquiry is the economic aspirations of the various regions of Canada. On this score I suggest we should be as careful to maintain the diversity of the various economic regions of Canada as we are determined to maintain our cultural diversities. The people of Japan have to their great credit built a powerful economy in a small land with few resources and with but limited economic diversities to call upon. I respectfully suggest that it is no answer to regional economic aspirations to build here in Canada five microcosms of Tokyo or Yokohama. To have a Tokyo in Vancouver, a Yokohama in Calgary or Edmonton, a Tokyo and/or Yokohama in Toronto and a similar megalopolis in Montreal and Halifax, each of which were equally rich and each of which afforded equal economic opportunity, would surely be denial of the Canadian dream rather than its fruition. We were blessed not only with a great land mass but with a great and an almost complete bounty of economic resources throughout the various regions of that land mass. We have surely learned from the sad demise of the great city of New York that the unbounded megalopolis is not the answer to man's socio-economic aspirations on this planet.

• (2110)

Yes, we should continue to have great cities and be proud of them. Certainly, those great cities should be part of the Canadian heritage, but surely we have learned that there is an optimum size to cities, that cities permitted to grow willy-nilly and ad infinitum end up in economic discord and economic chaos rather than in the greater regional opportunities our notice of inquiry seeks to find.

We have the time and the opportunity, because of the size and the breadth of our geography and economic resources and because fortunately we have not utilized them all too quickly or too soon, to build differently. Surely it is not beyond our imagination and expertise to mend our economic fences—as the notice of inquiry postulates—resulting in greater regional equity while at the same time maintaining the diversity of our land in economic terms. Can we not approach the solution to these problems while still maintaining the viability of our small towns, medium-sized cities and, yes, our rural areas? Does the family farm—so much an integral part of the Canadian economy and where so many were born and brought up to go on to great places of leadership in other endeavours—have to become the so-called “economic unit,” which that new deity, the agricultural economist, deems imperative, the sort of factory farm tried and found badly wanting in those countries which espouse the socialist-statist form of government? Or can we not maintain to some degree the traditional ideal of the farm with the home as an integral part—the family farm as an entity of economic productivity—and still achieve the greater equity in regional economic opportunity that we seek? Does the young person whose family traditions lead to shipbuilding or fishing in our Atlantic provinces have to shift to suburbia in order to achieve just economic opportunity? Must the salmon fisherman of British Columbia get a job in the factory in Vancouver in order to attain our ideal of minimizing economic disparities? Should we shut down and forever abandon all of our great north country with its unique and largely virgin topography and tell its citizens, “You had better head for the steel mills or the car plants, if you want to live as well as other Canadians?”

[Translation]

Should the people living in the Gaspé peninsula move to Montreal in order to achieve equal economic opportunities? I hope not.

[English]

I suggest that this is the Canadian challenge: to maintain this land in all its richness and fullness and variegated geographical wonder and to achieve the greater economic justice postulated by the notice of inquiry while at the same time maintaining the variety and fascination of the great Canadian land mass, in its small towns, in its smaller cities on the coastlines and outports, both Atlantic and Pacific, and in its great and relatively untapped northland so that the dream of Thomas Darcy McGee, that the Dominion would stretch like the Shield of Achilles from ocean unto ocean, would in fact be fulfilled, perpetuated and enhanced in the years ahead. Yes, it would stretch like a shield from ocean unto ocean, but this land would indeed be Canada and not some poor imitation of some other land or lands which had achieved economic success, and our cultural and economic “thing”, as our young people call it, would be as one, and both in economics and in culture we would share—unité dans la diversité: unity in diversity.

On motion of Senator Fournier (Restigouche-Gloucester), debate adjourned.

BANKING LEGISLATION

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Salter A. Hayden rose pursuant to notice of June 29, 1977:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on the document entitled: “White Paper on the Revision of Canadian Banking Legislation, August, 1976,” tabled in the Senate on Tuesday, 28th June, 1977.

He said: Honourable senators, on June 29, at the suggestion or at the request, call it which you will, of Senator Flynn, I gave this notice of inquiry. When I tabled the report on June 28, I indicated that I did not propose to say anything further to what I had said in touching on the highlights. Nor do I intend to add anything at this time.

Senator Flynn thought, you will recall, that this might afford an opportunity for debate. My view with respect to that is as follows, and I have expressed this opinion on a number of occasions: When the Senate refers to a committee the subject matter of a white paper, such as you had in this case—a white paper on Canadian banking legislation—or the subject matter of a bill and other documents implementing a bill tabled in the House of Commons, the bill being of such a nature that it would appear it might have some lengthy period of consideration in the House of Commons, it is our practice to get busy early in order to prepare a study so that the Senate might, as the result of that, be fully informed when the bill comes to us. In those cases, when a report comes to the Senate from a committee and that report has been prepared in relation to such a reference by the Senate to the committee of such subject matter, my view has been and still is that I would not want to participate in a debate at that stage because there is still something more to come. There is a bill. For instance, with regard to the report that we tabled on Canadian banking legislation, the purpose of the white paper was to develop discussion and representations with a view to the preparation of a new bank act to be submitted to the Parliament of Canada later this year.

● (2120)

In those circumstances it is difficult to debate the report to any great depth, although I must say, if I may recommend the report myself, that it is an excellent research job which I am sure will have considerable public acceptance.

Nevertheless, there is still to come the major actor that has not yet appeared on the scene. I refer to the new Bank Act. It would be difficult to debate this report in the absence of some other document as important as a new Bank Act, by which we can check and compare what the bill proposes as against what the report, which has been tabled, says about the various subject matters which are developed in the white paper.

For that reason I do not propose to add anything at this time, and, logical or illogical, those are my reasons for not doing so. I believe I had a fair run at developing the highlights of the report on Tuesday, June 28, and I shall let it rest at that.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, naturally I do not presume to speak for Senator Flynn, but my impression is that what Senator Flynn may have had in mind—in fact, what I believe he did have in mind—was that it might be appropriate at this time for Senator Hayden or another senator to move concurrence in the report. If it were the wish of the Senate, and if it would improve the acceptability of the report in the other place or at the executive level, that might be an additional indication of the validity of this very fine report.

This may be because we seem to have developed a tendency in recent years for chairmen, in introducing reports, to move concurrence. For a long time, as I recall, this was not done. Our rules contemplate the possibility of this being done, but generally the tenor of the rules seems to me to be very much in line with what Senator Hayden has said. Rule 78 makes a distinction between a report of a committee on a bill and a report of a committee on a matter referred to it but not a bill originating in the Senate or coming to us from the House of Commons. It says:

(1) A report from a select committee—

And this is, of course, a select committee:

—shall be presented by the chairman of the committee or by a senator designated by the chairman.

(2) A report presented to the Senate shall be received without debate.

(3) A report which by its own terms is for the information only of the Senate shall be laid on the table but may on motion be placed on the orders of the day for future consideration.

The point I am making is that it seems to me that in recent years we have tended to use paragraph (3) more than paragraphs (1) and (2). However, as I say, it was Senator Flynn's proposal, and I am sure it was an indication of his approval of the report, and perhaps a wish on his part to make his own comment.

I do not know exactly what is the status of discussion because at the moment Senator Hayden has placed this matter before us by way of an inquiry, he has spoken to the inquiry, and I take it that a debate is now under way on the inquiry. Therefore, it might be proper for me, in the absence of Senator Flynn, to move the adjournment of the debate until he is in a position to state his views on, and his agreement or otherwise with, the statement made by Senator Hayden.

Senator Hayden: May I ask my friend a question? Is the substance of what he has said that he would have commitment without concurrence?

Senator Grosart: I do not think that was the substance of what I said. What I had in mind was that Senator Hayden or another senator, which would be quite in order, might move concurrence in the report, or there might merely be a discussion, which would be a normal procedure if we were to follow our rules. At the suggestion of Senator Flynn, Senator Hayden has taken the matter another way. He has raised the matter on inquiry. I am quite sure that that was to accommodate the suggestion of Senator Flynn, and for that reason I move the adjournment of the debate, not in any way to suggest that I myself think that any concurrence or commitment is necessary at this stage.

On motion of Senator Grosart, for Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

PROTECTION OF BORROWERS AND DEPOSITORS

REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE—
DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Salter A. Hayden rose pursuant to notice of July 7, 1977:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on the subject matter of the Bill C-16, intituled: "An Act to provide for the protection of borrowers and depositors, to regulate interest on judgment debts, to repeal the Interest Act, the Pawnbrokers Act and the Small Loans Act and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof," tabled in the Senate on Thursday, 7th July, 1977.

He said: Honourable senators, before proceeding with my inquiry, calling the attention of the Senate to the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on the subject matter of Bill C-16, which was tabled by me last Thursday—there was no discussion and no request for leave to discuss the provisions of the report; nor was there any motion in respect to the printing—I should like first to request that the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking,

Trade and Commerce on the subject matter of Bill C-16, to provide for the protection of borrowers and depositors, to regulate interest on judgment debts, to repeal the Interest Act, the Pawnbrokers Act and the Small Loans Act and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof, tabled in the Senate on Thursday, July 7th, 1977, be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day, and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see appendix to today's Hansard.)

Senator Hayden: Honourable senators, I should now like to discuss—at this time of night as briefly as possible—the highlights of the report. I do so in this context, that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs made an announcement on Wednesday or Thursday of last week that there would be a new credit bill in the fall of this year. I believe the language used was to the effect that it would be a new amended credit bill.

The history of this bill has shown that there has been very substantial opposition in many quarters to its scope, its over-reaching, its favouring of one of the parties dealt with, namely, the borrower as against the lender, and the extension of the meaning—I was almost going to say the distortion of the meaning—of a lending transaction, and also the distortion, in my view, of the meaning of a credit charge.

I had always thought that “interest” was something that you pay for the use of money; but we learned in committee from departmental officers, when they were questioned on why the word “interest” did not appear more often in the bill, that they had been advised by the Justice Department to use the expression “credit charge”. If I may venture into the realm of prophecy, I would say the reason for using that expression was the possible hope that they might thereby escape the judicial interpretation of “interest”, and the extent to which it might be applied in relation to the cost of a loan.

● (2130)

Therefore, you have two expressions, “credit charge” and “credit charge rate”. Once or twice, or perhaps more often, in the course of a bill—through inadvertence, I am sure—the word “interest” crept into some of the language in one of the clauses. Some of that has been remedied by the amendments which were subsequently developed.

In the House of Commons this bill was referred to the Committee on Health and Welfare, and as the newspaper reports say, it has been languishing there. Many witnesses have been heard since that date, but still no report has been presented by that committee. There has been much in the way of objection by those who are affected by the various facets of the bill.

I want tonight to just touch on some of the major provisions of the bill which deal with such things as who is a borrower, who is a lender, what is a lending transaction and what is a credit charge.

The borrower aspect is quite easy to follow. Originally the bill said that a borrower was a natural person or a closely held corporation. Much opposition developed in evidence from mortgage companies, life insurance companies and so on, which showed that closely held corporations would gather in many of the land developers and many of the construction project people, because they usually incorporate in a very small, close group to get the benefit, I suppose, of limited liability; and in the course of advancing money, it might be two or three years before the loans would be fully advanced; yet there were provisions in the bill providing for prepayment that would commence early in the progress of the history of the bill.

Closely held corporations, by amendments, were then struck out of the bill, and right here I should tell you about those amendments. This bill was referred to your committee in November of last year. We had hearings in December and during all the months since until late in June, when we concluded our hearings. In the first week of May we received a group of amendments, which covered clauses one to 12 of the bill. Then, in about the second week of June, we received a complete set of amendments covering the entire range of the bill from clause one to clause 44. In the course of considering these amendments on the second occasion, we noted that some of those that were in the first edition of amendments had been amended in the second edition.

Senator Grosart: Is the honourable senator referring now to amendments from the government?

Senator Hayden: Yes, I am referring to amendments proposed by the minister and presented to the House of Commons committee, before which the minister appeared in order to explain and support them. Whether that work has been completed or not I do not know.

We considered the amendments ourselves, and with regard to them I can tell you this: The bill had 44 clauses. The amendments I refer to proposed to amend 28 of those clauses, 28 of which would be material amendments. Twenty-three of the clauses and subclauses that were dealt with were new. Twelve clauses were deleted completely. In all, 75 subclauses were amended. The position we took in the report with regard to all this was that the bill had become, substantially, a new bill, and that all the witnesses and delegations we had heard has made their representations to us on the basis of the bill that had originally been put forward. There were two groups from whom we received comments subsequently on the new amendments, one of them being the Canadian Bar Association; the name of the other escapes me at the moment.

One recommendation we make in the report is that this should be considered as a new bill, and should be reconstituted, redeveloped and presented again at another time. We did not know how close we were to a decision of the minister to do this very thing, an announcement to this effect appearing in the Globe and Mail on Wednesday of last week. There was quite an article, with headlines, which appeared in the Toronto Star on Saturday.

The substance, or part of the substance, of both of these newspaper reports had to do with the question of the law on loan sharks. While this has been played up, and while the police have been demanding effective loan shark legislation, there is one clause, clause 37, in the original bill which provided for a penalty for exceeding a credit charge rate fixed by regulation. During our consideration of the bill we indicated that this was a matter of substance, and should be, not in the form of a regulation but in the bill itself.

In the course of examining the officers of the department, this particular credit charge rate was described by them as being a criminal rate. This clause was therefore intended to deal with loan sharks, although, for some reason or other, the phrase "loan sharks" is not mentioned at all. In the amendment to clause 37, however, a criminal credit charge rate was fixed at 45 per cent. It was then urged that there were other provisions in the bill, such as that dealing with the matter of lenders having to maintain records, which could be used to check on loan sharks. There was also a provision in the bill under which a borrower could take proceedings against a lender who was alleged to have charged a non-warranted credit charge rate, and have a hearing in court to test the matter. I will develop that in a moment.

In the opinion of your committee, and as stated in the report, loan sharking, which involves, shall we call it, private enforcement of collection of charges by means of methods which would violate the Criminal Code, such as assault and battery, should be covered by the Criminal Code; that provisions dealing with loan sharking should be in the Criminal Code. This bill, which dealt with the protection of borrowers, is civil legislation, and should be treated as such. We pointed out that in all the provinces in Canada there are provisions with respect to consumer protection, and that in all but two of the provinces in Canada there are unconscionable transactions acts, the design of which is to undo harsh and unconscionable transactions, and alter harsh and unconscionable rates of interest. So the field is pretty well occupied.

● (2140)

It was the view of the committee that borrowers and lenders should be dealt with in a way which would protect the borrower but which at the same time would not be so over-reaching in its scope that it would likely disturb mortgage markets and business practices. And we say so in our report.

In the bill a "borrower" is defined as a natural person. We recommend that there should be an addition to that. A borrower should be a natural person who is borrowing in a non-business transaction; in other words, personal borrowing. At the same time the lender should be lending in the course of carrying out his business.

Then we come to the definition of a lending transaction. The sky appears to be the limit in the bill. A lending transaction not only includes a borrower and a lender but also the arrangements in connection with assignments or sale of rights where payment is at a time or times in the future. Included, of course, would be assignments of mortgages, assignments of debts, factoring, and the assignment of receivables. This is what I meant by saying earlier that one of the aspects of over-reaching is the definition of a lending transaction. But the real prize in lending is found in clauses 3 and 4 of the bill which go into the business of general lending transactions. In these two clauses their reach is much greater. Their reach is to catch interest in transactions that may be borrowing transactions where the borrower may be a corporation. Clause 3 reads:

Except as otherwise provided by or pursuant to this or any other Act of Parliament, any person—

You notice the words, "any person."

—in an agreement evidencing a lending transaction, may provide for any rate of interest that is agreed upon.

Clause 4(1) reads:

Where by law or under an agreement evidencing a lending transaction to which a borrower is not a party, interest is payable and no rate is fixed by or determinable under the law or agreement—

You will notice that in clause 4 they go to a lending transaction to which a borrower is not a party. In the committee we have wondered, and we continue to wonder, how you can have a lending transaction and not have a borrower. It was puzzling to us. They amended clause 3 twice and they amended clause 4 twice. In the first amendment to clause 3, which I read to you, they talk about a transaction that would be a lending transaction if a borrower were a party thereto. This gives you something to wrestle with.

On the second time around, in this part of the definition which was changed they say,

"any person, in any agreement, whether evidencing a lending transaction or not . . ."

In clause 4, the first time around, they provided that:

Where by law or under an agreement evidencing a transaction that would be a lending transaction if a borrower were a party thereto—

Then they inserted the rest of the provision in the original clause. This is an effort to reach beyond the scope of what is ordinarily understood as a lending transaction.

Then they appeared to have special designs on a type of case. There are people in Canada who deal with the purchase and acquisition of income tax returns. Taxpayers entitled to refunds can go to such a company or firm and make a deal to sell, assign and transfer the right and entitlement to the tax refund to this group. A number of these people appeared before us as witnesses. They indicated that the usual rate of discount was 30 per cent. They paid the taxpayer 70 per cent of the amount of his refund. The assignment that the taxpayer made was an absolute assignment; there was no right of recourse. Yet that is practically labeled in a clause of this bill as a lending transaction. This is what I call over-reaching.

The committee was not attempting to defend people who engage in this kind of business. What we say in the report is that if this is to be dealt with, it should be dealt with in the Income Tax Act and not in this act.

Credit charge is defined as one including interest. This is a favourite. When you want to enlarge the meaning of an expression you use the word "included", instead of saying "means". By using "means" you tie yourself into a particular meaning. "Including interest" includes interest among other things. Then there is a whole list of inclusions. The major objection we put in the report is to the inclusion, as part of the credit charge, of payments made by the borrower to third persons, such as appraisal fees, insurance premiums on policies which are taken out to safeguard the interest of the borrower and the interest of the lender, and survey costs. These are payments which the borrower must make to third parties. They are not then rebated to the lender, but they are part of the credit charge—payments to third parties. We suggested that there should be a limitation on that. The limitation should be payments to third parties where the third party is an agent or a nominee of the lender. They cannot be part of the credit charge unless you can take the payment to the lender.

● (2150)

These are some of the problems that are posed by the definitions of these terms. There is, of course, a major problem in the question of the constitutionality of the labeling of a credit charge as being interest, because there are decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada in this respect. There has been a decision, I think, within the last 10 days. The Supreme Court some years ago, in upholding the Ontario Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act, eliminated many of these items which were listed as the cost of the loan in the act. They held that these items were not interest. They also held that the Ontario Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act was valid legislation, notwithstanding the fact that interest is exclusively in the jurisdiction of the federal authority under section 91(19) of the BNA Act. So there is a real constitutional problem. However, that is only the beginning of it.

Then we have the provision that the borrower is given the right to take an action or to make an application to the superior court in a province, or to a county court, and to allege that the lender has charged a non-warranted credit charge rate. That may be alleged in an application made to the court. The onus—pay attention to this—is on the lender to prove that the rate which he charged was a warranted rate. The warranted rate means that all items listed in the credit charge definition must be considered—all these items such as payment to third parties and all the different types of lending transactions and payments in relation to them.

The judge can deal with this in the following fashion only: First, he should determine what the credit charge rate was; then whether that was warranted. If it was not warranted according to the requirements of the regulations, he must find that the rate charged was unwarranted. If it is unwarranted the only thing he can do is to re-open the transaction and allow a rate anywhere from zero to the bank's prime rate given to its best customers. This is the favouring of one party under the scope and purposes of this bill, and the lender is left in the position in which he is saddled with the onus of disproving. Ordinarily, when a person is given a right to challenge something which has been done, he alleges and must prove his allegation. However, in this case the borrower alleges, and the lender must disprove it.

You have not heard it all yet. There are three prepayment provisions which were amended substantially, so I will deal only with the amendments and their effect. The first is lending with respect to transactions other than mortgages. The borrower at any time may pay off the loan without any notice or bonus. Then with respect to mortgage transactions there is really quite a problem. The amendments establish what is termed a reference rate, which is determined by taking the average of the rates for one-year, two-year, three-year, four-year and five-year guaranteed investment certificates and debentures of trust companies and loan companies. Having arrived at the reference rate, then if in a mortgage transaction it appears that the rate charged by the lender is more than 4 percentage points above the relevant reference rate, the borrower can pay off the mortgage without notice or bonus. However, if the difference between the rate charged by the mortgagee and the reference rate is not in excess of 4 percentage points there is a long and involved method of dealing with it. I will not weary you with all the details of the process, but the effect is to try to give the lender what he has lost, on the assumption that if he goes to re-invest the money when it is repaid to him he would get less in the way of interest on that money than was called for by the mortgage.

However, that is not the end of it. The regulations are not promulgated yet, but the department issued a regulations narrative in which they used a crystal ball or something to foresee what the regulations would provide. This provides for a calculation on the basis of the period from one month to 60 months remaining between the date on which the prepayment is made and the maturity date of the mortgage. We were advised on inquiry of the department that tables are being prepared which will calculate what the actual rate would be to repay the lender for his loss, and there will be something in excess of 1,000 tables, ranging between contract rate and mortgage rate at the time of the proposed repayment, and covering an area between 7 per cent and 16 per cent as being the percentage loss calculated in increments of a quarter of one per cent. The borrower, of course, would have to digest that and I am sure that having him study that table is not doing any favour to the borrower. The reference rate, of course, will be published by the minister bi-weekly in the Canada Gazette, and inquiries may be made at the department which will elicit the information. The minister will publish the rate but, presumably, it will be calculated by his department. We recommend that the Bank of Canada should perform these calculations.

We also had something to say about the confusion, and the piling of confusion on confusion, in this matter of prepayment, because a basic question is involved. In Ontario the mortgages legislation provides for a prepayment at the end of five years. The National Housing Act provides for prepayment at the end of three years. How will these provisions fit into the provisions of this legislation? Secondly, prepayment of mortgage principal is a matter of reformation of the contract; reformation of the contract is a matter of property and civil rights in the province. Yet we have the provisions before us as being "very important provisions in the interests of the borrower."

● (2200)

Those are just some of the more important provisions in the bill, but this resumé does not, by any means, exhaust them. I should tell you that one of the new provisions that has been added by amendment is that under which the minister may, on behalf of the borrower, take an action. It is the new proposed section 36, which is entitled: "Assumption of Carriage of Proceedings." It reads as follows:

(1) Where the Minister is satisfied that a borrower or a depositor has

- (a) a cause of action,
- (b) a defence to an action,
- (c) grounds for setting aside a default judgment, or
- (d) grounds for an appeal or on which to contest an appeal

based on any provision of this Act and that the facts of the particular case are such that it is in the public interest that he act under this section, the Minister may, with the consent in writing of the borrower or depositor, as the case may be, on behalf of the borrower or depositor, institute proceedings, assume the conduct of proceedings on his behalf or defend any proceedings brought against him for the purpose of enforcing or protecting any rights of the borrower or depositor arising under this Act.

So, that adds another potential burden which the lender has to face in connection with legislation of this kind, that being the fact that at any time the minister may interject himself into the proceedings. I think what lies behind this provision is the fact that there is a somewhat similar provision in the competition legislation which originates from the same department.

These are what we call in our report "some of the over-reaching things" in the bill. It does not constitute all of the over-reaching things. The minister has also taken as one of the new proposed sections the right to apply to the court for a cease and desist order which would force the lender to stop whatever he was doing in the way of lending because of the way in which he had been conducting his business.

If these provisions are intended to be limited to loan sharks, they will fail completely in their purpose. If loan sharks are prepared to violate the Criminal Code for collection purposes, they certainly will not be intimidated by a cease and desist order to the point of restraining them from taking action or from not maintaining a proper set of records. Thus, the fine for not maintaining a proper set of records is $5,000. However, I suppose at the rates they charge for a loan, another $5,000 added to the borrowing costs would take care of that. At some stage the borrower, by a process of intimidation, somehow, apparently, finds the money, even if he himself has to go out and violate the Criminal Code to do so.

Honourable senators, I have outlined some of the new provisions in the bill. I have not by any means exhausted the new provisions, nor the extended scope of the old ones. There is one other matter I should like to mention, and that is the question of advertisements. Advertising that credit is available by Master Charge, Chargex, Bank Americard, and so forth, is prohibited unless accompanied by a disclosure as to the cost of the borrowing. If the advertisement of availability of credit is not accompanied by disclosure as to the cost of the borrowing, it is in violation of the proposed act. The amendments provide one escape, that being that where an advertiser accepts advertisements in the ordinary course of his business and does not know that in publishing that advertisement he has violated the law, he would be entitled to an exemption.

Your committee recommends that the provisions which were good enough for inclusion in the Combines Investigation legislation—namely, that the advertiser merely has to act in good faith in the ordinary course of business—are good enough for insertion in this legislation, which is what we recommend. How any advertiser could say that he was not aware of this provision, I do not know, especially given the publicity that has occurred in connection with this particular advertising feature. Your committee received many representations on it, the consensus of which seemed to be that there would be little advertising. Yet, this provision would live and thrive on the publicity of the disclosure required under the bill. If there is no such publicity, the disclosure provisions are meaningless. All it means is that the lender has to provide the borrower with a copy of the lending contract, and a few items of that kind.

Honourable senators, I realize I have taken quite some time in explaining the report. In doing so, I have tried to keep away from slowing up my explanation of the highlights by referring to the supporting documentation. I have that documentation in front of me and I am reasonably familiar with it. There is, first of all, our report, which is in two parts—Part A, which deals with the different headings of questions that were involved in the consideration of the subject matter of this bill, and Part B, which is an annotation of the clauses of the bill in the following fashion: comment, recommendations, and, where there have been amendments, the scope of the amendments, and whether the scope meets the recommendation.

I have before me as well the complete amendments to all clauses of the bill, the department's regulations narrative, which is supposed to be a guide, and the bill itself, which is somewhat dog-eared and full of pencil and ink notations as a result of different ideas which struck me as to what the objections were and what the answers might be. I think what I have said is sufficient to give you a picture of why the bill is to be, in effect, withdrawn, or not proceeded with.

I have omitted to make any mention of the position of the banks. Under the Bank Act, sections 91 and 92, there are provisions to deal with the question of interest rates. Those provisions provide that the banks may charge any interest rate which is acceptable to the lender. They further provide as to the cost of borrowing and what that cost shall be. Under the Bank Act provisions, the cost of borrowing does not include any payment to third persons where the payments do not go back to the lender. So that under this bill, if it had become law, or if it becomes law in the foreseeable future, possibly there would be one rate the borrower would have to pay to the bank and, for the purposes of the proposed act, with the extended meaning being given to "credit charge," there would be a higher rate, and there would not be the disclosure by the bank required in respect of the definition of "credit charge" and a "credit charge rate." So, you would have an obvious conflict.

In relation to that, the White Paper on Canadian Banking Legislation proposes to leave the business of protection of the borrower to the provisions of a proposed Borrowers and Depositors Protection Bill, and to repeal the pertinent sections of the Bank Act.

Having said that, I am through. I hope I have at least put forward the position of the committee intelligently.

● (2210)

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, I have listened with the greatest of interest to Senator Hayden, and I recall his comment on the spate of discussion that might ensue from his presentation and explanation of the bill that was. But I would still ask the liberty to adjourn the debate just in case there is another honourable senator who understands the bill. The amazing thing that came out of the explanation we have just heard is that anybody understands it. Senator Haydon obviously does, and he may be the only one in Canada who does. However, there may be another member of this house who would like to demonstrate that he understands it also. This may be the end of it, but in order to leave the matter open, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator Grosart, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 8 p.m.

APPENDIX
(See p. 1121)

REPORT

OF THE

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE

ON

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

ON THE

SUBJECT-MATTER OF BILL C-16,

"THE BORROWERS AND DEPOSITORS PROTECTION ACT"
of the
SECOND SESSION OF THE THIRTIETH PARLIAMENT
1976-1977

INTRODUCTION

On October 27, 1976, Bill C-16, entitled "An Act to provide for the protection of borrowers and depositors, to regulate interest on judgment debts, to repeal the Interest Act, the Pawnbrokers Act and the Small Loans Act and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof" received first reading in the House of Commons.

By resolution of the Senate on November 16, 1976, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce was authorized to examine and report upon the subject matter of Bill C-16 in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

In accordance with the Order of Reference, your Committee has given careful consideration to the said Bill C-16 and in connection therewith has had the benefit of the services of Mr. Dawson H. Tilley, C.A. of the firm of Thorne, Riddell & Co., Chartered Accountants, as an advisor to your Committee, and has retained as legal counsel, Mr. A. de Lotbinière Panet, of the law firm of Perley-Robertson, Panet, Hill & McDougall. The Committee has received submissions and has heard representations from a number of interested parties, as set forth in Schedule A to this Report and has also heard Mr. M. McCabe, Assistant Deputy Minister, Consumer Affairs, and Dr. J. L. Evans, Director, Consumer Research Branch, of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In addition, the Committee has received written briefs and submissions as set out in Schedule A from persons who have not requested to be heard.

A review of legislation and practices in the areas of consumer borrowing, credit granting, advertising, mortgage lending and bank deposits has been undertaken by your Committee. In reviewing the subject matter of this Bill, the function of your Committee has extended to the suggestion of ways in which the stated objectives could be attained other than in the manner proposed which would avoid the clash of constitutionality and ensure a fair balancing of the interests of all parties affected. In addition, it is considered desirable to avoid the unnecessary disturbance of borrowing markets, mortgage markets and conventional business practices. The recommendations herein are made for the purpose of improving the quality of the Bill and ensuring that the rights and obligations created are clear, understandable and capable of enforcement within our present constitutional framework. We emphasize this position as inevitably there are some who would criticize any recommended action which would change any language of the Bill.

On May 13, 1977 and June 9, 1977 the Minister proposed amendments to the Bill and at the same time presented a "narrative" to the Regulations which presumably will be drafted at a later date. Of 44 sections in the Bill, 28 are to be amended, most amendments being material, 23 new sections and subsections are added and 12 are deleted. In all, 75 subsections in the Bill are to be amended. There are new concepts introduced. For example, the Minister can commence or carry on proceedings on behalf of a borrower, the Minister can obtain cease and desist orders against a lender, the Minister can obtain voluntary compliance undertakings from lenders and can carry on formal inquiries into the activities of lenders.

In view of the extent of the amendments, your Committee recommends that this be considered a new Bill. The hearings conducted and submissions received by your Committee were all completed before the introduction of these amendments and, as a result, the public has had no opportunity to express its views. The introduction of new concepts in the Bill and the proposal to significantly amend many existing provisions at this late date is unfortunate and undesirable.

Your Committee, therefore, recommends that the Bill in its present state, not be proceeded with further. It should be considered as a new Bill and the consultative process should be commenced again.

SUMMARY OF RECOMMENDATIONS

The recommendations of your Committee in this Part A are as follows:

1. The Bill should only apply to borrowers who are natural persons and should have no application to any other legal entity.
2. The Bill should apply only to lending transactions in which the lender is acting in the course of carrying on business and the borrower is not so acting.
3. The application of the Bill should be restricted to the field of consumer credit, where it is indicated that reforms are desired and should result in a fair balancing of the interests of lenders and borrowers. Its application should not extend to other areas involving lending or credit transactions where it has not been established or even indicated that any changes are desirable.
4. The reforms proposed are designed to give to the individual consumer greater protection and remedies in the transactions involving "consumer credit". There should be no way in which a sophisticated borrower would be able to take advantage of the provisions of the Bill and to the extent that such possibilities exist, the Bill should be amended.
5. Your Committee has grave doubts as to the constitutional authority of the federal government to legislate with respect to certain important matters dealt with in Bill C-16 and the Bill should be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada as to jurisdiction of Parliament to legislate on the items contained in the Bill.
6. The definitions "lender", "lending transactions" and "borrower" should be amended so that the Bill would only apply where the parties to a lending transaction are a lender who is acting in the course of carrying on business and a borrower, defined to be a natural person only, who is not acting in the course of carrying on business.
7. If the borrower be given the right to challenge a credit charge rate as being unwarranted, then the burden of proof should be upon such borrower to establish his claim.
8. Where a court finds that the rate charged was unwarranted, the court should be given full and unfettered authority to establish an appropriate rate in all the circumstances of the transaction. This is properly the function of the lower court which has heard all the evidence and circumstances relating to the transaction.
9. The right of the borrower to assert such claim should be limited to one year from the date of repayment of the loan.
10. Policy loans made by insurance companies to their policy-holders to the extent that, in such loans, there is no express personal liability on the insured to repay, should be specifically excluded from the application of the Bill.
11. Deposit-taking institutions should not be required to calculate interest on deposits on a daily basis.
12. Those institutions to be included within the "deposit-taking" provisions of the Bill should include only those who accept deposits as a principal function of their business and thereby exclude those which accept deposits as incidental to their principal function or functions.
13. The Bill should not apply to advertisements or publications which only indicate the availability of credit, such as credit card decals and notices.
14. Protection should be provided to the media which publishes an advertisement in good faith, such protection to be similar to Section 37.3(1) of the Combines Investigation Act.
15. The right to commence a civil action for damages against a person who breaches the Act should be limited to situations where privity of contract exists between the parties.
16. The search and seizure powers should be restricted to those necessary to establish the credit charge in a given transaction.
17. The search and seizure powers should be clearly stated in the Bill and not incorporated by reference to sections in another Act.
18. Sections 28(4) and 39(2) (b) should be deleted and replaced by legislation giving effect to the changes recommended.
19. The Bill should be reviewed with a view to restoring to the Bill itself all those matters involving a judgment or enunciation of policy with respect to the subject matters of the legislation and only those matters involving the procedures necessary for the attainment of the policy decisions should be delegated to the Governor in Council for enactment by regulation.
20. The Bill and regulations should conform as much as possible to existing disclosure requirements in provincial legislation and should not unnecessarily alter existing practices or duplicate existing legislation.
21. Consideration should be given to the effectiveness of the Bill in its present form in dealing with loan sharking. Your Committee recommends that the inclusion of a criminal rate in this Bill is not appropriate. Loan sharking encompasses a range of activities which are considered to be criminal in their nature and if effective and comprehensive measures are to be developed to control and hopefully eradicate loan sharking, the proper place for such laws is in the Criminal Code.
22. The provisions dealing with the prepayment of loans are excessively complex and should be re-drafted and incorporated in the Bill in clear, understandable language.
23. In view of the extent of the amendments, the Bill in its present state should not be proceeded with further. It should be considered as a new Bill and the consultative process should be commenced again.

INDEX
PART A—GENERAL REVIEW

- I THE BILL AND ITS OBJECTIVES
- II CONSTITUTIONAL ASPECTS
- III LENDING TRANSACTIONS—BORROWERS AND LENDERS
- IV DEPOSITS AND DEPOSITORS
- V DISCLOSURE AND ADVERTISING
- VI ADMINISTRATION
- VII ENFORCEMENT
- VIII REGULATIONS
- IX CONSUMER PROTECTION LAWS IN THE PROVINCES
- X LOAN SHARKING
- XI THE PREPAYMENT OF LOANS

I THE BILL AND ITS OBJECTIVES

The objectives of this Bill have been stated, in background material released by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to be as follows:

- (a) To upgrade the quality and increase the quantity of information on consumer credit available to borrowers.
- (b) To eliminate unnecessary complexities in consumer credit.
- (c) To protect borrowers against excessive interest rates.
- (d) To rationalize federal legislation and define strong and uniform consumer credit rules.

It is clear that the proposed legislation is aimed at strengthening the position of the consumer in the field of consumer credit. In broad terms, the Bill appears to be designed to enlarge and improve the supply of information required to be furnished to the borrower. This would include access to documentation relating to the lending transaction, the right to apply to a court of civil jurisdiction to review and amend the credit charge rate to determine whether such rate is warranted or unwarranted and if unwarranted to re-open the transaction and to order to be repaid to the borrower the excess in the credit charge as determined by the court, the right to prepayment without penalty in all but mortgage loans and the establishment of a criminal rate of interest. In the case of mortgage loans, the Bill provides for prepayment and limits the penalty on prepayment to a maximum of three months credit charge. The amendments proposed by the Minister would limit such penalty to the present value of the loss to the lender resulting from prepayment. Further, the Bill requires disclosure of the rate of interest paid to depositors and may specify the frequency of calculation of interest on deposits.

The provisions of the Bill purport to deal with the objectives stated by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs when presenting this Bill C-16 and apply in the field of consumer credit. The issue in the submissions made to your Committee has resolved itself into a challenge of the extent to which the Bill goes in attempting to implement the stated objectives and whether the positions of borrowers, lenders and depositors are fairly dealt with.

It is felt that the Bill goes further than its stated objective of protecting the consumer in his borrowing transaction. It creates a civil remedy of damages available to any person, whether or not a borrower, who has suffered loss or damage as a result of a breach of the Act by any person and creates a criminal offence where an excessive credit charge rate is charged. By an amendment proposed subsequently, the excessive credit charge rate is fixed at 45% per annum. Also, in the matter of the onus of proof, it would appear that all lenders are assumed to be unsophisticated. The challenge has extended to the matter of the constitutional right of the federal Parliament to move as far in the field of consumer credit as the Bill proposes.

Given the expressed policy objectives of this legislation, a fundamental problem is to determine the intended meaning of the phrase "consumer credit". It is considered by your Committee and others to relate, in general terms, to borrowing by individuals for non-business purposes, either in the form of cash from a lender or in the form of credit from a vendor of consumer goods or services. However, the Bill, as originally drafted, would go beyond this class of transaction.

In Section 2(1), the definition of "borrower" is limited by the amendments proposed to the Bill only to a natural person so as to exclude a corporation. Also in Section 2(1), the term "lending transaction" is defined and makes no distinction between a transaction to obtain consumer goods or services and one designed to acquire properties, assets or services for investment, business or any other purpose.

As a result, even though a borrower (a natural person) may be highly experienced, have access to professional advisers, command substantial assets and bargaining strength and be entering into the transaction in the course of his business activities, he will have access to all the protections and remedies in this Bill. Indeed, the Bill may cause some business transactions to be carried out by a borrower who is a natural person rather than through a corporation or otherwise, simply to gain access to the remedies in the Bill. To illustrate the effects of the application of the Bill to a transaction are many, such as:

- (a) The disclosure requirements upon the lender would apply and if breached, the prime rate is charged. Section 7(a).
- (b) The credit charge rate can be challenged at any time and, if found to be unwarranted, the prime rate or less is charged. Section 8.
- (c) The borrower can, subject to limitations in the case of mortgage loans, tender all or part of the principal at any time, regardless of the contract terms, and to that extent, no credit charge is payable thereafter. Sections 13, 14, 15.
- (d) The borrower has a civil remedy for damages against the lender for any damage he has suffered as a result of a breach of the Act by the lender. Section 36.

The application of the Bill to a broad range of borrowers, regardless of their level of knowledge or sophistication in the marketplace, their relative bargaining strength or access to professional advice and to virtually all forms of lending transactions engaged in by such borrowers, without dollar limitation, whether for business, consumption or other purposes, is considered to be unwarranted, unnecessary and inadvisable at the present time.

There should be no way in which a sophisticated borrower should be able to take advantage of the provisions of the Bill.

Your Committee has concluded that the array of weapons designed to balance the scales between the individual consumer, who is assumed to be inexperienced and in need of protection when he engages in a lending transaction for consumer goods or services and a lender, who is assumed to be sophisticated, experienced and well able to secure and advance his own interests, is totally inappropriate when applied to any other type of transaction or class of borrower. To the extent that the Bill applies to transactions beyond the normal meaning of the word "consumer credit", the additional complexities, uncertainties and costs introduced into every transaction could well result in a decrease in funds available to borrowers, together with an increase in the cost of such borrowing and in the case of deposits, a reduced return to the depositor.

In background material to this Bill published by the Minister, it is stated that the existence of interest rate ceilings in The Small Loans Act in a period of rising interest rates (1967 to 1974) resulted in those firms licenced under that Act reducing "small loans" from 74 percent of their portfolios to 20 percent. During this period the number of firms licenced under that Act declined by more than one-half and loan sharking increased substantially. It is evident that an increase in the risk, complexities and costs of loans will either result in an increase in the interest rates charged or the movement of lenders to other areas of activity, neither of which may be desirable. Your Committee, therefore, recommends that any reforms or changes in the lending field result in a fair balancing of the interests of borrowers and lenders and be restricted to the field of consumer credit where the Minister has indicated reforms are desired.

The amendments proposed by the Minister would resolve the concern of your Committee to some extent, such as the deletion of the concepts of the closely held corporation and the Administrator but they do not limit the application of the Bill to situations where the lender is acting in the course of carrying on business and the borrower is not so acting.

Your Committee, therefore, makes four recommendations which, in its view, would properly limit the scope of the Bill to those areas of the marketplace where reforms may be required:

1. The Bill should only apply to borrowers who are natural persons and should have no application to any other legal entity.
2. The Bill should apply only to lending transactions in which the lender is acting in the course of carrying on business and the borrower is not so acting.
3. The application of the Bill should be restricted to the field of consumer credit, where it is indicated that reforms are desired and result in a fair balancing of the interests of lenders and borrowers. Its application should not extend to other areas involving lending or credit transactions where it has not been established or even indicated, that any changes are desirable.
4. The reforms proposed are designed to give to the individual consumer greater protection and remedies in the transactions involving "consumer credit". There should be no way in which a sophisticated borrower would be able to take advantage of the provisions of the Bill and to the extent that such possibilities exist, the Bill should be amended.

II CONSTITUTIONAL ASPECTS

Your Committee has serious concern as to the constitutional authority of Parliament to legislate with respect to two basic areas in this Bill, these being the concept of the "credit charge rate" and the establishment of a right of prepayment of principal monies whether in relation to mortgages or otherwise.

The common thread interwoven throughout the Bill is the concept of a credit charge rate, the rate to be determined in the manner prescribed by the Regulations.

Section 91(19) of the British North America Act assigns to the federal Parliament the exclusive power to legislate with respect to interest and within this power, it has enacted legislation such as the Interest Act and the Small Loans Act. However, the extent of the federal power in this regard must be determined in the context of the division of legislative powers in Sections 91 and 92 of the B.N.A. Act and, in this instance, in the context of the right of the provinces to legislate in matters involving property and civil rights under Section 92(13). Put simply, if the predominant aspect or the principal characteristic of the legislation deals with interest then it will be in the federal power; however, if such aspect or characteristic relates to the making of a contract or its terms, other than interest, then, subject to the ancillary power to legislate referred to later, the power to legislate would be in the provinces.

What, then, is the ordinary meaning of the word "interest"? In the case of Reference as to the Validity of Section 6 of the Farm Security Act (1947) S.C.R. 394 at 411, it was said that:

"Interest is, in general terms, the return or consideration or compensation for the use or retention by one person of a sum of money, belonging to, in a colloquial sense, or owed to, another."

As to its essential characteristics, the Supreme Court of Canada, in the case of Attorney General for Ontario v. Barfried Enterprises Ltd. (1963) S.C.R. 570 at 575 referring to 27 Halsbury, 3rd edition, page 7, defines "interest" in somewhat narrower terms, as follows:

"Interest accrues de die in diem even if payable only at intervals, and is, therefore, apportionable in point of time between persons entitled in succession to the principal."

The court considered whether the Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act which defined "cost of the loan" to mean, among other things, "the whole cost to the debtor of money lent and includes interest, discounts, subscription, premium, dues, bonus, commission, brokerage fees and charges" was really legislation in relation to interest. The Hon. Mr. Justice Judson at page 575 says:

"The day-to-day accrual of interest seems to me to be an essential characteristic. All the other items mentioned in the Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act except discount lack this characteristic. They are not interest."

Although not an essential element of its decision in Attorney General of Ontario v. Barfried Enterprises Limited (supra), the statement by Judson J. as to the essential characteristics of "interest" indicates the view of the court on this point. In the decisions in London Loan and Savings Co. of Canada v.

Meagher (1930) S.C.R. 378 and Asconi Building Corporation & Vermette v. Vocisano (1947) S.C.R. 358, it was held that a bonus was not interest for the purposes of Section 6 of the Interest Act.

In the recent decision of Tomell Investments Limited v. East Marstock Lands Limited (June 24, 1977), Pigeon J. who wrote the majority decision stated at Page 11 with reference to the Barfried decision:

"All that was decided was that the federal jurisdiction over interest does not exclude all provincial jurisdiction over contracts involving the payment of interest so as to invalidate provincial laws authorizing the courts to grant relief from such contracts, when they are adjudged to be harsh and unconscionable. This conclusion was based on the view that the subject of interest assigned to the federal Parliament was not to be equated with the cost of money, in other words with interest in the widest sense.

This view of the limited scope of this federal power is consonant with the view taken in earlier cases that federal jurisdiction over interest does not extend to interest on all kinds of debts or claims, but only on contractual obligations."

On the basis of these decisions, it is questionable whether many of the items included in the definition of "credit charge" would be interest.

The most significant questionable area would be any payments by the borrower to a third person when such third person is not related to or a nominee of the lender. With reference to the specific items included in the definition of "credit charge" the following would also be open to question:

(a) Where the transaction involves an assignment or sale of a right, there appears to be no basis for distinction from any other purchase and sale transaction and as, in essence, there is no lending transaction, any charge or discount relating to the price could not be interest. To include this item as a credit charge would be to affect a very large number of transactions where no person would reasonably expect the Bill, which purports to deal with interest, to have any application. For example, the following items would be included: the assignment of a mortgage, the factoring of accounts receivable, the assignment of an amount due under a will, the assignment of a debt owing to the assignor.

(b) Service, transaction, activity and carrying charges, where they relate to the amount borrowed and not to the length of time the loan is outstanding and thus do not accrue "de die in diem". In the Tomell decision (supra), it is stated that the subject of interest is not to be equated with the cost of money.

(c) Loan fees, points (the meaning of this term is unclear), finder's fees, commissions, brokerage fees and charges, to the extent indicated in (b) above.

(d) Fees and charges for appraisals, investigations and reports.

(e) Fees and charges for consolidation and refinancing of lending transactions, to the extent indicated in (b) above.

(f) Fees, charges and premiums for indemnity, guarantee or insurance to protect the lender against default by the borrower and available for payment of the borrower's obligation in the event of his death or illness, destruction of the premises or of any other assets furnished as security for repayment to the extent indicated in (b) above.

(g) Fees or charges imposed on the lender for purchasing or accepting the obligation of the borrower which are charged against the borrower, to the extent indicated in (c) above. Such payments to a third party, assuming he is at arm's length from the lender, obviously do not accrue de die in diem and are in no way related to the concept of compensation to the lender. They are simply a reimbursement of his out-of-pocket expenses.

Even if interest be considered to be "the return or consideration or compensation for the use or retention by one person of a sum of money belonging to . . . another." as held in Reference as to the Validity of Section 6 of the Farm Security Act, many of the items included in the definition of credit charge would not be interest. For example, all of the items in (c) to (g) inclusive of Section 2 of the Bill where such payments are made to persons other than the lender, could be excluded. Also, for the reasons set forth above, the price or discount on a sale or assignment referred to in (b) of Section 2 might not be included. Your Committee recommends the addition of an exclusion to the definition, to be clause (1) as follows:

"Payments to third parties, unrelated to the lender and not a nominee or nominees of the lender, and necessary to the completion of the lending transaction."

Your Committee has also considered the ancillary doctrine expressed by Lord Tomlin in Re Fisheries Act, 1914 [1930] 1 D.L.R. 194 at 197 and referred to in the case of Les Immeubles Fournier Inc. et al. v. Construction St. Hilaire Ltée 52 D.L.R. (3rd) 89 at 97 decided in the Supreme Court of Canada:

"It is within the competence of the Dominion Parliament to provide for matters which, though otherwise within the legislative competence of the provincial legislature, are necessarily incidental to effective legislation by the Parliament of the Dominion upon a subject of legislation expressly enumerated in s. 91."

This was the basis for the decision in the Tomell case with respect to Section 8 of the Interest Act. At page 8 Pigeon J. stated:

"In my opinion, s. 8 of the Interest Act is valid federal legislation in respect of interest because, although it does not deal exclusively with interest in the strict sense of a charge accruing day by day, it is, insofar as it deals with other charges, a valid exercise of ancillary power designed to make effective the intention that the effective rate of interest over arrears of principal or interest should never be greater than the rate payable on principal money not in arrears."

This Bill proposes to include, within its operation, any payment in a transaction by a borrower, or an assignee of a right, whether or not such payment is to the lender, assignor, or anyone else and whether or not the payment has any of the characteristics of "interest" in the ordinary meaning of the word or otherwise. Is this very broad approach necessarily incidental to effective legislation with respect to interest? To support this broad approach one must argue that it is necessary to deal with areas beyond the ordinary meaning of "interest" if Parliament is to legislate effectively with respect to interest and so protect the consumer in a lending transaction. However, the Supreme Court of Canada has already held that legislation with respect to unconscionable transactions is intra vires the province under the property and civil rights power inasmuch as it dealt with the terms of a contract and not interest (see Attorney General of Ontario v. Barfried Enterprises Ltd. [supra]). It is noted that all provinces have enacted legislation dealing with consumer protection and all but two provinces have enacted unconscionable transactions legislation.

Given the long history of interest legislation by Parliament, in which its application has consistently been restricted to the extent of the ordinary meaning of the word, we question whether the proposition that the subject Bill is necessarily incidental to effective legislation in this field would prevail. The natural conclusion of this application of the "necessarily incidental" argument to the Bill as drafted is that the federal government is the more appropriate authority to legislate with respect to the many protections to be established in the Bill in the field of consumer credit. Your Committee questions this view.

The second area of concern relates to what are referred to as the prepayment rights contained in the Bill where, in general terms, a borrower can, in other than mortgage loans, at any time tender payment of the principal and interest outstanding, after which interest ceases to run. As to mortgage loans, the prepayment rights are somewhat restricted. Your Committee is in agreement with the concerns expressed in a number of submissions received by it with respect to these prepayment rights. We question whether such provisions are, in essence, legislation with respect to interest and suggest rather that in their very nature they may be an attempt to vary the contractual terms between two or more parties to a contract and as such are beyond the federal power. This question was raised in the Tomell decision with respect to Section 10 of the Interest Act (the right of the borrower after 5 years to tender the capital with 3 months' further interest in lieu of notice) but was not answered. Notwithstanding that the terms of the lending contract may specifically prohibit such repayment, the prepayment provisions permit the repayment of principal and provide that interest does not accrue after such date. In Ontario, for example The Mortgages Act R.S.O. 1970, c. 279 (Section 17) already gives the mortgagor the right to prepay the principal amount after 5 years. In addition, this aspect of the Bill fails to take into account the fact that most lenders, such as insurance companies, banks and trust companies and pension funds are really financial intermediaries. They secure funds on the basis of commitments to pay interest (or other forms of compensation such as dividends) and then re-lend these funds. To allow borrowers to repay, which would occur where interest rates fell, in the face of continued requirements of the lenders to service their own loans at the rates contracted for is unrealistic.

Your Committee has noted the concern in many of the submissions received by it that the amount of the interest charge in a lending transaction is directly affected by the degree of risk or uncertainty perceived by the lender in each transaction and thus considers appropriate an expression of its concern that the enactment of this Bill, in its present form, without a resolution of such constitutional concerns, might result in uncertainties in the marketplace which could increase the interest charge in lending transactions.

In addition, it appears likely that the first borrowers seeking protection under the Bill might be faced with extensive litigation to resolve the constitutional questions already raised. In our view, it would be unfair to place this burden on individual borrowers when the existence of this question is already known.

A resolution of the constitutional questions may not require reference of the entire Bill to the Supreme Court of Canada by reason of the questioning of the jurisdiction of Parliament as to whether the heading "Interest" in Section 91 will support particular provisions of the Bill.

It is, therefore, recommended that the constitutional questions raised to be resolved by the submission to the Supreme Court of Canada of a series of questions referring to particular sections of the Bill.

III LENDING TRANSACTIONS—BORROWERS AND LENDERS

One of the stated objectives of the Bill is to provide greater protection to those persons seeking credit in the marketplace who, when dealing with a lender or lenders, are considered to be in an unequal position by reason of their lack of bargaining strength during the negotiation of the lending contract, lack of experience in this particular marketplace and in the usual course, the absence of professional advisors at the time of entry into a lending contract.

The reforms proposed in this area include the imposition of disclosure requirements on a lender, both in his advertising program and at the time of entry into the contract, the shifting of the burden to the lender to establish that the credit charge rate imposed was justified in the circumstances, the creation of prepayment provisions to enable a borrower to extricate himself from any lending transaction, the establishment of a credit charge rate above a deemed level the charging of which would constitute a criminal offence and a civil remedy which would enable the borrower to recover from the lender any damage suffered as a result of a breach of this legislation by the lender.

The Bill, in its original form, would apply to all lending transactions, without regard to the skills, bargaining strength and experience of either party or the amounts involved or whether it was part of a commercial transaction of otherwise. The only transactions excluded are those in which the borrower was not a closely held corporation or where the transaction is evidenced by a bond, debenture, note or other evidence of indebtedness or guarantee of a corporation. The amendments proposed by the Minister would remove the concept of closely held corporations and restrict, but not substantially, the definitions of lender and lending transactions.

However, your Committee is concerned that the reforms proposed in this legislation will have undesirable results in other types of lending transactions which also come within its contemplated application. The reforms proposed might have the effect of inducing lenders presently in the marketplace to engage in other forms of activity and could cause an increase in the rate of return required by such lenders as compensation for the added risks involved in a transaction coming within the scope of the Bill without any significant benefit to borrowers.

As the experience under The Small Loans Act indicates, lenders will not remain in the market where the return does not compensate for the risks involved. Accordingly, where the risks and uncertainties are increased, as may be the situation under this Bill, interest rates may rise and lenders may be driven to other areas of the market. As there is no indication that the reforms proposed are needed in areas of business transactions, the additional risks, obligations and uncertainties imposed on lenders should be restricted to the consumer credit area.

Your Committee, therefore, agrees with the amendment proposed by the Minister that the Bill be restricted in its application to those borrowers who are natural persons. However, it is recommended that the Bill be restricted in its application to those lending transactions in which the lender is acting in the course of carrying on business and the borrower is not so acting. Your Committee is of the strong view that the very broad protections and rights given to borrowers in the Bill are simply not appropriate to govern borrowers who obtain loans in the course of carrying on a business.

Your Committee also recommends that the provisions which would place upon the lender the burden of establishing that a credit charge rate in a lending transaction was justified in the circumstances should be deleted. It is fundamental to our tradition of the rule of law that a person who asserts a claim has the burden of establishing or proving his claim. It is submitted that there is no compelling social or economic ground to justify the proposed change in our legal traditions and that the balancing of rights between lenders and borrowers is better maintained by creating a right in the borrower to challenge a credit charge rate as being excessive in the circumstances but, at the same time, placing upon such borrower the burden of proof to establish that such rate was excessive in the circumstances.

An additional concern of your Committee lies in the failure of the Bill, after creating a number of civil remedies available to the borrower against the lender, to establish a limitation period within which the borrower must exercise such remedies. It is recommended that a limitation period be established at one year from the date of repayment of the loan, and this is contained in the amendments proposed by the Minister.

It has also been noted that in Section 8, where a borrower has challenged the credit charge rate and the court has found it to be unwarranted, the only discretion in the court is to set the rate at between zero and the prime rate. Your Committee considers that this provision results in unduly harsh treatment of a lender. By way of example, where a rate of seven percent over prime is considered unwarranted in a particular case but a rate of six percent over prime would be warranted in the circumstances the present provision that the maximum rate which can be awarded is the prime rate does not represent in your Committee's view, a fair balancing of the interests of borrower and lender under the Bill.

It is further recommended that the provisions of the Bill not apply to certain loans made by insurance companies to their policyholders. To the extent that there is no express personal liability on the insured to repay, there is no right on the part of the insurance company to demand payment either of principal or of interest and, accordingly, no debt, as such, is created. It has been held, in the case of The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States v. Larocque (1942) S.C.R. 205 that these are not loans in the ordinary meaning of the word. Your Committee, therefore, questions whether it is appropriate that such transactions be included within the application of the Bill.

In summary your Committee recommends that:

1. The definitions "lender", "lending transactions" and "borrower" be amended so that the Bill would only apply where the parties to a lending transaction are a lender who is acting in the course of carrying on business and a borrower, defined to be a natural person only, who is not acting in the course of carrying on business.
2. If the borrower be given the right to challenge a credit charge rate as being unwarranted, then the burden of proof be upon such borrower to establish his claim.
3. Where a court finds that the rate charged was unwarranted, the court be given full and unfettered authority to establish an appropriate rate in all the circumstances of the transaction. This is properly the function of the lower court which has heard all the evidence and circumstances relating to the transaction.
4. The right of the borrower to assert such claim should be limited to one year from the date of repayment of the loan.
5. Policy loans made by insurance companies to their policyholders, where there is no personal liability on the insured to repay, be specifically excluded from the application of the Bill.

IV DEPOSITS AND DEPOSITORS

A principal concern expressed in many submissions received by your Committee related to the provision that deposit-taking institutions can be required to calculate interest on a daily basis and to credit such interest at least monthly to each depositor's account. Your Committee has concluded that any benefits which might be achieved by such provision would be outweighed by the significant costs imposed on deposit takers in completing such calculation, the net result of which would be the reduction of the interest rate offered to depositors. In submissions to your Committee it has been estimated that the additional costs of crediting interest monthly on average daily balances would reduce the interest rate from an assumed rate of three percent to a rate of 1.05% on chequeable savings accounts and from an assumed rate of seven percent to slightly under six percent on non-chequeable savings accounts.

In the narrative of the Regulations it is stated that the purpose of the modification proposed in the amendment (i.e., that the calculation and crediting of interest need only be done once a year or at such time as an account was closed) is the substantial reduction in the potential costs. However, the ultimate goal is stated to be the calculation of interest on all deposit accounts using the average daily balance method. It may be the intention to do this by Regulation which, in the circumstances, would be unfair in view of the acknowledgement of the cost factor involved in the average daily balance method.

Your Committee has also concluded that the Bill is unclear as to the type of institution which may be included within the ambit of the "deposit-taking" provisions of the Bill and organizations such as law firms, real estate agencies and retail stores might, in certain circumstances, be included. It is, therefore, recommended that the word "institutions" be defined to mean ones which accept deposits as a principal function of their business and to exclude those which accept deposits as incidental to their principal function or functions.

There is also concern as to the unintended application of these provisions to certain types of transactions such as advance payments on insurance policies, property tax accounts, payments received in advance by solicitors, real estate agents and landlords in the normal course and layaway plans or deposit accounts established by retailers. Your Committee advises against making such provisions applicable to other than what are generally considered to be deposit-taking institutions.

In summary, your Committee recommends that:

1. Deposit-taking institutions should not be required to calculate interest on deposits on a daily basis.
2. Those institutions to be included within the "deposit-taking" provisions of the Bill include only those who accept deposits as a principal function of their business and thereby exclude those which accept deposits as incidental to their principal function or functions. The amendment proposes a definition in this regard however, the use of work "issues" is unclear.

V DISCLOSURE AND ADVERTISING

The general objective of the Bill in this area is to provide the maximum information, in terms of quality as well as quantity, to the potential borrower or depositor prior to the time that such person enters into the actual contract, thereby not only giving protection to the individual at the time of the negotiation of the particular contract of loan or deposit, but to enable him to compare the terms available from various lenders or deposit-taking institutions in the marketplace. The provisions in this respect apply both to lenders and to deposit-taking institutions.

Our first reservation relates to advertisements which deal only with the availability of credit. Great concern was expressed by submissions on behalf of retailers that the control of advertisements which indicate only the availability of credit and nothing more would accomplish little if anything and might eliminate information which provides nothing more than shopping convenience. The result of such control of advertisements could well be that retailers, for example, faced with extensive disclosure requirements, together with the possibility of a civil action for damages in the event of breach (Section 36[1]), might simply decide not to advertise the availability of credit.

Accordingly, your Committee recommends that the legislation should not apply to announcements such as the credit card decals found on the doors of restaurants and stores, and simple statements to the general public on the window of a store that credit is available or that credit cards are accepted. It is suggested that the operation of the Bill include only advertisements in which the credit charge rate or the interest rate on deposits was indicated. For example, any deposit-taking institution which indicated the interest rate which it paid on any type of deposit would come within the provisions of the Bill, but the restaurant or retailer who simply indicated that credit was available would not.

Your Committee also recommends that an appropriate exclusion be included in these provisions for the media which publishes an advertisement in good faith. An example of such an exclusion is found in Section 37.3(1) of the Combines Investigation Act. This provides that:

"37.3(1) Sections 36 to 37.2 do not apply to a person who prints or publishes or otherwise distributes a representation or an advertisement on behalf of another person in Canada, where he establishes that he obtained and recorded the name and address of that other person and that he accepted the representation or advertisement on good faith for printing, publishing or other distribution in the ordinary course of his business".

The amendments proposed by the Minister contain a narrow exclusion to protect the media which publishes an advertisement in good faith. Your Committee considers the exclusion insufficient and recommends the adoption of a provision similar to Section 37.3(1) of the Combines Investigation Act.

Your Committee is concerned with the civil remedy which is given to any person who suffers loss or damage as a result of the breach of the Act by a person, particularly as this provision applies to an advertiser. It would appear that a person who breaches the disclosure provisions with respect to advertising would be liable to a civil action for damages by a person even though no privity of contract existed between the parties and it is felt that such provision is unduly harsh in the circumstances. Your Committee is concerned that the result of such provision might be to discourage lenders or deposit-taking institutions from advertising which would have an effect opposite from the stated objectives in the Bill to provide greater information to borrowers and depositors.

Your Committee, therefore, recommends that:

1. The Bill should not apply to advertisements or publications which only indicate the availability of credit.
2. Protection be provided to the media which publishes an advertisement in good faith, such protection to be similar to Section 37.3(1) of the Combines Investigation Act.
3. The right to commence a civil action for damages against a person who breaches the Act be limited to situations where privity of contract exists between the parties.

VI ADMINISTRATION

The Bill, in its original form, proposed the creation of an "Administrator" to carry out certain assigned duties. The amendments to the Bill propose to delete all reference to an Administrator and it is understood that such duties will be assumed by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

As is evident from the hearings conducted by your Committee and the rather explicit statements by its Chairman opposing the creation of an additional bureaucracy at the federal level your Committee is in agreement with the amendment proposed.

VII ENFORCEMENT

Your Committee has considered the enforcement, search and seizure powers with reference to the subject matter of the legislation, the announced policy objectives and the kinds of information and material which would likely be obtained when the search and seizure provisions would be utilized. As a result, we strongly recommend that careful consideration be given to the enactment of new search and seizure powers, each of which involves an encroachment on the freedom and privacy of citizens in the community, and we recommend that only those powers which are essential to the due administration of the Bill and the accomplishment of its objectives be included.

In its simplest terms, this Bill legislates with respect to a criminal rate of interest, for which there is a criminal sanction, an unwarranted credit charge rate, which can be changed by a court of law, disclosure provisions and other ancillary matters with respect to these basic subjects. Consideration should be given to the basic provisions of the legislation and to the kinds of information and material which might be obtained, when enforcing the Act, as a result of any search. The material or documentation would be relatively simple and relate only to the amount of interest or credit charge imposed in a lending or deposit-taking transaction. This should be contrasted with the extensive information and documentation which might be necessary in an investigation as to a conspiracy under the Combines Investigations Act or in an investigation under the Income Tax Act.

Your Committee, therefore, recommends that the broad powers as to search and seizure be restricted to those powers necessary to establish the credit charge rate in a given transaction as this is the essence of this legislation. In addition, there would appear to be no necessity for search and seizure powers with respect to the enforcement of the advertising and disclosure provisions in the legislation.

Your Committee further recommends that the proposed transfer to this Bill, by incorporation by reference, of various sections relating to search and seizure contained in another Act, namely the Income Tax Act, enacted for an entirely different purpose (the assessment and collection of income tax and the investigation of tax evasion) is not appropriate. The code of procedure appropriate to the legislation at hand should be clearly spelled out in the Bill.

Your Committee, therefore, recommends that:

1. The search and seizure powers be restricted to those necessary to establish the credit charge rate in a given transaction.
2. The search and seizure powers be clearly stated in the Bill and not incorporated by reference to sections in another Act.
3. Sections 28(4) and 39(2)(b) should be deleted and replaced by legislation giving effect to the changes recommended.

VIII REGULATIONS

Your Committee has, on numerous occasions during its hearings on Bill C-16, expressed its serious concern with respect to the approach taken in this Bill that a number of subjects, which, in its view, are properly policy questions, to be determined by Parliament, are delegated to the Governor in Council to be enacted by regulation, presumably some time after the enactment of the Bill itself. The many briefs and submissions received by your Committee during the course of its hearings have reflected this concern and, as often expressed, have made it difficult for persons affected in the community to respond in a meaningful manner to this legislation when so many important elements are not included in the Bill itself but rather delegated to the Governor in Council to be established by regulation. Generally all matters of substantive law should be in the Bill. Some examples of areas of substantive law which should be included in the Bill but are, as presently drafted, to be established by regulation are as follows:

- (a) The method of calculation of the credit charge rate—Section 2(1).
- (b) The disclosure requirements for advertisements—Sections 6 and 20.
- (c) The disclosure requirements by the lender to the borrower—Section 7.

(d) The manner of calculating interest on deposits—Section 21.

(e) The amount of the criminal rate—Section 37(1)(a).

On June 9, 1977 the Minister provided additional amendments to the Bill and established in Section 37 the actual criminal rate. Your Committee commends the Minister for so doing but does not, at this time, express any views as to the amount of the rate.

In the amendments, however, the Minister has removed from the Bill and left to be established by regulation the formula for calculating the penalty on prepayment of a mortgage loan (Section 15(1)). Your Committee is of the view that the statement in Section 15(1) as to the penalty to be imposed is vague and ambiguous and we recommend that the penalty to be imposed be stated in a clear, understandable manner in the Bill itself.

Your Committee is of the firm view that Parliament, in order to exercise its legislative authority in a responsible manner must make all policy decisions in any legislation it enacts which will affect the community and the country and is of the view that these policy areas are not the appropriate subject of delegation to a subordinate authority. This responsibility and this area of appropriate and indeed requisite legislative activity is to be distinguished from subordinate legislation, generally referred to as regulations, which are enacted for the purpose of carrying out the principles enunciated in the legislation itself and it is this level of responsibility only which should be delegated in the legislation. It has been noted that this Bill which has 44 sections has at least 21 matters which are delegated to be established by regulation.

Your Committee is of the view that the items referred to above are substantive matters and should be enacted by Parliament only and are not the appropriate subject of delegation.

By reason of the numerous references to regulations to be enacted, your Committee is of the view that for the purposes of this report it should not review each manner of delegation.

Your Committee recommends, however, that this Bill be reviewed with a view to restoring to the Bill itself all those matters involving a judgment or enunciation of policy with respect to the subject matters of the legislation and only those matters involving the procedures necessary for the attainment of the policy decisions should be delegated to the Governor in Council for enactment by regulation.

IX CONSUMER PROTECTION LAWS IN THE PROVINCES

Your Committee is concerned that certain provisions of the Bill may duplicate existing legislation or may alter existing practices in the marketplace where reforms are unnecessary.

For example, provincial consumer protection legislation currently regulates the manner and form of advertisements and information to be discussed in connection with lending transactions. In addition however, regulations which are to be issued pursuant to Sections 6 and 7 of the Bill will impose a further code of requirements with respect to such matters. We recommend that the regulations to be issued conform as much as possible to existing disclosure requirements, except to the extent that existing regulation is deemed insufficient.

For example, Section 7(2) (b) of the Bill requires a lender to furnish the borrower with a copy of the lending transaction documents. Existing provincial consumer legislation permits an agent of the borrower to receive the documentation and this should be provided in the Bill. In addition, Section 8 of the Bill relates to interest rates which may be determined to be "unwarranted". Most of the provinces have enacted unconscionable transactions relief legislation with substantially the same purpose as Section 8. In such circumstances, your Committee questions whether Section 8 is necessary.

Section 9 of the Bill provides that the notice of an assignment of a lending transaction must be in a particular form and the assignor must notify the borrower of the assignment. However, under existing provincial legislation, in most provinces, the form of the notice is not regulated and it is sufficient if the borrower receives reasonable notice of the assignment. In addition, the assignee may furnish the borrower with notice of the assignment and this is frequently done since the assignee has a greater interest in insuring that the borrower receive timely and accurate notice of the assignment. There would appear to be no evidence of any difficulties which have arisen under the current practice and we therefore recommend that no change be made unless shown to be desirable.

As indicated, each of the provinces has enacted consumer protection legislation which already regulates the advertising and disclosure requirements. These are as follows:

British Columbia

Consumer Protection Act

Alberta

The Credit and Loan Agreements Act

The Unconscionable Transactions Act

Saskatchewan

The Cost of Credit Disclosure Act, 1967

The Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act, 1967

Manitoba

The Consumer Protection Act

The Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act

Ontario

The Consumer Protection Act

The Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act

Quebec

Consumer Protection Act

New Brunswick

The Cost of Credit Disclosure Act

Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act

Nova Scotia

Consumer Protection Act

Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act

Prince Edward Island

Consumer Protection Act

Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act

Newfoundland

The Newfoundland Consumer Protection Act

The Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act

X LOAN SHARKING

The Minister has stated, on a number of occasions, that one of the objectives of the Bill is to curb loan-sharking practices. The specific tool (Section 37[1]) will make it a criminal offence to lend money at any rate greater than forty-five percent (the rate contained in the proposed amendments). Indirectly, the concept of unwarranted rate will allow a borrower to challenge any rate as being unwarranted.

Your Committee has serious concerns as to the effectiveness of the Bill in its present form in dealing with loan-sharking.

It appears clear that loan-sharking activities arise as a result of the lack of funds available to persons who, usually, because of their economic situation, are unable to borrow from traditional lending institutions. For example, as lenders moved from lending activities under the Small Loans Act, it has been indicated that loan-sharking increased substantially. In such loans, little or no security is taken and repayment is ensured through coercion, intimidation and violence and to that extent, there are already offences under the Criminal Code.

The approach taken in this Bill, the establishment of a criminal rate, is said to be a major weapon in the fight against loan-sharking. In addition, the right to question a credit charge rate as unwarranted is said to assist indirectly. However, given the impact of the Bill as a whole, will these reforms be of any real, practical assistance in combatting these practices?

As indicated elsewhere in this Report, we are of the firm view that the Bill in its present form will so radically alter the balance between lenders and borrowers as to drive lenders from the consumer credit market. The combination of items such as the reverse onus (Section 8), disclosure provisions (Section 7), prepayment rights (Section 13-15), civil remedies (Section 35), advertising (Sections 6 and 20), and Minister's substitution in actions by borrowers (Section 36) may well cause lenders to seek avenues of investment which are free from the web of protection and remedies given to the borrower. At the same time, it appears highly unlikely that the needs of consumer borrowers will decrease; indeed, if the past is any indication, they will increase. As has been experienced in other areas, where there is a demand or need, there are those who will supply that need, regardless of legislative prohibitions. If persons urgently require funds, for whatever reason, and the traditional lenders have reduced their activities, such borrowers will be driven in ever greater numbers to loan sharks. To argue that the establishment of a criminal rate will stop this is, we suggest, simply unrealistic; loan sharks already may engage in criminal activities in their collection procedures.

Your Committee recommends that the inclusion of a criminal rate in this Bill is not appropriate. Loan sharking encompasses a range of activities which are considered to be criminal in their nature and if effective and comprehensive measures are to be developed to control and hopefully eradicate loan sharking, the proper place for such laws is in the Criminal Code.

XI THE PREPAYMENT OF LOANS

Your Committee has already expressed its concern with respect to the power of Parliament to enact legislation relating to the prepayment of loans. (See Part II—Constitutional Aspects).

In general terms, the scheme of the prepayment sections in the Bill as originally drafted is set forth below. It should be noted that these sections are drafted so as to refer to a tender or payment of the principal after which no further credit charge is payable. The sections refer to the tender or payment without regard to the terms of the contract.

1. In other than mortgage transactions, the borrower can repay at any time without notice or penalty.
2. In a mortgage transaction, the borrower can repay up to ten percent on the first or second anniversary date and on the third anniversary or thereafter can pay all the entire principal. In such case, the maximum penalty is limited to three months' credit charge on the prepayment.
3. In a variable mortgage or where the mortgage is not more than three years, the borrower can prepay at any time.

The scheme of these sections, after the amendments, is as follows:

1. A "reference rate" will be established by regulation.
2. In other than mortgage transactions, (or in the case of a mortgage transaction where the rate exceeds four points over the reference rate), the borrower can prepay at any time without penalty.
3. In a mortgage transaction other than as above, the penalty imposed cannot exceed the penalty determined in a manner prescribed by regulation to reflect the present value of the loss to the lender that might reasonably be expected to result from the tender or payment.
4. In a variable mortgage at such time as any term can be varied or after five years from the effective date of the mortgage transaction, the mortgage can be paid off without penalty.

An important principle in enacting legislation is that it not only be drafted in precise and unambiguous terms but also that it be drafted in a manner which will be clear and understandable to those persons who will be governed by such legislation. This is particularly so in the case of legislation such as the present Bill which is designed to provide greater protection and remedies to the average consumer. The Minister, in the background material published by him, indicated that two of the objectives of the Bill were an improvement in the flow of relevant credit related information and the elimination of unnecessary complexities in the credit field.

However, the legislation, together with the narrative to the Regulations, is drafted in a manner as to be virtually incomprehensible to all but the trained reader of legislation. To illustrate, a borrower who desires to prepay his mortgage loan must first consider the "reference rate", the definition of which is attached as Schedule "B" and the Regulations dealing with the reference rate. He must then consult the relevant issue of the Canada Gazette to determine the actual reference rate. Only then can he determine whether or not he will have to pay a penalty.

If he must pay a penalty, he then must consider Section 15, proposed to be amended as follows:

"15. (1) A borrower under a mortgage transaction who tenders or pays an amount thereunder otherwise than as provided in section 13 or subsection 14(4) is not liable to pay, in respect of the tender or payment, any portion of a penalty provided for in an agreement evidencing the transaction that exceeds the penalty determined in a manner prescribed by the regulations to reflect the present value of the loss to the lender that might reasonably be expected to result from the tender of payment.

(2) A borrower under a mortgage transaction who tenders or pays an amount thereunder as provided in subsection 14(4) is not liable to pay any penalty in respect of the tender or payment."

and is again referred to the Regulations, the narrative of which, relating to Section 15(1), is annexed as Schedule "C". Although the Regulations have not been published, it is estimated that the Regulations under section 15 will contain tables which will be well in excess of 1,000 pages. This procedure must be followed entirely to calculate the penalty. It is our view that if a consumer wishes to prepay, his only alternative would be to approach an experienced lender to assist him in the calculation or to retain the services of a lawyer and/or accountant to calculate this amount. It is your Committee's view that this is contrary to the expressed objectives of the Bill to provide greater information to the consumer and to eliminate unnecessary complexities in this field. Your Committee strongly objects to the preparation of legislation in such complex, lengthy and obscure manner.

Your Committee has noted the contrasting approach taken by the provinces in their unconscionable transactions relief legislation and consumer protection legislation which is drafted in much clearer and simpler terms. For example, the Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act of Ontario, a copy of which is attached as Schedule "D", which as of 1970 covers all loans without restriction (a wider field than this Bill), comprises 3 pages, and is in understandable form. We recommend that the prepayment provisions be appropriately amended to provide a clear, simple and understandable method whereby consumers can understand the legislation which is to be enacted and thereby take advantage of any protection available therein.

SCHEDULE "A"

Appeared before the Committee	Date of Meeting
La Fédération de Québec des Caisses populaires Desjardins	Feb. 3, 1977
N.A.C.C.U.	"
Dept. of Consumer & Corporate Affairs	Feb. 10, 1977
Canadian Assoc. of Broadcasters	Feb. 17, 1977
Canadian Advertising Advisory Board	"
Institute of Canadian Advertising	Feb. 23, 1977
Assoc. of Canadian Advertisers	"
Canadian Life Insurance Assoc.	Mar. 16, 1977
Retail Council of Canada	Mar. 24, 1977
Canadian Bankers' Association	"
Canadian Bar Association	Mar. 30, 1977
Montreal City & District Savings Bank	"
W.C. Howard Service Ltd.	May 4, 1977
Major Pension Funds (represented by Mr. Wells and Mr. Cheasley)	May 12, 1977
Did not appear before the Committee:
Ontario Mortgage Brokers Association British Columbia Mortgage Dealers Association

SCHEDULE "B"

"reference rate"

"reference rate" on any day means a reference rate caused to be published in the Canada Gazette by the Minister pursuant to subsection 26(2) on a day preceding that day that is determined in a manner prescribed by the regulations, and "relevant reference rate" in relation to a particular lending transaction means the reference rate that is determined, in a manner prescribed by the regulations, to be relevant to lending transactions of the class to which that lending transaction belongs;"

REGULATION NARRATIVE

SUBSECTION 2(1)
DEFINITION "REFERENCE RATE"

This regulation is necessary to specify the precise manner in which the various "reference rates" are to be determined. It is intended that these rates be published in the Canada Gazette bi-weekly and the rate for any given day in a "week" would be the rate so published for the preceding week. To facilitate use of these rates, they will be released weekly by the Department in addition to their publication in the Canada Gazette.

The "reference rates" to be prescribed will apply in the determination of mortgage prepayment penalties and will serve as the "index" for variable rate mortgages. At this time, it is known that five rates, representing the average of the rates being paid by Trust Companies and Loan Companies on their 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 year Guaranteed Investment Certificates and Debentures respectively, will be published. In addition, other rates may be added in response to the special requests of such institutions as the credit unions and caisses populaires for use as indices in their variable rate mortgages.

SCHEDULE "C"

REGULATION	SUBSECTION 15(1)
NARRATIVE	PENALTIES
UNDER MORTGAGE TRANSACTIONS

The purpose of this regulation is to specify a complete framework for the determination of the maximum mortgage prepayment penalties to be allowed under the Act. This framework provides for a system of penalties based upon:

1. the lender's fixed costs of origination of the mortgage,
2. the lender's costs of reinvesting the funds prepaid,
3. the "spread" between the credit charge rate specified in the mortgage agreement and the market rate existing at the time prepayment occurs, and
4. the time remaining from the date prepayment occurs to either:
 - a) a date which is five years after the effective date of the mortgage transaction, or
 - b) the next date on which the credit charge rate or any other term or condition of the mortgage transaction may be varied,

whichever is earlier,

Lender's will be allowed a maximum of $15 per $1000 prepaid as compensation for costs described in items (1) and (2).

This amount will be reduced linearly over time from the date of origination of the mortgage to the dates given in 4(a) and (b) above. Also, it will be reduced by the present value of the gain to be obtained by the lender in the event that prepayment occurs at a time when the market rate on the date prepayment occurs exceeds the rate specified in the mortgage agreement.

Lender will be allowed to recover the present value of losses associated with foregone interest arising from prepayment at times when the "market rate" is below the "contract rate" as referred to in (3). The precise "spread" will be determined as follows: at the time the mortgage transaction is entered into, the lender will record the spread between the "relevant reference rate" (described elsewhere) and the "contract rate" agreed to by the parties.

Should prepayment occur at some future date, the "market rate" at that time will be determined as either the current rate being quoted by the lender for new loans, or a rate obtained by adding the "spread" (determined at the outset of the transaction) to the "relevant reference rate" as of the date prepayment occurs, whichever is less. The difference between the contract rate and the market rate so determined will be one component in the calculation of the interest foregone as a result of prepayment.

The second component in this calculation will be the time remaining under the mortgage transaction to the earlier of the two dates specified in 4(a) and (b).

The system of penalties described above will represent the present value of the loss that the lender might reasonably be expected to incur as a result of prepayment. To facilitate application of this system, a full set of tables, giving precise maximum penalties in dollars per thousand dollars prepaid will be published. These tables will cover situations where the time left under the mortgage transaction to the earlier of the two dates given in 4(a) and (b), ranges from one to sixty months. They will also account for all possible amortization periods up to 40 years. The range of possible contract and market rates will go from 7% to 16% in $\frac{1}{4}$ of 1% increments.

A sample table is attached which shows the allowable penalties under conditions where the market rate is 9% and the contract rate is 10%. As can be seen, a given page of this set identifies both the market or current rate and the contract rate, the number of years and months left to the end of the amortization period and the number of years and months left to the end of the time period described in 4(a) and (b).

A lender would use these tables by determining the difference between the contract and market (current) rates. This would determine the precise table to use. Then, the number of years and months left to the earlier of the dates given in 4(a) and (b) would be computed. This would identify the appropriate page of the table, for example, 0 to 1, 1 to 2, etc. years.

Finally, the number of years and months remaining to the end of the amortization period would be computed. This would identify the row column in the table giving the maximum penalty allowed in dollars per thousand dollars prepaid.

MORTGAGE PREPAYMENT PENALTY TABLES.
PER $1000

CURRENT RATE - 9.00 - CURRENT RATE
YEARS PLUS MONTHS REMAINING IN AMORTIZATION PERIOD
YEARS LEFT IN AM PERIOD	1 MON	2 MONS	3 MONS	4 MONS	5 MONS	6 MONS	7 MONS	8 MONS	9 MONS	10 MONS	11 MONS	12 MONS	YEARS LEFT IN AM PERIOD
40 39 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.04	5.06	6.07	7.08	8.09	9.10	10.11	11.12	12.13	39 40 YR AM
38 37 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.04	5.06	6.07	7.08	8.09	9.10	10.11	11.12	12.13	38 39 YR AM
36 36 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.04	5.05	6.07	7.08	8.09	9.10	10.10	11.11	12.12	36 37 YR AM
35 35 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.04	5.05	6.06	7.07	8.08	9.09	10.10	11.11	12.12	35 36 YR AM
34 34 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.04	5.05	6.06	7.07	8.08	9.09	10.10	11.11	12.12	34 35 YR AM
33 33 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.04	5.05	6.06	7.07	8.08	9.09	10.10	11.11	12.12	33 34 YR AM
32 32 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.04	5.05	6.06	7.07	8.08	9.09	10.10	11.11	12.12	32 33 YR AM
31 31 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.04	5.05	6.06	7.07	8.08	9.09	10.10	11.11	12.12	31 32 YR AM
30 30 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.04	5.05	6.06	7.07	8.08	9.09	10.10	11.11	12.11	30 31 YR AM
29 29 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.04	5.05	6.06	7.07	8.08	9.09	10.10	11.10	12.11	29 30 YR AM
28 28 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.04	5.05	6.06	7.07	8.08	9.09	10.09	11.10	12.11	28 29 YR AM
27 27 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.04	5.05	6.06	7.07	8.08	9.09	10.09	11.10	12.11	27 28 YR AM
26 26 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.04	5.05	6.06	7.07	8.08	9.08	10.09	11.10	12.10	26 27 YR AM
25 25 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.04	5.05	6.06	7.07	8.07	9.08	10.09	11.09	12.10	25 26 YR AM
24 24 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.04	5.05	6.06	7.07	8.07	9.08	10.09	11.09	12.10	24 25 YR AM
23 23 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.04	5.05	6.06	7.06	8.07	9.08	10.08	11.09	12.09	23 24 YR AM
22 22 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.04	5.05	6.06	7.06	8.07	9.07	10.08	11.08	12.09	22 23 YR AM
21 21 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.04	5.05	6.05	7.06	8.07	9.07	10.07	11.08	12.08	21 22 YR AM
20 20 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.04	5.05	6.05	7.06	8.06	9.07	10.07	11.07	12.07	20 21 YR AM
19 19 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.04	5.05	6.05	7.06	8.06	9.06	10.06	11.07	12.07	19 20 YR AM
18 18 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.04	5.04	6.05	7.05	8.06	9.06	10.06	11.06	12.06	18 19 YR AM
17 17 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.04	5.04	6.05	7.05	8.05	9.05	10.05	11.05	12.05	17 18 YR AM
16 16 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.04	5.04	6.04	7.05	8.05	9.05	10.04	11.04	12.04	16 17 YR AM
15 15 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.03	5.04	6.04	7.04	8.04	9.04	10.04	11.03	12.02	15 16 YR AM
14 14 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.03	5.04	6.04	7.04	8.04	9.03	10.03	11.02	12.01	14 15 YR AM
13 13 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.03	5.03	6.03	7.03	8.03	9.02	10.01	11.00	11.99	13 14 YR AM
12 12 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.03	4.03	5.03	6.03	7.02	8.02	9.01	10.00	10.99	11.97	12 13 YR AM
11 11 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.02	4.03	5.03	6.02	7.02	8.01	9.00	9.98	10.97	11.95	11 12 YR AM
10 10 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.02	4.02	5.02	6.02	7.01	7.99	8.98	9.96	10.94	11.92	10 11 YR AM
9 9 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.02	4.02	5.02	6.01	6.99	7.98	8.96	9.94	10.91	11.89	9 10 YR AM
8 8 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.02	4.02	5.01	6.00	6.98	7.96	8.93	9.91	10.88	11.84	8 9 YR AM
7 7 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.02	4.01	5.00	5.98	6.96	7.93	8.90	9.87	10.83	11.79	7 8 YR AM
6 6 YR AM	1.01	2.02	3.01	4.00	4.99	5.96	6.93	7.90	8.86	9.82	10.77	11.72	6 7 YR AM
5 5 YR AM	1.01	2.01	3.01	3.99	4.97	5.94	6.90	7.85	8.80	9.75	10.69	11.62	5 6 YR AM
4 4 YR AM	1.01	2.01	3.00	3.97	4.94	5.90	6.85	7.79	8.72	9.65	10.57	11.48	4 5 YR AM
3 3 YR AM	1.01	2.01	2.98	3.95	4.90	5.84	6.77	7.69	8.60	9.50	10.39	11.28	3 4 YR AM
2 2 YR AM	1.01	2.00	2.96	3.90	4.82	5.73	6.63	7.51	8.38	9.24	10.09	10.93	2 3 YR AM
1 1 YR AM	1.01	1.97	2.89	3.78	4.64	5.48	6.30	7.11	7.90	8.69	9.47	10.24	1 2 YR AM
0 0 YR AM	1.01	1.65	2.28	2.92	3.57	4.21	4.86	5.51	6.17	6.83	7.49	8.15	0 1 YR AM

 *
 * CUPRENT RATE 9.00 *
 * CONTRACT RATE 10.00 *
 * YEARS TO TERM 1 TO 2 *
 *

MORTGAGE PREPAYMENT PENALTY TABLES
 PER $1000

		CURRENT RATE - 9.00 - CURRENT RATE
		YEARS PLUS MONTHS REMAINING IN AMORTIZATION PERIOD
YEARS LEFT IN AM PERIOD		1 MON	2 MONS	3 MONS	4 MONS	5 MONS	6 MONS	7 MONS	8 MONS	9 MONS	10 MONS	11 MONS	12 MONS	YEARS LEFT IN AM PERIOD
40	39	13.14	14.14	15.15	16.16	17.17	18.18	19.19	20.20	21.21	22.22	23.22	24.23	39	40
VR	38	13.13	14.14	15.15	16.16	17.17	18.18	19.19	20.20	21.20	22.21	23.22	24.23	38	VR
AM	37	13.13	14.14	15.15	16.16	17.17	18.18	19.19	20.19	21.20	22.21	23.22	24.22	37	AM
36	36	13.13	14.14	15.15	16.16	17.17	18.17	19.18	20.19	21.20	22.21	23.21	24.22	36
35	35	13.13	14.14	15.15	16.15	17.16	18.17	19.18	20.19	21.19	22.20	23.21	24.21	35
34	34	13.13	14.14	15.14	16.15	17.16	18.17	19.17	20.18	21.19	22.20	23.20	24.21	34	35
VR	33	13.13	14.13	15.14	16.15	17.16	18.16	19.17	20.16	21.18	22.19	23.20	24.20	33	VR
AM	32	13.12	14.13	15.14	16.15	17.15	18.16	19.17	20.17	21.18	22.18	23.19	24.20	32	AM
31	31	13.12	14.13	15.14	16.14	17.15	18.15	19.16	20.17	21.17	22.18	23.18	24.19	31
30	30	13.12	14.13	15.13	16.14	17.14	18.15	19.16	20.16	21.17	22.17	23.17	24.18	30
29	29	13.12	14.12	15.13	16.13	17.14	18.14	19.15	20.15	21.16	22.16	23.17	24.17	29	30
VR	28	13.11	14.12	15.12	16.13	17.13	18.14	19.14	20.15	21.15	22.15	23.16	24.16	28	VR
AM	27	13.11	14.11	15.12	16.12	17.13	18.13	19.13	20.14	21.14	22.14	23.14	24.15	27	AM
26	26	13.10	14.11	15.11	16.12	17.12	18.12	19.13	20.13	21.13	22.13	23.13	24.13	26
25	25	13.10	14.10	15.11	16.11	17.11	18.11	19.12	20.12	21.12	22.12	23.12	24.12	25
24	24	13.09	14.10	15.10	16.10	17.10	18.10	19.10	20.10	21.10	22.10	23.10	24.10	24	25
VR	23	13.09	14.09	15.09	16.09	17.09	18.09	19.09	20.09	21.09	22.09	23.08	24.08	23	VR
AM	22	13.04	14.08	15.08	16.08	17.08	18.08	19.08	20.08	21.07	22.07	23.07	24.06	22	AM
21	21	13.07	14.07	15.07	16.07	17.07	18.07	19.06	20.06	21.05	22.05	23.04	24.04	21
20	20	13.07	14.06	15.06	16.06	17.05	18.05	19.05	20.04	21.03	22.03	23.02	24.01	20
19	19	13.06	14.05	15.05	16.04	17.04	18.03	19.03	20.02	21.01	22.00	22.99	23.98	19	20
VR	18	13.04	14.04	15.03	16.03	17.02	18.01	19.00	19.99	20.98	21.97	22.96	23.94	18	VR
AM	17	13.03	14.03	15.02	16.01	17.00	17.99	18.98	19.96	20.95	21.94	22.92	23.90	17	AM
16	16	13.02	14.01	15.00	15.99	16.97	17.96	18.95	19.93	20.91	21.90	22.88	23.86	16
15	15	13.00	13.99	14.98	15.96	16.95	17.93	18.91	19.89	20.87	21.85	22.83	23.81	15
14	14	12.98	13.97	14.95	15.93	16.91	17.89	18.87	19.85	20.82	21.80	22.77	23.74	14	15
VR	13	12.96	13.94	14.92	15.90	16.87	17.85	18.82	19.80	20.77	21.74	22.71	23.67	13	VR
AM	12	12.93	13.91	14.88	15.86	16.83	17.80	18.77	19.74	20.70	21.66	22.63	23.59	12	AM
11	11	12.90	13.87	14.84	15.81	16.77	17.74	18.70	19.66	20.62	21.58	22.53	23.49	11
10	10	12.85	13.82	14.79	15.75	16.71	17.67	18.62	19.57	20.52	21.47	22.42	23.37	10
9	9	12.80	13.76	14.72	15.67	16.63	17.57	18.52	19.47	20.41	21.35	22.23	23.22	9	10
VR	8	12.74	13.69	14.64	15.58	16.52	17.46	18.40	19.33	20.26	21.19	22.11	23.04	8	VR
AM	7	12.66	13.60	14.53	15.46	16.39	17.32	18.24	19.16	20.07	20.99	21.90	22.81	7	AM
6	6	12.55	13.47	14.39	15.30	16.22	17.12	18.03	18.93	19.83	20.72	21.62	22.51	6
5	5	12.53	13.29	14.19	15.09	15.97	16.86	17.74	18.62	19.49	20.37	21.24	22.10	5
4	4	12.16	13.03	13.90	14.76	15.62	16.47	17.32	18.17	19.02	19.86	20.69	21.53	4	5
VR	3	11.77	12.60	13.42	14.24	15.05	15.86	16.67	17.48	18.28	19.08	19.87	20.67	3	VR
AM	2	11.00	11.76	12.51	13.27	14.02	14.76	15.51	16.25	16.99	17.73	18.48	19.22	2	AM
1	1	8.81	9.48	10.15	10.82	11.50	12.18	12.86	13.54	14.23	14.92	15.61	16.30	1
0	0	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0

 *
 * CURRENT RATE 9.00 *
 * CONTRACT RATE 10.00 *
 * YEARS TO TERM 2 TO 3 *
 *

MORTGAGE PREPAYMENT PENALTY TABLES
 PER $1000

CURRENT RATE - 9.00 - CURRENT RATE
YEARS PLUS MONTHS REMAINING IN AMORTIZATION PERIOD
YEARS LEFT IN AM PERIOD	1 MON	2 MONS	3 MONS	4 MONS	5 MONS	6 MONS	7 MONS	8 MONS	9 MONS	10 MONS	11 MONS	12 MONS	YEARS LEFT IN AM PERIOD
40 39	25.24	26.25	27.25	28.26	29.27	30.28	31.28	32.29	33.30	34.30	35.31	36.32	39 40
YR 38	25.23	26.24	27.25	28.25	29.26	30.27	31.28	32.28	33.29	34.30	35.30	36.31	38 YR
AM 37	25.23	26.23	27.24	28.25	29.26	30.26	31.27	32.28	33.28	34.29	35.29	36.30	37 AM
36	25.22	26.23	27.24	28.24	29.25	30.25	31.26	32.27	33.27	34.28	35.28	36.29	36
35	25.22	26.22	27.23	28.23	29.24	30.25	31.25	32.26	33.26	34.27	35.27	36.28	35
35 34	25.21	26.21	27.22	28.23	29.23	30.24	31.24	32.25	33.25	34.26	35.26	36.26	34 35
YR 33	25.20	26.21	27.21	28.22	29.22	30.23	31.23	32.23	33.24	34.24	35.25	36.25	33 YR
AM 32	25.19	26.20	27.20	28.21	29.21	30.21	31.22	32.22	33.22	34.23	35.23	36.23	32 AM
31	25.18	26.19	27.19	28.19	29.20	30.20	31.20	32.21	33.21	34.21	35.21	36.22	31
30	25.17	26.18	27.18	28.18	29.18	30.19	31.19	32.19	33.19	34.19	35.19	36.20	30
30 29	25.16	26.16	27.16	28.17	29.17	30.17	31.17	32.17	33.17	34.17	35.17	36.17	29 30
YR 28	25.15	26.15	27.15	28.15	29.15	30.15	31.15	32.15	33.15	34.15	35.15	36.15	28 YR
AM 27	25.13	26.13	27.13	28.13	29.13	30.13	31.13	32.13	33.13	34.12	35.12	36.12	27 AM
26	25.12	26.12	27.11	28.11	29.11	30.11	31.11	32.10	33.10	34.10	35.09	36.09	26
25	25.10	26.10	27.09	28.09	29.09	30.08	31.08	32.08	33.07	34.07	35.06	36.05	25
25 24	25.09	26.09	27.07	28.07	29.06	30.06	31.05	32.04	33.04	34.03	35.02	36.02	24 25
YR 23	25.06	26.05	27.04	28.04	29.03	30.02	31.02	32.01	33.00	33.99	34.98	35.97	23 YR
AM 22	25.03	26.02	27.01	28.01	29.00	29.99	30.98	31.97	32.96	33.95	34.94	35.92	22 AM
21	25.00	25.99	26.98	27.97	28.96	29.95	30.94	31.92	32.91	33.90	34.88	35.87	21
20	24.97	25.95	26.94	27.93	28.92	29.90	30.89	31.87	32.86	33.84	34.82	35.81	20
20 19	24.93	25.92	26.90	27.88	28.87	29.85	30.83	31.81	32.80	33.78	34.76	35.74	19 20
YR 18	24.89	25.87	26.85	27.83	28.81	29.79	30.77	31.75	32.73	33.70	34.68	35.66	18 YR
AM 17	24.84	25.82	26.79	27.77	28.75	29.72	30.70	31.67	32.65	33.62	34.59	35.57	17 AM
16	24.78	25.76	26.73	27.70	28.68	29.65	30.62	31.59	32.56	33.53	34.49	35.46	16
15	24.72	25.69	26.66	27.62	28.59	29.56	30.52	31.49	32.45	33.42	34.38	35.34	15
15 14	24.64	25.60	26.57	27.53	28.49	29.45	30.41	31.37	32.33	33.29	34.24	35.20	14 15
YR 13	24.55	25.51	26.46	27.42	28.38	29.33	30.28	31.24	32.19	33.14	34.09	35.04	13 YR
AM 12	24.44	25.39	26.34	27.29	28.24	29.19	30.13	31.08	32.02	32.96	33.90	34.84	12 AM
11	24.31	25.26	26.20	27.14	28.08	29.01	29.95	30.88	31.82	32.75	33.68	34.61	11
10	24.16	25.09	26.02	26.95	27.88	28.80	29.73	30.65	31.58	32.50	33.42	34.34	10
10 9	23.96	24.88	25.80	26.72	27.63	28.55	29.46	30.37	31.28	32.19	33.10	34.00	9 10
YR 8	23.72	24.62	25.52	26.42	27.32	28.22	29.12	30.01	30.91	31.80	32.69	33.58	8 YR
AM 7	23.40	24.28	25.17	26.05	26.93	27.81	28.69	29.56	30.44	31.31	32.18	33.06	7 AM
6	22.97	23.83	24.69	25.55	26.41	27.26	28.11	28.97	29.82	30.67	31.52	32.37	6
5	22.36	23.20	24.03	24.85	25.68	26.51	27.33	28.15	28.98	29.80	30.62	31.44	5
5 4	21.46	22.25	23.04	23.83	24.62	25.41	26.20	26.98	27.77	28.56	29.34	30.13	4 5
YR 3	19.96	20.70	21.44	22.18	22.93	23.67	24.41	25.16	25.91	26.65	27.40	28.15	3 YR
AM 2	17.00	17.70	18.40	19.11	19.81	20.52	21.24	21.95	22.67	23.39	24.11	24.83	2 AM
1	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	1
0	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0

MORTGAGE PREPAYMENT PENALTY TABLES

PER $1000

CURRENT RATE - 9.00 - CURRENT RATE
YEARS PLUS MONTHS REMAINING IN AMORTIZATION PERIOD
YEARS LEFT IN AM PERIOD	1 MON	2 MONS	3 MONS	4 MONS	5 MONS	6 MONS	7 MONS	8 MONS	9 MONS	10 MONS	11 MONS	12 MONS	YEARS LEFT IN AM PERIOD
40 39	37.32	38.32	39.33	40.34	41.34	42.35	43.35	44.36	45.37	46.37	47.38	48.38	39	40
VR 38	37.31	38.31	39.32	40.32	41.33	42.34	43.34	44.35	45.35	46.36	47.36	48.37	38	VR
AM 37	37.30	38.30	39.31	40.31	41.32	42.32	43.33	44.33	45.34	46.34	47.35	48.35	37	AM
36	37.28	38.29	39.29	40.30	41.30	42.31	43.31	44.31	45.32	46.32	47.33	48.33	36
35	37.27	38.27	39.28	40.28	41.28	42.29	43.29	44.30	45.30	46.30	47.31	48.31	35
35 34	37.25	38.26	39.26	40.26	41.27	42.27	43.27	44.28	45.28	46.28	47.28	48.29	34	35
VR 33	37.24	38.24	39.24	40.24	41.25	42.25	43.25	44.25	45.25	46.26	47.26	48.26	33	VR
AM 32	37.22	38.22	39.22	40.22	41.22	42.22	43.23	44.23	45.23	46.23	47.23	48.23	32	AM
31	37.20	38.20	39.20	40.20	41.20	42.20	43.20	44.20	45.20	46.20	47.20	48.20	31
30	37.17	38.17	39.17	40.17	41.17	42.17	43.17	44.17	45.17	46.16	47.16	48.16	30
30 29	37.15	38.15	39.14	40.14	41.14	42.14	43.14	44.13	45.13	46.13	47.12	48.12	29	30
VR 28	37.12	38.11	39.11	40.11	41.11	42.10	43.10	44.09	45.09	46.09	47.08	48.08	28	VR
AM 27	37.09	38.08	39.08	40.07	41.07	42.06	43.06	44.05	45.04	46.04	47.03	48.03	27	AM
26	37.05	38.04	39.04	40.03	41.02	42.02	43.01	44.00	44.99	45.99	46.94	47.97	26
25	37.01	38.00	38.99	39.98	40.98	41.97	42.96	43.95	44.94	45.93	46.92	47.91	25
25 24	36.96	37.95	38.94	39.93	40.92	41.91	42.90	43.89	44.88	45.86	46.85	47.84	24	25
VR 23	36.91	37.90	38.89	39.87	40.86	41.85	42.83	43.82	44.81	45.79	46.78	47.76	23	VR
AM 22	36.85	37.84	38.82	39.81	40.79	41.78	42.76	43.74	44.73	45.71	46.69	47.67	22	AM
21	36.79	37.77	38.75	39.74	40.72	41.70	42.68	43.66	44.64	45.62	46.60	47.58	21
20	36.72	37.70	38.67	39.65	40.63	41.61	42.58	43.56	44.54	45.51	46.49	47.46	20
20 19	36.63	37.61	38.58	39.56	40.53	41.50	42.48	43.45	44.42	45.40	46.37	47.34	19	20
VR 18	36.54	37.51	38.48	39.45	40.42	41.39	42.36	43.32	44.29	45.26	46.23	47.19	18	VR
AM 17	36.43	37.39	38.36	39.32	40.29	41.25	42.22	43.18	44.14	45.11	46.07	47.03	17	AM
16	36.30	37.26	38.22	39.18	40.14	41.10	42.06	43.02	43.97	44.93	45.89	46.84	16
15	36.16	37.11	38.06	39.02	39.97	40.92	41.87	42.83	43.78	44.73	45.68	46.63	15
15 14	35.98	36.93	37.88	38.82	39.77	40.72	41.66	42.60	43.55	44.49	45.43	46.37	14	15
VR 13	35.78	36.72	37.66	38.60	39.54	40.47	41.41	42.34	43.28	44.21	45.15	46.08	13	VR
AM 12	35.54	36.47	37.40	38.33	39.26	40.18	41.11	42.04	42.96	43.89	44.81	45.73	12	AM
11	35.26	36.18	37.09	38.01	38.93	39.84	40.76	41.67	42.58	43.50	44.41	45.32	11
10	34.91	35.81	36.72	37.62	38.52	39.43	40.33	41.23	42.13	43.03	43.93	44.83	10
10 9	34.47	35.36	36.25	37.14	38.03	38.91	39.80	40.68	41.57	42.45	43.34	44.22	9	10
VR 8	33.93	34.80	35.67	36.54	37.40	38.27	39.14	40.01	40.87	41.74	42.61	43.47	8	VR
AM 7	33.22	34.06	34.91	35.76	36.60	37.45	38.30	39.14	39.99	40.83	41.68	42.52	7	AM
6	32.86	33.68	34.52	35.34	36.16	36.98	37.80	38.62	39.44	40.26	41.08	41.89	6
5	30.92	31.71	32.50	33.28	34.07	34.86	35.66	36.45	37.24	38.03	38.83	39.62	5
5 4	29.90	29.66	30.41	31.17	31.92	32.68	33.44	34.21	34.97	35.74	36.50	37.27	4	5
VR 3	25.56	26.29	27.02	27.76	28.49	29.23	29.97	30.72	31.46	32.21	32.96	33.72	3	VR
AM 2	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	2	AM
1	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	1
0	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0.00	0

 *
 * CURRENT RATE 9.00
 * CONTRACT RATE 10.00
 * YEARS TO TERM 4 TO 5
 *

MORTGAGE PREPAYMENT PENALTY TABLES
 PER $1000

CURRENT RATE - 9.00 - CURRENT RATE
YEARS PLUS MONTHS REMAINING IN AMORTIZATION PERIOD
YEARS LEFT IN AM PERIOD	1 MON	2 MONS	3 MONS	4 MONS	5 MONS	6 MONS	7 MONS	8 MONS	9 MONS	10 MONS	11 MONS	12 MONS	YEARS LEFT IN AM PERIOD
40 YR 39 YR 38 YR 37 AM 36 YR 35	49.37 49.36 49.34 49.31 49.29	50.38 50.36 50.34 50.32 50.29	51.38 51.36 51.34 51.32 51.29	52.39 52.37 52.35 52.32 52.30	53.39 53.37 53.35 53.33 53.30	54.40 54.38 54.35 54.33 54.30	55.40 55.38 55.36 55.33 55.30	56.41 56.39 56.36 56.33 56.30	57.41 57.39 57.37 57.34 57.31	58.42 58.40 58.37 58.34 58.31	59.42 59.40 59.37 59.34 59.31	60.43 60.40 60.38 60.35 60.31	39 YR 38 YR 37 AM 36 YR 35
35 YR 34 YR 33 YR 32 AM 31 YR 30	49.26 49.23 49.20 49.16 49.12	50.26 50.23 50.20 50.16 50.12	51.26 51.23 51.20 51.16 51.11	52.27 52.23 52.19 52.15 52.11	53.27 53.23 53.19 53.15 53.10	54.27 54.23 54.19 54.15 54.10	55.27 55.23 55.19 55.15 55.10	56.27 56.23 56.19 56.14 56.09	57.27 57.23 57.19 57.14 57.09	58.27 58.23 58.19 58.14 58.09	59.27 59.23 59.19 59.14 59.09	60.27 60.23 60.19 60.13 60.08	34 YR 33 YR 32 AM 31 YR 30
30 YR 29 YR 28 YR 27 AM 26 YR 25	49.07 49.02 48.96 48.90 48.83	50.07 50.01 49.96 49.89 49.82	51.06 51.01 50.95 50.88 50.80	52.06 52.00 51.94 51.87 51.79	53.05 52.99 52.93 52.86 52.78	54.05 53.99 53.92 53.85 53.76	55.04 54.98 54.91 54.84 54.75	56.04 55.97 55.90 55.82 55.74	57.03 56.97 56.89 56.81 56.72	58.03 57.96 57.88 57.80 57.71	59.02 58.95 58.88 58.79 58.70	60.01 59.94 59.87 59.78 59.68	29 YR 28 YR 27 AM 26 YR 25
25 YR 24 YR 23 YR 22 AM 21 YR 20	48.75 48.66 48.56 48.44 48.31	49.73 49.64 49.53 49.42 49.28	50.72 50.62 50.51 50.39 50.25	51.70 51.60 51.49 51.36 51.22	52.69 52.58 52.47 52.34 52.19	53.67 53.56 53.45 53.31 53.16	54.65 54.55 54.43 54.29 54.13	55.64 55.53 55.40 55.26 55.10	56.62 56.51 56.38 56.24 56.07	57.61 57.49 57.36 57.21 57.04	58.59 58.47 58.33 58.18 58.01	59.57 59.45 59.31 59.16 58.98	24 YR 23 YR 22 AM 21 YR 20
20 YR 19 YR 18 YR 17 AM 16 YR 15	48.16 47.99 47.80 47.58 47.32	49.13 48.95 48.75 48.52 48.26	50.09 49.92 49.71 49.47 49.20	51.06 50.88 50.66 50.42 50.14	52.03 51.84 51.62 51.37 51.08	52.99 52.80 52.57 52.32 52.02	53.96 53.76 53.53 53.27 52.96	54.92 54.72 54.48 54.21 53.90	55.89 55.69 55.44 55.16 54.84	56.85 56.64 56.39 56.11 55.78	57.82 57.60 57.34 57.06 56.72	58.78 58.56 58.30 58.00 57.66	19 YR 18 YR 17 AM 16 YR 15
15 YR 14 YR 13 YR 12 AM 11 YR 10	47.01 46.66 46.23 45.73 45.11	47.95 47.58 47.15 46.63 45.99	48.88 48.50 48.06 47.52 46.87	49.81 49.43 48.97 48.42 47.76	50.74 50.35 49.88 49.32 48.64	51.68 51.27 50.79 50.22 49.53	52.61 52.19 51.70 51.12 50.41	53.54 53.12 52.61 52.02 51.29	54.47 54.04 53.53 52.91 52.18	55.40 54.96 54.44 53.81 53.06	56.33 55.88 55.35 54.71 53.95	57.27 56.80 56.26 55.61 54.83	14 YR 13 YR 12 AM 11 YR 10
10 YR 9 YR 8 YR 7 AM 6 YR 5	44.34 43.37 42.11 40.42 38.04	45.21 44.22 42.93 41.22 38.82	46.07 45.06 43.76 42.02 39.59	46.94 45.91 44.58 42.82 40.37	47.81 46.76 45.41 43.62 41.14	48.67 47.60 46.23 44.42 41.92	49.54 48.45 47.06 45.22 42.70	50.41 49.30 47.89 46.03 43.49	51.27 50.15 48.72 46.83 44.27	52.14 51.00 49.54 47.64 45.06	53.01 51.85 50.37 48.45 45.85	53.88 52.70 51.21 49.26 46.64	9 YR 8 YR 7 AM 6 YR 5
5 YR 4 YR 3 YR 2 AM 1 YR 0	34.47 0.00 0.00 0.00 0.00	35.23 0.00 0.00 0.00 0.00	35.99 0.00 0.00 0.00 0.00	36.75 0.00 0.00 0.00 0.00	37.52 0.00 0.00 0.00 0.00	38.29 0.00 0.00 0.00 0.00	39.06 0.00 0.00 0.00 0.00	39.83 0.00 0.00 0.00 0.00	40.60 0.00 0.00 0.00 0.00	41.38 0.00 0.00 0.00 0.00	42.16 0.00 0.00 0.00 0.00	42.94 0.00 0.00 0.00 0.00	4 YR 3 YR 2 AM 1 YR 0

SCHEDULE "D"

CHAPTER 472

The Unconscionable Transactions

Relief Act

Interpretation

1. In this Act,

(a) "cost of the loan" means the whole cost to the debtor of money lent and includes interest, discount, subscription, premium, dues, bonus, commission, brokerage fees and charges, but not actual lawful and necessary disbursements made to a registrar of deeds, a master of titles, a clerk of a county or district court, a sheriff or a treasurer of a municipality;

(b) "court" means a court having jurisdiction in an action for the recovery of a debt or money demand to the amount claimed by a creditor in respect of money lent;

(c) "creditor" includes the person advancing money lent and the assignee of any claim arising or security given in respect of money lent;

(d) "debtor" means a person to whom or on whose account money lent is advanced and includes every surety and endorser or other person liable for the repayment of money lent or upon any agreement or collateral or other security given in respect thereof;

R.S.O. 1970, c. 279

(e) "money lent" includes money advanced on account of any person in any transaction that, whatever its form may be, is substantially one of money-lending or securing the repayment of money so advanced and includes and has always included a mortgage within the meaning of The Mortgages Act. R.S.O. 1960, c. 410, s. 1, amended.

The court may,

2. Where, in respect of money lent, the court finds that, having regard to the risk and to all the circumstances, the cost of the loan is excessive and that the transaction is harsh and unconscionable, the court may, reopen transaction and take account

(a) reopen the transaction and take an account between the creditor and the debtor;

reopen former settlements

(b) notwithstanding any statement or settlement of account or any agreement purporting to close previous dealings and create a new obligation, reopen any account already taken and relieve the debtor from payment of any sum in excess of the sum adjudged by the court to be fairly due in respect of the principal and the cost of the loan;

order repayment of excess

(c) order the creditor to repay any such excess if the same has been paid or allowed on account by the debtor;

set aside or revise contract

(d) set aside either wholly or in part or revise or alter any security given or agreement made in respect of the money lent, and, if the creditor has parted with the security, order him to indemnify the debtor. R.S.O. 1960, c. 410, s. 2.

Exercise of powers of court,

3. The powers conferred by section 2 may be exercised,

in action by creditor

(a) in an action or proceeding by a creditor for the recovery of money lent; in action by debtor

(b) in an action or proceeding by the debtor notwithstanding any provision or agreement to the contrary, and notwithstanding that the time for repayment of the loan or any instalment thereof has not arrived;

in other proceedings

(c) in an action or proceeding in which the amount due or to become due in respect of money lent is in question. R.S.O. 1960, c. 410, s. 3.

Relief by way of originating notice in county court

4.—(1) In addition to any right that a debtor may have under this or any other Act or otherwise in respect of money lent, he may apply for relief under this Act to a judge of the county or district court of the county or district in which he resides, and the judge on the application may exercise any of the powers of the court under section 2.

Removal of proceedings into Supreme Court

(2) Where an application is made under subsection 1, the judge may, if he sees fit, at any time before disposing of the application, by order remove the proceedings into the Supreme Court.

Idem

(3) When an order is made under subsection 2, the clerk of the county or district court shall forthwith transmit the papers in the case to the proper office of the Supreme Court in the county or district in which the application was made.

Idem

(4) When the papers have been received in the proper office of the Supreme Court, the application is ipso facto removed into the Supreme Court and shall be heard and determined by a judge of the Supreme Court in chambers, and the judge on the application may exercise any of the powers of the court under section 2 or he may direct an issue.

Appeal

(5) An appeal lies to the Court of Appeal from any order made under subsection 1 or 4. R.S.O. 1960, c. 410, s. 4.

Saving bona fide holder for value, and existing jurisdiction

5. Nothing in this Act affects the rights of a bona fide assignee or holder for value without notice, or derogates from the existing powers or jurisdiction of any court. R.S.O. 1960, c. 410, s. 5.

PART B
CLAUSE BY CLAUSE REVIEW

SECTION 2(1)—DEFINITION OF “ADMINISTRATOR”

Comment

The Bill proposes to appoint an “Administrator” to have such powers and to perform duties and functions as are assigned or delegated to him. However, this definition and reference to the “Administrator” has been removed from the Bill by the proposed amendment and your Committee agrees with the containment of additional bureaucracy.

SECTION 2(1)—DEFINITION OF “BORROWER”

Comment

In Part A, III, of this Report, the Committee recommends that the Bill should only apply to:

- (i) a “borrower” who is a natural person who is engaged in a non-business or personal transaction and who is not borrowing for business purposes; and
- (ii) a “lender” who is acting in the course of carrying on a lending business.

This change would eliminate application of the Bill to any borrower who is borrowing for business purposes as in such case the borrower should have, or have access to, sufficient expertise to provide him with the necessary protection.

The principal concerns expressed over the wording of the definition are:

- that “testamentary instruments” are ambiguous and further clarification is required,
- that definition should indicate that “borrower’s” guarantor, surety and indemnitor are included,
- that as defined in the Bill “borrower” may apply to business transactions of entities made up of “natural persons”, and
- that “borrower” should not include corporations of any kind.

Recommendation

That sub-section 2(1) of the Bill should be amended to restrict “borrower” to non-business transactions by natural persons and be amended to resolve the concerns expressed above.

Amendment

The amendment while restricting the borrowers to a natural person, is not limited to only non-business transactions. Also, there is no clarification of the intended meaning of “testamentary instruments”.

SECTION 2(1)—DEFINITION OF “CLOSELY HELD CORPORATION”

Comment

Your Committee has discussed the elimination of closely held corporations where this appears in the Bill and we approve of the proposed amendment.

SECTION 2(1)—DEFINITION OF “CREDIT CHARGE”

Comment

Concerns have been expressed by a number of organizations regarding the difficulties and indeed the appropriateness of including in the definition of “credit charge” amounts paid by the borrower to a third party where these amounts are not considered part of the compensation paid to the lender for entering into the lending transaction. Part A, II, of this Report reviews these concerns in the light of existing jurisprudence and discusses the extent to which this Bill goes beyond the generally accepted meaning of interest in the definition of credit charge.

Recommendation

As recommended in Part A, II, credit charge should be defined to include only those items which can be substantiated as falling within the federal jurisdiction and should not include items which cannot be regarded as compensation to the lender. Also, the section should include an exclusion clause as follows: “Payments to third parties, unrelated to the lender and not a nominee or nominees of the lender and necessary to the completion of the lending transaction.”

Amendment

The proposed amendment does not materially change the original definition.

SECTION 2(1)—DEFINITION OF “EFFECTIVE DATE”

Amendment

The proposed amendment incorporates consideration of the date on which the principal sum is advanced or made available to the borrower and this is satisfactory.

SECTION 2(1)—DEFINITION OF “LENDER”

Comment

Clarification is required to indicate whether the words “arranges for the provision of or offers to provide or arrange for the provision of a net principal sum” would include an agent acting on behalf of a lender.

Recommendation

As recommended in Part A, III, of this Report, “lender” should be further restricted so as to apply only to a party to a lending transaction who provides a net principal sum in the course of carrying on business.

Amendment

The proposed amendment exempts only infrequent and irregular transactions which are vague and undefined terms exposing the borrower to the uncertainty that a particular lending transaction may not fall within the scope of the Bill.

SECTION 2(1)—DEFINITION OF “LENDING TRANSACTION”

Comment

The principal concerns expressed over the wording of this definition are:

1. The primary part of the definition should be amended to provide direct reference to the borrower and the lender and to provide for joint borrowers. This could be achieved by insertion of the words “who is the borrower”, “or as a joint borrower” and “who is lender” in the appropriate place in the definition paragraph at the bottom of page 3.

2. Sub-paragraph (b)—as stated in our comments in Part A, II, of this Report on definition of “credit charge” the charge or discount occurring from the assignment or sale of a right is not interest nor should it fall within the definition of a lending transaction and your Committee is of the opinion that it is beyond the federal power under interest to legislate with respect to the sale or assignment of a right and Parliament cannot acquire jurisdiction indirectly by attempting to relate such charge or discount to legislation with respect to interest.

3. Sub-paragraph (d)—the comments in 3 above relating to an assignment or sale are equally applicable to transactions providing for the transfer of title to property.

4. The final paragraph of the definition should stop after the word “unsecured” on line 29 on page 4 of the Bill as the remaining words refer to exemptions for variable credit arrangements included under sub-paragraph (f) and this seem contradictory.

Recommendation

The definition should specifically identify “borrower” and “lender” and the words “as joint borrower” should replace “together” as outlined in paragraph 1 above. Sub-paragraphs (b) and (d) should be rewritten in line with comments 2 and 3 above, and the definition should stop after the word “unsecured” in line 29 on page 4 of the Bill.

Amendment

New sub-paragraph (h) appears to be an exclusion to the Bill designed for the protection of the borrower and the lender, but the wording is so imprecise that neither party can be certain as to the application of the Bill until any “intended” development is completed. Also, new sub-paragraph (h) requires a definition of the phrase “dwelling units” in the last line.

SECTION 2(1)—DEFINITION OF “NET PRINCIPAL SUM”

Comment

Concern has been expressed regarding the use of the word “value”, as in the absence of definition in the Bill, reference to “value” introduces a factor of uncertainty which may not be determinable with absolute accuracy and indeed is a matter of opinion.

Recommendation

The word “value” should be removed from the definition and the definition should be amended to require that net principal sum be determined by deducting any amount “credited” to a borrower in respect of a trade-in or for any reason in determining a “net principal sum”. Also, the words “the benefit of or” should be inserted after the word “obtain” in the third line of the definition of net principal sum to cover benefits obtained from a right of use.

SECTION 2(1)—DEFINITION OF “NHA HOME OWNERSHIP LOAN RATE”

Amendment

This definition has been deleted from the Bill.

SECTION 2(1)—DEFINITION OF “NON-CHEQUABLE SAVINGS DEPOSITS INTEREST RATE”

Amendment

This definition has been deleted from the Bill.

SECTION 2(1)—DEFINITION OF “OFFICIAL FEES”

Recommendation

The definition should clearly include fees or charges reasonably paid by the lender to any public official to effect any public filing or registration of a lending transaction.

Amendment

The proposed amendment would be improved if the words “or interest under” were changed to read “or an interest in” in the second line of subparagraph (b).

SECTION 2(1)—DEFINITION OF “PENALTY”

Comment

As presently defined the word “penalty” includes interest which is payable in respect of an overdue payment of interest and does not clearly exclude third party payments in the process of collection by the lender.

Recommendation

The term “penalty” should not include interest accruing on overdue interest and the Bill should so state.

Amendment

The proposed amendment improves the definition, however, it may not be adequate to clearly exclude from “penalty” expenditures incurred by a lender in realizing upon his security. The item (d) in the third line of new subparagraph (c) should presumably read (b).

SECTION 2(1)—DEFINITION OF “PRIME RATE”

Comment

There appears to be a mechanical problem in determining the “prime rate” as the definition may contemplate a uniform rate which is charged at a given time by all federally incorporated Canadian chartered banks.

Recommendation

The definition should be amended to the average of the prime rates quoted by all Canadian chartered banks or the lowest rate quoted by any federally incorporated Canadian chartered bank.

Amendment

The proposed amendment seems to resolve the mechanical problem, however, your Committee recommends that the determination of prime rate should be made by the Bank of Canada not the Minister.

SECTION 2(1)—DEFINITION OF “REFERENCE RATE”

This definition is an addition to the Bill and comment is not appropriate until the regulation illustrating computation is available, however, as in the case of “prime rate”, your Committee believes the determination of the rate should be made by the Bank of Canada and not by the Minister.

SECTION 2(2)

Comment

Many of the associations and organizations appearing before your Committee commented that the definition as to when a payment is deemed to be made is unrealistic, impractical, unfair and unworkable and is an attempt to change conventional business practice which has been followed for many years.

Amendment

The proposed amendments adopt current business practice where payment is made on the date received or negotiated by the lender.

SECTION 2(4)

Comment

This section makes reference to an assignment or right to refunds under the Income Tax Act and appears to be an attempt to control the practice of discounting income tax refunds. If this remains in the Bill, it is conceivable that the Bill should include the assignment or right to other government payments such as unemployment insurance, welfare and workmen's compensation. However, as stated in Part A, II, of this Report your Committee has serious doubts concerning the authority of the Federal Parliament to legislate with respect to contracts where interest is only incidental to the purpose of the transaction.

Recommendation

This section should be deleted from the Bill and control of income tax refund discounting, if necessary, should be exercised through the Income Tax Act.

Amendment

The proposed amendment does not change the intent of the original definition.

SECTION 2(6)

Comment

It has been submitted to your Committee that the 60-day transitional period permitted by this section in deeming the application of the Bill to lending transactions which survive the enactment of the Bill is inadequate and does not allow time for the lenders to prepare, review and implement whatever new administrative procedures may be necessary.

Amendment

The proposed amendment extends the transitional period to 120 days and this would appear to deal reasonably satisfactorily with the comments and submissions received.

SECTION 3

Comments

The apparent intention of this section is to replace section 2 of the Interest Act and to provide direction concerning the charging of interest in any lending transaction not covered by an Act of Parliament. At present there is no conflicting legislation as the Bank Act is the only federal statute dealing with the cost of borrowing and consumer interest. However, if this Bill is enacted there will be conflict with the Bank Act.

Recommendation

Notwithstanding the Bank Act White Paper wherein it is indicated that disclosure of the cost of borrowing in the new Bank Act will be superceded by this Bill, if enacted, your Committee cannot assume that the new Bank Act will provide for the omission of sections 91 and 92 of the present Bank Act. Accordingly, your Committee must deal with the apparent conflict between the present Bank Act and this Bill and we recommend that sections 91 and 92 should remain dominant in the field of consumer lending for Banks.

Amendment

The proposed amendment extends the application of the Bill to transactions which are beyond the announced scope. Accordingly the words “whether” and “or not” in the first and second lines of the proposed amendments should be removed.

SECTION 4

Comment

Section 4(1) extends the application of the Bill to transactions which are not lending transactions as defined within the Bill.

Section 4(2) provides that the prime rate will apply when no credit charge rate is fixed or determinable in respect of a lending transaction thereby penalizing the lender if a higher rate had in fact been agreed upon but was not sufficiently clear in the lending agreement. It has been suggested that the Bill has gone too far in imposing a rate where the parties may have agreed that no credit charge rate was appropriate in the circumstances. Also, it is not clear whether the provision for a “nil” rate would be considered to be a rate for this purpose.

Recommendation

This Bill should apply to only those consumer lending transactions which clearly fall within its ambit and if the Interest Act is repealed its replacement for other credit transactions of a business or commercial nature should be accomplished through other legislation and section 4(1) should be deleted from the Bill. Also clarification is required in section 4(2) to resolve the above comment.

Amendment

The proposed amendment is technical only to more clearly extend the Bill's scope beyond the intended application and does not address your Committee's recommendations with respect to section 4(1) and (2).

SECTION 5

Amendment

Section 5(1) is deleted from the Bill.

SECTION 6

Comment

As stated in Part A, V, of this Report, the organizations and associations appearing before your Committee have expressed great concern that the wording of the section is too broad and covers many possible circumstances outside the boundaries normally defined by the word advertising. Also, the Bill does not provide protection for publishers, broadcasters and other information media who, when acting in good faith on the basis of representations by a third party, publish advertisements relating to consumer credit.

It has been suggested that it may be impossible to "publish an advertisement or otherwise make any representation to the public indicating the availability of credit or relating to credit charge . . . without at the same time disclosing . . . the relevant credit charge and credit charge rate" as the computation of the credit charge and credit charge rate may include items which relate to the particular transaction. For example, it is impossible for the advertised rate to be the same as the actual credit charge rate where certain components of the credit charge are not determinable in advance of the actual transaction.

Recommendation

The Bill should not apply to advertisements or publications, such as credit card decals, which indicate only the availability of credit. Protection for publishers and broadcasters acting in good faith should be in a form which is consistent with section 37.3(1) of the Combines Investigation Act, as follows:

"37.3 (1) Sections 36 to 37.2 do not apply to a person who prints or publishes or otherwise distributes a representation or an advertisement on behalf of another person in Canada, where he establishes that he obtained and recorded the name and address of that other person and that he accepted the representation or advertisement in good faith for printing, publishing or other distribution in the ordinary course of his business."

As stated in Part A, V, and Part A, VIII, respectively, the right to commence civil action for damages against a person who breaches the Act should be limited to situations where privity of contract exists between the parties and the disclosure requirements for advertisements should be included in the Bill and not in the Regulations as stated in the Bill.

Amendment

The proposed amendment provides limited protection for publishers and broadcasters but does not satisfy your Committee's recommendations above. In addition, it does not remove your Committee's concern about mention of the "availability of credit". Assuming the Regulations require disclosure of the actual rate the amendment does not resolve the impossibility of advertising a credit charge rate which, in all circumstances, will equal the actual credit charge rate calculated in accordance with the statute.

SECTION 7

Comment

It has been suggested that it is necessary to amend sub-section 7(1) to provide that no further disclosure need be made unless there has been some change in the detail of the credit charge rate since the last disclosure, as sub-section 2(6) appears to deem a variable credit arrangement to be newly entered into each time credit is made available.

Concern has been expressed over several points in sub-section 7(2) which are summarized as follows:

1. Where failure to provide the borrower with a copy of the lending agreement is accidental, the credit charge should commence to accrue from the date the agreement is delivered to the borrower and not be entirely cancelled. The subject of the obligation upon the lender is: "any agreement evidencing the lending transaction" and this may be ambiguous.
2. Unintentional error, omission or minor defect caused by oversight which is not deliberate and which does not materially mislead the borrower as to the nature of the transaction should have no effect on the respective obligations of the borrower and the lender. An exception may be required for the misstatement of a credit charge rate in which case the borrower should pay the lesser of the amount required to be disclosed or the amount actually disclosed.
3. It has been submitted that disclosure to the borrower's agent or representative or to any one borrower where more than one borrower is a party to the same transaction should permit the lender to satisfy the requirements of the section.

Recommendation

The Bill requires amendment to deal with the above mentioned deficiencies and as stated in Part A, VIII, the disclosure requirements for advertisements should be incorporated in the Bill.

Amendment

The proposed amendment to sub-section (2) permits the lender to charge the prime rate but sub-section (3) should be broadened to cover accidental failure to provide the borrower with a copy of the lending agreement where the rights of the borrower are not prejudiced.

The proposed amendment to sub-section (3) does not remove the concern for unintentional error, omission or minor defect as it is operative only where the "error, omission or insufficiency in the disclosure to the borrower was not of such a nature as to be likely to mislead or deceive the borrower to his disadvantage" and the amendment fails to introduce a concept of materiality.

SECTION 7.1

Amendment

This is a new section linked with the amendment to the definition of "variable rate". The new section brings into the Bill details concerning variable rate transactions that would have been included in the Regulations.

SECTION 8

Comment

Some of the concerns expressed by your Committee on the various provisions of Section 8(1) are summarized as follows:

1. An agent or representative should not be permitted to act "on behalf of a borrower" in making any application to the court alleging that the credit charge rate was unwarranted on the day the transaction was entered into.
2. The items listed in paragraphs 8(1)(b)(i) through 8(1)(b)(v) could be interpreted as directing the court to examine, amongst other things, the profitability of a lender in its attempt to determine whether the credit charge rate is excessive and this has no bearing on whether the credit charge rate is unwarranted. Also, the list of items should be expanded to enable the court to review such other factors as it considers necessary.
3. Words such as "relationship between the borrower and the lender" in 8(1)(b)(v) are ambiguous and further clarification is required.

Concern has been expressed that paragraph (b) of sub-section 8(2) provides a borrower with unlimited recourse to have a lending transaction set aside even after that transaction is completed and supposedly closed. This same paragraph permits a court to review the lending transaction and if the credit charge is found to be unwarranted to specify a credit charge rate which may not exceed the prime rate but may range from zero to prime. It would seem reasonable that in circumstances where a court has determined that a rate was unwarranted it should have the authority to establish a warranted rate regardless of whether such rate was above or below the prime rate.

The right of unlimited recourse in 8(2)(d) could expose the lender to substantial risk through a borrower alleging that the credit charge rate was unwarranted for the specific purpose of attempting to retrieve security given to the lender because it has substantially increased in value, long after such security has been disposed of. For example, where a mortgagee has foreclosed and sold the property he has unlimited exposure to the risk of the borrower attacking the transaction for the purpose of retrieving the security and if impossible obtaining indemnification from the lender at a possibly enhanced value.

Sub-section 8(3) stipulates that the court must determine that the credit charge rate is unwarranted unless the lender can establish that it is warranted and this is viewed as being unfair and unreasonable.

Recommendation

The list of items in sub-section 8(1) should be expanded to allow the court to consider such other items as it considers to be relevant in the circumstances. If the borrower is given the right to challenge a credit charge rate as being unwarranted, the burden of proof should be upon the borrower to establish his claim. Where a court finds the rate charged by a lender to a borrower was unwarranted the court should have the authority to determine a warranted rate.

Amendment

The proposed amendment does not address the above recommendations.

SECTION 9

Comment

This section would not permit a party to whom a lending transaction has been assigned to provide the borrower with notice of such assignment or if such party did provide such notice the borrower would not be required to expect the original lender who no longer has financial interest in the lending transaction, to act in accordance with the requirements of the section.

Recommendation

The section should be amended to permit the party to whom the lending agreement has been assigned to serve notice of such assignment to the borrower.

Amendment

The proposed amendment is technical only.

SECTION 10

Comment

This section may be in conflict with Section 12(4) which provides that an installment payment made 7 days before an installment due date must be applied against the next succeeding installment rather than against earlier unpaid credit charge and principal amounts. It has been suggested that this section should follow the approach of certain provincial consumer protection acts which allow payments received immediately following a due date to be treated as having been received on the due date.

Amendment

The proposed amendments provide the required revision to the allocation of prepayments and the apparent conflict with sub-section 12(4) is removed.

SECTION 11

Comment

Sub-section (2) provides that in a variable credit arrangement, a change in the credit charge rate applies to new business only. It has been suggested that there should not be any attempt to distinguish between a carry forward balance to which an old credit charge rate would apply and a new balance to which a new rate would apply as this would be complicated and virtually impossible without opening a new account for each borrower at the time of the rate change. This latter procedure would be costly and such cost would have to be recovered from the borrower.

Amendment

The proposed amendment provides a six-month notice period.

SECTION 12

Comment

It has been suggested that this section requires clarification to ensure that out-of-pocket costs may be fully recovered by the lender, that they do not fall within the definition of “penalty” and that interest on such out-of-pocket costs should not be at a rate which is greater than the rate provided in the related agreement.

Amendment

The proposed amendment to the definition of “penalty” does not address the question of interest on third party costs.

SECTION 13

Comment

It has been suggested that prepayment should be permitted in minimum amounts equal to at least one or more installments payable and that such prepayments should be credited to the borrower’s account on the next nearest installment date or the first date of a calendar month if a loan is not payable in regular installments. A minimum prepayment fee should be established and applied in the case of the repayment of loans before the due date, and the wording of the section should permit a borrower to provide a lender with a land mortgage as collateral security without loss of such prepayment privileges as may be applicable in non-mortgage transactions.

As stated in Part A, II, a number of organizations have expressed concern to your Committee that the prepayment provisions in this section of the Bill may not be legislation with respect to interest but rather a statutory variation of contractual terms between two or more parties to a contract and may be beyond the power of the Federal Parliament.

Recommendation

Prepayments should only be permitted in minimum amounts equal to at least one or more installments. As stated in Part A, II, clarification of the constitutional authority of the Federal Parliament should be sought from the Supreme Court of Canada.

Amendment

The amendment extends the application of this section to mortgage transactions where the credit charge rate exceeds the relevant “reference rate” by more than four percentage points. It is unclear as to whether sub-section (3) is now deleted. The lack of a prepayment minimum permits the borrower to make a pre-payment in any amount at any time.

SECTION 14

Recommendation

As stated in Part A, II, and as recommended for section 13 clarification of the constitutional right of the Federal Parliament to enact these sections dealing with reformation of a lending contract should be sought from the Supreme Court of Canada.

Amendment

The proposed amendments incorporate a minimum prepayment level for mortgage transactions but do not address the above recommendation.

SECTION 15

Comment

There are inconsistencies in the prepayment penalty scale and other costs to the lender as a result of prepayments both of which should be adjusted.

Recommendation

The Bill should be amended to eliminate the inconsistencies in the prepayment penalty scale and to recognize other costs to the lender as a result of prepayments. The same constitutional question arises here as arose in sections 13 and 14.

Amendment

The proposed amendments in combination with the proposed amendments to sections 13 and 14 substantially change sub-sections (1) and (2). However, the amendment to 15(1) includes provision for a penalty prescribed by regulation to reflect the present value of the loss to the lender that might reasonably be expected to result from the tender or payment. Part A, XI, refer to the complexity of the narrative of the proposed regulation and the probability that it is not capable of being computed or understood by the average borrower. Your Committee therefore recommends that the proposed amendment be changed to make it clear, simple and understandable to such borrower. The proposed amendment is not clear as to the intended disposition of sub-sections (3), (4) and (5).

SECTION 16

Comment

The language of Section 16(1)(a) has the effect of eliminating construction loans on variable rate mortgages which commonly involve only the payment of interest and no amortization of principal and the language should be changed to accommodate such construction loans for variable rate mortgages. The requirement that the term of the lending transaction and the initial amortization be equal and the reference to the non-chequable savings interest rate are unrealistic. Where a lender did not compute the credit charge rate as required and the violation was accidental, it would appear reasonable for the lender to receive some compensation.

Amendment

The proposed amendments pick up the above comments.

SECTION 17

Comment

All lenders are required in this section to maintain records and books of account at their place of business or residence in Canada. Sub-section (3) requires that all records and books of account relating to lending transactions must be kept until written permission for disposal is obtained from the Administrator. Also, it has been suggested that the Bill permit the storage of records by microfilm and/or photographic process.

The requirement for unlimited storage is arbitrary and should be changed to a more normal requirement of say six years.

Amendment

The proposed amendments include a six-year storage requirement unless otherwise specified by the Minister but in any event not exceeding ten years.

SECTION 18

Comment

It has been suggested that sub-section (1) should be extended to provide the heirs, executors or representatives of deceased borrowers with the same rights and privileges as a borrower in the administration of a deceased borrower's estate. Also, sub-section (2) should limit the provision of a statement to borrowers to one statement per mortgage annually after which any borrower may request a further statement upon the payment of a nominal fee. In the case of a variable credit transaction, the Bill should state that one copy of the borrower's most recent monthly statement would satisfy the requirement.

Recommendation

Provision should be made for a borrower's heirs or executors to exercise necessary powers in the administration of a deceased's estate.

Amendment

The comment and the recommendation has not been recognized and no amendment is proposed.

SECTION 19

Comment

Substantial concern has been caused by the Bill's failure to define "institution" and thus indicate whether this would include a natural person, a partnership, a life insurance company, legal firms and real estate companies, as well as banks, trust companies, caisses populaires and credit unions. In the French translation the word "institution" is translated as "établissement" which appears to have a somewhat narrower interpretation.

It has been suggested that monies held on behalf of a borrower to provide a service associated with mortgage transactions such as the holding of money to pay municipal taxes on mortgaged properties, should not be classified as a deposit. Similarly, it is assumed that it was not the intention of the Bill to include as deposits, activities where life insurance companies maintain deposits to accommodate policyholders such as advance premium accounts, dividend accumulation accounts, policy loans and proceeds accounts and property tax accounts wherein this service is incidental to the primary function of the institution. It is also assumed that amounts retained by landlords as security against damage in rented premises, overpaid installments of income tax, layaway accounts and deposit accounts maintained with retail organizations, and simple account overpayments are not intended to be included in the definition of deposit.

Recommendation

The Bill should include a definition of institution and as stated in Part A, IV, should include only those who accept deposits as a principal function of their business.

Amendment

The proposed amendments define institution and specifically include mortgage transaction tax accounts but the position with respect to the other types of deposit is not covered.

SECTION 20

Comment

As in section 6, concern has been expressed over the failure of the section to exempt publishers and broadcasters who do not make the required disclosure relative to deposits when acting in good faith on the basis of representations by third parties.

Recommendation

The section should contain an exemption for publishers and broadcasters similar to section 37.3(1) of the Combines Investigation Act set out in our recommendation for section 6 and the disclosure requirements for advertisements should be included in the Bill.

Amendment

The proposed amendment is similar to that provided in section 6 and only provides a defense where the advertiser has published such advertisement in the ordinary course of business and did not know and had no reason to suspect the advertisement would breach the section.

SECTION 21

Comment

The Bill appears to contemplate the possibility of requiring institutions to pay interest on the minimum daily balance and to credit such interest to the depositor's account at least monthly. It has been suggested to your Committee that any requirement to compute interest on the basis of actual or average daily balances and to credit such interest to the depositor's account at minimum monthly intervals will substantially increase the institution's cost of administering such accounts and indeed may prove to be extremely difficult if not impossible in those institutions which are without access to electronic data processing equipment.

Your Committee has been advised by one organization that its estimated cost of calculating and crediting interest to recipients is 20 cents per time. Assuming the borrowers average minimum monthly balance is $100, the increased interest yield obtained by the depositor from monthly crediting over annual crediting is $.04 with interest at 3% per annum whereas the cost of crediting such interest will increase by $2.20 per depositor.

Use of average daily balances for the computation of interest appears to be favourable to the depositor who uses a savings account in substitution for a current account and not favourable, because of a reduced interest rate, to those who maintain steady balances without extreme or frequent fluctuation. Payment of interest on average daily balances could result in the payment of interest on monies in transit and may encourage practices to exploit interest payments on such monies. Also, it would seem unreasonable to require that all financial institutions pay interest monthly on average daily balances while still permitting the federal and provincial governments to obtain funds through savings bonds which pay interest annually.

Even if the institution has access to electronic equipment, the reprogramming time and effort would be extremely costly and must of course be recovered from the accounts to which such effort applies. The inevitable result would be a reduction in the rate of interest to offset the increase in cost of administration, with a net result which could be of no real benefit to the depositors.

Recommendation

Having consideration for the increased cost relative to potential return and the right of depositors to arrange their affairs to minimize interest loss through period minimum balances rather than period average balances, your Committee recommends that if the Minister believes that market forces are not enough to insure that the crediting of interest to borrowers will be within a reasonable time limitation then interest should be computed on the basis of the minimum monthly balance and credited to the depositors accounts quarterly. However, to the extent that any organization may wish to compute interest and to credit the borrower's account more frequently, the Bill should permit such organizations to do so but not require it and to the extent that a borrower may wish to have the interest credited to his account less frequently than quarterly, he should be permitted to so state in the deposit agreement.

As stated in Part A, VIII, the method of calculating interest should be included in the Bill and not provided by Regulation.

Amendment

The proposed amendments provide substantially increased latitude in the frequency of crediting interest to a depositor's account, however, it would appear from the proposed Regulation narrative that the intention is to require the calculation of interest using the average daily balance method notwithstanding the concerns of those organizations which are not mechanically equipped to handle average daily balance calculations and the additional cost of making such calculations.

SECTION 23

Comment

Sub-section (1) states that regardless of the provisions of a judgment rendered prior to the coming into force of the Act interest on the judgment must accrue at the "prime rate" from the date the Act comes in force. It should be noted that sub-section (2) allows the court to otherwise order in a judgment rendered after the Bill comes into force and it seems reasonable that the same latitude should apply to a judgment rendered before the Bill comes into force.

It has been suggested that sub-sections (2) and (3) may allow interest charges obtained in a lower court judgment to continue to accrue notwithstanding the fact that such judgment may be subsequently reversed on appeal. Also, that sub-sections (2) and (3) should permit the parties to agree that a judgment debt bear interest at the rate which, during the term of the contract, was legally payable in respect of the principal and if no interest was payable during the term, the parties should be free to specify a rate which should apply after judgment with the court having the power to reduce the agreed upon rate to the prime rate.

It has been suggested that amendment is required to provide the court with the power to fix the rate at which interest accrues as sub-section (3) suggests the court has no such power.

Recommendation

Sub-sections (1) and (3) should provide that the rate of interest on a judgment debt is the prime rate unless the court otherwise specifies. Clarification is required in sub-sections (2) and (3) to show the intent where judgment is suspended by proceedings in another court.

Amendment

The proposed amendments are of a technical nature only and do not satisfy the above recommendations.

SECTION 24

Comment

It has been suggested that the function of the Administrator would be more properly handled by the Minister.

Amendment

The proposed amendments substitute the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs for the Administrator and permit the Minister to enter into agreements with the provinces for the administration of this Act in the province concerned. However, your Committee is concerned that the delegation of administration to the provinces and to other specified federal officials suggest the loss of federal control and to the extent of the delegation a loss of his Ministerial responsibilities.

SECTION 25

Comment

It has been suggested that provision by the Minister of such information as "is likely to be of general interest to borrowers" is too broad and may result in unwarranted demands on lenders.

Recommendation

The Minister's powers under this section should be more restricted.

Amendment

The proposed amendments are of a technical nature only and your Committee remains concerned over the extent of the information which may be required by the Minister.

SECTION 26

Amendment

The proposed amendments completely delete the section as originally drafted, which was considered by your Committee as impractical and probably unworkable, and substitute Ministerial direction concerning the periodic publication of reports and rates. However, your Committee is concerned that the publication of reports "from time to time" does not indicate a sufficient degree of frequency.

SECTION 28

Comment

Concern has been expressed that the Administrator or any other person authorized by the Minister should be required to prove the existence of "reasonable and probable grounds" for the purpose of being authorized to enter a lender's premises to audit or examine books and records or to require persons to answer questions under oath or otherwise. Also, while the Bill provides that the Administrator requires judicial approval to undertake certain actions, such approval may be obtained without prior notice to the lender or individual concerned and it has been suggested that notice of the court application be given in all cases except where the court is satisfied such notice should not be given for the purpose of preventing the destruction of evidence.

Expressions of concern have also been made on the following points:

1. Sub-section (4) incorporates by reference parts of section 231 of the Income Tax Act to apply with respect to audits, examinations, searches and seizures under this Bill.

2. Sub-section (3) appears to permit all seized documents to be kept virtually indefinitely and it would seem reasonable that some control over retention and use should be provided in the Bill.

3. Special consideration should be given to the manner in which the seizure provisions apply to "books and records" which are electronically stored in a form which is unreadable without the interpretive program and to the extent to which the original data or storage form should be seized as this may create difficulty in the continued operations of the lender.

4. Any review under sub-section (3) should be carried out by a judge of the superior court or county court and not a justice of the peace.

Recommendation

There should be proof of reasonable and probable grounds before any representative should be authorized to enter the premises of a lender. As recommended in Part A, VII, of this Report this Bill should establish its own code of procedure with respect to audits, examinations, searches and seizure and not incorporate by reference sections of the Income Tax Act which have been adopted for an entirely different purpose.

The conflict between the authority to retain seized documents apparently indefinitely, under sub-section (3) and Section 231(2) of the Income Tax Act which requires return within 120 days unless otherwise ordered by a judge of the superior court or county court should be resolved and an appropriate time period should be inserted. Any request for approval of the Minister or his representatives to enter and search should be obtained from a judge of the superior court or county court and not from a justice of the peace and ex parte applications should not be permitted.

Amendment

The proposed amendments are primarily technical and do not address the above recommendations.

SECTION 29

Comment

It has been suggested that the Bill does not sufficiently protect lenders and other persons from disclosure of confidential information obtained by officials in the office of the Administrator.

Amendment

The proposed amendment increases the restrictions on the use and disclosure of information.

SECTION 30

Amendment

The proposed amendment completely eliminates the original section and substitutes authority for the Minister to appoint a Commissioner to carry out an investigation under the Inquiries Act. Your Committee questions the Minister's need for such authority.

SECTION 30.1

Amendment

The proposed amendment is a completely new section permitting the Minister to receive from the lender assurance of voluntary compliance where the Minister has reason to believe the lender is engaging in conduct which contravenes the Act and would thus be liable for the payment of damages under section 35. Your Committee questions the need for this authority and if needed, the extent of the terms and conditions which may be imposed on the lender and in particular sub-section 2(d).

SECTION 32

Comment

It has been suggested to your Committee that the wording of this section excludes from evidence a borrower's acknowledgement that a lender has complied with any or all provisions of the Bill unless previously approved by the borrower. This is unreasonable, and may unduly interfere with the normal operation of all financial institutions as a lender may find it virtually impossible to ensure that employees who dealt with the particular borrower would be available in months and years following the execution of a contract to testify as to the circumstances existing at the time the contract was completed.

Amendment

The proposed amendments permit lenders to introduce evidence that a borrower has received a copy of the lending agreement and a statement in writing making the disclosure as and when required by sub-section 7(1).

SECTION 34

Comment

It has been suggested that sub-paragraph (a) refers to a publication of the Bank of Canada which purports to set forth a rate or range of rates under certain circumstances and there is difficulty in seeing how a series individual rate or range of rates could establish proof as to the prime rate.

Amendment

The need for this section in its original form has been eliminated by the proposed amendments to other sections. The replacement section provides the Minister with authority to issue cease and desist orders where he has reasonable grounds to believe that any provision of the Act or accompanying Regulations has been, is being or will be violated. Your Committee recommends the proposed amendment include a clause which would preclude the possibility of vexatious actions against the lender.

SECTION 35 (Original SECTION 36)

Comment on Original Section 36

Sub-paragraph (1)(c) does not contain any concept of fault and it has been suggested that a lender should not be obliged to defend statutory actions for civil damages unless there is some showing of fault on his part. Also, no limitation period is provided in respect of the civil remedy referred to in this section of the Bill and the absence of a limitation period may pose a difficult evidentiary problem in the years following execution of the contract.

Amendment

The proposed amendment eliminates original section 35 and replaces it by renumbered original section 36. A one year limitation period has been included for actions under this section but there has not been any amendment to satisfy the comment on sub-paragraph (1)(c).

SECTION 36

Amendment

A new section 36 is proposed to permit the Minister to assume proceedings on behalf of a borrower or depositor with all the rights that would otherwise be within the power of such borrower or depositor. Your Committee is concerned that the new section does not include safeguards to prevent vexatious actions against the lender and recommends that the Minister should state in his application to the court the nature of the public interest involved and the court should have the discretion to determine whether the Minister can proceed on behalf of the borrower or depositor.

SECTION 37

Comment

Sub-section (1) establishes the offences and the penalties on conviction for such offences and in sub-paragraph (d) provides for a fine or imprisonment or both. Sub-paragraph (e) provides for a fine and imprisonment and section 38(1) provides for a fine or imprisonment or both. In each case, the term of imprisonment is different and fixed. It has been suggested that the court should have some latitude as to the terms of imprisonment as is usual in other statutes.

Concern has been expressed that without definition of the word "threat" in sub-paragraph (1) (c) normal business practices for the collection of past due payments may be considered to be a "threat". Accordingly, it has been suggested that such practices including litigation for the realization of security held under a lending transaction should be excluded from the definition.

Recommendation

The various sections of the Bill should be consistent in punishment on conviction and the court should have discretion to set the term of imprisonment within a maximum limit as it does in the case of monetary fines. The Bill should provide a clearer definition as to what would constitute a "threat".

Amendment

The proposed amendments are primarily technical and do not satisfy the above recommendations but do include specification of the criminal rate of interest. Your Committee is not commenting on the criminal rate of interest selected for inclusion in the amendment.

SECTION 38

Comment

Concern has been expressed that the ambiguity of the language used to describe the practices outlined in sub-paragraphs (1)(c)(i), (ii) and (iii) causes uncertainty as to whether a particular act or practice is prohibited. Also there appears to be some duplication in the provisions of Sections 38(1)(c) and 37(1)(c).

Amendment

The proposed amendments include provision for a defendant to establish as a defence that any act or omission was the result of error and that reasonable measures were taken to prevent such errors or omissions.

SECTION 39

Comment

Section 39(2)(b) states that violation of Section 231(10) of the Income Tax Act as it applies with respect to audits, examination and searches creates an offence and on conviction the offender is liable to a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars.

Recommendation

Search and seizure provisions should be specifically incorporated in this Bill and incorporation by reference to sections of the Income Tax Act should be deleted.

Amendment

This section has not been amended.

SECTION 40

Comment

The Bill provides that summary conviction proceedings may be instituted at any time within three years from the date the subject matter of the proceedings arose.

Recommendation

The three year limitation period for summary conviction proceedings appears excessively long when compared with a one year limitation on civil proceedings.

Amendment

This section has not been amended.

SECTION 44

Comment

Concern has been expressed as to the application of the Bill to existing transactions.

Amendment

The proposed amendments provide further direction as to the application of the Bill to existing transactions.

OTHER COMMENTS

The following additional general comments and suggestions have been made to your Committee and we feel they are worthy of note in this Report.

1. The Minister should develop model disclosure provisions which coordinate with the various provincial consumer acts and eliminate any conflict and/or duplication between federal and provincial legislation. Also, the provinces should be encouraged to incorporate reference to this Bill within their respective act.

2. It is more logical to legislate against criminal or quasi-criminal activities by correcting deficiencies in the Criminal Code thereby more clearly isolating those activities which are considered to be of a criminal nature.

3. It is not clear whether this Bill would supersede the Bank Act and concern has been expressed over the possible conflict of this Bill with Sections 91 and 92 of the Bank Act wherein it is stated that a bank can charge any rate of interest or discount on a loan or advance made by it and disclosure of the cost of such borrowing must be given to the borrower.

4. The French version of the Bill should be re-examined as it would appear particularly in Sections 7(2), 7(3) and 12(1) that the meaning of the French version could be subject to different interpretation. The rights of borrowers and lenders should be identical regardless of the language used to outline such rights.

Your Committee does not approve of the scheme of the Bill in implementing consumer credit policy.

Your Committee wishes to thank its advisers and staff for the assistance given during the studies and preparation of this report.

Respectfully submitted

SALTER A. HAYDEN
Chairman

THE SENATE

Tuesday, July 12, 1977

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

FISHERIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Senator Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-38, to amend the Fisheries Act and to amend the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Petten moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORTATION

POSSIBLE CNR LINK WITH FAIRBANKS, ALASKA—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, a question was asked by the Honourable Senator Austin on June 23 last. The senator cited reports to the effect that the Canadian government is studying, with officials of the United States, and particularly with state officials of Alaska, the construction of a railway which would link the Canadian National Railways system with the city of Fairbanks, Alaska. Honourable senators may recall that I took this question as notice.

In early 1977, Transport Canada received a report entitled "A Preliminary Study, Alaska-Canada Transcontinental Rail Connection to Contiguous United States," prepared by the State of Alaska. Of particular interest to Transport Canada was the report's principal conclusion that a comprehensive cost-benefit analysis of the railway connection be commissioned. The Minister of Transport, in a March 17, 1977, letter to Alaska Governor J. Hammond, indicated his department was prepared to be of assistance to the state should it decide to proceed with the more in-depth appraisal of the railway connection possibility. Alaska's Department of Commerce and Economic Developments is now undertaking this study.

The federal government has already investigated the financial implications of various Yukon railway extension options. This Yukon railway study was reviewed at a conference in Juneau, Alaska, on April 8, 1976. Statements by a Transport Canada official at the conference indicated the federal government was preparing planning guidelines for the development of railway lines to serve the needs of the Yukon Territory and that these guidelines were being based on findings of the Yukon railway study. The official also stressed that the federal government did not have firm plans for Yukon railway development or estimates of when development might be warranted. In addition, Alaska officials were advised that when new railway facilities were required in the Yukon these could be best accommodated by extensions to the present White Pass and Yukon railway system. The most viable of these extensions would not be compatible with Alaska's desires for a railway link with the Yukon, thence a connection with the Dease Lake line in British Columbia to join with the CN transcontinental line at Prince George.

● (2010)

Although the federal government's preliminary conclusions on railway expansions in the Yukon are derived from Canadian perspectives and needs, the federal government is ready to consider modifying its views should the Alaska railway proposal and the conditions of its construction yield overall advantages to both countries. When the more detailed cost-benefit analysis is completed, and if the study substantiates the merit of such a railway link, the federal government would be prepared to consider proceeding jointly with the State of Alaska to further investigate a common railway to serve Canadian and American interests. Meanwhile, officials in Transport Canada are communicating with their Alaskan counterparts and only providing assistance when requested by Alaska officials in their cost-benefit work.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING NUCLEAR SUPPLIES—QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: On June 21 of this year the Honourable Senator Olson asked a question regarding improved control of nuclear material supplied by Canada. The question was:

Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask a question supplementary to the one answered a few minutes ago by the Leader of the Government respecting so-called improved control of nuclear material supplied by Canada. I would ask the Leader of the Government if this new and improved control of the use of nuclear material originating from Canada does in fact involve Canadian personnel having greater surveillance of this material, or if it is simply a matter of improved assurances from some of those countries to which we are exporting this material?

As a supplementary, the honourable senator asked:

I would ask if copies of the agreements are available. If not, are they held to be not for public information?

The answer to the first question is:

Under the agreements with receiving countries on the peaceful uses of atomic energy, Canada requires that receiving countries accept stringent safeguards on Canadian material, equipment and technology. These undertakings are verified by the International Atomic Energy Agency which uses on-site inspection and periodic verification to ensure that Canadian items are not being diverted to any but peaceful, non-explosive purposes. While internationally recognized safeguards are in force, Canadian inspection independent of the IAEA inspection is not necessary but the agreements provide for fallback safeguards, when the IAEA is not administering safeguards.

The answer to the honourable senator's supplementary question is:

Copies of agreements with Spain, Argentina, Korea and Finland are available. A copy of the agreement with Sweden will be made available once it is signed. It would, of course, be contrary to international and Canadian practice to make public a text for an agreement, such as the text with Romania, which has not yet been signed.

Honourable senators, a question was asked by Senator Lang on June 21, 1977 as a supplementary to an answer given to a question by Senator Grosart on that day. The question was:

In addition to the countries he mentioned, is it not true that Canada has a firm commitment to supply a CANDU reactor to Romania, if not a formal contract? And is it not true that Romania is prepared to meet all the restrictive requirements of Canada, including the requirements and inspection conditions of the NPT and the standards they impose?

The answer is:

Rumania was amongst the first signatories of the Non-Proliferation Treaty and has concluded the Safeguards Agreement with the IAEA that is provided in the NPT. Moreover, Rumania is prepared to meet Canadian nuclear export requirements. A Safeguards Agreement with Canada has been negotiated but has not been signed pending the conclusion of engineering and licensing agreements between the Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and the Rumanian Government.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Carter for the second reading of Bill C-49, to amend the Canada Pension Plan.

Hon. George I. Smith: Honourable senators, I should like to begin by offering my warm congratulations to Senator Carter for his very careful, very complete and very clear explanation of the main contents of this bill last evening.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Undoubtedly he has made my task lighter. I should like to say also that, though I have a number of points to make pointing out some problems which are involved in this legislation, I support the bill, as I suppose all other senators do. I believe in very substantially improving the status of women with respect to many things, and particularly with respect to those material things of life with which this bill deals.

I think they have many a legitimate complaint. I can remember first coming to this conclusion in reading, in my days at law school, a decision of a judge in the common law courts of England, who said something like this: "In marriage, man and woman are one; and the man is the one." Well, though that was a very satisfactory point of view for us males over the years, I think even we, in our most selfish moments, have come to agree that it is completely unfair and completely unsatisfactory in the light of what we believe today. Nevertheless, though, I may point out some problems in doing the things we would like to do in this bill.

I want to make it crystal clear at the beginning of my remarks that I do not make these comments from the point of view of being against the provisions designed to help the female part of our population. I—well, perhaps I had better leave it at that, before I go too far.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Smith (Colchester): There are, however, as I said, some points to make about it all. Like all good things, this endeavour is bound to be accompanied by problems. I draw attention to them, not for the purpose of saying that we should be against the provisions of the bill but only to make sure that we have the problems in mind, and that those—and I suppose we are some of those—who have the responsibility for dealing with the problems of the country, keep them in mind as matters which have to be faced.

There is one question which is completely fundamental. That is, what is the future of the Canada Pension Plan and its funding? How is it to be funded? How many beneficial changes—beneficial in terms of benefits to individuals—can we make without causing too much of a burden on future generations? How often and how clearly do we recognize that, when we make these changes, someone, some day, has to pay for them.

Senator Croll: Yes.

Senator Smith (Colchester): If we do not recognize that we are certainly casting a heavy burden upon the generations who come after us. Are we going to do this, or are we going to face the problem—I am not sure to which question Senator Croll answered yes. Perhaps we will find out in a minute. He may be in favour of postponing payment.

Senator Flynn: No doubt.

Senator Croll: No doubt.

Senator Flynn: The proof has been made.

Senator Smith (Colchester): In any event, we have to face up to it and decide if we are going to help to pay these additional costs ourselves in our immediate future, or whether we are going to shrug our shoulders, as it is possible for us to do, and say that we will let the future pay. Or, in the words of a great sovereign of a great state of ancient days, "after me, the deluge."

● (2020)

Another fundamental question—and a very general one—is the question of what becomes of the contributions that are made. As we all know, from the beginning of the plan the accumulated contributions from year to year have formed a relatively low-cost source of borrowings for provincial governments, and not a source of capital for private investment, as is the case in other pension plans, such as those of insurance companies.

I do not pretend to know a great lot about a great many things, but I do know something about this. I had the responsibility for the financing of a province when these arrangements were entered into in the first place. I believed then—and I have had no cause to change my mind since—that the present arrangement was made, at least in part, as an inducement to bring about provincial concurrence in the establishment of the plan. At the time, I must say, I rather thought that that might be the proper course. Being pressed for sources from which to obtain funds for good public purposes, as all people were in those circumstances, I was certainly not displeased to find this source so readily at hand. I think it may well have been a justified policy at the time. However, I wonder if we have not now reached the stage where we should begin to consider whether this is the proper course for the future.

Inevitably, it seems to me, such a policy has a number of effects, not all of which are to be applauded. One of the obvious effects, of course, is that it readily increases the ease with which provincial governments may borrow. While that is a good thing in some instances, it may not be good for the economy of the country or to the benefit of the plan over the long term. Clearly, such a policy makes it easier for provinces to borrow. It provides a source of funds from which the provinces may borrow at a lesser cost than they would pay were they to go to the open market for such borrowings. It may be that in the economic circumstances in which we now find ourselves in this country this no longer is a course of action which should be encouraged. It seems to me that we have to face this question as one of the fundamental decisions, along with the question of who is to pay and when, which I mentioned a little earlier.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Could the honourable senator give us the current rate paid by the provinces in respect of borrowing from this fund?

Senator Smith (Colchester): I am sorry, I do not have that information. It is information with which I should have armed myself. I can only say that it is a substantially lesser cost per year than they would pay on the open market. I can recall at one stage it was very nearly 1 per cent less. I think it is related, primarily, to the cost of long-term borrowings by the federal government. The level of comparison would differ from province to province. For instance, the rate which one province has to pay is bound to be greater than another's. Ontario can borrow nearer to the federal rate than can Nova Scotia. But when you come to talk in hundreds of millions of dollars of borrowing this becomes a substantial sum, particularly when you think of it in terms of 20 years' interest that you pay. I thank the honourable senator for asking me that question, and for my own satisfaction if nothing else I shall certainly inform myself on the matter.

Let me turn now to some of the specific provisions of the bill. The first one Senator Carter mentioned was certainly one of the most important in my opinion. Other senators may have a different view on that, of course. It is the matter of the division of Canada pension entitlements upon the breakup of a marriage by way of divorce. I understand that this was discussed at a federal-provincial conference with all of the provinces and that all of the provinces agreed on the policy. That is not necessarily a guarantee that the policy is the right one, but certainly the endorsement of all of the provinces of Canada is a helpful endorsement to have and one to which a great deal of attention must be paid, and one which I certainly do not propose to criticize. I think it was a good decision. I think it is a good provision in the bill.

I do want, however, to draw attention to what, from a positive point of view, I should like to think of as improvements which could be made rather than as objections or difficulties that arise from it.

As I understand it, and as I understand Senator Carter's explanation, it is confined to the legal termination of legal marriages. One of the unfortunate features of life in Canada, and I suppose in most of the world today, is that the desirability of forming attachments between men and women only on the basis of legal marriage is not as great as once it was; and the desirability of maintaining those legal attachments once formed is not as great as once it was.

So it occurs to one to wonder, after a moment's consideration, just what should happen in cases of desertion of one spouse by another. Is the wronged spouse in that kind of termination of marriage less deserving of help than in a legal termination? Incidentally, I understand that these days that class of case occupies a great deal of the time of the family courts.

What of separation without divorce? What about those who believe—and there are many of them—that divorce is not a morally permissible thing for them to seek, but who do find that life with the spouse to whom they are legally attached is no longer something they can bear? So they separate in all good faith, in all good sense. As I understand this provision they will not receive any assistance from this bill.

What of the breakdown of another type of relationship which is becoming more and more prevalent, that of the so-called common law relationship? I do not particularly defend that kind of relationship, but we have to recognize as a fact of life that it is becoming more and more common.

Senator Deschatelets: The army has recognized it.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Yes, indeed the army has recognized it and it has been recognized in some other aspects of life as well. There are many reasons for this increase, I think, and very few of them relate to what one would call immorality. Most of them, I believe—and I have encountered a great many of them—come about, not as a result of any immorality but rather as the result of the pressure of circumstances. Perhaps, for instance, it comes about between people whose command of this world's goods does not allow them to seek a divorce. One can quite properly say, I think, that in substantial measure the number of such relationships comes about because of the lack of this world's goods.

● (2030)

Senator Greene: Perhaps we could cut the legal fees.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I beg your pardon? I would be glad to take a question if that is what is meant.

Senator Greene: Perhaps we could cut the legal fees.

Senator Smith (Colchester): That is a quite proper and reasonable suggestion, but I am not sure how we would go about doing that. It may come about simply because divorce is impossible. Perhaps one of the partners in a marriage disappears, goes away or deserts his spouse, and so over the years a common law relationship is formed. It may be just as much born of love and just as moral as any legal marriage, although, again, I do not advocate it in place of marriage. I only try to explain what I see going on around me.

It seems to me that these problems point up the fact that divorce is not always an available remedy, especially to those who are not well endowed with this world's goods. Perhaps, no matter how well endowed you are, it is not a possibility for moral reasons, or simply because the circumstances do not allow the successful conduct of a divorce proceeding.

I would like now to turn to what I regard as the other main provision of the bill, and that is the so-called drop-out provision. While again this is something I support, it certainly has some problems surrounding it. One of these problems is that it is clearly a departure from the original concept of the plan and the financing of the plan. In effect, we will be imputing contributions to the fund when none is made. Thus, of course, we will be increasing, and perhaps very substantially—I am not sure about that, and I think nobody else is—but perhaps we will be increasing substantially the social assistance aspect of the plan. Again we must face the question of who pays.

Of course, we must recognize too that it does not help the woman who has never been in the labour force, or the woman who has been in the labour force only a relatively few years. Is such a woman less deserving simply because she has performed for most of her adult life the duties of a housewife and kept a home together? And what about the mother who stays home to care for the children or for disabled parents, or for that matter simply to make a home?

These are problems of improvement that we will have to face, but they are also problems that bring with them the ever-present question of costs. If I say "costs" over and over again, I do so intentionally, because it is so easy to forget when we are about to do a good work that it has to be paid for, and that it is the citizens of Canada who are going to have to pay with their taxes. So I ask again: How will all this affect the funding of the plan? I understand that a board or committee is now looking into the general question of the funding of the plan. We do not know what they will have to say. We do not know what progress they have made, but certainly it would be helpful if we could find out what progress they have made and whether they have formed any views.

I understand that the Province of Quebec made a study of this point with respect to the Quebec Pension Plan, and they came to the conclusion that the drop-out provisions with regard to the Quebec plan will increase payments only to the extent of something like 4 per cent for the next 50 years. Of course, even 4 per cent is substantial. I am not at all sure what assumptions were made by those who reached that conclusion about the Quebec plan. What assumption did they make about the behaviour of women? What assumption did they make about inflation? What other assumptions, if any, did they make?

In any event, it seems to me that, while we should go ahead and implement this provision, we should now be seriously addressing ourselves to the question of what the cost is likely to be and how we are going to pay.

It is necessary, in contemplating this plan, and if we are to recognize the problem in the "drop-out," to realize that it has different effects for women in different circumstances. To take one example, let us suppose that one woman, who decides to bring up three children, can afford to take the full number of years allowed under the proposal. I believe that is something in the order of 15 years; I am not certain about that, but it is something in that order. Suppose she takes all those years because she can afford to stay out of the labour force, and also suppose her neighbour is not financially able to do that. Her neighbour has the same number of children, but cannot afford to stay home that long to look after them, so suppose she has to go to work in, say, three to five years. Obviously, the one who can stay at home for the greatest number of years will receive the greatest amount of subsidy. That is something to which we should address ourselves. Clearly, while we want to help people, we do not want to help those who are well off more than we want to help those who are not so well off. I repeat that this is something which has to be looked at.

So much for the particular points that I wanted to make with regard to those two provisions. Senator Carter quite correctly made the observation that the Province of Ontario had not approved of the so-called drop-out amendments to the Canada Pension Plan, and he drew attention to the fact—if he did not, perhaps I acquired this view from somewhere else—that Ontario, by virtue of its population being more than 40 per cent of the population of the provinces in the Canada Pension Plan, has the power of veto. That is to say, if Ontario does not agree with this particular change, then it cannot become effective. Senator Carter deplored the fact, as I recall his remarks, and I suppose all of us would.

● (2040)

We have to remember, however, that Ontario has demonstrated over the years that it has a very sound finance department, in the sense that it is able to assess what things cost. One may agree or disagree with the policies which evolve from the views of that department, but one would have to recognize that it is one of the very few organizations in Canada that has the expertise and the knowledge to deal on equal terms with the officials of the Department of Finance of the Government of Canada. The fact that Ontario has so far found it undesirable to concur in this provision must give us pause. They must have found reasons which have made them hesitate. I do not know what those reasons are, but I rather suspect they have to do with the financial aspects of the plan, such as how it is going to be paid for and what the actuarial situation will be if this provision is implemented. While I do not suggest for a moment that we should delay passage of this bill simply because Ontario may or may not, as time goes on, agree with it, this fact should certainly make us realize that it carries with it some very serious financial implications which we have to keep in mind.

There are other amendments, such as the change to retroactive payments of 12 months if you are a little slow in applying, or the retroactive provisions if you do not apply and you leave this world and your estate is left to make an application, or the question of equal payments to each child in large families. We have to remember that all these matters cost money too, but again, I support them. When I support them, however, I have to envisage along with their benefits the question of payment.

I come now to the one provision the merits of which I have some real doubts about. This is the somewhat unusual provision in clause 25 providing payment to members of the Advisory Committee for days spent on committee business in addition to meetings which they attend. I understand—and I understood it long before this particular question arose—that this is a very good committee which does a great deal of helpful work, but it seems rather strange to me for members of a committee, or an organization of any kind in the public service, to be paid not only a per diem allowance for attendance at meetings but also for other time spent in attending to matters relating to committee business. It seems to me that this opens the door to a very unusual and very generous principle. No doubt, it will not be abused in any way by these fine people, but it is not a good one to introduce into affairs of government. It seems to me that no matter how much work a committee does—and I know that these people do a lot of good work—arrangements can be made for that work to be fully paid for by a per diem allowance for attendance at meetings. The agenda of meetings can be arranged so that the work is done at the meetings rather than somewhere else. While I draw attention to this provision as being one which should not commend itself to us—at least, it does not commend itself to me—it is not any way going to affect my support of the bill.

Those, honourable senators, are all the comments I wish to make about this bill, and I close by emphasizing once more that I am for its provisions. I believe it is a step in the right direction, but I also believe it must be accompanied by a full realization of the costs it is likely to entail, and a full determination to pay for those costs, or to arrange for their payment, in a prudent, proper and sensible way.

With regard to the question of whether this bill should go to a committee, I leave that entirely without comment. I am perfectly happy to accept the judgment of the sponsor of the bill, or, of course, of the Senate as a whole. I make no suggestion myself one way or the other in that regard.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I would like to say just a few words on this bill before second reading.

First of all, I too would like to congratulate Senator Carter on the very able manner in which he explained this measure. It struck me as I listened to him—and I have listened to him many a time explain legislation so clearly—how very unfortunate it is that his time for retiring is approaching, and that this might be the last bill that he will have the opportunity of sponsoring in this chamber.

The Canada Pension Plan is a good act—there is no question about that—and I think these amendments will further improve it. I see no objection whatever to them.

Apart from the amendments contained in the bill, however, I think what is more important still is that a principle has been recognized. This was explained last evening by Senator Carter, when he said:

Honourable senators will have noted that although the language of the bill refers to spouses and work in the home, these two amendments are really a further recognition of the principle of the equality of the sexes and a recognition also of women's rights and the contribution they make to society and to the country as a whole through their work in the home and the raising of children.

Personally, I believe that recognition is even more important than the amendment; but no matter how good a bill is it can always be further improved and I think that while this is a partial recognition of the rights of women, it does not go far enough. To bring it to its logical conclusion there should be a further amendment which would allow those who work in the home to come under the provisions of the Canada Pension Plan. This would do two things. It would give them more security for their senior years, but it would also give them the status of first-class citizens. It would recognize them as persons. We must realize, honourable senators, that there are about 4½ million women in Canada who come under the classification of homemakers. That is one-fifth of the population. Should they not be recognized as first-class citizens?

People say that this is difficult to do. Although I do not disagree with what Senator Smith said about the costs, I am one of those who believe that if we are going to do something then we should get on with it, and somehow the money will be found. I have noticed that when governments want to do something, the money is always available. On the other hand, if they do not want to do it they complain that the cost is exorbitant, that taxes are bound to go up, and that it is just impossible.

We are told that it would be difficult to bring these women under the provisions of the Canada Pension Plan because they are not wage earners, they are not earning salaries, and they are not self-employed—at least, they are not self-employed for gain—but cannot all these problems be overcome? I have read, as I suppose many of you have, the debates in the other place and the proceedings of the committee which studied this bill. This point was brought up, and one thing that struck me was that there was a very negative attitude towards the whole thing, there was very negative thinking. They seemed too concerned with making objections; they seemed too concerned to try to prove that it could not be done rather than to show that it could be done if the will to do it was there.

● (2050)

If I recall correctly, there were five or six objections made. Most were objections about the method, not to the principle; they were objections to how the contributions would be figured out, and so on. One valid objection was how we would co-ordinate the compulsory features of the present plan with the voluntary feature which there would have to be if these women were brought into the plan. Personally, I do not know how it could be done. However, I do know that if we have the will to do it a solution could be found.

I must tell you that I thought one of the objections was a very sad one. It was sad because it was seriously argued that this could not be done because a lot of these women would not be able to afford to pay the premiums. I say that if in this day and age we are living in a country where these women cannot afford to pay the premiums, it is time we did something about it. Perhaps others might say that we are coming to the guaranteed annual income, which to my mind is already too long delayed. If we are to get it in bits and pieces, then let us get it in bits and pieces, but half a loaf, as the saying is, is better than no bread.

Difficulties? Yes, but they must not stand in the way of giving justice to four and a half million people. They must not stand in the way of recognizing that these people are first-class citizens who are entitled to all the rights of first-class citizens. They are entitled to come under the provisions of the Canada Pension Plan. Personally, I see no great objection that could be made about the mechanism. In fact, I think it could be done quite simply.

Honourable senators, I wanted to make my views known. I agree with everything Senator Carter said. I agree with Senator Smith (Colchester) that it will not be necessary to send this bill to committee, and I think we could pass it without further debate.

I should like to add this. Some of you might be interested in learning more about the proposal that women who work in the home should be able to participate in the Canada Pension Plan. Let me tell you this. If you wish to find out more about it, read the speech made in the House of Commons on July 8 by the honourable member for Kingston and the Islands, Flora MacDonald, a kinswoman of my own.

Senator Perrault: No conflict of interest there.

Senator Macdonald: She put it in far better words than I could. To my mind, she proved beyond any reasonable doubt that it could be done, and she demolished the arguments of those who spoke against it.

Senator Perrault: A true Macdonald.

Senator Macdonald: I support the amendments in the bill, and I hope it will not be too long before further amendments are proposed whereby the homemakers, those women who work in the home, will also be able to participate in the Canada Pension Plan.

Hon. Chesley W. Carter: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Carter speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate.

Senator Flynn: Before Senator Carter speaks, may I say that I was very interested in the two speeches we heard tonight. However, I cannot imagine that we should not have this bill sent to committee. I certainly want an answer to the question posed by Senator Macdonald. I have some ideas on how it could be done and I should like to try them out on the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who in any event will come and smile in the committee. I hope Senator Carter will move that the bill be referred to committee. There are too many questions.

Senator Carter: Honourable senators, I should like to thank Senators Smith (Colchester) and Macdonald for their kind references to myself, and also for their fine contributions to the debate on this bill.

Senator Smith asked about funding, which I think is a matter of legitimate and valid concern to all of us as we look into the future, although we can only see a short distance ahead. The Canada Pension Plan is somewhere in between a private plan which is fully funded and most public plans, which are funded on a pay-as-you-go basis, where each generation of contributors pays for the benefits of each generation of beneficiaries.

The present rate of contribution works out to around 3.6 per cent. If this plan were to be fully funded, the rate would increase immediately to 7.4 per cent. At that rate, projecting to the year 2025 the fund would be up to $1.5 trillion, which would be a problem in itself; it would present management problems.

Senator Smith asked what happens to the contributions, where does the money go. A good deal of the fund, of course, goes out in the form of provincial loans, the yield on which is now around 8.83 per cent.

As Senators Smith and Macdonald pointed out, this bill is far from perfect but it is a step forward, even if a modest one.

Senator Smith referred to some problems. He asked what happens in cases of deserted spouses, separation without divorce, and common law marriages. These are not covered under the bill because of the administrative difficulty of knowing when a marriage begins and when a marriage ends.

Senator Flynn: That is well put.

Senator Carter: For that reason claims under the fund are practically limited to legal marriages.

Senator Smith also made reference to the drop-out provision. He referred to it as a departure from the original concept. It is not a very great departure from the original concept because in its original concept the Canada Pension Plan was not based strictly on insurance principles; it was based more on social insurance principles. For that reason, during the first ten years of maturity contributors who paid into the fund reaped a much greater benefit in terms of return on their contributions than those following after the plan came to maturity.

● (2100)

With respect to the Ontario reservation in connection with the "drop-out," Ontario objected mainly with respect to the increased cross-subsidization and equity considerations. However, there again the answer is that the Canada Pension Plan is not based on strictly insurance principles. We must also keep in mind that this is a national plan and, as such, it can only accommodate itself to national issues and national averages.

Senator Macdonald referred to the recognition of rights of women, equality of the sexes and, particularly, the recognition given to women who work in the home. He suggested that this legislation might have gone further and made provision for all spouses who work in the home. The government is not averse to this principle. It was considered and even recommended, I believe, by the Advisory Council on the Status of Women, but was rejected by the Advisory Council to the Canada Pension Plan mainly because of the difficulties involved, as Senator Macdonald mentioned. There were also some reservations as to the benefits. One way of implementing this would be for the wage earner in the family to make his or her contributions, then to have those contributions and earnings divided between the wife and husband so that each would have half. However, that could have as many disadvantages as advantages, because when the earnings are divided in two, the plan itself being based on earnings, the benefits to each could be very low except for one or two exceptions in which the benefits could be higher.

We must also bear in mind that provisions of this nature must also always have the consent of the provinces, which is not always easy to obtain. However, I believe that Senator Macdonald should be encouraged by the fact that the last time the Canada Pension Plan was before the Senate chamber he raised a point which was taken very seriously and resulted in an amendment in this bill to make retroactive payments to those who apply later than necessary for their benefits. I am sure that his remarks this evening will be taken equally seriously, and perhaps the next time this legislation is before the Senate there will have been some method worked out and included in it to take care of the concern which he has expressed.

With respect to the Advisory Council and the per diem allowance, I can only repeat what I said last evening, that under the present legislation the members of the council can be paid only for formal meetings. There are occasions on which they must carry on a great deal of work outside those meetings, in which case they pay the expenses out of their own pockets. The purpose of this amendment would be to enable them to be reimbursed for their expenses when they have to meet for further discharge of their duties. I suppose everything can be open to abuse, but I think we can take it for granted that the type of people forming the membership of this council will not abuse this privilege.

As far as referring the bill to committee is concerned, I will be quite happy to make the necessary motion if the bill receives second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Carter moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL UNITY

REGIONAL ASPIRATIONS—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the inquiry of Senator Perrault, calling the attention of the Senate to the question of meeting more effectively the economic and cultural aspirations of the various regions of Canada.

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Fournier: Honourable senators, before dealing with the subject matter of this debate, namely, how to respond more efficiently to the economic and cultural aspirations of the various regions of Canada, I must tell you frankly that just like several other colleagues of mine, I also had certain qualms as to whether it was timely for me to enter into this debate on the issue of national unity, fearing that I might do more harm than good. But since then, I have changed my mind. After having listened to all the excellent speeches delivered by the honourable senators who already participated in the debate and who all without exception deserve our congratulations, without forgetting the speaker who preceded me last evening, Senator Greene, and above all after having witnessed the skillful manner in which our leader has launched and developed this inquiry from the beginning, I am now convinced that we owe him our respects for having opened this debate by giving us all a chance to participate.

A writer once said that whoever wishes to be listened to, must speak about things he knows well. I do not have the degree of expertise in constitutional matters some of my distinguished colleagues have, however, I happen to belong to an important French-speaking minority group in Canada, namely, the Acadians. I think I know well the way people think in my area. I will try to let you know the opinion of the people back home regarding this debate on the future of Canada.

The issue of national unity may seem to us as a rather delicate subject in certain aspects, but I think that the time has come, as Canadian adults, that we look at one another frankly and raise this issue without constraints, not only to seek out who is guilty, but above all to try and find some solutions.

The history of our country has been so badly taught, as several senators who spoke before me pointed out in their remarks, that there is nothing surprising if views do often conflict and are sometimes even wrong when it comes to the history of Confederation.

There is no doubt that the period which preceded the signing of the Confederation Act in 1867 was a hard time and required lengthy efforts of persuasion to unite the two peoples of Upper and Lower Canada as well as those of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. It is even said that the joining of Lower Canada and these two small eastern provinces would have been very difficult to achieve without the creation of a second House of Parliament, which was to be called the Senate and whose attributes or special mandate would be to represent the regions in order to ensure the protection of the small provinces, the defence of the minorities and, in addition, of course, to study the bills.

Consequently, if it is a duty for any Canadian to work in favour of national unity, it is even more so our prerogative as senators and members of an institution historically created for the purpose of protecting minorities and maintaining harmony between the different regions of our country.

I sometimes ask myself if in the past we took our role as seriously as we should have. Have we always denounced the injustices wherever they took place, mostly towards minorities, and did we recommend the redress that was called for?

I know the Senate has produced very important studies, such as the one on the Canadian Constitution, the study on poverty in Canada as well as on other subjects and many aspects of the Canadian way of life.

I would hope that after this debate on Canadian unity, we will draw some conclusions on the issue which concerns us all and which is so vital for the future of this country. I am one of those who have much optimism for the future of Confederation and who realize that although time may be running short it is not too late to take the necessary steps to ensure our survival.

If we must change or amend the Constitution, as some would believe, we must take action now. It seems evident that our federal system is faring increasingly worse when we see that several provinces besides Quebec speak of separatism.

Some feel that unless we amend the Constitution in the not too distant future, Canada will become a very difficult country to govern. Moreover, after 110 years of federalism or any other system, it should not be surprising that some changes are needed. Certainly, if federal and provincial authorities would get down to work seriously they would certainly find satisfying solutions and arrangements.

It is no longer time to ask with some irony: "What does Quebec want?" or "What does Alberta want?" With the election of a new government in Quebec, we know what they want, because they said openly it is independence through separation. I am sure that is not what Quebecers want, not for the moment at least. But with a government which seeks secession the situation is now very serious.

• (2110)

[English]

If the people in the other provincial governments really wish to keep Quebec in Confederation, now is the time, as never before, to act. It is necessary for the other provinces to demonstrate to Quebecers and Francophones outside Quebec that they can move almost anywhere in Canada without losing their language and culture. It is the duty of the majority of the provinces to join with the federal government in implementing the Official Languages Act in every part of Canada where there are enough French-speaking people to warrant bilingual services. The Official Languages Act must exist not only in principle but also in actual fact.

This reminds me of an incident that I witnessed, some 12 years ago in Saint John, New Brunswick. A friend of mine, who was an engineer employed by the Industrial Development Bank, accepted a transfer from Quebec to Saint John. It was a promotion for him, and he was encouraged to make the move because he had heard that New Brunswick was a bilingual province, with 40 per cent of the people being French-speaking. He felt that his two children would have the opportunity to be educated in both languages. Unfortunately, however, he was unable to find a single classroom, let alone a school, where his children could study in both languages. There was not even one such class in the whole of Saint John, which is the metropolitan city of New Brunswick. That was before we agreed to put the two official languages into effect in my province.

[Translation]

In other words, what the Canadian of French language and culture has always wanted to defend is his dignity as a Canadian citizen belonging to one of the two founding peoples whose mission it was to settle and build together a great country in Canada from sea to sea, in mutual respect for their linguistic and cultural rights.

Unfortunately, it has not always been so. There have been many accidents along the way which have often threatened Canadian unity.

We must admit, for instance, that the French Canadians, who have been among the first to open up and settle the Prairies and the Northwest Territories, were at a certain time considered more or less as undesirable in this part of the country, as evidenced by the Riel affair in 1885, the 1890 legislation in Manitoba, and the legislation passed in the territories one year later which banned French as a recognized language in the legislature and the courts. All this practically forced the French Canadians to withdraw to themselves and relinquish any desire to develop in this territory.

If we can now more or less forget these past incidents, it is not as easy to put aside and to forget the inequities that still exist, like the issue of a French school in the Windsor area, and the incident of the airline pilots in Quebec, to mention only two cases. How can there not be any reaction to situations as stupid as those?

[English]

I will not try to relate what has happened in Ontario in the past with regard to the language issue. On the contrary, we must recognize the progress made in the last few years and stimulate the local government to continue its efforts to finally give full justice to its minority.

I am convinced that if the Ontario majority would give its French-speaking minority the same privileges that the Quebec majority has given to its English minority, most of the problems would disappear, and Quebec would think seriously before going independent.

[Translation]

No one can refuse Quebec the right to impose French as a working language. If Quebec had decided 15 years ago to make French its working language, we would not be in our present situation. Everyone would have learned French voluntarily, including the immigrants, the Anglophones and all those who wanted to settle in Quebec and learn French, since the working language would have been French.

It is now essential that Quebec, while taking the necessary action to protect its culture and its language, continue to give its minority the linguistic and cultural rights that it has always enjoyed. It is exactly what the French-speaking groups outside Quebec are asking for themselves of the English-speaking majority; that is, respect for their linguistic and cultural rights. In other words they simply want fair play. It is as simple as that.

If we truly want to respect the concept, if not the pact of Confederation, it is essential that we give both official languages the possibility of developing freely while making every effort to protect and to preserve the rights of all minorities.

The last policy document on the matter of official languages in Canada tabled in the other place by the Secretary of State, the Honourable John Roberts, seems absolutely to the point and could be used as a model by all provincial jurisdictions.

The document outlines the true basic principles under which both official languages should be made available to all, without coercion, but rather according to the individual's free choice, especially in the field of education.

This brings me to my own province, New Brunswick. I am proud to state that New Brunswick was the first and is still the only province outside Quebec to officialize our two national languages. This was in 1969 under the Robichaud administration, whose former premier we are happy to have among us. I am sorry he is not here this evening.

Significant progress has been made in the area of education in New Brunswick over these last ten or twelve years. First, a centralization of education financing in the province opened the equal opportunity project offered to all, French-speaking and English-speaking alike, in have-not areas as well as in have areas, the same school and education services. This gave rise to the building of a number of elementary, secondary and technical schools.

At the university level, the University of Moncton was established, the first French university in the Maritimes, although there had been a number of English universities.

Without the English-speaking majority losing anything—quite the opposite, they themselves benefited from the new financing structures—the French-speaking minority finally and for the first time in a century received the same educational opportunities as their English-speaking fellow citizens.

This whole change, which occurred in the sixties, did not result in any disruption and did not jeopardize unity between both language groups in our province. Instead, I believe it has rather brought people together and they learned to know and understand one another better.

If there still are economic disparities between the various regions of my province, it is because catching up takes more time in this area. It can be said, however, that there are some indications which enable us to believe and hope that the poorest areas, the Acadian region, have regained a new lease of life which is promising for the future.

I simply have to mention the Assomption Company, the Fédération des caisses populaires, the Assurance des caisses, the Union des coopératives acadiennes, in the cooperative sector of the economy, in addition to all our small independent businessmen, merchants and dealers, to show that within a few years, the French-speaking people of New Brunswick will also have their place in the economy of the province.

As far as culture is concerned, it can be asserted that Acadians have a separate culture, the first roots of which go back to several hundreds of years. It is surprising that this small shrub of the Acadian culture, subjected to all kinds of miseries and forever overwhelmed by a North American English-speaking community, has not long since been swallowed up. On the contrary, one can see that its roots have stood fast, and that it is beginning to produce some excellent fruit. Many of our talents in literature, music and singing are already well known, not only in our province and in Quebec, but throughout America and Europe, where many won fame and where some of our choirs received international recognition. I shall not name any of these wonderful artists of our region, lest I should forget one of them. What is most encouraging is that we can see a whole group of young people who are training themselves and who show promise of a rewarding future.

● (2120)

[English]

For all of these reasons, I believe that we can overcome the present difficulties. We must remember that there are two official languages in Canada and that both French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians have the right to express themselves in their own mother tongue throughout our country. I am aware, as you are, that this is possible here in Ottawa and in other regions of Canada.

[Translation]

So we should convince our French-speaking fellow citizens who are in the minority that there is room for them in Canada. We should convince our English-speaking fellow citizens who are in the majority that they should change their attitude. The fact that the majority anglicized the minority, as was unfortunately the case in several places—and this we experienced in Acadia—is not the best Canadian achievement. This is the situation which led to the present crisis.

We will have to begin to try to reconcile the French Canadians with the English Canadians. We will have to rediscover the meaning of the word democracy. Therefore I invite you to seek with me this democratic spirit which endeavours to preserve the rights of the minorities without imposing the privileges of the majority.

[English]

On motion of Senator Inman, debate adjourned.

CLERESTORY OF THE SENATE CHAMBER

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE
CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, June 23, the debate on the motion of Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) for the adoption of the report of the Special Senate Committee on the Clerestory of the Senate Chamber.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I thought perhaps I should say a few words this evening on the motion of Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) for the adoption of the report of the Special Senate Committee on the Clerestory of the Senate Chamber. Let me admit, at the outset, that until I heard Senator Connolly speak on the subject, I had no interest in the windows of this chamber. After listening to his speech in moving the adoption of the report, I took the time to read the report very carefully and, as well, the proceedings of the committee. I was impressed by what I read.

I expect that anyone seeing the Senate chamber for the first time must be greatly impressed. It is a beautiful chamber—so well proportioned, with lovely woodwork and fine stonework, and that great ceiling which gives an air of splendour to the whole place. Of course, I suppose many of us have become accustomed to it and we take it for granted. Indeed, we never take notice of all its splendour until our attention is drawn to it by some event or other. Certainly, that was the case with me.

My attention was drawn to the beauty of this chamber when Senator Connolly proposed the appointment of a special committee to consider the matter of replacing the present windows with stained glass. After listening to his speech in moving the adoption of the report of that special committee, I re-entered the chamber and examined it in detail. Once again, I was impressed, and I thought how fortunate we are to have such a setting in which to hold our deliberations. It struck me, too, that anything we can do to further enhance the beauty of this chamber certainly deserves our favourable consideration.

I believe that replacing the present windows with stained glass would enhance the beauty of this place. The present windows are all rights, I suppose. They serve a useful purpose by keeping out the rain, snow and wind, and the bright sunshine. But when you have said that, you have said everything in their favour. Certainly, they are not in keeping with the rest of the chamber. The committee certainly noticed this, but its recommendation of stained glass replacements is put on a higher plain. Let me quote paragraphs 11 and 12 of the report:

11. The Senate is an integral part of Parliament. It is the only space where Parliament's three elements meet. Parliament is central to the democratic process. It is the focus of attention for most Canadian studies in political science. It is visited annually by tens of thousands of Canadians and by many foreign visitors. It is reported upon constantly in the media. Politics and politicians are the warp and woof of conversation of our people. The place where this interest is generated has become, in a sense, a shrine. If it is a place of dignity and even of majesty, it will raise the perspectives and broaden the horizons and opportunities of those who make it function. If its buildings and their components and surroundings can indicate something of the purposes, the aspirations and the achievements of the nation, the place of Parliament can be of enormous inspirational value to our people.

12. For these reasons the Committee was concerned that any theme chosen for the windows should support these objectives. It is impressed with the importance of reflecting the broad lines of national progress and national life, as the work of parliamentarians should reflect that progress and that life.

• (2130)

I certainly agree with the first four recommendations of the committee, and I think they are worth repeating:

1. At an appropriate time the coloured windows in the clerestory of the Senate Chamber should be replaced with stained glass.
2. The theme should be the ethnic origins of the Canadian people.
3. The style should conform with the other features of the Chamber and of the building.
4. The treatment of the windows should be simple and uncluttered. Suitable colour should be a feature. Red should be a predominant colour. Protection against direct sunlight must be ensured.

Then, honourable senators, the members of the committee found they could not consider the matter of stained glass windows in isolation, as it were. The wall space between the woodwork and the windows cried out for attention. It was generally agreed the present pictures depicting World War I scenes should be discarded, if possible, and with this I certainly agree, although I have always understood that such pictures were put there in the first place to improve the acoustics before the advent of microphones and loudspeakers. Certainly, I do not think they are in keeping with the general features of the Senate chamber. But if they have to be retained to improve the acoustics, then I suggest that at least half the World War I pictures be discarded and replaced by pictures of World War II. Indeed, I think one of those pictures could well be of the navy—perhaps even of the ship commanded during the war by the Deputy Leader of the Government.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Macdonald: The committee heard various suggestions as to what should replace these pictures, such as tapestries murals or stonework. Recommendations 6 and 7 deal with this matter.

6. The Senate, at a suitable time, should consider the removal of the pictures now on the walls of the chamber to an appropriate place of display in Ottawa.

7. The style, composition and treatment of a project for the replacement of these pictures should be in harmony with the stained glass and the general features of the Senate chamber.

Personally, I would hope that the suggestions contained in paragraph 46 are followed:

The Committee considers that if paintings or tapestries are not appropriate, serious consideration should be given to a solution in which stone alone be used. This means that the space below the windows and above the wood panelling would be decorative stone to match the other stone of the chamber. It is suggested that the design be based upon the sketches of Mr. John Pearson. However, instead of openings for galleries between the arches as in the Pearson design, there would be a stone facing. In the result the chamber would be brighter, and the architectural features in the stone would eliminate monotony.

There is nothing which can improve on good, fine woodwork, and good, fine stonework, such as we have in this chamber, and I believe it would be a shame to cover it with anything. I was pleased when that old canopy and the other tapestry above the Speaker's Chair were done away with. The beautiful stonework behind the Chair cannot be improved upon. We also have a good view of the fine workmanship which went into the Chair's theme.

While it does not have anything to do with the report, may I suggest that some study be made of the furnishings of the chamber, with a view to getting rid of these old-fashioned desks with their inkwells and penholders? I should also like to see the Speaker, Clerks and pages wearing more colourful gowns or uniforms. After all, there is no good reason why these should be black. I understand the gowns worn by the Speaker and by the Clerks were, and indeed are, of the type, colour and style used in the legal profession. They are barristers' gowns, or possibly some kind of cross between a barrister's gown and a Queen's Counsel's gown. I suppose this came about because Parliament was known as the highest court in the land. However, the more colourful gowns worn by the Speakers of the British Houses of Parliament for ceremonial occasions were not adopted here. So, I hope it will come about that these mournful gowns and uniforms will be discarded and more colourful ones substituted. I do not know just who would authorize it, but for a beginning I would urge our Speaker to break with the tradition of wearing a barrister's robe or gown—to throw it away, and get a more colourful one for the opening of the next session of Parliament.

Honourable senators, Senator Connolly and his committee have done a commendable service in studying this matter. Their report is worthy of study and favourable consideration, and I hope it receives it.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, in a moment I shall move the adjournment of this debate. I do so in order to see if I can summon up the courage to disagree with my learned and eloquent colleague on some of the points he has made, particularly with relation to the removal of the pictures on the walls and the discarding of those hallowed robes worn by generations of clerics followed by other generations of barristers and judges.

I now move the adjournment of this debate.

On motion of Senator Smith (Colchester), debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, July 13, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE HONOURABLE CHESLEY W. CARTER

TRIBUTES ON RETIREMENT FROM SENATE

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, Chesley William Carter—Ches to all of us—will reach the magic Senate age of retirement on July 29 of this year. He came to Canada with Newfoundland. He was first elected to the House of Commons for Newfoundland in 1949 and subsequently seven times more, once by acclamation, and he served in the House of Commons for 17 years. He was appointed to the Senate in 1966, where he has served for 11 years. Twenty-eight years of continuous service is a long time, particularly in the public service, and few of us are privileged to have that opportunity.

He has been an outstanding public servant, who has been appreciated by his fellow members in the House of Commons and in the Senate, as well as the people of his native province and Canada generally. Suddenly he will be gone from here. It is hard to visualize the Senate without him, yet that will be the case before we return in August.

It has been suggested that he invented the work ethic. He denies it, but we all claim that he embraced it, he embellished it, he encouraged it, he practised it and he improved it. In the 28 years that he has served he has attained a total credibility from his vast resources of energy and devotion. He was meticulous in his presentations to the Senate. He did thorough research and he prepared his presentation. An educationalist by training, it showed. He was foremost in addressing himself to the cause of his beloved fishermen, the veterans, the poor and the needy, the aging, the poverty-stricken and those who needed help in the Third World. He participated in many of the essential fields of activities in the Senate and it can be said that he was a senator for all seasons. Humanitarian in outlook and practice, he chose to be a Canadian and Canada chose him to be a senator, a rewarding relationship for both.

He has much that he can continue to contribute to Canada, particularly in its destiny as it wrestles for a united Canada. His experience, his energy, his good judgment should not be frittered away at this time, when our need is the greatest. I spoke to a senior senator yesterday, saying to him, "Ches will be gone." He replied, "It is a real loss." So say we all.

We wish him well, good luck, good fortune and we wish him to know and leave with the knowledge that he left an indelible impression on his peers in the Senate of Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, together with other senators, I join in supporting the sentiments expressed so eloquently by Senator Croll. All of us have witnessed in the course of our public careers, whether they be brief or long, that there are a number of men and women, of all political parties, serving at all levels of government, who are an effective adornment to our parliamentary system. Ches Carter is one of these. Both in war and in peace he has served this nation with dedication, energy and great distinction. He is living proof of the need to create the position of senator emeritus, a recommendation which I forwarded some time ago to the Right Honourable the Prime Minister. It is a concept which I believe should be considered by this government or by another government in the future.

● (1410)

Senator Flynn: Considered and decided upon.

Senator Perrault: Yes, and perhaps a decision will be made at some point. Senator Carter is living, working proof of the need to create a position whereby those who have contributed so much to Parliament can, after retirement, be invited to assist from time to time in certain capacities in the process of helping to meet the problems of Canadians.

The position of senator emeritus—a position I should like to see come into being at some point—would enable certain senators who retire early from the Senate, or those who have reached the formal retirement age of 75 but who still remain youthful in their ability, to contribute voluntarily to the parliamentary system, to be invited from time to time to provide expertise for parliamentary committees or, perhaps, to represent Parliament on certain public occasions across the country. To repeat, Senator Carter is living proof of the need to create just such a position as "senator emeritus."

Together with all honourable senators, I wish Senator Carter well as he enters his retirement years. The word "retirement", of course, can only be used in its very loosest sense in relation to Senator Carter. To contemplate any kind of meaningful retirement for Ches Carter is really supposing that the impossible will happen. Ches Carter will never really retire. He will always be actively interested in the welfare of his nation, his home province and in the work of Parliament.

Our very best wishes, as well, to his gracious wife who has played such a key role in Senator Carter's life—not only at home but here "on the Hill."

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I doubt that I can add much to what has been said by Senators Croll and Perrault. I was very impressed with Senator Croll's eulogy. I think he sees in Senator Carter an ideal that he himself has never quite been able to achieve.

Senator Croll: How right you are.

Senator Flynn: There is no doubt but that when Ches Carter leaves this place, the Senate of Canada will have lost one of its hardest workers. Ches Carter takes everything and everyone but himself seriously. He possesses an alive, inquisitive mind, a mind that has never ceased to search out the truth. Many times he found that truth and, when he did, he had the courage and self-respect to vote against his party. It may even be that he would have been more at home on this side of the house.

I have said it before—and I repeat it now—occasionally the conclusions to his speeches were too far from the introductions. However, what came in between was the fruit of concentrated effort, the type of which we need much more in Parliament.

Ches Carter's role as parliamentarian was one of service. He served his country, his province, and the interests of his constituents extremely well. The high esteem in which he is held by those who know him is exemplified by the fact that Ches Carter was never defeated in an election—a reason for me to envy him, since I was defeated twice in three attempts. He was even elected to Parliament by acclamation on one occasion—that, for me, was a dream, a recurrent dream when I was in the other place.

The great respect people have for him is demonstrated by the fact that he receives more mail than most members of the other place, and certainly more than anyone in this place.

We are losing to retirement, therefore, a man of integrity, ability and drive; a man who is a credit to his native Newfoundland, and certainly a credit to Parliament. We wish both him and Mrs. Carter a pleasant, lengthy and healthy retirement. May he find enough to do to keep him happy, but not so much as to prevent him from enjoying fully the winter of his years.

Ches, if anyone in Parliament can sit back and say with satisfaction and without fear of exaggeration that he has served his country well and merits a rest from the toils of political service, it is you. Godspeed, Ches.

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, I should like to associate myself with the remarks of the previous speakers. Senators Croll and Flynn, as well as my leader, have covered the waterfront. I would simply say to you, Ches, and to your charming wife, that I wish you all the best for the future and, as we say down east, "Long may your big jib draw."

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: Honourable senators, I have not the ability to speak about Senator Carter with the eloquence of my deskmate Senator Croll, who with me sat with Senator Carter in the House of Commons for many years and was also particularly associated with him in the post-war years in the Veterans Affairs Committee and other committees on which Senator Carter was so noted as a champion of the disadvantaged. But, having just entered the Chamber I heard the Leader of the Government make reference to the possibility that a senator on retirement might have an opportunity to take his place as a senator emeritus. Perhaps I might be permitted to say a word or two on that subject. I hope Ches and his most supportive wife Elsie will forgive me for not referring to them specifically in tributes at this moment which I didn't anticipate. But I did have the pleasure, under the inspiration of Senator Croll and Senator Cook, to be associated with and co-host at a little farewell party which most of you honourable senators joined in two weeks ago. I simply wish to say that we should do our part to address retired senators and to promote the address of senators after retirement and to promote the reference to such persons as "Senator." That is done in the United States. A president in the U.S.A. remains, in address, "Mr. President" for life. Likewise, a former governor or senator, even after retirement, is usually similarly given this honour and courtesy. In our own interests I think we should do all in our power to honour distinguished colleagues of ours who, under new rules, are subject to automatic retirement at age 75. I think we, and the public as well, should continue for their lifetime to address them as "Senator".

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I will not hold the Senate for any length of time, but I do think it would be remiss of me if I were not to say that since Ches Carter came to the Senate 11 years ago he has been an ornament to this place. Other speakers have spoken with eloquence of his integrity, of his dedication and, above all, of his great industry. This was manifested in this chamber, but I think it was particularly manifested in the work of the various committees upon which he sat. I do not think anybody ever came to a committee better prepared for the work before that committee on a given occasion than Senator Carter. His questioning was always positive, incisive and constructive.

What Senator Flynn said about the fact that Senator Carter can leave Parliament knowing that he has served Parliament and the people must be the ultimate desire of every parliamentarian, and certainly Senator Carter can claim that distinction.

I like to think, too, about his work when he went abroad on behalf of Parliament for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization or for the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association and other similar groups.

I particularly want to say, too, how much we will miss the presence, the gaiety and the grace of Mrs. Carter in the halls of Parliament, because she has been a great adjunct and a great supporter of the fine work Ches has done in Parliament both in this place and in the other place.

● (1420)

Hon. Paul Yuzyk: Honourable Senators, I should like to join with those who have spoken before me in paying tribute to our colleague, Ches Carter. In addition I should like to add a little information about him that probably has not been made known before. We are paying tribute to a very exemplary senator who has had a many-sided career, a man who has always been dedicated to the highest principles of humanity—freedom, democracy, human rights, the unity of Canada, and the brotherhood of man and of nations. I should like to pay tribute to him particularly inasmuch as I have been associated with him in some of the work that he has done even beyond this chamber, and that is in the field of human rights, and in the work that he has done for the welfare of Canada, for the good of Canada, for the unity of Canada and in the promotion not only of bilingualism but also of multiculturalism.

Senator Carter will be sorely missed by ethnic groups, and particularly by the Baltic peoples, because it is here on Parliament Hill that Baltic Evening has been established and become a tradition, and Senator Carter has been associated with that event from its foundation five years ago right up to the present day.

He has been responsible for presenting resolutions in defence of the human rights of people beyond Canada, those people who have been deprived by their governments of rights that we consider to be sacred here in Canada. It is for that reason that I say that not only will he be sorely missed in this chamber, but he will be sorely missed outside this chamber.

I should also like to have him pass on to his good wife Elsie that we will miss her too, because she has been amongst us and has worked faithfully with her husband for all these causes that are so dear to him and to us. We wish him and Elsie the very best.

Knowing Senator Carter as I do, I know that he is not going to retire from service to many of the causes that he has espoused and defended not only here in this chamber but outside as well. We look forward to being associated with him in some other forum, as has been mentioned already by those who spoke before me.

Hon. John Ewasew: Honourable senators, it is very difficult for me to put this into words since I have been in this chamber for less than five months. Not having been a parliamentarian before or a member of the Privy Council, I can tell you that it is an awe-inspiring experience to join you. After what one reads in the press over the years one is inclined to accept this place as a sort of dungeon where you take it easy and sleep all day. I find the situation to be entirely the opposite. Hard working men like Senator Carter have demonstrated to this novice the raison d'être of the Senate.

At this particular moment, honourable senators, I am not just paying tribute to him although I mention him by name. There are others of you who are equally entitled to this kind of compliment. You have impressed me with your hard work and you have shown me that the Senate is an essential part of this democratic system of ours in Canada, and it is to be hoped that it will always continue to be because of men like Senator Carter. Therefore, as humbly as I can, I declare my pride in being a member of this assembly and to having had the privilege of knowing Senator Carter, although, unfortunately, for too brief a time, may God grant him the good health and serenity that he so richly deserves.

Hon. Chesley W. Carter: Honourable senators—

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Carter: I must confess that this has really taken me completely by surprise. I thought that the very delightful party given in the Speaker's chambers a few days ago was the one event that would take care of the matter and make other tributes unnecessary. Furthermore, if I hear any more such tributes, there is a danger that I might come to believe some of them.

Senator Quart: They are all true.

Senator Carter: I do not think that these tributes are called for, really. I do not feel that I have done anything special. I have merely done what I felt was my duty as a senator, as a public servant, and nothing beyond the call of duty; and when one does one's duty in the army, or in the services, it is taken for granted and no special medals are handed out for doing it.

If any credit is due, it is not due so much to me as, first, to my parents, who brought me up in a Christian, God-fearing home, who taught me that if I did not give my best I was robbing society, that whatever talents I had were meant to be used, and used for the service of my fellow men; also to my father, who taught me that if I did not give an honest day's work for an honest day's pay, I was again robbing society.

Also, if there is any credit due, it would be to my teachers, who taught me that if anything was worth doing at all, it was worth doing well.

Beyond that, the credit goes to my wife, who has stood by me through thick and thin, who is responsible perhaps more than anyone else for getting me into politics. Originally I had no intention of becoming a politician, but I had a strong conviction that here was an opportunity of service that was required of me and that I should not turn it down.

My years in the Senate and on the Hill have in themselves brought their own rewards in the friendships and associations I have formed, and I take with me many cherished memories of both houses and of friendships formed that will endure for as long as I live.

I should like to thank Senator Croll, Senator Perrault, Senator Flynn, Senator Connolly (Ottawa West), Senator Benidickson, Senator Ewasew and Senator Yuzyk. I hope I have not left anyone out. I include those I may have overlooked—

An Hon. Senator: Senator Petten.

Senator Carter: Thank you—and Senator Petten. But he is a Newfoundlander. He is used to being left out.

Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Carter: I want to thank you all from the bottom of my heart, on behalf of both my wife and myself. Thank you again.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Copies of Reports of the Anti-Inflation Board to the Governor General in Council, pursuant to section 17(2) of the Anti-Inflation Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, reporting its reference to the Administrator of the said Act of certain proposed changes in compensation plans, as follows:

1. Perolin-Bird Archer, Limited and its employees, represented by the United Steelworkers of America, Local 7175, dated July 4, 1977.

2. Wellesley Hospital Toronto, Ontario, Nurses, dated July 4, 1977.

3. Silverwood Industries Limited and its Toronto Plant and Driver Personnel, represented by the Canadian Union of Operating Engineers, Local 101, dated July 4, 1977.

4. Executive Group of Arborg Memorial Hospital, dated July 4, 1977.

Report of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 47 of the Broadcasting Act, Chapter B-11, and sections 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Ordinances, Chapters 1 to 12 inclusive, passed by the Council of the Northwest Territories during its 1974 Third (53rd consecutive) Session and assented to June 28, 1974, pursuant to section 16(1) of the Northwest Territories Act, Chapter N-22, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Ordinances, Chapters 1 to 11 inclusive, passed by the Council of the Northwest Territories during its 1975 First (54th consecutive) Session and assented to January 21, 1975, pursuant to section 16(1) of the Northwest Territories Act, Chapter N-22, R.S.C., 1970, together with copy of Order in Council P.C. 1975-628, dated March 18, 1975.

Copies of Ordinances, Chapters 1 to 10 inclusive, passed by the Council of the Northwest Territories during its 1975 Third (56th consecutive) Session and assented to June 20, 1975, pursuant to section 16(1) of the Northwest Territories Act, Chapter N-22, R.S.C., 1970, together with copy of Order in Council P.C. 1975-2146, dated September 11, 1975.

Copies of Ordinances, Chapters 1 to 13 inclusive, passed by the Council of the Northwest Territories during its 1976 First Session and assented to February 13, 1976, pursuant to section 16(1) of the Northwest Territories Act, Chapter N-22, R.S.C., 1970, together with copy of Order in Council P.C. 1976-848, dated April 6, 1976.

Copies of Ordinances, Chapters 1 to 9 inclusive, passed by the Council of the Northwest Territories during its 1976 Second (59th consecutive) Session and assented to May 28, 1976, pursuant to section 16(1) of the Northwest Territories Act, Chapter N-22, R.S.C., 1970, together with copy of Order in Council P.C. 1976-2224, dated September 8, 1976.

● (1430)

AGRICULTURE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO PUBLISH AND DISTRIBUTE INTERIM REPORT ON ITS INQUIRY INTO THE DESIRABILITY OF LONG-TERM STABILIZATION IN THE CANADIAN BEEF INDUSTRY

Senator Argue, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1) (h), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture be authorized to publish and distribute its interim report on its inquiry into the desirability of long-term stabilization in the Canadian beef industry, as soon as it becomes available, even though the Senate may not then be sitting.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Flynn: When does the chairman expect the report to be available?

Senator Argue: We are working very hard on it and we hope it will be out in a month or so.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1) (a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications have power to sit while the Senate is sitting today, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Langlois: I should like to inform honourable senators that the committee will assemble in room 256-S momentarily.

Motion agreed to.

THE SENATE

SUMMER RECESS—QUESTION

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, in view of the fact that some senators would like to know what travel arrangements they can make at this time, is the Leader of the Government in a position to tell us whether it is the plan to adjourn this house tomorrow, as usual, or is there any remote possibility of completing the work on Friday?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I met yesterday with the leader of the other place and discussed with him the date of a possible adjournment for the summer recess, or even a short-term adjournment at this time. It is the hope of the house leader in the Commons that the workload now before that place can be dealt with by Friday. I understand, however, that today is rather critical in that a number of controversial matters may or may not come to a vote. The events of today may well determine the adjournment date. I had hoped that by this time today I would have been in a position to inform the Leader of the Opposition about progress on the other side although actually he may have a better estimate of adjournment possibilities than I do at this particular time.

There has been some difficulty with one or two measures in the other place, but I hope that by later today we will have a report from the House of Commons with respect to progress or lack of it. I foresee that if one or two bills come to us either later today or tomorrow, it would be possible to deal with the work before us by the weekend, with perhaps one or two measures being left for consideration by this chamber in the first week of August when, as honourable senators are aware, there will be a debate on the subject of the natural gas pipeline route.

Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition and I can confer later this afternoon on some of these matters.

BRITISH COLUMBIA

RAILWEST ROLLING STOCK FACILITY—QUESTION

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government a question in respect to the Railwest operation in British Columbia. I am sure the leader is aware that some hundreds of B.C. workmen are awaiting an answer as to whether that railway rolling stock facility will be able to continue in operation. Can the leader tell us whether the federal government is playing any role in trying to extend the life of that facility?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, as a result of cabinet discussions, an interdepartmental group was created to investigate the problems confronting the entity known as Railwest, located in British Columbia. There have been meetings of that group. It is my understanding that it will be the intention of the two major railways in Canada to call for tenders, perhaps within the next two weeks, for a number of ballast cars and, of course, Railwest, together with other companies in Canada, will have an opportunity to bid on this particular order if a decision is taken to request tenders.

Apart from that, there are obvious long-term problems confronting the Railwest organization. Discussions are now proceeding to determine whether any measures exist at the federal level which may assist this company to achieve long-term viability, or alternatively to assist in the conversion of the Railwest plant to a different type of economic activity which would serve to maintain the work force on a long-term basis.

The government continues to have an active concern for the plight of workers in the Squamish area who may be adversely affected by possible closure of this railway car plant.

FISHERIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Senator Petten moved the third reading of Bill C-38, to amend the Fisheries Act and to amend the Criminal Code in consequence thereof.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

NATIONAL UNITY

REGIONAL ASPIRATIONS—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the inquiry of Senator Perrault, calling the attention of the Senate to the question of meeting more effectively the economic and cultural aspirations of the various regions of Canada.

Hon. F. Elsie Inman: Honourable senators, at this time I should like to say a few words on behalf of the distaff members of this house to Senator Carter. We deeply regret, along with all senators, his departure from this chamber. His going is a very great loss to the Senate. We will always remember him and Elsie, and we wish them health and happiness in the years ahead.

I should also like to say welcome to the senators who have joined us in recent months. I know their talents and expertise will help greatly in the work of the Senate.

Honourable senators, unity is a big word in Canada today. We are talking unity; we are thinking unity; and I hope we will continue to practice unity.

I wish to speak for a few minutes about the beginnings of the unity of the Canadian provinces and the Canadian people. The subject of national unity is a particularly appropriate one for Prince Edward Island to discuss, for here is the cradle of Confederation. It was here where the unity of the provinces of Canada began.

In the Confederation Chamber of the Provincial Building in Prince Edward Island, where the maritime delegates met with their Canadian counterparts to discuss a general union of the colonies in British North America, a bronze tablet on the wall bears the following inscription:

In the hearts and minds of the delegates who assembled in this room on September 1, 1864, was born the Dominion of Canada—Providence being their guide, they build—better than they knew.

● (1440)

They did not build without difficulty, nor were the hearts and minds of the maritimers easily swayed. When the meeting was first arranged, it was to be a union of the three maritime provinces, not union with any other parts of the country. Joseph Howe of Nova Scotia fought very hard to keep out of union—or Confederation as it was afterwards known—with Upper and Lower Canada, as Quebec and Ontario were then called.

A conference later took place in Quebec to further discuss this union, but on their return from the Quebec conference the maritime delegates were greeted with angry charges that they had sold their constituents to Canada for 80 cents a head, the agreed-upon federal subsidy to the provinces.

Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island were particularly obdurate in their resistance. Initially, the Island would have nothing to do with the terms and conditions offered her, despite the possibility that she might have to pay the salary of her governor and the reality that her exports would be subject to a Canadian duty. A very expensive railway eventually forced the colony to approach the dominion government with amended terms to join Confederation. Negotiations took place toward this end. The Islanders of the day drove a hard bargain, and finally Ottawa consented to their demands and they joined the dominion on very generous terms in 1873.

Meanwhile, Sir Charles Tupper of Nova Scotia at first did not dare to submit the Quebec resolutions to his legislature for fear he would be defeated by the supporters of Joseph Howe. Even as the British Parliament passed the British North America Act, Howe and a delegation from Nova Scotia were in London to urge the rejection of Confederation. Following the passage of the act, Howe attempted to take the province out of federal Canada. Popular feelings at the time were so opposed to the union that Tupper alone among the federalists was returned to the first federal Parliament, and the provincial elections returned Howe and 35 anti-federalists out of 38 seats. Today we would call them separatists.

The broad outline and principles of federation were threshed out between Upper and Lower Canada before they were submitted to the maritime delegates at Charlottetown and, with suitable alterations, became the basis of Confederation.

In a very real sense Quebec and the French Canadians were co-founders of Canada. Willingly or unwillingly, Quebec, as the most important government in North America controlled by a French-speaking majority, plays a very substantial role in the aspiration of French Canadians in every province, and even in the United States, to maintain their language and culture. We English-speaking people must find ways to really get to know Quebec and its people. This means that the problems between the different groups would be more easily overcome. That applies in reverse also, for French-speaking and English-speaking people have much in common.

I feel strongly that part of our present problems with Quebec lie in the fact that the history of our great country has been sadly neglected, and is still being sadly neglected, in our schools and universities, and also in the fact that our official languages have not been taught—and they should now be taught—in our schools from the first grade. Had this been done earlier we would have been closer to understanding each other's cultures, traditions and customs.

In Canada we have freedom to disagree publicly with government policy and actions. This, of course, implies more responsibility on the part of the citizen to think with care and concern for the public good instead of only private interests.

Our most important task today is to endeavour to keep national unity among our provinces and peoples, to stay together in Confederation and to preserve those relationships which keep us together in order to become a great nation—a great Canada.

On motion of Senator Graham, debate adjourned.

BANKING LEGISLATION

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from Monday, July 11, the debate on the inquiry of Senator Hayden calling the attention of the Senate to the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on the document entitled: "White Paper on the Revision of Canadian Banking Legislation, August, 1976," tabled in the Senate on Tuesday, 28th June, 1977.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I am willing to yield to anyone who wishes to speak at this time. My reason for having this debate adjourned in my name was that I wanted the Senate to take cognizance of this most important report.

This report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce is in the tradition of reports of that committee on important legislation already proposed or intended. In this case it is on the "White Paper on the Revision of Canadian Banking Legislation." It is a masterful job, for which I think the chairman and the members of the committee should be heartily congratulated.

In my view, it is a pity that a report like this should be merely tabled, with a few words of explanation by the chairman, and then entirely forgotten by the members of the Senate. It is bound to be very useful to the government when it drafts legislation based on the white paper and, I am sure, based on this report, which will influence the government enormously and in a most valuable way.

I was hoping that there would be some debate. I did not intend to speak myself, because I did not participate in the work of the committee, except on a minor constitutional point when the report was being drafted. I abstained because I am a director of a trust company. You will remember the row that took place when the white paper was referred to the committee because some members of the committee were directors of banks or trust companies. Everybody feared a conflict of interest. It was useless for me, as an ex officio member, to resign; I just abstained, although others resigned.

Anyone who takes the trouble to read the report will see that the problem of conflict of interest that was envisaged at the beginning really never existed, and certainly does not show in the recommendations of the committee, although at least two members of the committee were former directors of banks. I do not see what difference being a former director of a bank or a present director of a bank makes. You can express an opinion, saying that you are a bank director or that you were a bank director.

I repeat, this report shows how useful it is to have members of a committee with some experience and some knowledge of the subject matter. Although I am very much in favour of avoiding conflict of interest, I am also in favour of not seeing it where it doesn't exist.

I hope that some other senators, whether members of the committee or not, will comment on the specific proposals made in this report. In any event, if that does not happen, at least I will have drawn the attention of the Senate to a well prepared report, which will be useful to the government, useful to the population in general, and useful to the banking and financial community as a whole. This is one area in which the Senate can and does accomplish excellent work. It is too bad that the press does not always publicize this aspect. It is easier for the Senate to do its work in this manner than it is to come into direct confrontation with the government on a specific legislative matter. If we can continue to do this we will have something to boast about.

● (1450)

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I rise only in response to some of the earlier remarks of Senator Flynn. I believe I am able to take part in this debate at this time because I also was unable to really participate in the work of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee in connection with the white paper on banking legislation because I was absent for most of the fall and winter. However, I did read all the earlier proceedings of the committee.

As Senator Flynn has said, this is a remarkable and constructive document to have on the records of Parliament. I also believe that it will be a useful document, and I hope it will be used by those in the Department of Finance who are advising the minister with respect to the new Bank Act which is to be introduced. I am sure it will have a good deal of influence upon the mind of the minister as he brings in the new legislation.

I believe it is wise for the Senate every once in a while to stop and take stock of the kind of work that has been, and continues to be, done here in the field of economic legislation such as banking, the Competition Bill and the Borrowers and Depositors Protection Bill, which have been studied by this committee during this session. The reports that have been produced are unlike reports that can be produced by any segment of industry because they are broad, and because they look upon the problem from the point of view of the whole national interest. They cannot be produced in the other House of Parliament because the expertise and the opportunity is not available there.

This is a unique type of production, and we have had similar reports in other fields. Some of the reports of committees chaired by Senator Croll in the field of social legislation are equally important from the point of view of establishing milestones of progress and development of this country in respect of its social, political, financial and business institutions.

I believe our banking institutions are the basis of our economic system, and radical changes have been proposed. This committee has so far come to grips with those problems in a realistic way. The members of this committee have cross-examined witnesses in the field of banking and allied fields in a manner which is of great credit to Parliament. It was done by lawyers and as well by those who have experience in the field of banking and institutions allied with banking. To have this kind of person, able to get at the principle of issues which can be problems not only in the public sector but in the private sector, is of advantage to the country. I make no apology for saying that I believe the greatest capacity of people in the country is that of those who are in the private sector. In the first place, there are more of them. In the second place, they are able people, the kind of people to whom Parliament should listen, and there should be a forum in Parliament in which they can present their case.

They had that opportunity before the Senate committee as it studied the white paper on banking. I commend the members of the committee for what they have done in the way of examining those briefs and, particularly, for their examination of the witnesses who presented them.

Secondly—and this is old hat to this chamber, but we have to do it if for no other reason than we wish him to keep going—we must commend the chairman for the industry and initiative he shows in this very onerous class of work. Carlyle, you know, called economics “the dismal science”. I suppose if one were to spend all of his time on economics it would be for him “the dismal science.” But not with Senator Hayden, because when he touches this type of work he illuminates it. More important for the Senate and for Parliament is his determination to examine thoroughly the proposals which touch the economic life of this country at its vital spots. So I hope—and I am sure I voice the views of all members of the committee and probably all members of this house—that he will continue to give the same kind of dedicated service to the committee, to this chamber, to Parliament and to the country as he has been able to give for so long.

I also commend Senator Hayden for another initiative, which is now one with which we have had much experience. He has assembled a staff in each of the three areas that have been studied during this session—the field of banking, the field of competition and the field touched upon by the Borrowers and Depositors Protection Bill. There are three major pieces of legislation that have come before Parliament during this session, and the manner in which Senator Hayden and his committee have been able to keep these three balls in the air, juggle them successfully and produce reports with respect to each, is a tremendous tribute to them and, indeed, the staff that the chairman had the wisdom to assemble. He has done this in a manner that is of great credit to him, but credit must also be given to the members of the staff.

Honourable senators, this is the only place in Parliament where this type of expertise is made available to all of Parliament. They do not attempt this in the other house, but perhaps some day they will learn about it. However, there is an opportunity provided here by this committee. With the expert assistance the committee members had from their chairman and the staff they were able to give incisive consideration to these far-reaching proposed pieces of legislation, which will affect the future of this country so much.

● (1500)

The members of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee have also become experts in the field of draftsmanship—at least, they are great critics of the drafting of legislation. That is the way it must be. We see legislation coming here from another place that is a good deal less than perfect, and it is our duty to correct it to the extent that we can. But very often the kind of legislation that I speak of now comes to us from the hands of the amateur, whereas that which is referred to the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee is legislation that has been produced by experts in the Department of Justice or other departments of government. It takes expertise to criticize that type of legislation. It takes expertise to assess it, to improve it where possible, and to make sure that it fits in with the legislative establishment that we have in this country.

There is very little publicity given to these reports. There is no excitement in the press. I do not think that many in the media would take the time to read these reports. However, the people who count in this country, the people whose hide is on the fence—I refer to those who make the economy of this country go—will always be indebted to Senator Hayden and the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee for the reports they have traditionally made to this house and to Parliament.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, as no other senator wishes to participate, this inquiry is considered as having been debated.

PROTECTION OF BORROWERS AND DEPOSITORS

REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE—
DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Hayden calling the attention of the Senate to the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on the subject matter of the Bill C-16, intituled: "An Act to provide for the protection of borrowers and depositors, to regulate interest on judgment debts, to repeal the Interest Act, the Pawnbrokers Act and the Small Loans Act and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof," tabled in the Senate on Thursday, 7th July, 1977.—(Honourable Senator Grosart).

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, as I said when I adjourned the debate, it is not my intention to participate myself. I adjourned the debate in the hope that Senator Flynn would have some comments to make. I should therefore like to yield to Senator Flynn.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I need not repeat what I said concerning the report of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee on the White Paper on Canadian Banking Legislation, but it is in the same vein that I wish to speak on this report. Again, we have here a very important and well prepared report.

In dealing with the previous report, I complimented the committee in general on its work. I did not allude specifically to the chairman. I think I was wise in the course I took for two reasons: first, I did not wish to contradict his claim that he is only one member of the committee. I have previously categorized that claim as the height of understatement.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: My second reason for not mentioning the chairman specifically was that no one can compliment someone better than Senator John Connolly can. I would much rather listen to Senator Connolly compliment Senator Hayden on his work, and I subscribe to every word he said about him.

Another point that came to my mind while listening to Senator Connolly is that we have to recognize the fact that other committees of the Senate also do excellent work. In speaking to the previous item on the order paper, I made reference to the fact that the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee does deal with legislation to a much greater extent than other committees of the Senate. I have not for a moment forgotten the usefulness of other committees, such as the Special Committee of the Senate on Science Policy presided over by Senator Lamontagne which, over the last five or six years, has done tremendous work; nor have I forgotten the work of the National Finance Committee in specific areas. The Senate can be proud of the work of its committees. Another is the Foreign Affairs Committee, which has been dealing with the subject of Canada-United States relations for some years now. It has already produced an excellent report in that regard, and is to produce another one soon.

At the time of my first comments I had in mind the way in which the Senate may deal with legislation. As honourable Senators are aware, there are four ways in which the Senate can deal with legislation, or proposed legislation, the first of which is by having the government's policy paper on a given subject referred to a committee of the Senate, which was the case with the White paper on Canadian Banking Legislation.

The second method is the referral to committee of the subject matter of a bill introduced and given first reading in the other place in advance of that bill's actually coming before the Senate.

The third method is to have the legislation introduced in the Senate in the first instance. This is a method which has not been widely used during the current session. I suggest that the government missed the opportunity during this session of introducing in the Senate in the first instance some pieces of legislation which we would have been able to deal with in a much better way than did the other place. Here I am thinking specifically of the Maritime Code bill which is now before the Transport and Communications Committee. That is a bill on which we could have done a much better job than did the committee of the other place.

Finally, a bill can reach the Senate in its ordinary course of passage through Parliament—that is to say, consideration of a bill after it has been passed by the other place. In respect of the latter, it is always difficult, I suggest, for a Senate dominated by a majority supporting the government to amend such bills, if such amendment would result in a confrontation with the other place. It is far easier for the Senate to amend bills when they are introduced in the Senate in the first instance. In that circumstance, neither the pride of the other place, nor that of the government itself, is wounded.

The method of referring the subject matter of a bill to committee in advance of the bill itself coming before the Senate, which is also known as the “Hayden formula,” is another means by which to avoid confrontation. That is precisely the way in which the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee dealt with the Protection of Borrowers and Depositors Bill. The result of this method was that the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee considered the proposed legislation at the same time as the committee of the other place. It heard numerous witnesses and received numerous briefs. The conclusion of the committee is contained in paragraph 23 of the Summary of Recommendations, which reads as follows:

In view of the extent of the amendments, the Bill in its present state should not be proceeded with further. It should be considered as a new Bill and the consultative process should be commenced again.

I am quite sure that the work of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee on the proposed legislation is at the root of the decision of the minister to withdraw the bill. Unless I am mistaken, the minister himself has said precisely that.

Apparently there is some confusion as to whether the minister has in fact abandoned the bill, and decided to put it back on the drafting table. All indications are that if his decision in that respect is not yet final, it will certainly be the case that the bill will be put back on the drafting table for reconsideration. Such a decision, to my mind, would be a very wise one, and I think the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee will have been instrumental in the minister's arriving at that decision.

● (1510)

I am not sure whether it is because of a reorientation of the thinking of the government, but this bill, like so many bills which have come to us in recent years, is simply trying to accomplish too much all at one time. The draftsmen or the architects or the—

Senator Grosart: The perpetrators.

Senator Flynn: That may be a little exaggerated, but the thinkers behind this legislation have been trying to solve everything at the same time, and I suggest that that is one of the major causes of the errors which have plagued the government for so many years. They have been trying to solve everything. We must be mindful of the fact that much of the legislation which exists in the provincial areas does deal quite extensively with many of the problems the federal government is trying to solve, but obviously someone at the bureaucratic level has decided he can solve everything all in one go. He says, “I am going to duplicate or cover the provincial legislation and revamp the federal legislation all in one bill.” But the attempt to accomplish too much results in practically nothing worthwhile being done.

I am quite sure this report has spelled the death of Bill C-16, and I am most pleased if it has.

Incidentally, I might just comment on one other recommendation. Recommendation 5 reads:

Your Committee has grave doubts as to the constitutional authority of the federal government to legislate with respect to certain important matters dealt with in Bill C-16 and the Bill should be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada as to jurisdiction of Parliament to legislate on the items contained in the Bill.

Of course, if the bill were to come to us as it is now proposed, the suggestion of referring it to the Supreme Court would be good, but such is not necessarily the case. In my opinion the federal government, and the federal Parliament in general, when legislation is drafted, should be careful not to enter needlessly into areas of provincial jurisdiction in matters concerning property and civil rights. Quite often, as is mentioned in this report, there are provisions in provincial legislation dealing precisely with these matters, and it becomes pointless to try to solve everything federally.

If it is felt necessary to have provincial legislation which would complement federal legislation, why can they not, generally speaking, simply invite the provinces to do that? The federal government could simply say, “We intend to legislate in such and such a way and it would be useful if you were to add, by way of complementary legislation, provisions of a certain kind.” In that way we could avoid confrontation. There is, however, a certain tendency in the bureaucratic world of Ottawa to ignore the problems of constitutional competence. This may not always be important politically, but it does accentuate such a tendency, and eventually it will create many problems. I say let the government be more respectful of the Constitution and let it try to solve these problems in consultation with the provinces by inviting the provincial governments to legislate in a complementary way, if need be.

Surely the problems we have to face in this country are bad enough without aggravating them by this systematic approach of centralization based on a sense of omnipotency, one might say, or on a desire on the part of the bureaucrats of Ottawa to solve everything, and to engulf in one piece of legislation all of the solutions to all of the problems as they see them. Most often such an approach works in a direction opposite to the one intended.

In any event, I do compliment the chairman and the committee for this report on Bill C-16, and for the success it has had in helping to have the bill withdrawn.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, as no other honourable senator wishes to participate, this inquiry is considered as having been debated.

COMPETITION POLICY

INTERIM REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE
COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONCLUDED

Hon. Salter A. Hayden rose pursuant to notice of July 7, 1977:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the interim report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on the subject matter of the Bill C-42, intituled: "An Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and to amend the Bank Act and other Acts in relation thereto or in consequence thereof," tabled in the Senate on Thursday, 7th July, 1977.

He said: Honourable senators, I am not quite sure whether I should stand and speak to this particular notice, because I would not want to derogate from the overwhelming—shall I call them accolades?—remarks which have been directed my way and the committee's way, because I have always said that I am one member of the committee. I work hard at it, but all the other members work hard too, and they are capable, intelligent, hard-working people. We have developed a good team there, and I am proud of being a member of it and of being chairman of the committee.

With respect to the subject matter of the inquiry I wish first to request that the interim report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on the subject matter of Bill C-42, to amend the Combines Investigation Act and to amend the Bank Act and other acts in relation thereto or in consequence thereof, tabled in the Senate on Thursday, July 7, 1977, be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see appendix to today's Hansard.)

Senator Hayden: Honourable senators, the first thing I want to direct your attention to is the fact that at this moment the situation in relation to Bill C-42 is about the same as if Bill C-42 were in the form of a white paper. That is so because during the course of second reading in the House of Commons there was a motion to refer the subject matter of Bill C-42 to a committee of that house. The next step was that Bill C-42 was withdrawn from the Order Paper. In my view, that immediately converted Bill C-42 into a white paper. On that basis, and on the basis of our experience, we dealt freely and thoroughly with the bill in our consideration of it.

I should indicate—although it is not necessary to say this to all members of the Senate—that this committee has a great deal of knowledge and experience in the field of combines legislation. In reading the report you will see from the history of the attempts at combines legislation over the period of the last seven or eight years that it reached its culmination in 1975 when Bill C-2 was introduced in Parliament, and your committee immediately started a study of its subject matter. We finally wrote a report on what was called Phase I of Bill C-2, dealing with amendments to the Combines Investigation Act. One particular item in the bill has persisted into the present Bill C-42, and that is the matter of regulated industries.

● (1520)

We in the committee took the position that the bill, whether or not it clearly and positively stated so, did in fact extend into the field of regulated industries. We had witnesses before us, such as the Air Travel Association and IATA—the International Air Transport Association—who were concerned that the Canadian Transport Commission which was the basic authority to deal with air transportation and air tolls and rates, was going to be subject to the overriding authority of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. We took a position, and even prepared an amendment, whereupon the minister had a number of meetings with the committee. He was very anxious to get his bill passed that year. We did not have any particular reason for refusing him as long as the points we were concerned with were dealt with. This point about regulated industries and the position of IATA was one that we were very determined about. As a matter of fact, at that time the minister said:

Phase II of the revision of the competition policy will be concerned especially with those matters which affect the structural issues of industry raised by merger, monopoly and specialization agreements. I could undertake today before you to say that this question of uncertainty which exists for the transportation industry must and could be clarified in the course of the coming months after full discussion with my colleague, the Minister of Transport, and the appropriate decision made as to whether it would be dealt with through the Canadian Transport Commission or the Combines Investigation Act . . .

Secondly, I am quite prepared to meet some of the fears expressed by members of this Committee by saying that the new area now covered, that in order to clarify the situation we will undertake to have an in-depth study and come up with a positive conclusion one way or the other on Phase II. But basically we assume that competition is expected in the air transport industry and that the industry should conduct itself accordingly.

Now at that time we took the position in relation to the air travel industry that agreements were made between Canada and other countries of the world in relation to this subject matter, and in practically all those agreements IATA was named as the agent to negotiate as between the two countries—Canada and the other country—and the tariffs had to be filed with the Canadian Transport Commission. The position we took at that time was that if there was not adequate authority in the Canadian Transport Commission to do all the things that the public interest required, then it was a simple matter to amend the National Transportation Act to provide that additional authority. If there is not sufficient authority in the National Transportation Act, it is a simple thing to amend it so as to provide that authority. You will see in a few minutes where they are in the course of doing that. The bill to presumably solve this problem is languishing in the Commons at this moment but, as I will indicate to you, I do not think it proposes any real solution.

With respect to regulated industries, as many members of the committee who are now here will recall, we made a very firm statement to the minister at that time—that was in December 1975—that we were not going to be a party to open warfare between two departments of government; that if they could not agree we were going to propose amendments, and we would stand by them. This was the understanding that was reached—that is, that the minister would negotiate with his counterpart in Transport and they would come up with something to propose by the time we got to Phase II.

Now Phase II has come and there were two proposals, neither one of which was satisfactory to your committee or to the witnesses. I shall read one of them to you, and I think you will see how it just had to be unsatisfactory. This is the proposed section 3.3(1) of the National Transportation Act, which is presently before the House of Commons, and it is expected to deal with this problem. It says:

The Governor in Council may, if he is satisfied after due consideration of the desirability of maintaining competition that an exemption as referred to in this subsection is necessary for greater efficiency or economy of transportation, by order with the approval of the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and after the Director of Investigation and Research appointed under the Combines Investigation Act has been notified of the terms of the proposed order, exempt from the application of section 32 of the Combines Investigation Act any conduct that is imposed or required by an order or regulation made by the Commission that is specifically referred to in the order made pursuant to this subsection and that was made by the Commission for the fulfilment of a direction issued to it under section 3.2 of this Act.

You can see the weakness of this proposal is that you still have two departments of government involved. You have the Department of Transport which has the original basic authority to deal with the area of transport, which includes aeronautics and railways as well as other forms of transport. Now both ministers under this proposed legislation have a veto. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, as if he had not enough to do under his own legislation, must consent, or there can be no exemption. A commission created under the National Transportation Act and charged with the duty of dealing with the operation of railways and air travel, can override those decisions or, at least, prevent them from being carried into effect and expose the regulated industry to a prosecution. The other thing that they have done in connection with the matter of regulated industries is to provide in two sections of Bill C-42 that the decision of the federal board or commission or agency is not appealable. But after you read down about seven or eight lines you then find an exception. The competition policy advocate, which is a new name under this bill for the Director of Investigation and Research, may intervene. The exception to the denial of any right of appeal from a decision of a federal board—which would be a board regulating an industry—is that the decision cannot be appealed except that the competition policy advocate may intervene. In another section of the bill he is given the right to intervene, I would say, generally—that is, on any matter.

● (1530)

It is very curious when you realize that the wording is:

The Competition Policy Advocate, at the request of any federal board, commission or other agency, or on his own initiative, may, and on direction from the Minister shall, intervene in any matter before such a board, commission or other agency for the purpose of making representations in respect of any aspect of the central purpose of Canadian public policy expressed in the preamble to this Act including the maintenance of competition and the efficient allocation and utilization of resources whenever such representations are, in the opinion of the Competition Policy Advocate or the Minister, relevant to a matter before the board, commission or other agency, and to the factors that the board, commission or other agency is entitled to take into consideration in determining such matter.

That is really a free pass to the competition policy advocate to move in on any hearing before any such federal board.

If honourable senators read the preamble to Bill C-42, they will see that it is quite broad in the way in which it theorizes on the economic and social considerations. Then, having intervened, the competition policy advocate has all the authority that an aggrieved person would have in the conduct of proceedings, in the examination of witnesses, calling of witnesses, arranging for the production of documents, and cross-examination of witnesses.

So the IATA people filed a brief this time, as they did on the earlier occasion, complaining, as one could well understand, that these provisions do not solve anything. They still leave the situation where there is a contest between two departments of government, and unless they both agree that an exemption should exist in a particular case, then there is no exemption and there can be a prosecution of the party who appeared before the commission and received an approval and attempted to carry it out. Such a party could be prosecuted under the Combines Investigation Act.

It is very unsatisfactory to leave that kind of confusion. While the minister thought his department had dealt with that particular matter back in December 1975, obviously the only way they have dealt with it is by studying the situation in their own light and still trying to keep a hand in the operations. Any federal board, commission or agency which has this kind of power may be supervised in that form, I would suggest, the advocate being a court of appeal because he decides; he is the one who starts the machinery going.

I hope that honourable senators will not become concerned that I am engaging in a detailed discussion. However, there is one matter which I believe will be of interest. First, I must explain what we did in our report with respect to the Skeoch-McDonald Commission. They were commissioned to write a report which is entitled "Dynamic Change and Accountability in the Canadian Market Economy." When the minister was presenting his bill, he indicated that it reflected the policy indicated in the Skeoch-McDonald Report. At page 4 of our report, we say:

Your Committee's view is, and its study of the Bill indicates, that most of the thrust of the recommendations of the Economic Council and of Skeoch-McDonald started and ended with the preamble and very little has been carried over into the body of Phase 2 of the Combines Act (now the Competition Act).

We then say:

At a time when the Canadian economy is anything but robust, it appears to your Committee that most of the substantive changes proposed in the legislation are diametrically opposed to the generally accepted idea of a free market economy and are therefore ill-conceived and badly timed.

In the second column on page 4 of the report we say:

—your Committee regrets that the recommendations of the Skeoch-McDonald Report, specially commissioned by the government as the basis for the proposed Bill, were not more closely followed.

The aftermath of that I will now explain to honourable senators. This morning I received by special despatch a letter from Dr. Skeoch enclosing a statement entitled "Statement by Dr. L. A. Skeoch on the Dynamic Change Report and Bill C-42." I do not propose to refer to or tender this document because it does not have relevancy as a document. It does not have the proper foundation. The letter was addressed to me and is dated July 11, so it was written after we had written our report indicating the way we felt, that C-42 did not reflect the provisions of the Skeoch-McDonald Report. This letter is addressed to "The Chairman, The Banking Committee, The Senate of Canada, Ottawa, Canada," and it reads:

Dear Mr. Chairman;

As the person principally responsible for preparing the report of the Independent Committee on Phase II of the combines legislation, I am very much concerned about the policies incorporated in Bill C-42 which claims to embody the approach and substance of that report.

In the attached statement, I review the major elements of Bill C-42 which conflict in a fundamental way with the recommendations of the report.

Bill C-42, in my judgment, requires substantial revision.

Yours sincerely,

Lawrence A. Skeoch.

It is interesting that your committee reached a conclusion independently, after studying the bill and the Skeoch-McDonald report, that the bill did not reflect fundamentally the recommendations of the Skeoch-McDonald report.

This brings me to another subject to which I would like to call the attention of honourable senators. It is with reference to a provision in Bill C-42 concerning what is called "Joint Monopolization." If that is not a long-enough phrase, and if you would like me to paraphrase it, it has been referred to as "conscious parallelism." That may not be very much more helpful. It means that if a number of concerns in the same industry have closely matched plans, terms and pricing, then they are engaging in what is called "conscious parallelism," and it is an offence.

The bill says that if those facts that I related are assured, then that is evidence that an offence exists. Another section of the bill says that in those circumstances, even if there is no evidence of mutual arrangement or agreement, it is still an offence. In other words, part of an industry might be in Winnipeg, another part in Toronto, and another part in Halifax, and if they meet those conditions there is conscious parallelism—joint monopolization. It might be just the nature of the industry, and you could not have a different price from what a competitor had, and you met that price without any consultation, but the fact that you met that price—the close matching conduct, et cetera—is evidence that that kind of offence exists. Even if there is no evidence to prove that you ever got together, or that there was a mutual arrangement, agreement or understanding, it is still an offence, and you can still be prosecuted under the bill.

● (1540)

The only reason I mention it in this connection is that I wonder how close the committee and Dr. Skeoch got in arriving at the same conclusions as to the reflections of the recommendations of the Skeoch-McDonald report on Bill C-42 with regard to whether this is a kind of conscious parallelism. Moreover, it does not appear to be covered by the provisions of this clause of the bill.

There are a number of other clauses that certainly could be called highlights of the bill. For instance, there is the appeal clause, or the lack of appeal clause. You have a competition board, which used to be the old Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, and their authority has been greatly enlarged. This is the body to which the competition policy advocate can refer practically every kind of business and property right, on some basis or other, under the bill. This commission can make an order dealing with the parties and dealing with the nature of the contents of the application. They can make orders extending even to an order of divestiture, and there is no right of appeal. The only place, therefore, that a party can look to for any opportunity of appealing is section 28 of the Federal Court Act. That is so limited as to be almost useless as a weapon of attack, because the circumstances under which you are given an appeal from an order of a federal board, et cetera, are very narrow.

We have recommended that there should be a right of appeal to the Federal Court on a question of fact, where there is manifest error, and on a question of law. We have also recommended that there should be a right of appeal to the Governor in Council, either by action of the Governor in Council to modify in the public interest a decision of this competition board, or that the party affected should be able to go to the Governor in Council. In this way the party affected by an order of the competition board would have two avenues of approach by way of appeal. There is a long rationalization in the background material for Bill C-42 which justifies, or attempts to justify, the failure to provide any right of appeal. It was not felt that this is desirable in matters involving these economic provisions.

While there are a number of other items dealing with mergers and monopolies, our report on those subjects is very clear. There is a new feature, a classification, which I think I should tell you something about. It will not take very long.

There is a provision in the bill under which a person or a group of persons who have been affected by an action of some company or firm, and have suffered damage, may start an action. It is called a class action for damages. They can start that action in the court where they reside. Then, having started the action and made the other people who are in the same position parties, constituting a class, before they can go any further they have to go back to the court and have the court approve, and give authority for, the maintenance of that action. There are then provisions for carrying the action along and as to how the court may deal with it.

There is this new provision in the bill, that if the court refuses to give the order then these people who have started an action, as a class, for damages cannot go ahead. In those circumstances, the competition policy advocate can pick up the reins, or whatever you may wish to call the right of action, and he can carry on the action. Any proceeds on realization must be paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Early in the course of our meetings we heard evidence as to class actions in the United States. It has been a very unsatisfactory situation there. We had some opinion evidence from attorneys in the United States. Usually, if there are quite a number of people who belong to the class, each must be served with a notice—if it is reasonably possible to give each a notice—that he or she has been named as a party plaintiff. If they have been served, they have a period of time within which they can opt out. If they do not opt out, then the action goes ahead with them as parties. Many of them do not even know that they are parties, but there comes a day of reckoning when there is a judgment, if a judgment is secured. Then there is the question of the allocation among the various plaintiffs of whatever the amount of the judgment is. Certainly the evidence we had was that such actions were a fruitful source of revenue for the attorneys, but for the parties to the action, if they are very numerous, the division might be in the order of $10, $20 or something of that kind. There is no obligation on the plaintiffs, if the action fails, to pay the costs. There is no provision against the possible vexatious nature of the action, where a defendant could require that security for costs be put up.

● (1550)

So this is really an attempt to ape the procedures in the United States. Those procedures have been very unsatisfactory, and they have recently adopted something similar to the proposed procedure here, in which the advocate can move in and take over the action. However, it has been a fruitful source of revenue for some of the attorneys, but it has not been a fruitful source of revenue for the plaintiffs when the action has gone to trial. The hidden weapon in all this is the ability to make settlements, because if those who sue for damages in class actions are numerous then the defendants are faced with an interminable course of litigation and are fair game for bargaining with the attorneys. The evidence shows that the general procedure has been by way of the bargaining process, and attempting to get rid of the action and pay the least money by way of settlement.

The committee recommends that those provisions be deleted. This would not deprive a person in a class which has been adversely affected from maintaining an action on his own behalf, and it would not prevent a series of people in a class from taking action separately, obtaining an order of consolidation, and having all cases tried at the same time. So it is not, in the opinion of the members of the committee, a vital matter so far as the proper administration of the provisions of the Competition Bill are concerned.

I had noted a number of other points which are highlights, but they are clearly developed in the report. They concern such matters as mergers and monopolies. I have told you about joint monopolization. There is also industrial intellectual property. For instance, there is a compulsory licensing system proposed in connection with trade marks. On the evidence we received, this is really a fantastic thing, because a trade mark is adopted by a person as a label for his own goods in order that customers who wish to purchase those goods know that if that label is attached they are obtaining the goods they desire. However, to have a compulsory licensing system in connection with the trade mark is just contrary to the whole principle of trade mark legislation.

I could develop other aspects of this report, but I do not believe it to be necessary. I think it is fair reading, and there is a reasonable continuity in it. If any questions should develop, of course, I am prepared to deal with them. In any event, I will end my calling your attention to this report. We have been told by the minister that we can expect a new bill in the fall. It is to be hoped that this report will assist in many directions in the preparation of the new bill, and all we can do is wait.

Senator Ewasew: Honourable senators, I would like to direct a question to Senator Hayden.

I hesitate to question him on a matter of law of this nature because of his obvious expertise, but where I come from—the jurisdiction of Quebec—we do not have such a proceeding in the Code of Civil Procedure as a class action. We have always adopted a common law approach on this, because it cuts down on the multiplicity of actions in a certain class. Perhaps I misunderstood what the honourable senator said but, being an attorney, it kind of ruffled me a little, because I cannot see how an attorney benefits that much from a class action. He would benefit much more in a situation in which there were no class action. In my jurisdiction, 100 different people would have to sue in 100 different situations in the same class, whereas in the common law provinces, as I understand it, one person can take that action on behalf of the remainder in the same class. It not only saves legal fees; it cuts down on all the other costs such as court costs, and saves a tremendous amount of court time.

As I said earlier, being a junior senator I am rather reticent about putting a question of this nature to Senator Hayden, but I just do not understand why he said that this thing that is being abolished was really for the benefit of the attorneys. Basically, I cannot see it.

Senator Hayden: First of all, senator, we are not abolishing anything. All we are doing is recommending that the provision be deleted.

Senator Ewasew: You are recommending that the provision be deleted?

Senator Hayden: Yes.

Senator Ewasew: But do you think that is wise?

Senator Hayden: Yes. I will answer your second question. When I was telling you about attorneys, I was referring to the history in the United States of proceedings of this type, where the real benefit has been to the attorney and not to the masses of people who become joined in a class action.

Senator Ewasew: But, Senator Hayden, the United States is a jurisdiction in which we hear of judgments amounting to $1 million in actions for personal injury. Let us consider the situation of the CFI Pulp and Paper Corporation in Manitoba, in which the litigation was taken to the point at which a great deal of money could be saved by virtue of this vehicle in the common law known as a class action. All the creditors joined with one person suing. I wonder, with all due respect to you, whether you are correct in that recommendation?

Senator Hayden: My friend is entitled to his own opinion. I was explaining the bill and the report. The report is a consensus as far as the members of the committee are concerned. It may be that my friend has missed something of what I said, which was that class actions of the kind provided for in Bill C-42 are new. These class actions could be continued even when the original plaintiffs are refused an order permitting them to proceed by the court. There are grounds in this bill on which the judge could refuse to give a consent to the continuance of the class action. At that stage the competition policy advocate could move in and take over the conduct of the action. There is an entirely different principle involved there, which has, in effect, the government stepping in on behalf of the plaintiffs in a class action who are debarred, by a refusal of the court to give them an order to continue their action, from proceeding any further. I say the process of the court should not be used in a manner where the government moves in and takes sides.

● (1600)

When I said that the only people who benefit from class actions are attorneys, I was talking about the United States. That was the evidence we had before us.

Senator Ewasew: In fairness—

Senator Grosart: Order!

Senator Ewasew: In fairness to the attorneys in Canada, sir, may I object?

Some Hon. Senators: Order!

Senator Ewasew: It is not really fair to make that statement because in this country we do not have that situation, except in the common law provinces where it has been really conservatively used, and has been to the benefit of the litigants and certainly not to the benefit of the attorneys.

Senator Greene: Would the honourable senator permit me a question?

Senator Flynn: Which honourable senator?

Senator Hayden: Yes, go ahead.

Senator Greene: I was much impressed with the fact that two of the most powerful economies of the world that I have personally had the opportunity of observing, Japan and the EEC, have, staying narrowly within the ambit of the GATT and such international agreements, made their rules internally so that they could be competitive in world markets. I would be interested to hear from Senator Hayden, the one who is probably more capable of answering this question than any man in Parliament, the answer to the question of whether or not Bill C-42 in its purport would make it more difficult rather than easier for our manufacturers to be truly competitive against such economies as the EEC and Japan. Would it affect them in such a way that they could be most competitive in world markets?

Sometimes I feel that perhaps our rules have been geared to the American example, where the market of American manufacturers was domestic, and therefore they were in the quandary of making governmental rules for the protection of the consumer as well as for regulating the producer. Would this bill make it more difficult for us to compete against Japan and the EEC in world markets? It may be that in times like this, in order to be able to compete in world markets, we should make more co-operation from our industrial producers possible rather than make it more restrictive for them to co-operate.

Senator Hayden: I can tell my friend that the briefs which were filed by substantial interested parties indicated that they were very much concerned as to what would happen in their operations outside Canada if the full force or impact of this bill on that point was given effect. We did not go further than that because of time limitations, and because we knew we would have another chance to consider the bill. We made that point in our report. Depending on the pressures, this would appear to be a fertile area for deep study, but you have to remember that there is at least as deep study required, perhaps more so, on the extent of the restrictions in the domestic market.

Senator Deschatelets: Would Senator Hayden answer one brief question? He referred in his remarks to a new type of offence in the bill—conscious parallelism.

Senator Hayden: Yes.

Senator Deschatelets: It seems to me incredible that companies in the same industry could be found guilty of an offence without in fact having either directly or indirectly come to an agreement on pricing, for example. Did I understand correctly that you are recommending that those provisions be deleted?

Senator Hayden: Yes.

Senator Deschatelets: Could you tell me if the offence of conscious parallelism is something new, or does it exist elsewhere in the world?

Senator Hayden: Monopoly is, of course, an offence. Joint monopolization, which is an extension of the doctrine of monopoly, can be paraphrased as conscious parallelism. I have told you what conscious parallelism is. Let me elaborate. If a number of firms or companies are closely matched in their operations—for instance, they have the same price—then that is an example of conscious parallelism. There are many other ways listed in the bill, however, such as restricting entry into the market. That would be another form of conscious parallelism. But the bill goes on to say that if the facts which constitute conscious parallelism exist, then that is the offence, and even if that situation exists without there having been any mutual agreement or arrangement or conduct which would point to its being deliberately done, nevertheless that constitutes the offence and you can be proceeded against. It is extraordinary.

I see a startled expression on your face, Senator Deschatelets. I, too, was startled the first time I read this. It is fantastic.

Senator Deschatelets: Do you mean that this even creates a presumption of guilt, and you cannot remove that guilt by showing your good faith. Is that what you mean?

Senator Hayden: When you say “creates a presumption of guilt,” I am not sure that that is a happy expression to describe it.

Senator McIlraith: It creates the offence.

Senator Hayden: Let us assume I am in the business of manufacturing a particular product and there are other people manufacturing the same product. My product is no better than theirs, and there is a market for the product in Canada. Let us assume that the product is of such a kind that it has no special quality when I produce it as against when Joe Doakes produces it. I know that if he lowers the price and I do not, he will get the business, but according to this legislation I have to sit back and wait until he runs out of the product. On the other hand, perhaps I cannot afford to do that and therefore I lower my price. That is then a case of conscious parallelism.

You can shake your head, senator, as I shook mine many times after having a good look at this, but we dealt with it in the way it should be dealt with. We recommended that it be deleted.

● (1610)

Senator Greene: May I ask a supplementary question? Does it abrogate the time-honoured doctrine of mens rea from our quasi-criminal law?

Senator Hayden: The honourable senator is asking me for my opinion, which is that in many aspects it does. In other words, you have absolute offences.

The Hon. the Speaker: As no other honourable senator wishes to participate, this inquiry is considered as having been debated.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See page 1146)

COMPETITION POLICY

INTERIM REPORT

OF THE

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE

ON BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

ON

THE SUBJECT-MATTER OF

BILL C-42,

AN ACT TO AMEND THE COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT AND TO AMEND THE BANK ACT AND OTHER ACTS IN RELATION
THERE TO OR IN CONSEQUENCE THEREOF

COMPETITION POLICY

Interim Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce

CONTENTS

- I Introduction
 - II General Observations
 - III Matters Arising out of Phase I
 - IV Summary of Recommendations
 - V Regulated Trades, Industries and Professions
 - VI Regulated Conduct
 - VII Representations to Regulatory Agencies—Preamble
 - VIII Appeals
 - IX Mergers
 - X Joint Ventures
 - XI Monopolies
 - XII Joint Monopolization
 - XIII Specialization Agreements
 - XIV Price Discrimination
 - XV Preliminary Applications
 - XVI Systematic Delivered Pricing
 - XVII Interlocking Management
 - XVIII Class Actions
 - XIX Interim Injunctions
 - XX Solicitor-Client Privilege
 - XXI Industrial and Intellectual Property
- Appendix —Appearances before Committee

COMPETITION POLICY

INTERIM REPORT OF THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

I INTRODUCTION

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, which was authorized to examine and report upon the subject matter of Bill C-42 entitled: "An Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and to amend the Bank Act and other Acts in relation thereto or in consequence thereof", has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of May 4, 1977, examined the said matter and now reports thereon.

In connection with its study your Committee had the benefit of the services and expert assistance of Mr. John F. Lewis, C.A. of Thorne, Riddell & Co., Chartered Accountants, adviser to the Committee, and retained its legal counsel, Mr. Robert J. Cowling, of Ogilvy, Montgomery, Renault, Clarke, Kirkpatrick, Hannon & Howard.

Competition policy in Canada has been under active review for over ten years. Believing that the existing law was deficient in a number of respects, the Government of the day in July 1966 requested the Economic Council of Canada, amongst other things, to, "study and advise regarding . . . combines, mergers, monopolies and restraint of trade."¹

Following the Council's Report, in 1971 the Government introduced Bill C-256, entitled "An Act to promote competition, to provide for the general regulation of trade and commerce, to promote honest and fair dealing, to establish a Competitive Practices Tribunal and the Office of Commissioner, to repeal the Combines Investigation Act and to make consequential amendments to the Bank Act." However, Bill C-256 was withdrawn shortly after its introduction by the Minister, the Honourable Ron Basford, who stated that he would prefer to view the Bill as a white paper on competition policy for discussion purposes and present another Bill at a later date. Possibly in view of the anxiety which Bill C-256 had caused in the business community, the Government decided to introduce further legislation in two stages and by way of amendment to rather than replacement of the Combines Investigation Act. Bill C-227, representing Phase I, was introduced in November, 1973; however, owing to interruption of consideration of that and an identical successor bill (C-7) resulting from dissolutions of Parliament, the legislation, in moderately amended form, was not adopted until December, 1975 as Bill C-2. Your Committee examined both the subject matter of those Bills in advance of Bill C-2 coming before the Senate and the Bill itself; reference is made to its Reports in that connection.²

In early 1975, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs requested an independent committee from the private sector to make recommendations with respect to Phase II which was to deal primarily with the provisions on mergers and monopolies. That committee's report, entitled "Dynamic Change and Accountability in a Canadian Market Economy"³ was submitted in March 1976.

For a more complete history of developments leading up to amendments to the Act, reference is made to "Proposals for a new Competition Policy for Canada-Second Stage", March 1977, Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.⁴

Phase II of the amendments was introduced in the House of Commons by the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Honourable A. C. Abbott, on March 16, 1977. The Bill, however, was almost immediately withdrawn although the subject matter thereof was referred to the Standing Commons Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.⁵ This procedure indicates that the Government concedes that amendments to the Bill may be desirable and that the representations made before Parliamentary Committees studying the subject matter will be of assistance to the Government in preparing a fresh Bill for introduction at the next session.

To date twenty-six briefs have been received from various parties and associations and eight have appeared at the eight hearings which your Committee has held⁶, in addition to meetings held for discussion purposes.

II GENERAL OBSERVATIONS

In its study of Bill C-42 your Committee has considered the "Background and Rationale of the Proposed Legislation" as outlined in the booklet published by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs entitled "Proposals for a New Competition Policy for Canada—Second Stage".

In connection with the Preamble to Bill C-42, the above Rationale refers to the Economic Council and the Skeoch-McDonald Report as follows:

"The Council stated:

'It will be a recurrent theme of this Report that Canadian competition policy should aim primarily at ¹ "Interim Report on Competition Policy", Economic Council of Canada, July 1969, p. 1.

² Interim Report, Committee Proceedings Issue No. 33 and Appendix to Hansard, March 19, 1975; Second Interim Report, Committee Proceedings Issue No. 47 and Appendix to Hansard, June 26, 1975; and Report, Committee Proceedings Issue No. 70 and Appendix to Hansard, December 10, 1975.

³ Often referred to as the "Skeoch-McDonald Report".

⁴ At pp. 1-6.

⁵ See Official Reports, House of Commons, March 25, 1977.

⁶ See Appendix A.

bringing about more efficient performance by the economy as a whole. Competition should not itself be the objective but rather the most single means by which efficiency is achieved.'

"The language of the Skeoch-McDonald Report was different but its thrust was much the same. For them the question was how to facilitate the essential process of economic change. With the caveat that concentration must be permitted where necessary for the achievement of real-cost economies, they called for a market economy 'in which the dynamic variables are kept free with a fairly freely functioning price system.'

"Those ideas of the Economic Council and Skeoch-McDonald have met with a very wide measure of public acceptance in Canada, and their influence on the wording of the preamble is apparent."

Your Committee's view is, and its study of the Bill indicates, that most of the thrust of the recommendations of the Economic Council and of Skeoch-McDonald started and ended with the preamble and very little has been carried over into the body of Phase II of the Combines Act (now the Competition Act).

The booklet and the preamble purport to advance the cause of a free market policy, but the impression gained by your Committee and by those witnesses who appeared before us is that the drafters of the Bill were using completely different guidelines.

At a time when the Canadian economy is anything but robust, it appears to your Committee that most of the substantive changes proposed in the legislation are diametrically opposed to the generally accepted idea of a free market economy and are therefore ill-conceived and badly timed.

In the guise of enhancing competition in the market-place as a better means of achieving economic efficiency that detailed public regulation would be, Bill C-42 in fact provides stricter regulation over mergers, cartels and monopolies through their legitimization. Through a broadening of the definition of mergers, Bill C-42 also sweeps into the control and overview of the Competition Policy Advocate practically every acquisition of property and shares of every business in Canada either by acquisition, lease, amalgamation or establishment of a joint venture. The Competition Board will have the authority to make the most detailed regulation of every business in Canada. It might well be said, in the view of your Committee, that the Bill is the cornerstone of a comprehensively government-planned economy.

The proposed creation of a new situation into which individual businesses will fall entitled "joint monopolization" provides a further enlargement of the control net of the Competition Board.

It appears to your Committee that some effort has been made to rationalize or promote efficiency and cost reduction by permitting Specialization Agreements under certain controlled conditions such as advance approval and registration of agreements subject to a limited period. However, even these conditions appear to your Committee to be over-restrictive.

Your Committee notes from the Preamble to Bill C-42 that one of the basic conditions requisite to the achievement of the central purpose of Canadian public policy is the "creation and maintenance of a flexible, adaptable and dynamic Canadian economy that (among other things) will protect freedom of economic opportunity and choice by discouraging unnecessary concentration and the predatory exercise of economic power and by reducing the need for detailed public regulation of economic activity."

Your Committee, as a result of its study of Bill C-42, is not convinced that the objectives in the preamble have been conscientiously attempted by the drafters. As will be indicated later in this report, your Committee regrets that the recommendations of the Skeoch-McDonald Report, specially commissioned by the Government as the basis for the proposed Bill, were not more closely followed.

III MATTERS ARISING OUT OF PHASE I

In commenting on Phase I, your Committee resisted recommending amendments in a number of areas, principally the question of providing an effective right of appeal from decisions of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission (RPTC) (to be renamed "the Competition Board") in the knowledge that Phase II would be following shortly and that it was likely that more appropriate amendments could be developed in the light of the further modifications to the Act resulting from Phase II.

In other areas, your Committee in its report on Phase I was content to abstain from recommending amendments on the strength of undertakings given by the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Honourable André Ouellette, that amendments meeting your Committee's concern would be included with the other amendments comprising the Phase II package. In this category fall the provisions dealing with uniformity of expression of the punishment provisions and provisions exempting regulated trades, industries and professions from application of the Act. Another area which the Minister indicated he might be reviewing in Phase II was the conscious non-application in Phase I of exemptions for dealings between affiliated companies in relation to the price discrimination provisions.⁶ Your Committee points out, however, that the difficulty concerning your Committee in this regard was not dealt with in any way in Bill C-42.

Your Committee notes with satisfaction that its recommendations as to the penalty provisions were fully reflected in Bill C-42.⁷

As to your Committee's recommendations with respect to the exemption of regulated trades, etc., the Government has ⁶ See report of Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, Appendix to Senate Debates, December 10, 1975, p. 1590.

⁷ See Schedule to the Bill, pp. 72-73 done two things. Firstly, a new section 3.3 of the National Transportation Act has been proposed in Bill C-33, being an Act to amend that Act, which is presently before the House of Commons.⁸ This provision would deal with the transportation industry. Secondly, new sections 4.5 and 4.6 of the Competition Act would be added by Bill C-42 dealing with regulated trades, industries and professions in general.

Your Committee regrets that in its opinion neither of these proposals goes sufficiently far in overcoming the difficulties outlined by your Committee which will result from the conflicts between the Competition Act and legislation, either federal or provincial, regulating trades, industries and professions.

The reasons for your Committee's concern are set out in detail in its Report on Bill C-2 (1975), which we quote here in part:⁹

"Since in many cases it may not be up to or within the power of the particular industry, trade or profession to affect the manner in which such bodies exercise their legislative powers, your Committee considers that they may well be placed in an untenable position if the Combines Investigation Act is applied blindly to them.

"The case of the air transport industry in Canada is particularly striking in this regard. Because of the nature of its activities, there has always been a high degree of cooperation amongst the various companies in the industry. This cooperation has been, in some cases, required and in other cases simply encouraged by the Government. For example, the Government of Canada has many agreements with other countries respecting air transportation which provide as follows:

'The tariffs referred to in paragraph (1) in this Article shall, if possible, be agreed in respect of each route between the designated airlines of the contracting parties, in consultation with other airlines operating over the whole or part of that route, and such agreement shall, where possible, be reached through the rate-fixing machinery of the International Air Transport Association. The tariffs so agreed shall be subject to the approval of the aeronautical authorities of both contracting parties.'

"It is true that the tariffs which result from such agreements must be filed with the Canadian Transport Commission but the question remains as to whether this process is a sufficient 'regulation' to bring the carriers within the exempting formula contained in the judgment of Chief Justice McRuer in the Breweries case. Moreover, there may be other aspects of the air transport industry on which it has been the practice to have agreements and arrangements, with the encouragement of the Department of Transport and the Canadian Transport Commission, in respect of which the powers of supervision of the Canadian Transport Commission are not as precise as they are in the case of tariffs."

Later in this Report under "REGULATED CONDUCT" your Committee discusses at further length the problems concerning regulated industries created by the proposed amendments contemplated by Bill C-42.

IV SUMMARY OF RECOMMENDATIONS

While your Committee is anxious that its concerns be reflected in the fresh Bill to be introduced at the next session, and that it is therefore important to record its views at the earliest possible opportunity, time has not permitted the preparation of specific drafting recommendations. Rather, your Committee has concluded that it should indicate its concerns in a general way, reserving the right to make a more complete report at a later date.

From the briefs and submissions made to your Committee as well as its own appreciation of the Bill, your Committee has regretfully concluded that there is hardly a provision in the Bill which does not warrant serious reconsideration either from the policy or the drafting point of view and in many cases, both. The Committee is not aware of any representations to the effect that the Bill does not go far enough in dealing with anti-competitive practices. Your Committee deplores the tendency in much recent legislation, of which Bill C-42 is an example, to be over-reaching with relief being available only through discretionary exception. The fact that there have been few prosecutions under the merger and monopoly sections of the existing legislation is not a complete answer as to why changes as sweeping as proposed in Bill C-42 are necessary. In your Committee's opinion the amendments contained in the proposed Bill are not sufficiently addressed to the merits and desirability of change and too much to administrative convenience. It is regrettable that the recommendations of the Skeoch-McDonald Report, specially commissioned by the Government as the basis for the proposed Bill, were not more closely followed. Your Committee finds unacceptable the suggestion sometimes made that while certain conduct in certain circumstances may technically be prohibited by provisions of the Bill, it would not be the intention to attack such conduct. Understandably, such assurances are unlikely to be of much comfort

⁸ 3.3(1) The Governor in Council may, if he is satisfied after due consideration of the desirability of maintaining competition that an exemption as referred to in this subsection is necessary for greater efficiency or economy of transportation, by order with the approval of the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and after the Director of Investigation and Research appointed under the Combines Investigation Act has been notified of the terms of the proposed order, exempt from the application of section 32 of the Combines Investigation Act any conduct that is imposed or required by an order or regulation made by the Commission that is specifically referred to in the order made pursuant to this subsection and that was made by the Commission for the fulfilment of a direction issued to it under section 3.2 of this Act.

(2) In any prosecution under subsection 32(1) of the Combines Investigation Act, the court shall not convict an accused if the conduct that is in question in the prosecution is conduct that is exempted from the application of section 32 of that Act by an order made pursuant to subsection (1).

⁹ See report of Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, Appendix to Senate Debates, December 10, 1975, pp. 1590-1593.

to those placed in the position of making decisions which affect the economic welfare of the country. Your Committee is concerned that this cloud of uncertainty will contribute to economic stagnation with detrimental material and social consequences for all.

While the following should not be taken as an exhaustive list, your Committee is particularly concerned with the following matters:

V REGULATED TRADES, INDUSTRIES AND PROFESSIONS

As indicated above, this subject continues to be of major concern to your Committee. It continues to believe firmly, as indicated in previous reports on Phase I, that competition legislation should not be used as a means of policing the effectiveness of specialized regulatory agencies which have largely been set up in the first place to control situations where monopolistic tendencies may exist. Supervision of the trades, industries and professions subject to these regulatory agencies should remain under the exclusive jurisdiction of such agencies without interference under competition legislation. It has been suggested that laws of general application, such as the Competition Act, may be more desirable than the kind of ad hoc regulation provided under special legislation. The difficulty is that the proposed competition legislation is itself becoming more regulatory in its approach with the result that, rather than eliminating regulation, another layer of regulation has been added to be administered by a body without the specialized knowledge required for an understanding of the problems of the trades, industries and professions concerned.

Your Committee therefore recommends that the definition of "regulated conduct" in proposed new section 4.5 be amended so as to provide that any conduct authorized by a "public agency" by or pursuant to an Act of Parliament or of the legislature of a province or which is subject to review by such an agency and the agency has not disapproved it within the time limits, if any, provided in the law in question should be exempt from application of the Competition Act.

In so far as the transportation industry is concerned, particularly the air transport industry, which made submissions to your Committee through industry associations both in Phase I and Phase II, it may be necessary, for complete certainty, to amend the special legislation applicable to it in order to ensure that certain of its long standing practices, which clearly cannot be abruptly terminated and possibly should not be terminated at all, will be placed under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Canadian Transport Commission to ensure freedom from interference under the Competition Act.

VI REGULATED CONDUCT

"Regulated Conduct" is defined in the Bill in Section 4.5(2) and such regulated conduct is exempted under proposed Subsection 4.5(1).

As stated earlier Bill C-33 which proposed an amendment Section 3.3(1) to the National Transportation Act and the Department of Transport Act in the opinion of your Committee would not overcome the conflicts between the Competition Act and regulating legislation in regulated industries. Proposed Section 4.5 of Bill C-42 would tend to add further confusion. In addition, reference in proposed Section 27(1) of Bill C-42 to the preamble, as discussed later in this Report under "Preamble" would, in the opinion of your Committee, add confusion to confusion.

Representation has been made to your Committee that enactment of subsection 4.5(2) which defines "regulated conduct" would result in a most distressing environment of uncertainty, confusion and potential litigation insofar as regulated industries, in particular those which are closely regulated as public utilities, are concerned. This is because parties who are subject to and have acted in accordance with orders or regulations of a regulatory body established under federal or provincial legislation might subsequently find that they are in jeopardy because a court might substitute its own judgment for that of the regulatory agency.

In the opinion of your Committee, this proposed Subsection 4.5(2) of the Bill would throw confusion into all regulated industry both for the industry and for the regulatory body. The effect of the amendment would be that every decision of the regulatory body or bodies to whose jurisdiction the company or industry are subject could be open to attack on the grounds that the objectives of the regulatory legislation could have been accomplished in some other way.

A typical example would be a transmission pipeline company which is subject at one and the same time to the National Energy Board Act, the National Transportation Act, the Petroleum Administration Act, the Alberta Natural Gas Pricing Agreement Act, the Alberta Energy Resources Conservation Board Act and other legislation to which it may be subject. Most large pipeline companies are subject to regulation in virtually every aspect of their operations. Because of the nature of a pipeline and because of the effects of regulation, in most of their operations they are monopolies or in other respects they may operate in a non-competitive environment.

If there is anything in the authority given to the Canadian Transport Commission which does not extend far enough in the public interest, then the National Transportation Act should provide such additional authority. If the National Transportation Act in its provisions lacks authority to give full power to the Canadian Transport Commission, that Act should be amended so that it may be enabled to give all necessary authority for the protection of the public interest by the Canadian Transport Commission. In the air transport industry this should also be the case.

Your Committee must assume that in the transportation industry the Canadian Transport Commission has the necessary knowledge and expertise to perform its duties in the public interest more so than can be expected from the proposed Competition Board to be set up under the terms of this Bill.

VII REPRESENTATIONS TO REGULATORY AGENCIES—PREAMBLE

Proposed Section 27.1(1) provides for intervention by the Competition Policy Advocate in any matter before any federal board, commission or other agency for the purpose of making representations in respect of any aspect of the central purpose of Canadian public policy expressed in the preamble to the Competition Act. Representations have been made to your Committee that there are inconsistencies and confusion between the provisions of Section 4.6 and Section 27.1 as proposed by the Bill. Your Committee would go farther and would state that in this case confusion has been piled on top of confusion and that when one takes into account the other federal regulatory legislation which must be taken into account, that confusion is compounded further.

Some of this confusion and inconsistency is discussed in detail in the brief submitted by the Canadian Bar Association, pages 24 and 25, para. 54-56.

Apart from the reference to possible inter-departmental "warfare" made earlier in this report, your Committee also has particular concern about the proposed reference to and dependence on the scope and interpretation of the preamble itself.

The preamble is so general in scope, somewhat in the nature of a description of Canadian economic and social "motherhood", that the principle of the maintenance of competition appears to be completely subdued if not buried.

However, your Committee is of the opinion that the preamble, or any preamble for that matter, is not considered as part of the law but should only be looked at for purposes of clarification or removing ambiguity. Because of the many areas of ambiguity, confusion and lack of clarity in the Bill, some of which your Committee has noted in this report, it is apparent that there would be ample room under various Sections of the Bill to look at the preamble if this confusion is permitted to remain in the Bill as drafted.

In the opinion of your Committee, the right of the Competition Policy Advocate to intervene should be subject to the prior approval of a federal court judge after hearing all the parties concerned. The Competition Policy Advocate should not have a roving commission to appear on any matter that is before a regulatory board, commission or agency unless his representations are relevant to the matter before such body, and relate to the maintenance of competition. Otherwise, this would constitute a challenge to the regulatory body and the authority under which it is constituted and would be tantamount to interdepartmental "warfare", instituted by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Competition Policy Advocate of that same department on the one hand and a challenge to the Ministers and department officials responsible under the particular regulatory legislation on the other hand.

Your Committee therefore recommends that Clause 18 of the Bill amending Section 27.1(1) be deleted and that the present Section 27.1(1), referring to making representations to and calling evidence "in respect of the maintenance of competition" remain unchanged.

VIII APPEALS

Your Committee's view at the Phase I stage that the matter of appeals from decisions of the Competition Board could be better considered at the Phase II stage is confirmed by the tremendous expansion of the powers of the Board proposed by Phase II. Your Committee considers that the relatively limited rights afforded in this connection by section 28 of the Federal Court Act are insufficient having regard to the important implication Board decisions will have for the economy. Your Committee also considers that an expanded right of appeal may go some distance in mitigating the feeling of uncertainty which will prevail in the business community at least during the early years of experience under the untested powers of a new Board with novel techniques at its disposal.

Your Committee reviewed a fairly wide range of suggestions as to the form which the appeal should take although all parties before it were unanimous in recommending that some right of appeal be given. Your Committee considers that a full right of appeal to the Federal Court of Appeal should be provided. As to the dangers of an appellate court being unequipped to deal with matters of factual expertise, your Committee considers that the well known, though unwritten rule universally observed by appellate tribunals to the effect that they should only intervene in matters of fact where there has been manifest error affords a sufficient safeguard against unwarranted interference with the findings of the Competition Board. The Director of Investigations and Research himself has suggested that the Judges of the Federal Court should develop a special expertise in competition matters.¹⁰

In addition to a full right of appeal, your Committee considers that there may be circumstances in which it is important for the Government to be able to modify a decision of the Board on the basis of a broader consideration than is permissible under the criteria spelled out in the Act. Your Committee therefore recommends that it be provided that the Governor in Council be given the right to modify decisions of the Board in the same manner as he may under, e.g., subsection 64(1) of the National Transportation Act.

IX MERGERS (new s. 31.71)

The Phase II proposal amendments, while removing mergers from the per se offence category, will, if not modified, give the Competition Advocate the right to have a large percentage of mergers in Canada reviewed by the Board with the possible consequence for the parties of a divestiture order. As many beneficial mergers may not proceed simply through fear of this drastic remedy being eventually applied, it is recommended that a party to a proposed merger be permitted to apply for a confidential binding advance ruling from the Board as to whether the proposed merger meets the criteria set out in the ¹⁰ See Proceedings of the Committee, Issue No. 35, April 27, 1975, testimony of Mr. R. J. Bertrand speaking in relation to the jurisdiction of the Federal Court to try offences under the Act.

Act. Your Committee also recommends that a party receiving an adverse ruling be permitted to proceed with the merger, if he so chooses, reserving his right to put forward his case anew if subsequently brought before the Board by the Advocate. A limitation should be placed on the time within which the Advocate may seek to have the Board review an actual merger, commencing with the date of receipt of notice thereof.

Unless modifications are made either to the Bill or to the Foreign Investment Review Act, where the acquiring party is a non-eligible person under the latter Act, he may be required to go through duplicate screening procedures as effect on competition is a matter which must be taken into consideration by the Governor-in-Council in deciding whether or not to allow an investment under FIRA. These criteria should either be removed from FIRA in respect of mergers (acquisition of control) or some other procedure developed to avoid the anomaly of the Competition Board, in effect, sitting in review of an order of the Governor in Council made upon consideration of similar matters.

Turning now to the actual provisions of proposed section 31.71, the scheme of the proposal is that the Board only has jurisdiction if the merger lessens or is likely to lessen competition substantially and if (in the case of a horizontal merger only) the merger would result in the combined share of the parties following the merger exceeding 20 per cent of any market. If the Board finds it has jurisdiction, it "may" make an order of the kind described in subsection (3) and in determining whether or not an order should be made, it is directed to have regard to the "factors" set out in subsection (4). In any event, however, the Board may not make an order if it is satisfied that there is a high probability that the merger will bring about "substantial gains in efficiency . . ."

Your Committee considers that the jurisdictional test of "substantially lessening competition" is too vague and flexible to provide a meaningful threshold and that some such expression as "material impairment of competition" be considered. Your Committee also considers that the market share threshold which, it is to be noted, applies to "any market", is too low. It should be increased from 20 % to 40 % and instead of "any market" the percentage should be of any regional domestic market which itself accounts for more than 50 % of the total domestic business of any of the parties.

Expressions such as "as . . . the Board considers to be relevant" and "where it is satisfied" should be eliminated because they may frustrate the effectiveness of the full right of appeal which your Committee is recommending in that the appellate court may consider that it is bound by the findings of the Board where such language appears.

Your Committee considers that the overriding consideration provided in subsection (5) may not in the end be of much practical use because of the obvious difficulties an applicant will have in proving that there will be a high probability that the merger will bring about substantial gains in efficiency. Your Committee recommends that a test of "reasonable likelihood" should be substituted for "high probability".

X JOINT VENTURES

The definition of "merger" contained in proposed section 31.71 is broad enough to include joint ventures, or, consortia, as they are sometimes called. This will have the effect of discouraging many projects in Canada which, because of the magnitude of investment required, technological problems or other considerations, can only be accomplished by several or even all of the firms in a given industry combining on a cooperative basis. Your Committee recommends that an exemption be granted for joint ventures which meet these criteria. The exemption should apply notwithstanding that the parties may choose to operate the venture through a corporation the shares of which are owned by them.

Representations also have been made by various representatives of resource industries that the particular wording of Section 31.71 which defines mergers would include many forms of activities which have evolved in a natural way for the expeditious exploration, development, extraction and distribution of natural resources. These forms include joint ventures, joint bidding, "farm-out" and "farm-in" agreements, joint operating agreements, unitization agreements and common asset ownerships, most of which result from or are subject to direct government input and regulation.

The seriousness of the disruption of industry which would result from the application of the proposed amendment, it is claimed, is such as to prejudice and jeopardize the resource industries generally and the oil and gas exploration and development industry in particular. It is claimed that the inclusion of joint ventures within the scope of the merger provisions would introduce an air of uncertainty which detracts from the ability to carry on operations effectively; equally, it was represented to your Committee by the Canadian Petroleum Association in their brief on page iv of its summary, the monopoly and joint monopolization sections of the Bill may effectively prohibit oil and gas exploration and production operations as presently carried out.

At a time when the Minister of Energy is engaged in instituting incentives to promote development of new energy resources, it appears to your Committee that disruptive and unsettling legislation of the type contemplated by the amendments concerning mergers, joint ventures, monopolization and joint monopolization should not be considered by Parliament.

Your Committee recommends that adequate exemptions be provided for joint ventures in the resource industries in such a manner as would not discourage or disturb their further and continued development.

XI MONOPOLIES. (s. 33 and new s. 31.72)

The offence of carrying on a monopoly which is against the public interest would be retained by the Bill in much the same form as the existing law but a new reviewable practice of "monopolization" would be added.

As to the proposed new reviewable practice, your Committee recommends that the practice be defined in the context of abuse of dominant power, as was recommended in the Skeoch-

McDonald Report. An attempt at relief is made in the proposed provision by providing in subsection 31.71(4) that where behaviour having certain effects results solely from superior efficiency or economic performance of the monopoly, no order shall be made by the Board. Your Committee considers that this test will impose an impossible burden in most instances and that the "solely" concept should be eliminated. Your Committee considers that any provision similar to subparagraph 31.72(2)(a)(v), the "catchall" provision, should not be included. The four provisions under subsections 31.72(2)(a)(i) to (iv) should be adequate and the omnibus or basket subsection (v) should be deleted.

XII JOINT MONOPOLIZATION (new s. 31.73)

A new reviewable practice called "joint monopolization" is proposed by the Bill. It is in this provision that the notion of "conscious parallelism" has been introduced. While application of the provision is confined to "a small number of persons, not all of whom are affiliated . . ." who "achieve or seek to achieve substantial control . . . of a class or species of business", because of the nature of the Canadian economy the provision may affect many industries. All parties who appeared before your Committee were concerned about this new provision particularly because intent to harm does not appear to be an ingredient. If the parallel policies have certain effects, then the practice exists and is subject to orders by the Competition Board including divestiture. The provision is intended to apply even though the parallel policies were based on nothing more than a mutual recognition by the parties of their inter-dependence and that there was no agreement or arrangement between or among them. In other words, a perfectly natural situation achieved through innocent conduct may find itself in the inexorable grip of a criminal prohibition. The drafting of the provision is confusing in that it is only parallel conduct having the effects enumerated in paragraphs (a) to (f) which constitute the practice, yet these paragraphs themselves introduce matters which would be more properly included as ingredients of the offensive practice than as evidence of effects, e.g., predatory pricing, coercing competitors to avoid competitive behaviour and punishing competitors. In summary, your Committee believes that the practices described should only be subject to review or other legal action where harmful intent is involved and it would appear to your Committee that other provisions of the Act sufficiently cover the possible evils perceived. Your Committee therefore is of the opinion that this provision should be deleted entirely from the Bill. In any event, the omnibus or "catch-all" subsection 31.73(l)(f) should be deleted.

The remarks of your Committee under Joint Ventures concerning disruptive legislation of this type which is of particular concern to the resource industry should be noted.

It should also be noted that The Canadian Bankers' Association have indicated that chartered banks could be caught under the joint monopolization and parallel conduct provisions of this amendment to the Act if the banks were to implement the monetary policies indicated from time to time by the Bank of Canada. Your Committee is indeed concerned that there is a probability, even a possibility, that the monetary policy of our central bank could be frustrated by the Joint Monopolization amendment to the Act.

Your Committee therefore recommends, as noted above, that the Joint Monopolization Section (sec. 31.73) be deleted and in any event that chartered banks should be exempt from this type of over-reaching legislation.

XIII SPECIALIZATION AGREEMENT (new s. 31.76)

The provision regarding Specialization Agreements should be extended to include services as well as articles and the provision should be clarified to permit such agreements to apply on a regional basis and to either present or future production of the parties. It is also recommended that the maximum five-year term be extended to ten years and the term of ten years in the case of graduated reductions be extended to twenty years, or in both cases, such longer period as the Board may determine.

XIV PRICE DISCRIMINATION AND DIFFERENTIATION (para. 34(1)(a) and new s. 31.77)

It is difficult to understand why the scope of this provision is being expanded at the present time. The present provision is modelled on similar provisions in the Robinson-Patman Act in the United States enacted at a time when deflationary tendencies were threatening small business. In view of the tendency of prices today, it is to be wondered whether consideration should not be given to repealing the provision in Canada.

Your Committee recommends that the present provision in the form in which it is in the present Act be transferred from the criminal offence to the reviewable practices category but with the addition of a provision similar to that contained in paragraph 31.77(c) proposed by the Bill.

XV PRELIMINARY APPLICATIONS (new s. 31.91)

Your Committee considers that the provision requiring the Competition Policy Advocate in effect to obtain leave from the Competition Board before commencing proceedings should be deleted.

XVI SYSTEMATIC DELIVERED PRICING (new s. 38.1)

Your Committee recommends that this new provision, if it is to be retained at all, should be made a reviewable practice in respect of which the Board can only make an order if the practice was having a significant adverse effect on competition.

XVII INTERLOCKING MANAGEMENT (new s. 31.75)

Your Committee recommends that the proposals in this connection be deferred until there has been an opportunity to consider the report of the Bryce Commission.

XVIII CLASS ACTIONS (new Part V.1)

Your Committee is far from convinced that any advantages of class actions outweigh the many disadvantages. The creation of additional offences, the provision for reviewable practices covering conduct defined in broader terms, the substantial increase in the severity of the punishment provisions of the Act, the provision of a statutory civil right of action and the more active enforcement of competition legislation which has already begun and which can be anticipated to continue, it seems to your Committee, are a sufficient deterrent against violation of the Act. Your Committee thinks the specific class action provision of the Bill should be deleted.

If it is considered that the provisions should be retained, then the Committee recommends that the provision for the substitute action by the Competition Policy Advocate should be deleted as well as the provision denying costs to a successful defendant. In your Committee's view the Plaintiff should be required to put up security for costs. From the information available to your Committee, this would not present an insuperable barrier in view of the fact that consumer class actions are likely to be promoted by a consumer organization or by a member of the legal profession specializing in such actions.

XIX INTERIM INJUNCTIONS (ss. 29 and 29.1)

Your Committee sees no reason for derogation from the "balance of convenience" rule in issuing interim injunctions. It also recommends that jurisdiction to grant interim injunctions should not be given to the Competition Board and that they should remain the exclusive jurisdiction of the ordinary courts.

XX SOLICITOR-CLIENT PRIVILEGE (new s. 10.1)

Your Committee considers that where a question of solicitor-client privilege arises, the procedure set further in section 10.1 should be mandatory rather than permissive.

XXI INDUSTRIAL AND INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY

Proposed Bill C-42 includes a new Section 31.74 which empowers the Competition Board, under certain conditions, to declare unenforceable, in whole or in part, any agreement, arrangement, or licence into which that person has entered relating to the use of the patent, trademark, copyright or industrial design, and also empowers the Board to order the compulsory licensing of same.

Representations have been made to your Committee that the compulsory licensing of a trademark is legalistically impossible, being contrary to the essential nature of a trademark, clearly inappropriate and contrary to the public interest as likely to lead to the deception of consumers. As a result of its study, your Committee is inclined towards this view, and recommends that all references to trademarks should be deleted from the Competition Act.

Your Committee also recommends that any legislation dealing with these matters of industrial property should only appear in the respective Acts dealing with the subject, namely the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act, the Copyright Act and the Industrial Design Act.

The Trade Marks Act is based on the common law concept of unfair competition to prevent the public from being confused or misled in that a trade mark is to identify for the public and not just the owner the source of the goods or services to which it is applied. The trade mark enables consumers to choose between competitors' products and thus to select those which have found favour and reject those which have not. If consumers or dealers prefer to purchase a given article because it was made by a particular manufacturer or class of manufacturers it has been held that they have a right to do so and this right cannot be satisfied by imposing upon them a similar article of a different origin.

Trade mark legislation is based greatly upon the concept of competition and the protection of the public. It is not understood by your Committee how an activity which under the appropriate legislation is fair competition should be perceived to be subject to expulsion as an effective remedy for an alleged act of unfair competition under different legislation particularly if the latter legislation is to be administered by persons who cannot be expected to understand trade marks and all their complexities.

Section 31.74(1)(c) proposes to give to the Board the power to grant compulsory licenses not only of the statutory monopolies of patents, copyrights and industrial designs, but also of trade marks.

As pointed out above the matter of licensing of the statutory monopolies should only be set forth in the respective legislation dealing with such monopolies. It is a basic error even in theory to contemplate compulsory licensing of trade marks to be remotely similar to compulsory licensing of a statutory monopoly.

The proposal ignores the primary function of a trade mark which is to identify for the public the source of goods and to distinguish one manufacturer's goods from similar goods put out by others. Any form of compulsory licensing of a trade mark seriously impairs the above referred to functions of a trade mark which are there to protect the public as much as to protect the owner of the trade mark.

Canada is a member State of the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property (1883) which regulates industrial property, particularly patents and trade marks, at the international level. The Convention is administered by the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) of which Canada is also a member State. Although the Convention is presently silent on the subject of the compulsory licensing of trade marks, it appears that a recent statement issued by a representative international Group meeting under the sponsorship of WIPO noted that its great majority objected to amending the Paris Convention by including in it a provision which would allow the granting of compulsory licences in the case of trade marks.

Your Committee is therefore of the opinion that the proposed sub-section 31.74(1) should not make reference to compulsory licensing of trade marks, particularly since sub-section 31.74(2) states that no order shall be made under this section that is at variance with any treaty, arrangement or engagement with any other country respecting trade marks to which Canada is a party.

Although your Committee would have preferred to make a lengthier report explaining in greater detail its reasons for the recommendations made herein, it considers that it is important that the present interim report be made available at the earliest opportunity so that the draftsmen of the revised legislation will have the benefit of your Committee's conclusions during the course of their work. Your Committee may request permission to make a further report spelling out its recommendations in greater detail. Your Committee wishes to assure those who appeared before it that, although time has not permitted your Committee to deal in the present interim report with each and every point raised in the various briefs, they have nevertheless received the careful consideration of your Committee.

* * *

In view of the very extensive submissions which have been made to this Committee and to the Commons Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, your Committee is concerned that unless there is consultation during the actual drafting process between the Government and representatives of those who made submissions there is a danger that the fresh bill to be presented will not adequately respond to the concerns which have been raised with the result that further protracted hearings will be required when the new bill is introduced. In order to minimize this danger to the greatest degree possible, your Committee recommends that the Government appoint a select Committee from the private sector, a majority of the members of which are members of the Bar specialising in competition matters to consult with it and the draftsmen during the preparation of the new bill.

Your Committee wishes to thank its advisers and staff for the assistance given during the studies and preparation of this report.

Respectfully submitted,

SALTER A. HAYDEN
Chairman

APPENDIX

Appearances before the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce in connection with the Committee's study of the subject matter of Bill C-42—An Act to Amend the Combines Investigation Act.

- | | |
|---------------|--|
| June 15, 1977 | Imperial Oil Limited
Canadian Petroleum Association
The Canadian Manufacturers' Association. |
| June 22, 1977 | Coca-Cola Ltd.
Blake, Cassels & Graydon
Bell Canada. |
| June 29, 1977 | Dominion Foundries and Steel, Limited
Husky Oil Operations Ltd. |

THE SENATE

Thursday, July 14, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Copies of an amendment, dated June 15, 1977, to By-law No. 1 of the Export Development Corporation, pursuant to section 16(3) of the Export Development Act, Chapter E-18, R.S.C., 1970.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Senator Carter, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-49, to amend the Canada Pension Plan, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Carter moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Senator Argue, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, to which was referred Bill C-34, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act respecting the establishment of marketing plans and to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act in consequence thereof, presented the report of the committee.

The Clerk Assistant (Reading):

THURSDAY, July 14, 1977

The Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture to which was referred the Bill C-34, entitled: "An Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act respecting the establishment of marketing plans and to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act in consequence thereof", has in obedience to the order of reference of 21st June 1977, examined the said Bill and now reports as follows:—

Your Committee recommends that this Bill be not proceeded with further in the Senate for the following reasons:

(a) The Canadian Wheat Board is incorporated with the object of marketing in an orderly manner, in inter-provincial and export trade, grain grown in the designated area.

Senator Flynn: Dispende.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Clerk Assistant (Reading):

While on the surface there appear to be similarities between the voluntary marketing plans that could be established if these amendments are enacted and the orderly marketing system operated by the Board, the Committee believes that there are fundamental differences. As the Board will not be involved in either the organization and administration of these plans or the marketing of the grains, the Committee finds no good reason for the establishment of these plans under the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

(b) The Committee has found that marketing plans of the type envisioned by this Bill can now be established under the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act. The primary purpose of both the Bill and the Act is to facilitate joint marketing by producers of their grains. The Bill would enable the establishment, by order and on the fulfilment of certain conditions, of marketing plans that would include provision for the pooling of sales receipts from the grain and a system of initial payments. It also provides that certain losses incurred under such a plan may be recoverable from the Government of Canada. The Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act, passed in 1939, provides for the establishment by producers of cooperative marketing plans. These are characterized by the pooling of proceeds from the sale of products marketed and by the extension of initial payments to the participants for the products delivered. Under the Act, the Government of Canada may, by agreement, guarantee certain losses should these be incurred by the plan. This Act is presently and successfully utilized by producers in Ontario for the cooperative marketing of wheat and beans and by producers on Prince Edward Island for the marketing of certain fruits and vegetables.

(c) There have been in the past and there presently are voluntary marketing plans for such grains as rapeseed and sunflower seeds. These plans have been established and operated by various companies, cooperatives and associations in the designated area through agreements and contracts. None of the producers or the companies involved in these plans has sought government assistance although such assistance was clearly available to them under the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act.

● (1410)

(d) The Committee recognizes that there are certain provisions of the Bill that do not pertain directly to the establishment of cooperative marketing plans. Clauses 5 through 10 are consequential amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act the purpose of which is to facilitate the compulsory collection of contributions or levies to the stabilization plan. The levies are now collected on grains, such as rapeseed, sold on the open market. Should a cooperative marketing plan be established, the Committee believes that the levies could continue to be collected on payments made or that producers by individual submission could make their contributions to the stabilization plan.

The Committee thus considers that these amendments are of relatively minor importance both to the operation of any cooperative marketing plan and to the functioning of the grain stabilization program.

In conclusion, your Committee has found this Bill to be unnecessary, indeed to clearly duplicate an existing Statute, the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act. The producers of rapeseed or any other agricultural product, except wheat, grown in the designated area can now establish a voluntary or cooperative marketing plan and receive all the important benefits that would be available should this Bill be enacted. However, the Committee recognizes that the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act may be found wanting, and therefore recommends that if producers establish a cooperative marketing plan for any eligible grain grown in the designated area, then the Minister should closely monitor its operation with the objective of quickly bringing forth any amendments that are proved necessary.

Respectfully submitted.

Hazen Argue,
Chairman

Senator Flynn: On a point of order. Since honourable senators wanted this document to be read entirely, do you not think we should have the French version?

Senator Argue: The French version is on the table.

Senator Flynn: I mean, don't you want to listen to it? I was thinking that Senator Benidickson might like to hear it.

Senator Benidickson: Honourable senators, it is a difficult situation for me in that it is probably known that I have relatives who are prominent in western grain agriculture. Never has it had any effect upon me. However, the Leader of the Opposition knows that when he sat as a cabinet minister under the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker, because I was the representative in the opposition in Parliament of the most westerly part of the country, I became the agriculture critic. I never received any suggestion from my relatives as to what government policy should be in agriculture, nor did I ever seek it from their large resources. I had to do my homework. I owe much to the then slender Parliamentary Library research staff, and experts in the Department of Agriculture. I was named agriculture critic in those years, with the exception that the Honourable Paul Martin retained agricultural criticism relative to sugar beets—important to his constituency around Windsor—and, great orator that he was, his speeches as opposition critic got more attention than mine. I had to make speeches on such unfamiliar subjects as international wheat agreements, crop insurance, and so on. I was only a country lawyer, and I had to do much homework.

Senator Flynn: It was soya beans.

Senator Benidickson: And sugar beets, too. However, my hearing is not the best, unfortunately. I want no abridgement of the rules.

Senator Flynn: May I interrupt the honourable senator? I was not objecting to his request that the report be read, but usually it is better to have the reading dispensed with, have it printed, and allow the senators to read it in Hansard. That, in my opinion, is more useful than just listening to the Clerk Assistant read the report. My point is that if all we want to do is merely take up the time of the house, we might as well have the French version of the report read also.

Senator Benidickson: I thank my honourable friend. I simply want no abridgement of our rules with respect to this report. I have not studied this report.

Senator Greene: On the point of order raised by the Leader of the Opposition, might I suggest that it would be a good precedent to set in this Senate that a report not be accepted unless it be in both official languages, and that this report be sent back to the committee to be returned in the two official languages?

Senator Grosart: It is in both official languages.

Senator Greene: Excuse me; I thought that was the point of order.

Senator Argue: The report has been tabled in both official languages.

Senator Flynn: My point of order is that when we receive a long report we usually dispense with its reading. However, it appears now that all some senators wish to do is to take up the time of the house by having this long report read. The report would be better understood, I submit, if we were to read it in Hansard. If all we want to do is take up time to appear busy, we might as well read the French version of the report into the record. But maybe that point is too subtle for some.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Argue: With leave, I ask that it be taken into consideration now.

Senator Flynn: No.

Some Hon. Senators: Leave is not granted.

Senator Argue moved that the report be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

THE SENATE

SUMMER RECESS—QUESTION

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, since the deputy leader has not moved a motion, as is his practice on Thursdays, with respect to the adjournment of the Senate, I believe we are entitled to some explanation, either from him or from the Leader of the Government. I'll settle for whatever they can give me at this time. At least we should have some idea where we are going. On second thought, maybe we shouldn't.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the Senate always knows where it is going. It seems to me in this case that the members of the other place may be having some difficulty in determining where they are going.

The subject of an adjournment for what is loosely described as a "summer recess" has been discussed again today. I understand that there have been conversations with representatives of all parties in the other place to determine the amount of work which that house may be inclined to carry out today and tomorrow. There is still a hope, I understand, that the other house might adjourn tonight until the first week in August.

• (1420)

There is a degree of uncertainty still existing which is simply not possible to remove at this point. I suggest that perhaps by 6 o'clock this evening we will be in a position to determine whether we should meet tomorrow or even next week. I should like to keep in continuing contact with the Honourable Leader of the Opposition with respect to this matter over the course of the next two hours. I understand that one of the controversial bills in question is now under debate in the other place and there may be a vote on that measure this afternoon.

As I have said, it is my hope that over the next two hours the situation can be very much clarified, and I would be pleased to communicate with the Leader of the Opposition in that regard.

Senator Flynn: I am willing to accept that. However, I see no useful purpose being served in having the Senate meet tomorrow to await the arrival of bills from the other place. If there is any uncertainty at all, surely the logical thing for us to do would be to adjourn until Monday. There is very little doubt that we will have to return next week, unless the government leader is contemplating agreeing to a package arrangement whereby we would be expected to pass two or three bills tomorrow. That would be nonsense. Of course, if the government ceases to insist upon passage of some of the bills that are considered priority items in the other place, well and good. But I do not feel we should sit here and await the arrival of any bills the other place may bestir itself to pass. The logical thing to do would be to adjourn today and come back on Monday evening.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: I want to assure honourable senators that there is no inclination to attempt to persuade honourable senators to sit around and await anything from the other place.

However, there may be a body of information available within the next while which can be shared with the Leader of the Opposition. I can provide the assurance that the Senate will not be placed in the position of sitting and waiting for the other place to act. It may be that we will adjourn at some point this afternoon during pleasure to the call of the bell at approximately 5.30 p.m., at which time I may have something to announce. The situation is still very flexible. Depending upon the result of certain conversations, there could very well be progress made in the other place this afternoon.

PARLIAMENT

USE OF SENATE CHAMBER BY HOUSE OF COMMONS—QUESTION

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the government leader whether it is the case that in the first week of August the House of Commons will be using this chamber and, accordingly, Stanley Knowles will occupy a seat here in the "red chamber".

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, a request has come from the other place that they be allowed to share the Senate chamber during the month of August with members of the Senate. Some conversations have been held to discuss a proposal that the two houses meet in the Senate chamber, employing some system of allocating days or hours. If an agreement is achieved to have both houses meet here, I am sure that all members of this place will be honoured to have members of the other place conducting their deliberations in this august chamber. As well, I know that many honourable senators will await with keen expectation the maiden speech in the Senate chamber of the distinguished member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Stanley Knowles).

Senator van Roggen: Has the Leader of the Government obtained adequate assurance that, assuming the members of the other place do use this chamber, they will leave in due course?

Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

NATIONAL UNITY

REGIONAL ASPIRATIONS—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the inquiry of Senator Perrault, calling the attention of the Senate to the question of meeting more effectively the economic and cultural aspirations of the various regions of Canada.

[Translation]

Hon. Bernard Alasdair Graham: Honourable senators, first of all, I should like to thank all previous speakers in this debate, which will certainly be the most important in which all members of this house will ever take part, as senior as they may be.

The fact is that this country is probably at the most crucial moment in its history. As Canadians it behoves us obviously to make every effort to take up the challenges of national unity, namely, the feelings of alienation in western Canada, regional disparities and the need to ensure an adequate standard of living to all Canadians. But we have an additional responsibility as members of this house because of our position and of the faith that was put in us when we were sworn in.

[English]

I am one of those who feel very strongly that a national commitment to the principles of the Official Languages Act is fundamental to the unity of our country. I do not believe that real linguistic equality among English- and French-speaking Canadians will, by itself, succeed in holding this country together. But I am convinced that in the absence of equal treatment of the two languages in all our federal institutions and activities all other unifying efforts would be futile. It is therefore important for all Canadians to realize just what the language policy of Canada is and is not.

Parliament in 1969 constituted English and French as the official languages of Canada, to be accorded equal status in Parliament and in the administration of government. The act established the right of all Canadians to be served by the federal government in the official language of their choice. That, in essence, is the language policy of the Parliament and the Government of Canada—nothing more and nothing less.

Despite widespread belief to the contrary, it was never intended nor was it even desired that Canadians would have to learn both official languages in order to enjoy the full rights and privileges of citizenship. In fact, the government's language policy ensures that Canadians who speak only one official language, and who never learned the other, will be guaranteed equal access to the full range of federal services. In order to make the policy work, it is obviously necessary that some federal officials be competent in both languages. The bilingualism of these few, however, far from being a threat to the unilingual majority of Canadians is, in fact, the insurance that the majority may remain unilingual without suffering any deprivation or injustice in the provision of federal services. Obviously we have failed badly in communicating to the general public this fundamental principle of our language policy.

Some say that while the policy is necessary it is, nevertheless, a divisive influence among Canadians. I disagree. I say, honourable senators, that it is not the policy, but the misunderstanding of the policy, which has had a divisive effect. It does no good whatsoever to spend time now in attempting to assess the blame for that misunderstanding, because we all share the blame—all of us who support the principle of linguistic equality but have not worked hard enough or well enough to help Canadians understand it. That includes the government at all levels; it includes parliamentarians and it includes the media. There is enough blame to share among well-intentioned people without even considering those strange individuals who will neither accept nor even attempt to understand the spirit and intent of the Official Languages Act.

● (1430)

Hindsight, as you well know, is good only if you use it to build a better future. So let us not dwell morbidly on the past, like people who believe they have no future whatsoever, but simply admit that in a project as innovative, as unprecedented and as experimental as was the official languages policy in 1969, there are bound to be some mistakes in application. And there were! It is now apparent, for example, that over-zealous application of the policy resulted in too many civil service positions being designated bilingual. But that is a problem which only experience with the system could really reveal, and now in the light of experience the problem is being corrected.

While we applaud the corrective measures now being taken by the government, let us not blind ourselves to the great progress made in rendering the civil service capable of better serving Canadians in either language. Now that real progress has been achieved in putting into operation the linguistic capabilities of the civil service, the government can properly pay more attention to the encouragement of language training where it will reap the most rewarding benefits, namely, in the classrooms of the nation.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Graham: It is there, in the minds of our children, that exposure to a second official language can build bridges between people. English-speaking children, for example, can, through the medium of language and literature, learn more about the cultural, economic and social contribution of those whose mother tongue is French.

In my own province, Nova Scotia, for example, there are some 80,000 Acadians whose contribution to that province and our country is a matter of great pride. I want my children to learn about their contribution, because I think it will help them to understand our people and our province better. In a sense, honourable senators, that is exactly what has to happen right across this country. We will find that we are not as different as we sometimes think. We will find that many of the barriers we see between ourselves and other Canadians are artificial, that they are artificial creations which crumble at the first real effort at mutual understanding.

As a maritimer I am impressed by the wealth of similarities between many parts of Canada and Quebec. Conventional wisdom would have us believe that the barriers of language and culture are so high that we have almost nothing in common, but let us look at the reality. The French-speaking Quebecer insists that his children have access to as rich a range of opportunities as are available anywhere in the country. Well, I live in Sydney, Nova Scotia, and I feel exactly the same way about my children. The Quebecer is sometimes irritated by what he perceives to be a far-distant federal government whose attention is concentrated to a large extent on someone else or on some other area. That has been precisely the complaint of the maritimer for 100 years or more. The Quebecer looks at newer and wealthier areas of Canada and insists that his history and his pioneering efforts to help put the infant Canada on its feet should be recognized and respected as something of tremendous value to the country as a whole. Well, the people in my part of Canada are steeped in more than 350 years of history and can look back upon an impressive record of nation building which has benefited all of Canada, and we, too, insist that our past be as prominent a part of the Canadian record as any tower in Toronto or any oil well in Alberta.

What maritimers share with Quebecers most of all is a sense of the history of this country, a sense of how it was built, an appreciation of the sacrifices and hardships borne by those long dead in giving us today the kind of country which Canada is.

We share with Quebecers the insistent demand that the contribution of those who have lived and worked in our part of the country—the human contribution, measured in terms of courage and compromise and ceaseless effort to build together—be valued as a living part of the Canadian reality, equal to any achievements anywhere in contemporary Canada.

We share with Quebecers a sense of the betrayal of our history, evident in the attitudes of those Canadians who talk as though Canadian history began with their birth. They ignore the fact that the rights and the freedoms they now enjoy were won for them in more than three centuries of human struggle on the part of great and little people who lived out their lives along the Atlantic coast and the banks of the St. Lawrence.

We share with Quebecers the knowledge that we would feel more at home in the Canadian household if more Canadians in other parts of Canada demonstrated a greater awareness of how that foundation was actually built.

As I travel from province to province and region to region, I have come to believe that one of our greatest problems today is the lack of a proper sense of history. In large measure, the present generation in many parts of Canada does not understand the history, the difficulties, the successes of the people in Quebec, the maritimes and the Atlantic region. To be absolutely fair, it must be admitted that the eastern Canadian, the Quebecer, the maritimer and the Atlantic region Canadian have not made sufficient effort to understand the legitimate concerns of those Canadians who live in Ontario and the west.

We are all Canadians, but in many important respects we really do not know each other. So perhaps one of the most important things that individual Canadians can do to strengthen Canadian unity is simply to visit other regions of Canada, meet the people who live there, and come to understand their point of view. As a Nova Scotian, for example, I cannot understand why so many people have chosen to spend their vacation dollars in Britain or Spain but have never chosen to see the Atlantic Ocean from the beautiful shores of Nova Scotia.

In every part of Canada there are to be found among the people stereotype visions of other Canadians. Some of those impressions are good and some are not so good. But that is really not the point. The point, honourable senators, is that they are false impressions, which are formed without the aid of personal acquaintance. A fisherman in Newfoundland, for instance, may think of Albertans as being a rich and selfish people; but if he could visit that province and see the hardships and uncertainty experienced by the western farmer or rancher, the fear of the day when the oil runs out, the constant struggle against an unforgiving climate, he would learn that Albertans are very much like himself, that they are people who are working hard to make the best of what they have.

I recall a visit to one of the western provinces a few months ago when I was told that the people in that region were tired of feeding the maritimes. I asked the young man in question if he was a native of that province. It turned out that he was a transplanted New Brunswicker who had lived in the west for the previous seven years. I asked him if, when he was growing up, his parents had ever told him about the hungry thirties when the people of the maritimes sent food and clothing to fill the bellies and warm the bodies of western Canadians. It was his first knowledge of this significant event in our history.

On the night of May 4 of this year, I arrived in the city of Regina from Vancouver. The people of Saskatchewan, as I recall, were terribly concerned, and with good reason, because they were faced with the possibility of the worst drought since the so-called dirty thirties. The commerce of the province had been severely affected. And overnight the rains came. Some people, linking my visit with the downpour, even started calling me "the rainmaker". It was referred to as the 250-million-dollar rain.

● (1440)

That day I visited Yorkton, and the small villages of Roxton, Calder and Rhein, to name but a few. I believe it was in Rhein, with a population of 284, and with that 250-million-dollar rain falling, that two elderly gentlemen in a general store, on learning that I was from Nova Scotia, recalled the assistance that had been given in those early days. One of the gentlemen remarked that times had been so good in recent years that it took a near drought to cause them to think back to the thirties. I was more confident about the future of this country when I was talking to the farmer who remembered how we helped each other in the thirties than when I was listening to a newcomer to the west, a former maritimer, who was now tired of "feeding the maritimes." "Feeding the maritimes!"—an atrocious expression, which could only be uttered by a Canadian whose sense of history does not extend beyond yesterday's headlines.

Maritimers did not join in the partnership which created Canada in order to be fed by the other partners. I invite you to look back to the time of Confederation and to the years immediately following, and ask yourselves who it was whose contribution demonstrated the greatest sense of commitment to that union. Was it Ontario which sacrificed economic advantage for the common good? Not at all. The most generous partner in the union at that time was Nova Scotia, whose traders, shipbuilders, farmers and fishermen were competing at this time with conspicuous success against the best that our cousins in Upper Canada and the New England states had to offer, and it was Nova Scotia which accepted a lessening of its own economic advantage for the sake of that union. It was Nova Scotia which invested some of the security and prosperity which future generations would otherwise have enjoyed in order that the union could establish a secure foundation.

It would be nice if one could occasionally hear from Toronto, for example, some friendly voice acknowledging, even fleetingly, the economic policies which transformed that city from a farmer's marketplace into one of the greatest metropolitan centres on the North American continent. Those economic policies, honourable senators, were policies which were made possible by the willingness of Nova Scotians and others to gamble on Canada. And, when I hear of the occasional Toronto resident, for instance, who makes his contribution to the unity of our country by complaining about the number of maritimers who are swelling his city's welfare rolls, I would like to believe that somewhere in the back of his mind, and buried in the deeper recesses of his heart, there may be found some slight awareness that the greatness of his city results in some considerable measure from the contribution of the Toronto businessmen, the bank presidents, the government leaders, the university professors, the creative artists and ordinary people who inherited by birth a love of the sight and sound of the Atlantic long before, by adoption, they came to love the sights and sounds of downtown Toronto.

I suppose the point of all this, honourable senators, is that this country, in my opinion, will not be truly united until each of us is willing to recognize both the vast contribution of the other and the present rights of the other to an equal share of opportunity and of dignity. To that end there are many lessons to be learned, because we are all interdependent. The economic cycle has a habit of turning, so that once again our people in Atlantic Canada, with the harvest of the sea, the farm, the forest, potential commercial quantities of offshore oil and gas, an abundance of coal, deep water ports, experienced steel workers and a fundamental desire to work, will have an opportunity once again to contribute to Canada more than anyone might reasonably expect.

I would be delighted, personally, if more Canadians would come to visit my part of the country and get to know its people. They would be impressed by the level of skills, the energy and the resourcefulness with which Atlantic Canadians are trying to make the best of what they have. They would be impressed as well by the kind of courage it takes for a fisherman to go out on the sea, or for the miner to go into the depths of our mines—some of which run miles out under the sea—every day and face incredible physical challenges. They would be inspired, I believe, by the invincible optimism which keeps many struggling communities alive, and by the deep commitment to enduring human values which makes Atlantic Canada a very special place. I want to share with other Canadians the beauty of my province and the strength of character of its people, because I proudly believe that those natural and human qualities are a valuable part of the Canadian heritage which belongs to all of Canada and to all Canadians. I know that qualities of equal value are evident in every other region of our country, and I want people of my region to go out, as I have done, and see for themselves what the others have built, and to see for themselves the many reasons why other Canadians are justly proud of the part of Canada which they call home.

Too often our impressions of regions other than our own are formed from newspaper reports which focus on the violence of man and his nature, which emphasize the failure of people to understand each other, and which highlight man's considerable capacity for animosity towards others. What we can learn only from personal experience is the boundless wealth of goodwill that exists among Canadians for each other—a goodwill which seldom makes the headlines, but which is daily evident to everyone who takes the trouble just to meet a stranger. That is why I am a strong supporter of expanding travel and exchange programs in both the public and private sectors, which would encourage Canadians, and especially young Canadians, to go and see for themselves what other Canadians are like. Each new friendship formed, and each new insight gained into another's point of view, is a positive step towards the development of that national consensus which Canada needs—a consensus built on co-operation, understanding and mutual respect.

It is not good enough to stand on the sidelines just to carp and criticize. This is no time for cop-outs. Everyone has an obligation to become involved. The days ahead are going to require a tremendous amount of work. The task before us is the most important we have ever faced. To hold our land together we must build a better society where people of English, French and many other cultures want to live with each other, help each other, love one another and enrich each other in an atmosphere of freedom, co-operation, mutual respect and personal fulfilment. This is a time to stand up for Canada as concerned and committed Canadians. It is a time to stand behind our leaders in a sustained campaign for our survival as a united people.

The climactic battle for the hearts and minds of those who might be tempted to give up on Canada has begun. It is up to each of us, in every province, region and territory to make the struggle our own. Canadians living in the English-speaking provinces should not delude themselves for one minute into thinking that the future of Canada will be decided in Quebec alone. In a crucially important sense the promised referendum will be decided in English Canada as well. I suggest we should be very concerned when we hear some English-speaking Canadians, when they are considering the possibility of Quebec's separation, saying, "Why not let them go?" That attitude, in my opinion, is totally unacceptable. It is an incredible view to take for any Canadian who professes to love his country, or who really tries to understand its history and heritage.

● (1450)

The simple fact is that ours is a country which is the envy of the world. Of course, there have been difficulties. There will always be difficulties. But most of the world's population would give anything to trade their problems for ours. I want to emphasize that any massive commitment or recommitment to Canada and to each other is not the work of a single day, a single week or a single month, nor is it the work of one or two leaders, one or two parties, or any small group of individuals. Each of us has a huge stake in the struggle, and we will all influence the outcome—either positively through an individual and collective renewal of the will to live together, or negatively through apathy or hostility toward those who look to us for a sign of good will. In this struggle there are no sidelines to occupy, there are no spectator's benches, and there are no places to hide. We are all involved.

I am confident that in the months to come Canadians in every province will demonstrate beyond doubt their love for Canada, their willingness to work for Canada and, above all, their commitment to the dream of a stronger and more united country, which Canada can and will be.

[Translation]

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: Honourable senators, I would like to congratulate Senator Graham who spoke before me. Senator Graham is Chairman of the Liberal Party of Canada. In a few moments I would like to ask him a question. I have very much appreciated the introductory remarks of his contribution, where he explained the practical things he has to do in his capacity as party chairman. I hope I have an opportunity to participate in this debate later on.

[English]

On motion of Senator Petten, debate adjourned.

CLERESTORY OF THE SENATE CHAMBER

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Connolly, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Cameron, for the adoption of the Report of the Special Senate Committee on the Clerestory of the Senate Chamber.—(Honourable Senator Smith (Colchester)).

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, I gladly yield to Senator Carter. I hope I will be permitted to resume the debate myself at some future time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Chesley W. Carter: Honourable senators, I thank Senator Smith for yielding to me his position in the debate and allowing me to proceed today.

The report of the Clerestory Committee, tabled by the chairman on June 8, and his brilliant exposition of it on June 23, along with the fine contributions of previous speakers, leave little room for additional comments. Any attempt to do so would be akin to gilding the lily.

I have two reasons for intervening in the debate today, the first of which is to pay tribute to the chairman of this committee. The Clerestory Committee has proved to be a very useful one, and Senator John Connolly deserves great credit for his initiative in getting it established. It was also a most enlightening committee. I, for one, learned a great deal from it. Speaking personally and as one of its members, I can say that it was one of the most interesting and enjoyable committees on which I have had the privilege to serve.

The reason for that enjoyment was due in large part to the unparalleled personal qualities of Senator Connolly, and the exemplary manner in which he handled the committee. His informal, easy-going attitude put witnesses and members alike at their ease, and enabled them to operate as a team in focusing on the essential problems and searching for the best solutions. This process was facilitated tremendously by the unfailing patience and courtesy which Senator Connolly exhibited at all times, and also by his wisdom and familiarity with the subject under discussion, which indicated a tremendous amount of preparation, involving a lot of extra reading, thought, study and research.

As a result, the committee accomplished in seven or eight meetings more than is usually achieved in twice as many, and has produced a report that should be extremely useful when the time comes to make alterations to the interior of this chamber.

Honourable senators will have noted that the report makes only one or two firm recommendations, but puts forward a number of suggestions for adoption or for further study when the time for planning and decision making arrives.

I think it is obvious that the time is not far distant when the large pictures underneath the windows will have to be removed. They depict scenes of the First World War. While they are interesting to me personally, because for the last ten years or so I have been facing the picture of the Old Cloth Hall at Ypres, where I had my baptism of fire nearly 60 years ago, I can understand that they would not be very interesting to the present generation, or to the thousands of tourists who visit this chamber every year. Furthermore, apart from a reminder of the price of freedom, these pictures have little or no relationship to the chamber itself, or to the Senate as an institution. It seems to me that the space they occupy could be better utilized for something more relevant.

The committee learned that behind these pictures are blank walls. The question arises as to what should be done with that space if and when the pictures are taken away. The report makes several suggestions, including the use of tapestries and the restoration of the idea of a triforium as designed by John Pearson in 1928.

• (1500)

The committee devoted a great deal of time to the study of themes that might be developed in both the stained glass windows of the clerestory and the space between them and the woodwork on the walls. Here again the committee suggests such themes as ethnic origins for the windows, and early explorers and the development of law as themes for the space beneath them.

This brings me to my second reason for speaking in this debate, which is to express the hope that, whatever is done with the space behind the present pictures, whether it is covered with tapestries, murals, or a triforium gallery in accordance with the 1928 design of John Pearson, some way will be found to include the theme of unity. In this connection I should like to read from the evidence of Dr. Jacques Monet of the Canadian Historical Association and the Department of History at the University of Ottawa, as reported in issue No. 3 of the committee's proceedings, at page 3:6, who said:

I have read with great interest the record of your previous meetings and the suggestions which have been made so far about themes. Themes were suggested about unity, sacrifice, peoples, discoverers, animals, explorers, and even illustrations of the talents and duties of senators.

I would advise that you retain themes which have to do with the Senate chamber and the institution of the Senate, and not others. Explorers, discoverers and such themes are good, they are exciting, wonderful and breath-taking, but I think they are not ad rem in the Senate chamber.

My suggestions would be to retain themes from Canadian history and the Canadian experience which touch on and illustrate something that has to do with the Senate. I do not wish to make a pun here or use a mixed metaphor, but, since we are talking about windows, I suggest themes which show the Senate in a good light. In reflecting upon this, I tried to think of points—it was not difficult to find points—that are characteristic of the work of the Senate and illustrative of the Senate chamber itself.

As the chairman brought out in his speech last April in the Senate, a speech which led to the setting up of this committee, the Senate chamber is the place that unites the three branches of Parliament—the Crown, the Senate and the Commons. Furthermore, in the Senate chamber are united, at the opening of Parliament or at the installation of the Governor General, the three powers of government—the executive, the legislative and the judicial. In this the Senate chamber is unique. It is the only place where the three branches of Parliament and the three powers of government are actually united.

This is a rather important fact and a rather powerful theme that could be exploited in the decoration of the Senate chamber. It is a unique institution. It is the locus in quo, of these double three, if you will—of the three branches of Parliament and the three powers of government. In that sense the Senate chamber itself is the symbol of unity. It is the only place in which all of this is united and brought together. So that the theme of unity is one that would be very appropriate to this kind of decoration and this kind of work. That is the Senate chamber itself. You can see that there are possibilities for the development of this theme of unity, of the three powers of government and of the three branches of Parliament.

Honourable senators, our whole country today is seized with the problem of preserving national unity. The debate on this question now taking place in this chamber, pursuant to the motion proposed by the government leader, has emphasized the fact that our schools teach so little about Canadian history, and that so little is known by the public at large about the Senate and what it does, many not even being aware of its existence.

Every year thousands of students visit this chamber and are given a little talk by one of the guides. But what impressions do they take away with them? I do not think there is anything more likely to make a lasting impression on them than the Senate as a vital institution and a symbol of unity for our nation. Indeed, when the themes have been selected and developed in the windows and tapestries, or whatever means is used to utilize the space now occupied by the pictures, I hope a booklet enlarging on these themes will be printed and distributed widely to visitors, and particularly to students.

Some suggestions have been made concerning the traditional dress worn by Madam Speaker, the pages and other officials. I agree that some of the procedures, particularly the number of bows that are made, which seem in my mind to exceed the requirements of ordinary courtesy, are becoming an anachronism and contribute to the anachronistic image of the Senate. As for the uniform, I should like to put on record—and I am sure I am speaking for all honourable senators—my view that Madam Speaker always looks beautiful whatever dress she wears.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Carter: The sombre habit she wears only serves to enhance the radiance of her personality.

On motion of Senator Grosart, for Senator Smith (Colchester), debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I move that the Senate do now adjourn during pleasure to reassemble at the call of the bell at approximately 5.30 this afternoon.

Senator Deschatelets: Are we to understand that there is no interim report to be made at this time about progress in the Commons?

Senator Langlois: We hope that when we return at 5.30 we shall have something worth while to report.

Senator Choquette: The bell could ring before that.

Senator Langlois: Yes, we are adjourning to the call of the bell.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5.30 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

BILL TO AMEND—ORDER BROUGHT FORWARD

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I ask that the order for the third reading at the next sitting of the Senate of Bill

C-49, to amend the Canada Pension Plan, be now brought forward.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

THIRD READING

Senator Langlois moved the third reading of Bill C-49, to amend the Canada Pension Plan.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication has been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

July 14, 1977

Madam,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Jean Beetz, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber to-day, the 14th day of July, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be
Madam,
Your obedient servant,
Pierre Trottier
Deputy Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING ADJOURNMENTS OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs have power to sit during the adjournments of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Flynn: Would the deputy leader explain what this committee will do?

Senator Langlois: I am making this motion at the request of the chairman of the committee. It is possible that the committee will not have to meet unless it is to consider bills which might have to be dealt with during the adjournment of the Senate to August 2, according to the motion which will come next. Other than that I cannot be too precise, because the chairman is not here at the moment.

Senator McIlraith: There is one bill before the committee now.

Senator Langlois: Yes.

Senator Benidickson: Honourable senators, I would enlarge the motion. In my opinion, during adjournments of the Senate any committee should have power to meet. I do not know why we do not amend our rules, and do as is done in my province, Ontario, where committees of the Legislature sit between formal sessions, and an expense allowance is given.

Senator Langlois: It is also done in the province of Quebec.

Senator Benidickson: Do they do that in Quebec?

Senator Langlois: Yes.

Senator Benidickson: I do not want anything extravagant, because I live in Ottawa, but I believe that a modest per diem allowance for hotel expenses should be available to members of committees which meet between formal sessions. Our committees have an obligation, with respect to certain serious matters, to be available to sit between the formal sessions.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, may I say just a few words? My honourable friend said he was proposing an enlargement of my motion, but I did not expect it to be as big an enlargement as he has just proposed. I do not think we can deal with that today. The Senate can at a later date refer this to the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, or the Internal Economy Committee. It would have to be considered by both committees, and it is a matter into which we could look after we return from the proposed summer recess.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, August 2, 1977, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5.45 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Jean Beetz, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to approve, give effect to and declare valid certain agreements between the Grand Council of the Crees (of Quebec), the Northern Quebec Inuit Association, the Government of Quebec, la Société d'énergie de la Baie James, la Société de développement de la Baie James, la Commission hydro-électrique de Québec and the Government of Canada and certain other related agreements to which the Government of Canada is a party.

An Act to extend the present laws in Canada that proscribe discrimination and that protect the privacy of individuals.

An Act respecting the office of the Auditor General of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto.

An Act to amend the Fisheries Act and to amend the Criminal Code in consequence thereof.

An Act to amend the Canada Pension Plan.

An Act to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act.

An Act to amend the Currency and Exchange Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

An Act to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act and the Foreign Insurance Companies Act.

An Act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Beauharnois-Salaberry).

An Act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Blainville-Deux-Montagnes).

An Act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Brampton-Georgetown).

An Act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Cochrane).

An Act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Huron-Bruce).

An Act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Kootenay East-Revelstoke).

An Act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Laval).

An Act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Lethbridge-Foothills).

An Act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (London-Middlesex).

An Act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Saint-Jacques).

An Act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Saint-Léonard-Anjou).

An Act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe).

An Act to incorporate Continental Bank of Canada.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

HONOURABLE CHESLEY W. CARTER

WISHES FOR A HAPPY RETIREMENT

On the motion to adjourn:

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, before the Senate adjourns I should like to say goodbye to the Honourable Senator Carter and to wish him a very happy retirement.

We shall, of course, have the pleasure of seeing him at the reception afterwards.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, August 2, at 11 a.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, August 1, 1977

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT BILL, 1977

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-51, to amend the Criminal Code, the Customs Tariff, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Senator McIlraith: Honourable senators, with leave now.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I do not believe there is any objection on this side to this bill's being given second reading as the first order of the day. However, before leave is granted I think the Leader of the Government should indicate what is expected of us this week. We should like to have some idea of the perspective of the government?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is hoped that we may be able to dispose of the bills which will be coming before us by Friday of this week, and in that endeavour we hope to work very closely with the opposition. It will be the intention to have three other bills given first reading this evening, and it may be that honourable senators will grant leave allowing the motions for the second reading of those bills to be put this evening also. That being so, the proposal then would be to have most of tomorrow taken up with committee deliberations, with a sitting of the Senate called for 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon to enable members of the opposition, if they feel they are in a position to do so, to speak on the motions then before the house for the second reading of these measures, and to hear other speeches which may be made, following which we could then move, as quickly as possible, to have these bills sent to committee for detailed consideration.

If we organize our work carefully this week, it may not be necessary to have the Senate sit next week. I am sure that most senators will wish to take full advantage of the hours available to us this week in an endeavour to get as much done as possible. As I indicated earlier, it is planned, if feasible, to give first and second readings to four bills this evening. And then we have other measures to be dealt with such as Bill C-41, relating to the Maritime Code, now before the committee. It is my hope that during this week we can work as co-operatively as possible. Certainly it is my intention to work very closely with the Leader of the Opposition towards the end that all measures shall be considered thoroughly and fairly.

Senator Flynn: There has been consultation, and I thank the Leader of the Government for that. The only problem I see now is one of time. There are four bills to be given first reading this evening and we now have a target date, as mentioned by the Leader of the Government, of Friday of this week for the passage of those measures. We are faced with a very tight schedule. Yet all of these measures were passed by the other place approximately 10 days ago. As far back as Friday, July 22, it was agreed in the other place that they would conclude debate on these matters and adjourn, at the latest, on Wednesday, July 27. In fact, the other place adjourned even earlier, on Monday, July 25. In view of that, I am left wondering why the Senate was not recalled last week so as to allow us more time in which to deal with these important measures. Given the time-frame we are now faced with, we might not be able to give these matters our fullest consideration.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I want to make it very clear that I support the view that the Senate shall be fully prepared to take as long as will be required to deal efficiently and fairly with the measures which come before us. I mentioned the Friday date only by way of suggesting that because of the hours which are available to us this week, it may be possible to meet that target date, but no effort will be made by the government to restrict or to attempt to restrict in any way legitimate debate opportunities.

● (2010)

As to the proposal that the Senate should have been recalled last week, an immediate check was made with respect to the travel schedules of senators and it was found that recalling the Senate tonight appeared to meet the requirements of most senators. A number of senators were travelling and had made plans on the basis that the Senate would be recalled according to the schedule agreed to when we adjourned on July 14. That is the only explanation I can give. It was simply a matter of assessing the personal situation of honourable senators.

Senator Flynn: If you have convinced the other members of the Senate, I shall not pursue the matter, but you have not convinced me.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by Honourable Senator McIlraith, seconded by Honourable Senator Connolly, that this bill be now read the second time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Flynn: I suggest that it be dealt with as the first order of the day.

Senator McIlraith: If you wish to have it stand until later this day, I have no objection.

Motion agreed to.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION REORGANIZATION BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-27, to establish the Department of Employment and Immigration, the Canada Employment Immigration Commission and the Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read a second time?

Senator Hicks: Honourable senators, if leave is granted I would ask that the second reading of this bill be the second order on today's order paper.

Senator Flynn: Yes, as the second order of the day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

STATUTE LAW (METRIC CONVERSION) AMENDMENT BILL, 1976

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-23, to facilitate conversion to the metric system of measurement.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Senator Molgat: With leave of the Senate, I would move that the second reading of this bill be the third order on today's order paper.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRATION BILL, 1976

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Senator Riley: With leave of the Senate, I would move that the second reading of this bill be the fourth order on today's order paper.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to sections 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of contract between the Government of Canada and the municipality of Ponoka, Alberta, for the use or employment of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, pursuant to section 20(3) of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, Chapter R-9, R.S.C., 1970 (English Text).

Copies of contracts between the Government of Canada and the municipalities of Oromocto, Riverview and McAdam, New Brunswick, for the use or employment of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, pursuant to section 20(3) of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, Chapter R-9, R.S.C., 1970 (English Text).

Copies of Reports of the Anti-Inflation Board to the Governor General in Council, pursuant to section 17(2) of the Anti-Inflation Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, reporting its reference to the Administrator of the said Act of certain proposed changes in compensation plans, as follows:

1. St. Boniface School Division No. 4 and the executive employees, dated July 12, 1977.

2. Alberta Government Telephones and its Traffic Employees, represented by the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 348, dated July 12, 1977.

Copies of contracts between the Government of Canada and the municipalities of Stonewall and Winnipeg Beach, Manitoba, and the municipality of St. Paul, Alberta, for the use or employment of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, pursuant to section 20(3) of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, Chapter R-9, R.S.C., 1970 (English Text).

Copies of contracts between the Government of Canada and the municipality of Strathmore, Alberta (English Text), the municipalities of Souris and Montague, Prince Edward Island (English Text), and the municipality of Buctouche, New Brunswick (French Text), for the use or employment of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, pursuant to section 20(3) of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, Chapter R-9, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the number and amount of Loans to Immigrants made under section 65(1) of the Immigration Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 65(6) of the said Act, Chapter I-2, R.S.C., 1970.

Report on the administration of the Canada Pension Plan for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1976, pursuant to section 118, Chapter C-5, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Statement on operations under the Veterans Insurance Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 18(2) of the said Act, Chapter V-3, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Statement on operations under The Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 17(2) of the said Act, Chapter 59, Statutes of Canada, 1951.

Report of the Canadian Grain Commission for the year ended December 31, 1976, pursuant to section 14 of the Canada Grain Act, Chapter 7, Statutes of Canada, 1970-71-72.

Copies of Order of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, respecting compensation plan between Canadian Freightways Limited and the group of its office employees, represented by Office and Technical Employees Union, Local 15. Order dated July 18, 1977.

Copies of Orders of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, respecting certain compensation plans, as follows:

1. The Rural Municipality of Siglunes, Ashern, Manitoba and its Secretary-Treasurer. Order dated July 19, 1977.

2. Victoria General Hospital, Winnipeg, Manitoba and the group of its Operating Engineers, represented by the International Union of Operating Engineers, Local 827. Order dated July 19, 1977.

Copies of Report, dated July 20, 1977, of the Committee of Inquiry into the National Broadcasting Service established by the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission on March 14, 1977 (Chairman, Mr. Harry J. Boyle).

Statement showing Classification of Deposit Liabilities Payable in Canadian Currency of the Chartered Banks of Canada as at April 30, 1977, pursuant to section 119(1) of the Bank Act, Chapter B-1, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Superintendent of Insurance on the administration of the Pension Benefits Standards Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 22 of the said Act, Chapter P-8, R.S.C., 1970.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTINGS OF SENATE

Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications have power to sit while the Senate is sitting tomorrow, Tuesday, 2nd August, 1977, to Friday, 5th August, 1977, inclusive, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

HISTORIC BUILDINGS

PROPOSED DEMOLITION OF HISTORIC HOUSE—QUESTION

Senator Molson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government about an historic house in St. Jean, Quebec, which apparently is to be demolished.

This house is the one in which General Montgomery is reputed to have lived in 1775 during the invasion of Quebec. The newspaper story said it would be torn down or removed to make way for the expansion of Grand Bernier Boulevard which is part of an $89 million program to rebuild the St. Jean Army Base.

● (2020)

As this house may be of real historic significance, I feel that very careful consideration should be given to its demolition before that boulevard is extended.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I must take that question as notice. Certainly inquiries will be made of the appropriate department in order to determine the historic value of this house, and whether there can be any federal government influence on such a decision.

ACQUISITION OR RENOVATION OF HOMES

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE FOR SINGLE PERSONS—QUESTION

Senator Grosart: May I ask the Leader of the Government if he would inform the Senate as soon as reasonably possible as to the status of single persons in respect to obtaining government assistance for the acquisition or renovation of homes?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I must take that question as notice, and will seek that information as quickly as possible.

AGRICULTUREINTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT—FURTHER QUESTION

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, several weeks ago I asked the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he could give us a report on the international negotiations which it is hoped will lead to an international wheat agreement. I believe he gave an undertaking that he would look into the matter.

I wonder if I may now ask him if we can expect some kind of report soon, particularly as to whether or not there is any hope that such an agreement could be in place and in effect for the 1977-78 crop year?

Senator Perrault: I recall that some information was provided with respect to the question asked by the honourable senator. I would ask honourable senators to check the journals of this chamber. I believe that some information was provided in reply to that question.

Senator Flynn: If not, you could take it as notice.

FOREIGN AFFAIRSARRANGEMENT WITH UNITED STATES FOR OIL OR GAS PIPELINE CORRIDORS—QUESTION

Senator Austin: I should like to ask the government leader whether Canada has entered into any arrangement or understanding with the United States with respect to the provision of oil or gas pipeline corridors across our respective countries. In the event that some agreement exists, would the government leader advise this chamber as to its nature?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I shall endeavour to provide a report to the Senate as quickly as possible. It is a technical question and information is not immediately available.

Senator Flynn: It is a specialized question; not a technical one.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT BILL, 1977SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. George J. McIlraith moved the second reading of Bill C-51, to amend the Criminal Code, the Customs Tariff, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-51, to amend the Criminal Code, the Customs Tariff, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act, is a rather extensive bill, as can be seen from its title. While the points raised are important, I hope the bill can be made less confusing by my remarks, and, I hope, certainly not more confusing than a reading of the bill might indicate.

Senator Flynn: So it will be really long.

Senator McIlraith: The bill itself is really a derivative of Bill C-83, which was before Parliament through most of 1976, and that bill was examined by both the Commons committee and the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

I was interested, in preparing these few remarks, to note the extent to which the minister had taken account of the work of those two committees in preparing the new Bill C-51, and of some of the representations made by outside bodies. I must say that I came to feel I ought to commend the minister for two things, namely, his persistence in seeing a bill involving firearms control through Parliament as far as he has this session, and for his sensitivity to recommendations of committees of Parliament.

Senator Flynn: The first qualification is more evident than the second.

Senator McIlraith: The second qualification is a very desirable one in ministers, and I want to acknowledge it at once. When I find the opportunity, I like to do so. All too frequently we do not have such an opportunity, since the sensitivity I speak of is not always there.

The bill itself can be divided into four subheadings, for all practical purposes: the firearms control provisions, the electronic surveillance provisions, provisions relating to dangerous offenders, and provisions relating to custody and release of inmates.

The main firearms control aspects of the bill include the provisions that new acquirers of firearms, before they can obtain a gun, must obtain a firearms acquisition certificate from a firearms officer, which in practical terms will usually be a police officer; the provision whereby the powers of the courts are expanded to prohibit existing gun owners from possessing and using firearms where they have records of conviction for certain crimes involving violence or the use of firearms; the provisions whereby police powers are expanded to allow them to seize firearms without a warrant in situations where there appears to be imminent danger to someone's safety or life; and the provisions by which provinces may request, under the act, that the federal government require proof of competence in the use of firearms before obtaining the firearms acquisition certificate.

Certain weapons which have no legitimate sporting use, and which are frequently used by criminals, are prohibited absolutely. And here I am referring, roughly, to automatics, and sawed-off rifles and shotguns. The detail on that is spelled out at length in the bill.

A new "need" requirement is introduced for persons wishing to register restricted weapons such as hand guns, revolvers, and so on.

New penalties are provided for careless handling or storage of firearms; in other words, leaving them lying around and that sort of thing.

Gun businesses are required to keep records, and a permit system is introduced for these businesses. In this connection also there are regulations for the storage, method of display and handling of firearms for firearms-related businesses and museums.

New penalties are imposed for persons using firearms in committing crimes.

Some new aspects were added in the committee of the other place. The most significant of these aspects is the requirement that businesses keep records for firearms transactions. This should be of considerable assistance to the police in criminal investigations. Perhaps that is all I need to say on firearms control at this point.

On the question of electronic surveillance, the changes are mainly as a result of experience with the existing legislation. There is a provision, for example, that will be of interest to certain members of the Senate, concerning the circumstances in which there can be electronic surveillance of lawyers' offices. A provision to protect the confidentiality of the solicitor-client relationship has been rather carefully worked out, and, indeed, was somewhat amended in committee in the other place. The right to an order permitting this surveillance is, of course, limited to cases where lawyers or their families or staff are specifically suspected of being involved in the committing of an offence.

● (2030)

The list of offences for which wiretaps can be ordered is expanded under the new law. There is a clarification in the rule as to the admissibility of evidence when there is a defect found in the electronic surveillance order. It defines more precisely the circumstances in which the derivative evidence may be used. Another provision concerns the period of notification, which is limited to 90 days under existing law—that is, notification of the person who has been the subject of the wiretap. On proper application, and by order of the judge, that period can be extended up to a period of three years. It was found that the 90-day limit had a curious but unsuspected effect, in that when the notification was sent out very often it was effective notice to others involved in the crime, and enabled them to cover their tracks and escape. It was, in fact, defeating the purpose for which the provision was intended.

Then there are provisions dealing with dangerous offenders. They are substantially the same as the provisions in Bill C-83, and will repeal the existing provisions dealing with habitual criminals and dangerous sexual offenders, and enact new provisions that will enable the courts to impose an indeterminate sentence of imprisonment in the case of all dangerous offenders, including dangerous sexual offenders. That sentence can only be imposed when the offender has been found guilty of an indictable offence, and it must be an indictable offence for which he can be sentenced to 10 years or more. It must involve, of course, the use or attempted use of violence, or conduct endangering or likely to endanger the life or safety of another person. In addition, the court must be satisfied that the offender constitutes a threat to the life, safety or well-being of others.

The provision for an application to the court to find a convicted offender to be a dangerous offender can only be brought with the consent of the attorney general of the province. The National Parole Board will be required to review the case of a dangerous offender not later than three years after the sentence, and every two years thereafter.

There are some provisions for the custody and release of inmates. They involve amendments to the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act. The main one concerns statutory remission in the federal and provincial institutions. It is being abolished, and replaced by an equivalent measure of earned remission. There are certain provisions as to the revocation of such remission, and so on.

The National Parole Board is being expanded from 19 to 26 members, and it is also being given—and this clarifies a point in practice which has developed in the last year, and over which there was considerable controversy—clear power as the ultimate authority for all forms of unescorted temporary absences from federal penitentiaries. This clarifies a point that was very much at issue with some individuals working in the field. The National Parole Service is being taken away from the authority of the National Parole Board. It now becomes the responsibility of the Commissioner of Penitentiaries, whose title or office is being renamed Commissioner of Corrections.

There are a lot of detailed provisions with respect to the Prisons and Reformatories Act. The bill revises that act so that the provinces are given more discretion in the administration of the provincial prisons, and the authority for indeterminate sentences exercised in Ontario and British Columbia will disappear. That, of course, is consequential on the proposed delegation of parole jurisdiction over inmates sentenced to less than two years to the provinces.

That summarizes the bill. The reference to the Customs Act in the title, is of course, purely incidental, and relates only to the import provisions concerning certain restricted weapons, and so on.

I thank honourable senators for hearing me so patiently. This is one of those bills that I think is better examined in committee, because the provisions are relatively unrelated. On matters of principle I do not see any substantial point of controversy, but on matters of detail there may be many questions of form, and so on, that require explanation and study in committee. Therefore, if it meets the wish of the Senate, if and when this bill receives second reading I will propose that it be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Senator Godfrey: Would the honourable senator permit a question? When the subject matter of the original Bill C-83 was being considered by the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, there were two recommendations that I specifically recall at this time. One was that the offence of using firearms when committing a crime should be extended so that it would be an offence merely to have possession of a firearm when committing a crime. The second recommendation that I recall had to do with dangerous offenders. From what the honourable senator has said it would seem that in this bill, as in Bill C-83, a dangerous offender must be reviewed for parole at the end of three years, whereas the time before a man could be considered for parole on the serious and basic offence for which he was convicted might be a minimum of, say, five or six years, yet if he was held to be a dangerous offender he could get a first hearing for parole in three years. The committee made a recommendation to remove this anomaly.

I should like to know whether either of those recommendations is reflected in this bill.

Senator McIlraith: The answer to that would be long and very complex because it involves several sections. It would prolong the debate on second reading unduly, which I do not think is the wish of honourable senators. This is something that is better dealt with in committee. However, I think the first point is taken account of in the new bill; the offence is provided for. On the second point, I recall the discussion in committee very well. I would want to check the actual clause, but as far as I know there is no change in the clause in this bill from the earlier one. However, I want to take a reservation on that.

On motion of Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

● (2040)

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION REORGANIZATION BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Henry D. Hicks moved the second reading of Bill C-27, to establish the Department of Employment and Immigration, the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission and the Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-27, the Employment and Immigration Reorganization Bill, contains significant provisions in three main areas. First, it authorizes the integration of the Department of Manpower and Immigration and the Unemployment Insurance Commission into a department and commission of employment and immigration. Second, it establishes a new Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council to advise the Minister of Employment and Immigration on matters to which his powers, duties and functions extend. Third, it introduces a number of amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

I think it would be appropriate if I were to comment on the purpose and essential provisions of the bill in respect to each of these three major areas in turn, commencing with the departmental integration. The question that immediately arises on the subject of integration of the Department of Manpower and Immigration and the Unemployment Insurance Commission is why integration is now appropriate in view of the decision taken approximately ten years ago to separate the employment service from the Unemployment Insurance Commission. A central factor is that conditions in the Canadian society, economy and labour market of the late 1970s are significantly different from those obtaining in the late 1960s. During the last decade there has been an important evolution in our manpower programs and in unemployment insurance. Manpower services generally and, in particular, the counselling, placement, training and mobility programs, as well as the newer job creation programs, have greatly strengthened and matured. At the same time, the unemployment insurance program has been extended to cover almost the entire labour force and has come to play a much more significant role in the operation of the Canadian labour market and the Canadian economy.

As a result of these changes the objectives of the Department of Manpower and Immigration and the Unemployment Insurance Commission have become more closely linked. The two organizations have begun to co-operate more closely, and ways have been developed to co-ordinate their programs and activities. While this co-ordination has already yielded significant and positive results, it seems likely that a unified management will provide a better service to the Canadian public.

Specifically, integration is expected to lead to improvements in the services to the public through:

(a) a rationalization of the present network of local offices of the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the Department of Manpower and Immigration;

(b) the conversion of most service points into one-stop centres where the complete range of services of the two organizations would be available to the public;

(c) the faster and more systematic exposure of clientele to employment services;

(d) a simplification of the documentation required of clients and a streamlining of the procedures to be followed by them in using the services provided under the employment and insurance program.

I certainly hope that these worthy objectives can be attained by this new legislation.

It is also important to bear in mind that the immigration program has had and will continue to have a far-reaching effect on the Canadian labour market. The inclusion of immigration in the mandate of the new organization will, therefore, hopefully achieve an integrated approach to the development of manpower programs.

The specific provisions for integration are located in Part I, clauses 1 to 14, of the bill. The mandate of the minister of the new department and commission is contained in clause 5. The minister's powers, duties and functions will relate to:

(a) the development and utilization of labour market resources in Canada;

(b) employment services;

(c) unemployment insurance;

(d) immigration.

It should be emphasized that the mandate of the minister represents a combination of his existing responsibilities.

As can be seen from an examination of this part, the new integrated organization will consist of both a department and a commission. The new Canadian employment and immigration commission will be responsible for the various labour market programs. These will include the payment of benefits under the unemployment insurance program, immigration recruitment, selection, enforcement and control, placement, counseling and training and the administration of other employment programs, such as direct job creation. It will also provide the administrative support functions for both the commission and the department.

The relatively small department of employment and immigration will be responsible for strategic policy development, program evaluation, labour market research and information services. It will help to ensure the closest possible linkages between labour market policies and programs and the government's overall economic and social strategies.

The effective fulfilment of the mandate of the commission will continue to require close co-operation and consultation between government, labour and business. Thus, the well-established policy of tripartite consultation and co-operation will be continued through the representation of workers and employers in the new commission. Indeed, the potential for effective co-operation will be enhanced, since the new commission's authority will extend not only to the unemployment insurance program but also to labour market programs generally, as well as immigration matters.

If Bill C-27 receives royal assent in the near future, the integration of the department and the commission at the national headquarters level could be completed by early fall of this year. Plans for restructuring the regional headquarters could be completed by the end of 1977. With respect to the integration of the field offices, the department and commission have selected and begun pilot projects for testing approaches that could be implemented for integrating the local offices. These and additional pilot projects will be run throughout the balance of 1977 into mid-1978. The actual integration of the 600 Canada Manpower and Unemployment Insurance local offices and service points, excluding the immigration offices, which would remain in their existing locations, would then commence in mid-1978 and be completed by early 1979. So much for Part I of the bill.

Part II of the bill, which includes clauses 15 to 25, contains the provisions for a new Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council. This part of the bill is, in a sense, consequential to Part I in that a new Advisory Council is needed to replace the Canada Manpower and Immigration Council and the Unemployment Insurance Advisory Committee. But it also provides an opportunity to design a better council, one which, hopefully, will be more responsive to the needs of the minister and the integrated department and commission. It is expected that the integrated council will be well placed to look at the problems of the Canadian labour market in a way that neither of the separate advisory bodies has been able to do. The provisions of the new advisory council have been drafted with a view to providing maximum flexibility. The council, which would consist of a chairman and from 15 to 21 other members to be appointed by the Governor in Council, will be able to examine areas that their members are interested in as well as those which the minister refers to it.

The reference to the existing Canada Manpower and Immigration Council Act, which allows for the establishment of regional or local advisory bodies, has been carried forward into the proposed legislation. Such provisions for regional and local committees under the present Canada Manpower and Immigration Council Act were never put into effect, as our Committee on National Finance observed in its recent study of the manpower policy of that department.

As the decentralization of programs proceeds, there is considerable potential for an enlarged co-operative advisory role at the sub-national and local levels as a source of important expertise on local labour market conditions. It is certainly my earnest hope that advantage will be taken of these opportunities to make the local advisory councils effective in a way that they have never been up to now. In any event, Parts I and II fulfil the first objective of Bill C-27, which is to improve the quality of the employment-related services of the federal government to all Canadians.

The remaining and complementary objective of Bill C-27 is to streamline and improve the unemployment insurance program in order to make it more responsive to present economic circumstances. This, then, brings us to Part III of Bill C-27, amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

By way of background, I might indicate that the amendments being made in this part of the bill, which includes clauses 26 to 67, have been proposed with three purposes in mind:

- (a) to simplify and streamline the benefit structure;
- (b) to decrease disincentives to work;
- (c) to eliminate anomalies and inequities within the act.

● (2050)

Of the considerable number of amendments, the most significant have arisen from the commission's comprehensive review of the unemployment insurance program in Canada, and that review was carried out during the years 1974 and 1975. Nearly all of the amendments have been the subject of intensive discussion involving the minister, the commission, the advisory council, members of Parliament, and representatives of the private sector during the development of the legislation, and during its consideration by the House of Commons and by the committee of that house. As a result of representations to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, a number of revisions were made to the bill during its consideration by the other place. I will note these as I discuss each of the major amendments, or category of amendments, in this part of Bill C-27.

The first major amendment in Part III is the introduction of a new three-phase benefit structure. The main elements of the new benefit structure are contained in clauses 32, 33, 34, 41 and 67, but there are a number of other clauses which contain consequential amendments.

The new three-phase benefit structure will have several distinct advantages over the current five-phase structure. It would be a very complicated matter to go through the present five-phase structure to determine the precise benefits any particular unemployed person receiving unemployment insurance would be entitled to, but I can refer honourable senators to them if it is their wish. Perhaps it will suffice if I explain what the new system will be and, if there are any questions, I shall attempt to deal with them.

In general, the new system will be simpler and more equitable than the current arrangement. It will be more sensitive to local unemployment conditions and will enhance the motivation for work. I shall refer to some of the specific features of the new structure: there will be one benefit period of 52 weeks, including the two-week waiting period, during which a maximum of 50 weeks of benefits will be payable. The benefit period will be divided into three phases. In the initial phase, benefits will be payable based upon one week of benefits for each insured week, to a maximum of 25 weeks. This initial phase replaces the current initial benefit period and re-established benefit period, and will provide a better balance between the number of weeks worked and the number of weeks of benefits payable.

The second phase will be a modified labour force extended benefit phase available to those with longer attachment to the labour force. In this phase, a maximum of 13 weeks of benefits will be payable on the basis of one week of benefits for every two weeks worked over 25 insured weeks. Although the maximum number of weeks of benefit available in this phase is lower than the current 18 weeks, the combination of the 25 weeks of initial benefits plus the 13 weeks of labour force extended benefits will provide adequate entitlement for the vast majority of claimants with longer labour force attachment in areas of low unemployment.

The third phase is a revised regional extended benefit phase, which will eliminate the existing national extended benefit phase and restructure the basis for entitlement to regional extended benefits. Experience has indicated that the national extended benefits are anomalous because claimants in every part of the country in recent years have qualified for eight weeks of benefits regardless of local labour market conditions. In other words, since the national unemployment rate has been above 5 per cent, which has been the case in all recent years, claimants in all parts of the country have been entitled to the maximum period. The attempt to give attention to regional differences and disparities was all merged in that everyone qualified for the maximum amount in any event.

To repeat, experience has indicated that the national extended benefits are anomalous because claimants in every part of the country in recent years have qualified for eight weeks of benefits regardless of local labour market conditions. The regional extended benefit phase has been restructured to be based solely on the regional unemployment rate rather than on the difference between the national and regional rates of unemployment. The new proposal will be much more sensitive to local labour market conditions and will eliminate the anomalous situation in which claimants may not qualify for any regional extended benefits when both the regional and the national unemployment rates go up, as is the situation under the present law. This will be corrected under the new legislation so that regard will still be had to regional unemployment differences.

In this connection, it should be noted that when first presented the maximum number of weeks of regional extended benefits available was to have been 20. Strong representations were made that in the Atlantic provinces, for example, this maximum would not provide sufficient protection for all claimants. As a result, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration introduced an amendment at the report stage of Bill C-27 which provides for a maximum of 32 weeks of regional extended benefits to be available when regional unemployment rates exceed 11.5 per cent.

Honourable senators who are interested in this may have reference to Table 2 of Schedule A to the bill.

Other changes would also be introduced into the benefit structure to decrease the disincentive to work. For example, the "four-week rules," which now result in the termination of claims if claimants return to work for four weeks during the extended benefit phase, will be eliminated. These rules have proved to be a disincentive for claimants to return to employment, particularly in cases where there is some uncertainty as to the duration of that employment. Thus, the new benefit structure is designed to curtail benefit entitlement to those with a relatively short labour force attachment living in regions of low unemployment. At the same time, it is designed to maintain appropriate insurance protection for those with longer labour force attachment, as well as to those claimants who reside in regions of high unemployment.

A second major amendment contained in this part is the variable entrance requirement. The essential elements of this amendment are contained in clause 30. Consequential and related amendments are contained in clauses 29, 49 and 67. In recent years, there has been much concern expressed over the easy access to the unemployment insurance program as being supportive of unstable work patterns. The Canadian scheme, with its current eight-week fixed entrance requirement, is among the most generous of any scheme in the world. Investigations have indicated that claimants with eight to 11 weeks insured employment receive a significantly higher degree of support from unemployment insurance, and have a much more unstable attachment to the labour force than any other category of insured worker. In light of these and other factors, the 12-week fixed entrance requirement was judged to be an increase which would be both required and acceptable.

Again, there were representations that, in view of the wide regional economic disparities and the generally high unemployment rates prevailing across the country, this is not the time for an increase in the entrance requirement across the board. The variable entrance requirement, which was introduced into Bill C-27 at the report stage, relates to the differences in economic conditions across the country and serves to equalize the impact of the entrance requirement on claimants. For example, under the provision now contained in Bill C-27, the minimum entrance requirement in the Atlantic provinces will be 10 weeks at current unemployment rates, whereas on the prairies it will be 14 weeks. Again, honourable senators who are interested in looking at these figures should refer to Table 3 of Schedule A to the bill.

It should be noted that the variable entrance requirement is meant to be an interim arrangement which would be in force for a period of three years, subject to extension by affirmative resolution of Parliament. If not continued, the variable entrance requirement would be replaced after three years with a fixed entrance requirement of 14 weeks. The government, in its efforts to increase employment through domestic and international co-operation, hopes to make it feasible to establish a 14-week fixed entrance requirement after three years, and I am sure that we all earnestly hope that the economic conditions of our country will warrant the taking of that step at the end of the three-year period under which the variable entrance requirement will operate.

The third major amendment contained in Part III of Bill C-27, the introduction of the authority to use unemployment insurance benefits in a more directly productive or developmental way, is contained in the new proposed sections 37, 38 and 39 of the Unemployment Insurance Act to be enacted by clause 41 of this bill. The basic rationale underlying these proposals is to provide more productive alternatives to unemployment insurance claimants while they are receiving income maintenance.

The original purpose of the unemployment insurance program was to provide income protection to unemployed workers while they searched for suitable employment. This, undoubtedly, remains a fundamentally important purpose of the program. At the same time, we all know that there have been dramatic changes in the economy, the labour market and society, with the result that, for certain workers, immediate job prospects are poor. In these cases, the provision of income maintenance by itself is not the most effective approach to the solution of their problems, or indeed to the problems of the labour market.

● (2100)

Experience has shown that suitably designed training courses can help significantly to enhance employment opportunities. What is proposed in section 39, to be enacted by clause 41, is a more systematic approach based on streamlined financial arrangements.

The current cumbersome approach whereby unemployment insurance "top up" manpower training allowances would be replaced. Those eligible for benefits and referred to manpower training courses would receive their full income maintenance from the unemployment insurance program. This would not only make administrative and financial arrangements more efficient, it would also, in the opinion or hope of some departmental officials, open up the possibility of additional funds being made available for training purposes. This, of course, would be a matter for government policy and decision from time to time.

The developmental use of unemployment insurance funds for claimants participating in special unemployment insurance job creation projects—section 38, enacted by clause 41—and work-sharing arrangements—section 37, enacted by clause 41—constitute new departures. It has therefore been indicated that pilot projects would be undertaken in both cases to test the extent to which acceptable positive results could be achieved.

Under the job creation proposal unemployment insurance claimants who have no other immediate employment prospects would be given the opportunity of participating in job creation projects on a purely voluntary basis while they receive unemployment insurance benefits. This approach is in recognition of the fact that there are large numbers of unemployed workers receiving unemployment insurance benefits who cannot find employment, while at the same time many community-oriented projects cannot be carried out because of a lack of funds to pay for such work. This proposal would enhance the scope of job creation projects and increase the number of individuals who could participate in them.

During the discussion of this particular proposal, opposition was expressed by representatives of both labour and management to the use of unemployment insurance funds for job creation in this way. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration gave his assurance during the report stage of Bill C-27 that this proposal would not be implemented until there had been further opportunities for discussion. Specifically, he proposed that the unemployment insurance job creation proposal be referred to the newly established advisory council to permit a fuller exchange of views in this area, and he stated that if no labour or management support for experimentation with this proposal is forthcoming it would not be implemented.

The final proposed developmental use of unemployment insurance funds would be in work-sharing arrangements. And I must say that this seems to me to be much more likely of success and usefulness in the labour market than the previous job creation proposal. At present, when a firm faces a temporary emergency, it normally cuts back on production and reduces the size of its work force. Many of the workers who are laid off will search for other work, move, seek training for a new occupation, or remain unemployed. Typically, there are major losses involved in this process. Workers' skills may erode when they are idle, and some of them may lose the habits and patterns of work that are important to their personal and economic well-being. When the firm is ready to rehire, it may find some of its former work force with weakened skills and some no longer available. Work sharing could reduce these problems. For instance, instead of one-quarter of a work force in a particular establishment being laid off, employers and workers could agree that it would be preferable for all of the work force to work a 30-hour week instead of a 40-hour week on a temporary basis. During the period of the arrangement, unemployment insurance benefits would be paid for one-quarter of a week to all of the workers instead of for all the week to one-quarter of the workers.

This proposal has also been a source of considerable controversy. Consequently, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration again gave his assurance at the report stage of Bill C-27 that fuller and wider discussion with management and labour would be undertaken to determine whether there would be a basis to proceed with pilot projects in this area, and that implementation would not be undertaken unless there was a willingness on the part of the labour and management groups to participate.

I would hope that this scheme is tried, at least in some places in our country, because it seems to me to be eminently sensible. I am not so sanguine about the job creation proposal.

As a final comment on developmental uses, these approaches to the use of unemployment insurance funds are an integral part of the government's employment strategy, which has recently made available substantial additional expenditures to increase employment and provide a more diversified approach to the problem of unemployment.

The fourth category of amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act contained in Part III of Bill C-27 comprises a number of miscellaneous amendments. It should be noted that some of these are of a housekeeping, technical or consequential nature while others are more substantive. Among the more important of these are:

- (i) Clause 38(1) which provides greater flexibility in the calculation of insured weeks for the purpose of establishing maternity claims.
- (ii) Clause 55 which provides authority for an increase in the number of Justices to hear unemployment insurance appeal cases.
- (iii) Clause 56 which would grant to all claimants or employers a right to appeal to the Umpire against unanimous decisions of the Boards of Referees.

Such appeals now can only be lodged by unions on behalf of employees, or by associations of manufacturers or industries on behalf of the employer. The new amendment will make it possible for individuals or corporations to appeal individually.

Part IV, the final part of Bill C-27, contains, in clauses 68 to 75 and the schedule, the transitional and consequential provisions necessary for carrying integration, the new Advisory Council provisions and the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act into effect. In this connection I should mention that clause 73 will ensure that no acquired rights will be abrogated when the new benefit structure is brought into force. This will mean that those claimants who have established claims on the existing five-phase benefit structure will continue on the five-phase benefit structure after implementation of the three-phase benefit structure. Claimants whose claims are effective after the date of implementation of the three-phase benefit structure will, of course, be subject to the new rules.

Clause 75 in Part IV stipulates that the provisions of Bill C-27 will come into force as fixed by proclamation. I made some reference to this timing before, but I am informed that the minister's intention would be to bring the integration and Advisory Council provisions into force as of the date of royal assent. The benefit structure and the developmental use of unemployment insurance funds for training would be implemented approximately six weeks after royal assent. Since further planning is required before its implementation, the earliest possible date of implementation for the variable entrance requirement would be early December 1977. The dates of implementation of the developmental use of unemployment insurance funds for job creation and work sharing would depend to a great extent on the discussions which would be undertaken. Implementation of the pilot projects in these areas would therefore not be envisaged before late fall at the earliest.

Honourable senators, the amendments contained in Bill C-27 have been made as a result of a long period of investigation, discussion and debate. I am hopeful—and, indeed, I believe—that the integration of the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the Department of Manpower and Immigration, and the revisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act, together constitute a sound basis for providing better employment services and benefits to Canadian workers and employers in the current economic conditions. Therefore, I commend this bill to the favourable consideration of this house.

On motion of Senator Phillips, debate adjourned.

● (2110)

STATUTE LAW (METRIC CONVERSION) AMENDMENT ACT, 1976

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat moved the second reading of Bill C-23, to facilitate conversion to the metric system of measurement.

[Translation]

He said: Honourable senators, I am happy to present Bill C-23 to facilitate conversion to the metric system of measurement. Since the subject matter has been widely discussed, I could, of course, keep my speech very short. Unfortunately, it seems to me that two problem areas still remain to be covered. First, the events which have taken place so far in Canada with regard to the conversion to the metric system and, secondly, the steps which other countries which have not yet gone metric are taking in that direction. I think that it is essential to understand these two matters before proceeding to the bill itself. Therefore, if you will allow me, I would like to give you some basic information briefly to go over the events which have taken place over the last six years in Canada.

In 1970, the government put before the House of Commons a white paper on metric conversion in Canada, and the four parties gave their unanimous support to the policy outlined in it. This policy is contained in the three principles which follow: First, the eventual adoption in Canadian usage of a single coherent measurement system based on metric units should be acknowledged as inevitable and in the national interest.

Second, this single system should come to be used for all measurement purposes required under legislation, and generally be accepted for all measurement purposes.

Third, planning and preparation in the public and private sectors should be encouraged in such a manner as to achieve the maximum benefits at minimum cost to the public, to industry, and to government at all levels.

As mentioned in the white paper, a number of industrial organizations, consumers associations and others have already expressed their conviction that the decision to convert was a wise step. Among such organizations are the Consumers Association of Canada, the Agricultural Institute of Canada, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Council of Professional Engineers, and many more. As a matter of fact, honourable senators, over a hundred years ago, that is in 1873, Parliament passed a law permitting the use of the metric system, the Weights and Measures Act.

In 1971, one year after the white paper, the act was amended so that the most advanced and most universal metric system could be put into use, that is the international system commonly known as SI. Nowadays, not only our major trading partners but all the industrialized nations of the world, including the countries behind the iron curtain and those of Third World, all but four are using that system of measurement or are in the process of converting to it.

The government in 1971 set up the Metric Commission and entrusted it with its conversion policy. More than one half of the conversion program has already been implemented in Canada. The same thing is being done in a great many Commonwealth countries, namely, the United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand, which are about 75 per cent converted. Our major trading partner, the United States, is adopting the metric system more quickly than is generally believed. That country made a study of the metric system in 1968. In 1973, our neighbour to the south outlined plans to convert on a national basis by creating national committees whose work is being conducted and coordinated by the American National Metric Council.

A number of big corporations have decided to convert sooner and today, for instance, more than 40 per cent of all General Motors automotive parts are manufactured to metric dimensions. On the basis of the study's findings, the Secretary of Commerce recommended to the American Congress in 1971 that the United States convert to the metric system. In December 1975, President Ford signed the act providing for the conversion to the metric system. In Washington many informed people believe that the members of that Commission will soon be appointed by President Carter and then confirmed by the Senate.

In my opinion, it is responsible to conclude that the United States are well on their way as far as metric conversion is concerned and may even be ahead of us in some areas.

In 1974 the government of Canada approved the national program of guideline dates for metric conversion proposed two years before by the Metric Commission and consisting of four distinct phases.

Phase I—investigation—was completed in 1974. Phase II—planning—went on in 1974 and 1975. Phase III—scheduling—was to be completed in 1976, and finally, Phase IV—implementation—which began in 1975 should peak in 1977-78 and end in late 1980. By then the Canadian economy should be essentially metric.

In 1975 this program was put before the House of Commons as a resolution. In December of the same year, the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs examined and endorsed this four phase program. In April 1976 the ministers responsible for metric conversion in each of the provinces also unanimously endorsed the program at a meeting with the federal Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in Ottawa. Following the steps taken by the federal government, more than 1,500 volunteers from all sectors of Canadian society have been meeting regularly since 1971 to investigate, plan, schedule and, in some cases, supervise the implementation of metric conversion in their respective sector of the economy. Each sector sets up a sector plan of national scope for the economy and for the other types of organizations that make up that sector. Every sector plan proposes activities and specific dates of implementation which reflect the most knowledgeable views of the members of that sector. At the present time, thirty sector plans have been approved on a national scale, and the results of the work done by the sector committees are already evident in our everyday life.

As more sectors set up more national plans, and implement them, they naturally expect that the laws and regulations will be amended in time to allow them to meet the deadlines which they have agreed upon.

Honourable senators, that is where Parliament must play an essential part. No fewer than 90 federal acts are affected by the conversion and will have to be amended. The federal government has already worked out a schedule for the introduction of the amending bills. The bill under consideration today is only the first of a series of omnibus bills yet to come. It deals with nine of the 90 acts to be amended.

• (2120)

[English]

Honourable senators, I should now like to turn to the precise contents of Bill C-23. I apologize for making such a lengthy introduction, but I felt that it was necessary in the light of what I believe has been misinformation about the speed of metrification in Canada and in other countries.

Dealing with Bill C-23 itself, I would first like to comment on the bulk grain handling industry as it is affected by this act. In the bulk grain handling sector we are dealing with four of the nine acts covered by this omnibus bill: namely, the Canadian Wheat Board Act, the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, the Two-Price Wheat Act, and the Western Grain Stabilization Act.

The movement of grain in this country is highly integrated. It has a standardized and co-ordinated system of operations and transactions which start at the prairie elevator, extend through the Rockies to the west coast terminals, or to the terminals at Thunder Bay and down the lakes to the export elevators of the St. Lawrence River system.

The industry includes the licensed elevator system, the Canadian Feed Manufacturing Association, and the Ontario grain and feed dealers membership, all of whom support the move. Essentially, this means that all bulk grain transactions from producer delivery through to export shipment will be metric units.

In some areas of the system, metric units are already being used. For example, futures contracts on the Winnipeg Commodity Exchange are already in metric tonne units. A considerable number of scales are converted, and conversion has recently been accelerated, particularly in the conversion of electronic scales. Nationally, the feed industry has converted and grains produced in Ontario are sold by the metric tonne.

An educational and public awareness campaign has also been under way for several years. That campaign began in 1973 with the publication of a farm letter from Agriculture Canada that was dedicated exclusively to the use of the metric system on the farm. There has been an intensive campaign involving television, radio and newspaper reports on the conversion program on the prairies. The detailed information about this campaign has been sent to all of us in this chamber in the form of a kit containing a description of the campaign, and several brochures and newspaper reports.

The conversion plan has the support of the entire industry, and this has been clearly expressed by the Manitoba Pool, the Saskatchewan Pool, the Alberta Pool, the United Grain Growers, the National Farmers Union, and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. Honourable senators will agree that the preparation has been thorough, and I believe that we should approve this legislation in order that the industry can get on with the job.

The next act to be amended is the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act. The act as it now stands requires the quantity on consumer products to be shown in both metric and customary Canadian units. The only exception is where a preferred series of sizes is used. An example of this exception is our toothpaste tubes, which are sold in a series of preferred metric sizes; but all other items must at present be labelled under both.

The amendment proposes to drop the requirement that the Canadian measure be shown, and it will be left to the manufacturer to decide whether or not it is shown, as he interprets the market demand. This change has been specifically requested by several sector committees because dual labelling has been proven to be a disincentive to learning the new system and would therefore lengthen the period of transition. The amendment would favourably affect all sectors manufacturing consumer packaged goods, as well as all wholesalers, retailers and consumers.

The next act is the Weights and Measures Act. The proposed amendments reflect the experience of Australia, New Zealand, and other countries in their conversion process. In order to complete the retail scale conversion program, it is necessary to provide a cut-off date beyond which old-style devices will not be inspected or authorized for use; otherwise the conversion of scales could go on for years, which would be too costly to both retailers and the government. By cutting costs in this way, both the consumer and taxpayer will benefit in the end.

It is also necessary to limit the use of two different units in advertising consumer goods. This is required so that one merchant may not seem to be offering lower prices than another by advertising, for example, a price per pound which is substantially lower than the neighbouring merchant's price per kilogram, or by a variety of practices which would tend to confuse the consumer about the quantity of a product.

The result of such an amendment is twofold: since only one system of measurement is used, the consumer will not be confused about the quantity of a product that he or she is buying; and, secondly, the consumer will get the same treatment as before in terms of value for money. It seems to me that all three groups—the private sector, the consumer and the government—stand to gain by these amendments, and I believe that we should approve them.

In the case of the Regional Development Incentives Act, there is only a minor change from square miles to square kilometres.

The final two acts to be amended by the bill are the Gas Inspection Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act. The amendment of the Gas Inspection Act is essential to the conversion plans of this industry. At present the Gas Inspection Act restricts the sale of natural gas to cubic feet and BTUs. It has been identified as a critical piece of legislation in the natural gas distribution sector's conversion plan.

Until the act is changed, no changes can be made to provincial legislation governing the transmission and distribution of natural gas, nor can the renegotiation of rate schedules with the utilities and consumers be made. The provinces will not start amending their legislation until the federal act is passed.

Amendment of the final bill, the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, is also essential. The sector plan calls for drilling to commence in metric in July, 1978. A one-year lead time is required after the governing legislation is amended.

Once again the preparation has been thorough, and the sectors are ready to move to the metric system according to schedules that are the result of systematic consultation throughout their own industries and with the other affected sectors. We should approve these changes and allow them to get on with the job.

I do not think it is necessary for me to plead the case of the change to metrification, as the move has already been accepted in the past by both houses as being a desirable one. In my opinion we should proceed with the detailed changes to the nine acts, which have been agreed to by the various sectors and will permit them to get on with the job of changing the system in their own areas. I believe that the changes will, in the long run, make the system more simple, will improve the efficiency of Canadian industry, will effect a substantial improvement in our educational system, and will facilitate our export trade. I repeat that the changes in the rest of the world are going on at a much more rapid pace than we in Canada are sometimes told, and we must keep pace with those changes if we are going to maintain our competitive export position.

I therefore believe, honourable senators, that the country will have everything to gain. The various sectors interested in the amendments to the nine acts have agreed to the changes, and I recommend that we approve the bill at the earliest possible date.

On motion of Senator Bélisle, debate adjourned.

● (2130)

IMMIGRATION BILL, 1976

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Daniel Riley moved the second reading of Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, the bill we have before us marks only the third time in this century that there has been a thorough overhaul of immigration legislation. The first occasion was in 1910, at a peak period of immigration to this country, and the second in 1952, when post-war immigration policies and programs were becoming established.

The 1952 legislation, which is that in effect today, carried over many of the concepts of the 1910 legislation. The age of mass air travel was developing, but even then the common method of travel for the immigrant from overseas was by ship. Our existing legislation therefore reflects a bygone age, when travellers could be examined at ports of entry at a more leisurely pace, when jumbo jets, depositing thousands of passengers at airports in a few hours, were unknown, and hijackers and terrorists had not yet arrived on the scene. The United Nations Refugee Convention, which had only been signed for one year, had not been ratified by Canada at that time, so there is no reference to refugees or their protection under the present act.

The 1952 act is deficient in many other ways. It refers to "idiots, imbeciles and morons," among its prohibited categories. It bans the admission of epileptics as immigrants and of criminals on the basis of a nineteenth century expression to the effect that they have committed crimes involving moral turpitude. The act of 1952 also gives the Governor in Council the power to bar the admission of persons by reasons of nationality, citizenship, ethnic group, occupation, class or geographical area of origin—a power so blatantly in contradiction of Canada's immigration policy for the past 15 years that its existence alone justifies the repeal of the 1952 act.

The bill before us has been almost four years in preparation. It started with the creation, in 1973, by the then Minister of Manpower and Immigration, of a group charged with the preparation of a green paper designed to serve as a vehicle for public debate. The green paper on immigration policy was tabled in Parliament in February, 1975, and was referred to a special joint committee of both houses of Parliament. The Honourable Senator Riel was a co-chairman of that committee, and several other honourable senators served on the body.

The special joint committee, after holding public hearings throughout Canada, reported to Parliament in November, 1975. Almost all of the recommendations made in their report are reflected in the bill we have before us now.

I should like to point out some of the features of Bill C-24 which we presently have under consideration.

First of all, the bill outlines the objectives of Canada's immigration policy. It lists among those objectives such matters as the reunification of families, the establishment of non-discriminatory selection standards, humanitarian concern for refugees, the achievement of national and regional demographic objectives and the protection of the health, safety and good order of Canadian society. This bill also requires that all rules and regulations made under it shall be compatible with those objectives. The objectives are contained in clause 3 of the bill.

A second feature that I should like to draw to your attention is the provision for improved management of the immigration flow. The minister responsible for this program, after consultation with the provinces and other organizations he considers appropriate, must advise Parliament each year of the number of immigrants that the government deems it appropriate to admit for a specified period, and the demographic factors that have been taken into account in reaching that figure. This recognizes the role given to provincial governments under section 95 of the British North America Act, as well as substantially improving the basis on which immigration levels are determined.

A third feature of the bill is the protection it gives to the Canadian public through providing for the prohibition of entry or removal of would-be terrorists and hijackers, as well as participants in organized crime. At the same time, the outmoded medical categories of the current act, which names specific conditions, have been removed. Instead, provision is made, on the basis of a recognition of advances in medical science, for examining the applicant on the basis of the health threat he poses, or the charge he might become on public health and other social services. Criminality is measured in terms of equivalency to Canadian law, and provision is made for the lifting of this particular bar following a period of rehabilitation.

A fourth feature of the legislation relates to the rights of persons refused at ports of entry or ordered removed after admission. The existing appeal rights to the independent Immigration Appeal Board have been preserved. In addition, the inquiry which may lead to an order of removal takes a significantly different form, designed to guarantee the fairest possible hearing to the persons concerned. The concept of a departmental officer, now known as a special inquiry officer, who both prosecutes the case and renders the decision, has been replaced. Instead, there will be an adjudicator whose function will be solely to listen to both sides of the case and render a decision. The applicant may be represented by counsel, and have the inquiry in public if he so chooses. The adjudicator will have no other immigration responsibilities, and will not be under the jurisdiction of local or regional officials.

In those rare cases, usually involving terrorists, organized criminals or subversives, where the evidence cannot be made public for fear of endangering the life of the source of that information, the Minister of Immigration and the Solicitor General may jointly file a certificate which will be accepted as evidence of removability. In those cases where a visitor is involved, there will be a hearing before an adjudicator where the identity of the individual affected can be confirmed, and where he or his counsel may present his case. This provision for a hearing is in sharp contrast to the power given in section 7 of the present act which permits the minister to declare a person no longer to be a non-immigrant, and to order his deportation without a hearing of any kind. As an additional protection against abuse, the bill requires the minister to give an annual report to Parliament on the use of these ministerial certificates.

In the case of a permanent resident who is the subject of a ministerial report based on similar grounds, very special safeguards are erected to prevent arbitrary decisions. His case will be heard by a special advisory board, of which one member must be a retired superior court judge, and whose procedures are described in the bill itself, I believe between clauses 38 and 41. These cases will be very exceptional, and the final decision will be made by the full cabinet on the basis of the advice it receives from the board. I would emphasize that these will be unusual but potentially dangerous cases where organized criminality, terrorism, or subversion is involved. Rare though these cases may be, I suggest that it is essential to provide adequate means to deal with the higher degree of risk that such cases pose for our society.

● (2140)

The fifth feature arises directly from my immediately preceding remarks concerning the rights to a fair hearing of those refused admission or ordered from Canada. This relates to the impact of the removal order. In the present act there is only one device—deportation. This represents a lifetime ban from coming back to this country, save with the consent of the minister. Deportation orders will be issued in the future if this act is accepted, but they will only be applied to serious offenders. Those who have committed minor offences, such as overstaying their period of authorized entry, will be allowed to leave on the basis of departure notices. If they comply with them, then they may return to Canada in the future without restraint other than that of meeting normal requirements.

At ports of entry people will generally be removed by exclusion orders, which will have the effect of barring admission without the minister's consent for one year only.

I suggest that this is a humane approach, providing, as it does, alternatives to the stigma of a deportation order for minor and technical offences.

I have no hesitation in recommending this bill to honourable senators. It is a humanitarian bill. It is a bill that provides very substantial rights to a fair hearing for those who cannot comply with its terms, and a bill that protects the health, security and the well-being of the Canadian public. I hope it receives the favourable consideration of honourable senators.

On motion of Senator Asselin, debate adjourned.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—MOTION FOR ADOPTION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, to which was referred Bill C-34, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act respecting the establishment of marketing plans and to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act in consequence thereof.

Hon. Hazen Argue moved the adoption of the report.

He said: Honourable senators, the Agriculture Committee, after deliberation on Bill C-34, has in its report to the Senate recommended that the bill not be proceeded with. I can say that we arrived at this conclusion after very careful consideration and after considering all of the facts as they were presented to us.

One of the reasons that we feel that this bill should not be proceeded with is that it purports to be an amendment—which it is—to the Canadian Wheat Board Act, but the Canadian Wheat Board will have no jurisdiction and no role to play in the provision of rapeseed pools. We also felt that there was another act of Parliament, the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act, that was adequate for the purposes of establishing voluntary pools. It was on the statute books, and it was available and could be used by any group of producers who may wish to have a rapeseed pool. As a matter of fact, even outside of this legislation and outside of the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act to which I have referred, there are in effect and in operation voluntary marketing plans for rapeseed and sunflowers.

When our committee first met on this bill and we opened it for discussion, I did not know whether or not the members of this committee would deal with the bill at that time in all its stages, as sometimes happens, but it was moved by Senator McNamara that the committee should hear representatives of the Canadian Wheat Board and farmers' organizations. This was carried. Senator Greene proposed two motions: one asking that the Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel appear as a witness; the other asking that the Honourable Otto Lang, the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, appear. Those motions were passed.

Our committee held four sessions. We heard from the Honourable Otto Lang. Our first witness was an official of the Grains Marketing Office, Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Mr. Dennis Gibson. We heard from the Director of Marketing Services, Production and Marketing Branch, Agriculture Canada, Dr. Vern Smith. We heard from our own Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel, Mr. du Plessis.

The majority of the members of the committee—and the vote was eight to two in favour of the report I am speaking to—felt that there was now in place on the statute books the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act which, in fact provided all of the authority necessary, and all of the scope necessary, to operate a rapeseed marketing pool. We had an amendment passed in the 1969-70 session to the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act which makes possible the very thing to which I refer. I would like to quote from the statute.

1. The definition 'agricultural product' in section 2 of the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act, chapter A-6 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

" 'agricultural product' means

(a) any kind of grain other than wheat that is grown in the area that is defined as the designated area by the Canadian Wheat Board Act,

Under this legislation, which now exists, pools could be established by prairie producers for any grain, rapeseed, oats, barley, flax and even feed wheat—any grain other than wheat, as defined by the Canadian Wheat Board Act. That particular part of the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act is very broad and, we suggest, very adequate indeed.

Under Bill C-34 there is provision for the establishment or provision of initial payments. The Governor in Council agrees to guarantee 90 per cent of the initial payment, whatever initial payment is established. Under the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act, in an amendment of December, 1975, there is provided a guarantee by the government for 100 per cent of the initial price of any product that is marketed under this act. Both as to the type of grain and as to the initial payment, there is provision now under the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act.

● (2150)

When this bill was before our committee, the members of the committee from western Canada opposed this bill. It was felt by these members that this legislation was, in fact, not necessary. I should like to quote what was said by Senator McNamara, whom we all hold in the highest regard as an authority on the grain business, having been a distinguished and almost revered Chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board for many years. When he was appointed to the Senate I recall an editorial in the Western Producer, the largest farm paper on the prairies, with, I believe, the heading, "Hail Senator McNamara." Senator McNamara, as reported on page 15 of issue No. 19 of the Committee's proceedings, had this to say:

I just want to make my position clear. It is evident that I am not at all happy with this bill and these regulations being considered as an amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act. They really have nothing to do with the Canadian Wheat Board. It definitely states that the Wheat Board has no administrative responsibilities. I have always felt that the Wheat Board was set up to market farmers' grain to the best advantage of the producers, and nothing else. This puts in a new element about voluntary pooling. Voluntary pooling was tried and failed, to the cost of the treasury, the provincial governments and the wheat pools when it started.

Senator Hays is also opposed to this measure. On the very next page of the same issue Senator Hays wants to call Senator McNamara as a witness, saying he thinks that Senator McNamara, as an authority on the wheat marketing grain business, should be called. Senator Hays said:

I am serious about this. He knows a good deal about it, and it is a very serious situation. We are dealing with what might be 4,000 producers but which down the road might be 50,000 producers. We could have a proliferation of 30 pools. We are already into a cattle inquiry where we have 350 people who are marketing cattle. I think this thing should be under the Wheat Board.

That was the position taken by Senator Hays.

Senator Sparrow, by his questioning, made his position clear. He pointed out, on page 19, that this bill could be extended beyond rapeseed to any other grain variety, and indicated that he would be opposed to this measure.

I think that is a pretty strong indication that many people, including these senators from the prairies, questioned the foundation of this bill and the necessity of proceeding with it at this time.

It is also fair and correct to say that Senator Olson, who is the sponsor of this bill, who is not a member of our committee—although I am sure that in due course, when this can be provided, he will be a distinguished member of that committee—is, of course, in favour of the bill, and he did a good job of promoting his ideas to support the bill. However, the position of the majority of the members of the committee is as I have stated.

I think one of the things in the minds of members of the committee is that this bill is not likely to be merely a permissive piece of legislation. We recognize that the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board is a man of outstanding ability, who has done very many outstanding things on behalf of the wheat producers—box cars, hopper cars, the Western Grain Stabilization Act, improved and extended cash advances, and an aggressive policy of the Canadian Wheat Board in marketing grain, which he supports, so much so that the Wheat Board is being criticized by its opponents for being almost too aggressive. He has many, many accomplishments to his credit, but one does not expect that this particular minister will be a passive bystander when it comes to making provision for legislation under his jurisdiction.

I should like to quote what the minister said on this point, from page 6608 of the Commons Hansard. He said that after the legislation is through and there is the possibility under this bill of voluntary pools:

I very much hope that the wheat pools on the prairies and other companies, either together or singly, will take advantage of these provisions and move to set up pools for rapeseed so that farmers who want the average price and find it difficult to arrange their own selling without this assistance may have such opportunity.

Wheat pools, as I understand, are very much opposed to a voluntary system of pooling, because they feel that it has been tried in the past and has not been successful. They are in favour of the Wheat Board system of handling grain. This statement from the minister suggests that this legislation will be more than permissive, namely, that the minister himself hopes and advocates that all of the grain companies should take advantage of this legislation and provide pools within their system. If there are, for example, a number of voluntary pools for rapeseed, this legislation makes it possible to have further pools for feed wheat, oats, barley, rye, flax and so on. Those who favour the Wheat Board system are concerned that this would set up a kind of third alternative system. They feel that this is fraught with many dangers and should not, in fact, be encouraged.

A couple of years ago there was a vote on the question of having rapeseed placed under the Canadian Wheat Board, and the vote defeated that proposition, because 52.7 per cent voted for the open market, 46.2 per cent voted for the Canadian Wheat Board and 1.1 per cent were undecided. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board made it possible to have this third category of vote taken. He had said during the time this was being discussed that he would like to see provisions for another option, for a voluntary pool outside of the Canadian Wheat Board system itself, certainly outside of the exclusive jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. One editorial farm writer expressed an opinion that this gave those who wished to have a system different from the open market, or different from the Wheat Board, a chance to express themselves. However, only 1.1 per cent, or 370, cast votes as undecided. There was a return of 78.5 per cent of the ballots.

● (2200)

Our committee invited representatives of farm organizations to appear. Many of them expressed their position on the merits or otherwise of this bill, and it is fair and correct to say that the rapeseed growers' associations in the three prairie provinces and the Rapeseed Growers Council expressed an interest in this legislation. It is also fair and correct, I believe, to say that the vast majority of grain companies and other farm organizations expressed no interest in this legislation. Many of them questioned whether it would be practical, and in general my conclusion is that the amount of demand for this legislation is not large and certainly could be and can be accommodated by the other legislation which is already on the statute books of this country.

When we had Mr. Gibson, the official of the department, before our committee and this point was being discussed, he said that to have a pool that would operate effectively, or words to that effect, there would be approximately 10,000 members of the rapeseed growers' associations, or up to 15,000, who would come into this plan. That is paraphrasing his statement, but I believe it is fairly accurate. However, my information is that the rapeseed growers' associations in the three provinces have a membership out of some 40,000 rape-seed growers of just under 2,000. I do not wish to imply that they do not legitimately speak for a certain section of the rapeseed industry. It is a voluntary organization and when they go out to canvass for memberships they are not always easy to get. However, it does represent in that sense 5 per cent of the producers who grow rapeseed. The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool would likely argue that it represents a greater number, because a majority, at any rate, of the rapeseed producers in Saskatchewan are likely to market their product through their co-operative facilities. However, be that as it may, this is the general situation we found in regard to this vote and this demand.

As I have said, we considered this legislation very carefully, and I should like to quote some other points. I have already referred to the hope of the minister that there might be a substantial number of pools. He said in answer to a question by Senator McNamara:

Yes, I think that every significant buyer could conceivably have a pool.

Well, now, this shows, of course, that the minister feels that this is a real possibility and this, of course, is something that is not supported by those who would like to have a wheat board system of marketing grain.

In an exchange which took place with the honourable minister, as reported at page 22 of the 21st issue of the proceedings of the committee, Senator Hays had this to say:

No, I believe in pooling. I believe it should be put in the Wheat Board and until such time as they do not want it in the Wheat Board I think the producer should be left outside the Wheat Board. I believe in pooling, as I said, and I think it is the only way to market, but I do not believe in a multiplicity of little pools.

So that was the position taken in this regard by Senator Hays.

A number of arguments have been put forward as to why this legislation is preferable to the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act. It is said that this bill provides for an endorsement in the permit book which every farmer must have in order to market his grain. It is said that this brings the permit book under the Canadian Wheat Board Act for enforcement purposes. However, it has been pointed out that the Wheat Board permit book could probably be endorsed by agreement and by providing for such endorsement in the contract.

As I said earlier, Dr. Smith of the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Committee appeared before the committee and was questioned on this point as to provisions being made in that act as it now stands to provide for assurance that farmers would market their grain, at least to the extent that they would by an endorsement in the Wheat Board permit book. He had this to say at page 14 of the third proceedings of the committee on the bill:

I would say it probably could, but if the contract between the processor and the group of producers specified how that was to be done, I think there would be enough provisions in the contract itself, without really having to amend anything—

So, Dr. Smith said that in his opinion this type of amendment is not necessary because it could be brought about by contract. I pointed out to the minister when he was before our committee that while the system of an endorsement in the permit book means that a producer is not able to deliver to the regular grain trade and sell his rapeseed on the open market if this endorsement has been made, the endorsement does not mean that the producer by the end of July will bring forward his rapeseed. He is not breaking any law if he keeps it at home. He is not breaking any regulation of the Canadian Wheat Board of which I know if he sells his rapeseed to his neighbour. I therefore asked the minister what provision could be made to make certain that the rapeseed producer not only would on delivering his grain to a grain company put it in a voluntary pool when there is an endorsement in the permit book, but would in fact market the grain. The minister replied that would have to be a part of the contract. So, it is my contention and submission that there would be sufficient authority and a sufficient legal basis for the operation of a pool in the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act together with specific provisions in the contract that would provide certainty, or a reasonable measure of certainty, that the producer would in fact deliver his rapeseed into the pool.

I further asked Dr. Smith as to the experience with regard to infractions in the operation of the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act in the other pools now operated under that legislation. He said that they are negligible in number, and that the producers in general follow the law and they have experienced no particular difficulty. I do not believe there would be any particular difficulty if this act were used for rapeseed and these reasonable precautions were taken in the contract itself.

Bill C-34 contains a second major provision for a farmer, a producer of rapeseed or these other grains which would fall under this proposed pooling system to pay 2 per cent to the Western Grain Stabilization Act. That legislation is a good act; there is likely to be a big payout next year because of the falling off in farm income, the drop in net cash flow. There is likely to be an even larger payment in 1979, so producers are anxious that they have the opportunity to pay into the Western Grain Stabilization Act, which is a form of income insurance and is supported by the vast majority. In my opinion when the payments are made producers will unanimously agree that that is a good act and those who will be greatly upset will be the just over 20 per cent who did not have, in my judgment, sufficient foresight to join the plan. However, I would respectfully submit that this amendment is not necessary. Under the Western Grain Stabilization Act as it now stands and operates, it is already possible for a producer to pay in 2 per cent in respect of rapeseed or any other grain that he delivers to the elevator system, or even outside the elevator system. To be more precise, I should like to quote from the Western Grain Stabilization Handbook, issued under the authority of the Honourable Otto Lang. At page 8 of that handbook, under the heading "Voluntary Levy," it states:

● (2210)

All grain sales through commercial channels are eligible for levies under the program. When producers sell grain to feed mills, seed plants and feedlots which do not automatically deduct the levy, the producers may voluntarily remit the 2 per cent levy to the administration.

In other words, if the company takes the 2 per cent levy, that settles the question. If, however, the company does not take the 2 per cent levy, the producer is then entitled to submit the 2 per cent to the Western Grain Stabilization Fund and it will be credited to his account.

While the draftsmen of the bill may have felt that it would be tidier to have this amendment, certainly from the standpoint of the producer, or the standpoint of the Western Grain Stabilization Act itself, it is not necessary as contributions can be made on a voluntary basis. Through the voluntary contribution system, a producer can get every possible benefit from the Western Grain Stabilization Act.

Honourable senators, I must confess that it is not easy to move the adoption of a report that recommends against a government bill referred to committee. However, each member of a committee must decide, in his own judgment, on all measures sent to it. I am sure that the majority of the committee members who supported this report felt that they had sufficient reason for so doing. While all members of the committee are knowledgeable, some are particularly knowledgeable in this field, and it is the remarks of some of those that I have quoted this evening. In addition to producing and marketing grain themselves, those individuals have had long experience in the public life of this country.

The Agriculture Committee is not all that old. In its relatively short life, it has been involved in a few controversial situations. As a committee we have been endeavouring to make whatever contribution we can to the operation of the Senate and to the improvement of agricultural legislation in this country.

The Feeds Act was before the Agriculture Committee approximately two years ago, at which time a number of amendments were proposed. Those amendments were adopted by the Senate itself and were then referred to the House of Commons for concurrence. The House of Commons rejected a number of the amendments. We studied the rejection and came forward with a further amendment, which amendment was eventually concurred in.

The purpose of the amendment proposed at that time was to provide that, where a corporation was found guilty of an infraction of the law, the fine should not be merely a token fine, which we felt the fine as then set out in the bill to be. It was the view of the committee that where a feed company had realized substantial profits as a result of doctoring feeds, the fine should not be limited to a maximum of $2,000. We were able to have that amended so as to read that where a feed company is found guilty of an indictable offence, the amount of the fine to be levied will be at the discretion of the court. If a company realized a profit of $100,000 by doctoring feeds, the judge could then impose an appropriate fine, and certainly in such a circumstance I should think the fine would be well above $2,000.

Just over a year ago the Agriculture Committee had before it the Farm Credit bill. One of the provisions of that bill was to provide loans to a maximum of $150,000 to a farmer as long as he or she was 35 years of age or under. Senator Hays took the position that to restrict it to those 35 years of age or under would be a mistake. After discussion, the committee passed a motion to amend the bill to increase the age from 35 to 40 years. The Senate, in its wisdom, decided not to adopt the committee's amendment.

Prior to this bill being under discussion at all, I had an opportunity to discuss the operation of that act with a senior official of the Farm Credit Corporation, and that official said that one of the most difficult provisions the Farm Credit Corporation has to deal with is that which sets the age at 35. In many cases a projected loan would be programmed over a period of years but during that time the applicant reaches the age of 36, with the result that a loan cannot be made. It was the official's hope that an amendment would be coming forward soon which would remove the age limit of 35 years.

Senator Hays at that time, I suggest, was on the right track. In considering that amendment the committee was merely putting before the Senate something which it thought the Senate should in fact deal with.

Honourable senators, the hour is late. I have made a rambling dissertation as to some of the reasons the committee has brought down this report. We have studied the legislation carefully. We have considered all aspects of it, and we feel we have done our job in making this report to the Senate. We recognize that the Senate is the final authority and that the Senate itself, and not the Senate Agriculture Committee, will decide whether or not this report should be adopted.

It is the view of the committee that this particular measure is not required at this time, and we respectfully submit our report to the Senate for adoption.

Senator van Roggen: Would the honourable senator permit a question? Was there a recorded vote on the committee's report and, if so, how many voted in favour of the report and how many against?

Senator Argue: There was a recorded vote. I do not believe senators were identified by name. The vote was eight to two in favour of the report.

Senator van Roggen: And that did not include yourself as chairman?

Senator Argue: That is right.

Senator van Roggen: So, you would make it nine to two.

Senator Argue: Well, I did not vote.

Senator Buckwold: If the honourable senator would permit a question, it seems to me that the entire case that has been presented for the rejection of this particular bill by the committee is on the basis that the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act is adequate for the purposes embodied in this bill.

Was the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, the Honourable Otto Lang, directly asked, assuming this was the case, why it was necessary to go through the preparation and presentation of Bill C-34 and, if so, what was his reply? In other words, was there a direct question to the minister as to why he did not go that route as opposed to a new bill?

Senator Argue: From memory, I am not certain that he was asked that precise question. The evidence is contained in the committee's proceedings, and it has been printed if the honourable senator wishes to read it.

● (2220)

Senator Buckwold: I don't think that is an adequate response. I have asked a question and you reply, "Read it for yourself."

Senator Argue: I don't want to trust my memory right now. I would not want to say categorically at this moment whether that precise question was asked. I would say that it was, but I shall check further. I shall take it as notice and be prepared to reply.

Senator Buckwold: I presume that the answer is that you don't know.

Senator Argue: I have made my reply.

Senator Buckwold: It is a fundamental point to me.

Another question is: Why was there not a more intense effort made to have brought before the committee representatives of producers who voted 52.7 per cent in favour of an open market? I presume that this bill was being proposed in order to accommodate the majority of the producers who voted in favour of an open market. In the list of your witnesses you did not, to my knowledge, indicate anybody who did in fact represent producers who were in favour of an open market position.

Senator Argue: Well, our staff and I phoned and made contact with farm organizations. I did not make a great many of the calls myself, but contact was made with farm organizations, the grain trade, the elevator companies, and so on, because they might be expected to operate this pool. Ours was a far-ranging contact with all these organizations. We informed them that the bill was before the Senate committee, and we said to them that if they cared to come and make representations we would be happy to hear them.

Senator Buckwold: Again, honourable senators, I submit that is really not an adequate reply to the question, because the producers themselves, those who are apparently in favour of an open market, or the majority of them, apparently are not organized, or else they were not invited. There has been nothing on the record, apparently, indicating their support of this particular bill.

Senator Argue: We invited them all, and that is all I can say. As far as I know, and I say this frankly, they were all given an opportunity—all those we could think of, dozens of them—and they did not care to come. Some of them sent written briefs to us, and I have those filed. I also have a list of the dozens who were invited to appear but did not do so.

Senator Buckwold: Could you make available a list of the dozens who did not appear?

Senator Argue: I don't want to exaggerate. Perhaps I should add them up, but I thought there were dozens. There might have been less than two dozen, but there would be more than one dozen. I would be very happy to provide the names to Senator Buckwold.

On motion of Senator Olson, debate adjourned.

THE ENVIRONMENT

CONSTRUCTION OF COAL-FIRED POWER PLANT IN SASKATCHEWAN—INQUIRY ANSWERED

Senator Austin inquired of the government pursuant to notice of June 29, 1977:

1. Has the Government received representations from the State Department of the United States with respect to the 300 megawatt coal-fired power plant now under construction by the Saskatchewan Power Corporation eight miles north of the United States border on the east fork of the Poplar River, which flows from Saskatchewan into eastern Montana, either as to the use of the waters of the Poplar River, or with respect to the ambient air quality?

2. If so, what is the nature of those representations?

3. Has Canada made any reply?

4. If so, what is the nature of that reply?

5. What relevance has this project to Canada's position, which is opposed to the water pollution aspect of the proposed Garrison diversion project in the United States, where the essence of the position of the United States has been that deterioration of the water quality of the Red and Souris Rivers in Manitoba is permissible?

Senator Perrault: The answer to the honourable senator's inquiry is as follows:

1. Yes. A formal U.S. Diplomatic Note was delivered to the Canadian Government in February, 1975, and an Aide-Mémoire was received from the U.S. State Department in May, 1976. Periodic meetings have also been held since 1975 involving the U.S. and Canadian Governments, the State of Montana and the Province of Saskatchewan.

2. The U.S. Government and the State of Montana have expressed concerns relating to the maintenance of adequate stream flows across the border, including effects on municipal water supplies, fisheries and agriculture. The U.S. has also expressed reservations concerning the possible effects of the project on air and water quality in the State of Montana.

3. Yes. The Canadian Government has responded to U.S. concerns by various means. Canada replied to the U.S. Diplomatic Note of February, 1975, the same month, taking careful note of the U.S. concerns and giving the U.S. assurances as outlined below. At a number of Canada-U.S. meetings held on the project since 1975, and through regular exchanges of information, the Canadian Government has continued to keep the U.S. Government informed of developments relating to the project, and to address U.S. authorities' concerns on apportionment and air and water quality. At U.S. request the International Joint Commission has been involved in some aspects of the project.

4. In general terms, the Canadian Government has repeatedly assured the U.S. Government that it will comply with its obligations under the Boundary Waters Treaty. For purposes of clarity, a more detailed response to the question can be divided into three parts.

(a) Water apportionment—Canada and the U.S. have agreed to request the IJC to consider the issue of water apportionment between the two countries. The IJC is currently studying this question. Pending the IJC Report, Saskatchewan has unilaterally guaranteed a minimum stream flow from its reservoir.

(b) Water quality—Canada has agreed in principle, at U.S. request, to a reference on water quality to the International Joint Commission. The Canadian and U.S. Governments are presently negotiating the terms of such a reference.

(c) Air quality—U.S. authorities in 1975 agreed that, based on available information, the first 300 MW phase of the project would not cause transborder air quality problems. Both this earlier conclusion and the likely effects of the second phase are being carefully studied in Canada. The project will have to comply with Saskatchewan air quality standards and with federal emission guidelines under preparation by the Department of Fisheries and the Environment. Consultations with the U.S. on this question have been ongoing.

5. The Garrison project is on a much wider scale than the Poplar project, and has a much greater potential to have significant transboundary environmental effects. Nevertheless, insofar as possible pollution is concerned, the two projects involve the same principle and the same treaty obligation. It would not be accurate to state that the essence of the United States position is that the deterioration of the water quality of the Red and Souris Rivers in Manitoba is acceptable. In fact, the U.S. Government has repeatedly assured Canada that it would comply with its obligations under the Boundary Waters Treaty. Canada has made similar assurances in respect of the Poplar project.

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Senator Rowe: Honourable senators, before the question is put I should like to know where we stand in relation to the adjournment motion passed on July 14, that when the Senate adjourned on that day it should stand adjourned until Tuesday, August 2. This may be just a technical point, but I am wondering where we stand in relation to that motion.

Senator Perrault: It is normal procedure that the Senate may be recalled at a time earlier than that set forth in the motion for adjournment.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is covered by rule 14A.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, August 2, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

AGRICULTURE

INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I have further information with respect to the question asked by Senator Olson on June 28. The honourable senator inquired whether or not negotiations were taking place which could in fact lead to an international wheat agreement being in place before the commencement of the crop year which begins on August 1.

There is currently an international wheat agreement in place—the 1971 agreement—which has been extended twice and which will expire at the end of June, 1978. For the past two years members of the International Wheat Council have been examining, by means of a preparatory group drawn from members of the council, the possible elements of a new agreement. As honourable senators may be aware, the current agreement does not contain any economic provisions, that is, pricing provisions. As a result of developments in recent years where there have been extreme fluctuations in prices and considerable concern over world food security, these two aspects are very current in the discussions in the International Wheat Council. There are no negotiations on a new agreement in process at this time. However, matters appear to be gaining some momentum. At its 80th session, held in the last week of June, the council agreed upon a schedule of meetings in the fall which, if agreement is reached on the elements of a new agreement, would likely lead to a decision by the council at its next session—probably late November or early December—to convene a negotiating conference early in 1978 under the auspices of UNCTAD.

Subject to satisfactory progress in the meetings of the preparatory group of the International Wheat Council scheduled for the fall, a decision by the council to convene a negotiating conference and a successful conclusion to that conference, it could be possible for a new international wheat agreement to be in place by the beginning of the International Wheat Council's crop year beginning on July 1, 1978.

INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT—SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTIONS

Senator Olson: Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate advise us whether or not the term "negotiations," used in his reply several times, does in fact mean that negotiations on price will be introduced as one of the agenda items at these further meetings? I do not think he specifically said that.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that further information will be sought and, if possible, provided for the Senate at the earliest possible convenience.

Senator Flynn: For purposes of clarification, would the leader tell me why he said that the crop year will start on August 1 this year but that next year it will start on July 1?

Senator Perrault: I am unable to clarify that technical detail, but I shall endeavour to do so.

Senator Grosart: As one farmer to another.

Senator Flynn: Yes, that is right.

Senator Perrault: That kind of comment goes against the grain.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

POLICY REPORT—QUESTION

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the government if the government will make available this week its report on northern policy which has been promised for the last several months.

Senator Perrault: It is my understanding that that report is imminent, and I shall certainly endeavour to ascertain whether it can be made available to honourable senators.

NORTHERN PIPELINE

SENATE DEBATE—QUESTION

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government a question with respect to a possible debate on the northern pipeline. I understand such debate will be taking place in the other place on the last two days of this week, the 4th and 5th of August. Inasmuch as there is now an inquiry on our order paper that could be used for that debate, will an opportunity be provided in the Senate for a debate concurrent with that in the other place on Thursday or Friday of this week?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, there is no intention to attempt to dissuade any senator from speaking on this important subject. There have been a number of events, however, over recent weeks which have removed many of the controversial aspects of such a possible debate. I have spoken with the Leader of the Opposition about the matter and I hope that further discussions can be held within the next few hours with respect to the possibility of a short debate in the Senate on the subject of the pipeline. As honourable senators are aware, another key report on the feasibility of developing a northern gas pipeline, and one of the possible routes for such a pipeline, should be made available today. That report may provide further basis for a debate in both chambers of Parliament. The honourable senator has, however, advanced an interesting idea with respect to the existing inquiry on the order paper.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

NOTICE OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, may I be permitted to make a short routine announcement in regard to business of the Senate which will take place outside this chamber this afternoon.

I wish to remind those who were unavoidably absent from the meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications this morning that this committee will sit at 2.30 this afternoon in room 356-S to continue its study of Bill C-41, the Maritime Code Act.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—MOTION FOR ADOPTION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, to which was referred Bill C-34, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act respecting the establishment of marketing plans and to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act in consequence thereof.

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, we have before the chamber a report from the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture respecting Bill C-34. This report, at least to me—perhaps because I have not been in this chamber very long—is unusual in at least three ways.

In the first instance, it seems that this report deals with the principle of the bill, because it does not bring the bill back in an amended form. As a matter of fact, it is my understanding that there was no attempt made at all in the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture to amend it. The report simply says that the bill is unnecessary. Although I am not going to do so, I could make a fairly substantive argument, from the point of view of procedure, that once the Senate gives second reading to a bill it does in fact accept the principle of the bill.

Senator Hays: Honourable senators, may I inquire whether Senator Olson is closing the debate? He moved the bill.

Senator Flynn: No. He is speaking on the report.

Senator Olson: My understanding is that the debate at the moment is on the report of the committee.

As I was saying, my impression is—and this may be due either to my lack of knowledge or the different basis on which procedures are carried out in this chamber—that in most parliamentary procedures, once a chamber has made a decision on a certain item, it is not in order to bring that question before the same chamber during the same session. I am not going to make that argument, as I say, because I would hope that I could persuade senators that the bill is necessary, that the decision they made when they accepted this bill in principle on second reading was a right and proper one, and that they should now proceed to third reading of that same bill.

Senator Grosart: Could I ask the honourable senator if he is raising a point of order?

Senator Olson: No. I am not now raising a point of order, but I just wanted to allude to the fact that there is a potential point of order that could be raised here with regard to debating the principle of a bill more than once, or, at least, debating it after it has once been decided in this chamber.

Senator Flynn: Surely, you are not suggesting that on third reading we could not vote against a bill we had passed on second reading? If so, this may be not only lack of experience in the Senate, but also lack of experience in the other place.

Senator Olson: I really would not like to pursue this argument too far, because, as I said, I think I could make the point that the bill is necessary without having to resort to a point of order.

Senator Flynn: Now you are making better sense.

● (1410)

Senator Olson: Although, as I said, I think there is a point of order and a very substantial argument to take that route, I do not choose to take that route.

Let me get to the second part that I regard as rather unusual about this report, which is that it says:

In conclusion, your committee has found this bill to be unnecessary, indeed to clearly duplicate an existing Statute, the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act.

If honourable senators read the entire report they will see, that while the committee says it is unnecessary because there is an existing statute, the report goes on to say:

However, the committee recognizes that the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act may be found wanting.

It therefore seems to me that it is unusual for a committee to report that we should not proceed with this bill because there is another statute under which essentially the same thing could be done, and then go on in the report to say that that statute really may not stand up for the purposes for which this bill calls. I find that very unusual too, although I am not prepared to make a long or profound argument on that point either.

I think we should first establish whether or not this bill is necessary for the people that it will affect; in other words, the rapeseed producers. To me that is what is important. I do not care what the lawyers think about whether you could set up a structure under one act or the other. Looked at realistically and pragmatically, if you like, the point is what kind of structure you would have if you set it up under the provisions of these amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act and the Western Grain Stabilization Act, and compare that with the kind of structure, with respect to physical costs and all those things, you would have if you set it up under the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act.

Firstly, therefore, I should like to call your attention to the speech of the minister, the Honourable Otto Lang, in the other place. I will not quote from it because, as you would expect, having brought in the legislation he is therefore in support of it, otherwise he would not have brought it in. The reason he brought it in was that he had given a commitment to the rapeseed growers in the prairie provinces that he would bring in amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act and to the Western Grain Stabilization Act so that those rapeseed growers in western Canada who wanted to could volunteer their crop to a pool in such a way that they could receive the average price of rapeseed during the entire year and avoid being caught in a situation in which they were obliged to take a price that was dictated by the daily market on the day they happened to deliver their rapeseed.

For those honourable senators who do not understand, may I add that there are days when there is both a quota and space available, so that you can actually deliver your rapeseed to the grain company of your choice. However, there is a very limited and restricted number of days when there are both quota and space in the bins. The producer who takes his rapeseed in on a particular day has to accept the price on that day, notwithstanding that that price may be as much as $1.00—in some cases, as much as $3.00—lower than the high point for the year, and in many cases $1.00 or more below the average price throughout that year.

This bill will enable farmers to take the option of averaging the price over the whole year. Those farmers who do not want that option will be free to take the price on whatever day they deliver their rapeseed. As a matter of fact, a very large producer could probably adjust his deliveries over the entire year in such a way that he would get something close to the average. However, the small producer is subject to those days when there is space in the elevator, and there is, on occasion, a very, very costly penalty imposed by having to take a low price on any given day.

I should like to quote from the remarks of the Honourable Alvin Hamilton, speaking on behalf of Her Majesty's loyal opposition in the other place. His opening sentence in speaking to this measure was as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I think I can put the mind of the minister at ease at the outset by saying there is absolutely no disagreement on the part of the official opposition as to the principles of this bill. I would commend the minister also on his method of presentation.

I should also like to quote the last paragraph of his remarks—

Senator Molson: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might draw my colleague's attention to the fact that he is violating the rules of the Senate in quoting from Hansard of the House of Commons. Rule 34(a) is very clear in that respect. Quoting from a minister's speech is quite in order, but not from the speeches of other members of the House of Commons.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I shall accept that. I read that rule a few days ago. I note that it is violated somewhat from time to time, as recently as yesterday. Since I am caught, I had better not proceed further. I shall instead have to paraphrase what the Honourable Alvin Hamilton had to say when he was speaking to this measure on behalf of the opposition in the other place.

His opinion was that Parliament would serve this country and the producers well were it to pass this bill and pass it in time so that it could be put into place for the next crop year. He again goes on and commends the minister, the Honourable Otto Lang, for bringing this bill forward, and having it drafted in such a way that it is voluntary. I think it is fair to say that it is not usual for the Honourable Alvin Hamilton to commend the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. It certainly does not happen often. I suspect, therefore, that one can safely assume that he felt that this was a good bill and that there was a desire for it on the part of the rapeseed growers in western Canada.

As far as the New Democratic Party in the other place is concerned, they did not accept this bill in its full form. However, party spokesmen did go on to explain that their reason was that the bill did not go far enough and set in place a compulsory full pooling operation. That was the objection of the New Democratic Party.

● (1420)

I think, too, I should draw to the attention of honourable senators that the chairman of the Agriculture Committee, Senator Argue, and his staff, made some contacts in western Canada. He pointed out last night that a number of organizations in the grain business out there did not support this bill. I think he also went on to point out that the percentage of members belonging to the rapeseed growers associations was relatively small. I do not want to go into that argument or to make comparisons, but there are many other organizations which do in fact purport to, and do successfully persuade Parliament that they do, represent a section of the Canadian economy, and when you look at their membership in relation to the total number of people involved in that economic activity, it is pretty small. I suppose that two of the outstanding examples are the Farmers Union of Canada and the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. Neither of those organizations represents more than 5 per cent of the total number of producers in the country—in many cases a whole lot less than that. But I suggest, honourable senators, that the rapeseed growers of Saskatchewan and of Manitoba and even of Alberta are surely the ones the producers turn to when they want to deal with something specifically involving rapeseed and the marketing of it. The Rapeseed Growers Association of Saskatchewan were contacted. Their reply, according to the report handed to us in committee, was that they wished to see the legislation passed for the 1977-78 crop year. They also say that during the 1973-74 plebiscite the option of voluntary pooling was promised to producers. That, honourable senators, is exactly what this Bill C-34 does: it gives the option of voluntary pooling. They go on to say that the federal government should keep its promises. I think the minister, the Honourable Otto Lang, is keeping his promise in this respect.

The Manitoba Rapeseed Growers Association, according to the report, said that they approve and support the voluntary street price pooling for rapeseed, as provided for in these amendments.

There is much, much more that I could quote by way of the support for this particular bill, but what I want to do, if I may, is draw some comparisons between what kind of physical structure you would have under Bill C-34, which comprises the amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act and the Western Grain Stabilization Act, and what kind of structure would have to be set up by way of physical establishment and the costs related thereto if you took the route of the so-called existing statute, that being the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act.

Honourable senators will realize that all the Canadian Wheat Board will be involved in doing under these amendments is administering the quota control, which is done by the permit books already in existence for every producer in western Canada, regardless of whether he grows wheat, oats, barley, rapeseed or any other grain subject to a delivery quota system from time to time. That whole structure is already in place and all that this Bill C-34 would do is to provide the Canadian Wheat Board with the authority to have those books endorsed. Therefore, if a producer volunteers to join a pool, there is then a way of making sure that there is a record of his deliveries in his permit book once he has volunteered to join that pool. As the bill points out, once he volunteers to join a pool, then, of course, he cannot sell his rapeseed outside that pool for the balance of that crop year. It seems to me that that is eminently reasonable for any person knowing that those are the terms and conditions. If he wants to take an average price, if he wants to have the benefit of an average price over the whole year, then he has to agree to deliver his rapeseed to that pool for the same year.

Senator Hays: May I be permitted to ask the honourable senator a question with respect to the permit books as they now exist? I understand they must be filled in before July 31 for the crop year of 1977-78. Would it be possible, therefore, to have this pooling arrangement in effect now or would it be necessary to wait until 1978?

Senator Olson: I am not sure that I can answer that question specifically. The Honourable Senator Hays has a slightly different interpretation from mine. I do not think you have to apply for your book before the new crop year starts. It is advisable to do so, however, because there is always a four-to-six-week delay between the time you make an application for a permit book and the time that application is processed and approved by the Wheat Board. In the meantime, of course, you cannot deliver any kind of grain. Obviously, then, it is advisable to do so before the end of the crop year. But I think they do take the applications later on.

Senator Hays: Is it not necessary that you do so before the 31st?

Senator Olson: No, it is not. You can apply afterwards and have them approved. But there is a delay.

But to answer the other part of Senator Hays' question, I am not sure whether this pooling arrangement could be put in place for this year, which is now the current crop year 1977-78. I do not think so. I do not believe the minister really believed that they could even when he introduced the bill. But he did want to have the amendments made to the Canadian Wheat Board Act and to the Western Grain Stabilization Act so those producers and companies who were interested in this pooling would have several months to put together a pooling plan which would be acceptable to the government. I think they need that much time. When I say "that much", I do not know whether they need six months or five months or what, but if we pass this bill they will have almost a year in which to do it and they may need all of that time because this is a new departure. I know that some senators have argued that voluntary pools have been tried before and have not worked, but I do not accept that argument in this case, because there are fundamentally different rules for the basis of this pooling with government guarantees and other things that were not present under previous voluntary pooling arrangements.

I would plead with honourable senators to take these things into account. I think that if they accept the argument that this bill is unnecessary simply because it can be done under another statute, they should look at the cost of that and look also at the number of rapeseed producers who will be almost automatically left out of any pooling system. I say that because the activities and the administration of the Canadian Wheat Board is universal across western Canada. It is established administratively in every delivery point in the four western provinces—that is, the three prairie provinces and those areas in British Columbia where they produce grain.

If you were going to go under the other act, the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act, you would have to set up a whole new physical structure for the administration of quotas, which the Wheat Board already does, and for the arrangements for selling. That may not be very much different from the method used by the grain companies that do the buying and selling of rapeseed now. But even more important, to set up a structure under the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act you would have to have a reasonable number of producers and within a reasonable geographic area. That is the practical way of doing it. It does not say that in the act, but that is how it would have to be done, because it becomes a large co-operative market, a co-operative marketing structure. So, if you had a fairly large number of producers in one geographical area who wanted to use that act and it was confined to that, perhaps it could be done. Then, you might have a smaller number of producers, who would not be large enough to be viable by themselves and who would be perhaps 500 or 1,000 miles away and delivering to several delivery points, who might also want to have the benefit of pooling the price for the entire year. While I am not saying it is absolutely impossible, I believe it would be putting a tremendously unnecessary and costly burden on those rapeseed producers to set up that kind of structure under the Agricultural Cooperative Marketing Act. I think, too, that the way that would be the most convenient, the least costly, and the most acceptable to all the producers, and indeed, to some of the grain companies, is exactly the way the minister has designed this bill. When some senators say that the Wheat Board can administer the quota control, and that farmers can get together and work out a kind of pooling arrangement in one, two, or several different ways with whatever selling agency they want, this is provided for in the act, and I think that is the reasonable way to do it.

● (1430)

I want to make one other argument before I conclude. While the report that came back from the committee—if you set aside a lot of words that may or may not be important and look only at the operative words, which are really what we are going to be voting on in the Senate, today or at a later date—says that the bill is unnecessary for the reason that it could be done under another act, nevertheless, as I listened to the arguments advanced by Senator Argue last night, it seemed to me that he was not so vitally concerned with the reasons given in the report. Senator Argue expressed far more concern about the possibility that this was going to undermine, in some way or another, the marketing system that is now established under the Canadian Wheat Board, and which is operating so successfully with respect to wheat, oats and barley. I accept that that is an argument, but it does not, in my view, quite fit in with the report.

Let us deal with that for a moment. The argument is advanced that in terms of Bill C-34 there is a potential for proliferation of a large number of pools that would undermine or even destroy the Canadian Wheat Board pooling concept of marketing. In the first place, let me say that each pooling scheme or arrangement has to be approved by the Governor in Council, or the minister, and I am sure that he is not going to approve a great proliferation of small, inefficient and non-beneficial pools. We have to accept that he is going to do these things in a responsible way. I also suggest that if these pools turn out to be the opposite, that is, turn out to be successful, and if producers are satisfied and happy with taking an average price rather than a daily price which may be way out of line vis-à-vis the average, then a move could be made to a system whereby the Wheat Board could take the whole thing over. But at the moment I think it is futile to make that argument, because we have the results of the vote that the minister is keenly aware of, taken in 1974. While that vote was close, the fact still remains that it was 53 per cent against full pooling and 46 per cent in favour; therefore, for the minister to move now to bring in a bill that would amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, and make it mandatory for full pooling of 100 per cent of the rapeseed producers, would be an irresponsible act and one which would fly in the face of that vote. That is why the minister has done it in this way.

Senator Greene: Would the honourable senator permit a question? Would he inform the Senate as to whether or not the Agricultural Products Marketing Act is administered by a different department of government from that which is responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board Act, which we are now amending? Would he also inform the Senate as to whether there is a difference of opinion between the officials of Agriculture Canada, which administers the first act, and which says that the second act is not necessary, because they can look after the matters it covers, and the officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who deem that the bill is necessary? Is it not also true that what the report does is to say, "We accept holus-bolus, and willy-nilly, the views of the Department of Agriculture, whose witness, Dr. Smith, says it is not necessary," and that what we are really doing is settling an internal difference between two departments?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I really cannot answer with regard to the difference of opinion referred to by the honourable senator, if there is one, between the officials in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and those in the Department of Agriculture. But it is a fact, of course, that the administration of the two acts is carried out by separate and different departments. I suppose the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, for the most part, administers the responsibilities of the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, whereas the Agricultural Cooperative Marketing Act is administered by the Department of Agriculture.

The question put by the honourable senator is interesting in another respect, however, and that is that the rest of the Canadian Wheat Board and grain marketing structures, all through western Canada and, indeed, in the international field, are handled by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce insofar as administrative responsibility is concerned, and that is exactly what would happen to rapeseed. As a matter of fact, it would stay right within the jurisdiction in which it lies now, if this bill were to be passed. If it is not passed, then of course, if another bill is brought forward under the Agricultural Cooperative Marketing Act, all that would change. I think it would be highly undesirable for it all to change, notwithstanding that there is a large number of very successful marketing co-operatives set up under the Agricultural Cooperative Marketing Act.

Honourable senators, I want to conclude by suggesting to you that the duplication of the physical facilities across the prairies would look like sheer nonsense to the producers out there. They haul their grain to the same elevator, whether it is rapeseed, wheat, oats, or whatever, and to have two structures within that elevator to look after the quota control would really look silly. I cannot think of a better word than "silly." That is what farmers out there would think of having these two things in the same place.

Then there is the cost. I do not believe this is going to add enough cost to the Canadian Wheat Board's operation for them to be able even to measure it. It is a simple endorsement of a producer's quota book so that he cannot bring rapeseed in and sell it outside the pool when he delivers it. I therefore think we ought to take these things into account.

When Senator Greene asked his question I was dealing with the possibility that there may be a problem of proliferation of pools. In this regard there is some experience, not only in Canada but in other places in the world, which shows that that has broken down and has been a disadvantage over the long term.

This act provides for government guarantees up to 100 per cent of the initial price paid to the rapeseed growers; it provides for administrative costs, and it also provides for payments into the western grain stabilization fund, which is guaranteed by the Government of Canada. Therefore, I do not really believe that you can make the argument that any single one of the pools is going to fail, because in the first place the government is not going to approve a scheme that does not seem to be potentially viable. Secondly, if the government does approve such a scheme, it is going to have to stand behind it so that it cannot be a disaster to the producers. It seems to me that the most reasonable, most logical, and by far the most beneficial thing that this chamber could do, in the interests of the producers, is to allow this bill to become law so that those producers who want to participate in the pool will have that option, and so that those who want to continue to sell on the open market and take the daily price will also have that option.

● (1440)

I would like to recommend that honourable senators defeat the motion to adopt the committee report and proceed from there to put the question for third reading, so that we can put this bill in place and amend the statute so that those people who are interested in getting on with the job can design the kind of scheme that will be beneficial to all the people who are affected by it.

Senator Hays: Could I ask the honourable senator a question? The honourable senator has made a very strong case, but does he now believe we should take oats out and permit a small pool, that we should take wheat and barley out and make small pools, and that thereby the producers might be better off?

Senator Olson: No, I would not make that argument at all. I think it is well established that by far the greatest majority of producers on the prairies accept that pool marketing, the complete pooling of the price for the entire year on wheat, oats and barley, has been beneficial to them.

I would go even further, if you would like me to look into the future, although I do not have a crystal ball. I would say that before very long there will be 100 per cent pooling for rapeseed. That is why I hope this bill will pass soon, so that it can be tried, and so that the benefits will be apparent within a very short time. The minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, whoever it may be, some years down the road could introduce a bill that would simply amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, which would put rapeseed into the Canadian Wheat Board on the same basis as wheat, oats and barley for export and domestic purposes at the same time. It is simply a progressive step, and this is the first step towards getting rapeseed into essentially the same kind of structure. The reason that kind of bill is not before us now is that in 1974 there was a vote, when 53 per cent of those voting said they were not then ready to go for a 100 per cent pooling of rapeseed.

Senator Hays: Perhaps the honourable senator would permit another question. Since that vote was taken nearly four years ago, do you believe we should have another vote and once again ask the rapeseed growers whether they are prepared to entertain belonging to a whole pool?

Senator Olson: I think there may be an appropriate time to take another vote. Whether it is this year, next year or in 1980 I would not like to predict at this moment. But I also believe that the government and both houses of Parliament have a responsibility to deliver on a commitment they made at the conclusion of the last vote, which was, according to the rapeseed producers, that the government would bring in voluntary pooling so that those who wanted to pool could and those who wanted to remain in the open market could do so. It may not be this year or next year, but I do not believe we should renege on a promise to producers that the Canadian Wheat Board Act and the Western Grain Stabilization Act would be changed in the meantime or amended so that it could be used in the meantime.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, it is my impression that Senator Olson suggested that the action of the committee in reporting that this bill be not proceeded with might be out of order. I asked him if he was raising a point of order and he said no, that was not the route he was taking in his discussion of the bill. On the other hand, I believe a very important principle is raised by this suggestion, which is what is to be the procedure following second reading of a bill.

There was an idea, which is almost an anachronism now, that the principle of a bill is approved on second reading. This is about as far out of date as anything I know in procedure, for the obvious reason that the motion on second reading is that the bill be read a second time, and nothing more. There is then a motion that the bill be referred to a committee. It is referred to a committee, obviously requiring the committee to report, because under our rules it is a requirement. The committee can report that the bill be approved without amendment, with amendment, or that the bill be not proceeded with. If it is not in order for a committee to make such a report as this committee has made, surely the whole procedure would stop when second reading is approved; the principle would be approved if that theory still held.

Under our rules, of course, there is no such prohibition, no such suggestion at all. Rule 54 states quite clearly that the principle of a bill is usually debated on second reading. Our rules earlier stated that it is debated on second reading, and when this very point was raised in the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders it was decided to put in that word "usually," because otherwise rule 54 made no sense.

What has made this whole concept completely anomalous, I think, is the practice, particularly under the present government, of bringing in omnibus bills. What was the principle of some of these omnibus bills? We have one before us dealing with wire tapping, with gun control and so on. What is the principle of that bill? One of the objections to this kind of omnibus bill is that nobody knows what the principle is. Some may be in favour of the provision dealing with gun control and not in favour of those dealing with wire tapping, or vice versa.

I wish Senator Olson had raised this as a point of order so that we might have had a ruling, because every now and then we are faced with someone saying that we have passed a bill in principle, which we do not do on second reading in this chamber.

Senator Perrault: I do not think that is the type of argument being invoked by Senator Olson.

Senator Flynn: Let him speak for himself.

Senator Perrault: I am not trying to escalate this into any kind of major debate. I do not think there is any dispute on this side about the point advanced by Senator Grosart. Rule 81 clearly says:

When a Committee to which a bill has been referred considers that the bill should not be proceeded with further in the Senate, it shall so report to the Senate, stating its reasons. If the motion for the adoption of the report is carried, the bill shall be removed from the order paper.

That is clearly in our rules. The committee had a right to bring in this kind of recommendation. I believe that the appeal being made by Senator Olson is with respect to the substance of the bill, as were the remarks made by Senator Argue yesterday.

Senator Grosart: Perhaps if the Leader of the Government reads Hansard he will see that Senator Olson said quite clearly that in his opinion it was very possible, in fact that it was probable, that the motion of the committee was not in order under our rules. That is why I raised that point.

Senator Greene: On a point of order. I believe that honourable senators have a right to be quoted correctly on any point they have made. I would point out that, contrary to Senator Grosart's allegation, Senator Olson clearly, categorically and unequivocally said he was not making a point of order on that issue.

Senator Grosart: I said that. I said exactly that, if you had listened.

Senator Forsey: May I just add a comment to this? In a very historic case a Senate committee, I believe the Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, concerning a bill to remove Mr. Coyne from the governorship of the Bank of Canada, reported that the bill be not proceeded with. Some honourable senators who are members of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications will clearly recall that a couple of years ago, I think, a bill came before that committee dealing with the rights of creditors of airlines.

Senator Flynn: Aircraft.

Senator Forsey: The committee was of the opinion that it was completely beyond the powers of the Parliament of Canada, that it encroached upon the powers of the provinces.

It reported that the bill should not be proceeded with and the bill was not proceeded with, yet no question was raised about that at all. I think there are historic instances of the application of the rule which the honourable Leader of the Government has quoted. It seems to me beyond question. While it is true that Senator Olson did not raise the point of order, I think it is important that since the question was brought up—even by a side wind, even obliquely—it should be made perfectly clear to all honourable senators that this report is in fact perfectly in order, whatever be the merits or demerits of its substance.

● (1450)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, as I pointed out, I did not wish to raise the point of order. Senator Greene has expressed my position. It seems to me that the Senate made its decision when it gave second reading to this bill, and that is the reason I made that argument.

Senator Flynn: It is a bad argument.

Senator Olson: Adoption of a bill on second reading, as far as I know, includes an endorsement of the principle involved in the bill. Some will argue that it does not. I listened very carefully to Senator Grosart's argument that that is not necessarily so. I shall accept that. However, to my knowledge, it is clearly out of order to introduce a second motion in the same session of Parliament dealing with exactly the same substance.

Senator Flynn: That is even worse.

Senator Olson: It seems to me that when this bill passed second reading, its principle was adopted. To now say that the measure is unnecessary because there is another statute that can be used is, in effect, to re-introduce exactly the same motion—a motion upon which determination has already been made. However, honourable senators, as has been indicated, there is no point of order before us. Perhaps we should simply let it die.

Some Hon. Senators: Question!

Senator Olson: I merely want to point out that the Agriculture Committee, it seems to me, by this report is attempting to superimpose its judgment over the judgment that the entire Senate expressed when adopting the motion for the second reading of this bill.

Some Hon. Senators: Question!

Senator Flynn: A senator cannot speak twice on the same motion.

Some Hon. Senators: Order!

Senator Yuzyk: Honourable senators, I want to go on record as supporting the recommendations of the Agriculture Committee with respect to this bill. Honourable senators will recall that I supported this bill in principle on second reading. I did so after reading the debates of the other place.

I should like to inform the house that this bill was dealt with hurriedly by the other place. Two days were devoted to it, and it was considered in Committee of the Whole. To my knowledge there was no mention whatsoever of the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act of 1939. Had the other place considered this bill more thoroughly in committee, it might not have reached the Senate at all.

The Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act of 1939 was discussed by the Agriculture Committee of the Senate, and as a result of that discussion I came to the conclusion that Bill C-34 was not only useless, but perhaps even redundant. To my mind, it represents an unnecessary proliferation of legislation. Just about everything contained in the bill is already provided in the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act of 1939. Furthermore, the government provides a guarantee under that act to the extent of 100 per cent of the initial price of the product that is marketed and not 90 per cent. The proposed legislation, therefore, would appear to be a retrograde step, at least in that respect.

Senator Argue has faithfully represented the arguments made in committee and, in so doing, has presented a case for the rejection of the bill at this stage. The bill provides for the pooling of rapeseed, but it is not clear that the majority want to have such a system. The split on the question was 52 per cent to 46 per cent, which is rather borderline. It seems to me we should await the results of a further poll of the rapeseed producers before proceeding further with legislation of this type. We should know whether or not the producers are willing to go ahead with an arrangement of this kind under the Canadian Wheat Board.

There was some evidence that the Canadian Wheat Board itself is reluctant to pursue this matter.

The rapeseed producers can readily establish pools, although the establishment of such pools would require the approval of the minister. I am sure that the rapeseed producers would not want a proliferation of pools. They would prefer to have one efficient pool to take care of their needs. We know that pools have been established under the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act, and we know that they have been very successful in eastern Canada. The potato growers pool in Prince Edward Island is one example. There is no doubt in my mind that such a pool, were it desired on the part of the rapeseed growers, could be successful. There is no question that a pool could be established, including a permit system, that would work to their favour. I am totally in favour of pools of this kind. However, I do not feel that we need extra legislation to promote such pools at this juncture, which can be readily established by the rapeseed growers under current legislation. However, the rapeseed growers themselves, who are well organized, I understand, have not come out very clearly regarding the establishment of such a pool.

Senator Greene: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator Yuzyk: Certainly.

Senator Greene: I wonder if the honourable senator would help me, and other honourable senators, as one knowledgeable in this area, as to the answer to Senator Olson's criticism that to set up pools under the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act would be to merely create a duplication, as currently all grains in the west are pooled under the Canadian Wheat Board Act, and that such duplication would include an increment in costs which would ultimately be borne by the producers and that such duplication, as Senator Olson put it, would appear silly to the very practical producers of western Canada.

Senator Flynn: Another speech. That is your third speech on this.

Senator Yuzyk: As the honourable senator is aware, I am no authority on wheat pools or on agriculture in general. I do, however, go out amongst the farmers to discuss their problems with them. I have just recently returned from western Canada where I discussed some of these matters with the farmers. There did not seem to be all that much enthusiasm for this bill in western Canada, at least amongst those with whom I discussed it. If the Canadian Wheat Board is not interested in this aspect, then I do not see what the duplication would mean in any event.

● (1500)

I believe that with such large producers as rapeseed producers they could easily have a pool established which would take care of all these costs. I do not really understand that these costs would be so great and prohibitive as to stop them from forming a pool of their own in Canada, because this has already been done in eastern Canada in the case of other agricultural products including grains. And from my understanding they have been rather successful. I do not see that these costs, then, would be prohibitive.

On the other hand, I see that they would be tending to their own matters much more than they would by mixing it up with all the other grains, because here they would be concerned with rapeseed only, which, of course, is a growing product and is on demand off and on and will be dependent on how the industry develops with its oils in the future. Therefore I do not see that this is a factor which would prohibit them from establishing pools of their own.

In conclusion, I should like to state that I think the Senate Committee on Agriculture has done a good job. It has studied this bill thoroughly and we should not be afraid in the Senate to support the Agriculture Committee in this case, which was overwhelmingly in favour of this bill not being proceeded with. This will show that we here in the Senate are considering the merits of legislation. That is important. Political considerations, of course, can be important as well, but the merits of the legislation itself is a more important aspect, and I would urge that the members of this house support the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture in its report and that we not proceed to third reading of this bill.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, in a question that I directed to the Honourable Senator Argue, chairman of the committee, yesterday, further to what had been asked of the minister in charge, Senator Argue's instructions to me were to read the evidence. He said:

The evidence is contained in the committee's proceedings, and it has been printed if the honourable senator wishes to read it.

Well, I should like to say that I did look up the proceedings of the committee and I did read the evidence. In fact, a direct question was asked of the minister as to why this particular route was taken, that is, an amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act, rather than establishing pools under the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act.

I presume, Senator Molson, that quoting from a minister is within the rules.

Senator Hays asked the question, and I might say that it was early in the proceedings of that day. I think it was the second question asked. Senator Hays asked:

Mr. Minister, what can be accomplished by means of this bill which cannot be accomplished through the Agricultural Products Marketing Act?

It seems that that is a fairly direct question. The Honourable Mr. Lang replied:

The key is in the provision allowing the endorsement of the permit book with the fact that rapeseed which may be delivered under that permit book can only be delivered in a way which is assigned to the pool which the farmer has joined. This adds to the likelihood that he must deliver in that fashion to keep his contractual obligations firm. Therefore it also brings into play the penalties for the wrongful delivery of grain contrary to the designation in the permit book. That is the main change and it is, of course, the one which I believe to be of real practical importance if the pool is to work.

Senator Sparrow then asked:

Why could the amendment not be added to the Agricultural Products Marketing Act, then, rather than this, an amendment to the Wheat Board Act? If it is just the two provisions to which you make reference, it seems to me that it might not require extensive amendments to the Wheat Board Act.

Mr. Lang replied:

I believe that the extensive amendments to the Wheat Board Act are required if a permit system is to be made to operate in this fashion really outside of providing for one or two details, such as the potential guarantee of the initial price, making the logical provision for payment of levy to the stabilization plan and the like, which also would be required in amendments if we had simply wanted to use the other route. These amendments would permit, essentially, rather readily structured voluntary pools.

I think that is the key. This is the crux of the matter which has escaped the committee itself. It would require amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act in order to achieve what we are doing here. They may not be as extensive as these, but would be necessary in order to achieve voluntary pools that would work so that the farmers would not get into them and get out of them willy-nilly and, as has happened sometimes in voluntary pool schemes, get out of the plan when prices are good because they want to deliver outside the pool and, when prices are dropping, get into the pool so they can get the average price. In order to ensure an adequate and responsible pool which would give a good average price, it would be necessary to have an amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act. I think that is quite clear and I have certainly had that from very good authority. So, if you want to achieve a pool on a voluntary basis and make it work in a way that would be satisfactory to those producers who are in it, then I suggest that this particular bill should be supported. I suggest that the recommendations of the committee are really not capable of producing the results which this bill does for the benefit of those farmers who wish to be in it.

Senator Yuzyk has indicated that rapeseed growers are great, large producers. There are 40,000 rapeseed producers in the prairies and that is a large number. Many of them are small producers with relatively small acreages in rapeseed. Some of them are large, but many of them are using rapeseed as a secondary crop as part of their farming operation. It is obvious that a majority, at the last vote, indicated that they wanted to be outside the control of the Wheat Board. Nevertheless, many of them would like to be involved in voluntary pools. The small producers, obviously, could not do this unless we were to have some kind of organized pool basis.

Senator Hays: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Are you suggesting that there is a group who want to be in small pools? I do not believe that a vote was taken on small pools.

Senator Buckwold: I think the honourable senator has misinterpreted my remarks, but I apologize if that is the impression I have given. What I said was that there are small producers who might like to be in pools, but obviously you do not want a lot of small pools. What I can envisage happening, basically, is that some of the large companies—it could be the wheat pool, it could be the United Grain Growers, it could be the Cargill Grain Company—will set up voluntary pools which will achieve the purpose of this particular bill.

● (1510)

Honourable senators, having said that, just to clarify a situation which is very complex, for those of you who are not involved in the prairie farming scene, I would suggest that the minister is attempting, in bringing forward this bill, to meet the commitment which was made to those who wanted to adopt this process and who did not want to be involved in a complete Wheat Board control situation. Producers, nevertheless, would have liked the opportunity to be part of a voluntary pool. That commitment was made by the minister, and this is his reaction to it.

It could be argued that there should be another vote. I think Senator Olson responded to that particular question by indicating that perhaps that time has come; but that should not in any way interfere with the passage of the legislation as proposed, and I would again urge that the report of the committee be rejected and that the bill be passed.

Hon. Herbert O. Sparrow: Honourable senators, I rise to speak in favour of the adoption by the Senate of the report presented by the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture.

A great deal of study has been carried out with regard to this bill by your committee. Any witness that the committee deemed to be able to make a contribution to the work of the committee was asked to appear. Among those who did appear, of course, was the Minister of Transport, who is, as well, the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, and who is the sponsor of this legislation. We also had Mr. Gibson from the grain marketing office of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and Dr. Vern Smith, who is with the marketing services division of the Department of Agriculture. We asked a number of farm organizations if they wished to appear or to make written submissions. I will cover this aspect in more detail later in my remarks, because the question was raised yesterday by Senator Buckwold as to who was contacted and what the results of those contacts were.

I should like also to point out that within your Agriculture Committee there is a great deal of agricultural expertise. I do not want to emphasize the expertise of only the members from western Canada, because there is expertise in agriculture from all areas of this country among the members of that committee. To refresh your memory, however, let me mention Senator Harry Hays, a former federal Minister of Agriculture; Senator McNamara, a former Commissioner of the Wheat Board; Senator Argue, who has had a great deal of experience in agriculture, and has a great agricultural background; Senator Molgat; Senator Hammy McDonald, who is former Minister of Agriculture of the province of Saskatchewan; Senator Yuzyk, who has been a very active and important member of that committee; Senator Inman and Senator Norrie, who have taken a great interest in agriculture in their part of Canada, and who are qualified and certainly capable of passing opinions and judgments on agricultural bills which come before the committee.

Senator Petten: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator Sparrow: You bet.

Senator Petten: Did I understand you to say that Senator Hammy McDonald agreed with the committee report?

Senator Sparrow: I have not mentioned that anyone agreed to it. I am just naming the members of the Agriculture Committee.

Senator Benidickson: Who agreed and who did not agree?

Senator Sparrow: If you like, I will get to that later.

Also on the committee are Senator Williams, Senator Riel, Senator Greene, a former Minister of Agriculture, Senator Lafond, Senator John M. Macdonald, Senator McGrand and Senator Michaud.

When the vote was taken in committee on this particular proposal, as I remember, eight voted for the committee report, and two against. I am not certain if I could tell you at the moment who the eight people were who voted for the motion, but I can tell you who voted against it. One of these was, of course, a member of the Opposition, Senator Macdonald. The other was Senator Greene, the former Minister of Agriculture. The rest of the members voted to support the report that has been presented. Senator Argue, of course, as chairman, did not vote.

I am not certain that I know, nor is it necessary that I know, the exact reason why Senator Macdonald would vote against the report, but if I can remember his comments, without quoting him directly, he stated that the bill only makes provision for people to apply under the act, that he could see no harm in it and would therefore not vote for the committee report. I do not wish to put words in Senator Macdonald's mouth, so I hope he will correct me if I have misinterpreted him.

As far as Senator Greene is concerned, I should like to give two quotations from his remarks in the committee itself. At the meeting on June 22 of this year, Senator Greene had this to say:

There is also the danger, since the Canadian Wheat Board has over many years and over many hurdles established credibility, that a voluntary pool which was not successful in rapeseed or some other commodity might shake the confidence in the Wheat Board that has been built up not only domestically but in foreign markets over many years.

At the July meeting, and though I do not have the exact date of that meeting I think it was the thirteenth, speaking in opposition to the motion made in committee, Senator Greene said this:

Mr. Chairman, I believe in parliamentary responsible government or I would not be sitting here. The proposed motion is, in effect, a motion of want of confidence in the government. This is a government bill, and while the arguments presented by Senator Sparrow are both cogent and powerful, they have not persuaded me that they are sufficiently powerful and cogent that I should record a vote of want of confidence in the government in the Senate. Therefore I intend to support the bill.

It seems to me that if that was the only argument that Senator Greene was prepared, in this particular context, to offer, namely, that it showed a want of confidence in the government, it is not really a very relevant argument as far as the discussion on the bill is concerned.

Yesterday Senator Buckwold asked Senator Argue what witnesses had been invited to appear before the committee, and he wanted to know if an effort had really been made to contact various producers and organizations. In his comments today Senator Olson said that there is a small group of rapeseed producers in the Saskatchewan Rapeseed Producers Association which, though representing only a very small portion of those producers, is in fact a representative group that would be asking for this bill. He indicated that it is not always the large number of producers, but it is in fact a representative group that would be asking for this bill, and we must really be aware that even a small group do represent the agricultural producers of the west.

● (1520)

Perhaps I might be permitted, for the record, to list the organizations that were contacted, and briefly give you their comments on the proposed legislation. Not only did they believe that the legislation was of no particular importance and was unnecessary in most instances, but they said they were not particularly interested in even appearing before the committee.

The Canadian Wheat Board, through its commissioner, was, of course, asked to appear but declined to do so. The invitation was extended, and perhaps it was reasonable for them to decline because the minister himself had appeared before the committee.

The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool was contacted and said they did not wish to make a presentation, although they verbally expressed their doubts about the necessity and practicability of voluntary pooling for rapeseed.

The Manitoba Pool Elevators adopted the same position as the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool.

The United Grain Growers, another very important agricultural organization in western Canada, stated that they also had no position on this proposed legislation.

The National Farmers Union, to which Senator Olson referred, opposed the voluntary pooling concept. It is, of course, well known that their stand is that they want all producers to be under one pooling system under the Canadian Wheat Board, and certainly not a multitude of individual, small groups.

The Prairie Rapeseed Growers Council are, to my knowledge, the only group that have stated they were in favour of the option of voluntary pooling.

Parrish and Heimbecker Limited sent a written brief.

Pioneer Grain Company Limited stated that they cannot see how true pooling could be made to work, and could see very little demand for street price pooling. They said they would forward a brief. If they have done so, I have not read it.

The Continental Grain Company was contacted. They did not wish to appear but also said they may forward a brief, which also I have not read if one was forwarded.

The Cargill Grain Company saw little demand for pools. Canbra Foods Limited foresaw little demand for pools.

CSP Foods Limited were contacted. They had previously operated pools for rapeseed, but they said that with the increasing number of marketing outlets these had declined in popularity.

The United Oil Seeds Limited and Narp Trading Company Limited, were also contacted and both declined to appear. This is a partial list of those contacted.

One of the rapeseed producer organizations that appeared was in favour of the voluntary provisions of this bill, but was estimated to represent about 900 members. Of 41,000 rapeseed growers—and that figure of 41,000 is the number of ballots distributed to producers when the 1974 rapeseed plebiscite was held—32,000 producers replied and voted on the plebiscite, so the 900 in favour is a very small percentage of the 32,000 ballots returned.

Senator Buckwold: Would the honourable senator permit a question? What is the name of the group representing 900 producers?

Senator Sparrow: The Saskatchewan Rapeseed Growers Association.

I am not certain that the associations who are in favour were even aware of the fact that we did have, and have, provisions in other legislation that would permit them to have voluntary pooling if they so desire.

Senator Olson has stated that when the plebiscite was held the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, the Honourable Otto Lang, promised the rapeseed producers that provision would be made for voluntary pooling. If he made that statement at that time I am not certain he could have known of the existing legislation that was on the books then, because that provision is there, and was there at that time.

It appears to me that if we try to put this new bill on the books it is, as Senator Yuzyk stated—I am not quoting him directly but paraphrasing—it would be a redundant and needless piece of legislation.

The committee report stated that the provisions, as I see them, that are asked for can certainly be made by very simple amendments to the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act, which is presently in operation for Ontario wheat producers, Ontario bean growers and Prince Edward Island vegetable growers. If the act as it exists today can serve the needs of these producers in the rest of the nation, I see no reason why that same legislation cannot serve the needs of western rapeseed producers as well. If there is something in this bill that would in fact be beneficial to western producers, then why would that provision not be made available to all agricultural producers in the nation under the existing legislation?

There is one area being considered, of course, and that is the use of permit books. It is stated that this legislation is required under the Canadian Wheat Board Act because of the need for the producer to use his existing Wheat Board permit. I want to refer to some comments I made on another occasion about the use of permit books, and to show that to use the existing permit books that the wheat producers of the west are using for purposes other than the recording of deliveries of grains, it is not in fact necessary to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act. In Bill C-34, sections 35.17, 35.18 and 35.22 provide for an endorsement of the Wheat Board permit books for inspectors and for statutory penalties, which are provisions that go beyond what is presently provided in the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act. The question is whether it was necessary to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act to achieve these ends, and I believe the answer is no.

● (1530)

Both the Western Grain Stabilization Act and the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act contain sections which provide for endorsement of the permit book. There is no corresponding or enabling provision in the Canadian Wheat Board Act itself. If those two acts make provision for the use of the permit book without the necessity of an amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act, why would this proposal for pooling require an amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act? As far as I know, such an amendment would not be necessary.

The example of the Western Grain Stabilization Act is especially interesting inasmuch as that program is voluntary. Section 15 of that act states:

... the Minister may, and shall upon application by the actual producers, cause an endorsement to be made in the prescribed form in the permit book—

Under the bill now being considered, the proposed section 35.17 is headed, "Endorsement of Permit Books," and states:

Every producer who agrees to participate in a marketing plan shall deliver his permit book to the administrator of the plan and an endorsement shall be made therein in such form as is prescribed by the Governor in Council, containing a notice to the effect that the producer named in the permit book has agreed to participate in the plan.

So, the permit book even under the proposed amendment would not go to the Canadian Wheat Board. The Canadian Wheat Board, as Senator Olson seemed to indicate, was to play a very important role in this legislation. However, the bill itself states that the permit book that is issued does not even have to be endorsed by the Canadian Wheat Board itself, but only by the administrator of the pooling plan.

Senator Olson said as well that there would be what he considered duplication between the functions of the Canadian Wheat Board and this proposed co-operative pooling system. If my recollection is correct, he said it would be silly to have such duplication.

I should like to quote from the committee proceedings where Senator Olson was questioning the minister, as follows:

SENATOR OLSON: I have one or two questions, Mr. Chairman.

First of all, do the amendments in this bill provide the Canadian Wheat Board with the authority to be a marketer?

HON. MR. LANG: There is nothing in the bill to stop the Wheat Board from being a participant. The bill itself does not add anything to the Wheat Board's power.

THE CHAIRMAN: In practical terms, I do not think it is likely that the Wheat Board would want in or that the minister would want it in.

HON. MR. LANG: That is correct, I do not believe that the Wheat Board would be in.

SENATOR OLSON: But the present Wheat Board Act, notwithstanding these amendments, does have the authority so that the Wheat Board could in fact be a full pool marketer if that was the policy of the government.

HON. MR. LANG: I believe so, but really it is much like any other marketer . . .

There is certainly no contemplation on my part or on the part of the Wheat Board that they would be involved with rapeseed.

SENATOR OLSON: If on the basis of evolution and on the basis of trial and error, but if the growers should decide they wanted to go for full pooling, would the Wheat Board not be the obvious marketer in that case?

HON. MR. LANG: Yes, it would be. If that plebiscite of two years ago were reversed in favour of total marketing, then clearly the Wheat Board would be the logical body to handle it.

I cannot see from Senator Olson's questions in committee, and the minister's answers, where all of a sudden it would be a silly duplication of functions between the Canadian Wheat Board and the proposed amendments to the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act. In fact, the minister himself states that this measure would give no further authority to the Canadian Wheat Board.

Under the proposed section 35.11 it states:

Any association representing a significant number of producers engaged in the production of grain or any association or firm engaged in the processing or marketing of grain in interprovincial or export trade may submit to the Minister for his review and recommendation to the Governor in Council a written proposal for the establishment of a marketing plan.

They do not even apply to the Canadian Wheat Board. There is no provision in the bill whereby the Canadian Wheat Board would have anything to do with it except, perhaps, to make the program as outlined credible. It may be that the credibility of the Canadian Wheat Board itself may eventually be destroyed. Application is made through the Governor in Council, not through the Canadian Wheat Board.

Senator Buckwold, in his comments, quoted from the remarks of the minister with respect to the permit system under the Canadian Wheat Board Act. He answered a question that he himself put to Senator Argue yesterday. He began by quoting Senator Hays who said:

Mr. Minister, what can be accomplished by means of this bill which cannot be accomplished through the Agricultural Products Marketing Act?

He went on to quote further. I do not want to re-read what Senator Buckwold has already quoted, but he quit halfway through the quotation. The question immediately following that portion quoted by Senator Buckwold was again a question from Senator Hays, as follows:

SENATOR HAYS: As I understand it, wheat sales in Ontario take place under the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act. Is that not so?

HON. MR. LANG: That is correct.

SENATOR HAYS: And are there not the same penalties and privileges under that marketing system as there are under the Canadian Wheat Board?

HON. MR. LANG: No, they would not have the permit system at all.

That is the crux. They would not have the permit book system at all. Continuing:

SENATOR HAYS: Other than that, there would be no change?

HON. MR. LANG: I believe that is correct. There is the difference that in this case the initial price is guaranteed only to 90 per cent, whereas under the other act, the guarantee is 100 per cent.

SENATOR HAYS: The only difference, then, would be the permit book system?

HON. MR. LANG: That is the practical difference, yes.

If that is the practical difference—and the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act and the Western Grain Stabilization Act have provisions for using the permit book without amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act—then, surely, the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act can have that same provision without the necessity of amending the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

I suppose I should state my ideas at this point broadly, but I believe that the Canadian Wheat Board Act should be administered by the Minister of Agriculture, not by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce—

Senator Steuart: Now we are getting to the truth.

Senator Sparrow:—and not necessarily by a special minister. It should be administered by the Minister of Agriculture of this nation. The Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act is the responsibility of the Minister of Agriculture, and that is precisely where a provision of this nature should be found. The administrators of that act would then report to the Minister of Agriculture.

● (1540)

I want to cover what I consider in turn a rather important aspect and that is that for those people who eventually may want to reverse their vote and go to total pooling, a proliferation of small plans or groups would in fact inhibit a vote being taken or at least would have an effect on producers such that in the future they might not be able to determine by a further plebiscite whether or not they wanted a full pooling provision. If we get this proliferation of plans it will either destroy or delay any such vote, and, certainly, if the producers of western Canada vote in the majority for that—and the last time it was a requirement that 60 per cent vote in favour of it—then, of course, the Canadian Wheat Board will administer the act and that provision in the same way as they do any other act under their administration. But that is not the case. That is not what this bill is asking for, and I think in the long run it will do harm.

In conclusion, I want to state that apart from confusing the producers in western Canada by providing further legislation which in my opinion is unnecessary, putting it in the Canadian Wheat Board Act where it is certainly not the place to have it, is a method of trying to fulfil an unnecessary election promise when it can actually be handled in present legislation.

I think this chamber has a duty and an obligation, as we had in committee, to look closely at this legislation. In committee, as has been indicated, it was certainly studied thoroughly and it was found wanting. I would therefore ask honourable senators to accept the report of the committee.

Hon. David Gordon Stuart: Honourable senators, I should like to point out that this is not a very important bill. It appears to me that Senator Argue and now Senator Sparrow seem to be taking a sledge hammer to kill a fly. This is not a very important bill if it passes. In fact, it appears to be so unimportant that when the committee invited producer organizations involved in the growing, selling and marketing of rapeseed, they could not even bother to come down here to make representations. We must ask ourselves, therefore, why these real or apparent objections are being raised to this bill. After all, what we are really deciding here, if you listen carefully to the people debating the bill, is simply this: Will the growers of rapeseed have the right voluntarily to have a pool or not to? That is what we are arguing about. Whether they have a right under the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act or whether they have the right given to them under these amendments is in my personal opinion beside the point.

I read what Dr. Smith had to say on this subject when he was before the committee. He said, "I would say it probably could." He did not say that absolutely it could. He said it probably could.

When the honourable minister in charge of the Wheat Board, the sponsor of this bill, came before the committee he said that he wanted these amendments. He felt he needed these to fulfil a commitment.

I find it passing strange to hear a western senator, a western Liberal senator, say that somehow this is a rather devious reason for passing a bill. I think it is a very good reason for passing a bill: to keep a political commitment made to the growers of rapeseed when they voted on this very question.

I thought that Senator Sparrow took a long time to get to the real crux of his argument, that in fact the marketing of grain should be under the Minister of Agriculture or some other minister rather than the Minister of Transport. That argument has gone on for a long time. Again I find it passing strange that a westerner would feel more comfortable with an eastern minister responsible for marketing our grain than a western minister. Frankly, as a westerner I feel far more comfortable with a western minister handling the marketing of our vital product, grain, than I do with any minister in eastern Canada no matter how well motivated. At least we can get at westerners every week, but we do have a little difficulty in getting at eastern ministers even as often as every two or three months.

I think the Honourable Mr. Otto Lang's record in handling the Canadian Wheat Board on behalf of the farmers of western Canada has been outstanding. So when he asks for our support, I say give it to him, and in this regard he is supported by all Liberal members in the other house and all Conservative members in the other house. He was only voted against by the NDP who feel that the measure does not go far enough, but should involve total pooling. That is the only reason they voted against it. They want total pooling; they want it under the wheat pool 100 per cent with no voluntary choice. Yet, in fact, over 50 per cent of the growers of this product indicated at the time they had a vote that they would sooner have the right with this particular crop to market it as they see fit.

But it is interesting to note, and I have talked to many of those individual producers, that many of them would like the right to pool, and I would think that the 46 or 47 per cent who voted in favour of having rapeseed marketed under the Wheat Board would, practically all of them, like the right to pool. If they did not want the right to pool, surely they would not have voted in favour of it being handled in totality by the Canadian Wheat Board.

The question comes down perhaps to one of personality or to one of where the responsibility for selling grain should lie, whether it should be under the Minister of Transport or whether it should be under the Minister of Agriculture, whether it should be under an eastern minister or a western minister. But that to me is clouding the issue, because the real issue is whether we in this house want to give rapeseed producers the voluntary right to pool their product and receive an average price. If we do and they want that right, they still do not have to do it. It is voluntary. The grain marketing companies do not have to set up the pools. They can do so if they want to. If we pass this legislation all we are doing is giving them that right. I am not knowledgeable enough to know whether it can be done better under the other act or under this act, and I would suggest that some of the senators who have spoken in this debate are not knowledgeable enough either to make the decision as to which would be the best way to do it. But I say that if we pass this legislation at least we give them the right to do that. But if we defeat it, we set it back a year, two years or perhaps destroy that right altogether. I hope that we defeat the recommendation of the committee. In this case I think they were wrong. I hope we support this bill.

On motion of Senator Hays, debate adjourned.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT BILL, 1977

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator McIlraith for the second reading of Bill C-51, to amend the Criminal Code, the Customs Tariff, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I had not heard my name and this is why I hesitated for a moment, but I am prepared to comment for a few minutes on Bill C-51. The importance of this piece of legislation should not be underestimated. This bill deals with different subjects, too many subjects I think. This is the typical omnibus bill which asks this house to decide on matters which are absolutely unrelated.

The sponsor of the bill, Senator McIlraith, says that in all cases it deals with crimes. Well, it does deal with crimes but do not tell me that I can support a bill dealing simultaneously with firearms control, wiretapping and parole, if I do not agree with one or the other of the provisions concerning these various subjects. In this eventuality, I am not in a position to vote for or against this bill. This is a method I deplore and which the Senate has deplored on many occasions. Furthermore, I think that we should once again stress our aversion towards this kind of bill.

● (1550)

[English]

Honourable senators, this bill, as I said, is a very important one, and in the normal course of our work we would probably devote at least two weeks to this kind of legislation. We would have had at least two days' debate in the chamber on such a bill, and in committee we would certainly have devoted three or four days to it. I do not detect, however, any disposition in the Senate or any real mental stamina, being, as we are, in the dying days of this session, to do justice to this kind of legislation. If it had come to us earlier we would have dealt with it in depth. If others are willing to help me, I am certainly prepared to attempt to do just that. But, I say again, I do not believe there is the disposition or the mental stamina in this place to do justice to this kind of legislation under the present circumstances.

Senator Benidickson: I think you are being unfair. Look at the attendance of senators last night on a long August holiday weekend for most other people.

Senator Flynn: I am not speaking of attendance. It is not a question of attendance. I would merely ask Senator Benidickson if he thinks the Senate is willing to stay here another two weeks in order to deal with this bill. I doubt it very much. That is all I am suggesting. I said last night that when it became obvious that the House of Commons would end its activities on Wednesday of last week, in view of the fact that that was decided on the Friday previous, we should have been recalled at that time. Now we know that the other house will sit on Thursday and Friday, and that that will be the end of it. Also, I do not underestimate the effects of the kind of weather that we have in Ottawa at this time of year; nor do I underestimate the will of the government to have this legislation passed without amendment. I know especially that they would not want any amendment to this kind of legislation going back to the House of Commons at this time, under the present circumstances.

Senator Benidickson: Why not?

Senator Flynn: Why not? You just ask your leader why not. He will tell you why not.

I would now like to compliment the sponsor of the bill. Senator McIlraith is one of the smoothest operators in Parliament.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Walker: You may take that as a compliment.

Senator Flynn: He has had a great deal of experience and knows when to be discreet. His presentation of the bill last night made everything appear so simple, so devoid of complication. He appealed to everybody and complimented the minister. He said things about the minister that I will deal with a little later. I would say that his speech was a model of the kind of speech you make when you do not want a prolonged debate. That is meant as a compliment, and I am sure Senator McIlraith will take it as such.

This bill deals with several matters, as I have indicated. It is really an omnibus bill. It deals with firearms and other offensive weapons, it deals with electronic surveillance, review for parole, dangerous offenders, and other such matters.

I intend to deal only with two or three of these subjects, and to do so especially in the light of the interim report presented by the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs in May of 1976 on the subject matter of Bill C-83, which was the predecessor of this bill and which died on the order paper in the previous session. There has been some revamping, but not to any great extent.

This committee held six meetings, three of which were used for preparing an interim report. We did not have time, even then, to go very deeply into the subject matter of the bill, so that we produced only that interim report.

Senator McIlraith said last night that the minister was very flexible and that he had accepted the views of our committee. I have searched diligently for the basis of that assertion and have found nothing.

Let me deal first of all with the question of the control of firearms. In principle, I favour this kind of control. I think something should be done. But I had reservations about the way in which the previous bill dealt with the matter and I have the same reservations about this bill. My main objection is that although half of the bill deals with this matter it does so in such a way as not to make it conducive to being part of the Criminal Code.

In the report of the committee, we drew attention to the fact that these provisions, or most of them—I am not speaking of prohibited weapons but of the regulation of firearms which are not prohibited—are regulatory and administrative, and not of a criminal nature. Your committee questioned whether such provisions properly belong in the Criminal Code. Personally, I am quite convinced that they do not belong there. All you have to do is read these provisions and you will see that they are purely administrative. There are many provisions concerning permits, licences, registration, and so forth, that should be in a separate piece of legislation. If I commit an offence under some of these provisions I will be charged under the Criminal Code. But the offence amounts to no more, if you will, than driving a car without a permit. That sort of thing does not belong in the Criminal Code. The Criminal Code is huge enough and complicated enough already.

Another reason why this legislation does not belong in the Criminal Code is that you have to include in these provisions the power of regulation by the Governor in Council. Just imagine giving the Governor in Council power to make regulations under the Criminal Code. In this field I think everybody should know exactly where he stands and should not have to look up regulations to find out whether or not he is committing an offence under the Criminal Code. I entirely disagree with the presence of these provisions, except again as far as prohibiting firearms is concerned, in the Criminal Code. I would point out to Senator McIlraith that neither the minister nor the government did anything about the report that we submitted in May of 1976. We treated of this matter. Our recommendation was completely ignored.

● (1600)

The second comment in the report was with regard to the use of weapons during the commission of an offence. The committee recommended:

... that consideration be given to amending the proposed new section 98, in clause 3 of the bill, by adding thereto a provision that anyone who has upon his person an offensive weapon while committing or attempting to commit an indictable offence or during his flight after committing or attempting to commit an indictable offence, whether or not he intends to use it to cause bodily harm to any person, is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for five years or is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

This also was entirely ignored.

The recommendation on the dangerous use of firearms was not that important, but it also was ignored.

I come now to the second matter of special interest to me, electronic surveillance. The amendment provided in this bill would permit electronic surveillance to be undertaken upon an application to a judge, and without any report being made to the person under surveillance, for a period of three years. I suggest that if you can get that type of permission you might as well forget about notification, because after three years if you have found nothing, or if you have found something, it will not be very useful to the person to know that he has been under surveillance. Last year our committee said this:

It is, therefore, recommended that consideration be given to a provision that would amend the proposed new section 178.23, in clause 10 of the bill, to permit a judge to grant one extension not exceeding 90 days of the period within which notification is required and to permit two judges to grant any additional extensions of that period or to eliminate entirely the requirement for notification.

The minister paid no attention to that. He made it worse; he said three years. I suggest to you that in this area of electronic surveillance Parliament should be very, very careful. I am entirely uneasy with the way the police operate in this field. Even if there is a provision to try to protect solicitor and client communications, if anybody suspected that one of my employees was, let us say, dealing in hashish, or any other drug, they could request electronic surveillance of everybody in my office. Whether they used it as evidence in a criminal case or not, they could certainly use in many other ways the information they obtained.

There is also the problem of the admissibility of such evidence. That has been dealt with extensively in debates in the other place, and I will not discuss it at this time. But there is no doubt that once you obtain evidence in an illegal way, whether or not you are entitled to use it in court, it is certainly helpful to you, and it is potentially very harmful to other people. The matter has also been raised—I heard of this recently—of a counter system whereby people could “debug” electronic surveillance. So, it’s hard to tell who is going to win this battle of the bugs.

The provisions in this bill make me uneasy. Normally they should require a complete and in-depth examination in committee. But, again, I doubt that either the Senate or the committee is in a position to do that job at this time. You would not want to charge, for instance, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce at this time to start looking into the subject matter of income tax amendments; you would rather wait until October or later. The same obtains in this area. Yet, the Senate is called upon to do just that, to start something now that would normally require several days, if not several weeks, with expert assistance, and I do not think we can do it. Again, I know very well that the government is not inclined to accept any amendments. It has had so many problems having this legislation accepted in the other place that it would not allow the majority here to support any change whatsoever. I understand that at least the committee will allow some people who have asked to appear, to do so. The bill will be passed and we will see what it gives rise to after a year or more of application.

In conclusion, I would say that I despise omnibus bills, that I despise the situation in which the Senate is placed when, in the dying days of a session, we are faced with this kind of legislation, very important legislation, to which we are, in practice, unable to give proper attention. I cannot support this bill and I will oppose it.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator McIlraith moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

NOTICE OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Senator Goldenberg: Honourable senators, I had tentatively arranged for the committee to meet at 9:30 tomorrow morning subject to the bill receiving second reading. I now confirm that the Minister of Justice will appear at 9:30 tomorrow morning as the first witness.

Senator Flynn: He will be welcome and we will assess his flexibility.

● (1610)

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION REORGANIZATION BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Hicks for the second reading of Bill C-27, to establish the Department of Employment and Immigration, the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission and the Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, last evening the sponsor of this bill, Senator Hicks, in his informative introduction of the bill, did not follow the example set by Senator McIlraith earlier in the evening by referring to the sensitivity of the minister responsible for Bill C-27. The loyalty of Nova Scotians is never questioned, and certainly the loyalty or blind faith of Senator Hicks to the Grit Party is as strong as that of anyone else. I am sure that had there been any sensitivity shown in Bill C-27, Senator Hicks would have mentioned it.

Senator Flynn referred to Senator McIlraith as being extremely smooth. I thought the explanation of Bill C-27 last evening was extremely smooth in that not once in explaining a bill dealing with unemployment did the sponsor refer to the present record high levels of unemployment, and that has been the case throughout the debate on this measure in Parliament. Throughout the debate on Bill C-27 there has been an attitude on the part of the government that unemployment is the fault of those who are unemployed, which is a rather strange attitude for this government to take—a government which was unable to provide more for the unemployed in its recent budget. This government now points an accusing finger at the unemployed saying that unemployment is the fault of the unemployed.

The ministry of propaganda has obviously decided that the word “unemployed” is taboo. Because it makes people feel uncomfortable, we should not use it. The bill before us, therefore, is described as being a bill to establish the Department of Employment and Immigration. That is a misnomer if ever I heard one. I would ask the sponsor to refer to the clauses of the bill which provide employment and to state how many of the unemployed will receive employment as a result of the passage of this bill.

The integration of the present Department of Manpower and Immigration and the Unemployment Insurance Commission was seen by the sponsor as resulting in better service to the public. There can only be better service in one way, and that is by referral of the unemployed to jobs. If the sponsor of the bill can tell us that the integration of the department and the Unemployment Insurance Commission will result in the immediate referral of people to jobs, I shall co-operate and suggest that this bill be passed without the necessity of being referred to committee. However, I do not expect he will go so far as to provide that assurance.

Part II of the bill provides for the establishment of a new Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council. When I see a bill make such generous provisions for the establishment of advisory councils, I wonder what is wrong with the advice of Parliament. Had the minister listened to, and acted upon, a small portion of the advice he has received in Parliament, we would not have a serious unemployment problem today. How much advice does the Honourable Mr. Cullen wish to ignore? The bill goes on to provide for the establishment of regional and local councils to offer advice. Perhaps it is the intention of the government to place the unemployed on advisory councils, thereby bringing about a reduction in unemployment—something it has been unable to do in any other manner.

I often wonder why the advice of a Liberal candidate becomes so valuable after that candidate has been defeated. We often see such individuals appointed to various advisory councils and commissions. The fact that a Grit has been defeated seems to improve his advice. If a Liberal candidate is successful and enters Parliament, his advice seems to be worthless and something which is to be ignored.

The Senate is rather proud of the study carried out by the National Finance Committee on the Department of Manpower and Immigration. That committee brought forward a number of recommendations. The minister said he would study those recommendations and comment on them at a later date. I can only conclude that the honourable gentleman has not made that study as yet as we have not heard what he thought of the recommendations of the National Finance Committee.

Senator Everett: Perhaps I should inform the honourable senator that we did have the minister before the committee. The committee's report contained 56 recommendations, and the minister agreed to act on 52 of those.

Senator Phillips: I thank the honourable senator for pointing that out. However, the minister has not appeared before the Senate in the way he indicated he would in the television broadcast to which I have made reference, which is entirely separate from appearing before the committee.

Senator Everett: I might point out to the honourable senator that the committee, in its report, stated that it would be asking the minister to appear before the committee to make a reply to the recommendations, and he did just that. As I said, the minister has indicated that he will take action on 52 of the 56 recommendations of the committee.

Senator Phillips: I still say that the television statement was entirely different than the statement made before the committee.

One of the criticisms we often hear in Parliament is that reports are kept secret. Only the minister knows the contents of such reports. I should like to ask the sponsor of the bill whether the recommendations of the Canada employment and Immigration Advisory Council will be made public.

I suspect that its real function will be to act as a shield for the minister. If the minister is questioned on a problem relating to unemployment or immigration, he will simply be able to say that the matter has been referred to the advisory council and that he will only comment on it after the council has reported to him on the matter.

Part III of the bill amends the Unemployment Insurance Act making it, in the words of the sponsor, "more sensitive to local unemployment conditions and the motivation for work." I wonder why the government felt it was necessary to say it would improve the motivation for work. Not once throughout the long debate on Bill C-27 has anyone accused the unemployed of being unwilling to work. The real motivation for work is adequate wages and an opportunity to work. I do not think we need to try to provide motivations by an amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

● (1620)

The three phases of entitlement to benefits provide an initial benefit period, that is, "one week's work: one week's benefits," up to a maximum of 25 weeks. The labour force extended phase goes on for 13 weeks. The regional extended phase goes on for a maximum of 32 weeks, when the unemployment rate exceeds 11.5 per cent.

I need not point out that that 11.5 per cent is a very high figure. It required a great deal of hard discussion before the government recognized that the Atlantic members of the House of Commons, particularly the Progressive Conservative members, were presenting a valid point when they objected to the 20-week extension period. This would work an extreme hardship on the seasonal employment in the Atlantic provinces and in the province of Quebec. But in return for the 32 weeks, the PC members were forced to accept an unemployment rate of 11.5 per cent, whereas in the original bill it was 8.5 per cent.

The present act requires a labour force attachment of eight weeks. The proposal for a labour force attachment of 20 weeks again met opposition from Quebec and the Atlantic provinces. Here again I need not point out that employment in many of these areas is seasonal. The fishing may drop off for some unexplained reason and the fish plant will have to close. That is not the fault of the employee so why should the government attempt to further burden those employees? The same thing can happen to an employee of a food processing plant. If, for example, the potato harvest has failed, the plant will have to close. But that is not the fault of the employees. However, I would point out that the reduction to a ten-week entry period is only temporary. The minister has clearly stated his intention to establish a 14-week entrance period at the end of a three-year period.

A new approach to the use of the unemployment insurance fund is being used in amendments contained in clauses 37, 38, 39 and 41. It should be pointed out that the government, the employer, and the employee contribute payments to the unemployment insurance fund on the insurance principle. These amendments proposed in the bill will allow the fund to be used for items such as retraining programs. That is a radical departure from the insurance principle.

While retraining of an individual is most desirable and helpful in allowing that individual to obtain a more permanent type of employment, Parliament should allocate sufficient funds for retraining and leave the unemployment insurance fund as it presently is.

Senator Hicks seemed to think that this amendment would provide greater administrative efficiency. I suggest that if the bureaucrats are having that much difficulty administering the present program, maybe they are the ones who should be retrained and we will leave the fund operating on the insurance principle.

The job creation program is supposed to provide a claimant who has little or no prospects of job employment with an opportunity to participate voluntarily in community projects. There appears to be a conflict between the government's attitude and the job creation program, because on the one hand the government is telling the unemployed to work longer when there is no work available and on the other hand it is saying, "You may or may not participate in a job creation program. It is entirely up to you. You may volunteer or you may refuse and you are still eligible for unemployment insurance benefits."

The unemployed in Cape Breton, who have been conducting civil disobedience in the form of sit-ins in public buildings in Nova Scotia, will not be satisfied with the job creation program. Both management and labour have expressed objections to the job creation program because it uses the unemployment insurance fund to pay for community-oriented projects. They recognize that it is an abandonment of the insurance principle.

It also provides the government with a ready slush fund for election talk. If we take note, just before the next election we will find a regular rash, an epidemic, of job creation projects. They will be springing up like wild mustard in an oat field.

In one previous election Mr. Bryce Mackasey used the unemployment insurance fund to purchase the re-election of the Liberal government, and here, honourable senators, I rather suspect that we are finding the groundwork being laid for the same use of the unemployment insurance fund.

The job-sharing or work-sharing proposal also received little support from labour or management. The idea of everyone working a shorter week does have some merit and perhaps that is worthy of further study, but there are many things unanswered in this bill. Let us consider the case of an employee who has the maximum first phase period of employment, which is 20 weeks. He now goes on to job sharing for ten weeks. What happens to the eligibility established 25 weeks previously? If it is then necessary for the individual to go on unemployment insurance benefits, at what rate are the benefits calculated? Are they calculated on the full-time salary or on the job-sharing salaries?

● (1630)

The sponsor mentioned most amendments, but he forgot to mention one that I should like to draw to the attention of the Senate. Clause 50 states:

50. Subsection 62(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"62. (1) In respect of each year, the Commission shall, subject to approval by the Governor in Council, fix the rates of premium that persons employed in insurable employment and the employers of such persons will be required to pay in that year to raise an amount equal to the adjusted basic cost of benefit under this Act in that year as that cost is determined under section 63."

Honourable senators, perhaps my interpretation of that clause is not correct, but I fear that it gives the government an out from paying its contributions. The employers and the employees are mentioned in that clause, but the government's contribution is not mentioned.

In 1977 it was anticipated that the government would be contributing $1.9 billion to the unemployment insurance fund, and that the private sector would be contributing $2.5 billion, making a total of $4.4 billion. I hope it is not the intention of the government to withdraw from these contributions, and then pass the increased costs on to the employer and the employee.

The sponsor failed to mention that the bill would be referred to a committee. I think that was merely an oversight. After all, he arrived at about 4.30 and did very well to get his speech ready—and such an informative one—in the length of time at his disposal. I feel quite sure the bill will be going to a committee.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I should like to make a few comments generally on the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act, and to one clause in particular.

I suppose this whole question of unemployment has never been more important than it is at the present time. We know there is a great deal of unemployment in Canada. Just how much there is it is difficult to say, because the figures differ. Apparently it runs between 7 per cent and 8 per cent of the work force, seasonally adjusted, whatever that may mean. It must be remembered, however, that the percentages differ in various parts of the country. I know that in my region of Nova Scotia, in what is called industrial Cape Breton, the rate is somewhere between 20 per cent and 30 per cent. There is no agreement on the exact figure. I believe it is acknowledged that there are probably a million people in Canada without employment, and this at a time of year when employment is usually high.

I think there is a new type of unemployment emerging, and that is unemployment among the academic class, among the highly educated and highly skilled. I refer you to Weekend Magazine of July 30, in which there is an article entitled, "Middle Aged, Middle Class and Fired," by one Lee Wilson. It is worth reading. It deals with a person who had been a teacher in a university for 15 years, and has lost his employment. It tells of the difficulties and frustrations he encountered, and the fear that he has for the future.

Among these people there does appear to be a sort of nervousness about the future, and job security seems to be high on their list of priorities. Certainly job security is high on the list of priorities in any collective agreement negotiated between employers and employees.

Honourable senators, it is not my intention to speak at this time about the causes of this deplorable situation, or to discuss any of the proposals made for a solution or partial solution; but I do want to emphasize that in general people look to government to deal with this whole problem of employment or unemployment. More and more people are believing that it is the duty and responsibility of government to see to it that employment is available, or made available, in one way or another. If this is not possible, then governments should provide employment directly. This is a natural development, I think, of our economic system, since over the years the system has been changing and developing. Canada has become a highly industrialized nation, a great trading nation, so I do not think it would serve any useful purpose now to discuss, perhaps, the national policy of John A. Macdonald, or the free trade theories, or tariff for revenue only policies of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Nor would it serve any useful purpose to discuss the virtues or faults of free enterprise or public ownership. We have a mixed economic system, one which could be divided into three parts: free enterprise, public ownership, and a combination of private and public ownership.

Of course, our free enterprise system, has done much for Canada. It has been, and still is, a tremendous force in our industrial development, and more power to it, I say. We have had public ownership for a long period, also, as in the case of the Post Office, railways, harbour and port developments, and crown corporations. Certainly the private sector of our economic system has been assisted and encouraged over the years through tariffs, quotas, taxation policies, or by loans, grants and subsidies. This type of assistance is very old. In order to bring British Columbia into Confederation the Canadian Pacific Railway was given some assistance from government to build the railway, and more recently, when Newfoundland decided to join Canada, the federal government agreed to provide a ferry service between that country and Nova Scotia. In both cases the action taken by government was not only justified but very commendable. This system, which stressed both free enterprise and government assisted systems, did much to make Canada the great industrial country it is, and has given employment to a great many people; yet, from its very nature, the system has a weakness, which is that if there is an economic slowdown, immediate unemployment or underemployment results.

I think we must accept it as a fact that when there is a necessity for providing employment, people turn to the federal government. They do not turn to the private sector, or indeed expect the private sector to increase employment. People expect government—especially the federal government—to make employment available or to provide it.

I know there is no easy answer to this terrible problem of unemployment, and I think it is idle to expect that a million new jobs can be made available or be provided in the near future. As I mentioned, I do not propose to discuss now any of the proposals regarding monetary, fiscal, financial or trading policies which might be helpful at this time; but since we do have the hard reality of unemployment and underemployment on a large scale, any amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act is bound to be of great interest to many people. Over the years this type of insurance has become a vital and permanent part of our economic system; indeed, I think it could be compared to workmen's compensation in this regard. It is designed to assist those who have been employed and who are temporarily out of work. It was, and I expect is, self-supporting as long as unemployment remains less than 4 per cent of the work force.

There has been criticism of the operation of the act, though not of the principle on which it is based. I expect some of the criticism is justified, though I think much of it has been exaggerated. Many of the offences against the act have been minor ones. Some have been fraudulent, but this is to be expected when the great number of benefits which had to be processed—over two and a half million in 1976—is remembered.

A major criticism has been that the qualifying period was too short. The qualifying period was eight weeks, and to meet this criticism the minister proposed in bill C-27 to raise that period to 12 weeks. This was strongly objected to, and the minister compromised on ten weeks. Personally, I object to having the qualifying period extended from eight to ten weeks. To my mind, a person who could only get eight weeks of employment needs the assistance provided by unemployment insurance just as much as the person who has worked for ten weeks. And it must be remembered that when we speak of 7, 7½ or 8 per cent of the work force being without work we are dealing with people, not with statistics. We are talking of men and women who want employment, who need employment, and who can't get employment, and if that employment is not available and can't be made available, then they should be entitled to unemployment insurance.

● (1640)

Personally, I greatly fear the whole idea behind this amendment. The motive behind it is to save money. It is to save money at the expense of the unemployed. I do not have the figures for the amount of money extending the qualifying period to ten weeks will save. I know it will be substantial. In the original 12-week proposal it was estimated, assuming a national rate of 7 per cent, the total savings would be between $275 and $325 million.

Honourable senators, believing, as I do believe, that unemployment insurance is a permanent part of our economic system, I am opposed to that part of the amendment which would increase the qualifying period from eight to ten weeks. I object to the government's saving money at the expense of the unemployed. Honourable senators, I go further. Believing, as I do believe, that it is the duty and responsibility of government to see to it that employment is available, I think the Unemployment Insurance Act should be amended to make it truly an insurance against unemployment, all unemployment. Actually, now it is but a partial insurance, an insurance for those who have been employed, who have been employed for at least ten weeks. It is an insurance against temporary unemployment only. It is not an insurance for those with less than 10 weeks employment or for those in the work force who have never been able to obtain employment.

If the act was amended to insure all these people, certain administrative difficulties would arise, but they could be overcome. Since I believe government is responsible for employment, then government, of course, would have to pay the whole premiums of those in the force but who have not worked, and also for those not working whose benefits had expired, and such premiums would probably have to be based on a minimum wage scale. But if we accept the proposal or premise that government is under an obligation to see that employment is available, then I contend it follows in a logical way that government should amend the Unemployment Insurance Act to insure against all unemployment. Of course, we would also have to be prepared to see some changes made in the Manpower offices and greater authority given to them.

But all these things could be worked out, and if the act was amended as I suggest it should be amended, then I think the men and women who comprise the work force would get a better deal—a better deal and a better life. They would have security, financial security, and I think the importance of financial security cannot be over-estimated. I remember that back in 1972 the Speech from the Throne mentioned this. I quote a passage from it:

Economic security is one of the most effective forces with which to counter social isolation. Job opportunities must be found and income uncertainties overcome if all Canadians are to share in the richness of the land.

Yes, honourable senators, economic security is necessary if Canadians are to fulfill their own potential and Canada its destiny. Of course, the ideal way to provide economic security would be to have employment available for all willing and able to work. As I do not see that this is going to happen in the near or foreseeable future, I do advocate that the Unemployment Insurance Act be so amended that all in the work force able and willing to work, for whom employment is not available, be eligible for unemployment insurance without any qualifying period.

Honourable senators, as in most acts, Bill C-27 contains good features. I certainly agree with the provision abolishing the 4-week rule. But on balance my objection to extending the qualifying period is so strong that I cannot vote in favour of the bill.

Senator Rowe: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator Macdonald: Certainly.

Senator Rowe: In referring to the unemployment rate in what you called your region of the country, you said it was somewhere between 20 per cent and 30 per cent. The figure is indeterminate at this point. I take it you were alluding, not to the province of Nova Scotia but to the Sydney-Glace Bay area, or was it all Cape Breton?

Senator Macdonald: Industrial Cape Breton is generally stated to be the Sydney area. It comprises Sydney, Glace Bay, North Side of Sydney Harbour and the surrounding area. In other words, it would be Sydney and drawing a circle around it with a radius of about 15 miles. It has about 100,000 to 110,000 people. That is known as industrial Cape Breton.

Senator Eugene A. Forsey: Honourable senators, before Senator Hicks closes the debate, as I think he is about to, I should like first of all to express my almost total agreement with the magnificent speech we have just listened to. I wish that speech could get more publicity than it is likely to get. We are often accused in this chamber of being the servants of big interests and so on. I think it would be salutary if the public could be made aware of the kind of speech we have just had from that great tribune of the people, Senator Macdonald.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Forsey: I want also to make one very brief comment about the unemployment insurance provisions of this bill. Honourable senators are aware that originally, as Senator Macdonald has just said, the government had certain proposals which were watered down because of pressure, both from the opposition and from the government side in the House of Commons. I am glad to see that they were watered down, but they were not watered down nearly enough.

I particularly want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact, which I think Senator Phillips also mentioned, that in clause 30(3) there is a limitation of the improvement that has been made for the benefit of the Atlantic provinces primarily, and also for certain other areas of the country, notably Eastern Quebec, I think. There is a limit upon that improvement of 36 months, though it is added that the commission may, with the approval of the Governor in Council and subject to affirmative resolution of Parliament, extend the period of 36 months mentioned in subsection (1). I am afraid I am pessimistic enough to believe that at the end of three years we are most unlikely to find ourselves in a position where this amelioration of the original and very harsh provisions of this legislation will be sufficient for the purposes. I think this is a blot upon this bill, and for that reason, as well as those that have been brought forward by Senator Macdonald, I must share his position, and if this bill comes to a vote, which I suppose is rather unlikely, I must record my vote with Senator Macdonald against it.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: Honourable senators, I think basically this bill is the result of the work of two committees, on both of which I sat, namely, the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, which dealt exhaustively with manpower and employment, and the Joint Committee on Immigration Policy. I have taken pride in the fact that for some thirty years I always designated myself as a Liberal/Labour member of Parliament. For 20-odd years the Canadian Press, on my election, referred to me as an independent member of Parliament. Although I sat on the government side of the house, I was the first young Liberal given joint endorsement by these two parties.

● (1650)

No one in this chamber has more admiration for Senator Macdonald's compassion than I have, particularly for veterans, and this afternoon he has expressed that compassion for the unemployed. But a compromise has been reached. Certain things can be attained. Other things will take some time yet to obtain. I was vice-chairman of the committee that recommended universal old age pensions, and that was considered revolutionary. That recommendation was put forward in 1952. The Chairman was the former Premier of Quebec, the Honourable Jean Lesage. The rates have changed. Inflation has increased. But we have it!

I do not wish to be too political, particularly with my honourable friend from Nova Scotia, the Honourable John Macdonald, who has all of the attributes that I have enunciated. This bill comes to us as a result of protests within the members of the government itself, within caucus, and those protests for the most part were voiced by members from the maritime region and other areas of high unemployment, such as eastern Quebec. These things have to be done. I do not wish to be controversial at this stage in the session. I have not forgotten the election of 1972 when my very good and dear friend, the Honourable Bryce Mackasey, introduced what were considered to be too generous amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. Those amendments were not to the benefit of the government of that day in that election.

This bill represents a compromise and, as such, I am prepared to accept it.

I might say that, to my astonishment, and somewhat to my regret, my son, who has washed dishes and been a porter in a hotel, planted trees at less than the minimum wage, on two different occasions went on what is known across the country as the "pogey". Certain people laugh at the "pogey" too much. There is abuse. There are things that have to be corrected. The bill as it is now before us is a reasonable bill and, as such, I support it.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if Senator Hicks speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Hicks: Honourable senators, I want to thank my colleagues who have participated in this debate. I share with them, as I am sure all of us do, their deep concern for those who are unemployed, and particularly their concern for the communities that have such high rates of unemployment, as has been referred to by Senator Macdonald. Senator Macdonald would like to see a scheme whereby there would be no waiting period before benefits are payable. All I can say is that such a provision is highly unlikely under a straight insurance scheme. On the other hand, Senator Phillips criticized the bill on the basis that funds from the unemployment insurance pool were being used in ways which were not proper in an insurance scheme. That, of course, is true. The Unemployment Insurance Act in Canada has never been a straight insurance arrangement. The benefits have always exceeded what the scheme could have afforded to pay out from revenues or premiums collected. At the present time the premium collected from employees generally works out to about 1.65 per cent of an employee's weekly wage, subject to a maximum. The employer's contribution is 1.4 times the contribution of the employee, and in one way or another the Government of Canada pays the remainder of the cost, and that, as honourable senators are aware, often amounts to large sums of money indeed.

If we are going to stick to a straight insurance scheme, then what we can do must be limited to amounts which are far below the level of benefits provided by this legislation. On the other hand, we must remember that our unemployment insurance program is integrated with other government programs, such as welfare, job training, and so forth. In order to get an understanding of what is accomplished, one cannot look at any one program in isolation; rather, one has to consider each in relation to the others.

I think that is about all I need say at this time, except to answer one or two questions raised by Senator Phillips.

Senator Phillips, in his remarks, speculated that the Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council might only advise the minister in secret. Under clause 23 of the bill, the council may make rules for the regulation of its proceedings, provided that it shall meet at least once a year and that it shall keep minutes of all formal meetings. Existing councils meet six or seven times a year, and there is no reason to expect that this would not be the case with this particular council. I should think that all minutes would be available to Parliament. Certainly, if that were not the case and there was a motion that they be made available, that motion would have my support.

The next point raised by Senator Phillips had to do with the rates of remuneration that might apply under the job-sharing arrangement. I think this is highly speculative at the present time. The minister has said that he would discuss this with representatives of management and labour before implementing it, but I would suppose the rates would be comparable to the rates that generally prevail, which, as my honourable friend knows, are again generally two-thirds of the wage that the employee was earning subject to a maximum of two-thirds of $220, which at the present time is $147 per week.

● (1700)

The way I would see the job-sharing arrangements would work, if a trial of this interesting idea should result from this legislation, would be that if a person were, say, employed three-quarters of the time and unemployed one-quarter of the time and his salary were $200 a week, then he would draw $150 in salary for three-quarters of his work and he would get unemployment insurance based upon the $50 a week for the one-quarter of his work, and I would expect that the payment would be two-thirds of that amount. But, as I say, it is a little early to speculate on these matters, because the arrangements have not in any event yet been made.

Finally, Honourable Senator Phillips referred to clause 50 in the bill and said that he suspected that this was just a device to enable the Governor in Council to avoid paying its fair share of the premiums, since it gives to the Governor in Council the right to establish the premium rates under the legislation. At the present time that right is in the hands of the minister. It is now being taken from the sole discretion of one minister and being made subject to determination by order in council. I should think that that is an improvement and in no way is likely to result in any arbitrary manipulation of the rates, which I do not think anyone has ever accused the ministers in the past years of employing in their fixing of the rates under the legislation.

Senator Phillips: It is bad enough when you have to trust one, but when you start trusting a whole group you are really in trouble.

Senator Hicks: I have heard many people expounding the theory that what is everybody's responsibility is not as well attended to as what is one person's responsibility, but I would suspect that, as is usual in cabinet practice, the minister will make the recommendation and the order in council will result from it.

Finally, Senator Forsey expressed concern about the provisions of clause 30 of the bill. Clause 30, of course, provides for the variable entrance arrangements; that is to say, the necessity to work from ten to fourteen weeks, depending on the rate of unemployment in the area concerned in order to qualify for benefits. It is a fact that subclause (3) of that clause limits the application of this to 36 months, although subclause (4) provides that the commission may, with the approval of the Governor in Council and subject to an affirmative resolution of Parliament, extend the period of 36 months mentioned in subclause (3). I suppose one can speculate that the commission might be pretty determined to cut this off at the end of the 36 months. I would hope that economic conditions in the country would warrant their doing so, but if the conditions are not, then it seems to me that the provisions of that clause do give sufficient power to Parliament to control the situation, and I am afraid I cannot be quite as suspicious of the commission or, indeed, of the general managing of this legislation by the minister and government as is my friend Senator Forsey.

I think I have no other comments to make in reply to the remarks that were made, and I would therefore assure Senator Phillips that if this bill receives second reading I propose to move its reference to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Hicks, seconded by the Honourable Senator Norrie, that this bill be now read the second time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Macdonald: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Hicks moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

Motion agreed to.

NOTICE OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Senator Everett: Honourable senators, in light of the fact that the bill has now been referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, it would be my intention to have that committee meet at 8 o'clock tonight, because we are under some time constraint and would like time to examine the bill and also because of the fact that the immigration bill will also require the appearance of the same minister who will be appearing before the National Finance Committee in respect of this bill.

STATUTE LAW (METRIC CONVERSION) AMENDMENT BILL, 1976

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Molgat for the second reading of Bill C-23, to facilitate conversion to the metric system of measurement.

[Translation]

Hon. R. Bélisle: Honourable senators, since I have been asked to take part in the debate, I should like to give you, briefly, my ideas on this bill which, to date, has not been understood any too well. Before attempting to describe the contents of the bill, it would be useful to relate it to the legislative framework involved in the conversion to the International System of Measurements. In January of 1970, a white paper on metrification was published. Bill S-5, referring to weights and measures, was introduced in Parliament on October 20th, 1970, and finally enacted on August 1st, 1974.

That act gave birth to the Canadian Metric Commission which supervises and co-ordinates its implementation. Before 1980, the government intends to pass four omnibus bills to amend 90 acts relating to weights and measures used in Canadian industry. The introduction of those four bills will represent the final stage of the four-phase program of the Metric Commission: Investigation and planning before 1975, setting up of deadlines before the end of 1976, and implementation before the end of 1980. Bill C-23 is the first of those omnibus bills and it concerns the grain industry and nine of its regulations on weights and measures.

[English]

As the title indicates, the bill's purpose is to facilitate the conversion to the metric system of measurement and it covers the following areas:

1. The Canadian Wheat Board Act is amended in its definition section by substituting for the word "acre" the word "hectare."

2. The Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act will adapt its unit of measurement to conform with the international system of units referred to in schedule 1 as set out by the Weights and Measures Act.

3. The Gas Inspection Act will adopt the cubic meter or cubic foot for the volume sale of gas, the joule or multiples thereof or the British thermal unit, the BTU, for the energy unit of gas, and the kilogram for the same of gas by mass.

4. The definition of "well" in the Oil and Gas Protection Act and Conservation Act is adapted to speak in terms of depth in meters. This sector plans for the conversion in drilling measurement to be completed by July of 1978.

5. In the Western Grain Stabilization Act, the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act and in the Two-Price Wheat Act the word "hectare" also replaces the word "acre", and as well the word "bushel" will be substituted by "tonne." But the amendment on third reading will permit the use of "acres" as well as "hectares."

6. The Regional Development Incentives Act will use square kilometers as its reference instead of square miles.

● (1710)

7. The Weights and Measures Act is adapted to allow the prescribing of a date beyond which measurement must be able to be made according to Schedule I, and eventually at a date after which measurement according to Schedule II will not be used in trade.

Schedule I is the units of measure based on the international system of units; that is, grams, metres, hectares, et cetera.

It is important to note that the implementation of the changes from hectares and tonnes will come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation. The original date of enactment was February 1, 1977, but because of delays in the passage of the bill, that date has now been postponed indefinitely.

[Translation]

I have looked over Hansard of the House of Commons and in the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, as follows:

A. Hansard of the House of Commons from December 21, 1976 to July 25, 1977.

B. Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, issues Nos. 12 to 17, February 1977. Many points were raised against the adoption of Bill C-23. I would like to quote arguments for and against the bill. Since most amendments affect the grain industry, critics of the bill consider a series of problems for farmers, of which I will list the main ones.

First, the need to buy new metric equipment, thus causing unnecessary expenses and sometimes a duplication of basic tools. The Canada Metric Commission replies to that argument by saying that the time allowed to convert to the metric system is long enough to permit the gradual replacement of outdated equipment. The commission adds that on the long run the metric system will also bring substantial savings as a result of standardization.

A second criticism has to do with the difficulty of adapting to the new system. To farmers, terms such as "yard, acre, bushel" are much more significant than the metric terminology. That point was made on several occasions and the public servant in his office with his calculators will not experience the difficulty of the farmer faced with measuring his crop. The opponents also think that the government could improve its advertising and education campaign in that regard. The commission admits that adaptation is not easy but an effort must be made precisely to overcome that transition period. Putting the metric measure beside the existing measure has no educational value, and keeping both systems—as they did in Great Britain for acres and hectares, will help farmers understand the metric system better by being able to compare and use acres and hectares.

[English]

This bill, by establishing the metric system in general, will greatly facilitate transactions at the international level, because the metric system is recognized internationally. This is the most obvious advantage.

It will undoubtedly confuse the average farmer, however, who has become accustomed to the present system, even though it is uneven and is irregular in applying measures to grain, livestock and farm produce.

Once the metric system is adopted, some believe that we should give the farmers, producers and also consumers, time to get used to the new measures. It would make it easier for them if, for several years, prices were to be given in both systems. This would make it possible for Canadians to calculate what they are receiving or disbursing as they gradually adapt their thinking to the metric system.

C. The costs of metric conversion for farmers cannot be passed on to the consumers. Opponents point out that private industry can pass the costs on to the consumer, but that in the farming industry the producer will have to bear these costs. Also, the large industries are able to plan more efficiently for the change-over in their equipment. Another sensitive issue concerns the possible price profiteering resulting from new packaging. For the consumer, it will be difficult to calculate price differentials between metric and non-metric goods, but on the other hand, metrification will facilitate comparison of items within the metric system.

The government's position of letting the costs lie where they fall will undoubtedly prove to be a costly proposition for the farmers, but the expenditures will be offset by what the Grains Council claims to be "a saving of approximately $1 million per year due to elimination of most of the 12 to 16 conversions from pounds to bushels and back again that now take place."

These are the remarks of the Honourable Len Marchand, taken from page 8 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, dated February 1, 1977.

With respect to price profiteering, the Consumer's Association of Canada is keeping a close watch on any possible price abuses. Although it is not a regulatory body, this association will publicize, and inform consumers of, any excess price increases.

D. During the debates, some members felt that the introduction of the hectare measure would imply a complete revision of the registry, and possibly a resurvey of the whole country. As honourable senators are aware, half of Canada is measured in square miles and the rest in long miles.

There is no such provision as this in Bill C-23, and only new subdivisions will be laid out in metric measure. Existing titles will be expressed in metric measure only at the time of transfer to a new owner. This area is under provincial jurisdiction and it will be up to the provinces to implement it. The plan has been reviewed by the provinces, and so far no objections have been raised.

E. It has also been argued that farm machinery will have to be changed in order to avoid serious errors in seeding or fertilizing. This point has been rejected on the grounds that the ratio of pounds to acres is only slightly greater—namely, 11 per cent—than the ratio of kilograms to hectares, and that new measuring would only have to take into consideration this minor adjustment; but with the keeping of the word “acres” as well as the word “hectares” this will be eliminated.

F. Another concern was the effect on trade with the United States. The metric commission realizes that the United States is well behind Canada in implementing the metric system, but views it as only a matter of time before the United States joins the rest of the world already dealing in metric measures. The metric commission also recognizes that certain sectors of the economy will want to co-ordinate their metric programs with those of their American trading partners.

Honourable senators, it is my feeling that the government should be very cognizant of the fact that 70 per cent of all our export trade goes to our best customer, the United States of America. We should be very cautious in pushing this metric system on them if they are not ready or willing to accept the immediate change.

The other night I was listening to a program where the commentator said that the present government should be very careful and more attentive to the needs and feelings of the Canadian people. He was referring to Bill C-37, “an act to provide for the making of certain fiscal payments and of established programs financing contributions to provinces to provide for payments in respect of certain provincial taxes and fees and to make consequential and related amendments”. His comments were to the effect that seeing that all 10 provincial governments were in complete disagreement with the authoritarian federal government on fiscal policy, this new metric measure should not be forced on the Canadian people, much less on our American trading partners. He summed up by saying that in 1970, when this omnibus bill was presented, the Prime Minister's popularity and that of his government were much higher than they are today.

● (1720)

He said:

The Just Society of 1968 has turned out to be an unemployed society of more than one million.

The slogan of “The land is strong” has turned out to be a very weak real growth, high inflation, record unemployment, a record trade deficit and a falling dollar. This administration has shown no signs of mending its ways. They continued in their free spending habits, creating huge cash deficits, forcing record foreign borrowings and pushing up inflation as if they bore no responsibility for the state of the Canadian economy today.

He concluded by saying:

It is time the present government should wake up from their long sleep and proceed with more care for the people.

The last criticism was on behalf of some members who had received numerous complaints from their rural constituents who questioned the accuracy of agricultural associations who back the metric system. During the visit of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, studying the price of the beef industry, visits which took place in all the western provinces after Easter in 1977, I was surprised to hear the number of farmers refusing to accept the new metric system.

[Translation]

To conclude, honourable senators, it may be said that a majority will become supportive of metrication in Canada.

I suggest the government was very well advised indeed to accept on third reading an amendment allowing farmers to use acres instead of hectares. There are evident advantages, such as computation ease, standardization and foreign trade relations. Criticisms in the other place mainly centered on the way the federal government implements these provisions. Certainly Bill C-23 will create problems, but during the phase-in stage only, because in the long term, the metric system will benefit all users. Honourable senators, in the name of the official opposition, I see no need for referral of the bill. And I feel the legislation can be read now or tomorrow during our next sitting, at the government's pleasure.

[English]

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Molgat speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate.

[Translation]

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I would like to thank Senator Bélisle for his comments which, I think, properly covered the subject matter. I appreciate his proposal that the bill does not need to be referred to committee. I support this point of view. I think that the other place has discussed this subject at length in committee and we would probably be covering the same ground.

[English]

I know that we have had a lengthy debate this afternoon and I will not extend it at this time. I should like to make a couple of comments on some of the matters raised by Senator Bélisle. I recognize, as he does, that there will be costs in the change-over to the metric system, but I think we have to recognize as well that there are enormous costs if we do not make the change, costs that are very hard to assess but are undoubtedly there. When we look at the fact that today some 98 per cent of the population of the whole world either uses the metric system or is moving towards it, I think it is evident that we have to move. The longer we delay the movement, the greater the cost will be. I therefore think that action should be taken.

There can obviously be arguments about implementation, but I think that the government process has provided time, and it is now some six years since the first steps were taken. Government action has been taken with a fair degree of consultation all the way down the line. At some stage we have to move. Undoubtedly it will be painful for some people, and it will be costly, but in the long-run it will be to the ultimate benefit and saving of the Canadian people in total, and certainly to all Canadian industry.

With those few words, I again thank Senator Bélisle, and I will propose that we move on to third reading whenever the Senate is prepared to do so.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, with leave, I am prepared to move third reading now.

Some Hon. Senators: Next sitting.

Senator Molgat: Next sitting is agreeable.

Senator Flynn: You may have second thoughts.

Senator Molgat moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRATION BILL, 1976

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Riley for the second reading of Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: Honourable senators, as you know, this bill on immigration, Bill C-24, was studied in depth in the House of Commons. Last night its sponsor talked about the positive aspects of this bill and explained what the government wants to achieve through the passage of the bill. If you give me a few minutes, I would like to go over the negative aspects of the bill, and particularly to review the public objections that certain groups, representative of their environment, have made either before the committee of the House of Commons or outside the house through the newspapers. These groups voiced their opposition to certain important points of this bill.

I shall try to be brief. I know that a committee is sitting at eight o'clock tonight and I do not want to keep you until then, so I shall try to evaluate this bill in a few minutes.

As I said, many groups have opposed certain provisions of the bill. There was, first of all, the Students' Legal Aid Society and the Law Union of Ontario. This group said that certain areas of the proposed legislation lack precision and do not bring detailed or appropriate solutions to the many problems that have been raised. They said also that the government has stated its intention to give a complete and coherent set of provisions concerning the problems of immigration. These assertions on the part of the government were rejected. There was also mention of the regulatory power. With this regulatory power, many important questions will be decided, such as the classes of relatives who can be admitted, the selection criteria for immigrants, the classes of people who need visas, the conditions that can be set for newly landed immigrants and the classes of people who will have to submit to the taking of fingerprints, photos, or other kinds of identification.

For instance, clause 14(3) of the bill states that an immigration officer can impose terms and conditions of a prescribed nature to visitors to Canada. But what type of regulations? We do not know because the government did not submit them when, as usual, the bill was introduced in the house. The bill gives no explanation of these terms and these regulations, so that the Governor in Council will be able to do what he wants without his decision being discussed publicly in Parliament.

● (1730)

Clause 40 provides for the deportation of permanent residents as defined in clause 2 after consideration of the secret report by a special advisory board. A person could thus be deported if there are good reasons to think that he or she will engage in spying or subversive activities. Such a clause opens the door to several possible abuses. The very composition of that special board causes problems since the bill does not say that Parliament must approve appointments to the advisory board. The advisors could then be friends of the government, which could jeopardize the independence of the board as well as its credibility.

Another group made representations, and I refer to the Parkdale Community Legal Aid Service. That office worked on more than one thousand cases dealing with immigration in the past five years. It is opposed particularly to clause 19(1)(c) which says that a person cannot be admitted to this country if he committed a crime abroad. That clause is only concerned with the characterization of conduct, and not conduct itself. I think everyone will realize here that a person in a totalitarian country, a communist country, can be convicted of treason for distributing political pamphlets criticizing the government, when in Canada such conduct cannot be classified as treason. However, that person could be excluded from this country under clause 19(1)(c).

The League for Human Rights also made representations. That group criticized, above all, clause 19(1)(d). The government said that clause is meant to refuse entry to this country to people related to organized crime. However, the provisions of that clause make it possible to deny admittance into the country to any individual liable to commit an offence. You understand that those provisions are too extensive and leave the matter to the discretion of the official. The league also maintained that a number of reasons for inadmissibility or deportation were too vague and could lead to abuses. In addition, you will note in clauses 19 and 27 the vagueness of the provisions which could give way to all kinds of despotic actions, due to the extensive discretionary powers given to the immigration officers.

Another group, the Urban Alliance on Race Relations, objected to the overly high-handed attitude of officers concerning the admittance of immigrants staying in Canada.

However—and I do approve the following comments—I think that the group which, in my opinion, has best summarized the criticisms concerning this bill and those also made by the Conservative and New Democratic members of the opposition in the other place as well as by the government members was the Entr'aide missionnaire which summed up its objection by asking some basic questions to the minister. Those questions were related to the extremely vague or general inadmissibility or deportation conditions leading to all kinds of abuses; the abolition of the notion of domicile; the security certificate allowing the deportation on the strength of a secret report without any effective defence, and power of arrest without warrant.

I think that Le Devoir published in June some of the objections raised by that group within and without this house. We were wondering why the concept of residence is being repealed under clause 127, thus depriving thousands of landed immigrants of their vested rights and all future immigrants of protection against deportation, when we know very well that thousands of them have very good reasons for not applying for Canadian citizenship, because even if they are entitled to apply after being in the country for three years, it is not granted automatically. While residence was automatic after five years under the old citizenship act, which made application possible after five years, the average immigrant would put in his application only after twelve and a half years and rely on his residence status for protection during this period of seven and a half years, when he became a permanent resident, until he became a Canadian citizen.

Can we rest assured that the adjudicator who will replace the special investigator will be selected outside the department and that he will be completely independent from it so as to ensure that the immigrant under investigation will benefit from the same impartiality, and the same appearance of impartiality that is insured by the Universal Bill of Rights? The Canadian Bill of Rights and our justice system require that all Canadian citizens receive equal treatment. How can we also explain that clause 3(f) which ensures non-discrimination on grounds of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion or sex, did not include political allegiance? We know very well that immigrants coming into this country are leaving their homeland for ideological reasons and because their political views differ from those of their national government. Then why does this clause not contain a provision prohibiting discrimination on political grounds?

How can we guarantee that a concept as vague and touchy as the one concerning the national security, which is to be found in clauses 39, 40 and 83, will not allow abuses which will be impossible to control? Do we have to satisfy ourselves with answers like the ones the Minister of Immigration gave in the house when he said: "I took the decision which was required and I know that it is the good one." Other heads of government have uttered similar views before.

We also deal with the attestation of security on the basis of secret reports which in practice make it possible to deport persons who do not have any judicial defence, on the pretext of national security. Why is the person involved not allowed to question the contents of the attestation of security? Why is this person deprived of that basic right, which is recognized by our judicial system, of knowing what he is accused of so that he can defend himself? Because it is the authority that decides on the attestation of security and the authority does not have to give reasons. If the authority decides that it is a matter of national security, the deportation of the immigrant is not even justified. He is simply told that because of the national security, he is not allowed in the country, and he is deported, that is all. And according to our Canadian law, this deported person could be allowed to know how he is threatening national security so that he has the opportunity to defend himself.

In addition, among the classes listed as inadmissible, how can one justify such vague and general definitions as are given in clauses 19(1)(d), 19(1)(f) and 19(1)(g), in so sensitive and dangerous a field as that of national security? Why declare inadmissible a person who is merely suspected of being likely, while in Canada, to engage in or instigate the subversion by force of any government in the world? That is what clause 19(1)(f) says. How can one justify otherwise than by discrimination against immigrants, considered as second-class citizens, the possibility of mandatory identification, either by photograph or fingerprints, of non-Canadian citizens, which measure has always been decried by the Canadian people when there was question of making ID cards compulsory for them? Why then demand it from prospective immigrants to Canada? Why has the government rejected the recommendations of the Appeal Board, although it is in a better position to decide whether or not a person against whom a deportation order has been issued should be granted the right to appeal, and especially because the reason of denial of such a right—documentation of case—does not exist any more? There are cases in the present legislation where immigrants against whom deportation orders have been issued by the minister or one of his officials are denied the right to appeal. And how could we vindicate the power of arrest without a warrant, as provided for under Clause 104(2), because all senior immigration officers, as honourable senators doubtless know, have the power to issue warrants of arrest without going through court procedures. That is under clause 104(1).

● (1740)

Why has the minister the right to appeal to the Board whenever a decision rendered favours an immigrant? That is under Clause 73, while the latter may only appeal in a very limited number of cases against an unfavourable decision; that is under clause 72. Why deprive the Appeal Board of the right to re-open a case when it has reasonable grounds to do so? That is under clause 84. Is it because the Appeal Board is not deemed competent to decide whether the grounds for re-opening a case are valid or not?

Why do temporary and seasonal workers have to contribute to the various social security programs if they are not legally and actually entitled to any benefits as provided under a section of this act?

Needless to say I am opposed to immigration under conditions. Furthermore, people would be inclined to wonder why conditional immigrants are not sure to receive permanent residency right after their complementary examination. What guarantee have we under clause 14(4)? What guarantee have we that Bill C-24 as it is worded will prevent extending such conditions indefinitely?

I suggest that fundamental matters have been raised during those debates by interest groups as well as by opposition parties in the House of Commons.

This bill provides for many circumstances under which Parliament could violate civil liberties. If we are to deny those liberties, let us have the matter examined openly before Parliament and not in the secret of the cabinet, because it always comes to the powers of the cabinet to enact regulations stemming from laws passed by Parliament. When the cabinet makes regulations they are in force when they appear in the official Canada Gazette. It happens often that these regulations, as pointed out in the other place, go squarely against the spirit of the law as voted by Parliament.

Besides representations made by interest groups, the legislation before us contains what I consider to be the most dangerous feature of Bill C-24, and that is the near discretionary power granted to the minister and his agent which is detrimental to judicial guarantees allowed to various classes of non-citizens. So much so that some apparently progressive provisions turn out to have the opposite meaning when considered in the general context of the law. Therefore it was probably advisable to provide for measures which are less severe than deportation; in this sense, the exclusion order and the departure notice apply to relatively minor cases.

In conclusion, those who have grievances to put forward against this bill have always alluded to the quasi discretionary powers granted to the ministers and the officials. It remains that we still have liberal democracy in Canada. However, I think that we will have to ensure that the powers given to the special investigator and also to the officials in the operation of the act do not lead to considerable abuse of and prejudice against the people concerned.

There were also in the House of Commons several honourable members who made representations on some clauses in the bill they did not want to support. As I said earlier, some rules approved by the government were mentioned. It was also asked that the minister keep his authority to quash a permit and that the immigrant has the right to defend himself before the minister and to give the reasons for not quashing the minister's permit and to discuss all the matters of the status of refugee. Of course, honourable senators—

● (1750)

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, pursuant to rule 12—

Senator Perrault: It is not necessary.

Senator Flynn: We did not see the clock.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: Honourable senators, I am being reminded that it is 6 o'clock, and that this bill must be referred to a committee. I think I have emphasized the criticisms of the opposition enough to show that we are not ready to accept straight off the bill we now have before us. We have been told that it would be examined in greater depth in committee. I make the criticisms I have underlined my criticisms tonight and those coming from certain groups. In order to scrutinize them further, perhaps we will have the chance to hear other groups make their representations before the committee. So I will agree to close my remarks. Whatever else I had in mind, I will have the opportunity to say before the Senate committee to which this bill will be referred.

[English]

Hon. Eugene A. Forsey: Honourable senators, I am sorry to delay matters, but I think I should like to discuss this bill briefly after 8 o'clock.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, there is no reason why the debate cannot continue. No one has noted the fact that there is a clock on the wall.

Senator Flynn: If Senator Forsey is ready, he should go ahead.

Senator Forsey: I do not think I want to take up time during what is ordinarily the dinner recess, because what I want to say will take some little time, and I thought I saw a sign of Senator Riley rising to close the debate. I merely wanted to make clear that I had something to say.

Senator Perrault: I am sure that honourable senators would appreciate hearing the honourable senator now.

Senator Forsey: Very well. I am afraid honourable senators have brought it upon themselves. I shall try to be as brief as I can, because I agree that a great deal of this might better be dealt with in committee.

The first thing I want to say is that I think it is absolutely outrageous that a bill of this complexity should come to us in the dying hours of the session. It is full of questionable provisions, as Senator Asselin has just made clear, and I don't think that even he has exhausted the list of them.

I repeat the suggestion I made some days ago in this chamber that I am afraid we are going to have in future to adopt more and more, in relation to a variety of pieces of complex legislation, the Hayden formula and have the subject matter of these bills referred to the appropriate committee at an early date in the session, because this is simply a Gargantuan affair, complex almost beyond description, and it is virtually impossible for this chamber at this time of the session, and with the weather conditions to which the honourable Leader of the Opposition has referred, or its committee to give to this bill the kind of consideration that it ought to have and which it is the duty of the Senate to give to it.

The second thing I want to say is that the Honourable Senator Riley, in presenting this bill, suffused it with a rosy glow. He talked of the vast improvement over the existing legislation. Well, there may be some improvement over the existing legislation, but I am almost tempted to say that that is merely saying that one is greater than zero. That would be an extreme statement, but the fact is that there is a great deal in this legislation which is, to my mind, of a most dubious character, to put it very mildly.

I am inclined to think, after looking over the proceedings that took place in the other place, and looking over the bill very carefully, that in order to make this legislation tolerable it would be necessary to make something like 40 or perhaps 50 or 60 amendments to it to purge it of its defects.

Not being learned in the law, I am probably rather innocent in this, and it may be that I have overlooked various things which in fact require amendment, although it didn't strike me that they did require amendment.

The next thing I want to say is that this bill is a bureaucrat's paradise. The minister has plumed himself upon the fact that the powers of officials and the powers of the government under this bill are much smaller than they are under the existing act, that there is more in the act and there would be less in the regulations. Well, I do not know whether I can enter into any kind of numbers game on that, but when I look at the something more than four pages of powers given to the Governor in Council to prescribe and pass regulations, and when I look over the list of instances in which it is provided that the proceedings under the bill shall take place according to regulations, I can only say that if the situation is improved over the present act, then the present act must be even worse than I thought it was. I have had some experience, particularly in an outrageous case of a West Indian visitor, of the kind of inequity that can take place under the present act, but I cannot see that this long list of clauses in which regulations are referred to, apart from the clause which provides that the Governor in Council may prescribe this and prescribe that and prescribe the other thing, almost world without end, can be thought of as a tolerable situation at all.

• (1800)

I have noted down here clauses 2(1), 6, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14(2)(a), 14(3) and (4), 16(2), 17(2), 23(1) and (2), 32(3)(a), 32(4), 35(1), 70(1), 98(f), 111, and then, of course, finally, 115, which opens the gates as wide as the sky and lets the cabinet go riding by. That is one thing that is highly objectionable.

I may add that some of these regulations are to deal with matters of absolutely fundamental importance. For instance, you find that in clause 115 the first three paragraphs deal with matters which, on any showing, surely, are of the most fundamental importance: "providing for the establishment and application of selection standards based on such factors"—observe the word "such": this is not exclusive—"as family relationships," and so on and so on and so on.

Then there is (b), "prescribing classes of persons whose applications for landing may be sponsored by Canadian citizens and prescribing classes of persons whose application for landing may be sponsored by permanent residents;" and sub-clause (c) "exempting members of the family class from any of the requirements of the regulations and prescribing in substitution for such regulations, special regulations for the purpose of determining the ability and willingness of persons who sponsor applications," and so on and so on.

Now, there are three absolutely fundamental things that are handed to the Governor in Council to deal with.

When it was attempted in the other place to get this amended, there were two proposals, one from a member of the official opposition and one from a member of the New Democratic Party.

The second one (which was the more moderate one, believe it or not, from the New Democratic Party) was that these first three paragraphs of 115(1) should provide that regulations should come into effect only after a period of 30 days, and only upon an affirmative vote of the House of Commons. It was turned down. If you had a power of regulation like this, and you had the kind of thing that was suggested in that amendment by Mr. Brewin, you would have some kind of safeguard; but after the experience we have had in the Committee on Statutory Instruments, my blood runs cold at what these people may do. I am not referring to the Governor in Council specifically, although they have to take the responsibility for it, but to the officials, "qui font la pluie et le beau temps," and I hope the translators will give an idiomatic English translation to that very expressive French phrase.

This particular proposal, which was a moderate and reasonable proposal, safeguarding the rights of Parliament in a fundamental manner, was turned down like a bedspread by the government in the other house.

I do not want to go into other details about the regulations. There is a whole string of things there that will have to be taken up in committee, even in the small amount of time that is going to be left to us in the present circumstances. Some attempt must be made to deal with these.

Then you can look at the arbitrary powers given to immigration officers and there you have clauses 11(1), 12(4), 95(g), 13(1), 13(3), 15(2), 111(2) and 111(3). Then you have another list, which I sha'n't run through, arbitrary powers given to senior immigration officers, and then you have a further list of arbitrary powers given to the adjudicator. That's another feature of this thing which is highly objectionable.

The next thing is, of course, the question of security. There you have the most amazing proposals and the most subversive proposal. Notably, as I think Senator Asselin—whom I had a little difficulty in following because of my infirmity and because he spoke perhaps almost as fast as I do—said, you have particularly the provisions in the various subclauses of clause 19. Take (d), for example, “persons who there are reasonable grounds to believe will”—“reasonable grounds to believe will, (i) commit one or more offences punishable by way of indictment under any Act of Parliament,” not “have committed,”—“reasonable grounds to believe.”

Then you get:

(e) persons who have engaged in or who there are reasonable grounds to believe will engage in acts of espionage or subversion . . . except persons who, having engaged in such acts, have satisfied the Minister that their admission would not be detrimental to the national interest;

(f) persons who there are reasonable grounds to believe will, while in Canada, engage in or instigate the subversion by force of any government;

That “any government” phrase keeps recurring over and over again. Now, if they said any democratic government, there would be something in this.

But, honourable senators, if members of this house were in some of the Latin American countries ruled by dictatorships, or if they were in some of the eastern European countries, I'd venture to say that there are several members of this house who might very easily decide that the only way of getting rid of these obnoxious people was by force. Now, I am not saying that that would be a justified decision, but I say it would be a very natural one, and I suspect that a great many very respectable people, including the highly respectable members of this highly respectable house, might very well arrive at that conclusion. But here you have “any government.”

(f) persons who there are reasonable grounds to believe will, while in Canada, engage in or instigate the subversion by force of any government;

(g) persons who there are reasonable grounds to believe will engage in acts of violence that would or might—

“Might!”

—endanger the lives or safety of persons in Canada or—

And here comes a beauty of which even the late Senator Joseph McCarthy might be proud!

—are members of or are likely to participate in the unlawful activities of an organization that is likely to engage in such acts of violence;

This simply piles Pelion upon Ossa. You have four different highly dubious, highly arbitrary phrases—words and phrases in there; and so one could go on about the security provisions. You will find the same kind of thing in clause 27(1)(c) and (2)(c) again “any government.”

Then, of course, you have the whole business in clauses 39 to 41, which Senator Asselin referred to, where you have simply the say-so of a couple of ministers who, I agree, would probably behave reasonably well in most cases but who, after all, are fallible, and who are probably in many instances likely to be sitting ducks for the security services whose verdict is sometimes based on somewhat questionable evidence. When the proposal was made in other house that this matter should be entrusted, finally, to judges—I sha'n't go into the details—oh, no, that was turned down too. Apparently the judges are considered likely to leak confidential information.

Then, of course, you have the whole series of proposals about refugees. I sha'n't go into that. I could say a great deal. I could say a great deal in a great deal of detail on many of these points, but I venture to think that if honourable senators will look at the submission made by the highly reputable Amnesty International, Canadian section, in the other place, they will see just how unsatisfactory, how inadequate, how oppressive the conditions with regard to the admission of refugees can be.

I have gone over that at undue speed and very superficially because of the considerations of time, my trespassing upon the dinner interval, my trespassing, in fact, even more, which is much more serious, upon the patience and tolerance of my colleagues. However, I have tried to indicate, cursorily at all events, some of the reasons why in my judgment this bill simply will not do.

On the unlikely assumption that proper amendments or a reasonable number of proper and necessary amendments, will be made in committee, and on the, I fear, even more unlikely assumption that if they are made the Senate will adopt them, I am prepared to vote for second reading. However, unless a substantial number of substantial amendments on the points that Senator Asselin and I have both referred to are made I shall certainly vote against third reading, even if I can only call out “On division.” I wish we had a provision in this house such as they have in the House of Lords for allowing noble lords to record their dissent formally in the proceedings of the house. I do not know whether we have such a provision; I do not think we have, although I think we once had.

Senator Flynn: Two members can call a vote.

Senator Forsey: At any rate, I shall be prepared to rise and ask for a division on this.

I think this is in many respects a perfectly scandalous bill, and it is doubly scandalous, triply scandalous, quadruply scandalous that it should be sent to us in the dying hours of the session when it is virtually impossible that we can give to it the kind of consideration, the kind of sober second thought, which this chamber is in the Constitution to provide.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to prolong this debate because of the late hour, although I would have liked to touch on several aspects of this bill. However, I wish to make one recommendation. I refer to Part I, the objectives, particularly clause 3(b). As most honourable senators know, I am the Chairman of the Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism. My council made one specific recommendation, and suggested that clause 3(b) be changed. It now reads:

to enrich and strengthen the cultural and social fabric of Canada, taking into account the federal and bilingual character of Canada.

My council recommended that it be changed to read:

to enrich and strengthen the cultural and social fabric of Canada, taking into account the federal, bilingual and multicultural character of Canada.

Senator Forsey: Hear, hear.

Senator Bosa: I hope that in dealing with this matter the members of the committee will take the recommendation of the council into consideration.

Senator Flynn: Wishful thinking.

Hon. Daniel Riley: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Riley speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate.

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, I appreciated hearing the three honourable senators who have taken part in the debate, particularly Senator Asselin, and the manner in which he analyzed this bill. As he said at the end of his discourse, he wants the bill to go to committee and he intends to press many of the arguments he has made in respect of so many clauses of the bill.

I also anticipated that Senator Forsey would speak, perhaps at some length, on the question of the regulations clause, clause 115, because I knew that that clause would probably not only be combed by him in the Senate committee, but also in the Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, of which he is joint chairman.

I appreciate all the criticisms that have been levelled against the bill. I do not think it is necessary for me to go into the bill clause by clause in respect of the alleged deficiencies that have been pointed out. So I will move that this bill receive second reading and, if it does, I will move that it be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Riley moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

NOTICE OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, if I may just momentarily before the next order is put forward say that in anticipation of this bill being referred to the Foreign Affairs Committee this afternoon I have made arrangements for the senior officials of the department, and the minister, to be available to commence the committee proceedings at 9.30 tomorrow morning. As some members of the committee who are here may not receive their notices in time if they are not back in their offices, I thought I should mention that now.

Senator Flynn: How many committees will be sitting tomorrow?

Senator Perrault: Two.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Leave having been given to revert to motions:

Senator Perrault, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs have power to sit while the Senate is sitting tomorrow, Wednesday, 3rd August, 1977, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Senator Flynn: Leave is granted, yes, but I should like to clarify the situation with respect to committee sittings tomorrow. I understand that the Transport and Communications Committee may be sitting, as well as the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee and the Foreign Affairs Committee. I don't know if it is possible for three committees to sit at the same time. In any event, as far as we on this side are concerned it does not make our task easy. We have been very co-operative today, I must say; maybe a little too much so.

Senator Perrault: I know that I express the view of all honourable senators when I say that this is a day which has seen a good deal of co-operation among senators. The reason for the proposal to have the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee—

Senator Flynn: I am not discussing that.

Senator Perrault: What are you speaking of?

Senator Flynn: I am speaking of three committees sitting at the same time and of the staff requirements. Also, I refer to the members on this side attending those committees.

Senator Perrault: Yes; the problem of properly staffing the committee meetings with the required personnel imposes certain additional burdens, but the situation has been assessed and it is felt that at least with respect to personnel staffing it will be possible to schedule these committee meetings. It may be, for example, that the National Finance Committee may find that it can complete consideration this evening of the bill which will be before it. The burden on staffing the committees may not be as difficult as the situation now appears.

Senator Flynn: Do you mean that there might be four committees sitting at the same time?

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, on this same point I regret not having been here earlier this afternoon when this may have been discussed, but there was a matter of some interest to me before the Transport and Communications Committee, where I have been all afternoon. I am constrained to ask the same permission to sit tomorrow while the Senate is sitting as has just been asked on behalf of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, because this very important and somewhat controversial legislation, the Immigration Act, cannot be dealt with by the committee summarily.

I should think the committee will have to sit for a considerable length of time on the bill. Certainly, we would not be able to complete our consideration of it tomorrow morning.

I appreciate the position in which the opposition is placed in these circumstances. Perhaps consideration could be given to providing the whole day tomorrow for committee meetings, with the Senate meeting tomorrow evening. That, of course, is in the hands of the Leader of the Government. In any event, I, too, must ask that the Foreign Affairs Committee be given permission to sit tomorrow afternoon while the Senate is sitting. There is simply no way we can adequately deal with the Immigration Bill in any hurried fashion.

Senator Perrault: I would point out to the honourable senator that permission for the committee to sit can be obtained tomorrow afternoon at the 2 o'clock sitting.

Senator Flynn: We will be in a much better position to assess the situation at that time.

Senator Perrault: There are matters with respect to committee activities which I should perhaps discuss with the Leader of the Opposition when the Senate adjourns today, and certainly the committee co-ordinators will be consulted as well. We want to give fair consideration to the important bills now before the Senate, and that is the responsibility of all senators. It would certainly not be in order to rush through legislation without proper consideration. What is required is an orderly scheduling of committee meetings. I will be in contact with the Leader of the Opposition as soon as the Senate adjourns today.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, August 3, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTER-PARLIAMENTARY GROUP

EIGHTEENTH MEETING—REPORT TABLED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Senator Lang: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the report of the Eighteenth Meeting of the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group held in Victoria, last May, and according to precedent I would ask that this report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate of this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see Appendix, p. 1225.)

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION REORGANIZATION BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Senator Everett, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-27, to establish the Department of Employment and Immigration, the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission and the Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Hicks moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

CANCELLATION OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I should like to announce that the meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, scheduled for 2.30 this afternoon, has been cancelled. I understand that the cancellation notice has been sent out, but in case honourable senators do not receive it in time, I wish to make this announcement now.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE
SENATE

Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have power to sit while the Senate is sitting today and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, may I mention that the committee, as a result of this permission, will be sitting forthwith in room 356-S instead of room 263-S where we met this morning.

HISTORIC BUILDINGS

PROPOSED DEMOLITION OF HISTORIC HOUSE—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the day before yesterday the Honourable Senator Molson asked a question with respect to the proposed demolition of an alleged historic house in St. Jean, Quebec. In putting the question Senator Molson stated, "This house is the one in which General Montgomery is reputed to have lived in 1775 during the invasion of Quebec. The newspaper said it would be torn down or removed . . ."

Diligent research has produced the following facts. First of all, there is indeed a house on Grande Bernier Boulevard in St. Jean.

Second, there is apparently a controversy about whether or not General Montgomery ever lived in it. Some authorities question whether the house is that old.

Third, the house presently stands on land belonging to the Department of National Defence and therefore belongs to the Department of National Defence.

Fourth, the Department of National Defence is presently negotiating with the City of St. Jean about the house, but no decision has yet been made as to whether or not the city will get it.

Fifth, the Department of National Defence has no plans to tear the house down, but cannot speak for the municipality if it is ceded to it.

Senator Forsey: The most complete answer we have had in this house for a long time.

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, I should like to crave your indulgence to be out of order for one second to note that it was shortly after he occupied that house that General Montgomery was killed beneath the walls of the fortress City of Quebec in the ensuing battle, while General Benedict Arnold was only wounded, and that many Americans have since wished that it had been the other way round.

THE HONOURABLE SARTO FOURNIER

Senator Fournier (de Lanaudière): Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, I see that my name appears on the attendance list as having been present yesterday. Unfortunately, I was not here.

Senator Flynn: Perhaps, honourable senators, we should welcome back Senator Fournier after his absence for reasons of health.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

STATUTE LAW (METRIC CONVERSION) AMENDMENT BILL, 1976

THIRD READING

Senator Molgat moved the third reading of Bill C-23, to facilitate conversion to the metric system of measurement.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—MOTION FOR ADOPTION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE NEGATIVED—MOTION IN AMENDMENT NEGATIVED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, to which was referred Bill C-34, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act respecting the establishment of marketing plans and to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act in consequence thereof.

Hon. Harry Hays: Honourable senators, I am not going to make a long speech about Bill C-34. I think that just about everything that could be said was well taken care of by Senator Sparrow, Senator Yuzyk and Senator Argue. I should point out that I was not at the committee meeting when this report was voted on, although I think I would not have supported the bill.

● (1410)

In 1963, when I became Minister of Agriculture, and it was my first day in the House of Commons—I had never even sat in the gallery before—I was asked a question by the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker. He asked what I intended to do with all the oil made from butter that we were storing. That came as a shock because he stored it all. We had something like 400 million pounds of it. My first reaction was to say, "Well, you didn't do anything with it." I should have said that, but I did not.

The next question I was asked was by a member from the rape centre of Canada—the rapeseed centre of Canada.

An Hon. Senator: Leave Toronto out of it.

Senator Hays: I will never forget that day when Mr. Rapp asked me what I intended to do for the rapeseed growers of Saskatchewan. In his great wisdom, he foresaw the day when rapeseed would be a major crop in Canada. In those days we had a lot of problems with rapeseed. It contained a number of toxic acids, and it was not suitable for use in animal foods and that sort of thing. The research people through their plant breeding section have done a marvellous job on rapeseed. In Canada today there are 41,000 persons producing rapeseed, and there are 3.270 million acres in production.

Just before coming into the chamber today we spoke to Dr. Migicovsky, who is in charge of the research stations in Canada, and he predicts that in three to five years we will have a rapeseed crop that will be suitable to growing in areas that have probably fewer than 90 frost-free days. This has always been our big problem. There are fewer than 100 frost-free days for the growing of soybeans. We have a cold, harsh climate. Rapeseed generally takes about 110 days. We have not been able to grow rapeseed in any area in less than 100 days. The minute the plant breeders produce a seed that we can grow in 85 to 90 days, I would suspect that we will increase our rapeseed acreage to 10 to 15 million.

Our rapeseed price is competitive on the world market, and that is pretty important. Most of our rapeseed is exported to Japan. Despite the high cost of energy and the high cost of nitrogen to produce soybeans, we will also be able to compete internationally in that product. One reason is that of geography. We do not have the same insect problem that other soybean producing countries suffer from, especially where it is a competitive crop with sunflowers, corn, and a number of others. Any legislation we might introduce at this time would be very important in determining how we are going to sell this product in the future.

In 1945 I bought some farms in Ontario. At that time a very good friend of mine was the New Zealand Trade Commissioner to Canada. New Zealand was having a great problem then. They were producing about 63 million lambs. If you want to appreciate how many lambs that is, let me point out that last year Canada produced about 300,000 lambs. New Zealand had a population of a little over two million, so they had to export. My friend said that the great problem they had in making the lamb situation viable in New Zealand was that there was a multiplicity of small co-ops selling lamb and they were not able to properly handle the sales pitch needed to sell it to England, Canada, United States, Japan or wherever the market was. There was this small group of people who had a terrible time putting all these people together under what they called the New Zealand Meat Board. That was the first suggestion he made when he went back to Canada.

Subsequent to that I visited him many times; I was there in 1966, 1967 and 1968. He then became the chief salesman for the New Zealand Meat Board. He was in Japan and many of these countries. They now have a very viable product. As a matter of fact, they have run Canada out of the lamb business. Anybody can import New Zealand lamb into Canada; there are no restrictions. We are now eating only about three or four pounds of Canadian lamb per person a year. New Zealand is now supplying lamb at costs much less than ours, partly because of that great organization, the New Zealand Meat Board, which sells this product.

I want to give honourable senators that background when we examine any legislation that might, in my opinion, establish a multiplicity of small sales organizations. When buyers such as the U.S.S.R. have one buyer for the whole country, and Japan, which has two buyers for the whole country, it is pretty hard for somebody to negotiate a sale properly when you have to pit one seller against another.

In my opinion, that has been the reason for the whole success of the Wheat Board, which we have had for a long time. It sells wheat, barley and oats, and it has government legislation to back it up. It is not all good; we can all criticize it, but by and large I think it is the envy of the world when it comes to selling grain.

We already have an act, which I think has been explained to honourable senators, that takes care of this, under some difficulty. I do not know whether we should have this bill or not. After listening to the debate and reading the speeches that I did not hear, I wonder if we should not take another look at this bill.

Honourable senators will be familiar with the vote taken in December, 1973. It will soon be four years since that vote on whether rapeseed producers wanted to come under the wing of the Wheat Board or whether they wanted to have this Cinderella crop that they could speculate on outside of their oats, barley and wheat sales. I may not be exactly right, but I think 1.1 per cent did not vote, so the proportion voting was large. Around 56 per cent voted that they did not want pooling of any kind; they wanted to be independent, to sell their rapeseed crop in the way they saw fit. Forty-six or 47 per cent decided that they wanted to belong to the Wheat Pool and be under the very restrictive circumstances under which all of their grain is sold. There was no mention of voluntary pools, or anything of that sort.

● (1420)

The thing that bothers me about voluntary pools can perhaps be illustrated by an example. About May or June you could have sold rapeseed. Remember that the Wheat Board do an awful lot of hedging. They sell when they think it is a good time. Rapeseed got to be about between $10 and $11 a bushel. You will remember the great noise about the Hunt family cornering soybeans. Well, rapeseed follows it up, because it is used for the same purpose. At that time, if I had operated a small pool I would have called in my members and said, "Today is the day to sell our rapeseed. It cost $4 a bushel per acre to produce, and the futures today are about $11. That is a difference of about $11, and that is a profit of almost $450 an acre." If I had done that I would have looked awfully good, and I could have made the Wheat Board, who were selling our oats and our barley, look very, very bad.

I worry about these small pools receiving payments of this amount. Individuals are a little different, but when you have half a dozen, or 15, or 20 little pools, that can be substantial. Perhaps we might devise a method of merchandising that would be the envy of the world. That is why I think we should send Bill C-34 back to committee, with some instructions. After all, we have not had rapeseed covered for 50 years—the vote was taken four years ago—and I cannot see what the hurry is today. Let us do a good job on this. If it is going to hurt us, let us know if that happens. If it is going to be good, we can still do it before this session ends in the fall. But I think we should call in the processors of rapeseed, the grain companies, the pools, and the Canadian Wheat Board. I want to hear what the Canadian Wheat Board have to say. Would they start a pool? Would they be competing in the selling of this very important crop, which might well be one of our major crops down the road? I should like to hear their answers to such questions.

About three or four years ago I was one of the delegates to the United Nations. At that time the book By Bread Alone was sort of compulsory reading. Some of the figures quoted in it really startled me. They made me believe what was said so many years ago, that rapeseed would one day be a very important commodity in Canada. If we are going to have it mature in 80 days, instead of putting in 25 acres of barley this year I would have put in 25 acres of rapeseed, and I would have sold at the time it was high in the futures. I am sure that if the Wheat Board had handled it, they would have sold at that time. They are very experienced in merchandising.

Let us look at some statistics which indicate what Canada does, and what changes may occur in the not too distant future. These figures are not right up to date, but almost. Canada is the largest user of grain in the world. Per capita we use 1993 pounds of grain, or almost a ton of grain. The United States is second with 1641 pounds, and the United Kingdom is third with 1200. Then there is India, which sustains a population of 750 million on 348 pounds per capita. Their problem is protein. We get protein from rapeseed. Probably we will be using less and less grain to go through cattle. We only use 202 pounds of grain, other than putting it through cattle, because if you put it through cattle it takes eight pounds to make a pound of meat. If you put it through chickens it takes three pounds. If you put it through pigs it takes 3½ pounds. These are the costs, in grain, of our high standard of living today. You can quite well live on 340 pounds of grain if you have enough protein grown from rapeseed to go with it.

I say, honourable senators, let us send this report back to committee. Let us call in these witnesses. Let us do a proper job on it. We have a bill that can be used today, if necessary, in the meantime. Nothing can happen immediately that will change the merchandising of rapeseed, but if we are going to have a pool, let us give those people out there another opportunity to say what they think. Remember that 56 or 57 per cent of them do not want any pool at all. Surely we should respect the wishes of these people.

Senator Steuart: I wonder if the honourable senator would permit a question. He has repeated twice now that all those people, 55 or 56 per cent, who voted against the handling of rapeseed by the Wheat Board, do not want a pool of any kind. How does he know that? Maybe they wanted a partial pool. How does he know that they did not want a partial pool rather than a full pool? I do not know how he can keep making that statement. Neither he, nor I, nor anyone else has the knowledge that these people who voted against the Wheat Board's handling their product totally might have wanted a partial pool, which I say this bill gives them the right to have.

Senator Hays: I cannot answer that, but in the last few days I have phoned several growers who produce a few thousand acres of rapeseed and who do not want a pool of any kind. I have not spoken to anyone who does and who voted against it. Anyone I have spoken to who wanted a pool said, "Let us not have a bunch of little pools. Let us have one big pool." There was nothing in the vote to indicate that there would be voluntary pools. No one can answer that. The vote was taken in 1973. I talked to one fellow who said that if they held the vote today, 65 per cent would say they did not want a pool. But this crop is something they like to speculate on aside from their wheat, oats and barley. But the same people said, "I do not like the Wheat Board, but I would not change them for anything. I still want that way of marketing."

I think that the Agriculture Committee did a good job. They looked at the bill very carefully. Senator Argue chairs this committee to the very best of his ability, of which he has a great deal. The committee examined the bill thoroughly, and, by golly, if the Senate does not want to respect committees, then we might as well abandon them, particularly those that the Senate does not want to respect, and let us deal with everything as a Committee of the Whole. Perhaps we do not need this committee at all.

You remember that it was not so long ago that we amended a bill in the Agriculture Committee, the Farm Credit Corporation bill. It provided that you could only loan up to $150,000 to farmers who were 35 years of age or younger. We thought that was wrong, and we amended it. We brought the amendment back here and we were overridden by the Senate. As a result, we have a 35 years of age law, and a $150,000 law, and now the funds are dried up because of government restraints in funds. Seventy-four per cent of the money loaned in 1976 was to people under 35. Young men who were 35 and 36 then are now 37 and 38, and they cannot borrow more money. They are locked in. The Farm Credit Corporation is locked in also. Now they want to change this. This committee looked very carefully at this legislation, but I think we could have done a better job, and now we should send it back.

I am also worried about the fact that under the marketing legislation you can have 20 pools under the Department of Agriculture, and the Minister of Agriculture operating in Humboldt, and you can have 10 operating under the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. We have other seeds, like soybeans, and so on, which are not covered under this bill. What do these people think? I think we should call them in and see what the competitive growers of other seeds want to say. There are a lot of questions that we should ask about this matter.

Honourable senators, with great respect for the Agriculture Committee, I move, seconded by Senator Molgat, that the report be not now adopted, but that it be referred back to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture for further consideration.

Senator Olson: May I ask a question before the question is put?

Senator Croll: Wait till the question is put.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Argue, seconded by the Honourable Senator Williams, that this report be now adopted.

In amendment it is moved by the Honourable Senator Hays, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Molgat, that the report be not now adopted, but that it be referred back to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture for further consideration.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, may I ask the Honourable Senator Hays a question?

● (1430)

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Senator Olson: May I ask Senator Hays a question related to this motion? He claims that the committee has done a good job, and then he claims that the committee did not do a sufficiently in-depth examination and that is why he wants to send the report back. My specific question is this: is it not a fact that every one of the organizations that he mentioned who ought now to be called before this committee were, indeed, invited to appear before the committee when Bill C-34 was in committee and they declined to appear? Is he suggesting now that we should subpoena them?

Senator Hays: Well, 56 per cent or 25,000 individual people cannot pay their way to Ottawa to appear before this committee. That is just an impossibility. Those are the people we are speaking of. They are the big majority that say "no way." Surely, that is democracy. Should the House of Commons say, "Well, the NDP have 18 people so we should have a little government over here in order that they can operate"? We have always respected majorities. And certainly the vote was clear—56 per cent did not want it. We would like to talk to some of those 56 per cent. That is my answer to your question.

Senator Olson: I am wondering if the honourable senator did not miss the point of my question. I am talking about the organizations that Senator Hays specifically mentioned. Every one of them was invited to come before the committee and they chose not to do so. That is the question I wanted him to deal with.

Senator Hays: We asked the Rapeseed Growers Association of Saskatchewan, of which there are 900 members out of 41,000 growers, plus the Manitoba association with 450 members, and the Alberta association with 400 or 500 members. I understood that these people were mostly rapeseed growers and their market is a different market from that of the average rapeseed grower. The average grower sells it to the crushing plant but these people sell rapeseed to the members for planting, and I do not think they are really interested in the marketing of the commercial aspect of the seed. So, I suppose they preferred not to come.

The Wheat Board did not come. I can understand why they didn't. I think the Wheat Board officials should be subpoenaed to appear before this committee. I want to know what they think about it. They have some worry because the minister who proposed the bill is their boss. I have discussed this with the former manager of the Wheat Board for many years, and you heard what he said about this sort of legislation. So, I would like to hear exactly what they have to say.

Senator Yuzyk: Would you permit a question or two at this time?

Senator Hays: Yes.

Senator Yuzyk: Senator Hays, you have had a long and distinguished career in both houses of Parliament. In your vast experience with legislation, would you consider it as a vote of non-confidence in the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture if this house were to reject the report of this committee?

Senator Hays: It is difficult for me to answer that question yes or no. I would hope that when the Senate sets up committees it would respect those committees. I understand the position of the Leader of the Government. I was in the cabinet and I know what takes place there. I know that his responsibility is to get bills through whether good or bad. I can understand the whip.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, may I make a statement on that point? My responsibility is to make sure that legislation which comes before the Senate is dealt with fairly, accurately and constructively. And the record of the Senate since I have been Leader of the Government in the Senate indicates many, many amendments made to government bills, so that is not an accurate description of what my responsibility is in this chamber.

Senator Hays: Well, I will withdraw the remark. But I was in the cabinet too and I know what takes place.

Senator Walker: You already told us that.

Senator Hays: I also know about the oath. In any event, I still have never seen a bill come to the Senate when the leader has said, "Throw it in the junk pile." And I have never seen a bill where the whip did not try to get as many people out as he could, and that is his responsibility, and he is a friend of mine.

Senator Walker: That is a high note to end on. Let us have the question.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion the motion is lost. Shall the main motion carry?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: I am listening to the yeas now.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I may have misunderstood Madam Speaker, but I did not hear her ask for both the yeas and the nays. I may be in error, but if Her Honour did not put both the yeas and the nays I think that should be done.

The Hon. the Speaker: I shall put the yeas and the nays on the motion in amendment. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion? Those in favour please say "yea".

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Those who are against please say "nay".

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion the "nays" have it. And more than two honourable senators having risen.

● (1440)

The Hon. the Speaker: Please call in the senators.

● (1450)

Motion in amendment of Senator Hays negatived on the following division:

YEAS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Argue	Hicks
Asselin	Inman
Beaubien	Laird
Bélisle	Macdonald
Burchill	McGrand
Cameron	McNamara
Choquette	Molgat
Deschatelets	Molson
Eudes	Norrie
Everett	Phillips
Flynn	Riley
Forsey	Smith (Colchester)
Fournier (Madawaska- Restigouche)	Smith (Queens-Shelburne)
Fournier (Restigouche- Gloucester)	Sparrow
Grosart	van Roggen
Hays	Walker
	Williams
	Yuzyk—34.

NAYS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Adams	Graham
Austin	Greene
Bonnell	Hayden
Bosa	Lamontagne
Bourget	Lang
Connolly (Ottawa West)	Langlois
Cook	Lucier
Cottreau	Marchand
Croll	McElman
Davey	McIlraith
Denis	Neiman
Desruisseaux	Olson
Fournier	Perrault
(de Lanaudière)	Petten
Frith	Riel
Giguère	Rizzuto
Godfrey	Robichaud
Goldenberg	Rowe
	Steuart—36.

The Hon. the Speaker: I declare the motion in amendment lost.

Shall the main motion carry?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those who are in favour please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those who are against please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.
And more than two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Speaker: Please call in the senators.

Some Hon. Senators: Vote.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure that we take the vote now?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Shall the main motion carry? Will those who are in favour of the main motion please rise?

Senator Argue: For clarification, is this the vote on the motion for the adoption of the committee report—my motion?

The Hon. the Speaker: I will read the main motion.

It is moved by the Honourable Senator Argue, seconded by the Honourable Senator Williams, that this report be now adopted.

Motion of Senator Argue negatived on the following division:

YEAS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Argue	Hays
Asselin	Inman
Beaubien	Laird
Bélisle	McNamara
Cameron	Molgat
Choquette	Molson
Everett	Norrie
Flynn	Phillips
Forsey	Riley
Fournier (Madawaska- Restigouche)	Smith (Colchester)
Fournier (Restigouche- Gloucester)	Sparrow
Grosart	Walker
	Williams
	Yuzyk—26.

NAYS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Adams	Hayden
Austin	Hicks
Bonnell	Lamontagne
Bosa	Lang
Bourget	Langlois
Burchill	Lucier
Connolly (Ottawa West)	Macdonald
Cook	Marchand
Cottreau	McElman
Croll	McGrand
Davey	McIlraith
Denis	Neiman
Deschatelets	Olson
Desruisseaux	Perrault
Eudes	Petten
Fournier (de Lanaudière)	Riel
Frith	Rizzuto
Giguère	Robichaud
Godfrey	Rowe
Goldenberg	Smith (Queens-Shelburne)
Graham	Steuart
Greene	van Roggen—44.

The Hon. the Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Olson moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

● (1500)

CLERESTORY OF THE SENATE CHAMBER

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, July 14, the debate on the motion of Senator Connolly (Ottawa West), for the adoption of the report of the Special Senate Committee on the Clerestory of the Senate Chamber.

Hon. George I. Smith: Honourable senators, I wish to begin by just reminding all of us how eloquent Senator Carter was in his speech on the subject of the clerestory of the Senate Chamber just before we adjourned. I should also like to wish him well in his adjustment to what I hope will be a very rewarding kind of life.

Turning to the matter at hand, I should like to congratulate Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) and the committee for the work they have done in turning out such an excellent report. It is obvious from reading it that the committee took great care to ensure that its research was very thorough, and that it got the best available advice upon what one might call the architectural and artistic aspects of its work.

I should like to commend the committee also upon the high literary merit of its report. The report expresses the committee's views with clarity, reasonable brevity, only occasional gaps in logic and with a swing and sweep which make it a delight to read. I note from our Hansard at page 979 that the report was drafted by Senators Connolly (Ottawa West), Forsey and Carter. Excellent literary quality is no more than one should expect from such eminent scholars, but even they, I think, as regards the literary aspect of the report, excelled themselves.

Obviously, honourable senators, I would not take up the time of the Senate at this point in the session just to say kind things about the committee and its report, however deserved such comment would be. I now come to some other aspects of the report.

First, I would like to commend the comments of Senator Quart, as reported on page 981 of our Hansard, as to the removal of the red canopy and the drapes from the Throne area. It seems to me that the explanation given to Senator Quart as reported in her remarks is a great deal less than satisfactory. I wish now to associate myself with her reported views in this matter.

Second, I wish to register my objection to the sixth recommendation of the committee and to the consequential recommendations and comments of the report. Recommendation 6 reads:

6. The Senate, at a suitable time, should consider the removal of the pictures now on the walls of the chamber to an appropriate place of display in Ottawa.

With the greatest respect for the distinguished and able chairman and members of the committee, and, indeed, for my long-time friend and colleague Senator Macdonald, who spoke in favour of this recommendation, I find it altogether objectionable, and altogether without any adequate support by anything contained in the admirable report which we are considering.

• (1510)

Honourable senators, examine with me, if you will, what the report says on this point, but first let us listen to those stirring lines in paragraphs 11 and 12 of the report as they appear on page 853 of our Hansard. They are indeed stirring lines with which I agree fully.

The Senate is an integral part of Parliament. It is the only place where Parliament's three elements meet. Parliament is central to the democratic process. It is the focus of attention for most Canadian studies in political science. It is visited annually by tens of thousands of Canadians and by many foreign visitors. It is reported upon constantly in the media. Politics and politicians are the warp and woof of conversation of our people. The place where this interest is generated has become, in a sense, a shrine. If it is a place of dignity and even of majesty, it will raise the perspectives and broaden the horizons and opportunities of those who make it function. If its buildings and their components and surroundings can indicate something of the purposes, the aspirations and the achievements of the nation, the place of Parliament can be of enormous inspirational value to our people.

12. For these reasons the Committee was concerned that any theme chosen for the windows should support these objectives. It is impressed with the importance of reflecting the broad lines of national progress and national life, as the work of parliamentarians should reflect that progress and that life.

Let us next examine what it says about the walls, and again I return to the report.

13. It early became clear that despite the Committee's restricted terms of reference it could not recommend a theme for the windows without considering other features of the chamber. In particular it was repeated many times by both artistic experts and historians, that the eight pictures now lodged on the walls of the Senate, despite their history, their artistic qualities and their emotional appeal, might not be retained indefinitely. Through them, for over half a century, the Senate had honoured the sacrifices the country, its armed forces, and its people made in the First World War. The ideals which inspired those sacrifices are a permanent part of our history, and their purpose, to preserve the Canadian way of life, has been achieved. The nation and its people since have advanced tremendously in freedom and in opportunity. Now the larger milestones of that progress may be worthy of commemoration in a chamber of Parliament.

Let me repeat some of those words.

Through them, for over half a century, the Senate had honoured the sacrifices the country, its armed forces, and its people made in the First World War.

Well, honourable senators, I am sure the committee did not mean it to sound this way, but to me it simply says that the Senate has now done its memorial duty for 50 years, and that is enough. Now let us get on with something we think more important. I quote again:

The ideals which inspired those sacrifices are a permanent part of our history and the nation has now advanced to larger milestones.

Well, honourable senators, with all respect I am compelled to ask, where was there a larger milestone in our history, unless it was Confederation itself? Look at what it meant in terms of Canadian achievement on the field of battle, and then what it meant to Canada in political terms, and then at its terrible cost. Achievement? The achievement of Canada's men and women during the Great World War of 1914-1918 was, to say the least, amazing. In terms of population, here was a tiny nation of a few million people involved in a terrible contest of world-wide intensity with the largest and most powerful nations of the world. At its greatest strength on the field of battle in that war, the Canadian Corps consisted of four divisions and supporting troops. Among the mighty giants of Germany, France, Britain and Russia and their hundreds of divisions, one might expect that four divisions would hardly be enough to attract the passing attention of either friend or foe. And yet in a few months, at the cost of many, many casualties, killed, wounded and missing, and after the display of the highest degree of courage, tenacity, ingenuity, vigour, endurance and fighting ability they became the acknowledged finest assault troops on either side in that great war. Time after time, as anyone can tell who reads the history of that war, they were placed in the van of the allied attack as the troops best suited to lead the assault. And what was even a greater tribute to their quality, frequently when it was desired to mislead the enemy into thinking an attack would be made in a certain place, a skeleton force of Canadians was sent there with instructions to make sure that the enemy knew that they were there.

And thus these Canadians from the cities and towns, the villages and the countryside, the fields, the streams and the woods of this peaceful and peace-loving country met and over-matched the most highly trained professional troops in the world. They did this, not for the love of conquest, not because they liked fighting or killing or dying, but because they believed it had to be done to preserve the freedom they cherished, for which they were prepared to die—and 60,000 of them did die. "Achievement" says the report. Achievement—honourable senators, where in modern history can greater achievement be found? Remember it in the Senate for half a century, for little more than a generation? I submit that remembrance in the Senate for as long as the Senate shall last will be short enough a time to do justice to this great sacrifice of courageous Canadians.

And what of those angels of mercy and light, the courageous women of the Canadian nursing service? No place was too dangerous or too uncomfortable, no effort was too great and no work too hard to keep these wonderful women from bringing their healing care to the wounded or their comforting ministrations to ease the way of those who were passing to another world.

● (1520)

Then there were the thousands who served in the Royal Navy, the Royal Air Force and the Merchant Marines. They served mostly in anonymity in the Navy and the Merchant Marine because that is the nature of those services. But in the air in those days, battle was mostly between individuals in small and flimsy aircraft. Here again, Canadians showed themselves well fitted to be in the company of the best in ability and in courage. One has but to think of the name of Billy Bishop to realize the mark that he and scores upon scores of other Canadians made in the air.

Achievement, honourable senators? When before that in our history was there greater achievement? What other achievement cost 60,000 Canadian lives? Something important for the Senate to remember?—60,000 Canadian lives given in defence of freedom. In the words of the report itself, "to preserve the Canadian way of life." What are the "larger milestones," honourable senators, which may be more "worthy of commemoration in a chamber of Parliament?" Such there may be, honourable senators, but I know them not, nor have I heard of them.

By whatever measurement, the achievements of Canadians in the course of the First World War were of very great magnitude. What of the result of those achievements in terms of the position of Canada today? Before that, Canada, though large in territory and rich in resources, was a small nation just emerging from the colonial stage of her life. The wartime deeds of her sons and daughters, of which I have been speaking, changed that dramatically. They gave her Prime Minister and her other representatives a reputation and place of respect among the nations of the world far and away beyond anything they enjoyed before, and a voice in the Commonwealth, louder, clearer, more persuasive. In company with similar achievements of some other members of the Commonwealth, I suggest it greatly hastened the coming of another very important milestone in our history, the Statute of Westminster.

In short, honourable senators, the deeds commemorated by the pictures on these walls did a great deal indeed to bring Canada of age as a nation among nations. Is that not a great milestone in our progress?

Before I pass on to Canada's part in the Second World War, I regret I must draw attention to another statement in the report which I think ought to be considered and questioned. It appears on page 854 of Hansard, June 8, and reads as follows:

Most of the significant events of Canada's history have not been wars or revolutions or famines or plagues. They have been—regardless how primitive in some cases—parliamentary events. They reflect constitutional progression—reasonable and orderly—in tune with the growth and complexity of a changing society.

This statement about wars and war-like things having had little to do with Canada's history is frequently made, especially by those who write about our constitutional history, and seems generally to have gone unchallenged. Certainly it gains credence by being repeated in the report of this Senate, compiled by such eminent people as those who are members of this committee, indeed, whose eminence is such that I hesitate to challenge any statement of fact they make. But, nevertheless, though I make not the slightest pretence of having any qualifications as a student of history, this statement is not consistent with many historic facts I think I know. For instance, who would venture to say that the wars between France and Britain and France and the English colonists in what is now the eastern United States—many battles of which were fought on Canadian soil—were not significant events in shaping the destiny of the Atlantic provinces and Quebec? Was there not a battle on the Plains of Abraham? Was the result of that not significant to Canada, whatever one may think about it today? Did not the armies of the American revolutionaries attack Montreal and Quebec? Indeed, we had reference to that during the Question Period today. And did not the militia of the Province of Quebec play an important part in defeating those American attacks? Were these events not significant? I suggest it is true that if those attacks had not been defeated, Quebec would, by conquest, have become part of the United States' melting pot. Is that not significant? Did not the revolutionaries make repeated hit-and-run attacks on Nova Scotia, at least partly in the hope that Nova Scotians could be either enticed or coerced into joining the 13 colonies? Did not these attacks fail? Is it not significant that they did fail?

Was there not a war of 1812? Was there not a battle of Queenston Heights or a battle of Lundy's Lane? If the United States had won that war, is it not likely that some or all of Canada would now be part of that nation? Is that not significant?

Was there not a rebellion in 1837? Is it not significant that it failed? Is it not true that the threat of the United States to what is now a portion of Canada was a real factor in bringing about Confederation?

Was there not what is often referred to as the Riel Rebellion on the prairies? If it had succeeded, what would now be the status of Saskatchewan and Manitoba? Is not the fact it failed significant? Indeed, is not the fate of Riel still thought to be a significant factor in the unity of Canada?

The report acknowledges there was a First World War. I have mentioned it at some length. Surely that was significant to Canada.

Most of us here know personally that there was a Second World War, and I think few of us would argue it was not significant to Canada. I shall have more to say on it in a moment. We also know there was a Korean conflict in which Canadians died under the flag of the United Nations, and that members of the Canadian armed forces took part in a number of peacekeeping operations—as indeed they still do.

If these events I have mentioned did in fact take place, and I believe there is no doubt they did, were they not all significant in Canada's history, both before and after Confederation? If so, what purpose is served by playing down their importance? Surely it is desirable to recognize that our present situation is the result of what happened in the past, be it good or bad, and the result of the deeds of courage and, also, I suppose, the deeds of less than courage, performed by so many who have gone before us. Surely there is no advantage in trying to persuade ourselves or others that Canada, unlike most nations, is a product of such completely peaceful evolution that Canadians are a special breed of pacifists the world ought to love for their own sake. Much as we would like it to be true, I suggest it is not, and we should not overlook these facts.

● (1530)

Canadians are different from all others and have a right to be proud of it, and should be. And if we were a little more proud of it and of our past, perhaps we would be a good deal better off today. But, honourable senators, surely Canada as we know it today is, nevertheless, in large part the result of conflict, outright war, uncontrolled passions, selfless sacrifice and tireless hard work, much as is the case with any other fairly new country. I submit that it does not do us any good to fail to recognize and acknowledge that fact.

Indeed, I find it very difficult to understand why so many Canadians try to paint a picture of us as a bland, quiet people who never have an adventurous or aggressive thought, and who prefer security to enterprise, when surely the opposite is true. I believe we are, and have been, as those who went before us were, adventurous, bold, assertive, vigorous, full-blooded people, but people with enough common sense to keep out of trouble if there is any reasonable way to do it.

One of our problems today, I believe, is that we have talked blandness and security so long that many of our people are beginning to believe it. I say: Let us stop it, let us do ourselves justice, let us recognize that we are a product of many good things, and many things not so good, but a product in total of which we have as much right to be proud as any other nation.

I now come for a moment to the Second World War, so often known as Hitler's war. I am sure nobody would say this was not significant to Canada. Forty-one thousand Canadians gave their lives in that war at Canada's request. This time our effort was more widely spread among the various parts of our armed forces, as well as more widely across the world. Our forces on the seas and in the air played a much greater part than was the case in the 1914-18 conflict, along with our troops on the ground. Many honourable members here saw service in that great conflict. Indeed, as Senator Macdonald so aptly pointed out, the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate commanded with distinction a Canadian warship in one of the most hazardous operations of the war.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Canada had the prime responsibility for a broad expanse of the North Atlantic and the skies above it. Canadian airmen fought in many theatres of operation. Canadian ground forces acquitted themselves with great ability and courage wherever they went.

Note this. In the First World War it was not until well on in the war years, with the rise of Sir Arthur Currie, that Canadian troops were even commanded by Canadian generals. But in the Second World War Canadians were commanded entirely by Canadian officers from the first at all levels of rank. Before that war was out, Canadian generals, served by Canadian staffs, from time to time commanded divisions of British, United States and Polish troops, as well as forces from Belgium, the Netherlands and Czechoslovakia. This truly was a mark of the high standing Canadians had won among the countries of the world, for countries do not entrust command of their troops in battle to those in whom they do not have confidence.

There was another significant development. Canada's participation in the Second World War had a striking effect on our industrial capacity. I am sure many senators will remember how in 1939 and 1940 it was being said that we could not manufacture the heavy equipment to support our troops in battle. I am equally sure that many members here will recall that under the dynamic leadership of that great Canadian, for whom I never voted but whom I always admired, C.D. Howe—

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Smith (Colchester):—we were soon able to supply our troops with the heaviest of battle equipment, which brought us into the age of heavy industrial production in a way which has affected us ever since.

The pictures which the report suggests should be removed remind us, it is true, of only one of the two major conflicts I have mentioned. It may be that, even if you agree with my general submission about the necessity to commemorate the great deeds of these conflicts, the pictures should be altered somewhat so as to remind us not only of what happened in the First World War and the Second World War, but also to give recognition to the various services as well as simply to what seems to be, in major portion, ground troops, although we should not interfere with the picture of the "ladies from hell" in the corner behind me to my left.

Honourable senators, I ask you, what circumstance of history more richly deserves lasting commemoration by those who claim to be representatives of the Canadian people in Parliament assembled than the circumstances and sacrifices I have just mentioned? What men and women gave more for Canada than these 100,000 who died for her? What is more important in all our history for us to commemorate here than those deeds and those sacrifices?

We are the Dead. Short days ago
We lived, felt dawn, saw sunset glow,
Loved and were loved, and now we lie,
In Flanders fields.
Take up our quarrel with the foe:
To you from failing hands we throw
The torch; be yours to hold it high.
If ye break faith with us who die
We shall not sleep, though poppies grow
In Flanders fields.

Or consider the words of Rupert Brooke:

Blow out, you bugles, over the rich Dead!
There's none of these so lonely and poor of old,
But, dying, has made us rarer gifts than gold.
These laid the world away; poured out the red
Sweet wine of youth; gave up the years to be

Of work and joy, and that unhopéd serene,
That men call age; and those who would have been,
Their sons, they gave, their immortality.
Blow, bugles, blow! They brought us, for our dearth,
Holiness, lacked so long, and Love, and Pain.
Honour has come back, as a king, to earth,
And paid his subjects with a royal wage;
And Nobleness walks in our ways again;
And we have come into our heritage.

● (1540)

Honourable senators, let us keep that memory fresh forever before us in these halls, described with such eloquence by the report. Let us do so by keeping these walls, with whatever changed design may be chosen, as something that reminds us forever, as long as the chamber shall stand, of these great sacrifices, these great milestones, in our history—milestones marked with the blood of Canadians.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, at this late hour I hesitate to hold the Senate for more than a few minutes. But, in the hope that this motion can pass before the end of this session, if no one else has any intention of speaking, I might make a few remarks.

Honourable senators, I am first of all constrained to say that as Senator Smith (Colchester) spoke, and so eloquently, I almost heard the steps of some very distinguished former members of this chamber who had served in the armed forces of our country. I think of people in particular like Senator Power, Senator George White, and many others of that vintage. They took a very dim view of any suggestion for the removal of any existing pictures from the walls of the Senate chamber. None of those distinguished gentlemen would have spoken as eloquently as Senator Smith (Colchester) has spoken of the sacrifice and the valour of Canadians in the First and the Second World Wars.

Having said that, first of all I would like to express my personal appreciation, and the appreciation, I am sure, of the members of the committee, for the comments made by various members of the Senate who have spoken to this motion, such as Senator Deschatelets, Senator Quart, Senator John Macdonald, Senator Carter, and finally, Senator Smith (Colchester).

If I were to single out the remarks of one particular senator with regard to the work proposed for the chamber, it would be those of Senator Macdonald. One of the things he said was that in the remodelling or changing of the interior of this chamber we should rely upon the elemental genuine things such as beautiful stone and beautiful wood. If we do we probably will succeed better than if we adopted something artificial or contrived.

Having said that, let me say that the committee's mandate was primarily to deal with windows. The recommendations in respect of the windows are very firm, and, I gather from the comments that have been made since the report was tabled and printed, favourably received. It was only incidentally that the committee had to talk about the other elements in the chamber such as the walls, the throne area, the dais, the lighting, and so on.

Senator Smith (Colchester) alluded to a section of the report which is to be found on page 854:

Most of the significant events of Canada's history have not been wars or revolutions or famines or plagues.

I think the honourable senator is quite right in the criticism that he makes of that sentence. The plain fact of the matter is that the words, "internal wars" should have been used. No one with any sense of Canadian history at all will denigrate the importance of the events involving armed conflict in the progress and the history of this country. From the very earliest of days down to the present time there have been significant changes in the social fabric of what is now Canada, which have resulted from armed conflict and from demonstrations of valour and of courage and from deeds written in blood. No one will say that these events, most of them having occurred offshore, and, having arisen out of offshore causes, were not events in which people who lived on the land mass of Canada have participated, or were events which have not had a tremendous effect upon our history. I do not think the Canadian people are forgetful of this, and I do not think that the removal of these pictures could leave senators or the Senate open to the charge that they do not appreciate the valour and the courage that has been shown by our people in this kind of conflict. But we have had it impressed upon us in the committee that there are other beautiful and significant and impressive memorials to the sacrifices that have been made in many wars in which Canadians have participated, and perhaps this is true particularly of the First and Second World Wars, in the Memorial Chamber in the tower of this building. This is a magnificent tribute to the soldiers, sailors, airmen, nurses and other people in other elements of the armed forces who served this country so magnificently. As well, there are monuments throughout the capital city to Canadians who participated in wars, in defence of the ideals of this country, such as the War Memorial just south of the East Block. We have in this city, too, a national war museum, and the witnesses who came before us said that these pictures might have even more significance if they were put with other memorabilia so as to commemorate in a significant and impressive way the contribution that has been made.

We have been told by these witnesses that in Parliament we should really be thinking about political and parliamentary processes and constitutional development, since it is with such development, and with economic progress and with social development, that Parliament is mainly concerned. Parliament is concerned with war, too, of course, and with preparation for war through provisions for the adequacy of the defences of this country. But Parliament need not be the memorial place for any one significant element in the continuing history of Canada.

● (1550)

Having said that, honourable senators, what I want to point out is this, that the report does not recommend that these pictures be removed forthwith. Nor does the report recommend that any significant change be made in respect of the dais or the throne area. The report does say, and what we recommend, is that there should be a theme developed for the windows in the clerestory of this chamber, that that theme should be the contribution of various ethnic peoples to Canadian society, not just the founding races as they are represented on the ceiling, but all the significant ethnic groups which constitute Canada. And when those people visit this place and when their descendants come here, whether French, English, Irish, Scots, Polish, German, Ukrainian, or what have you, they can look to the clerestory, see the symbols of their people, now Canadians, and they can say, "We are part of this land. In the halls of Parliament our people are represented. We belong; we are there." That is the symbolized proposal in the report.

The second proposal in the report is that there should be an interdepartmental committee set up to consider what other changes might have to be made to conform to the architecture of the chamber and to the changes that are going to be made, or that I hope will be made, in the windows. And what I say to Senator Smith is this, and this I think is an important recommendation of the report, that the members of this chamber at that time should have a significant voice in what is to be done. It may be that the senators at that time will say, "No, these pictures are to remain here forever." If they do, well and good. But it is the Senate—and the report makes this clear—which is the master of its precincts and of whatever is done here, and for any major change or alteration of the structure of the Senate, the senators themselves should pronounce upon it. It should not be a decision imposed by any outside group or by any interdepartmental committees, and it is recommended that the leaders on both sides of the house, whoever they may be at that time, should have a significant input into the work of any outside interdepartmental committee that might undertake this type of project.

Again I say that I hope, honourable senators, that you will not think that we were attempting to depict Canadians as milk and watery people, because internal wars and revolutions have not been the triggering element for many of the constitutional developments which have taken place in this country. It did happen in other countries. It was the American revolutionary war that set up that country; it was the Civil War that tore them apart later and resulted in constitutional change. We have not had this kind of development in Canada. The French revolution was another type of change that we were thinking of when considering the constitutional development of Canada. I think we had not sufficiently adverted to the question of how important armed conflict and the participation of Canadians in armed conflict through their history was to the development of that history. But I think if the milestones can be shown, then I think it will be apparent what kind of behaviour on the part of Canadians has led to the development of Canada.

Honourable senators, I cannot quote John McCrae or Rupert Brooke in this context, but I am so pleased to have Senator Smith do so in his. The views he has expressed shall be incorporated with the views of other honourable senators in a compendium of all the opinions expressed in the committee, in the report and in the speeches that have been made in this chamber. They will constitute a booklet which will be placed in the hands of the interdepartmental committee and of the Senate committee which might have to deal with this problem in the future. So at least at that time it will be known what senators of today thought about this chamber and about the changes which should be made.

I am most grateful indeed for the kind comments that have been made about the report. I thank honourable senators for their interest and for their attention to it. I hope the motion now can pass and perhaps some progress can be made, particularly about the windows.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the motion to adjourn:

Senator Perrault: I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, before the motion is put, I wonder if the Leader of the Government could indicate his assessment of the remaining business and the time span in which it might be accomplished.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the business before the house is moving forward rather well, and an approximate assessment of the situation would be that we should be able to complete our deliberations by Friday evening, and perhaps we could have royal assent at that time. This is, of course, barring unforeseen circumstances, and of course no restriction will be placed in any way on the participation of any senator in any debate.

The inquiry which I advanced this afternoon on the matter of the natural gas pipeline route may determine largely the time of completion of the business before the house, because a number of senators have indicated their desire to participate in that debate.

May I suggest to honourable senators that in view of the names coming forward for participation in the pipeline discussion, perhaps an agreement can be achieved to limit speeches to approximately 15 minutes. This is a matter which I hope to be able to discuss later with the Leader of the Opposition or his deputy.

Senator Macdonald: Perhaps 10 minutes would be better.

Senator Perrault: This is a matter which I think we should discuss, Senator Grosart, if it is your wish.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX "A"

(See p. 1213)

REPORT OF THE CANADIAN SECTION
ON THE EIGHTEENTH MEETING OF THE
CANADA-UNITED STATES INTER-PARLIAMENTARY GROUP

The Eighteenth Meeting of the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group took place in Victoria, British Columbia, May 27 to 31, 1977.

The United States delegation was led jointly by Senator William D. Hathaway (Maine) and Congressman Dante B. Fascell (Florida). In addition to the two Co-Chairmen, the delegation consisted of the following members:

Senate

Hon. Carl T. Curtis (Nebraska)
Hon. John A. Durkin (New Hampshire)
Hon. Mike Gravel (Alaska)
Hon. Patrick J. Leahy (Vermont)
Hon. Lee Metcalf (Montana)
Hon. Paul S. Sarbanes (Maryland)
Hon. Ted Stevens (Alaska)

House of Representatives

Hon. Edward P. Boland (Massachusetts)
Hon. John J. Cavanaugh (Nebraska)
Hon. James Cleveland (New Hampshire)
Hon. Sam M. Gibbons (Florida)
Hon. William F. Goodling (Pennsylvania)
Hon. James M. Hanley (New York)
Hon. Harold T. Johnson (California)
Hon. John J. LaFalce (New York)
Hon. Robert C. McEwen (New York)
Hon. Lloyd Meeds (Washington)
Hon. Larry Winn, Jr. (Kansas)

The Canadian delegation was led jointly by the Honourable Daniel Lang of the Senate and the Honourable Martin O'Connell, P.C., M.P., of the House of Commons. The Speaker of the Senate, the Honourable Renaude Lapointe accompanied the delegation in her capacity as an Honorary President of the Canadian Section.

The other members were:

Senate

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle (Ontario)
Hon. Jacques Flynn, P.C. (Quebec)
Hon. John Godfrey (Ontario)
Hon. Paul Lafond (Quebec)
Hon. Alan A. Macnaughton, P.C. (Quebec)
Hon. Josie Quart (Quebec)
Hon. George van Roggen (British Columbia)

House of Commons

Mr. Peter Bawden, M.P. (Alberta)
Mr. Herb Breau, M.P. (New Brunswick)
Miss Coline Campbell, M.P. (Nova Scotia)
Mr. Gaston Clermont, M.P. (Quebec)
Mr. Robert Daudlin, M.P. (Ontario)
Mr. Jake Epp, M.P., (Manitoba)
Mr. Stuart Leggett, M.P. (British Columbia)
Mr. David MacDonald, M.P. (Prince Edward Island)
Mr. Heath Macquarrie, M.P. (Prince Edward Island)
Mr. Alan Martin, M.P. (Ontario)
Mr. Donald Munro, M.P. (British Columbia)
Mr. Douglas C. Neil, M.P. (Saskatchewan)
Mr. Marcel Prud'homme, M.P. (Quebec)
Mr. Gilbert Rondeau, M.P. (Quebec)
Mr. Ian Watson, M.P. (Quebec)

Summaries prepared by the Canadian Section of the discussions held in the three Committees and the closing plenary discussion are attached herewith.

Respectfully submitted,

Daniel A. Lang
Co-Chairman

Martin O'Connell
Co-Chairman

OPENING SESSION

The meetings opened with a plenary session. Senator Daniel Lang, from the chair, welcomed the American delegates and called on the Speaker of the British Columbia Legislature. Speaking on behalf of the Province of British Columbia, the Honourable Edward Smith expressed satisfaction that the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group was meeting in Victoria.

The keynote address was given by the Honourable Martin O'Connell, Co-Chairman of the Canadian delegation. He commented on recent developments in domestic Canadian affairs and on the current state of Canadian relations with the United States. His statement, which served as a reference point throughout the Committee meetings, is attached as an annex.

Senator Hathaway, Co-Chairman of the United States Section responded in a general way to the broad statement from the Canadian Co-Chairman. On the relationship of Congress to the Administration, he confirmed that Congress is no longer a rubber stamp. Congress now takes a stronger initiative in legislation and is playing a determined role in foreign affairs.

This is now possible since committees of Congress are better staffed and better informed than previously.

COMMITTEE I—ENVIRONMENTAL ISSUES

1. Coastal Pollution Issues

- (a) East coast tanker hazards, Eastport
- (b) West coast tanker problems—Puget Sound, Kitimat, the 4-prong traffic control system, Trident submarine
- (c) Beaufort sea drilling risks
- (d) Possibilities or prospects of unilateral, bilateral or multilateral regulation

2. Great Lakes' Issues

- (a) Pollution Issues—PCB's, DDT, Upper Lakes (IJC) report
- (b) Progress under Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement
- (c) Levels, (implications of the Federal-Quebec report on the levels around Montreal)
- (d) Chicago diversion
- (e) Bilateral fishing problems

3. Trans-Boundary Pollution Issues

- (a) Garrison, Skagit, Dickey Lincoln Dam, St. John River, air pollution, Champlain-Richelieu, Flathead

4. Bilateral Implications of the 200-Mile Limit

- (a) Fisheries, hydrocarbons and the salt water boundaries

5. Seals

COASTAL POLLUTION ISSUES

(a) Eastport

The first item discussed by this committee was the proposed east coast oil refinery at Eastport, Maine. Canadian delegates emphasized the findings of a recent environmental and navigational survey which indicated that Eastport was the worst possible port site on the east coast with its extremely narrow approach through Head Harbour passage (1800' at one point), the risks of frequent fog, the dangerous currents and shoals in the area and the 60' tides in the Bay of Fundy. The region was not only an extremely rich fishing area but was important for historic, touristic and environmental reasons as well. The proposed use of 250,000 ton tankers constituted, in Canada's view, an unacceptable hazard and Canada considered itself able and prepared to impose stiff regulatory requirements on the size of the tankers coming through the passage. Such regulations might well make the Eastport operation economically impossible for the Pittston company.

An American participant pointed out that the Maine environmental authority had imposed Canadian approval as a pre-condition in allowing Pittston to proceed. He assured the meeting that the U.S. will accede if Canada says "no". The decision on the application permits now before U.S. and state regulatory agencies are expected shortly.

The U.S. spokesman raised the question of an alternative site, mentioning Machias Port, further down the coast, in particular. In the 60's when the environmental movement was very strong, a much tougher environmental commission had vetoed this site, but now in the light of the current situation it seemed feasible to reconsider Machias Port as it appeared to be less dangerous than Eastport.

(b) West Coast

In defending the plans for bringing supertankers to Puget Sound, an American spokesman underlined the need for the U.S. to get Alaska crude to the isolated refineries of the mid-west now being increasingly cut off from Canadian crude. The Alaska crude will be flowing later this year, he said. He outlined the various possibilities: Alaska crude could go to Los Angeles, to Puget Sound or to Kitimat. For various reasons, Puget Sound appeared to be the most feasible destination at the moment. From there, the oil could either be transported by a reversed Trans-Mountain pipeline to Edmonton and thence to the American mid-west or it could be transported by a pipeline entirely through the United States to these Northern Tier states. A Canadian spokesman pointed to a fourth alternative—for the oil to be transported by rail down through the Yukon and British Columbia to Cherry Point. He said that this possibility should not be dismissed as it was environmentally by far the safest and goods could be transported both ways.

A United States Congressman said that of the four existing refineries in Washington State, only one, Arco, has the capability of refining the "sour" Alaska crude at present while the three others are built for the "sweet" Canadian crude. He referred to the idea of off-loading further out at Port Angeles from whence the oil would be piped to the refineries inside. They would need to be converted to use the "sour" crude. The refineries were strenuously resisting this solution. Another complication was the Washington State legislation which prevented anything larger than a 120,000 ton tanker from coming into Puget Sound. A district court judged this law to be invalid—an unwarranted intrusion into another jurisdiction—and the case was now before the U.S. Supreme Court. The U.S. delegate said he himself thought the law probably did constitute an unwarranted intrusion as the 120,000 ton size limitation would make the operation economically unviable. This delegate also pointed out the implications of the change of governors in Washington State. A strong environmentalist governor had been replaced by a governor who had already tried to demonstrate how safe supertankers are by steering one herself through a narrow channel. He added that over $25 million was going to be spent at Cherry Point for off-loading facilities and also for sulphur processing to remove the sulphur from the heavy Alaskan crude.

Finally, this American delegate made the point that Canada, in its own interest, should recognize that the large new U.S. supertankers coming into Puget Sound were infinitely safer than some of the old vessels from a variety of registries which otherwise would have to bring oil into the area. They were also safer than the old tankers which brought oil to Portland, Maine, for eastern Canada thereby threatening the American east coast with pollution.

Canadian delegates re-emphasized their continuing and grave fears for the environmental disasters which could result from tankers coming into Puget Sound through the narrow channels and the San Juan Islands to the Cherry Point and Anacortes refineries. It was estimated that a single spill in Puget Sound could run into clean-up and damage costs of over $100 million. While it was recognized that Port Angeles was a preferable alternative oil port, an even more preferable one would be outside the danger area at Gray's Harbour.

In discussing the Kitimat alternative, the Canadian side explained that its feasibility was under examination and a formal inquiry had been launched to determine the environmental, social and navigational aspects. Canadian policy must await this further evidence. However, considering the long winding entry channel up to Kitimat, there were almost certainly considerable dangers of oil spills. An American delegate mentioned other possibilities for dealing with Alaska crude which included bringing oil around the Horn to the Gulf of Mexico refineries or through the Panama Canal, by smaller bottoms, to east coast or Gulf refineries.

The Committee then turned to questions of contingency oil spill plans, storage and access to clean-up equipment, liability for spills, compensation for damage traceable to oil spills and traffic safety and management schemes. Both sides agreed that it was important the two countries' systems of traffic control should mesh smoothly. The various navigational aids and radar monitoring control systems on both sides were discussed. The Canadian side pointed out that Canada was spending $16 million on navigational aids including the installation of five radar stations. While there was a voluntary vessel-tracking management system in existence now, Canada would like to see it made compulsory for all traffic to all ports including those on the Strait of Juan de Fuca.

It was understood that a joint contingency oil spill plan with the United States was already in place for the area. The delegates on both sides agreed that bilateral consultations should be intensified on other aspects including increased co-operative research, a compensation fund to ensure compensation for damage from oil spills, the establishment of liability for oil spills, standards of vessel construction and crew capability and a co-ordinated mandatory traffic control system. It was the consensus of the Committee that each delegation should impart a sense of urgency to its respective government in this matter with a view to reaching an early agreement.

President Carter's recent proposals for improved regulation of tanker traffic were discussed and a United States delegate said he thought that Congress would go along with these much more stringent rules for tanker safety. As far as the efforts at multilateral regulation through the Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO) were concerned it was generally agreed that the shipowners had had far too much influence in these conferences and had mitigated attempts to get stricter regulations on the part of coastal states.

TRIDENT SUBMARINE BASE

A Canadian delegate explained that while the Canadian government did not appear to be worried by the Trident Nuclear Submarine base at Bangor, Washington, he himself had serious concerns about the project. He expressed these in terms of environmental hazards, military and strategic locational dangers and navigational problems. He raised the question of the first strike capacity of the Trident and the possibility of retaliatory raids. An American delegate replied that Trident was not a targeted base because Tridents are not nuclear attack submarines. But in their capacity for delivering a nuclear second strike from their ocean-deep havens, they were very important as a deterrent. With it the United States had added millions of square miles of ocean to the Soviet Defence Department's area of surveillance, giving the Soviets the almost impossible task of keeping track of these extremely advanced submarines. Local environmental conditions have been fully taken into account in the construction of the base. For example, the piers of the base have been specially constructed so as not to interfere with the migrating salmon. The chance of nuclear accident at the base or resulting from a collision while in transit through Juan de Fuca would be remote in the extreme, because any nuclear devices would not be in an activated state at the base or while in transit through the strait.

GREAT LAKES ISSUES

The American delegation reported that swift progress was not being made by the United States to live to its commitments under the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. The required funds, $18 billion, had been appropriated and the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) was busy trying to clear projects as fast as possible. The three major problems remaining were acknowledged to be Detroit's sewage system and the industrial pollution from the Buffalo and Cleveland areas, affecting primarily Lake Erie. Under a recent pollution control measure, the EPA was not able to bring suit against such polluting authorities and had done so in at least one case.

Satisfaction was expressed by the Canadian side at the speed-up of the Great Lakes "clean-up" on the U.S. side. It was the hope that such progress would continue. Now that the required 5-year review of the Agreement was taking place it would provide both sides with an opportunity for a fresh commitment to attacking troublesome areas with strong action. A Canadian delegate said he understood that one of the reasons for frequent delay of water treatment projects on the American side was that the U.S. standards were quite rigidly prescribed and enforced resulting in legal actions and procedural delays before treatment plants could be built while the Canadian side had a more flexible discretionary power in the setting of effluent standards. It was thought that this variation was under discussion during the current bilateral review expected to be completed by October.

Industrial contaminants, especially mercury, PCBs and Mirex, were cited as posing serious health hazards to humans by polluting the fish of the Great Lakes, particularly Lake Ontario. An American delegate pointed out that he faced a problem in his district because Canada and the U.S. had not decided on similar levels for the acceptable limits of these pollutants. In some cases, such as for Mirex, the Canadian limit was less stringent than the American, but for PCBs, Canada had set a stricter standard. He hoped the competent authorities on both sides could get together to work out parallel levels for industrial pollutants in the Great Lakes.

In the discussion on levels of the Great Lakes, the serious problem of erosion in periods of high water levels was referred to as well as the IJC report on levels which had concluded that any major remedial action would involve high impractical costs. The problem of the St. Lawrence and Ottawa flows merging above Montreal was specifically mentioned and a Canadian delegate indicated that Canada and the Province of Quebec were co-operating on a plan that would provide more flexibility to the existing bottleneck above Montreal by impounding the waters of the upper Ottawa and improving the outflows through the Lachine Rapids.

Due to drier weather, it was clear there were no flooding or erosion problems on the lower lakes at present nor probably for the next two or three years. However, the Canadian delegate asked what measures the U.S. side was taking to prepare for another possible period of high water levels by land-use planning and management along the shorelines. He spoke of the need to zone, to keep people back from the shoreline, to map out "flood-use zones".

According to one United States delegate last year's Congressional legislation authorizing a demonstration project of diverting increased Lake Michigan water to flush Chicago sewage into the Mississippi system was an unexpected development to many in Congress. Money for the programme and a study of its effects on the Great Lakes had already been allocated. But he himself recognized that there were navigational and hydro concerns on both sides.

A Canadian participant replied that while Canada recognizes Lake Michigan is not a boundary water and therefore not under the treaty, Canada will almost certainly hold the United States legally responsible for loss of electric power generating capacity due to lower levels resulting in the other lakes. These losses could be great, he said. Further, he thought New York State would also sue for similar damages as their hydro capacity would be affected. Another Canadian delegate spoke of the difficulties and costs to shipping interests and referred to the IJC reference on the question. American participants concluded that in any case such a diversion would not be implemented by the United States in periods of low water as at present.

An American delegate spoke briefly on the idea of extending the navigation period in the lakes by keeping a channel open during winter months. While there were obvious advantages, he recognized certain problem areas and in particular questioned whether such a project might not seriously curtail the flow of water at the Moses-Saunders and Beauharnois dams. Certainly a careful modelling of the project would be needed before proceeding.

BEAUFORT SEA

The discussion on Canadian drilling in the Beaufort in this Committee centred on the severe environmental risks involved and whether Canada was justified in going ahead in the face of such risks. (Beaufort drilling was also raised in Committee III during the energy discussion.)

A Canadian spokesman initiated the discussion by acknowledging and detailing the risks of drilling from ships in this Arctic area. Among other aspects, he recounted the dangerous drilling conditions in the Beaufort Sea in the interim zone where the gyral action of the polar ice pack makes contact with the land-anchored annual ice. Also there was the extremely short period of available drilling time in any given summer. Canada's environmental studies of this project examined its feasibility with the worst possible conditions in mind including the possibility that a blow-out at the end of one year's drilling could not be controlled at the time of blow-out nor even the next year because of severe ice conditions entailing the possibility of a 2-year blow-out under the ice. The study had concluded that such an oil spill in the Arctic would not constitute a danger to the climate but could impose great potential damage on wildfowl, seal herds, Arctic fox and other wild species. Despite this, Canada had decided to go ahead and allow restricted drilling last year, and might well decide to go ahead this year. However, the Canadian delegate emphasized that it was a highly regulated drilling operation and a series of steps had been taken to protect against the risks. There had also been full consultation with the United States. It was pointed out that while the recent blow-out in the Norwegian North Sea oil fields occurred at a functioning, producing well, the Beaufort drillings were exploratory and more care and precautions were being taken constantly in the latter situation.

A Senator from Alaska expressed the concerns his state had over these drillings. If there were a catastrophe it would spoil the chances for everyone to drill later; an oil spill would "stain" the north in an unacceptable way; and if an oil spill caused a dangerous interruption to the food chain he foresaw a revolt in the Eskimo lands. His main emphasis, however, was that there was, as yet, no acceptable and proven technology as to how to get the oil out. This technology ought to be proven before drilling commences. Alaska had delayed any such offshore drilling from ships until 1978 or 1979. The Alaska companies require and will undoubtedly find the technology to get the oil to shore. He spoke of the problems of the pack ice turning end-over-end in huge blocks. This and scouring would sever any connections to shore. "Sub-sea completions" would appear to be necessary to recover the oil. The Senator also wondered if Canada really needed the oil so urgently that it felt compelled to drill precipitously within dangerous areas. Finally, he proposed a Joint Commission of Arctic states to discuss the problem of Beaufort drilling.

In reply a Canadian participant said he doubted that recovery techniques could or would be devised under simulated conditions as opposed to a situation where oil discoveries had actually been made and needed to be recovered. Furthermore, Canada needed to find out if oil was there. The United States side said it would assume it was there and develop the recovery technology first.

The timetable and techniques for dealing with a possible Beaufort Sea blow-out were discussed. Both sides recognized the problem of drilling relief wells when the drilling season was so short. There was a consensus of opinion that the time-frame allowed by the Canadian government for the drilling of such relief wells should be lengthened, even at the expense of the actual time allowed for drilling exploration wells.

SEALS

The Canadian side raised the question of the recent Congressional resolutions which had urged Canada to reassess its policy toward the annual seal hunt. A Canadian Senator set forth the facts of the case: that the annual quota will permit the seal herd to increase, (the 1977 quota is 170,000), that the method of killing has been scientifically judged to be humane, perhaps more humane than the killing of U.S. seals on the Pribiloff Islands; and that the annual seal hunt was an economic requirement both for the Newfoundland fishermen and for the food chain. A huge increase in the seal population would result in diminished cod (on which they feed) and therefore seal population control was necessary. The spokesman added that there was no doubt that the vociferous protest groups who had organized protests on this issue had benefitted considerably in financial terms from it. He reminded the United States side that Canada had offered the State Department to send qualified scientists to brief interested congressmen on the facts before the final vote but the offer was not taken up.

An American Congressman spoke of the difficulty of preventing such condemnatory resolutions. In this case, in the Senate at least, it had been by voice vote with only a handful of Senators present. However, he found it difficult to imagine how, even if there had been a full Senate, such an environmental "motherhood" issue would fail to pass.

GARRISON DAM

A Canadian delegate reviewed some of Canada's objections to the Garrison project and expressed satisfaction at President Carter's action in February to restrict funding and to modify the project considerably to meet Canadian concerns. Reference was made to the already completed International Joint Commission Board's report and to the forthcoming report of the IJC itself awaited in July. In addition, the Canadian spokesman mentioned the helpful action of Congressman Fassel in supporting the Canadian position particularly in regard to the Lonetree Dam and reservoir problem. The Canadian side asked what the exact situation was at present.

In reply, the American delegate said that the United States had given its assurance that the Lonetree Dam would not be proceeded with until the IJC was heard from this summer. A lawsuit by the Audubon Society was likely to hold things up further. In any case after the McClusky Dam was finished there would be no further construction until a U.S. environmental impact statement was drawn up and the project resubmitted to Congress. Another delegate stated that while the House Appropriations Committee had recommended $18 million be spent on continued work in 1978 it was recognized that this must wait the IJC report.

Despite these assurances, another United States participant warned that there was a Congressional-Presidential battle brewing on water projects, and stated "you're not out of the woods yet" in respect to Garrison. He thought the whole issue would have been managed better if the President had stayed out of it initially. An American Senator also predicted a real row, perhaps a Senate revolt, on this matter.

SKAGIT

A United States Congressman reviewed the main facts in the Skagit valley/Ross dam case: the earlier approval obtained by Seattle to raise the dam and flood 9 miles into Canada; the agreement between British Columbia and Seattle whereby Seattle agreed to pay compensation for such proposed flooding—over $1 million has already been paid; the B.C. request to rescind the earlier approval order; and the on-and-off discussions between Seattle and B.C. over the past three years to try to settle the problem. This delegate suggested that the present B.C. government was more willing to negotiate than the previous government but now a new element had been added—the less understanding attitude of the new Governor of the State of Washington, who wanted to move ahead quickly and raise the dam. The U.S. participant pointed out Seattle's urgent need for increased power and suggested that there were environmental concerns whether it was generated by nuclear, coal or dam methods. Seattle was becoming impatient on this issue. One solution he suggested was that B.C. should give Seattle some of its surplus hydro—specifically by giving it to the Bonneville system and the Bonneville System would transfer the same amount to Seattle City & Light. In any event, the original contract should be honoured.

A Canadian participant stressed the opposition of people in the Lower Mainland of B.C. to the idea of flooding the valley, on environmental grounds. He said the reason for the previous B.C. government's slowness to negotiate was the need to wait to see if the Federal Power Commission would give Seattle the necessary authority to raise the dam. Canada recognized that a commitment had been given in 1967. This delegate suggested that the solution should be found in negotiations between B.C. and Seattle.

The Committee agreed that the interested parties should renew negotiations to see if a mutually satisfactory solution could be reached which would be mindful of both the Canadian environmental concerns in the Skagit valley as well as the urgent needs of the city of Seattle for additional power. It was also clear that individual Committee members on both sides would, on their own, be free to try to move the issue forward with the interested parties.

A brief off-shoot discussion took place as to the possibility of a continental water-sharing scheme. Could Yukon waters be channelled south, one American delegate inquired. Reference was made to the need for the respective governments to identify the scope of the problem. A Canadian delegate said that, at present, political difficulties in Canada could be created by the transfer southward of water resources which would be difficult to turn off if they were subsequently needed in Canada.

DICKEY-LINCOLN

While a previous U.S. President had once cancelled the Dickey-Lincoln dam project on the upper Saint John river, an American senator said there was now renewed interest in it as a power source. Approximately $700,000 had been appropriated for an Environmental Impact Study (EIS) which should be completed at the end of the year. However, he suggested that the EIS report, even if negative, would "not have enough teeth in it" and the U.S. Corps of Engineers might just go ahead. He acknowledged the point expressed by a Canadian delegate who said that since 5,000 acres of Quebec land would be flooded permission of Canada was required.

This Canadian delegate referred to the problem of water quality in the Saint John river and she suggested that no developments should go ahead until a complete environmental assessment had been done on the effects in the whole basin. She also referred to the recent IJC report recommending a bilateral water quality agreement for the Saint John River basin.

It was generally agreed that the IJC should not wait for the results of the American EIS report for the US side but should go ahead now and examine the effects of developments on the entire basin concurrently. As an interesting sideline to this discussion, the U.S. side also explained how, in administrative terms, a rare species of snapdragon, the furbish lousewort found in the Saint John river area, could prevent the Dickey-Lincoln project from going ahead.

CHAMPLAIN-RICHELIEU

An American senator stated that an environmental study of the effects of water level changes from flood control measures on the Richelieu River was about to begin and $400,000 has already been committed. The United States position was that construction of the proposed fixed weir structure on the river should be postponed until such time as the study was completed. A Canadian participant spoke of the problems of flood damage in Quebec along the river in recent years and the need for some control measure. Various recreational and other pressure groups on both sides were making the problem more complicated and it was acknowledged that the levels of Lake Champlain was an important factor. As the final report of the IJC was due in December 1977, it was concluded that the best thing would be to await its recommendations to both governments.

FLATHEAD

An American delegate set forth the fears—particularly in Montana—that the potential development of coal deposits in the Cabin Creek area of southeastern B.C. would pollute the Flathead River, a designated "wild and scenic river" in Montana. This Congressman recognized that the Boundary Waters Act did not protect against degradation of waters and he wondered if the provisions should be tightened. He inquired if the B.C. regulations prohibited water degradation. The Canadian spokesman replied that the B.C. guidelines for coal development were quite stringent. Furthermore, there were many B.C. environmentalists who were as concerned as the Americans about this project. He pointed out that while this area had to be strip-mined to be economic, there were other rich coal deposits in the province which might have higher priority for development.

There was a brief discussion as to whether the IJC's jurisdiction should be increased and extended to include water quality and air pollution along the whole border and not merely limited, as this aspect of its jurisdiction is at present, to the Great Lakes. It was pointed out by one delegate that this might involve an amendment of the Boundary Waters Treaty which could be difficult to obtain. Delegates agreed that discussions should take place soon between both countries to determine whether and when to expand IJC jurisdiction to include water quality and air pollution.

THE 200-MILE LIMIT—BOUNDARIES ISSUES

As time was short, there was only a brief discussion of the serious fisheries jurisdiction and maritime boundary problems which had become more acute since both countries had extended to 200 miles their fisheries jurisdiction.

On the east coast, the fisheries zone boundaries dispute centered on the rich fishing grounds off Georges Bank, where the jurisdictional claims of both sides overlapped. While negotiations were continuing, a reciprocal bilateral fisheries agreement had been signed which permitted the fishermen of each country to fish off the coasts of the other during 1977. In so far as the question of the maritime boundary itself was concerned, Machias Seal Island in the Gulf of Maine appears to be a central problem. Both sides claimed possession and were in dispute as to how to draw the extension of the boundary seaward, by the median line principle as Canada maintained or by a line following the natural prolongation of U.S. territory as the United States claimed. When a Canadian delegate proposed that Canada might go to third party arbitration on the issue at the end of this year, if it were not settled, an American senator said he thought it would be wiser to try to settle it for another year before going to such arbitration.

On the west coast, the U.S. side pointed out that the fishing jurisdictional problems are complicated by the salmon rights of the Indian population and the international pattern of the salmon runs themselves. The two governments were trying to negotiate a separate salmon treaty but there was evident bad feeling on the part of the fishermen on both sides. Alaskan fishermen were taking a good deal of Canadian-bound salmon, a U.S. delegate admitted. A United States senator suggested that perhaps a regional council including all the interested parties from the province should be formed to seek regional solutions to regional problems, instead of going to Ottawa and Washington. He explained that such a body had worked well in Alaska. For such a body, in the U.S., delegates are nominated by the states but results of negotiations have the force of federal regulations. Not all the Committee agreed with this proposal.

In respect to the maritime boundary dispute, it was concluded that both countries should use all appropriate mechanisms to find solutions as quickly as possible in accordance with the principles of international law. It was important, the delegates agreed, that neither side should take unilateral action.

DEEP SEABED MINING

Just as the meeting was drawing to a close, a Canadian delegate raised the question of deep-seabed mining and the current Law of the Sea negotiations. He pointed out that the United States appeared to be ready to go ahead this summer unilaterally and authorize applications from private sector mining interests to begin exploiting the valuable nodules on the sea bottom. But the Law of the Sea conference was still trying urgently to work out a multilateral solution reflecting the notion of the seabed as the "common heritage of mankind" and to make it subject to a kind of international management. The Canadian spokesman urged the United States not to act precipitously; by moving unilaterally now he feared they would destroy the chances of creating a new far-reaching and unique concept of sharing in the international community. The attainment of a consensus was pretty close at the present time. He feared what might happen without some international authority.

An American spokesman replied that he did not consider the United States was moving too fast. There was a sense of frustration in the United States about the Law of the Sea. There appeared to be officials who were becoming self-perpetuating professional negotiators whose main interest seemed to be to keep negotiating. This had to stop. The United States mining interests considered they were being held hostage by the Group of 77. This delegate referred to the Truman doctrine which had stated that the United States should use the deep sea resources beyond 200 miles. The present Metcalf bill in the Senate would grant such authority. Furthermore, he thought the structure of the proposed international authority to be created to manage licensing was so elaborate and top-heavy as to be out of the question. Such a mechanism would have to be kept within the United Nations machinery. Even so, he concluded that he did not believe the international regime was acceptable on Capitol Hill.

COMMITTEE II—TRADE AND ECONOMIC ISSUES

Bilateral Trade Problems

- (a) Automotive trade
- (b) Tourist trade

(c) Non-tariff barriers: quotas, DISC, countervailing, and Canadian regional subsidies

The St. Lawrence Seaway Tolls

Cross-Border Workers

Arab Boycott

Cuba

Developments in the Cross-Border Investment Climate

(a) Provincial jurisdiction in resource area: potash

(b) F.I.R.A.

(c) Access to U.S. capital markets for borrowing

AUTOMOTIVE TRADE

The discussion of the auto pact was opened by a Canadian participant who gave a brief summary of the operation of the pact since its inception. While it had worked to the mutual advantage of both countries there was concern on the Canadian side about the continuing deficit on auto parts. This was exacerbated by the fear that the American production of parts for small cars was increasing in the South and South-West United States where labour costs were low. The pact was not in need of a complete over-haul but could benefit from some fine tuning.

An American responded with a call for patience. The entire auto industry in North America is in difficulty from increased sales of foreign cars, unemployment problems and the effect of the energy crisis. It should be remembered that the auto pact is the largest bilateral trade agreement between industrial nations. He gave a detailed account of the negotiations and terms of the pact. A feeling persisted in the United States that the pact favoured Canada. The report of the U.S. International Trade Commission on the auto pact requested by the U.S. Senate Finance Committee found that the pact operated in favour of Canada but not to a sufficiently significant degree to require immediate re-negotiation. He was not aware of any study on the effect of the auto pact on jobs in either country, but felt that such a study was important and should precede any modification of the pact. He concluded that he did not sense a grass-roots concern about the pact in either country, and reiterated his view that while no drastic changes were required, it was important that the impact of the auto pact on employment be studied. This position was supported in various ways by other American participants who confirmed that minor tinkering with the pact could be carried on but if the pact was opened for re-negotiation the result would not be more advantageous for either side. There is a high protectionist sentiment in the U.S. now, the highest ever experienced by one participant, which would affect any re-negotiation. There is pressure on the pact from the efforts in the U.S. to try to achieve full employment. One area for adjustment might be a reconsideration of the permitted percentage for third country components.

Canadian participants acknowledged the overall benefit which Canada had received from the auto pact. While the expected parity on price to the Canadian buyer had not come about, the Canadian price which was 16 per cent higher when the pact came into force had been reduced to a price which was now 6 per cent higher than the American price. They reiterated that there was serious concern in Canada about the parts deficit, particularly because the executive decision on models and therefore on parts is made in the boardrooms in Detroit. Canadian subsidiaries do not get the benefit of the research and development in technology in this field of manufacture. A substantial number of jobs in Canada had been lost because of the deficit on parts. There is concern that the Canadian industry share in the development and production of new models to meet the energy crisis. This concern was related to a wider one that the manufacturing industry as a whole in Canada maintain its competitive position. The North American auto industry is already behind Japan and Germany in technology. The big four auto companies must put less emphasis on world distribution and more on research and development to benefit the entire North American operation.

Finally, this discussion led to a generalized exchange on the Canadian economic situation. A Canadian stressed that Canada cannot continue to cover its deficit in trade by depending on the profit from resource development. Canadian sentiment, particularly in the West, is strongly directed toward upgrading primary processing and increasing manufacture of finished products. This sentiment is related to the national unity debate. An American participant asked if the Canadian dollar was over-valued, noting that the circumstances which led to the over-evaluation and eventual fall of the American dollar appeared to exist in Canada at the present time. There had been gentle interventions in the U.S. to stabilize the situation. A Canadian indicated that action was being taken to smooth out the effect of inflation, and other factors on the dollar by the Bank of Canada.

TOURIST TRADE

The discussion of recent changes in U.S. tax legislation limiting allowable deductions for attendance to two foreign conventions per year and its effect on the Canadian tourist industry was opened by an American participant. He sought clarification of Canadian tax regulations relating to conventions. Another American participant gave the background to the U.S. tax change. It had been initiated to prevent open abuse of the general tax concession on convention expenses particularly by professional associations who liked to travel. It was an attempt to deal with blatant tax evasion. A Canadian delegate suggested that the application of the new rules solely to foreign conventions implied that fraud only happened outside the U.S.A. Another Canadian argued that the documentation required to support a claim would inhibit planning of conventions outside the U.S. by organizations with membership in both countries. It would be assumed that Canadians would go to conventions held in the U.S. anyway. The widespread injury already felt by the Canadian tourist industry was documented in detail by other Canadian participants.

An American participant explained that documentation is a fixed requirement of the U.S. tax code and was required for claims for all business expenses. This would not necessarily influence a decision to attend a convention outside the U.S.A. It was possible that the allowable per diem expense rate had been set too low but it had been related to the amount allowed in civil service travel claims. The provisions of the legislation were reasonable in his view.

The discussion then moved to a consideration of how the unintended injury resulting from this legislation could be ameliorated. An American participant indicated that other problems in the administration of the legislation had arisen which would lead to reconsideration of it but not immediately. There was no strong support for a change, particularly because the well publicized Goldwater amendment carried an implication of special consideration being requested for warm weather junkets.

Various solutions were discussed. Several American delegates argued that it would not be acceptable to local Chambers of Commerce and other hospitality trade interests to apply the restriction also to conventions held in the U.S. The only objections raised in the U.S. to the present legislation had been from the air lines and some convention promoters. Canadian delegates were reluctant to press for exemptions solely for Canada. It was unfortunate that there had been no opportunity to draw the attention of Congress to the potential injury to Canadian tourist interests before the legislation passed.

An American participant felt that Canada had a special relationship as a neighbour of the U.S.A. and should, therefore, not be reluctant to seek an exemption. The attempt made in the Senate, through the Goldwater amendment to effect a change for Canada and other neighbours, had encouraged the lobbyists for the interests affected by the Canadian Bill C-58 to attempt to link changes they wished in the Canadian legislation to the convention tax changes. In his view, they could not be linked. Canadian participants confirmed that C-58 was now law and would not be changed. Pressure to change C-58 had been minimal until it was linked by the lobbyists to the convention tax.

Other American participants, however, argued strongly that linkage of the two bills would be made in Congress and its Committees. This reality had to be faced by Canadians. This view was reiterated when two American participants from another Committee joined in the discussion.

A Canadian delegate said that in his opinion C-58 had not been the proper vehicle to use to promote Canadian culture. A complete reassessment of Canadian policy on control of the broadcast media was required and would be undertaken by the CRTC in the near future. An American participant questioned the cultural justification for Bill C-58. He was assured by a Canadian spokesman that the intention of the restrictions on advertising in the United States contained in C-58 had been motivated by concern for Canadian cultural development. Our cultural concerns frequently did intrude on U.S. commercial interests. Another Canadian participant referred to the case before the Canadian courts dealing with the deletion of advertising from transmissions received from the U.S. by cable. The outcome of this case might help to clarify the whole issue.

In connection with the powers of the CRTC, an American participant told the Committee an application had been made by Station CJOH in Ottawa which would have the effect of removing signals from television stations in Plattsburg and Watertown N.Y. entirely from the Ottawa cable system. Station CJOH would be given exclusive rights to pick-up network broadcasts directly by way of Rochester. Canadian advertising contracts with the Plattsburg and Watertown stations would undoubtedly be cancelled. Future developments might include using microwave to relay the Rochester signal to Toronto and onward across Canada with all advertising originating in the U.S. eliminated. In his view, in this action, the CRTC was going beyond mere concern to protect Canadians from cultural penetration from the U.S.

The discussion concluded with a consideration of the suggestion that friction on the two issues of the convention tax and C-58 might be reduced if they were considered during the renegotiation of the tax treaty between the two countries. The committee agreed that delegates from each country would explore this possibility with appropriate members of their administrations.

NON-TARIFF BARRIERS

A Canadian participant introduced this topic. The development of DREE (Department of Regional Economic Expansion) was a response to the wide and unacceptable regional disparities in Canada and not to the development of DISC (Domestic International Sales Corporation) in the United States. DREE was in his view a valid attempt to move industry into areas in Canada where only primary industry existed. Many interested groups in Canada urged protection. In the field of agriculture, he cited the beef products lobby which argues that Canada should have a beef control act. The fruit and vegetable group were vocal in demanding protection of their market from seasonal dumping from the U.S. A national marketing board for eggs was another example.

An American participant commented that in his opinion the introduction of DISC had been ill-considered. In addition to Canada, the GATT also had objections to DISC. Canada and the U.S. were working together closely at the GATT Multilateral Trade Negotiations to get rid of non-tariff barriers. On DREE he considered that if the Michelin plant had been located elsewhere it could have been ignored by the U.S. which also has DREE-type legislation. DISC had increased the U.S. export trade, but trade had also increased because revaluation made the U.S. dollar more competitive. Another American participant supported DISC. He explained that DISC was conceived at a time when U.S. companies were locating an increasing number of factories outside the continental U.S.A. Through DISC a tax incentive was provided to keep manufacturing operations and therefore jobs in the U.S.

A Canadian participant turned the discussion to countervail which he said hurt Canada more than DISC because it affected Canadian efforts to decentralize industrial production. Canada has not used countervail against the U.S. In reply an American delegate noted that countervail is one of the oldest U.S. laws.

Another Canadian deplored the lack of countervail action by Canada. He had often complained to officials that no order-in-council regulations had been promulgated to enforce countervail action. Regulations were finally announced in April of this year and are much like those in the United States. When an injury is established it must be investigated by the Anti-Dumping Tribunal. In Canada the sector approach was stressed rather more than in the U.S. On GATT he acknowledged the closeness of Canada and the U.S. on a number of issues but stressed that Canada was concerned with the U.S. across-the-board action. Non-tariff barriers should also come down or they will defeat the tariff reductions won at GATT. Canada is particularly sensitive to the impact of the U.S. NTBs because there is concern that the industrial base in Canada is being eroded. This is emphasized by the demand in Western Canada that it must now be assisted to move on to the next stage of economic development. Another Canadian participant noted that there was a problem about the diversification of Canadian industry much of which was flabby because it was propped up by various forms of assistance.

American participants asked the Canadians to indicate what could be done. One suggestion from the Canadian side was that more cooperation on the development of North American markets would be helpful. For example, the cattle market should operate to a much greater extent on a north-south basis. There is pressure to carry out the secondary processing of beef in the West but the north-south market for this is affected by the 15% U.S. tariff on boxed beef.

An American delegate responded that the U.S. western states also are thwarted in their attempts to carry out secondary processing, in their case by U.S. unions which refuse to handle boxed beef in Chicago and other large cities. This, he felt would have to change because boxed beef would be the main trade of the future. He explained that the U.S. meat quota had not been aimed at Canada but primarily at the Australian export of frozen sides into the U.S.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY TOLLS

A Canadian participant introduced the discussion of the proposed increase in the St. Lawrence Seaway tolls by reviewing the background to the development of the system in which 13 of the 15 locks are Canadian. He outlined the present financial difficulties which have given impetus to the proposed revision of the toll charges.

An American participant agreed that there should be periodic adjustments to the charges. He sought, and was given by the Canadian side, additional information on the recent action taken in Canada to forgive the interest on the outstanding debt. He saw two possible results if the tolls were raised unrealistically. Seaway traffic might be diverted to other modes of transport or to an all-American waterway. He referred to the recent appropriation for a feasibility study on the widening of the old Erie barge canal. There was also some concern in the U.S. about Canadian provincial interests affecting the operation of the Seaway, especially Quebec. Another U.S. participant underscored these observations. U.S. steel mills would seek out the cheapest way to move their output. The Canadian calculations on the amount of increased revenue from tolls required to operate the system could be seriously thrown off by any diversion of traffic from the Seaway.

Canadian delegates argued that the cost of transport on alternate modes like railways would also rise. The amount of traffic lost to the Seaway for this reason was not anticipated to be great. The two-way traffic on the Seaway made diversion of traffic to other modes less likely.

An American participant concluded the discussion noting that on this issue dollars and cents, not principles were involved. An agreement on increased tolls for the 1978 season would undoubtedly be reached. He was concerned, however, about the future of the Seaway, especially with the adequacy of the Welland system to cope with future traffic. Could it and the St. Lawrence section be modified to accommodate larger ships? If so, how would this be financed? The answers would not necessarily depend on where the expanded facilities were located.

CROSS-BORDER WORKERS

The discussion on this topic centred on the long standing tradition of some employers in Maine and Vermont to employ workers from Quebec in the logging industry. In recent months, pressure has been increased by union-organized American woodsmen to discourage employers from continuing this practice. An American participant introduced the topic with the observation that when U.S. unemployment statistics rise they send shock waves through the bureaucracy. The certification process to permit workers to be employed in the U.S. has in recent years become very complex. The extensive paper-work involved makes it very difficult for workers to enter the U.S. from Canada. As employment statistics improve, the rules are less rigidly adhered to. However, even in times of unemployment U.S. workers are reluctant to move to areas where work is available. As a result, some logging and woods operations have continued to employ Canadian workers for certain skills. Another U.S. participant reviewed the current situation in more detail. He acknowledged that the situation in Maine was a U.S. problem but the solution to it was difficult. He explained some of the objections raised by American workers. Canadians are paid wages comparable to U.S. workers but provide their own equipment, the purchase of which is assisted by the provincial government. Under U.S. regulations an employer cannot require a worker to provide his own equipment. Canadians are frequently employed on a piece-work basis which increases production. U.S. workers have campaigned for employment on an hourly wage basis on the grounds that piece-work encourages carelessness. He wondered if Canada would be distressed if access to work in the U.S. woods by Canadian workers was sharply curtailed.

A Canadian participant responded that in his view, which was supported by other Canadian delegates, limiting work permits for Canadians to work in the U.S. was not likely to become an irritant to Canada-U.S. relations. He said that in any case the total numbers of cross-border workers going to the U.S. from Canada were decreasing. As both countries were reluctant to permit this activity to any extent, there were few new or young workers asking for permits.

He touched on another aspect of cross-border traffic, a localized problem in South-Western Ontario where Mexican workers in transit through the U.S. with firm contracts of employment in Canada had been refused permission to exit from the U.S. He understood the U.S. concern about possible illegal residents but when transients possessed a valid contract their travel documents should be honoured.

ARAB BOYCOTT

A United States participant reviewed the recent U.S. legislation relating to the application of the Arab boycott to U.S. commercial interests. He said that the legislation is not written in country terms, but in broad terms. While it clearly recognizes that the boycotting country has a right to initiate a direct primary boycott, it prohibits compliance with secondary and tertiary boycotts which are viewed as a direct intrusion into U.S. internal trading activities. The regulations giving force to this legislation have not yet been promulgated so the effect of the legislation would not be known for about six months. They include criminal penalties to be applied if compliance with secondary or tertiary boycotts by U.S. companies is proved.

Various Canadian participants explained that while Canada had not adopted formal legislation to deal with the Arab boycott, Canadian policy had been clearly stated by the Minister for External Affairs in October 1976. Canada also accepts primary rights to boycott but finds secondary and tertiary boycotts instigated by any country to be obnoxious. In support of this policy a directive had been issued to all officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce instructing them to withhold all departmental support for services in connection with a specific transaction by any Canadian company complying with the provisions of any boycott. (Copies of the directive were distributed to U.S. participants.) Our motivation was the same as the U.S. but it was not usual in Canada to formulate legislation to deal with this kind of issue.

Another Canadian participant stated his private view that sometimes legislation is an important way to deal with an issue. He gave examples of legislation on combines and human rights. On the Arab boycott he wondered why this had only recently become an issue. The boycott had been in effect for some time. It might be seen in a different light if the boycott was accepted as arising from a state of war. It then became an act of citizenship to prevent economic aid being given to the enemy. In his view the informal European approach to the boycott was better. The action taken by Canada and the U.S. against the boycott could destroy their positions of impartiality toward the participants in a war.

A U.S. spokesman replied that he could not accept this interpretation. The U.S. bill does not deal with the Arab-Israeli situation specifically. It provided a protective shield. The sanction of law had been provided to protect the competitive position of those U.S. firms who refused to comply with the boycott.

Delegates from both countries agreed that trade with the Arab world was important to each. A U.S. participant stressed that even so no intrusion into U.S. commerce of the kind implied in the secondary and tertiary boycott activity could be allowed. It was admitted that while symbolically the U.S. had to move against the boycott there were practical difficulties arising from the trade situation in doing so. The general feeling was that the U.S. legislation would stop gross applications of the boycott. The line had been moved back a bit. One U.S. participant said he was not arguing that Canada should have gone further but he wondered if the enforcement of our policy would achieve anything.

The discussion then turned to the application of the U.S. policy to subsidiaries. It applies to all U.S. subsidiaries involved in inter-state commerce. Canadian participants asked if the U.S. law would be applied to Canadian subsidiaries of U.S. companies or would the Canadian guidelines become operational? A U.S. participant was of the opinion that U.S. parent firms would be responsible for actions of the Canadian subsidiaries. It was the view of the Canadian who concluded the discussion that after the U.S. law had been in force long enough to judge its effect, Canada might have to look at its policy again.

CUBA

The discussion of the present state of relations with Cuba began with a comparison of the impact of U.S. legislation restricting trade with Cuba on the activities of Canadian subsidiaries with the Arab boycott legislation. On Cuba, Canada took independent action. Canada did not equate recognition of Cuba with moral approval. Canada had tried to be consistent in its relations. The objective was to open doors regardless of ideologies.

Various U.S. participants indicated that the U.S. had not been upset by Canadian action. Some normalization of trade between the U.S. and Cuba should soon begin. At first it would be one way trade in agricultural items and medicines. The U.S. was in a dilemma about how to move forward in its relations with Cuba. It would take time to work out a policy. Cuban involvement in Africa would affect the direction taken. Cuba was not a high agenda item for the Carter administration. The role being played by Andrew Young on behalf of the Carter administration was explored.

A Canadian participant concluded the discussion by observing that because of the volatile situation in Africa any delay in improving communication between the U.S. and Cuba would be regrettable.

DEVELOPMENTS IN THE CROSS-BORDER INVESTMENT CLIMATE

(b) Foreign Investment Review Act (FIRA)

A Canadian participant outlined the background to this legislation and described the change in regulations which was made in March of this year to speed up the processing of applications. It was stressed that Canada is still interested in receiving foreign investment. In fact there had been some resentment toward FIRA in Quebec because Quebec needs investment. Another Canadian added that FIRA was more popular in central Canada. In the west it was viewed as supportive of central Canadian industry. It was thought that the operation of FIRA had impeded the development of secondary industry in the west. As legislation, it should be reviewed.

(c) Access to U.S. capital markets for borrowing

The discussion of this topic was opened by a U.S. participant who commented that the U.S. press had recently given prominence to stories about numerous corporate transfers out of Quebec. The Canadian response was that this had been overstated in the press.

A U.S. participant thought that U.S. investment would continue to be made in Canada. For Canada the price of borrowing might be high, but U.S. investors go where they can make money. Investment, however, was the prerogative of the private sector in the U.S. Those present were perhaps not the best group to answer concerns about investment. Congress tended to be more concerned about trends towards controls like that implied in FIRA and the trend to move control of resource development to the public sector as in the example of potash in Saskatchewan.

This concluded the discussion of the agenda items but the U.S. participants moved the discussion to an assessment of the U.S.-Canada relationship in the light of events taking place in Quebec. U.S. concern about the relationship had been evidenced by the unparalleled greeting given Prime Minister Trudeau in the U.S. Congress. Canadian participants responded with a wide variety of comments reflecting the concern of all parts of Canada about national unity.

COMMITTEE III—ENERGY ISSUES AND MULTILATERAL CONCERNS

1. Energy

- (a) Developments in bilateral trade, supply, price, gas, oil, coal, electricity, uranium
- (b) Pipeline route alternatives—regulatory requirements and timetable
- (c) Conservation programs, reserves and storage facilities
- (d) Exploration developments (Beaufort, East coast, Arctic, Fundy, power)
- (e) International Aspects—IEA, CIEC

2. Common Multilateral Concerns

- (a) Nuclear proliferation—NPT, IAEA safeguards, Canadian safeguards, SALT, U.S. legislative proposals
- (b) North South dialogue
- (c) CSCE and the Belgrade meeting in June 1977; monitoring the implementation of the Final Act
- (d) Southern Africa questions

Such was the preoccupation with energy relations that more than two-thirds of the meeting time of Committee III was taken up with the energy items on the agenda. The group focussed on three principal issues within the energy framework: the problems of how to transport Alaskan gas from Prudhoe Bay to the lower 48 states; how to carry Alaskan oil to the mid-West of the United States; and the risks involved in drilling for hydrocarbons in the Beaufort Sea. For the rest, members of the two delegations exchanged information regarding the availability of coal in the two countries and on the potential and availability of other fuels, traditional and exotic, such as wood, peat, low-head waterpower, wind and solar energy. There was a short exchange on the potential benefits to the United States of joining with Canada to develop a strategic storage facility in the Wabana mine or in the Cape Breton Salt domes. No discussion occurred on the pipeline treaty which was to come up for discussion in the Senate the following week.

Throughout discussion of alternative routes for transporting Prudhoe Bay gas, the starting point was the need of the United States to find a way of doing this at the earliest possible date and Canada's ultimate need for all exploitable sources of gas from the Canadian arctic regions. Although a temporary surplus of Albertan gas had developed as a result of recent discoveries within that province, a Canadian delegate warned that this was a short-term phenomenon and within less than a decade Canada would have to import some fifty per cent of its oil requirements.

GAS PIPELINE

While the debate was complicated by some internal differences within each delegation, the Canadian members were unanimous in the belief that the government was likely to approve one or other of the two proposed lines across Canada—the Arctic Gas and the ALCAN proposals. But in seeking to meet the deadline imposed on President Carter by Congress of making a recommendation by September 1, Canadian delegates stressed that several reports with substantive implications remained to be received and could significantly affect the ultimate decision. The most important of these was the National Energy Board (NEB) report due on July 1 on the viability of the two submissions for pipeline routes across Canada. The NEB could recommend approval of one or other of the two submissions or both or neither. The federal cabinet could in that event approve or reject the NEB report, but it could not without special legislation override an NEB objection to either proposal. However, the NEB could also bring down a neutral decision, leaving it to the government to make a choice between the two routes.

The Canadian side drew attention to other reports which would affect the options open to the government—the Lysyk report on the social and economic implications of the ALCAN route, the second Berger report on safeguards regarding the MacKenzie Valley route and an environmental impact report on the ALCAN route. These were all due in August.

The United States delegates were interested to hear the views of Canadian participants that there were not the same legal opportunities in Canada as existed in the United States for delaying construction on environmental grounds of a pipeline if the government decided to go ahead. Similarly it was suggested that the settlement of native claims would not cause delay and indeed might only be settled after a decision regarding a pipeline which would give urgency and a context to negotiations—the James Bay settlement being cited to make this case.

For the Canadian participants, a particular interest of the discussion lay in trying to determine whether the United States delegates and Congress itself had or was likely to have any preference as between the three proposals. The support of the Senators from Alaska for the El Paso route was made quite clear. It also seemed to be generally agreed that a recommendation in favour of the ALCAN route would gain relatively easy passage through Congress. The Alaskan members could accommodate themselves to this route, since the line would be quicker to build than a MacKenzie line and gas would be accessible to Southern Alaska. Environmental objections would be limited and it would have wide support among northern states. Congressmen were less confident of the outcome if President Carter were to join the Canadian government in recommending the Arctic Gas route. Alaskan opposition would be total and would involve strong resistance to according a right-of-way over the Arctic Wildlife Reserve on the north coast. There would, for this reason be strong opposition from environmental groups. El Paso had a well-organized lobby, and Congressmen from shipbuilding states could be expected to hold out for the jobs represented by the construction of the tanker fleets. Representatives from western states would also be sympathetic to the Alaskan charge that they were being denied their right to the use of their one-eighth share of the natural gas authorized under U.S. laws. Representatives from south-western states might also support El Paso as a way to maintain the full use of the existing gas transmission line. There was agreement that such a coalition would delay necessary Congressional approval of the Arctic Gas route, especially in the Senate, and that this might influence the President's decision. Members of the House of Representatives pointed out, however, that opinion among their membership had not yet been tested and many from populous industrial states in the East could be influenced in favour of the MacKenzie Valley route if the President's report claimed significant price advantages in its favour.

OIL PIPELINE

An Alaskan Senator spoke in favour of the application by a group to the NEB to build a pipeline to carry Alaskan oil from Kitimat to Edmonton. He drew attention to the several advantages of the line for Canada: additional revenue, maintenance of the full use of the Trans-Canada system, the satisfaction of the needs of the northern tier refineries and removing pressure to increase deliveries to the Puget Sound refineries. Only Canadian jurisdiction would be involved so that decision-making would be relatively uncomplicated. In responding, Canadian participants acknowledge the catalogue of possible benefits, but drew attention to the strong resistance of environmental groups to the sea route to Kitimat and mentioned that a preliminary report on the environmental implications by Dr. Thompson would not be ready until early in 1978.

BEAUFORT SEA DRILLING

(This subject was also discussed in Committee I.)

The two Senators from Alaska expressed concern over proposed drilling plans in the Beaufort Sea region. (The decision to approve drilling for the 1977 season was announced just after the meeting closed.) They feared that an accident could arouse irresistible opposition to any further drilling in the area, thereby choking off future exploration on both the Canadian and American side of the border in an area with a very high potential. They urged that permits for exploratory drilling should not be approved unless the company in question had perfected technology not only for drilling but also for bringing out any oil or gas discovered. Canadian speakers acknowledged the risk and pointed to the stringent conditions on drilling, but noted that all activity involved some risk and pointed as an example to that associated with tanker traffic in Puget Sound. They contested the argument that transportation technology had first to be perfected, noting that companies would not incur the large developmental expenses unless they had proof that oil or gas existed in exploitable volumes. Although the discussion did not fully satisfy the concerns of the Alaskan Senators, they appear to have gained new information on Canadian precautions which may have to some degree calmed their anxiety.

URANIUM

There was a short discussion of the domestic problems associated with the use of uranium to produce electrical energy, with both sides commenting that waste disposal represented a problem of increasing public concern. With regard to nuclear exports, American speakers noted the similarities between Canadian regulations and those proposed by President Carter. The Congress was divided over the advisability of the President's policy and Congressional support would be influenced by the Administration's success in persuading key potential exporters such as France from providing nuclear processing facilities to countries such as Pakistan which had not signed the Non-Proliferation Treaty. In the event the President's policy were to be endorsed by Congress, it would be important for Canada and the United States to cooperate closely in applying their respective regulations.

A United States participant gave an interesting and informative report on the progress and difficulties of the SALT negotiations and related these developments to the military balance between the USSR and the United States.

CONFERENCE ON SECURITY AND COOPERATION IN EUROPE (CSCE)

(Congressman Fascell, Chairman of the U.S. Commission on the CSCE, joined the Committee for the discussion of this item.)

Both delegations were in agreement as to opportunities and the risks of the CSCE. The Canadian side was interested to hear the appreciation of the U.S. Congressmen that President Carter, while continuing to emphasize his concern regarding the observation of human rights in the Soviet Union, recognized that the objectives were long-term, that Soviet reactions had to be taken into account and therefore would back off to some degree. It was noted that since the Jackson-Vanik amendment and the rupture of trade negotiations with the USSR, the number of Jewish families permitted to emigrate from the USSR had actually diminished, illustrating the limits of pressure which could be applied.

The Canadian delegation were extremely interested to learn about the unique arrangements for U.S. participation in the Helsinki review process. A Helsinki Commission had been created by special law, comprising officials and Members of Congress and having an integrated staff. Members of Congress on the Commission will be part of the U.S. delegation to the Belgrade Review Conference, free to attend as and when they wish. Congressional participation in the Commission served to provide continuous coordination with the Congress of U.S. policy in a delicate area of considerable public sensitivity. It also ensured that Soviet and Eastern European negotiators had full opportunity to appreciate directly the extents of Congressional concern, thereby strengthening the hand of the entire United States delegation. Although no other country had a similar arrangement, Greece was attaching parliamentary observers to its delegation.

NORTH-SOUTH ISSUES

With time running out, discussion of this item was compressed. The fact that the Conference on International Economic Cooperation was taking place at the same time in Paris also overshadowed discussion, which focussed on the difficulty in both countries of increasing aid in a period of high unemployment and of opening up domestic markets at such a time to the manufacturers of developing countries. An American delegate suggested that the Carter Administration would be more forthcoming but that there had been no corresponding change in the attitude of Congress. This was unfortunate, he thought, because there was growing perception in the United States that the main threat to international stability lay in north-south tensions. For example, rising coffee prices were not only a function of frost in Brazil; they also reflected political instability in Africa. And oil prices changes owed much to unrest in the Middle East.

SOUTHERN AFRICAN QUESTIONS

The Committee had to conclude just as this subject was opening up. It was recognized on both sides that the issue in Southern Africa was race. Instability in Africa owed much also to the arbitrary frontiers which were a legacy of the colonial period. An American delegate made a wide ranging presentation concerning changes in American policies and perceptions of Africa. Unfortunately, at this point, the Committee had to end its meetings.

CLOSING PLENARY

Following the presentation of reports from the three Committees given by Senator Leahy for Committee I, John LaFalce for Committee II and David MacDonald for Committee III, the closing plenary was opened to discussion from the floor. The comments which followed concentrated almost entirely on issues discussed in Committee II. A Canadian participant outlined the differences between the American regulations covering tax concessions on convention travel and Canadian regulations. He stressed that in 1976, even before the effect of the new tax took hold, income from tourism between the two countries was heavily in the U.S. favour.

An American participant replied that the convention tax issue clearly illustrated the need for an early warning system about impending legislation. This legislation which had been initiated for purely domestic tax reasons had created a mess in so far as Canada was concerned which might be difficult to straighten out. The correction of a simple problem in tax equality and tax evasion had escalated to involve the Canadian Bill C-58. Talking about the problem had created a greater problem.

A Canadian participant who acknowledged that he had not supported C-58 stressed that it would be detrimental to Canada-U.S. relations if individual items of legislation were used as bargaining chips. It would be folly to go down the road of linking various issues. The relationship between the two countries was so complex that to start linkage would have serious and unforeseen ramifications which would undoubtedly damage the relationship.

An American responded that while he hoped that linkage of issues would not be extended in the future, it was his view that Canada must understand that there was linkage now on the convention tax-Bill C-58 issue. He thought that tensions on this problem could be reduced if the Canadian and American legislation could be reconciled through on-going negotiations on a tax treaty between the two countries which might include a non-discriminatory clause. But he cautioned that the problem would not lessen and would have to be faced.

Another American participant agreed that while there had originally been no linkage of C-58 to the convention tax, it had developed from the frustration on the American side arising from the impact of C-58 and Canada's insistence that no negotiation on the Canadian legislation was possible. He called attention to the independence of the CRTC and outlined impending changes in its regulations which would cut out signals from some northern New York television stations to Canada and replace them with coverage from a single outlet in Rochester whether this was the wish of Canadian viewers or not.

The discussion was then turned by a Canadian participant to the more general topic of how to establish an on-going communication mechanism between members of the Canada-U.S. Interparliamentary Group to enable earlier consultation on difficult issues. An American spokesman suggested that each group designate certain individuals who would report to their bodies on each major issue of conflict.

In his closing remarks, the American Co-chairman on the House side, the Honourable Dante Fascell assessed the format and content of this year's meeting. He considered the substantive opening speech by the Canadian Co-chairman, the Honourable Martin O'Connell to be an important and useful innovation. It had set the tone and focussed the meeting for the major issues. Later, in the light of the Committee discussions, the closing plenary was able to assess these issues again and draw possible conclusions. Mr. Fascell spoke favourably of the inclusion of international as well as bilateral problems on the agenda.

Mr. Fascell dealt with the idea of developing an "early warning system" which had emerged from the meetings, a procedure to enable one legislative group to alert the other of a potentially damaging action by the other side's legislature. While supporting this concept strongly, Mr. Fascell warned against developing a system which would involve churning out papers which no one would read. His suggestion was that contact between legislators should be by telephone. Further, he proposed that the Embassies, particularly the Canadian Embassy in Washington which closely follows Congressional measures, should take the responsibility for both warning U.S. legislators of the potential impact and alerting the Canadian members of the Group of a burgeoning problem. The Canadian Parliamentarians would in turn pick up the phone and explain the Canadian position to their counterparts on Capitol Hill.*

Mr. Fascell referred to the challenges currently facing Canada, particularly the jurisdictional and regional tensions and the election of a separatist Quebec Government. He asked what these challenges meant to the United States. They were bound to have some impact, he said. The economic dynamics of the two countries were such that the United States would almost inevitably be involved. He concluded that while Canada was going through the difficult and delicate process of sorting things out, the United States ought to show patience and understanding in its responses from across the border. Such an attitude would in the end benefit the United States as well as Canada.

* In a subsequent steering committee meeting, it was agreed that in some instances, the best approach would be to invite a small delegation to visit the other legislature for direct talks.

ANNEX

NOTES FOR REMARKS
OPENING PLENARY SESSION

MARTIN O'CONNELL, M.P.
CO-CHAIRMAN, CANADIAN SECTION
CANADA-UNITED STATES INTER-PARLIAMENTARY GROUP
18th ANNUAL MEETING

VICTORIA, B.C.
May 27-31, 1977

It is an innovation in our meetings that we begin this year with a broad statement by a member of each delegation of the domestic situation in each country and the state of the relationship between our two countries. We welcome this because it gives us an opportunity to get an overview of what is happening which we may miss if we go at once into three committees and then report back to a plenary session the findings of each particular committee. So I will try to assess our domestic situation as it may affect relationships between Canada and the United States. I will also highlight certain bilateral issues, and then comment on the adequacy of the means we as Parliamentarians and Congressmen have to consult each other prior to actions being taken which impact the other country without due consideration of the other's interests. Do we have an early warning system at our level; that is, the non-executive level—the level of Congress and Parliament?

In Canada, a number of stresses have been building up for a decade and have now come to a head simultaneously. Changes in population growth; a dynamic economic development in the west; a relative decline and weakening of the industrial heartland in Ontario and Quebec, and a profound social revolution now some 15 years old in Quebec (the so-called quiet revolution), all of these developments have eroded the old national consensus. We have a series of severe challenges to the status quo and I suspect that we will have to make some significant changes in our federal structure and in our economy if we are to emerge with our unity confirmed. The most dramatic and therefore newsworthy of the challenges to our federation was the election last November in Quebec of a party committed to separating that province from Canada. The Parti Québécois muted its objective of separation by offering, if elected, to proceed to independence in two stages. First, it would hold a referendum on the question of separation, and secondly, only if that mandate were confirmed would it take direct steps to try to achieve independence. This device for allaying the fears of a majority of the Quebec electorate of a separation of Quebec from Canada, together with a strong and widespread resentment against the former government of the province, combined with support for independence among perhaps one-quarter of the Quebec electorate to allow the election of the Parti Québécois with a strong majority. As friends of Canada, you have an obvious and legitimate interest in what has come to be called the national unity issue in our country.

It would be comforting for me to be able to say that, if seen in its proper perspective, there is little to be concerned about in the longer view. But this is not so. Even if one admits that all federations, yours as well as ours, generate jurisdictional frictions as well as regional tensions and difficulties; and even if one concludes that Quebecers were basically voting only for good government, or against bad government, and not in favour of separation; and even if one accepts that the great majority, not only of Quebecers but of all Canadians, are strongly committed to national unity and, finally, even if we confirm that we have both the commitment and the flexibility to solve our problems in a way that maintains Canada as a single federal country—even if we accept all this, we are still left with the realization that we face the most fundamental crisis in our history.

That which helps make this crisis so fundamental is the simultaneous convergence of basic economic, political and cultural factors. Not only, therefore, are we in Canada bound to be preoccupied with these challenges; but also the measures we may feel obliged to take, not least to cope with the economic aspects of these problems, will likely influence relationships between our two countries. This is so because our economies are so directly related to each other in terms of trade, in terms of investment, in terms of technological dependency, and in terms of parent subsidiary relationships more pervasive than in any other country of the world. We may be led to take decisions some Americans may not like. For this reason we need a better early warning system. And I hope you will make an effort to understand the critical conditions in our country which make adjustments necessary. You may find adjustments throughout the range of our economic relations; in technology transfer, in tariffs that inhibit the further processing of primary products in the west and in central Canada to cite only two examples. You may find our adjustments for example in a range of cultural questions that arise because of our desire to reinforce a sense of national identity; for example, in measures we have taken in Canadian radio and television programming. I know that some of you have felt certain measures to be directed against the United States. This is not our intention. I can only ask you to understand that the objective of these measures is to reinforce a sense of unity and identity in our country. We work at it. And we think you believe that these are important objectives for the United States as well as for us. We do ask you, therefore, to understand that we may indeed be on the threshold of going through internal changes in our political constitution and the way our economy works more profound than have affected our country since Confederation. I know that, for our part, we will be trying to find a balance between essential accommodation of the internal pressures in the economy, in political and in cultural matters, and our desire to maintain at the same time an open market and the closest possible relationship with the United States of a kind that preserves the foundations of that relationship.

Let me now give you a few examples of problems that have been resolved in an ideal way, thus illustrating both the closeness of our association and our willingness and ability to take each other's interests into account.

Perhaps the best recent example is Canada's decision to provide additional gas supplies and energy to the United States last winter when you met an unanticipated and severe cold spell. This decision was not bargained against some other objective or some other issue. It was not linked. We did not treat our gas as a "bargaining chip" to use a term employed a couple of times in a recent Senate debate. It was the appropriate thing to do and was dealt with on its own merits and in its own context.

Of a different order, we in Canada have been pleased indeed with the manner in which the United States is dealing with the Garrison Diversion Project in North Dakota. This was a project that Canadians feared would have damaging ecological effects in Manitoba. You took our concerns into account on their merits, and in their own setting. You did not link them into a multi-issue deal in which one objective was dealt off against another.

One can point to former irritants that now are fading into the background as understanding emerges of the objectives sought and of the manner of operating a new policy. For example, I believe that our Foreign Investment Review Act has ceased to cause you concern. Is it now true also that misunderstanding that arose when we felt obliged to cut back oil are subsiding? You no doubt perceive that Canada took reasonable measures to protect its own legitimate interests in an energy crisis and at a time when we realized our reserves were rapidly diminishing and were very much smaller than they were thought to be only a few years ago. We observe the strenuous efforts you are making to conserve energy supplies, and we believe that you are acting in your best interests and that both of us do so in ways that avoid taking advantage of each other's predicament.

These are examples of a rational discipline exercised in each country as it translates domestic pressures and interests into policies that can profoundly affect the other. A rational discipline of this kind is based necessarily on close communications and a willingness, indeed a desire, to take into account the interests and needs of the other, and to do this with each issue viewed in its own context. It is based on mutual trust.

I felt that is the spirit in which we begin our three days of meetings. Consider for a moment a few agenda items. There is the intricate question of establishing boundaries on the oceans where our respective extended jurisdictions will meet for the first time as the result of decisions taken by our two countries to declare a 200-mile economic zone outward from our shores. This entails much negotiating, government to government, and much understanding on the part of Parliamentarians and Congressmen. There is the question of raising the tolls on the St. Lawrence Seaway, a matter we deem urgent though we recognize your different attitudes and needs. There is the question of protecting the environment, both in the air and in the water, and the problems we believe we may encounter with an oil tanker route from Alaska to the northern States. On your part, we know you have serious concerns about Canadian drilling in the Beaufort Sea and we each have concerns about the potential pollution or flooding that may be caused in the many rivers that cross our borders; the Flathead River, the Skagit and the Richelieu, to mention a few.

If I were to highlight a current and even urgent issue which may be a friction issue, though hopefully not, I would choose the problem of bringing your oil and gas from the Arctic to southern markets. Your requirements do enter into our decisions and their timing. For our part, we ask you to recognize that the exploitation of oil and gas in Canada's far north and in Alaska has substantially different social and economic implications. For example, you have found enormous quantities of oil and gas in Alaska and believe that there are equally large fields not yet identified. By contrast, the total amount of gas discovered and proven in Canada's Mackenzie Delta is small. It amounts to less than the discovery of new gas in each of the last three years in Alberta alone. Nor have we found oil in commercially viable quantities in the Mackenzie Delta. Accordingly, with the currently high rates of discovery of gas in Alberta we have, in Canada's temperate zone, at least 25 years of gas supply at current rates of consumption, even if we maintain our present level of exports to the United States. Yet we do want to give full consideration to your needs, to get your oil and gas to your markets, possibly overland through Canada.

Another difference relates to the situation regarding native claims in the north; you have settled but we have not. The Canadian public is sensitive to native claims. It wants justice done here, not only with respect to land claims but also with respect to the social as well as environmental and ecological impacts of a massive industrial project like a pipeline. And finally, the north, because it is so large in relation to southern Canada plays, I venture to say, a more central part in Canadian politics than I presume Alaska may do in the United States. The time of our north has come.

All this is to say that our perception of the urgency of piping our arctic gas southward is different from yours. At the same time, and I reiterate, as a good neighbour we cannot fail to be concerned about your urgent requirements. Prime Minister Trudeau has assured President Carter that we will try to make our decision within the time frame laid down by Congress so that your President can take that decision into account when he makes his decision. But this is not going to be easy for us. We await our National Energy Board report two months hence and have just now received the report of the Berger Commission recommending a ten-year moratorium before a Mackenzie Valley pipeline would be built, if at all. It will not be easy. The impact of what we decide to do will have major significance for the whole of our country.

I think it is fair to state that in general our relations at the highest levels have not been better for over a decade. Our Prime Minister and your new President have met both in Washington and at the recent summit conference in London. They apparently hit it off well together and each has made it clear that he attaches personal importance to maintaining good relations. President Carter has been continuing the good work undertaken by President Ford. To improve even further the excellent relationships between our two governments or administrations, we ourselves have just established in our external affairs department a new bureau to deal exclusively with Canada and United States relations not only with respect to bilateral questions but also with respect to world problems.

But there is also Congress with its own initiatives in legislation and its strong role in foreign affairs, answering to its constituency in a way that, because of our different parliamentary system, we do not. You may, for example, go along with your Administration or you may not go along with it. Our Parliament does go along or if it can't, we have an election and we get a new administration and a new Parliament that will work together. I raise this because I think we ought to put on the table a question I feel is worth raising in the context of the relationship between our two countries as it may be influenced by Congress acting on its own with or without initiatives by the Administration.

It is more difficult for us to characterize Congress' perception of Canada than is the case when we consider your administration perception of Canada. I say this without wanting in the least to give offence. Let me ask, is it fair to say that there is not the same ongoing commitment—is it possible, indeed, to have the same operational commitment, on the part of Congress, to the development of good relations with Canada as is maintained by United States administrations? If this is so, is it so, in part, because Congress by its very nature finds it difficult to develop a unified policy? I think in Parliament we would find it very difficult to do so. Each of you must respond to the pressures within his own district or state, and it is usually, one presumes, only when problems arise in one part or another of the country in relation to Canada that you find yourself pressed to take a position.

Let me illustrate with two recent issues involving Congress which seem typical of the process to which I refer. One was the unanimous resolution to the two Houses of Congress condemning the practice of harvesting baby seal pelts in Canada; and the other concerns the decision of Congress to modify the tax regulations regarding the treatment of convention expenses. This latter decision was probably taken without much thought of its impact in Canada. Yet by mid-April of this year, we calculated that it had already cost us $24 million in cancelled U.S. convention business. Multiply this by three, which is the normal calculation of other dollars spent by delegates, and you have a $75 million loss in the first quarter. The estimated loss for the whole year is between $100 and $200 million and may be greater because many of these associations are North American in their membership and Canadians find it important to attend whether they are held in Canada or in the United States. So they will continue to attend the conventions, but now they will be held in the United States, and this at a time when the balance of spending by tourists is already some one half billion dollars in your favour.

This is one aspect of the question I am raising; that is, the difficulty of consultation when the action taken is Congressional action. We do not seem to have appropriate mechanisms equivalent in some way to those that we have when the decisions are taken by our respective administrations.

Having once taken your decision on conventions, it becomes difficult to reverse it or to make an exception for Canada. So, when Canadian authorities raise the issue, it is suggested that we have to pay for some exceptions by making some change in one of our laws or regulations to which you find objection. For the moment, some United States leaders seem to have fixed on a Canadian law concerning the treatment of advertising expenses for U.S. broadcasting stations which have in the past profited from selling advertising in Canada. It is suggested that both are tax measures and that they may therefore be compared, although otherwise they have nothing in common.

Let me suggest that this is a bargaining game that neither of us can win. For two countries with so many relationships, there is no end to the linkages which could be made. We have always felt that each issue should be examined on its own merits and that we have enough respect and trust in each other to be able to do this. That in fact seems to be the normal course we do take when resolving issues between us. This, then, is the second aspect of the question I wanted to raise: that is, not viewing each issue solely in its own context but moving it into a context where it is related to other issues and thus where difficulties spill over into each other and indeed cause problems across the whole spectrum of our relationship. We say that we do not wish to link issues one to the other and we therefore hope that we will be able to encourage means of prior discussion with respect to Congressional action so that these closely entwined connections will not be unduly bruised because of the way our respective systems operate.

In summary, I am sure we agree that there are many matters which cannot be left exclusively to our two administrations or executives. Many of the issues which affect our relationship are determined by Congress. We hope that our discussions during the next three days will help both delegations to see our specific problems in the larger context. I hope that on Monday afternoon we will revert again to the broader picture and discuss among ourselves how the issues that we have examined in each of the three working committees relate to the larger question of relations between our two countries. Perhaps discussions will lead us to modify the picture we have of the relationship. Perhaps our discussions of the things that we share will help us gain a better perspective of the problems which divide us and thus help us resolve them in a just way.

THE SENATE

Thursday, August 4, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

GREETING TO VISITORS—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Senator Lafond: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might be permitted to raise a question of privilege which affects the Senate as a whole.

As honourable senators have noticed, we are in the middle of the tourist season. Thousands of visitors come to these buildings every day. The greeting to those visitors as they enter the centre door, according to an article in last night's Ottawa Citizen—and the article quotes the greeting—is as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen, on behalf of the Prime Minister and the elected members of the House of Commons, I would like to welcome you to the Canadian Parliament Building.

If that is the prescribed form of greeting, I suggest it tends to misrepresent the nature of the Parliament of Canada and the true nature of the occupancy of these buildings. I do not know what the remedy is, but I thought that the attention of the Senate should be drawn to this matter.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it seems to me that Senator Lafond has done us all a service by drawing this matter to our attention. I shall immediately make appropriate inquiries with respect to the significant points he has raised.

Senator Grosart: I wonder if the Leader of the Government is apprised of the recital given by the guides when they conduct Canadian and other visitors through Parliament. Some of the recital that is given to them is not always, in my view, correct in terms of the constitutional position of the two houses of Parliament. I would suggest that the Leader of the Government might insist, or perhaps that Her Honour the Speaker might insist, that we see the recital that is given to these guides. I might also suggest that some of them could take a lesson in voice control because I have heard them from the fourth floor.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, a few months ago contact was made with the Honourable the Speaker of the other place with respect to the content of certain of the descriptions given by a number of the guides. It was hoped at that time that the presentations could be improved with respect to the Senate. But if any senator is able to cite instances of misinformation dispensed by those given the responsibility of providing guidance for visitors to the building, I would appreciate receiving that information, and again I will take the matter up with the appropriate authorities.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, my suggestion goes beyond that, if I may say so, and that is that any statement made, at least in this part of the Centre Block, about the function of the Senate should be cleared in advance, perhaps by Her Honour the Speaker.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Copy of Proceedings of the Royal Society of Canada, 1976, together with a copy of the 1976-77 Calendar and a copy of the Report of Council containing the financial statements of the Society for the year ended February 28, 1977, and the auditors' report thereon, pursuant to section 9 of An Act to incorporate the Royal Society of Canada, Chapter 46, Statutes of Canada, 1883.

Capital Budget of the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation for the financial year ending March 31, 1978, pursuant to section 70(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970, together with copy of Order in Council P.C. 1977-1986, dated July 14, 1977, approving same.

● (1410)

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT BILL, 1977

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Senator Goldenberg, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-51, to amend the Criminal Code, the Customs Tariff, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator McIlraith: With leave, now.

Senator Flynn: Would it not be more appropriate to put it on the Orders of the Day to come after the third readings that are already expected? In other words, it would come as an order of the day later this day.

Senator McIlraith moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading later this day.

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRATION BILL, 1976

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Senator van Roggen, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada, and presented the following report:

Wednesday, August 3, 1977

The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs to which was referred Bill C-24, intituled: "An Act respecting immigration to Canada," has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, August 2, 1977, examined the said bill and now reports the same without amendment.

The committee, however, expresses its deep concern relative to the continuing legislative practice of delegating to the Governor in Council such substantive powers to make regulations as those contained in paragraphs 115(1)(a), (b) and (c) of the bill without a provision that regulations of this kind be not only laid before, but approved by, Parliament before coming into force.

Respectfully submitted,
George C. van Roggen,
Chairman.

Senator Grosart: Explain.

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, if I might be permitted just a short note of explanation on the concern expressed in the report, I might say that the committee found the bill on the whole to be an excellent piece of draftsmanship, which I mention because it cannot be said of all bills that have come to us in recent months.

Senator Flynn: I have doubts about this one also.

Senator van Roggen: I am speaking about the draftsmanship only.

The provisions on regulations in this bill are contained in clause 115, and extensive provision is made for regulations. Some members of the committee were concerned that the particular items subject to regulation contained in subclauses (a), (b) and (c) were very broad and substantive. That point was raised in the other place as well. What was done there was a step in a direction which undoubtedly some members of the committee would like to see Parliament going in, but it was only a partial step. That step was the addition of subclause (3) which states that:

(3) No regulation made under paragraph (1)(a), (b) or (c) shall come into force until thirty days after it has been published in the Canada Gazette, and the text of such regulation shall be laid before Parliament as soon as practicable.

The committee felt that the further step should be taken of moving toward the British procedure whereby it is not only laid before Parliament but approved by Parliament, and this is the reason for the recommendation, the hope being that, by a suggestion such as this and a slow method of pressure, we can bring our government to the point where they will start following the English practice.

Senator Grosart: I wonder if I could ask the chairman of the committee to read the paragraphs involved, and to indicate the effect of the broad powers which would be given to the minister.

Senator van Roggen: I would be happy to read the paragraphs. I do not know that I am the ultimate authority on what the paragraphs would mean or how they would be interpreted, but I will read them to you. The clause reads:

115.(1) The Governor in Council may make regulations

(a) providing for the establishment and application of selection standards based on such factors as family relationships, education, language, skill, occupational experience and other personal attributes and attainments, together with demographic considerations and labour market conditions in Canada, for the purpose of determining whether or not an immigrant will be able to become successfully established in Canada;

(b) prescribing classes of persons whose applications for landing may be sponsored by Canadian citizens and prescribing classes of persons whose applications for landing may be sponsored by permanent residents;

(c) exempting members of the family class from any of the requirements of the regulations and prescribing, in substitution for such regulations, special regulations for the purpose of determining the ability and willingness of persons who sponsor applications for landing to assist such members in becoming successfully established in Canada;

I might add that it is difficult really to consider those paragraphs without considering the objectives contained in clause 3 of the bill.

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, it might be appropriate at this time if I said a few words on this subject. I was a member of the joint immigration committee and we toured the country. One of the main problems we had to consider was the question of nominated relatives. At the present time 66 per cent of people coming into Canada as immigrants come in under the category of sponsored and nominated relatives.

After a great deal of consideration the committee came to the conclusion, with only one dissenting vote, that the nominated relative class should be eliminated. If one had a nominated relative, under the old rules the nominated relative got as many as 30 points out of the 50 points that were required.

The committee recognized that it was a certain advantage for people who had close relatives in Canada; it was easier for them to integrate when they came here; they could be accommodated for some time; they could be told what was the form; and they could be given help in other ways. So, in place of the nominated relative class the committee proposed that 10 points be given to certain close relatives outside the immediate family.

The bill was drafted on that basis. Then, when the bill was presented, due to pressures from various people, the cabinet announced that by regulation they would overrule the recommendation of the committee, which was made on a vote of about 20 to one, and that they were going to go back and reinstitute the nominated relative class the way it was under the present regulations.

This is the very point that Senator van Roggen is referring to. It comes under paragraph (b). That is what happened. The bill was drafted on certain bases because of the fact that the nominated relative class was going to be eliminated; and the committee recommended, and the government, quite rightly, I think, agreed, that the immediate family class should be extended to include, for example, parents of any age. They have now gone back and changed their mind by regulation, but they still left in the revision of the bill itself the provision about parents, which was put in there because the nominated class was to be eliminated.

● (1420)

This continuation of the nominated class is going to be a very serious problem in the future, particularly when we restrict the total number of immigrants coming into Canada. The effect is going to be that probably far more than 66 per cent of the people who get into this country from now on will be nominated relatives and will tend to go to the place where their nominating relatives are, and that is where they are not needed and where previous immigrants have gone, namely, to Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver. We will therefore not get immigrants spread into the places where they are needed, out in the west, in certain communities. There is not reunification of a family where the nominating relative is settled in Toronto, and a new immigrant who is a nominated relative goes out west, where he might be needed, for example, in Thompson, Manitoba, where, as was pointed out to the committee, they have a large turnover of labour.

I am not a member of Senator van Roggen's committee, but I do want to support the caveat that was put into this report.

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read a third time?

Senator Riley moved, with leave, that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading later this day.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL FINANCE

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE—ADDITION TO COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Senator Petten moved, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i):

That the name of the Honourable Senator Steuart be added to the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, August 5, 1977, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO SIT DURING ADJOURNMENT OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

REVENUE CANADA

REMOVAL OF OFFICES FROM SAINT JOHN, NEW BRUNSWICK—QUESTION

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government.

Is it the intention of Revenue Canada to move its offices, or any part of its offices, away from the city of Saint John, New Brunswick? If so:

- (a) Why?
- (b) Where will these offices be moved to?
- (c) How many employees will be affected?

I consider this question to be of an urgent nature, and I would hope that the Leader of the Government will be in a position to give an answer as expeditiously as he answered Senator Molson's question the other day.

Senator Perrault: While this question is more properly one which I think should be answered in written form, because of the lateness of the session, and the urgency of the question, I shall endeavour to obtain the requested statistical information tomorrow.

Senator Flynn: If not, send him a letter.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

POLICY REPORT—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, on Tuesday, August 2, the Honourable Senator Austin asked if the government would make available this week its report on northern policy which, as he said, had been promised for the last several months.

I can inform honourable senators that the Prime Minister, yesterday, released a document with respect to this matter—a document entitled "Special Government Representative for Constitutional Development in the Northwest Territories." In conjunction with the release of this document, the press communiqué says:

The Prime Minister announced today the appointment of the Hon. Charles M. Drury as Special Representative for Constitutional Development in the Northwest Territories. Mr. Drury will report to the Prime Minister on wide-ranging consultations to be carried out with leaders of the Territorial Government, northern communities and native groups on measures to extend and improve representative and responsive government in the Territories.

The detailed terms of reference, together with a government background paper "Political Development in the Northwest Territories," were attached to the press release made by the Prime Minister yesterday. I understand that copies of these documents are available for honourable senators, but if it is the wish of the house to have material incorporated in today's Hansard that request will be met. It is whatever Senator Austin and other honourable senators may wish.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I would wish this, inasmuch as it would make this very important political document about the development of the political system in the Northwest Territories more readily accessible to honourable senators and to a number of other people.

I should like to ask the Government Leader one supplementary question, and I thank him for providing the documents to me just before 2 o'clock today. Does the government seriously intend to establish—

Senator Flynn: "Seriously"?

Senator Austin:—some sort of political residency test in the Northwest Territories before Canadians who move there will be able to exercise their political franchise?

Senator Flynn: Are you suggesting the government is not always serious?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I have no information to indicate that the government is moving in that direction.

Senator Flynn: It is serious.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators, that these documents be printed to today's Hansard?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of documents, see appendix, p. 1257.)

ACQUISITION OR RENOVATION OF HOMES

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE FOR SINGLE PERSONS—QUESTION

Senator Grosart: I would ask the Leader of the Government if he thinks it is possible to have available, before the recess, the answer to a question I asked on Monday about availability of government assistance to single persons with respect to the acquisition or renovation of housing. It is rather an important question to many single persons who are anxious to know what rights they may have, and if their rights are at the moment as restrictive as appears to be the general opinion.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, efforts will be made to provide that information before we recess for the summer.

May I say at this time that it will be the intention, barring unforeseen circumstances, to have royal assent at 12.45 tomorrow afternoon. The business of the Senate has been moving along rather well and the co-operation of all members of the Senate in the process has been gratifying.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

NOTICE OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, at the request of the Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, I wish to inform the members of that committee that a meeting will be called this afternoon at around 5 o'clock. Members will be informed by telephone of the exact time and place of the meeting.

● (1430)

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION REORGANIZATION BILL

THIRD READING

Senator Hicks moved the third reading of Bill C-27, to establish the Department of Employment and Immigration, the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission and the Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Senator Olson moved the third reading of Bill C-34, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act respecting the establishment of marketing plans and to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act in consequence thereof.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators—

Senator Greene: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: I am happy that Senator Greene applauds me. I was sure he'd appreciate my delaying the passing of this bill for a few minutes.

The situation created yesterday by the refusal to accept a nearly unanimous report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, recommending that the bill be not proceeded with further, leaves me rather uneasy. The committee came to the conclusion that the bill was not necessary. I think that is the essence of the report. By refusing to accept the report, the Senate in fact said, "We maintain that the bill should be passed." But the Senate does not know at this time, as third reading is moved, what the committee would have done, if it had known what the Senate's reaction would be to such a recommendation. Would it have suggested amendments to modify the bill, or would it have said, "If you insist that the bill be enacted, it should be enacted in the form in which it was referred to us"? That is why I was disappointed that the motion by Senator Hays was not accepted. I grant you the context was not the same. The Senate had not yet rejected the committee's recommendation.

We are now in a situation in which we do not know what the committee would have done had the bill been returned to it after the refusal of the Senate to accept the committee's recommendation that the bill should not be proceeded with further. Normally the situation in a case such as that should have been to return the bill to the committee with the request that it be reported with or without amendment. That is the question that was put, in fact, to the committee by the decision of the house yesterday afternoon, but we do not have the answer; we do not know how they feel. I will not move that we should do that, as I know full well the disposition of the house in this respect. Yesterday's vote was too close for the government's comfort; the minister in charge of the Wheat Board came too close to being disastrously humiliated. Government supporters would not risk—

Senator Greene: I rise on a point of order.

Senator Flynn: I'll be very interested to hear your point of order.

Senator Greene: Honourable senators, I believe it is contrary to parliamentary practice to comment upon the result of a vote that has already been taken in the Senate.

Senator Asselin: An old story.

Senator Greene: With respect to my honourable and learned friend, I would point out that this is a violation of parliamentary practice.

Senator Flynn: I do not know if Madam Speaker wishes to rule on this point, but I am certainly entitled to interpret the decision of the Senate. If I am not, then I wonder what in fact we can do here. If that is a technical objection raised by Senator Greene, I think he should say it is merely a technical objection. I have no objection to listening to what he has to say.

Senator Greene: Honourable senators, I do not look upon it as a technical objection; it is a very sound rule, evolved through constitutional parliamentary practice to give an end to something. If a vote could be commented upon and reviewed ad infinitum, no parliamentary proceeding would ever come to an end. Therefore, Parliament, both at Westminster and here, has come to the very salutary constitutional practice that once a vote is taken that is the end of the matter. It is to give a definitive conclusion to something. It is not a technical matter; it is very important that there be a way of ending debate. The vote is the way of ending it and, with respect to my honourable friend, that should be the end of it.

Senator Flynn: Suppose I were to move that the bill be not now read a third time but be referred back to the committee, do you seriously suggest I would be abusing the rules of this house in so doing? Do you for a moment suggest that?

Senator Greene: Yes, I do.

Senator Flynn: Come on; be serious. It is all very well to intervene with these petty little objections, but I ask you: Can I or can't I move that the bill be referred back to the committee? I most certainly can, and that is what I was discussing, whether or not I should do so. I decided against doing so because it is quite obvious that the Senate, after what it did yesterday, would do the same thing again. I am not criticizing what the Senate did; I am saying that it did that and it would likely be stubborn enough to do the same thing again.

Senator Marchand: Logical enough.

Senator Flynn: Logical enough only in that particular Liberal meaning Senator Marchand would give to the word "logical". So, I say to you that on a future occasion such as this, in my opinion, we should consider whether it would not be better to return a bill to committee in order to ascertain whether the committee would have reported it with or without amendment. As it is, we don't know what the committee would have done. But we have faith in the good sense of the majority here, the kind of faith that is forced upon us, and, as a result, will allow the bill to pass.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: It would be contrary to my nature, honourable senators, to engage in disputation at this time.

Senator Flynn: I don't know about that.

Senator Perrault: However, I do not think the suggestion is well founded that somehow there is an unreasonable effort to force through any bill.

Senator Flynn: No, of course not.

Senator Perrault: I appreciate your reassurance on that point. I would like to remind honourable senators of the current work which is going forward in the Transport Committee to improve a bill which appears to need improving in some respects.

Senator Flynn: Pardon me?

Senator Perrault: In my opinion this procedure has the Senate operating at its very best—proposing a number of changes which should be made in a proposed measure before it is enacted into law.

● (1440)

Senator Asselin: What about Bill C-9?

Senator Perrault: I want to conclude by saying that there is no suggestion here that there has been any attempt to force through legislation which is, essentially, unsound. Evidence of this is to be found in the work of the eminent members of the Transport and Communications Committee who have been working so diligently to improve a bill over the past number of weeks.

Senator Flynn: The whip will surely support you in your remarks that there has been no pressure.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT BILL, 1977

THIRD READING

Senator McIlraith moved the third reading of Bill C-51, to amend the Criminal Code, the Customs Tariff, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

Hon. Ann Elizabeth Bell: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might be permitted to say a few words before the question is put. At the outset, I want to associate myself with the remarks of the sponsor of the bill, Senator McIlraith. I thought he did an excellent job in outlining the principle of the bill.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Bell: The drafting of the bill must have been frightfully difficult. As the Leader of the Opposition pointed out, it is an omnibus bill. Its principle, if there is a principle in an omnibus bill, is the tightening of our criminal procedures, which is something which is very much wanted in Canada at this time.

I am sure that the minister would be the first to agree that this bill will not result in firearms being kept out of the hands of the criminal element. However, it will at least reduce the accessibility of firearms—something with which the majority of Canadians will be in agreement.

I should like to commend the minister responsible for this bill for his efforts in guiding this difficult piece of legislation through Parliament. It is not the first time he has performed this type of difficult task for the people of Canada. One can think right away of the imaginative and courageous bills he has presented in the past, such as our excellent packaging and labelling legislation, his imaginative housing and urban development programs, and so forth, and now Bill C-51.

I do not make these remarks simply because he is a fellow British Columbian. It is not partisanship on my part. I simply felt that the excellent work of the Honourable Stanley Ronald Basford should be brought to the attention of the Senate before we adjourn for the balance of the summer.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I cannot allow the record to stand with only praise of this bill. I do not mind hearing praise of the minister responsible. I can understand Senator Bell's wanting to praise a fellow British Columbian; there is no doubt that he has done a good job. I think he did a good job in committee yesterday. However, he did not dissipate all my doubts concerning many of the provisions in this bill.

It was proven in committee yesterday that the interim report of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee on Bill C-83, the predecessor bill, tabled in the Senate on May 13, 1976, was almost entirely disregarded. That report recommended that provisions concerning the regulation of long guns—and I am not now speaking of prohibited weapons—be taken out of the Criminal Code and put into a separate statute. That recommendation was ignored on the ground that to remove those provisions from the Criminal Code would be to put in doubt the competence of Parliament in that area. I don't buy that.

I am also uneasy about the provisions concerning wiretaps. Wiretap authorizations are granted for a period of 60 days, but can be renewed indefinitely. In addition, the subject of the wiretap need not be advised until three years after the end of the wiretapping. Theoretically, the period from the date of the initial authorization to the date on which the subject is advised of the wiretap could be as long as five years.

We had evidence in committee yesterday that one wiretap lasted for a period of 15 months. Under Bill C-51, the subject of that wiretap wouldn't have to be advised for three years from the end of the wiretap. The committee, in its interim report on Bill C-83, recommended that a judge be given the power to grant one extension not exceeding 90 days and that two judges be required to consent to any additional extensions. That recommendation was also disregarded.

Another point raised by the committee—and this is perhaps minor in practice but important in principle—was that a person deemed to be a dangerous offender would have his indeterminate sentence reviewed after three years, whereas an individual sentenced to a term of imprisonment of 15 years but not found to be a dangerous offender would have his sentence reviewed only after five years. In other words, a person convicted of rape and sentenced to 15 years but not declared a dangerous offender would have his sentence reviewed only after five years, whereas were he to have been declared a dangerous offender his sentence would be reviewed after three years, and every two years thereafter. In any event, this may not be too important. We were told in committee yesterday that, generally speaking, sentences rarely exceed 10 years. The committee drew this anomaly to the minister's attention, but nothing was done about it.

On the whole, I have an aversion to omnibus bills, and I am still uneasy about many of the provisions in this particular bill. That notwithstanding, I have no doubt that it will pass, but on division.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

● (1450)

IMMIGRATION BILL, 1976

MOTION FOR THIRD READING—MOTION IN AMENDMENT NEGATIVED

Senator Riley moved the third reading of Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, it will not surprise you that I rise to add a few words on this bill also. After all, we on this side gave the Senate and the government the opportunity to have these bills referred very quickly to committees so that those committees could do what was possible under the circumstances. I want particularly to praise the Foreign Affairs Committee for having devoted long hours to studying this bill in depth. It is an important piece of legislation, and it must have been tiring to do what the committee did. It finished very late last night.

But, I rise particularly because I am interested in the rider to this report. The committee reports the bill without amendment, and then adds:

The committee, however, expresses its deep concern relative to the continuing legislative practice of delegating to the Governor-in-Council such substantive powers to make regulations as those contained in paragraphs 115(1)(a), (b) and (c) of the bill without a provision that regulations of this kind be not only laid before, but approved by, Parliament before coming into force.

That brings back memories of the report on Bill C-9 concerning the James Bay agreement. I am quite sure honourable senators will remember that we had the same kind of report on that bill. It presents the Senate with the same question: when a committee believes that something should be done, why does it not do it rather than make a simple recommendation? Why does the committee not have the fortitude to act as it believes it should? Senator Perrault assures us that no pressure is exercised upon his followers, that any amendment the Senate wants to adopt will be seriously considered by the government. But I remain convinced that the practice is being established in this place that no amendment or no contrary report will pass unless the government has indicated, if not explicitly then at least implicitly, that it is willing to accept it.

Senator Perrault: The Maritime Code?

Senator Flynn: Yes, you have accepted that the Maritime Code be amended. But it is quite obvious that this will in no way hurt the government; amending that bill will help the government. I am quite willing to discuss the Maritime Code if you want to change the subject. But this is not the same problem at all. The Maritime Code will be amended because the government wants it amended. It has no choice, really. The bill is that defective.

But, I repeat that it is quite clear that the Senate will not be allowed, nor will a committee of the Senate be allowed, to amend legislation or to submit a report which is contrary to the wishes of the government. If there is any indication that this is about to happen, the government forces will be mobilized right away. The whip will go to work and a compromise will be sought. And that compromise will usually be the kind of thing that we have in this report, not an amendment but a recommendation, a pious hope, no more. And that is all the majority in this place is allowed to do, honourable senators.

But if the members of the committee believe what they say in this report, then they should be prepared to accept an amendment along these lines, and I plan to test their conviction by moving, seconded by Senator Grosart, that the bill be not now read the third time, but that it be amended by striking out subclause 115(3) on page 68 and substituting therefor the following:

(3) Any regulation made under the provisions of paragraph 1(a) (b) (c) of this section shall be laid before Parliament within 15 days or, if Parliament is not then sitting, within 15 days after it reconvenes, and such regulation shall be subject to the affirmative resolution of Parliament and shall not come into force until 30 days after it has been published in the Canada Gazette.

I have had some copies of this motion prepared for distribution, if anyone is interested. The Leader of the Government does not appear to be interested, nor does the deputy leader.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Riley, seconded by the Honourable Senator Rizzuto, that this bill be now read the third time.

In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Grosart, that the bill be not now read a third time, but that it be amended by striking out subclause 115(3) on page 68 and substituting therefor the following:

(3) Any regulation made under the provisions of paragraph 1 (a) (b) (c) of this section shall be laid before Parliament within 15 days or, if Parliament is not then sitting, within 15 days after it reconvenes, and such regulation shall be subject to the affirmative resolution of Parliament and shall not come into force until 30 days after it has been published in the Canada Gazette.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Hon. George C. van Roggen: Honourable senators, the Honourable Leader of the Opposition used what I took to be rather strong language in referring to committee hearings, including my own committee's on this particular bill, when he described them as not being allowed to do certain things by the Leader of the Government. If I did not have such a high personal regard for the Leader of the Opposition I would resent those remarks. However, since I do hold him in high regard personally, I will not say that I resent them; I will simply say that I reject them completely.

I might just say that I was not in this chamber on Tuesday evening when this bill was referred to my committee, because I was attending the meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, which I had been doing since 9.30 that morning, and by 10 o'clock that evening we had not proposed amendments there that had been agreed to by the Leader of the Government. We had put forward amendments and attacked that bill, because it needed so much improvement that amendments were necessary; and there was no agreement that the government would accept them. Indeed, that committee acted in a responsible, proper fashion, without any direction from the Leader of the Government.

● (1500)

The very next morning I took this particular bill, which was referred to my committee, and we started at 9.30 in the morning and we finished at 11 o'clock last night. During that whole day I never once spoke to or saw either the whip or the Leader of the Government; neither did any member of the committee, as far as I am concerned. So I resent—or rather, I will revert to what I said before: I reject the suggestion that any pressure, of any nature whatever, was brought to bear on that committee relative to this being put in as a recommendation rather than as an amendment.

Senator Flynn: I will accept your word, but only if you assure me that you intend to support the amendment.

Senator van Roggen: That I have not the slightest intention of doing. If we had wanted to amend it we would have brought this in by way of an amendment rather than as a recommendation, and we would have done so in the committee yesterday. But we decided, as a unanimous decision of the committee, that we would bring it in by way of recommendation, and that was considered by the members of the committee the proper thing to do. I certainly support the committee in that.

Hon. George I. Smith: Honourable senators, I should like to make a brief reference to one or two of the things said by the Honourable Senator van Roggen in reference to the Transport and Communications Committee and the Maritime Code bill, Bill C-41, with which that committee has been struggling for quite some time.

I want to say to him that there is absolutely no comparison between that terrible piece of draftsmanship and any ordinary bill. Anybody who spent the first few hours in that committee knew at once that it was a dreadful piece of proposed legislation that could not possibly be accepted by any responsible body as something that after examination could be passed in the form in which it first came before us. To say, therefore, that this is a good example of where people are free to act according to their consciences does not make a very good impression on me, because I think the only possible thing anyone with a conscience could do with that bill is exactly what we are doing with it.

There was no chance to argue whether it was good, bad or indifferent. Even the distinguished gentleman delegated, as I understand it, by the Minister of Transport, or his deputy minister, to take chief responsibility for the bill before the committee submitted over a dozen amendments himself before we got well started with him.

I think Senator van Roggen is also assuming more than has as yet happened, because we do not know whether any of those amendments, even those submitted by the distinguished gentleman in question, will be accepted. As I understand the work of the committee, it now has something like 130 amendments before it, none of which has been passed upon, not even those presented by the government. So I think he chose a rather poor example indeed.

Senator Flynn: Indeed!

Senator van Roggen: I was pointing out the difference between a good bill and a bad bill. This was a good bill we dealt with yesterday, and on balance we want to pass it.

Senator Flynn: Why criticize it, then?

Senator Smith (Colchester): The honourable senator allows his enthusiasm for his defence to overcome his good judgment, because he knows that if that bill was a good bill the recommendation attached to it would never have been attached to it. He would not have brought himself to say, "This is wrong, and we recommend that it be changed." He knows very well that he does not approve of that piece of legislation.

After all, you do not have to take my word for that, or the word of the Leader of the Opposition. There is the report which Senator van Roggen presented hardly more than an hour ago. So I say he has chosen a poor example indeed to buttress his allegation that honourable senators always do as they please around here.

Senator Walker: Hear, hear.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I suppose the fact that he could not find a better one, that he had to resort to such a feeble one, indicates how little defence he really had.

Senator Walker: Hear, hear.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I therefore wish to support the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition and to say that it merits the most careful and sympathetic consideration by all honourable senators.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I also rise, I need hardly say, to support the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition and seconded by myself. I will confine my remarks to the substance of the amendment. Its purpose is obviously to make this a better bill. The problem that arises in connection with clause 115 is that, in effect, it negatives all the good intentions of the bill.

In this bill we have clause 3 dealing with the objectives of Canadian immigration policy. That is the title of Part I. We were told over and over again in committee that this was a unique approach by the Canadian government to state its broad humanitarian principles in respect of immigration into Canada. I questioned its effect, its legal effect, and the committee was told by the representative of the department that, if there was any conflict between these high-sounding objectives and a specific provision in the bill, the specific provision would prevail. That means that in any conflict relating to any matter arising under the great discretionary power given to the minister under clause 115 all the pious statements of the government in clause 3 are washed out; they have no meaning.

I would point out that part of the discretion that is given to the minister in the regulations is to prescribe classes of immigrants and to set up application standards on the basis of several things, including language. Here, in a country where we are so involved with the rights of people to speak a language, an official language of their own country, we are now giving the minister the power under clause 115 to bar somebody because the minister does not like the language he speaks. In case there is any question about that, I will read it:

The Governor in Council may make regulations

(a) providing for the establishment and application of selection standards based on such factors as family relationships, education, language, skill, occupational experience and other personal attributes—

This means that if he does not like the colour of a prospective immigrant's hair that is a personal attribute; and so is the colour of a person's skin.

I say the committee was surely right in saying that it deplored this clause. Why did the committee decide not to make an amendment? I am a member of that committee, but at the particular time this decision was made unfortunately I was in another committee or I would certainly have insisted, so far as I am concerned, that this be brought in as an amendment. I would have insisted because that is the position I have taken in respect to all such decisions of committees since I have been in this chamber.

An eminent researcher is at the present time preparing a thesis on the Senate of Canada. This person, in discussing with me the work of the Senate, said, "I get the impression that the Senate is afraid of its own shadow." I replied, "I am not sure whether it is our own shadow. We are certainly afraid; there is no question of that. We are afraid to amend legislation."

● (1510)

In discussion I was prompted to wonder why. I still do not know why. What would happen if the Senate amended the bill as, in effect, recommended by the committee? If it supported the objection by amending the bill, what would happen? The bill would go back to the House of Commons. I have no doubt myself, or very little doubt, that the government would accept this amendment and it would pass the House of Commons in due course.

Senator Flynn: Quickly.

Senator Grosart: I think quickly. What is it that we are afraid of? Over and over again we seem to shy away from amending a bill because it would disrupt temporarily the legislative process.

On the positive side, as I have said before, and repeat, there is nothing that will improve the image of the Senate more than for it to become active in actually amending bills, of not shying away from it, of not being afraid, as we so often are, of our own shadow. We have had several instances of this in this session, and several quite recently, and they have been referred to in the discussion so far.

I support the proposition put forward by the Leader of the Opposition for this and other reasons. It is noticeable that in the committee's addendum to its report it expresses "deep concern," not merely about this specific but about the "continuing legislative practice" of delegating to the Governor in Council the special substantive powers to make regulations.

I presume that the committee really meant to say such powers to make substantive regulations, because that is the essential principle. Any power given is substantive because it is power in substance. The point is that these are substantive regulations that the government is empowered to make—so substantive that they can destroy the whole bill. Yet the committee, for various reasons, said it showed "deep concern," but not enough concern to amend the bill.

I think this is a classic case of the Senate—and some of its committees, because it has become the practice in committee—always to be looking over its shoulder and to be constantly afraid of its own shadow. I do not expect this is the time when there will be a turnaround in the attitude we seem to take, but I see some hope, perhaps, in the closeness of the vote we had the other day, and I find myself continually complimenting those senators who do not vote merely for or against the government or for or against the opposition. Senator Macdonald voted against the majority of his colleagues yesterday, and we on this side applaud him for it. I myself have found only one opportunity, in my years here, to vote against the majority of my colleagues in the opposition, but no doubt occasions will arise.

Senator Perrault: You have had plenty of opportunities.

Senator Grosart: The Leader of the Government says that I have had plenty of opportunities. I can only say he has given his own colleagues plenty of opportunities to take the same attitude. The motion put by the Leader of the Opposition does point to the essential fact that if we in this chamber do not make amendments, we are downgrading the work of the chamber, we are passing our responsibilities to committees and allowing committees, in effect, to take us off the hook by making pious suggestions with no clout at all to them. When this Senate starts to regain the respect of the public and Parliament, that will be the time when it starts to actually amend bills, when it is the consensus of the Senate that they should be amended, and I need hardly say that there have been many occasions when the obvious consensus has been that a bill should be amended; but honourable senators have not voted that way for their own reasons. However, I repeat that the turnaround in the image of this chamber will come when we actually start to amend bills and send them back to the House of Commons.

Senator McIlraith: Would the honourable senator permit a question—

Senator Grosart: Of course.

Senator McIlraith:—in clarification of the motion before the house? The motion indicates that any regulation made under the provisions of the clause in question shall be laid before Parliament. The following is the wording:

—and such regulation shall be subject to the affirmative resolution of Parliament and shall not come into force until 30 days after it has been published in the Canada Gazette.

The limitation on this coming into force seems merely to be the 30 days after publication of the regulation. The thrust of the senator's remarks was criticism of the power being taken to the Governor in Council, that it should be replaced by something to bring it under the control of Parliament.

Will the Deputy Leader of the Opposition explain how this resolution, as drafted—I am asking him a narrow technical point of drafting—will bring the power to make regulations under the control of Parliament? It merely says that the regulations "shall be subject to the affirmative resolution of Parliament." It does not provide that they not come into force unless they have the affirmative resolution of Parliament. It is a rather narrow drafting point that I am raising.

Senator Grosart: It could be changed, but I would suggest to Senator McIlraith that as it stands it does exactly what it is intended to do. If it is "subject to the affirmative," that obviously means that it is "subject." If there is no affirmation, it does not come into force. It says:

and shall not come into force until 30 days after it—

The "it" obviously refers to the affirmation. Read that way, the motion makes it very clear that without the affirmation by Parliament—not just the House of Commons or the Senate—unless it is affirmed, it dies. It is subject to affirmation.

Senator McIlraith: It is somewhat similar to the draftsmanship that was under criticism this afternoon. I hope the honourable senator will take a look at the draftsmanship on another occasion.

Senator Flynn: If Senator McIlraith is in favour of the principle involved, we could arrange to correct the amendment, if he so wishes. If that is his only objection, it could be met very easily.

Hon. Eugene A. Forsey: Honourable senators, after what I said about this bill on second reading, no one will be surprised that I rise to support strongly the amendment moved by the honourable the Leader of the Opposition. Indeed I had seriously considered moving such an amendment myself, but I was so doubtful whether any other honourable senator would share what my old friend Arthur Meighen used to call "my lust of combat" on this subject that I was inclined to think that I should have to content myself with saying "on division" when third reading was moved.

I rise now merely to say that while I appreciate the action of the committee in adding this recommendation—I am not a member of the committee; I was present when the matter was discussed, and I expressed approval of the recommendation, of course—while I do appreciate and value the recommendation, I frankly do not think it is enough. I think the Honourable the Deputy Leader of the Opposition said there was no clout to it.

I agree with the view that the amendment should be passed, that it is absolutely essential to the proper functioning of parliamentary government and absolutely essential to proper functioning of the Senate that it should be done.

● (1520)

Hon. Royce Frith: Honourable senators, speaking to the amendment, I have just two brief points.

First, let me say that I was present at the committee meeting last night, and as I understood what led to the addendum to the report, there seems now to be some confusion between the suggestion or recommendation and paragraphs (a), (b), and (c). The iniquity or fault that the recommendation is aimed at is not paragraphs (a), (b) and (c), because the evidence given to the committee was that those paragraphs in fact represent a step forward. They set up at least some standards, whereas the present act has none at all. The present act leaves the whole question to the caprice of anyone who wants to apply it. The objection, therefore, was not to the existence of the standards. There is no particular iniquity in paragraphs (a), (b) and (c). The problem was, as I understood it, that they are so important that the committee was gravely concerned about the fact that they could be subject to regulation without further approval of Parliament.

My second point is this. If I have understood properly what I have heard said in favour of the recommendation, I do not understand how there is ever going to be room for a committee to make recommendations short of an amendment, without being accused, to use the honourable leader's words, of not having the fortitude to go so far as to make an amendment. In other words, every time a committee considers the question of an amendment or a recommendation—such as I saw this committee consider last night—and debates the question and comes to the conclusion that there is no case for an amendment, but rather for a suggestion, as the chairman of the committee has said, to urge the government to keep advancing towards what is contained in subclause (3)—since subclause (3) itself does represent an advance, though not a sufficient advance, as Senator Forsey said, in his judgment, towards the kind of objectives he is talking about—if such a committee is always going to be accused of not having the fortitude to make an amendment it might as a consequence not even decide to make a recommendation, telling itself that if it does, for sure, somebody is going to say that the government tells us everything we must do, that we have no independence, that we do not make any judgments ourselves, that the Senate is afraid of its own shadow, and all these other accusations that, for the same reasons as are advanced here, can be advanced everywhere, every time a committee fails to make an amendment, or falls short of making an amendment, for reasons that it thinks are sound.

The principle that I have to vote against with regard to this amendment is contained in the words that have been used to support it, namely, that we should have an amendment because there was some lack of fortitude displayed in falling short of making an amendment.

From what I saw from my participation in the committee last night, it was not a matter of that at all. It was a matter of taking a decision that was considered the best thing to do. Committees should have the opportunity to feel that they are not always going to be criticized for not having independence of thought simply because they do not go to the full length of making an amendment in every case.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, the Honourable Senator Frith has covered most of the points I had proposed to deal with, but there are a couple of others.

Reference has been made to the work of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications on the Maritime Code bill. The statement was made in this connection by the Honourable Senator Smith (Colchester) that no responsible body, after having looked at it, would pass such a bill in its present form. I would remind the honourable senator that such a bill did pass another body; it passed the House of Commons.

Senator Grosart: He said "a responsible body".

Senator Flynn: What difference does it make?

Senator McElman: You are making my point very effectively. It did pass another body.

Senator Flynn: Sure it did. By accident.

Senator McElman: I think the work that has been done in the Transport Committee has been exceedingly good. I think it will continue to do a good job with that bill, and I think it is showing not only its own independence now, but, I hope, will show the independence of this body very shortly, or, at least, when we meet again in the fall. I therefore see no reflection upon that committee.

I see no basis for suggesting that there is a reflection on this committee for what it did last evening, either. I was present last evening. We sat well into the night; it was well after the hour of 10 when we finished our work. I did not see any signs of irresponsibility. There was excellent discussion of the proposal that has come forward today as an addendum to the report, and there was no submission of an amendment. There was discussion of it, but in the end it was decided that as a reasonable compromise, at this stage of the session—

Senator Flynn: "Compromise"?

Senator McElman: That is my word. A reasonable compromise was reached, at this stage of the session. This is not the first time a compromise has been reached within a political group, I am sure, including this Parliament, this house and the committees of this chamber. There was unanimous agreement on the part of the committee members to that compromise.

The party represented by the gentlemen opposite and the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, the mover of this amendment, was there represented by a very able and honourable gentleman.

Senator Flynn: Quite so.

Senator McElman: I hope I am not being unfair on this matter. I do not know what others were doing last evening, but to the best of my knowledge there was only one committee meeting last evening when our committee met, and the mover of this amendment, and the group that he represents, have more than one member on that committee.

Senator Grosart: Perhaps, on a point of privilege, I should point out, because of the suggestion that the absence of other members from this group in that committee was inexcusable—and that appears to be the suggestion, because there was only one present at the meeting—that there are many other activities which require the presence of representatives of this group; not merely one meeting of this committee. There are other committee meetings going on, of which he is apparently unaware. I know of other committees being attended at that time by members of this group, and at least one member who is a member of that committee.

Senator McElman: You are speaking of committees of this house, are you, sir?

Senator Grosart: I am speaking of committees of Parliament.

Senator Riley: At 11 o'clock at night?

Senator Grosart: No. From 8 o'clock on.

An Hon. Senator: A caucus meeting?

Senator Grosart: It was not a caucus; it was a committee.

Senator McElman: You are drawing inferences, obviously in high dudgeon, that I did not make. I stated a fact. The fact is that one of your members was present.

Senator Grosart: Yes.

Senator McElman: The fact is that that committee numbers among its members not only one member of your group. Now, is there something wrong with my drawing those facts to your attention? If there is, I would like to hear about it. However, I drew no inference from those facts. I stated those facts.

Senator Grosart: For what purpose?

Senator Flynn: If there is no inference, for what purpose do you state them?

Senator McElman: I have stated two facts.

Senator Flynn: For what purpose?

Senator McElman: You are drawing your own conclusions.

Senator Flynn: I will draw my own conclusions with regard to your purpose.

Senator McElman: That's fine.

Senator Perrault: Now, don't get political.

Senator Flynn: Did you hear what your Leader said? He said to me, "Don't get political." I'd like to know what he thinks you're doing.

Senator McElman: If I have offended you by the recitation of these two facts, then I withdraw anything I said that would be offensive to you.

Are you through at the moment? If you are, I will continue and say that it is my personal view, having been here for several years now, that a great deal of progress is being made in the committees of this house, and in the house itself. There were times when unnecessarily the whip was out, and not only on this side. The Honourable Senator Grosart has referred to the fact that he has not found many opportunities. I frankly do not recall one when he did not vote with his group.

• (1530)

Senator Grosart: I said there was one.

Senator McElman: I beg your pardon?

Senator Grosart: I said there was one.

Senator McElman: Oh, do you have a record of it, sir? I would like to know of it.

Senator Walker: Don't be so petty. We are trying to wind up this session. Now you are a small, little fellow.

Senator Greene: Aren't we all?

Senator McElman: If you and I are to start trading insults again, I can only say to you that from my minimal height I look down on you.

Senator Walker: Nice work, sonny boy.

Senator McElman: That is as far as I wish to go with the resurrection of our usual level of debate.

Senator Walker: Well, sit down, will you? Don't be so petty.

Senator McElman: No, no, I shall not sit down. I did not initiate this debate, and I did not reflect upon this committee. As a member of the committee that did sit last evening, that worked very hard and produced, I think, a reasonable report, I use the word of the chairman—and I will go further—I resent the reflection upon the committee. I support the committee report. I think it is a step in the right direction. I think it brings to the attention of those responsible in another place that the time is approaching when they will have to pull up their traces a bit. This is not the first indication. It is one of many. There will be more. I think the Senate is starting to meet its obligations quite well.

I will oppose the amendment.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, as I was a member of the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs which considered Bill C-24, I think it is my duty to say a few words following what has been said and the amendment proposed by Leader of the Opposition.

It is true that the committee did considerable work considering Bill C-24, clause by clause, with a view to clarifying certain provisions which we thought posed difficulties of interpretation. I was the first last night when we discussed clause 115 to raise the point that is now before this house. I did so because it was not a new argument. On several occasions, in this house and in the other place the principle was raised that Parliament is the ultimate authority, the ultimate tribunal. Parliament must accept the regulations passed by the Governor in Council whose purpose is often to determine in a text of law certain freedoms to be denied to certain individuals.

So I put forward that principle last night that Parliament must absolutely have something to say about the regulations passed by the Governor in Council. I concerned myself particularly with giving example to show that certain regulations passed by the Governor in Council often have a tendency to change the spirit of the legislation passed by Parliament. It was logical, absolutely normal, that the regulations proposed by the Governor in Council be approved by Parliament and that Parliament have an opportunity to discuss them, to pass them again, since Parliament had already passed legislation, and those regulations deal with that legislation.

Senator Frith and Senator McElman submitted that no formal amendment was put forward. This is quite true. No formal amendment was proposed, for the reasons given by Senator McElman. Other committee members felt the session was coming to an end. The bill had been before our committee for the whole day. We had been considering it seriously. We felt that although there was no amendment, there should be a recommendation by committee members that from now on, when accepting regulations under some statute, the government should submit those regulations to Parliament for subsequent approval. This was a principle to be established. It is also my feeling that if you read the committee proceedings you will note the statement by me to committee members, that since the session is nearing its end, a formal amendment should not be put forward, but all committee members supported a recommendation such as that put forward by the chairman.

But when we are faced this afternoon with a formal amendment similar in substance to what was discussed last night, and consistent with the views expressed by committee members on the very principle involved this afternoon, and although we did not decide last evening to recommend an amendment for the reasons I have just explained but rather to make a recommendation, as we were in support of the principle in committee, we could not oppose a formal amendment that would be introduced on third reading.

For this reason I feel I am not breaking away from committee discussions since such a formal amendment has been introduced along the lines we were discussing in committee last night. Once a member in the house decides to put forward such a formal amendment, I feel I am released from the understanding reached last night in committee. I feel that I can in good faith support the formal amendment now before this house, and so I shall.

● (1540)

[English]

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I will not detain you long, but I must reply to a few of the things that have been said about the amendment.

Senator Grosart has indicated that the regulations are not of a general type; they affect the legislation in a very special and particular way. That is why we refer only to certain paragraphs of the clause dealing with the regulatory powers of the Governor in Council.

Senator Frith said that because I criticized the fact that the committee did not go far enough, in future no committee will be able to make a simple recommendation. I think that is a rather simplistic argument. There are cases when it is practically—not politically; I said practically—impossible to make amendments, and then a committee can make recommendations. There are occasions, for example, when a committee is reporting on a given question or on the subject matter of a bill, when it can, in fact, make only recommendations, and should do so. Here the recommendation is about a very specific amendment, and the problem is one of politics, not of drafting.

Senator McElman implied that I criticized the committee. I did not criticize the committee for the work it did. I criticized the conclusion to which it came. I was very careful to say that I had great admiration for the fact that the committee had sat long hours and dealt very thoroughly with this bill. I criticized the committee because, after having done all this good work, it did not follow through to the next logical step and amend the bill. That is the point.

Senator McElman also seemed to imply that because only one member of the opposition was present for the committee's study of this bill, we are, therefore, not entitled to criticize the report or to draw the conclusion that I draw in proposing my amendment. I suggest that that is totally unfair. Because of our small numbers on this side, we, at times, can't have more than one senator attend a committee sitting. Senator Asselin agreed to represent us in this case and was present throughout the deliberations. Members on your side, Senator McElman, should never have the temerity to imply criticism of the absence from committee of any member of the official opposition.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: A comparison has been made between the work on this bill and the work of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications on the Maritime Code. Senator Smith (Colchester) has replied very well to that argument. No one in the Transport Committee can tell me that the government was not happy with the fact that we were revamping that bill. Sure, that bill went through the other place, but what difference does that make? They make plenty of mistakes over there; we know that here. But there is no comparison at all between the work of the Transport Committee on the bill dealing with the Maritime Code and what happened with this bill. Surely you are not saying that because the government was pleased with the work we were doing in the Transport Committee it stands to reason it would accept with equal pleasure an amendment to this bill. If so, good. I'll expect you all to vote for the amendment.

I say that the conclusion of the committee is based, not on its work—it did very good work—but only on a political consideration. If you are in favour of the recommendation you must, of necessity, be in favour of the principle embodied in the amendment. You cannot get away from it. Because the committee did not go as far as I suggest it should have done is no reason to say, "I'm against the amendment." Senator Asselin put that very well when he said, "If I am in favour of the recommendation I should certainly be in favour of a step that would implement the recommendation."

I will add only this. If the Leader of the Government, after consultation with the minister responsible in the other place, were to say, "All right, we accept this amendment," I am quite sure that the House of Commons would approve it in five minutes. The essence of the amendment was approved by the opposition in the other place, and with the support of the government it would take five minutes tomorrow, or tonight, for them to concur in this proposed amendment. That is all there is to it. If you believe in it, why don't you do it? It is not so difficult. Just move a small step further. If it is insulting for me to tell you that, then I will never be able to criticize you again without insulting you. But I'll learn to live with that.

Senator van Roggen: It depends on the size of the step, I suppose.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those who are in favour please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those who are against please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it. And more than two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Speaker: Please call in the senators.

● (1600)

Motion in amendment of Senator Flynn negatived on the following division:

YEAS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Asselin	Grosart
Beaubien	Macdonald
Cameron	Phillips
Flynn	Smith (Colchester)
Forsey	Walker—11.
Godfrey

NAYS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Austin	Langlois
Bell	McElman
Bosa	McGrand
Bourget	McIlraith
Burchill	McNamara
Connolly (Ottawa West)	Molgat
Cook	Neiman
Cottreau	Norrie
Denis	Olson
Eudes	Perrault
Fournier (de Lanaudière)	Petten
Fournier	Riley
(Restigouche-Gloucester)	Rizzuto
Frith	Robichaud
Giguère	Smith (Queens-Shelburne)
Greene	Steuart
Inman	van Roggen
Lafond	Williams—36.
Lamontagne

The Hon. the Speaker: I declare the motion in amendment lost.

Shall the main motion carry?

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, I made a recommendation in committee yesterday that the word "multiculturalism" be included in the objectives of the immigration bill. I am not 100 per cent sure as to why the word was left out of the objectives, but I hope it does not indicate a dilution of the concept of multiculturalism in this country.

I was somewhat assured by the remarks of the minister in committee yesterday when he said that the omission was not intended to emasculate the concept of multiculturalism. While I am not entirely satisfied with what has been said on the matter, I accept his word that the omission does not change government policy on multiculturalism.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

NOTICE OF COMMITTEE MEETING

On the motion to adjourn:

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Senator Bourget: Honourable senators, before the question is put, I should like to remind members of the Transport and Communications Committee that there will be a short meeting of the committee at approximately 5 o'clock this evening. I will inform members by telephone as to the precise time and place of the meeting. It should only be about 10 or 15 minutes in duration.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 1246)

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

SPECIAL GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATIVE FOR CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT
IN THE NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

TERMS OF REFERENCE

The Special Representative for Constitutional Development in the Northwest Territories shall be appointed by the Prime Minister and be authorized:

- i) to conduct a systematic consultation with recognized leaders of the Territorial Government, northern communities and native groups about specific measures for modifying and improving the existing structures, institutions and systems of government in the Northwest Territories, with a view to extending representative, responsive and effective government to all parts of the Territories and at the same time accommodating the legitimate interests of all groups in northern society, beginning with those of the Indian, Inuit and Métis;
 - ii) to seek consensus among the various groups consulted about specific proposals and measures that could be implemented progressively through legislative amendment of Federal and Territorial laws, as well as through administrative action as required;
 - iii) to coordinate these activities with those taking place concurrently on land claims put forward by northern native groups and with any discussions at the official level about administrative adjustments in the relationships and functions of government in the Northwest Territories;
 - iv) to keep the Territorial Government and other interested parties fully informed about the progress of the consultations;
 - v) to consult as required with the Ad Hoc Committee of Cabinet on Constitutional Development in the North, through its chairman the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development;
 - vi) to report from time to time to the Prime Minister on all these matters with recommendations for action by the Federal Government.
2. In no way restricting the generality of the foregoing, the Special Representative is authorized to include on his agenda for consultation the following specific subjects:
- i) possible division of the Northwest Territories on the basis of functional factors, including economic, socio-cultural, and other relevant factors, but excluding political divisions and political structures based solely on distinctions of race;
 - ii) phased restructuring of political institutions in the Northwest Territories to achieve a greater degree of responsible government, including but not limited to consideration of the composition and jurisdiction of the Territorial Council, the composition and role of the Executive Committee, the continuing responsibilities and role of the Commissioner, the future relationship with the Federal Government, and reserved powers of the Minister and Governor-in-Council;
 - iii) transfer and delegation of Federal responsibilities and programs to the Territorial Governments;
 - iv) devolution of responsibilities, powers and functions from the Territorial Government to communities, with a community option of creating regional institutions for specific purposes;
 - v) statutory and other safeguards for protecting native interests, including language, cultural and traditional pursuits;
 - vi) arrangements for promoting native participation in government at various levels, including residence requirements, constituency boundaries, a municipal ward system, representation on subsidiary bodies and in the public service;
 - vii) the political role if any of native institutions for economic development deriving from claims settlements;
 - viii) continuing Federal ownership and management of non-renewable resources, with sharing of resource revenues;
 - ix) decentralization of surface land use and management procedures with institutionalized arrangements for jointly-planned economic development;
 - x) appropriate financial arrangements to support the foregoing.
3. The Special Representative will be assisted by an advisory group seconded from the Federal and Territorial Governments together with any other expert consultants he may require from time to time.
4. The Special Representative shall be responsible for the effective conduct of the consultation and to this end is authorized:
- i) to establish a headquarters in the Northwest Territories;

- ii) to convene meetings in various communities in the Northwest Territories with local leaders and other participants he may wish to invite;
 - iii) to enter into contracts with expert consultants as required;
 - iv) to employ administrative support staff;
 - v) to manage funds provided to the Inquiry
- on terms and conditions to be approved by the Treasury Board.

5. Departments and agencies of both the Federal and Territorial Governments shall be required on request to provide information, advice and other assistance to the Special Representative.

6. The Special Representative shall complete his consultations and related activities expeditiously so that decisions relating to constitutional development in Northwest Territories may be taken by the Government at the earliest possible date.

POLITICAL DEVELOPMENT IN THE NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

In the past few years constitutional issues have assumed increasing importance in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, as the Territorial Governments evolved and the various native groups formulated their land claims. This statement is concerned primarily with the situation in the Northwest Territories and begins with the recognition that for historical and other reasons the situations in the two Territories are sufficiently different to warrant some variation of treatment. Nevertheless, many of the main factors and forces are in play in both Territories and may call for similar if not identical responses, if satisfactory solutions are to be worked out with the people principally concerned. Some of the implications for the Yukon are suggested later in the statement.

Most of the pressures and tension prevalent in the Northwest Territories today derive from three major factors:

- The general demand for a greater degree of self-government whether at Territorial or community level;
- the determination of the native peoples, Indian, Inuit and Métis, to get recognition and power largely through the settlement of their land claims;
- the urgent need for direction and pacing in the development of the economy in all parts of the Northwest Territories, long dominated by the vagaries and fluctuations of non-renewable resource operations.

These three factors have been very much in play during the rather lengthy period of proceedings leading to a pipeline decision in the North. They are producing disruptive forces, they interact among themselves and they continue to bear heavily on the whole question of how the Northwest Territories will evolve politically in the next decade or so.

The Territorial Government, led by the now fully elected Council, are looking for broader jurisdiction, a greater authority and more effective control of all aspects of northern living. These aims are reflected at the community level where municipality, hamlet and settlement councils are increasingly asserting themselves. At the same time the native associations, in particular the Indian Brotherhood of the Northwest Territories and the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada, have been working: to loosen the authority of the Territorial Government and Council; to influence political development at community level; and to achieve political power, cultural recognition and economic strength for native groups as a whole, mainly through land claims which the Federal Government has since 1973 undertaken to settle through negotiation.

In essence, most of these assertions of political aim and aspiration are recognized by the Government as being legitimate and timely. The Carrothers Commission of 1966, whose recommendations were instrumental in starting the movement toward Territorial self-government, called for a further review in ten years and in effect this is now underway. However, the issues today are aggravated and confused by a tendency on the part of political leaders on all sides in the Northwest Territories to express their objectives in extreme terms. Extreme utterances have served to harden positions, to drive the racial groups farther apart and to create a potential for confrontation that for the small population widely scattered across the Northwest Territories can only be destructive.

The Federal Government has full constitutional responsibility for political development in the Northwest Territories. It is committed to certain policy courses which for some time have had a direct bearing on that responsibility among them:

- The adoption in December 1970 of national objectives for the North that included furthering the evolution of self-government;
- the emphasis and priority in the northern policy statement of March 1972 on fulfilling the needs of all northern peoples;
- the commitment in the Indian/Inuit claims policy statement of August 1973 to negotiate comprehensive claims settlements with various claimant groups in the Yukon and Northwest Territories;
- the increasing involvement of local communities and other groups in the decision-making process as regards major resource development, signified since 1974 by the appointment and proceedings of the Berger Commission of Inquiry;
- the emphasis since 1975 in Indian and Inuit policy on promoting and safeguarding the identity of these native people within Canadian society and in achieving an improved relationship with them through a cooperative approach to policy and program development.

The Government has concluded that the time has come to take further major steps in the direction of enabling all northerners to govern themselves in ways of their own choosing. It is central to this conclusion that the native peoples of the North should participate effectively in this political evolution and at the same time be assured that their rights and interests, individually and collectively, will be protected and taken into account. The Government is determined to discharge its responsibility in these matters with a flexibility and openness of mind, and a willingness to consider constructive changes and innovations.

Political development will be achieved through a full, frank and systematic consultation with recognized leaders of the Territorial Government, northern communities and native groups about specific proposals and measures for modifying and improving the existing structures, relationships and institutions of government in the Northwest Territories. To conduct this consultation the Government has appointed as its Special Representative, Mr. Drury, who will begin his work in the Northwest Territories by the end of the summer. This statement, which is not intended to prescribe solutions at this stage, provides a framework of policy guidance within which the proposed political consultation can get underway.

Non-Renewable Resource Development

National interest dictates that the Federal Government maintain its ownership and control of the potentially significant non-renewable resources in the Northwest Territories. In its brief, "Priorities for the North", the Territorial Council referred to the transfer of powers over all surface and sub-surface land resources, although in preliminary consultations this point was not pressed as an immediate goal. The land claims of the various native groups in the Territories also seek to bring about participation of predominantly native communities in resource development, particularly as it relates to land use. The Government assumes that negotiated settlements of these claims would include forms of compensation and institutions which would enable the native groups to play a part in economic development and benefit from it, while following their own traditional pursuits to the extent that they may wish to do so.

Both the Territorial Council and native claimant groups are looking for some sharing of revenues the Federal Government derives from the development of non-renewable resources. The Government has accepted in principle that such revenue-sharing should occur, as the result of claims settlements and through government-to-government agreements. This is seen as a further means of providing both the native groups and the Territorial Government with sources of continuing support as they move to take charge of their own affairs in respective fields of responsibility.

In view of the energy and other resource requirements that are now recognized as becoming increasingly urgent in future, the Government wishes to maintain some momentum in the exploration and development of northern non-renewable resources. The need to know about Canada's frontier reserves is an important element in the Government's energy and resources policies. The Government is also committed to ensuring effective protection of the northern environment and of otherwise taking fully into account the concerns of northern peoples about the regional impacts of resource activity.

Government mechanisms and working arrangements for consulting all northern organizations and groups directly affected by such activity, and directly concerned with land use and resource conservation, will be strengthened and improved in all areas of the Northwest Territories.

At the same time, the Government contemplates that the ownership and control of renewable resources and of some lands will be transferred to the Territorial Government*, on the one hand, and under claims settlements to northern native groups, on the other. This implies that, if the Federal Government continues to control non-renewable resources, a workable system of planning, coordination and cooperation will be essential, if the economic development of the Northwest Territories is to proceed in a rational and coherent way. One of the fundamental causes of uncertainty and anxiety about the future of the Territories stems from the absence of an integrated strategy for economic development which of necessity must take into account variations of condition and need in the various regions of the Northwest Territories. The Federal Government is prepared to work closely with the Territorial Government and the native claimant groups in devising institutions and joint working arrangements for planning and carrying out such a strategy. The precarious nature of the Territorial economy demands no less.

Protection of Native Rights and Interests

From a variety of sources the Government is aware that the Indian, Inuit and Métis groups in the Northwest Territories are looking for legal provisions and political safeguards that will continue to protect their rights and interests no matter what changes may take place in future in the composition of the population; in the responsibilities, powers and functions of the Territorial Government; and in the shape and functioning of the Territorial economy. The native peoples are particularly concerned about their languages and other cultural aspects; their lands and traditional pursuits of hunting, fishing and trapping; their participation in subsidiary bodies of government concerned with such key questions as education, game management, surface land use, conservation and environmental protection. In claims proposals, they have also raised the question of political control and of residence requirements for political purposes.

This whole question of safeguarding the rights and interests of minorities in various parts of the Northwest Territories is not easy to answer but it is one that clearly needs to be given full weight in claims negotiations and in any political consultations about constitutional development.

Because of the complexity of the current demographic distribution and the possibility that the composition of the Territorial population may change substantially, it seems desirable that any legislation proposed for establishing legal rights and political safeguards should strike a fine balance between minority and majority rights.

* Throughout the text, any reference to "Territorial Government" in the future should be read as including the possibility of more than one such government in case the Northwest Territories may be divided.

Among measures that could be considered in the course of consultations about possible inclusions in legislation, presumably the Northwest Territories Act, are the following:

- Establish at Territorial level an advisory commission or council on native affairs whose advice would be required for all decisions of the Territorial Government and all legislation of the Council directly affecting the rights and interests of the native peoples, according to a list prescribed by law.
- Establish that Indians, Inuit and Métis would have proportionate representation on all major subsidiary boards, committees and commissions of the Territorial Government responsible for surface land use, conservation and environmental protection, inland waters, game management, education and cultural pursuits.
- Establish a set of reserved powers conferred on the Commissioner or the Minister in relation to northern native matters.
- Establish for the mixed communities over a certain population (perhaps 1,000) a ward system for civic elections.
- Establish electoral boundaries that reflect the community of interest in various regions, e.g. rural municipalities could have a lower ratio representation in the Territorial Council than the urban municipalities.

As for residence requirements, the Government fully recognizes the concern expressed by native peoples that their rights and benefits, achieved through claims settlements, which might depend on Territorial legislation for fulfilment, should not be done away with or diluted as a result of some new surge of white population into the Northwest Territories. Quite apart from the special interests of the native groups, moreover, are the quite special conditions that exist in frontier society and should be taken into account in deciding how to move on constitutional issues. It is equally important for native and non-native members of such a society that there be some stability in the political situation at Territorial and local levels. Accordingly, while the Government is not prepared to consider the lengthy periods put forward in native claims (10 to 15 years residence), it is willing to consult with northern leaders about instituting some degree of residence requirement for specified political purposes.

Division and Devolution in the Northwest Territories

The land claims in the Northwest Territories of the Indian Brotherhood and of the Inuit Tapirisat (particularly in its most recent restatement) call for the creation of new separate territories, each with a government having a direct relationship with the Federal Government. The boundaries for each would be drawn along lines that encompassed the areas in which the preponderance of Dene and Inuit populations reside respectively. Political control would rest in the hands of the dominant majority in each Territory. The advocates of these positions, which are not developed much beyond a broad line of principle, argue that the Indian and Inuit peoples need territorial jurisdiction, with wide responsibilities, powers and functions in order to survive as distinct cultural groups within Canada.

As already indicated in this paper (under Protection of Native Rights and Interests) the Federal Government is committed firmly to a policy of supporting the concept of continuing Indian and Inuit identity within Canadian society. It is part of this policy that the requirements for sustaining identity are to be worked out jointly with representatives of the Indian and Inuit peoples involved. It is assumed, in the North as well as in southern Canada where Indian reserves are established, that local autonomy is central to the concept of continuing Indian/Inuit identity and status. Other elements include the preservation and promotion of Indian/Inuit languages and other cultural interests; the continuation of hunting, fishing and trapping rights; Indian/Inuit control of education within their communities; encouragement of their economic development; the general strengthening of Indian/Inuit communities through housing and other infrastructure programs; training in managerial and other skills; the delegation of authority and transfer of resources from government to Indian/Inuit communities.

This whole line of policy and program development finds a parallel in the Government's approach to the settlement of comprehensive land claims, wherever they arise in Canada. Packages of settlement proposals are assembled, elaborated and implemented through processes of negotiation with the various claims groups and with variations to take account of the local situation in each case. This approach to land claims is being followed for all native claims in the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

In the Northwest Territories, the initial position put forward by the Indian Brotherhood and the Inuit Tapirisat ranges well beyond the policy the Federal Government is prepared to follow. As has been indicated, the Government has no wish to see the cohesion of ethnic communities undermined: quite the reverse. In the North, as in the South, the Government supports cultural diversity as a necessary characteristic of Canada. However, political structure is something quite different. Legislative authority and governmental jurisdiction are not allocated in Canada on grounds that differentiate between the people on the basis of race. Authority is assigned to legislatures that are representative of all the people within any area on a basis of complete equality. Jurisdiction is placed in the hands of governments that are responsible, directly or indirectly, to the people—again, without regard to race. These are principles that the Government considers it essential to maintain for any political regime or governmental structure in the Northwest Territories.

Accordingly, unless the Indian and Inuit claimants are seeking the establishment of reserves under the Indian Act, as in the South, the Government does not favour the creation in the North of new political divisions, with boundaries and governmental structures based essentially on distinctions of race and involving a direct relationship with the Federal Government.

A case can be made for dividing the Northwest Territories, mainly because of its size and widespread regional differences along functional lines that might run generally North and South. Such division would take into account common interests such as distinctions of language, culture and way of life; economic needs and opportunities; transportation and communication facilities; potential resource revenues. In this way, for instance, the Eastern and Central Arctic area might be divided from the Mackenzie Valley and Delta area along a line determined after full consultation. Among other variants could be that of dividing the predominantly mainland, inhabited areas from the larger uninhabited Arctic Island area, with the latter forming a third, essentially Federal territory for resource exploration and development. The Government is prepared to see such possibilities explored in appropriate political consultations. Division along these lines could go some distance toward meeting the wishes of some of the Inuit and Indians for a territory of their own, although a territory along the lines of the one mentioned for the Eastern area would not be exclusively Inuit any more than one along the lines mentioned for the Mackenzie would be exclusively Indian. These two groups, nevertheless, would form a sizeable proportion of the population in each of the new territories, enabling them to exert a strong influence on government through the democratic process both at territorial and community level.

To move farther in the direction the native groups are looking, representative government in the Northwest Territories (whether divided or not) could be heavily decentralized primarily to the local communities, where in many places the native peoples will continue to be the clear majority. These communities would have an option of establishing regional institutions, which in effect would be an amalgamation of community effort to further Indian and Inuit group interests in such matters as education, land use control, game management and renewable resource development. These are interests distinct from community-level needs such as housing, sanitation, social services and recreation. Already in the Baffin Island and Keewatin regions, community leaders have been proposing regional bodies and the Territorial Government is actively encouraging them, through its policies of decentralization and devolution.

Such amalgamation of native group interests in regional institutions might be desired by all the predominantly Indian and Inuit communities, which in effect are rural municipalities with special interests arising across large land areas. A further requirement in the Mackenzie Valley would be to take fully into account the local wishes of Indian bands as regards the role their band leaders might have in community government and regional institutions. For the cities and towns, the urban municipalities with mixed populations, regional institutions would probably not be viewed as a desirable option.

Devolution would require some realignment of powers and functions between the Territorial and local levels of government. The Territorial Government might continue to exercise broad but defined powers of a policy, finance and regulatory nature, performing in particular a supervisory role in relation to the municipal system which would include urban municipalities (cities and towns) and rural municipalities (hamlets and settlements) and any forms of regional government that might be set up. The responsibilities, powers and functions of the municipalities themselves would also be defined. Such definitions could be the subject of statutory provisions or formal agreements sanctioned by statute.

Responsible Government

In furtherance of the objective of achieving self-government in the North, the Government since 1970 has adopted legislative and administrative changes for both the Yukon and Northwest Territories, in effect enlarging the Territorial Councils, strengthening the Executive Committees by adding elected members of Council, and transferring further jurisdiction and authority to the Territorial Governments. The Territorial Councils have expressed a desire to move to provincehood as the next step but, while pressure for provincial status is mounting, it does not have whole-hearted support in either Territory, certainly not from native groups, who see it as a threat to their special identity and political position. The native leadership is understandably more concerned at the present time about establishing a firm political base for the native peoples and in working out accommodations with non-native interests, mainly through claims processes.

In recognition of the legitimate aspirations and desire of all residents of the Northwest Territories to take charge of their own affairs, the Federal Government is prepared, in addition to other measures already mentioned in this statement, to engage in consultations about the following steps relating to a phased extension of responsible government:

- the restructuring of political institutions and powers, including but not limited to the composition and jurisdiction of the Territorial Council, the composition and role of the Executive Committee, the continuing responsibilities and role of the Commissioner, and reserved powers of the Minister and Governor-in-Council;
- the transfer and delegation of Federal responsibilities and programs to the Territorial Government;
- the devolution of responsibilities, powers and functions from the Territorial Government to communities with the suggested community option for creating regional institutions.

The pace of developments along these lines is likely to vary from territory to territory, if a decision were taken to divide the Northwest Territories as suggested earlier; and from region to region in any event, depending on the capacity of the communities concerned to absorb change. If such division did occur, it would add a different dimension to such questions as enlarging the Territorial Councils and Executive Committee, transferring jurisdiction and programs, adjusting the mandate and role of the Commissioner. As well, devolution to communities could produce its own set of variables affecting the structure, responsibilities and functions of government at Territorial level.

There is an assumption in some quarters in the Northwest Territories that responsible government could and should lead eventually to provincial status, just as the western provinces evolved from the original Northwest Territories. In the light of the factors outlined in this Statement, the Federal Government believes that other possibilities are worth exploring. One alternative would be a Regional Municipality-type government, under which very substantial powers would be vested in the communities comprising the various regions.

The likelihood is that for a long time to come the northern territories, however they are organized politically, will require substantial financial assistance from the Federal Government to meet budgetary deficits. Financial requirements are bound to be the subject of annual consultation and negotiation between the Federal and Territorial levels of government as the process of political evolution unfolds, probably because of it as well. In addition, if the efforts to achieve local and regional autonomy are to succeed, there will have to be financial negotiations between the territorial and community levels of government. In sum, the whole process of phased change in the direction of responsible government will require carefully balanced arrangements to ensure that financial resources follow the devolution of responsibilities, powers and functions to the decentralized levels of government.

Process of Political Consultation

Early in 1977 the Council of the Northwest Territories asked for a special Commission of Inquiry under their auspices, to consult with communities and other interested groups in the Northwest Territories about constitutional developments. To accommodate this kind of approach the Government has decided to appoint its Special Representative to conduct the systematic consultation this statement has been discussing. The objective of this action-oriented consultation is to extend representative, responsive and effective government to all parts of the Northwest Territories and at the same time accommodate the legitimate interests of all recognized groups in northern society, beginning with those of the Indian, Inuit and Métis peoples.

The Special Representative will seek to arrive at agreement or consensus among the various groups consulted about specific proposals and measures that can be implemented progressively through legislative and administrative action. The Special Representative will coordinate his activities with those taking place concurrently in relation to the land claims put forward by northern native groups and also with any discussions at official level about administrative adjustments in the roles and relationships among the three levels of government operating in the Northwest Territories.

The Special Representative will report from time to time to the Prime Minister on all these matters with recommendations for action by the Federal Government. These reports will be considered by an ad hoc committee of Ministers under the chairmanship of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

The Special Representative will be assisted by an advisory group composed of seconded Federal and Territorial officials, together with any other experts and consultants he may require. He will arrange to hold meetings with the northern leaders concerned in various parts of the Northwest Territories. As appropriate Territorial Councillors representing constituencies in which consultations are taking place, will be invited to participate. The Territorial Government will be fully involved throughout the process.

The Special Representative is authorized to set up headquarters in the Northwest Territories and to employ staff for administrative support. Departments and agencies of both the Federal and Territorial Governments are being asked to provide information, advice and other assistance to the Special Representative. As well he will have for consideration various proposals and position papers which have been submitted to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development from the Territorial Council, the Territorial Government, community councils and the native associations in the Northwest Territories.

The Government is aware that the positions put forward in this statement do not satisfy all the submissions and claims presented in the past year or so from interested parties in the Northwest Territories. The statement is guidance for a process that is expected to continue for a lengthy period of time which will largely be determined by the progress made. The issues and attitudes involved are such that quick solutions are neither possible nor desirable.

Enough has been said in the statement to sustain the Government's view that whatever approaches are made in either the Yukon or Northwest Territories, they should be carefully timed and paced with an emphasis on flexibility, sensitivity and workability. The Special Representative, in the course of the political consultation, and other Federal representatives engaged in claims negotiations, must have sufficient room to manoeuvre freely, in order to consider the wide range of proposals expected to emerge from Territorial, community and native groups. An ongoing capacity for change in the face of a rapidly evolving situation must be assumed.

The Situation in the Yukon Territory

For a number of reasons the approach to constitutional development in the Yukon is being considered separately from the one followed in the Northwest Territories. To begin with the Yukon has a longer history of Territorial self-government and quasi-independence. The population balance and distribution, the economy, the municipal structure, and facilities for transportation and communications are all different. The land claims situation, which involves the Council for Yukon Indians (representing the Indian and Métis people of the Yukon), the Federal and Territorial Governments, is rather different and farther advanced than any claims in the Northwest Territories at the present time.

The question of dividing the Yukon does not arise but most of the other major issues, basically between the native and non-native segments of the population, are similar in each Territory. This suggests that the principles, responses and measures discussed in this statement on political development in the Northwest Territories would have some relevance and application in the Yukon.

In the Yukon the process for political consultation on constitutional issues has not been fully worked out. In preliminary discussions, the Territorial Council has asked for the appointment of a Special Representative. It has also put forward certain proposals, including recommendations of April 20, 1977 from its Standing Committee on Constitutional Development; and a proposed replacement for the Yukon Act dated June 5, 1977, involving the establishment of provincial government.

At the same time consideration of the Indian land claim is continuing in a cooperative planning process that involves representatives of the Federal Government, the Territorial Government and the Council for Yukon Indians. All Yukoners are being kept informed about this process, through the publication of jointly-agreed position papers, as they emerge. On July 15 the Planning Council released a paper containing a proposed settlement model.

Although claims discussions of necessity do touch on constitutional questions, there may be a need of a different approach for resolving the fundamental issues of political development in the Yukon. After further consultations with the parties concerned in the Territory, the Government will be deciding whether and when a Special Representative would be appointed for the Yukon, together with his terms of reference.

THE SENATE

Friday, August 5, 1977

The Senate met at 10 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Copies of Order in Council P.C. 1977-1951, dated July 7, 1977, amending Schedule I to the Canada Grain Act, effective August 1, 1977, pursuant to section 15(6) of the said Act, Chapter 7, Statutes of Canada, 1970-71-72.

Copies of the Interim Report of the Environmental Assessment Panel on the Alaska Highway Pipeline, dated July 27, 1977, to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. H. M. Hill, Chairman).

Copies of document entitled "Alaska Highway Pipeline Inquiry", dated July 29, 1977 (Mr. Kenneth M. Lysyk, Chairman), issued by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Copies of Discussion Paper entitled "A Canadian Transportation Accident Investigation Commission", dated August 4, 1977, issued by the Minister of Transport.

Copies of document entitled "MacKenzie Valley Pipeline Inquiry, Synopsis of Volume Two", dated July 27, 1977 (The Honourable Mr. Justice Thomas R. Berger, Commissioner), issued by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Copies of Order in Council P.C. 1977-2066, dated July 21, 1977, amending Part II of the Schedule to the Hazardous Products Act, pursuant to section 8(3) of the said Act, Chapter H-3, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of contracts between the Government of Canada and the municipality of The Pas, Manitoba (English Text), and the municipality of Neguac, New Brunswick (French Text), for the use or employment of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, pursuant to section 20(3) of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, Chapter R-9, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of document entitled "Response of the Solicitor General to the Parliamentary Sub-committee Report on the Penitentiary System in Canada", dated August 5, 1977.

SCIENCE POLICY

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO PUBLISH AND DISTRIBUTE VOLUME 4 OF REPORT ON CANADIAN GOVERNMENT AND OTHER EXPENDITURES ON SCIENTIFIC ACTIVITIES

Senator Lamontagne moved, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i):

That the Special Committee of the Senate on Science Policy be authorized to publish and distribute Volume 4 of its Report on Canadian Government and other expenditures on scientific activities and matters related thereto, as soon as it becomes available, even though the Senate may not then be sitting.

Motion agreed to.

ATTORNEY GENERAL

POSSIBLE CHANGE OF SITE OF STAFF COLLEGE—QUESTION

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government if he could find out whether the Attorney General intends to move his staff college from Edmonton, Alberta, to Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. If that is true, perhaps the leader could also inform the Attorney General that that college is functioning very well in Edmonton and could try to discourage him from making that move.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senator, I shall certainly make an inquiry with respect to the possible removal of the staff college to another Canadian site. However, I do not believe it is my responsibility to convey the opinion expressed in the second part of the honourable senator's observation, in view of the divergent opinions which exist in this chamber with respect to the desirability of Saskatoon certain sites in comparison with other sites.

REVENUE CANADA

REMOVAL OF OFFICES FROM SAINT JOHN, NEW BRUNSWICK—
ANSWER DEFERRED UNTIL LATER THIS DAY

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, yesterday Senator Riley sought certain information with respect to Revenue Canada. I am informed that that information is on its way to the Senate, and therefore I will seek leave later this day to provide the information he requested, since this is quite likely the last day before the recess during which it will be possible to give the answer.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I should like to take this opportunity to say that because of two matters of some substantial public importance which have arisen in recent hours, it may be necessary to delay royal assent until 4.45 this afternoon. An endeavour will be made to have royal assent earlier than that, but I would ask honourable senators, if they are in a position to do so, to remain here this afternoon in order to be here for royal assent and for certain other information which may be available as the hours progress during the day.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

LOANS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES—QUESTION

Senator Desruisseaux: Honourable senators, on June 13 last I asked the Leader of the Government a question pertaining to the amounts of money owed to us by foreign countries, and I asked for the particulars of the reasons for those debts. As a partial answer I was told that the agency CIDA was involved. I was given to understand later by the Leader of the Government that there might be further information forthcoming. I am a little surprised at the delay that has occurred, because, after all, we should know what is owed us by other countries. I realize that my question covered a number of years and that it could take some time to provide the information, but I now ask the government when I can expect to receive that information. Might it be in the fall?

● (1010)

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I shall initiate an immediate inquiry with respect to the status of that further reply which was suggested might be possible. That shall be done today.

ACQUISITION OR RENOVATION OF HOMES

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE FOR SINGLE PERSONS—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I have just received another document containing information sought by the Honourable Senator Grosart. That information has just been handed to me. It concerns his question of August 1 regarding the status of single persons in respect to obtaining government assistance for the acquisition or renovation of homes.

I am advised as follows by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation:

The National Housing Loans Regulations provide that, in the sale or leasing of any house or any unit in a multiple family dwelling constructed with the aid of a loan made by an approved lender under the National Housing Act, the borrower will not discriminate against any person by reason of race, colour, religion, national origin, sex or marital status: regulation 57B.

The one exception to this regulation arises in the Assisted Home Ownership Program where, to meet the objectives of the program, at least two persons must occupy the housing unit. I quote:

Loans under Section 34.15 of the NHA shall be made in respect of family housing units occupied by not less than two persons; and contributions under Section 34.16 of the NHA shall be made in respect of family housing units occupied by not less than two persons, one of which is an adult and the other a dependent child of that adult. (Regulation 97.3)

Senator Grosart: I thank the honourable Leader of the Government for his reply. Nevertheless, I am not clear yet as to the status, because it seemed to me that the information he gave was that under a home assistance program the assistance would not be given unless the space to be occupied was occupied by more than one person. Would that still exclude a single person?

Senator Perrault: It would not seem to exclude a single person. It appears to relate more to numbers than to status.

Senator Grosart: He would have to live with someone.

Senator Perrault: I shall make an additional inquiry on that point. Certainly, on the basis of the information provided by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, that kind of delineation appears not to be made.

TRANSPORTATION

POSSIBILITY OF STRIKE BY AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS—QUESTION

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, I direct a question to the Leader of the Government with respect to the possibility of an air traffic controllers' strike. A news release has indicated that it may be necessary to recall Parliament to legislate the controllers back to work should they go on strike. Does the leader have any comment to make on this subject? One of the reasons for my asking the question is to draw the attention of the government to the report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service, of which I had the honour of being joint chairman, and which reported some months ago.

One of the recommendations of that committee was that when Parliament has been dissolved—this does not apply here because Parliament is not dissolved at the moment—the Governor in Council should be empowered to suspend the right to strike whenever, in his opinion, a strike is opposed to the public interest.

That recommendation might be considered not only when Parliament has been dissolved but also when Parliament is not in session. I draw that to the attention of the leader. Perhaps he might have some comment to make.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators will recall that a few moments ago I referred to two matters of some urgency which had arisen in recent hours which may delay the matter of royal assent. The question of the air traffic controllers' dispute is one of those matters which may require the urgent attention of Parliament. As yet, I am unable to say what may or may not have to be done, but I think it would be irresponsible for either house of Parliament to adjourn for the summer recess until our responsibility to the public has been met, regardless of the direction of any possible action or the time involved.

BEATING RETREAT

MILITARY CEREMONY ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I should like to make a brief comment on a ceremony that took place on Parliament Hill last night. I had the opportunity, as I have no doubt other honourable senators did, of witnessing on the grounds in front of the Parliament Buildings the ancient military ceremony of Beating Retreat. I should like to express, publicly and in a formal sense, my compliments to the members of our armed forces who took part in that ceremony. I have participated in many such ceremonies myself, and have observed many more. I cannot recall, however, ever having seen it carried out more satisfactorily or with more precision than it was last night.

I should like those who took part in it—the Governor General's Foot Guards from Ottawa, the Canadian Grenadier Guards from Montreal, the Naden band from Victoria, the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry band from Calgary, and the Pipes and Drums of the 2nd Battalion of the Royal Canadian Regiment from Gagetown, New Brunswick—to know that their efforts were watched by many hundreds and were deeply appreciated. They deserve high commendation for their excellence.

I should like also to associate myself with the words of the Minister of National Defence in the notice which he caused to be sent round, which are as follows:

Ceremonies in themselves do not make us love our country more but they do help us express our devotion.

I add my hope that it will be found possible, in time to come, to have this ceremony repeated, not only here but in other parts of Canada as well.

Senator Perrault: I know that all honourable senators who witnessed the splendid ceremony of Beating Retreat last night will wish to associate themselves with the sentiments expressed so eloquently by our colleague, the Honourable Senator Smith (Colchester).

MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE INQUIRY

IMPLICATIONS ARISING FROM BERGER COMMISSION REPORT— DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Manning, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to certain implications for Canada arising from the Berger Commission Report.—(Honourable Senator van Roggen).

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, I will be speaking later this morning on Senator Perrault's inquiry calling the attention of the Senate to the construction of a natural gas pipeline, and anything I would say now would simply supplement what I will have to say at that time. The order that presently stands in my name can be terminated, or it may be stood.

Senator Grosart: Or removed from the order paper if no one else wishes to speak.

The Hon. the Speaker: As no other senator wishes to speak on this subject, this inquiry is considered as having been debated.

[Later:]

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to interrupt this debate in order to inform the Senate of the following communication from Government House:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

August 5, 1977

Madam,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable R. G. B. Dickson, LL.D., D.C.L., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 5th day of August, at 4.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be,
Madam,
Your obedient servant,
D. C. McKinnon

Comptroller of the Household

The Honourable

The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

● (1020)

ENERGY

CONSIDERATION OF CONSTRUCTION OF A NATURAL GAS PIPELINE FROM WESTERN ARCTIC TO SOUTHERN CANADA AND CONTINENTAL UNITED STATES—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault rose pursuant to notice of Wednesday, August 3, 1977:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the question of the construction of a natural gas pipeline from the western Arctic to southern Canada and continental United States.

He said: Honourable senators, I am going to be very brief in my comments on this subject. Today we will debate an issue which will have a long-lasting impact on future energy policies of the North American continent. The question of whether to allow or to disallow a northern pipeline, and the route of such a pipeline or such a method of transporting natural gas from the northern areas, is one which will touch the lives of not only this generation but of generations to come, and will very much touch upon the lives of all Canadians, and particularly those Canadians who live in the northern part of our country.

Because of the wide range of possibilities and problems generated by the various pipeline proposals, the government has made every effort to ensure that all pertinent voices are heard before any decision is made. No decision has yet been made by the government, and the views of those with knowledge, experience and ideas are being sought very earnestly at this point by the government.

Honourable senators, we have had the report on the proposed Mackenzie Valley pipeline from Justice Berger. Kenneth Lysyk, Dean of Law at the University of British Columbia, this week reported the findings of the royal commission charged to consider a Yukon natural gas pipeline. Today, both in the other place and in this chamber, other voices are going to be heard.

As I stated, no decision has yet been made. This is how it should be. There are a number of senators whose first-hand knowledge of the northern areas of this country are of extreme importance to any pipeline debate. There are other senators with extensive knowledge in economics and business. There are members of this chamber with extensive background knowledge of the country and of the legal aspects of any such proposed pipeline. There are senators here with a knowledge of the probable impact of such a pipeline on the environment, on the ecology and on agriculture. All of these views and these opinions are of extreme importance to the government.

I can assure honourable senators that I will listen closely to the debate today and that I will convey the views of those in this chamber to my cabinet colleagues when we meet to consider this crucial question. Tentatively, such cabinet meetings are being scheduled over this weekend. I want to emphasize that no firm deadline has been established for the taking of any such decision by the government. It is too important a matter for the government to state arbitrarily that it will make a decision by 5 o'clock tomorrow afternoon so that its members can leave for some sort of summer recess. In my view, it would be very wrong to establish in advance any firm deadline of that kind. In the interests of this country it is important that the decision to proceed, whenever it is taken, be a good one. So, reports that somehow a firm, specific deadline has been set for a cabinet decision are not accurate. The question of the pipeline will be discussed thoroughly, probably this weekend, but beyond this there is, additionally, the position and attitude of the United States to be considered.

Honourable senators, having stated my desire to make sure that all members of cabinet are fully aware of the views held by members of this chamber, I will resume my place to listen to the debate.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government has set a good example in saying that his statement would be brief. I will follow his example, as I know there are other senators who wish to participate, who are much more knowledgeable in this field than I, particularly on the specific subject before us, which is, first of all, the decision whether a pipeline should be built, and secondly, what route it should take and into whose hands should be entrusted the construction of that pipeline.

● (1030)

Honourable senators will recall another pipeline debate that took place a good many years ago, in 1956. This is not the same kind of pipeline debate. There are differences, the main difference, of course, being that at this time we do not have before us the government decision. In 1956 the government decision was before Parliament, a somewhat impatient decision, the result, of course, causing some difficulty for the government at that time.

However, there are some similarities, particularly in timing. We all know that a general election is reasonably imminent at this time, and on that former, famous occasion a general election was about as similarly imminent. The result of the election on that former occasion was one which now gives all members of the group on this side at least, and perhaps others, some hope, for which they may be pardoned, that the result will be the same following the present pipeline debate. I refer, of course, to the fact that on the previous occasion there was a change of government.

Senator Perrault: We remember.

Senator Grosart: As I say, the main difference is that we do not have a statement of government policy or intention before us at this time. Another major difference is that at the present time we have far more information about the consequences, economic, social and otherwise, of any pipeline constructed in this area. The government, I think, has learned a lesson. Perhaps all parliamentarians have learnt a lesson from that last experience. The studies, surprisingly enough, it seems to me, reach more or less a general consensus. I think this is one of the happiest features of the present situation, that we are not faced with widely conflicting differences of opinion on the major issues between the many studies, the three mentioned by the Leader of the Government and the study he tabled earlier today.

Another major difference, which is worth noting, is the emphasis in the present discussions on the environmental aspects of a pipeline, and also the effect on Indian land claims. Those who recall the earlier debate, in 1956, will, I think, agree with me that those matters were scarcely raised at that time. Perhaps this indicates a growing sophistication in our national policies, when now we are greatly concerned with the environmental effects of any pipeline and, particularly, with the effect on any existing Indian claims that there may be. Indeed, from my reading of the studies that have been made, it seems to me that almost the major reason for the preference given to one particular suggested pipeline, the AlCan line, is that it would have less effect on Indian land claims, at least in quantity, if not in quality.

However, although there seems to be this rather surprisingly general degree of consensus on the matter, it is not all plain sailing, even assuming that the government decision follows what appears to be the consensus and particularly in the matter of Indian claims. Many warnings now have been given that this may continue to be the greatest problem facing the start and conclusion of the construction of this line. Honourable senators will, perhaps, be interested in a comment that has been made by the President of the National Indian Brotherhood. In view of the debate held here quite recently with respect to certain other Indian claims, it might be interesting to know that the president of the brotherhood, Noel V. Starblanket, is quoted in a publication with which senators will be familiar, the National Indian, to this effect:

The Energy Board's Alaska Highway Route is not a bad idea but puts the Land Claims of the Yukon Indians in jeopardy. They could be stampeded—

Honourable senators will be interested in this:

—into as bad a solution as the James Bay Agreement.

I make no further comment on that, except to say that there did seem to be general feeling among senators that the James Bay Agreement did from the point of view of the Indians appear to be a good one. Obviously, there may be differences of opinion among the Indians and Inuit with respect to that. The importance attached to the debate continues to indicate, in my opinion, the very great dependence of Canada which exists after many years as a nation on the export of our primary resources products. We are inclined to say very often that we are now one of the great industrial nations. There is some basis for that claim but on the other hand there are factors which indicate that we are far from being an industrial nation in the sense of other western nations, particularly those who are members of the OECD.

Of our imports, approximately 50 per cent of the total is made up of industrial machinery and equipment and motor vehicles of various kinds. Fifty per cent of our total imports remain in this area, in which one would think an industrial nation would certainly be in a position to meet its own requirements. On the other hand, we are largely dependent on the export of our primary resources for the maintenance of our economy at the levels at which we like to see it.

This is an important debate and I on behalf of this group welcome the initiative of the Leader of the Government in placing this inquiry on the order paper. I have no doubt that the debate which now follows will add a good deal to the information, opinion and expertise on which the government will shortly make this very important major decision.

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, I, too, appreciate the fact that this debate is being held. I believe that the moment is an important one for Canada.

I would ask your indulgence in allowing me to provide to honourable senators, and to those who will be reviewing our debates, an overview of the background which has brought us in Canada to this particular decision-making time.

Honourable senators, the United States is seeking a means of transporting natural gas reserves found in Alaska to its domestic market in the continental United States. Two alternatives are being considered by the U.S. government and its agencies, including Congress, one of which is a route combining a pipeline in Alaska running from their Arctic North Slope discoveries to the Port of Valdez on the Pacific Ocean, with tanker carriage of liquified natural gas to ports on the U.S. west coast, and perhaps even some east coast U.S. ports. That particular route is known as the El Paso proposal, after the U.S. company sponsoring it.

The second alternative is to transport natural gas in its discovered and produced form via one of the longest, if not the longest, single natural gas pipeline in the world. That particular alternative requires the agreement of Canada inasmuch as such a pipeline would necessarily have to cross our country. Indeed, it would cross Continental Canada almost in all of its length from north to south. In the United States, this proposal is known as the Canadian option. Either of these alternatives, each costing in the range of $10 billion U.S., would amount to the greatest single physical and financial undertaking ever.

The imminence of natural gas and other energy shortages in the United States and the enormous cost of their present and proposed imports of foreign energy supplies have resulted in a firm determination to have Alaska oil and natural gas reserves available to U.S. consumers at the earliest practical time. The first oil tanker is in passage from Valdez, Alaska, to Cherry Point, Washington, at this very moment. The residents of my province of British Columbia are very worried about the potential of a major oil spill disaster, something which could cause many millions of dollars in damage to Canada, including irreparable environmental and ecological damage. Dealing properly with this hazard is an item of unfinished business in our relations with the United States, so far as I am concerned.

Still, we must all understand the urgency of U.S. needs. Their oil and natural gas reserves to production have been declining steadily since before the energy crisis of 1973-74. When I became Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in May 1970, the U.S. oil import bill amounted to approximately $3 billion, with imports representing about 14 per cent of U.S. domestic supply. Today, the oil import bill is close to $40 billion, and nearly one-half of U.S. oil consumption is imported, mainly from the Middle East. Naturally, I take no responsibility for this, nor for the price of uranium in the United States.

By 1985, without any change in the present energy consumption habits of that country, the oil import bill could be as much as $90 billion, and the U.S. would be even more vulnerable to a supply interruption such as it suffered through political action in 1973-74. None of us should have any doubt that the most powerful nation in the world, and one in whose prosperity Canada has a very large investment, will take whatever measures it must take in the use and consumption of energy to defend its military power and its economic well-being.

In reflection of their need, the U.S. Congress passed into law some three years ago the Alaska Natural Gas Transportation Act, and it was signed by President Ford. In short, it requires the President of the United States to decide and announce by September 1, 1977, which is less than one month from now, the transportation means by which Alaska natural gas will reach U.S. consumers. President Carter can, under certain circumstances, delay his decision by 90 days but, bearing in mind the urgency of the U.S. situation, in general, and the industrial and community disruption caused by the severity of last winter in many parts of the United States, President Carter has made it clear that he wishes to make his decision by September 1 and wishes to know the general Canadian position on pipeline access through Canada by that time. The question now imminently before the Canadian people is whether and on what terms to allow a Canadian pipeline corridor for the transportation of Alaskan natural gas to the main markets of the United States. To deal with this question and the question of the availability of Canada's own western Arctic supplies, the Government of Canada has commissioned studies since 1970 costing in excess of $40 million, and applicants and interveners before various agencies and commissions of the federal government have reputedly spent more than $175 million. These studies have ranged over every imaginable issue of economics, environment, energy supply and demand, the social and political impact and many others. Still every Canadian is aware of the imperfection of our knowledge as we reach this time of decision. Nothing in Canada has been more studied and yet needs to be studied more.

● (1040)

Canadians have had eminent benefit from the opinions, conclusions and recommendations resulting from all of this work. While the United States was interested in a possible pipeline corridor through Canada, it remained to Canadians to choose between two different routes which were expressed by applications before the National Energy Board. The first in time was by Canadian Arctic Gas Pipeline Limited of Toronto who proposed that the corridor be drawn from the north slope of Alaska, east along the Arctic coast to the Mackenzie Delta and then southward along the Mackenzie Valley into Alberta. Their studies over five years are said to have cost $130 million, and were funded mainly by United States gas companies but also by several Canadian companies. The CAGPL route was chosen so that the pipeline could pick up Canadian gas reserves in the Mackenzie Delta for Canadian consumers as well as transporting United States natural gas. In combination it seemed to the applicants that the unit cost to all consumers would thus be cheaper and Arctic gas would be available at the earliest possible time.

The second proposal before the National Energy Board was made by Foothills Pipe Lines (Yukon) Limited of Calgary who are mainly sponsored at this time by the Alberta Gas Trunk Lines Limited and Westcoast Transmission Company in Canada, although it appears likely that many of the previous U.S. backers of CAGPL will want to join their team. The route proposed by Foothills, called the AlCan route, would go south in Alaska to Fairbanks and then generally follow the Alaska highway through the Yukon and into British Columbia and Alberta. While the AlCan route was to be devoted to Alaska natural gas, the notion existed that the Mackenzie Delta gas could be connected to the main line somewhere in the Yukon and taken off again in Alberta for eastern Canadian consumption.

It is well known that in May of this year Mr. Justice Berger recommended against the CAGPL route on environmental and social grounds. He believes the Canadian Arctic slope between Alaska and the Mackenzie Delta is too sensitive environmentally to construct and operate a pipeline. To allow for the settlement of land claims and the political development of the native populations of the Northwest Territories, he recommended a 10-year moratorium on construction of the Mackenzie Valley portion of the line. He thought the alternative AlCan route could be approved at an earlier time.

On July 4, 1977, the National Energy Board recommended to the Government of Canada that the Mackenzie route should not be proceeded with on the basis of environmental, social and native claims problems, and also on the basis of inadequate Canadian natural gas reserves at this time in the Mackenzie Delta. They have proposed to the government that the AlCan route be chosen, if a land corridor is to be offered to the United States at all. In such case the National Energy Board would like the route in the Yukon to swing northward so as to reduce the cost of an eventual connection to the Mackenzie Delta for Canadian natural gas when economic reserves are shown to be available. A study by the Department of the Environment released on July 27, 1977, found that there were no absolute environmental barriers to the AlCan route and recommended that certain further assessments be taken. Finally, on August 2 last, the Lysyk Inquiry made its report approving a Yukon pipeline route subject to a four-year delay of construction to August 1, 1981, to permit settlement of native claims and the completion of other necessary studies.

Honourable senators will appreciate that each of these studies contains material of much complexity and importance on many significant issues relating to the pipeline question. This debate allows time to deal only with what I think is essential in weighing the facts and the appropriate choices which appear from those facts.

One item to my mind clearly essential is to recognize and acknowledge the immense public service which has been done for Canada by the applicants and interveners, by the National Energy Board and by the other agencies involved. Behind them stand thousands of scientists, professionals, advisors of every kind, witnesses and participants who have figured in some way in bringing us to this point in the debate. It is a magnificent effort by Canadians in the processes of a free democratic society and is something to be proud of.

In the sense that the process we have been engaged in, there are no losers but there are those who are necessarily disappointed in the outcome of the recommendations. I should like to say to Bill Wilder, Vern Horte, John Yarnell and many others of the CAGPL group that they deserve great thanks and recognition for the work they have done. Collectively, they are as fine a team as could have been put together for such a great national undertaking. I hope their talents will not be lost to the work which lies ahead. I express the same recognition of Bob Blair, Bob Pierce, Reg Gibbs and others in the Foothills group whose concept of the AlCan route has been recommended to the government and to the Canadian people and now awaits decision. They may very well have charge of one of the greatest Canadian undertakings ever.

Now we have reached a decision-making time and, as the last step, Parliament is making its views known to the people and to the Government of Canada. Here are some of my thoughts about the present and future course of action.

The Mackenzie route began as one of great promise for Canada but it ran into two subsequently emerging facts which I think were decisive in sidelining it at this particular time. The first fact was that the promise of reserve discoveries in the Mackenzie Delta was not fulfilled. Instead of achieving reserves of between 12 trillion and 15 trillion cubic feet of gas, less than six trillion cubic feet of gas has been found, and there is at the moment no economic way of removing those particular reserves. Much more needs to be found. Unfortunately for the Mackenzie route but fortunately for Canadians, the second fact is that in Alberta, and to a lesser extent in British Columbia, very substantial new reserves of natural gas have been added to our supplies in the last three years. Those reserves discoveries have been largely incentivized by government policies which have increased the price of energy and the cash flow available to industry to carry out exploration. It is thus apparent that the need for a Mackenzie Valley pipeline to carry gas to service Canadians in southern Canada is not yet. We have, as I said, the reserves in Alberta to look after us for at least 15 to 20 years into the future. Those facts together with the opposition of the native community to a Mackenzie Valley pipeline at this time, opposition based on native claims, on social and environmental impact, and opposition based on a concept of their political development, have, I believe, led to a decision by the Canadian people to turn away from the Mackenzie Valley pipeline. I think the natives in the Northwest Territories should understand that the people of southern Canada, indeed the people of all of Canada, have listened to their views and have taken them into account, and I am sure that history will show that.

What has therefore come to our main attention is the AlCan route which is not a route that would assist Canada, in my view, in any important way in making our western Arctic gas resources available to southern Canadians. It is essentially a service route for United States needs. It is a service route to bring United States natural gas to the main markets of the continental United States. On balance, however, I submit to you that there are good reasons why Canada should consider favourably the opening of negotiations with the purpose of offering that particular pipeline route to the United States. In the first place, whether neighbours are individuals or nations, they should always assist one another in solving the problems that at one time or another come to beset us. We have this duty to the United States as they have to us. Being good neighbours is not only enlightening but also practical. Each can benefit from assisting the other. We share many values in our ways of life, and the United States in its military and economic power is an important country to Canada, both in our security and in our progress. In a direct way Canadians stand to benefit substantially from the building of that particular pipeline. Econometric studies show that the resultant investment of about $4½ billion to $5 billion in the Canadian economy in the next five to six years would substantially help in dealing with the problem of unemployment and would be a great psychological boost to the business community in this country.

● (1050)

While it is my view, honourable senators, that Canada should look favourably upon the principle of assisting in the construction of an AlCan line for the United States, the real question in my mind is not whether to build such a pipeline but on what terms. Whatever those terms, they will be exceedingly difficult to negotiate.

I have had several experiences in negotiating with the United States, and they are tough and they are inclined to have their own view, if at all possible. But I do believe that, if we stick to reasoned arguments and fair arguments and we have the courage to stick to those arguments, we in Canada will have a fair arrangement with the United States.

The government is really between the devil and the deep blue sea in taking a decision to negotiate with the United States. If it appears to negotiate for too little, the Canadian people will reject the pipeline with very important consequences for the government and for this country and for our relations with the United States. If we are too tough, we may lose the pipeline with the same important consequences. It is a question, as we saw with respect to the Columbia River Treaty, of not being able to satisfy your critics very well, but having to wait until history judges the effect of what you have done.

We do, however, have the ability to gauge the larger terms of reference on which we might allow this pipeline to proceed. That ability is occasioned by the costing process of the El Paso route, which is the alternative. We can take a look at that particular cost. We do know what the United States will have to pay, if the Canadian alternative is not acceptable to them.

I think Canada is entitled to be paid in accordance with the value of the services it provides to the United States and the benefits which the United States receives from receipt of Alaska natural gas. I believe that, if the AlCan route and the El Paso route are of approximately equivalent cost, the United States will see it to their advantage to adopt the AlCan route, provided they feel secure in that investment and secure in the throughput allowances. If all costs and other things were equal, I think the United States would prefer to have its natural gas in the midwest where its demand is greatest and would prefer not to make its extensive shipping lines subject to military intervention. I think it would not prefer to construct new continental pipelines across the United States.

I feel also that Canada can make available to the United States an arrangement, which should be at no great cost to us, and which would perform a large service in alleviating the present energy crisis in the northern part of the United States. The service I propose is one of swapping existing reserves of natural gas in Alberta for reserves that are to be produced in Alaska in the 1980s.

We can put those reserves into the United States in the next two or three years—and certainly in the next four years—at a time when, under the recommendation of the Lysyk Commission, the AlCan pipeline would only be commencing construction. If that swap arrangement could be effected, we would have all the time necessary to complete studies and to complete negotiations with respect to native claims without any undue pressure on either side.

This is the way we could obtain a fair and equitable agreement with the United States. Early swapping of existing Canadian reserves is a carrot we should be dangling in front of the United States early in our negotiations.

Honourable senators, I want to mention for a moment the important problems of high cost and security of supply of energy which exist in our maritime provinces. I do not think the government should ignore or discontinue its research into the possibility of extending a gas pipeline from Montreal to Halifax. We need reserves to fill it. We hope to have western Arctic reserves to put into our system. We do not have them yet. Additional exploration in the western Arctic is necessary to see if we can develop those reserves. We need to urge additional exploration in the eastern Arctic to see if gas reserves can be made available to Montreal and the maritimes, either by pipeline or by LNG ships. The Canadian government should be alert to the development of our Arctic potential and should keep in mind the desirability of supplying natural gas to maritime Canada. That part of our country continues to have real problems with respect to supply interruptions and the continuing rise in the price of international oil.

May I remind you that we already have extensive relations with the United States in terms of pipelines crossing our respective countries. I asked a question in the Senate earlier this week with respect to the present standing of a treaty that has been negotiated recently between Canada and the United States to provide for existing and future pipeline operations linking our respective countries. I understand that the United States Senate has ratified that treaty this week. Unfortunately, Senator Perrault has not been able to reply, and I did want to ask him what executive or parliamentary action was proposed for that particular treaty in Canada.

I wish to make it clear to those Canadians who have an anti-American bias, or at least who do not care or think clearly about our relations with the United States, that there are three important pipeline connections that service Canada and cross the United States. One is the Portland Oil Pipeline which runs from Portland, Maine, to Montreal and brings to Montreal and Quebec much of their international oil supplies. The continuing smooth functioning of that pipeline is important to the economy of Canada. Another is an oil pipeline called the Interprovincial Pipeline, which loops south of the Great Lakes from Edmonton and brings its oil to Sarnia, Toronto and Montreal. That is a vital arterial link for Canadian energy supplies. The third is, of course, the Trans-Canada Gas Pipeline which also has a loop south of the Great Lakes.

In addition, for those with a sense of grudge or an arbitrary attitude towards the United States, let me remind you that the Province of Ontario is quite dependent on United States thermal and metallurgical coal. Ontario obtains about one-third of its electrical energy from coal sources in the United States. There is no source of Canadian coal that can compete in price with that particular coal. The steel industry in Ontario is dependent on metallurgical coal from the United States.

Honourable senators, in conclusion, I say that Canada, at least in principle, must look with favour on the offer to the United States of the possibility of an AlCan route across Canada.

I think the Canadian government must be cautious indeed not to appear committed until it knows clearly what the essential terms and conditions of that arrangement will be. All honourable senators are aware that that agreement, if, when and as it is entered into, must be, and must appear to be, a fair and reasonable agreement in the interests of Canada. If it does not appear to be such, the Canadian people will reject it. But honourable senators also know that an agreement, if it is to last and is to provide the benefits which can flow from a more substantial relationship between our two countries, must be fair and reasonable to both sides. I hope that is the spirit in which we will negotiate with the United States.

Senator Cameron: Honourable senators, in view of the importance of this subject in its economic, ecological, and other aspects, I wonder if the Leader of the Government has given any consideration to the possibility that, with the use of an aircraft of the Department of National Defence, members of Parliament who wished to could fly up to the pipeline and view for themselves the actual area involved. This would enable them to become much better informed as to what is really involved in this tremendous economic undertaking.

● (1100)

A number of senators have intimated to me that they would be quite prepared to pay their own living expenses provided transportation was supplied. As I said, a National Defence aircraft could be used for this purpose, provided arrangements were made in time.

Has the Leader of the Government considered this idea? If not, would he consider it and let us know what the reaction of the authorities would be to such a proposal?

Hon. Paul Henry Lucier: Honourable senators, I am sure you are all thoroughly confused by all the reports, studies, inquiries and news stories you have been bombarded with in the past several months concerning a possible pipeline route for bringing natural gas from Alaska to the lower 48 states. Senators can probably appreciate how the people of the north feel by now. We have been the subject of numerous studies, inquiries and discussions, which have left us with the distinct feeling that if we could charge fees for being studied we would be rich enough to build our own pipeline by now.

To quote Robert Service: "Strange things are done in the land of the midnight sun," and I am sure history will show that this was the case in the choice of a route to bring gas down from Alaska.

Canadian Arctic Gas have spent in excess of $140 million preparing an application for construction of a pipeline down the Mackenzie Valley, and they withdrew their application two weeks before a decision was to be made on a pipeline route.

Before the Alaska Highway route was being considered seriously, Elijah Smith, a 65-year old Indian, who was chairman of the Council for Yukon Indians at the time, told the Canadian Arctic Gas consortium, through the Berger Inquiry, over a year ago, that the only feasible route for a pipeline was down the Alaska Highway. He also suggested to them how it could be done with the native people of the Yukon participating in the pipeline construction and operation. It was probably the best piece of advice they received for their $140 million, and Elijah never charged them a cent for it.

Chapter two, as the story goes, to quote John Bennett, chief of El Paso, has Mr. Bob Blair, President of Foothills, "drafting the Alaska Highway project proposal on the back of an envelope" and presenting it to the National Energy Board in August of 1976. On May 9, 1977, the Berger report recommended that no pipeline be built down the Mackenzie Valley for 10 years. On that day, Mr. Blair's envelope became very valuable. The National Energy Board report also said "no" to the Mackenzie Valley route while accepting Foothills' proposal of the Alaska Highway route. The board did, however, advocate realignment through Dawson to bring Delta gas down the Dempster Highway, even though Foothills had made no provision for bringing Delta gas into their system. At this point, Mr. Blair's envelope was worth about $10 billion.

The next development was the tabling of the Lysyk report, which recommends, among other things, a four-year delay in pipeline construction. I would hope that this would not jeopardize our bargaining position with the Americans.

This delay concerns me at this time. I hope that there is a good reason for a delay if one has to be asked for. Something else in the report which concerns me is that after hearing from all native groups in the Yukon that they did not want a pipeline under any circumstances until their claims were settled and implemented, which could mean seven to 10 years, the report recommends that a $50 million trust fund be set up by the federal government for the Indians of the Yukon.

The Indians have never asked anyone for $50 million. In fact, it is my understanding that they are negotiating for much more than that, and they have always taken the position that land and not money was their primary concern. If, in the national interest, a pipeline is to be built before Indian land claims are settled, the Indian people of the Yukon should be permitted to negotiate their position, and should not be "bought off" with a sum of money, regardless of the amount.

I am not suggesting that I agree or disagree with the $50 million, and I am not suggesting that the pipeline should be delayed for seven to 10 years. All I am saying is that I feel that if the native people of the Yukon are going to be considered seriously in this, they should not just be told, "Here is $50 million; now go and do your negotiating somewhere else." I think that is something for them and the government to be negotiating.

I should also like to comment on the Heritage fund suggested in the Lysyk report. The idea of a fund is a good one, although I am not sure that $200 million is a realistic figure. That is something that will also have to be negotiated at the time. It is also my opinion that it would have to be administered locally—that is, in the Yukon by Yukoners. We have experts in the Yukon who could deal with such a Heritage fund.

I should also like to make the point at this time that if roughly $200 million is to be administered by a government body, there is a formula which has been worked out to the effect that it takes X number of people to deal with such an amount of money, and we would require 1,500 people to deal with the Heritage fund, which would create more of an impact on the Yukon than the pipeline.

We have always said that there must be some lasting benefit for the people of the Yukon if a pipeline is to go through the Yukon. One way of obtaining such benefits could be the electrification of the pipeline. We have great hydro potential in the Yukon, but, as you know, development is very expensive and a guaranteed base load must be obtained before a hydro development is built.

The compressors and pumps required to operate a pipeline could be powered by electricity instead of gas, at rates equal to the gas delivered at the point in the United States. We would also be using a renewable resource to replace a non-renewable resource, which is of prime importance. It would also help the future development of the Yukon by supplying power for other development.

I think this is a very important phase that we should be looking at, and I think the pipeline people would certainly be agreeable to this type of project. This is something that should be negotiated before a pipeline is agreed to. To suggest that we wait until after the pipeline is in is just not good business, because I am sure that they will take the easiest route after the pipeline is in. If we are going to have electrification of that pipeline, it should be negotiated before the pipeline agreements are signed.

The implications of the impact of a pipeline through the Yukon are very frightening to those of us who live there. We know that our lives will be changed by a pipeline and that things will never really be the same. We live in the north because we enjoy the life style the Yukon offers, and it is difficult to relinquish even a small corner of our territory to anyone. However, if it is found to be in the national interest to do so, I am sure a pipeline can be built in the Yukon. We ask that great care be taken, especially during the construction and post-construction periods, to guard against social, environmental and economic disruption.

Much of our future energy requirements will have to come from the north, be it the Mackenzie Delta, the Arctic Islands or wherever. Since this is the first pipeline to be built from the Arctic to southern markets—and I am sure there will be others—I hope we take great care and set a tough precedent for others to follow.

In conclusion, honourable senators, I should like to say that the reports which have come from the pipeline applications, especially the Lysyk report in our case—Dean Kenneth Lysyk, along with Edith Bohmer and Willard Phelps, both Yukon natives—and the Berger report, will be, in my opinion, of great benefit to the development of Canada, especially the north of Canada, in years to come.

I am not talking about just pipelines here. I am talking about the whole development of the north. These two groups went into the north country and they sat for hours listening to the opinions of the people. They listened and paid attention to what the people said. I could read the Lysyk report right now and I could tie in everything that is in that report to some person. I know that he went there and listened to the people in the north. That has never been done before. They should all be given a very sincere vote of thanks for having done a fantastic job. The Berger Inquiry and the Lysyk Inquiry have done a fantastic job, and their reports will be of great value to the Government of Canada and to the people of Canada in terms of our future development.

● (1110)

Hon. Norman McL. Paterson: Honourable senators, today our dollar is worth 93 cents in the United States. It is at a discount. When you begin to think about this pipeline, which is going to run into billions and billions of dollars, one hardly knows how much money will have to be transferred from American into Canadian funds. It has been said that the Canadian dollar will probably run as high as 20 cents above par, which would really be a disaster for Canada. This may not happen for a year or two, because there will not be too much money spent right away; but when the material and equipment have to be paid for, and wages paid, and food carted up to the north, it will result in a tremendous exchange in money. A lot of careful consideration should be given to the question of trying to keep the Canadian dollar from going too high and getting us into trouble.

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, Senator Smith (Colchester) started to rise as I did, but he kindly waved me ahead.

Senator Smith, I would be very happy to wait if you wish to go first.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Please proceed, senator.

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, before coming to the remarks I wish to make relative to the pipeline, I should like first of all to say something in partial response to the very important question just raised by Senator Paterson, and which I know has been of concern to a great number of people in Canada, namely, that the economic impact of this huge project may be adverse to us in that it will drive our dollar too high, make our exports too dear, and make our imports too cheap.

As I understand it, however, Senator Paterson, quite a thorough study has been done on this subject. I know of one or two senior people in investment circles in Canada who were involved in that study, and they think that the pipeline project can be concluded without having the serious effects on our dollar that you have just indicated. We can only hope that they are correct.

I will certainly not take up your time, honourable senators, with repeating the excellent review given by Senator Austin of the history of the development of the pipeline, in its study stages, that has brought us to this point. I should like, however, to make this observation, that my reason for adjourning the inquiry launched last June 15 by Senator Manning—which I did not then return to, because I had heard that this debate would be taking place—was not to disagree with the general thrust of Senator Manning's excellent speech, but to point out to honourable senators that he was, if I may use the word, guilty of something that some of us in my part of the country have found to be all too prevalent in recent months. When I say this, I have in mind Senator Manning's reference to "the pipeline," as though the Mackenzie Valley pipeline was the only game in town. Some of us who have been supporting the AlCan concept for the better part of a year found that one of the greatest difficulties facing us was to have it taken seriously. It is now, of course, being taken very seriously. Things have changed very quickly, and in this respect it is significant to remember that Senator Manning's speech was delivered only six weeks ago. The reasons that many of us had for supporting the AlCan proposal have been borne out by the various reports, both on ecological and economic grounds.

It is the Lysyk report that I wish to deal with first for a few moments, if I may, although Senator Lucier has already done so, and much more effectively than I can. While I lived in the Yukon for a number of years, I hate to think how long ago that was. I do feel, however, that Senator Lucier is absolutely correct when he says that the proposed four-year delay, which is really only a two-year delay, since there would be two years of engineering before this project could get under way anyway, might well be sufficient to throw the decision in the United States in favour of El Paso, which in my view would be very tragic for the United States and for Canada. The United States, however, is in urgent need, and I do not think this delay is in the best interests of Canada, nor do I think it is necessary. In fact, my personal view is that the Indian claims could be settled just as equitably while the pipeline is under construction as before construction. The claims are not of such a nature that the pipeline is really going to do violence to any Indian lands. The pipeline, basically, is going to run along highways that are already in existence, and even if the diversion through Dawson City takes place, much of that too will be along existing highways.

The heritage fund bothers me, honourable senators. If you are going to give that sort of money to the Yukon for having this pipeline run down the Alaska Highway—which, in my view, will cause little permanent disruption, although it will cause a lot of temporary disruption during the construction period—what about the small communities in northern British Columbia which will be equally adversely affected by the pipeline passing through that part of the Alaska Highway? What about the communities in Alberta, or southern Saskatchewan, or, for that matter, Alaska, each of which will bear several hundred miles of this pipeline? Are they all to have heritage funds established? Are all of these funds to be front-loaded into the cost of this project before there is any cash flow from it? If you start down the road, you may well put a sufficient burden on this project to close that gap that Senator Austin was referring between the cost benefit of the AlCan route and the cost benefit of the El Paso route. While very tough and difficult negotiations are to go on between Canada and the United States, we do not have the United States in supplication on its knees on our doorstep saying, "Please let us have this pipeline!"

I would like to deal with two things: the benefit of this pipeline to Canada, and the benefit of it to the United States—because there is a benefit to both which is very substantial, in my judgment. One thing I would take exception to in what Senator Austin had to say—although only as to its interpretation—was his statement that the AlCan route was only—I think that was his expression—a service set up to serve American needs with regard to bringing their gas down to the United States. This kind of statement tends to leave the average Canadian—and this has been said many times by the media—with the impression that we are simply permitting our country, somehow, to be violated at no benefit to ourselves so that we can serve our friends in the United States. Let me just point out that the construction of this fantastic enterprise, mostly in Canada, over a period of years, will be a magnificent spur to our lagging Canadian economy. The applicant that won this very strenuous gamble of the last several months, namely, the AlCan people, is a consortium 90 per cent Canadian owned, as you will see if you go to the equity positions behind the participants. I might say that the Arctic Gas people, with their Mackenzie Valley proposal, were, in equity terms, about 90 per cent American owned, which was one of the reasons I was a staunch supporter of the AlCan group.

The AlCan design will be using pipe manufactured in Canada, whereas the other group would not have used nearly as high a percentage of pipe manufactured in Canada, and so there will be a great spur to Canadian industry during the construction period.

One thing which is almost never mentioned, however, and which I think is extremely important, is that the throughput charges, in perpetuity into the future, will be approximately $500 million a year, every year, and this will be in addition to any money required for the servicing of the debt of the line. That $500 million I refer to will come from charges we will make in Canada, legitimately, for the operation of the pumping stations and other services for the operation of the line each year.

● (1120)

With an imbalance of payments such as we have at the moment in our world balance, let alone with the United States, half a billion dollars a year off that imbalance is not to be sneezed at. It is a very large and important factor for Canadians to keep in mind. I do not want to harp back too many years, but I certainly do not want to see us fumble this one away as we fumbled the oil pipeline away. As a west coaster who does not like to see all those tankers coming into our narrow waters, I would much rather have seen an oil pipeline built down this same route ten years ago, rather than the present Alyeska line and the tankers we now have.

Those are some of the advantages to Canada in financial terms. There is, of course, another great advantage to Canada which would be completely lost if the Americans went El Paso, and that is we would then be denied a simple method of getting our present reserves of gas out of the Mackenzie Delta. If those reserves could be vastly increased in either the Mackenzie, the shallow Beaufort or the deep Beaufort Sea—if you can design a method of getting that ashore—fine, we may be able to build our own pipeline down the Foothills route and down the Mackenzie ten years from now, or at a later date. If, however, we do not find more gas in the western Arctic and are confined to only the five or six trillion cubic feet we now have in the Mackenzie Delta, which is not a large amount in total terms, then the Dempster connection, or a solution of that nature, is the only manner in which we will be able economically to bring out such a small quantity of gas. That will be foreclosed to us entirely if the AlCan line is not built and the Americans go El Paso. The Dempster is not something that we must decide on immediately. This is another advantage of El Paso over the Arctic gas route. The Canadian decision does not need to be made on our Arctic gas for at least 15 years maybe longer. By that time we will know what we have in the Beaufort, we will have done more exploration in the Arctic islands, and we will decide then whether we want to come down the Polar route, whether we want to come down the Foothills route, whether we want to take some out by LNG tankers or whether we want to come down the Dempster. These are all options to us, and Canada, because of this requirement of the United States for an immediate decision, should not allow itself to be forced into an immediate decision that it does not have to make at this time. This is another reason why I was an AlCan supporter.

Now, so much for the benefits to Canada. You might say, "Golly, what do our negotiators go down to the United States with under those circumstances? We have no choice but to bend to their terms in building this line." That is not at all the case. Various arguments take place as to the cost differential of El Paso. The El Paso people themselves acknowledge 25 or 30 cents per mcf. The Foothills people say 95 cents. Let us use 50 cents for quick and easy calculation. When you start talking about two billion cubic feet a day through this line—the initial capacity will be 1.2 billion, I think it is, and it can go up to a total capacity of 2.9 billion, but let us say a couple of billion as being the figure by the first five years—at an average of 50 cents, quickly, it would be $300 million or $400 million a year. Would I not be very close, Senator Lucier? That is $300 million or $400 million a year loaded on to the cost of that gas to American consumers, over and above the cost of bringing it down the Alaska Highway. That is a lot of money. They will not be paying that once: they will be paying that every year for as long as the El Paso route operates; and they will be paying it in ever-increasing inflated dollars because the El Paso route, because of the operation of the liquefaction plants, the tankers and the regasification plants, has an ongoing inflated cost factor for each year of operation, whereas a pipeline, once built and in the ground, does not continue to have escalated costs, so that on the pipeline they have a fixed cost in today's dollars for 20 or 25 years into the future, whereas in the El Paso route they have non-fixed costs, escalating with inflation, for 20 years into the future. The El Paso route would cost them a great deal of money. But it would do more than that. It would put Canada in a position where we would have to look very closely at our ability to, number one, honour—and I hope we always will, if we can—our present export contracts to the United States because we would not have the benefit of being able to hook into our Arctic gas by the Dempster connection; it would be foreclosed to us. We would certainly no longer be in a position to make generous gestures to the United States, such as we did last winter during their energy crisis, by giving them extra gas, and we would certainly not be able to consider a swapping arrangement—referred to by Senator Austin—to fulfill their needs for the next three or four years, until they have the El Paso route in operation. If they go AlCan, we, of course, can readily supply additional gas to them from Alberta reserves, over and above our present commitments, during this four or five year construction period, until they can get their own gas, on the basis that they will give us back—not dollars, but gas. That swapping deal would be out for them in the case of El Paso.

We have lots of cards to play. This line is not just a service to the United States that we sort of regretfully will permit them to have across our country. It is of inestimable, huge value to the Canadian economy and to our balance of payments on an ongoing basis into the future. By the same token, it would be very detrimental, in my judgment, for the United States to go the El Paso route for the reasons I have mentioned, so there are good bargaining chips on both sides of the border to enable the negotiators to arrive at a fair and proper contract between the two countries for the construction of the AlCan route. Certainly, those will be difficult negotiations, but I would like to echo Senator Austin's remarks that no deal in business or between governments is good if it is one-sided. A deal must be fair and profitable to both sides, if it is to last and be worthwhile. I am sure this can be arrived at between our respective governments, if people who are inclined to take extreme positions on one side or the other do not dominate the field. I am quite satisfied that the Carter administration and the Government of Canada, led by the Prime Minister, will approach this negotiation in a spirit that will see it brought to a successful conclusion. I would only hope that the heavy lobbying of the El Paso group in Congress does not disrupt that satisfactory conclusion.

I would simply like to close on this note, that if we arrive at a satisfactory agreement with the United States on the AlCan route, I think you will see open—and I do not go to the extreme of saying a new era—a new phase in Canada-U.S. relations, which many perceive to have gone through a difficult period in the last ten years. I think this will lead us into a new phase of improved, satisfactory and excellent relations, where we can go hand in hand in this magnificent development; whereas, if the United States, either through our obduracy or their own miscalculation, goes the El Paso route, I can see a souring in the relationship between Canada and the United States for many years to come.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Walker: May I ask either Senator van Roggen or Senator Austin a question, just so the record will be complete? Arctic Gas was a very substantial company that had aspired to take its place in this development. Could we have on the record why Arctic Gas was turned down? I do not think very much has been said about that.

Senator van Roggen: Well, as I have already indicated, I am a prejudiced person to ask that question of, because I have been an advocate of the AlCan route for the better part of a year. I will give you my views, and then I can be corrected by Senator Austin, who I think was more favourable to the Arctic Gas proposal.

My principal concerns about the Arctic Gas proposal were these—and I am sorry that I am not prepared to make a speech on the subject; I will just have to gather my thoughts.

● (1130)

First, you are building in much more difficult terrain, where the technology and chances of overrun are much greater than building a line with known technology down the Alaska Highway with the existing infrastructure. Therefore, the cost overruns might be much greater. Secondly, the equity behind the consortium was mostly American, as opposed to the AlCan route which was mostly Canadian, as I have just mentioned. Thirdly, we did not need that gas out of the Mackenzie Delta at this time. It is frontier gas; it is twice as expensive as Alberta gas. Why pay the cost of starting to consume that expensive Canadian gas at this time when we can continue to enjoy the consumption of cheaper gas, particularly in eastern Canada, for the next ten or fifteen years? We do not need that gas down at this time. It seems that we were being forced into a decision simply because of an American requirement for a decision on that route at this time.

The remaining concern I had was this, which was brought out in evidence before the National Energy Board even if it is not an official request of government. It was clear in cross-examination concerning the Arctic Gas proposal that they would be requiring, in fact, I think there is a letter indicating it on file with Mr. Macdonald, a guarantee of the taxpayers of Canada of overrun charges and interruptions on the Mackenzie line, not only during construction but for the duration of the life of the line. That guarantee being asked to be given to a large consortium, including such poor little companies as Exxon, Gulf, Shell and CPR, would have required legislation in Parliament and would, in my view, have created a riot. It would have made the 1956 pipeline debate look like a children's picnic, and Senator Grosart might well have had his wish.

Those were some of my reasons for opposing it. I thought it was politically undoable and not in Canada's best interests. When the Berger report came down I then knew it was undoable, and I do not think there was any use in looking at it after that because, if you couple it with those other arguments, I do not think you had anything that Parliament would put up with.

You can now ask Senator Austin for the rebuttal to that.

Senator Walker: I should like to hear Senator Austin's views, because he, too, has studied this. I think it would be better to have it on the record, for then we will have a clear picture.

Senator Austin: The technical answer is that the Arctic Gas application was not turned down. As you know, the National Energy Board makes a recommendation to the government. It recommended against that route. The government did not take a decision and the application was withdrawn before the government had an opportunity to consider the National Energy Board recommendation.

The reasons given by Senator van Roggen have played a role, particularly reasons related to native claims and to the environmental condition of the Canadian Western Arctic slope; that is the portion between the Prudhoe Bay discovery and the Mackenzie Delta. However, I think it is clear that the Mackenzie route, on a purely economic basis, was a better route for gas consumers in Canada and the United States than the AlCan route will be. It offered the opportunity to combine both Canadian and Alaskan gas in one pipeline, and thereby reduce somewhat the unit costs of carrying that gas.

What, however, has happened is that political and social conditions played a very large and, I think, appropriate role in the decision of the National Energy Board. In particular, associated with the inadequacy of the reserves in the delta therefore failing to make an economic case for those Canadian reserves, and the substantial discovery of reserves in Alberta, the Mackenzie route failed to gain the favourable case that it was looking for from the Canadian people.

Senator Walker: Thank you very much.

Hon. Paul Desruisseaux: Honourable senators, I want to thank Senator Smith (Colchester) for allowing me to speak now. He rose a while ago and should really speak before me. However, he has graciously permitted me to make my speech now, which will not be long.

There is little to be added to what has been said about the pipeline issue, and the short time allowed to us on this issue is probably bothersome. However, as a Canadian I am concerned about the repeated warnings by our technical authorities that major gas and oil shortages will occur in the next few years, and I, for one, naturally strongly resist any of the Berger and Lysyk recommendations because of that.

I am not one of those who believe the pipeline now being talked about, which will service the whole North America continent at the time of the forecast crisis of major oil and gas shortages in the next four or five years, should be delayed for ten years, as suggested in the first part of the Berger report because of possible disturbance or accidents affecting the ecology, when this country can properly legislate on its route and impose appropriate guidelines and conditions.

The Berger report appeared to me to have been one-sided and weak. It does not seem to take into account the coming major continental oil and gas shortages, the economic development of the northwestern territories of Canada, eastern Canada's urgent need of energy for its industries and its winter heating needs.

The Berger report is full of enlightened compassion and environmental concern, and Mr. Justice Berger must be praised for it. However, the report took little or no account of the urgent fuel needs, of the crisis that left us no alternative, of the harsh background of Canada's faltering economy, of the rising unemployment and the present stagnant investment situation in Canada. It totally ignored our obligations to reduce a deep deficit in our dealings with the United States, which country is in dire need of fuel.

● (1140)

The situation never was and is not, as some have said in some quarters, "a growth-mad southern Canada eagerly prepared to rape the north for economic gains." Last year Canada's deficit was over $4.3 billion. This had to be met by borrowings abroad while our dollar was about at par with the United States dollar. With the United States dollar now at a 5 per cent premium we need a stimulated economy to fill the gap. At this time the suggested pipeline would provide that much needed stimulation. It would, indeed, bring advantages and benefits to our economy not confined to the areas of construction of the pipeline, but extending to the other parts of Canada. Were the pipeline built as suggested by the National Energy Board, with proper guidelines and conditions, there would be yet other benefits to Canadians, in the form of the transportation of natural gas for Canadian use, and it would add appreciably to the employment of Canadians.

The Berger report does not appear to be a balanced document. It seems to have omitted a comprehensible study of how to develop essential pipelines that would take into account the best economic and ecological ways to do it, not to prevent it. The report took the attitude of refusing the consideration of any of the much needed pipelines that have become a "must" because of the gas and oil shortages on the North American continent, even if these pipelines were to be provided with all known safeguards coupled with the best ecological guidelines.

Dr. Lysyk's recommendations, if favoured, would complicate the implementation of the pipeline projects and make them very expensive for Canadians. Dr. Lysyk is also in conflict with the National Energy Board recommendations on the Dawson route and with the suggestion to have the government advance $50 million to the 6,000 Indians of the Yukon and to raise another $200 million to be split between the Yukon Indians and the 16,000 whites who live in the Territories. Time does not permit me to elaborate on these points as I should. I am in agreement with the reasoning of the National Energy Board, which held parallel hearings on the different pipeline projects and the impacts they would have on us. It is my assessment that the Energy Board gave much wider consideration to all the important and consequential factors. It provided for Canadians more sensible and practical recommendations than favouring putting off the project for a decade or so.

We are here today to assess what appears to us to be the best possible project at the least possible ecological cost to Canada and, especially, with the least environmental disturbance to the northwestern areas involved, and to do it without inhibiting the stable supply of energy for homes and industries to Canadians and without refusing to the Territories their needed development.

To date, I believe there has been too long and too costly a wait while searching for other solutions, which simply do not exist. Now the Northwest Territories native people, those who are most concerned in such matters, have in the majority strongly attacked the Berger report and its recommendations, especially the putting off of the pipeline construction. A. W. Lafferty, a Métis from Fort Simpson elected to the Council in 1972, says:

We are faced with 10 years of uncertainty for our children and ourselves. I don't think I should be put, as a native Métis person born in Fort Simpson, in a position of having to migrate to another part of Canada.

Another Métis member, Richard Whitfold, agrees, saying:

We have to have development; the land cannot have enough animals, birds, fish to support the people in the community.

David Searle, the Yellowknife lawyer who is the Speaker of the Council, says:

The weakest areas of the Berger Report are on the economic and constitutional sides.

The economic area, in particular, is a socialist economic doctrine with which I cannot agree. The constitutional side is equally weak. It is wrongly set. I must also add that the Berger report has not considered the possible economic effects of its own recommendations. Several members of the Northwest Territories Council believe that the Berger report did not plumb the feelings in the central and eastern Arctic. Further, the Berger report spells out no alternative to the pipeline projects and development. They regard only as impractical the notion implied in the report that modernized trapping and hunting can fill the economic gap in the north. It would seem that Canada's best interests can be served with the pipeline projects now favoured by the National Energy Board and by most, I am told, of those in the Council of the Northwest Territories.

I fail to find any good reason at this crucial time—when we are facing a gas and oil crisis and are heading for acute shortages of fuels to heat the homes of a whole continent and to provide for power requirements for its industry which, in turn, assures our employment, our means of living—to prevent, prohibit or delay the construction of a gas and oil pipeline so evidently vital to our survival, welfare and present and future prime economic needs.

● (1150)

In light of all of those considerations, I can only favour the construction, without further delay, of a pipeline such as that favoured or advocated by the National Energy Board. It will take some two to three years to plan and construct such a pipeline if the necessary permits are issued now.

Let us not fool ourselves. We are not going to do this alone. The United States must surely have a say in it. Whether or not that portion of the project within Canada's boundaries is completely controlled by Canadians, most of the necessary financing will come from the United States. A negative stance on the formal requirements by the United States, which would be recipient of in excess of three-quarters of the supplies transported by means of this pipeline, will surely have a bearing on the routing and building of such a pipeline, and we had the first indication of that last night.

I would have no hesitation whatsoever in supporting the appropriate legislation to assure now the full and complete realization of that project which can best serve the country at large and the present and future interests of Canadians.

Hon. George I. Smith: Honourable senators, I shall try to follow the excellent examples set by those who have preceded me in this debate. I should have no difficulty in following their example as to brevity. However, whether I can follow that example as to content is another matter altogether. In any event, I shall do what I can in that respect.

I will not make much reference to what has already been said, not because it is not worthy of reference but simply because of the constraints of time with which we are faced. However, there have been some remarks with which I wish to associate myself, two of which were made by Senator Austin.

I had intended to make some remarks regarding a pipeline from Montreal to Halifax, or some other satisfactory point in the maritime region. I think perhaps Halifax is the most likely point, although perhaps the Strait of Canso might have some claim as being as good a departure point from Nova Scotia as Halifax. This is a project which is now only beginning to be talked about in a serious way. It is a project whose time has come or, if it has not already come, is certainly imminent. I was pleased to hear that Senator Austin, and other honourable senators, feel that this is a proposal which should receive very careful consideration.

Senator Austin and others spoke about the value of swapping Canadian gas with the United States in the immediate future and eventually getting it back when the pipeline becomes operative. That, too, seems to be a principle which deserves warm support and one which, I hope, will be very much in the forefront of our negotiations with the United States.

Senator Desruisseaux, along with others, made reference to the serious adverse impact which a delay might have upon the ultimate result of this proposal. I, too, feel the same way. I appreciate the reasons advanced for a delay by both Mr. Justice Berger and Dr. Lysyk. However, the consequences of a delay, it seems to me, are likely to be so serious that everything possible should be done to avoid it. In comparing the advantages and disadvantages of a delay against the advantages and disadvantages of proceeding as soon as reasonably possible, it is difficult to justify any delay taking place.

The question of the settlement of native claims is, I agree, a very important one and one which must be dealt with fairly and expeditiously regardless of the pipeline route chosen. The settlement of native claims ought not to be tied to the location and timing of a natural gas pipeline. If those claims are just, then surely they should be settled fairly and reasonably without regard to any pipeline.

I should like to say one or two other things on this point. So far in Canada there has only been one comprehensive settlement of native claims and that, of course, is the James Bay Agreement, which itself was the subject matter of some very lively debate in this chamber not long ago. In that case, the negotiations were made more complicated by virtue of the fact that they involved a provincial government. In the case of the Yukon and Northwest Territories, there is no such provincial government involvement. I certainly do not wish to in any way detract from the importance of the territorial governments, but the negotiations would not involve the sovereign rights of a province, as was the case respecting the James Bay settlement. Consequently, while I would not be so foolhardy as to suggest that they would be easy, certainly the negotiations, as far as the federal government is concerned, would be less complicated.

Still on the subject of native claims, if as in James Bay it becomes necessary to impose a compulsory settlement on any group, which I hope will not be the case, then such a settlement should be accompanied by a provision for compulsory payment, or whatever ought to be done in lieu of payment, and that provision ought to be a statutory one based upon what is fair and reasonable in the circumstances.

● (1200)

Now I have said that I think these claims should not be related to pipelines; I think, too, they should not now necessarily be left simply to the free and unfettered discretion of negotiators on behalf of the Government of Canada. It seems to me that these claims must be settled, and settled as quickly as reasonably may be, and that it will be appropriate for proper legislation of the Parliament of Canada setting out the basic principles on which the negotiations should proceed, and providing for an appeal to the courts, if appeal should appear to be desirable to the persons concerned. I think this is a matter to which we should address ourselves, and the Government of Canada should address itself, as being one altogether separate and independent from the problem of pipelines.

But continuing with the question of the pipeline itself, it seems to me we are approaching this great decision in a state of less certainty than ought to be the case. It seems to me also that we have been led for a long time, or for a substantial period of time, to consider that the decision the government was now about to make was whether to build a pipeline and if so, where it should be built. Now, if I read right the speech made in the other place by the leader of that house yesterday, we have not reached that stage at all; we have only got to the point where the government is going to make a decision as to whether or not it should enter into negotiations with the United States on the subject of a pipeline. That seems to me to leave us in a somewhat unsatisfactory condition, one that we did not expect we would be left in at this stage of affairs, but I am ready to accept the possibility that, in view of the negotiations which have to take place, it may be an appropriate one for the time being.

It has been said, and I agree, that for various reasons the Mackenzie route seems to be one which is not going to be adopted, at any rate for the time being, and does not really enter very much, if at all, into the current considerations. One can arrive at some certainty about the route if one accepts without reservations the route which appears to be recommended by the National Energy Board in its report of July 4, namely, the so-called Klondike Highway route. But it is extremely interesting to note that Dr. Lysyk points out that this is by no means necessarily the best route through the southern Yukon. He draws attention to the possibility that two other routes which he refers to as the Alaska Highway route—which is the Foothills proposal—and that which he refers to as the Tintina Trench route as being equally possible. He ends up by saying in fact that no decision should now be made as to which of these three possible choices through the southern Yukon ought to be selected. It seems to me that if one were to accept that view of things then we are still left in a state of uncertainty, which would not do very much to facilitate the negotiations which are going to have to be carried on with the United States. And so it seems to me, although I would not suggest that I am in any way qualified to contradict the conclusions of Dr. Lysyk, that we must come very quickly to a conclusion as to which of these three routes through the southern Yukon is to be selected and is to be the route about which we negotiate with the United States, because otherwise things are going to be, quite simply, that much more difficult and uncertain.

It is of some interest to me too, and I should think it will be to all Canadians, that Dr. Lysyk concludes that not enough is known about these three routes to decide now which is the best. This I find to be a somewhat unexpected state of affairs after so many and such costly, prolonged and able studies have been made. It is also a matter of considerable interest to me that Dr. Lysyk says that he does not really know, and that nobody else really knows, whether the so-called Dempster Link or Dempster Lateral from the AlCan route to the Mackenzie Delta or the Mackenzie Valley is a feasible one, either from the technical point of view as I read it, or from the point of view of sufficient reserves in that area to make it worth while. He draws attention to yet another possible alternative route there which he calls the Maple Leaf route.

It was said by a speaker earlier in the debate that we have some years left, and I agree that that is so, before we have to make a firm decision about what to do concerning gas in the Mackenzie Valley and Delta, if indeed there is gas there in sufficient quantities to make it economically worth while. But surely again after all these studies which have been made, not only since the Berger Commission was appointed, but for years before that, we are still left in a state, according to Dr. Lysyk, of almost complete uncertainty about the matters relevant to the Dempster Lateral or the Maple Leaf route.

It has been said that this pipeline now proposed and which we are now discussing is primarily something to serve the purposes of the United States, something to move United States gas through Canada to United States consumers. I suppose there is a good deal of validity to that argument, but I am inclined to accept, in part at least, the argument of Senator van Rogen that there are substantial benefits to Canada, benefits of the nature he described. I hope they are as great and as helpful as he seems to think they are; I would not quarrel with him, because I just want to believe that he is correct. I am not quite sure, however, that they will give us the extraordinarily helpful benefits that he believes, though, as I said, I hope that that will be the case.

I agree, too, with whoever said that no one should approach this question on the basis of any pro- or anti-United States feeling. We ought to deal with it first of all on its own merits, whatever they may be, from the Canadian point of view. If in helping ourselves we can also perform a real service for our neighbours, then we should take that into consideration and be very willing to do it, no matter what our nationalistic beliefs or prejudices may be.

• (1210)

I think, despite all the uncertainties mentioned and despite the difficulties, and I have by no means mentioned them all, the AlCan project does deserve support, provided certain conditions are observed. Certainly, it will help us to help ourselves and it will help us to help our neighbours to the south. I do think, however, that to make sure it does justice to Canadians some conditions at least ought to be insisted upon as a bare minimum from a Canadian point of view. For instance, the planning should be such as to accommodate the possibility of Canadian gas being found in the Mackenzie Delta, or elsewhere in that region, and to accommodate the possibility of transporting that gas to the south. Beyond any question there should be no possibility of any Canadian guarantees of a financial nature with reference to this pipeline project. The construction conditions must be such as to be of maximum advantage to Canadians, especially northern Canadians. One of the conditions we must insist on is that there has to be a maximum Canadian content, not only in jobs but in materials. Northern Canadians ought to have priority in hiring. Where it is feasible, northern communities must have access to gas from the pipeline for their own needs.

There should also be a single, independent, regulatory agency responsible to Parliament for overseeing this whole project from its inception to its completion. That must be a new body and it must exist only for the life of the project; it should not be an ongoing body, which would simply add to the everlasting and evergrowing bureaucracy. It must have clear power over all other federal agencies in the north in respect of technical, social and environmental problems as well as in matters relating to the social and economic impact the pipeline will make upon the north. It must have within its ranks a body representing the governments of the Yukon and the provinces through which the line passes so that the problems and desires of the people who live in the Yukon and in the particular parts of the provinces concerned will always be present in the minds of those who must deal with them so that their interests will always be capable of being advocated by people with clear and direct knowledge at all stages of consideration.

Subject to these conditions, I think we should support the AlCan route despite the uncertainty concerning the three alternatives Dr. Lysyk deals with through the southern Yukon. Regardless of the precise route, however, the project is too big a thing to Canada, as has been described by those who have preceded me in this debate, to remove it from the immediate concern and monitoring of Parliament. It should be clear that from the inception of the project, if it is indeed undertaken, right to its completion some satisfactory arrangement for the monitoring by Parliament should be available and used. Whether a joint committee of the two houses of Parliament would be appropriate or whether standing or select committees of both houses would be more appropriate, at the moment I am not prepared to venture an opinion; but I do think a project of this nature, which as previous speakers have said, and I agree, is one of the greatest projects ever undertaken in Canada, is something Parliament has a right and a duty on behalf of the people of Canada to monitor closely from the time of decision until the time of completion.

Senator Greene: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator Smith (Colchester): Surely.

Senator Greene: With respect to the Montreal-Halifax, Montreal-Canso pipeline to which you adverted favourably, I think we all agree that, in considering world energy supply and price conditions, perhaps the great hope for the industrial blossoming of the Atlantic provinces for which we have all waited so long, and perhaps maritimers impatiently, is a constant and economic supply of power. Does the honourable senator have any concern—a concern which gives me the necessity of asking this question—that a pipeline supplying northern or western gas, which would be expensive power, might be a disincentive to the continuing exploration of the potential offshore resources, which would be cheap power, if they are successful off the Atlantic provinces?

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, that is a question which would have to be looked at carefully in considering any possible decision about such a pipeline. However, my understanding of the costs involved in relation to the costs of offshore gas or oil is that it would hardly be justifiable to describe offshore gas or oil as likely to be cheap or inexpensive. The costs are likely to be of such a nature that it would certainly be well worthwhile carefully to investigate the comparison of costs of energy transmitted by pipeline.

Hon. Horace Andrew Olson: Honourable senators, as has been stated by a number of speakers before me, this is such a large and complex project, with all of the considerations related to economic, financial, ecological, sociological and demographic aspects, that it is difficult, if not impossible, to try even in a cursory way to cover it completely. My intervention, therefore, will be relatively brief and will be restricted to a relatively narrow aspect of some of the economic and international considerations.

I want to say at the outset, honourable senators, that I do not apologize in any way for supporting a project that may be of benefit to the United States. We are a neighbour, I think a good neighbour, of the United States; the United States is a good neighbour to us. Certainly, they will benefit from the AlCan pipeline, in my view. But, as I said, I want to make it clear that I make no apology for supporting a program that will benefit a good neighbour. I believe there are good and sound economic reasons for Canada's going ahead with this project.

Honourable senators, I do not intend to spend much time dealing with such matters as native claims or the Yukon's claim to some compensation, or matters of land settlement and that sort of thing. Our colleague from the Yukon laid it out very succinctly and accurately. The one thing that impresses me above all else is that the claims that are involved in the Yukon, by the natives and others who live there, indicate that it is simply not a question of money. In my view, their right to land claims, over a long period of time, is more important than any sum of money that today could be considered as a settlement.

● (1220)

So, honourable senators, I am of the opinion that consideration should be given to a pipeline going through that land, and that we should not take the position that those claims will be settled forever simply because an agreement is reached for a pipeline to be built.

The main thrust of my intervention is to point out the benefits that could be available to both Canada and the United States, that are somewhat different with respect to the AlCan line, than the other option which the Americans have.

I happen to live in an area of Canada where there is at present a very large quantity of what we refer to as shut-in gas. This was referred to by both Senator Austin and Senator van Roggen. We have hundreds of gas wells within a few miles of where I live. The wells have been drilled and are near the TransCanada pipeline. There is no problem in connecting the gas, but there is simply no market for that gas within Canada for the next several years. The people who are drilling the wells—particularly the small, independent Canadian companies—have virtually been told, although not officially, that there is no market for any gas development for at least two or three years. It becomes fairly expensive to put in those facilities and not only to develop but, indeed, to explore, when it is known that there is no possibility of selling the gas for several years. Yet we know that the Americans ran into a very severe shortage last winter.

I realize that there were adverse, unusual, weather conditions where they required additional amounts of gas to meet emergency conditions, but it is far more widespread than simply an emergency situation arising from adverse or unusual weather conditions for a few weeks. They need gas very quickly, and, honourable senators, we have the gas. Indeed, we have a delivery system in place, through the Alberta Gas Trunk Line and TransCanada Pipeline, whereby we could let them have some of that gas in the winter of 1977-78, and every year from then on, until the AlCan project is capable of delivering Prudhoe Bay gas.

I should add, however, that with a relatively small expenditure to increase the capacity of those existing lines—I have to apologize for saying "relatively small" because $100 million has never been a small amount, to my knowledge, but it is a relatively small amount of money for construction designed for large gas line delivery—or approximately $100 million, and with about one year's lead time, I am advised that the present facilities for the gas reserves that have already been found and developed could put us in a position to deliver gas to those areas of the United States where it is required, namely, the midwest and western United States. We could deliver anywhere from 800 million to 1.2 billion cubic feet of gas per day for the next several years.

I do not believe that we should sell them that gas, because if we look far enough down the road, and if there is no significant change in the amount of gas discovered in Canada, we are likely to need that gas for our own economy. Therefore, as Senator van Roggen and Senator Austin have pointed out, we should provide the United States with the gas on an exchange basis. Surely, some arrangement could be worked out whereby we could receive interest on a value placed on the gas which they receive, so that starting in 1984 or 1985 we would receive back the actual value of the gas supplied—which I am confident will be substantially higher than the value of the gas today. Therefore, I am not advocating that we should sell out our heritage and reserves to the United States at a price now, knowing that it will be worth more in five or 20 years from now, but I certainly believe that we could exchange it, and that the economic benefits would be great for both the United States and Canada.

Therefore, honourable senators, we need to look carefully at the situation. I am not sure that it should be a condition of the negotiations with the United States, but I do believe that it would be an attractive part of opting for the so-called Canadian overland route, because certainly the United States need the gas and they need it soon.

We should also bear in mind other economic factors as they apply to Canada. Obviously, if this project is approved by the two governments, there will be a massive procurement exercise set in place almost immediately. Many hundreds of thousands of tons of steel will be required. I understand that the steel industry in some parts of Canada is operating at levels far below capacity, and that unused capacity could be utilized almost immediately to provide employment in those parts of Canada where steel is produced, to provide the several hundred thousand tons of steel required.

A whole lot of other construction material would be required and could be obtained from all parts of Canada. We should remember that Canada needs more employment opportunities and that they will be needed in the winter of 1977-78. In raising this matter, I am not stressing that we should do something that will be detrimental to Canada in the long run; but, honourable senators, I am convinced that we could have the best of both worlds as result of this project. It would quickly generate new jobs if a decision were made by both governments some time between now and the end of 1977. I am also convinced that it has such long-term benefits for Canada that we would not regret having made such a decision in the latter part of 1977.

For the record, I would like to give some figures to support my argument that we have reserves immediately available that could be used for the exchange purpose to which several honourable senators have referred. For example, we have in Alberta—there is also a little in British Columbia—about 20 trillion cubic feet of unconnected gas. The wells exist but the gas is not connected to any existing pipeline, and therefore it is not committed to anyone. There is enough gas to meet all of my suggestions, and it could provide in the neighbourhood of something like one billion or 1.2 billion cubic feet per day for the various parts of the United States, at least until the Prudhoe Bay gas becomes available.

● (1230)

There are several ways of delivering gas. One, of course, is by means of some expansion or looping by the TransCanada Pipeline from Alberta to Emerson, Manitoba; some could go out through the Westcoast Transmission line from Alberta to British Columbia; and some, of course, could go through the southern route that goes partly through Alberta and through British Columbia to Kingsgate. Honourable senators, this is not a hypothetical situation. The gas is there, the pipelines are there. Some additional looping and compressor capacity is all that is needed to make it available right now, and as soon as that is done, as soon as the decision is made by the two governments, that kind of activity will begin to take place right away.

I want to point out, too, that it would be beneficial to Alberta, and I make no apology for saying that either, because I think we need some of the smaller companies who have the problem of cash flow from time to time to have an on-going viability in the market so that they can continue their exploration in Alberta and, indeed, also, their development of known gas fields. I might say that, unless this project goes forward, it does look as though it may be some time before there could be any real incentive to keep up the level of activity that has been going on for the past year or so, and particularly during 1977.

Honourable senators, I want to make two other points. First, I want to suggest that the Dempster connection for the Mackenzie Delta and Beaufort Sea gas should not be regarded as the only Canadian benefit. It also should not be regarded as the only means of getting Delta gas into the Canadian southern market, although it is certainly one way. I suggest to you that the entire Mackenzie Valley, in geological terms, is a sedimentary basin that is potentially gas producing; that runs for hundreds of miles south of the Delta, all along the route where a Mackenzie Valley pipeline could be built. Reference has been made to the Maple Leaf project. That is where that would go. It would be almost completely independent of AlCan, whether geologically, geographically or otherwise.

I realize, too, that the rate of discovery in this sedimentary basin in the Mackenzie Valley has not been particularly encouraging to date, but the sedimentary formations are still there. We have had the experience in Alberta for a long time of finding that while you can make seismographic surveys, and other things, until you drill the holes you do not know whether or not you are going to get production. I am prepared to be sufficiently optimistic, however, to think that there will be some areas in that enormous basin where significant quantities of gas will be found in the future. Certainly, it would be a great advantage to have a pipeline in proximity to that area so that it could be delivered if and when it is found.

The other point I want to make is that I support fully the argument that has been made that Canada, and all the authorities, agencies and governments responsible, ought to get on with building the Quebec-maritime pipeline. I do not know what the problems may be, or the competitive factors, as between that and further exploration in the maritimes or off the coast, but I am sure that that gas line could be put in in such a way that it could be reversible, so that if significant and exportable quantities were to be found at any time in the future it could carry gas in either direction. In the meantime, to me, as a Canadian, it is important that all provinces in Canada be connected to a grid system, so that notwithstanding differences in transportation costs, all Canadians may have access to an economic industrial and domestic fuel at essentially the same price, in addition to whatever transportation costs may be involved. Certainly, however, a natural gas pipeline is one of the most economic ways of transporting energy over long distances. It seems to me that this is a major consideration, and that it should be proceeded with for the benefit of bringing all Canada into this system so that we all have access to it.

Honourable senators, I hope we will support this project. There is really no argument in my view as between AlCan and some other pipeline in Canada. All that is left is a decision, as far as the United States is concerned, as between AlCan and El Paso; that is, as to whether they will opt for a line in Canada or not. All the other problems that I have a great deal of sympathy for, such as finding equitable solutions for native claims, and provision for future Canadian requirements, and so on, can be met and, in fact, enhanced by approving this pipeline.

Senator van Roggen: Will the honourable senator permit a question? I was interested in your figure of 20 trillion cubic feet, I think it was, of unconnected gas in Alberta and British Columbia. Would you tell me, if you know, approximately how much connected gas there is in the reserves in those same provinces?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I cannot give those figures up to the present day. I checked as late as last night and the ones that are available are only up to the end of 1975; that is, agreed figures. There are some estimates adding in how much further gas was brought into the reserves in 1976 and 1977, but there were approximately 85 trillion cubic feet of gas—that is, ultimately marketable gas—at the end of 1975. Of that, the cumulative amount used to date is about 25 trillion. There are, of remaining marketable connected gas, some 41 trillion cubic feet in the two provinces, and about 20 trillion cubic feet of unconnected gas. I understand this does not take into account discoveries or even development in existing fields that have been added to reserves for 1976 and 1977.

Senator van Roggen: So, if I understand your position clearly, it is that the present requirements of Canada, and the present contractual obligations of the producers to the pipeline systems in Canada, are adequately looked after from presently connected gas, and that the 20 trillion cubic feet unconnected is available for swapping purposes, or is in excess of our immediate requirements.

Senator Olson: It depends on whose formula you use for how much reserves are required to meet all of Canada's requirements; but if you use the ones that have been set down by the federal government and the National Energy Board, and also by the provincial conservation boards, it would appear to me that there are now about 20 trillion cubic feet over, providing an exchange policy is adopted.

On motion of Senator Williams, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I move that the Senate do now adjourn during pleasure, to re-assemble at the call of the bell at approximately 2.45 this afternoon, to continue this debate. I understand, according to the latest count I have received, that there are four additional senators who wish to participate in this debate, so in order to have enough time to complete the debate prior to royal assent, which is scheduled to take place, as honourable senators know, at 4.45 this afternoon, a further adjournment during pleasure might be necessary if we fall short of meeting that target. This will be the program for this afternoon.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 2.55 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

ENERGY

CONSIDERATION OF CONSTRUCTION OF A NATURAL GAS PIPELINE FROM WESTERN ARCTIC TO SOUTHERN CANADA AND CONTINENTAL UNITED STATES—DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from earlier today the debate on the inquiry of Senator Perrault calling the attention of the Senate to the question of the construction of a natural gas pipeline from the western Arctic to southern Canada and continental United States.

Hon. Guy Williams: Honourable senators, I rise to say a very few words. All morning my prepared speech has been getting shorter and shorter at the completion of each speech. This I appreciate very much.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Williams: I want to bring to the attention of honourable senators certain matters of particular concern to the Indian population of the Yukon Territory. This proposed location of the pipeline route in the Yukon Territory and extending into British Columbia and Alberta, in the future and in the building of this pipeline, will have further involvement of other Indian people in the provinces that I have mentioned.

I want to speak also of the relationship of the native linguistic groups in these areas, particularly in the Yukon, and their endeavours such as fishing and hunting for food and gain. Traditionally their families owned these areas. This was before the setting up of the boundaries of British Columbia and the Yukon Territory. To this day the families maintain the aboriginal rights and customs in this area, and should be given due attention and consideration by the negotiators.

There are some newcomers to the areas that are now involved in the Yukon. Some of them may have been there for a half century, and I am referring to the native tribes that are originally from the coastal areas of Alaska—the Tlingits. Now that they are in the Territory, they must be given full consideration and compensation as residents of that Territory.

I am also suggesting that in the course of negotiations the organization known as "The Council of Yukon Indians" should be given an opportunity to participate as advisers and observers in the course of negotiations with the country that is going to benefit from the pipeline, namely, the United States.

I am not of the opinion that negotiations will be too difficult, nor am I of the opinion that certain scare tactics of alternative types of transportation will be heavily used. I do not think so.

The nations involved in the last struggle of World War II did not go out to the ocean for the transportation necessary at that time. They built a road in order to be safe and away from possible enemy action out on the ocean. I am of the opinion that land transported gas will take this course. It will be a pipeline.

I am not sure whether liquefied gas is heavier than water. If it is heavier than water it could cause greater problems than if it is lighter than water, because if there is a spill out in the ocean it will go to the ocean beds and disrupt and possibly kill many types of ocean life. If it floats, then the problem will not be as serious, I believe, as if it were heavier than water.

● (1450)

From my long experience with Indian leadership negotiations, not only for my own people but also for Canada in negotiations with other countries on ocean fisheries and so on, I am in agreement with the suggestion of the Lysyk report. I think it is a gesture of true intent. I believe we should follow the suggestion or request, call it what you will, that $50 million be paid immediately in trust to the Yukon Indians, with interest, on which they can draw immediately.

In my own experience, there is always a lack of confidence by the Indian people, no matter what level of negotiations they are into, whether it be with a corporation or with the government. Paying this money into trust will build the confidence of the Indians, and not only the passing generation. They will feel at last that here is a square deal coming up and a guarantee. That is why, as an Indian, I agree with that suggestion.

I am not too sure about the suggestion for a heritage fund of $200 million. I am a little bit doubtful whether that would serve any real purpose at this time. Maybe it should be looked at a second time by the government, and by this chamber, some time in the future.

I am happy to have had a few moments to express to you my views, most of them personal. In the course of events, the delivering of this necessary commodity will involve a great deal of planning and a great deal of manpower. I wish to point out that it is quite possible that 50 per cent of the 6,000 Indians in the Yukon Territory are recipients of welfare. I am also sure in my own mind that at least one-quarter of them could be absorbed into a work force. This would get them off the dole, and also get them off the street curbs in the evenings, particularly on Sundays. By being absorbed into a work force they could contribute to the productivity of the territory and of the country as a whole. I trust that real consideration will be given to the Indian people of that territory, and that they will be involved in the work force of this country in order that they may be able to contribute to the economy of this great country.

I have spoken.

Hon. J. J. Greene: Honourable senators, Senator Williams took to task some of the prior speakers for having anticipated his speech. I had only two points which I wished to attempt to emphasize in brief words and Senator Williams took one of them, so he took 50 per cent of my speech and I do not believe that anyone else took 50 per cent of his.

The two points I wish to accentuate are, firstly, the question of the American content of this whole issue, which I believe several speakers have emphasized be not judged as a pro- or anti-American issue at all. I do think that we should consider, the press notwithstanding, that there is a very close association in all energy matters between ourselves and our American neighbours, for which we should be thankful. There is, of course, no such thing as a continental energy policy, which is some nightmare that one of our pressmen in Washington dreamt up, over too many mint juleps, maybe, which is a favourite concoction down there. No nation and no government can ever tie in perpetuity its energy policy with that of any other. We should be thankful that there is continuing cooperation between ourselves and our great neighbour to the south on energy matters. I sometimes wonder what would have happened in last year's energy crisis in the United States had the same situation occurred in Europe, where the other great world power, say, is the neighbour of Czechoslovakia, had Czechoslovakia had a surplus of gas and oil, as we did and her great and powerful neighbour had a shortage. Just as the tanks rolled into Hungary a few years earlier, I suspect that they would have rolled into Czechoslovakia last winter, whereas here we negotiated freely and equally with the U.S.A. to see if we had any more to spare. In my opinion, we are very fortunate to have had a relationship such as that with our great neighbour.

I well recall that I once had the rather difficult function of taking President Nixon, as he then was, to task for having unilaterally cut off our oil exports without discussion or negotiation. I had the rather difficult task of alleging to him that it was an act contrary to the GATT and contrary to our whole trading associations with the United States, because our energy dealings with them are part of our total trading arrangements with them, and they are not only our biggest supplier, but our biggest customer, we must remember, and energy is part of our entire trading package with them. I contended to the American authorities that they had no right to unilaterally cut off our exports, as they then did, without considering it in the context of our total trading arrangements with them. It was ironic that just a year or two later, after I was no longer able to carry on my duties as Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Honourable Donald Macdonald succeeded me, I was able to say to him, "I don't know what you fellows have done since I was shot down. When I left you had such a surplus of energy, oil and gas in particular, that I had to go down and take on the President for cutting off our exports. I've been gone a year and now you fellows are short of energy." I don't know what they did in the interim, or what the world did, but in any event our relationships with them are of that nature, that there are mutual trading arrangements and this entire matter should not be looked upon in the context that we are doing a favour for the United States.

● (1500)

Canada's main pipeline goes through the United States. That particular route was chosen because it was the most economic route for bringing western oil to the eastern markets. The United States, to my knowledge, has never interfered with the free flow of oil through that pipeline. Even last winter, when there were such severe shortages in the United States, there was no beating of the drums in Washington saying, "Well, there's oil in the Canadian line, so let's grab it!"

Canadian oil has flowed through the United States freely. It is subject to U.S. laws, as any pipeline in Canada would be subject to our laws.

I hope the press, particularly the Metropolitan Toronto press, who seem to delight in this sort of thing, do not take this up as an "Americans-pushing-Canadians-around" sort of deal. We should and will go ahead with it if it is in Canada's best interests to do so, and if it is in Canada's best interests and helps our good neighbour to the south at the same time, so much the better, I say. But certainly the interests of Canadians will be paramount. The fact that it would help the Americans is no indication that we are in any way being pushed around by the Americans. Rather, it indicates that in energy matters, as in other areas, we live on one continent, and the more we can work together to the betterment of all who live on the North American continent, so much the better. I do not think it can be construed in any way as a pro- or anti-American question.

A second point which I wish to allude to—and Senator Williams has already well taken care of this and probably needs no help from me, but perhaps I can be allowed to emphasize it—is the fact that the alternative, as I understand it, to an overland pipeline is the carriage of liquefied natural gas from the Port of Valdez by tanker to Cherry Point and other points of entry in the United States. With that in mind, I think we should consider very carefully whether it is not more in the interest of Canadians to have an overland pipeline which, as far as the Canadian portion is concerned, would be subject to Canadian supervision and laws, as opposed to having highly volatile liquefied natural gas being transported via tanker along the ecologically fragile British Columbia coast with no Canadian control whatsoever over that carriage. The tankers would be in international waters most of the route, with the result that we would have virtually no control whatsoever over them. Surely it would be more to the advantage of Canada to move that gas over sovereign Canadian territory where we can control the conditions under which it moves rather than having it move off our west coast with no Canadian control over it.

Honourable senators, behind this whole question—and I do not wish to go into the various reports, all of which have been admirably covered by previous speakers—is perhaps the greatest overall challenge to our generation with respect to the manner in which we use our resources while at the same time protecting our sociological and environmental interests.

I do not for one moment subscribe to the so-called no-growth ethic. There is a party in the other place—and, fortunately, it does not exist in this noble place—which has the luxury of always being on the side of the angels: on the one hand, they want no unemployment; on the other hand they want no growth and no risk to the environment or the ecology. They want to be with the angels on both sides. Those honourable parties which have the responsibility of government from time to time, which find themselves on either side of this house, know that those two ethics have to be reconciled. No growth means no jobs. Well, if you have the responsibility of office you have to create jobs or have the policies which will create jobs. And at the same time, with our present knowledge, we have to do it on a basis which protects our native peoples and their rights, that protects our environment and hence the rights of those who come after us, and that is the challenge. I think Voltaire put in the mouth of Candide the words "Il faut cultiver notre jardin".

The challenge to us is to cultivate our garden, that garden of resources which is so rich in this country, but to cultivate it in such a way as is best sociologically, economically and ecologically, not to hide our head in the sand and say "No growth"! Because no growth means no employment, no enhancement of the standard of living of our peoples and no enlarging of their opportunity, and I do not think that is what Canadians want. I think they want of us responsible growth; they want us to cultivate our garden in a more responsible way, perhaps, than we have done in the past, but to cultivate it so that we will have jobs for our people and an enhanced standard of living for our people.

Behind this whole debate is that concept which looms much larger than merely the pipeline. How do we have continued economic growth in a perhaps more responsible way than we have had it in past generations? So this debate is indeed the first milestone of a far greater question, namely, the whole ethic of what must be the future development of our country.

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask Senator Williams a question. I wanted to do it immediately after he sat down, but of course I deferred to Senator Greene. Something has been said in the course of this debate about the settlement of native claims, and some reference has been made to the James Bay settlement, and, I think, also to the Alaska settlement. I wonder if Senator Williams could tell us whether he thinks the basis of those settlements was the kind of thing that would be satisfactory to the Yukon Indians. I rather suspect it would not, but I would rather like to hear from an expert.

Senator Williams: Honourable senators, I think most honourable senators here knew what my stand was when the James Bay Agreement was being debated to be ratified. While the negotiators on the James Bay Agreement may have done this in full belief and sincerity that it was good for them and for their people, I think they had this view because they lacked experience in the matter of negotiating with the two governments. I did not agree with it, and I do not agree with it to this day, and I say that no other agreement reached by any Indian group in Canada should conform to the basis of the James Bay Agreement.

Hon. Willie Adams: Honourable senators, I have been prepared to make this speech since this morning, and I am glad finally to take the floor. I do not really have too much to say, but I am concerned about this debate on the pipeline between the Mackenzie Valley and the Yukon. I am somewhat familiar with the Mackenzie Valley pipeline. During the last four years I was involved in the Council in Yellowknife. I am not really all that familiar with the Yukon and the route through Alaska, though.

● (1510)

You know, when I was appointed to the Senate I was told that I represented the people, and I figured I was going to help them with land claims and the development of a pipeline, and that sort of thing, in the north; and I really do think that between the Senate and the House of Commons we should be concerned about the people up there, especially when it comes to their rights in the north.

Of course, honourable senators, I have lived in the north for a long time and I know much more about that part of the country than I do about the rest, or about the south part of the country. I can tell you that the people in the north feel that they own that part of the country up there, and yet they feel they have no power to save their own lands. For myself, I will be dealing with people who are concerned about their land claims, and fair settlements will certainly have to be made in the future.

Honourable senators, when I heard my colleague Senator Olson referring earlier to the energy problems in the south of Canada, I could not help relating that to the situation in the north, and, frankly, I think it is a little too early yet to determine just where the site should be for that pipeline running through the north and south of Canada and down into the United States.

I have to admit that I am not really all that familiar with the question of the need for gas down south; for myself, every time I come south I find myself sweating.

Senator Greene: Senators don't sweat; they perspire.

Senator Adams: Then, when I go back north I am cold. So I figure that at least we should not disturb the gas situation up there in the north just to bring it down south.

In the meantime, honourable senators, the elected representatives in the Assembly at Yellowknife are concerned about the situation, and I think we should be concerned too, as well as those elected representatives of the Territories; we are concerned and worried about the possibility of an Arctic pipeline polluting the rest of the Arctic. I think you have to acknowledge the fact that the elected representatives from the Territories know more than we do here in Ottawa about the people up there and the situation they are in. They know more about what effect a pipeline can have. On the other hand, when I was there for four years, we used to say, "It is up to Ottawa to make the decisions." We felt, as a small people talking about our problems in the north, that we did not have much control over ourselves in the Arctic, because all of the decisions were being made in the south, in Ottawa.

Honourable senators, speaking as an Inuit, the Inuit people and the Indian people have a slightly different way of life from that of those living in the south. For the people living in the Arctic and living in the tree line area there is a difference, and I think that the people in the Mackenzie Valley, if the pipeline does not go through there, will be upset because they have been prepared for that pipeline for quite a few years—especially people in business who are really ready for it. Even for ourselves, honourable senators, we are always talking about going and living off the land.

Those of us who live in the north, and those who will be coming to the north to set up their homes, will not be able to live off the caribou and fish in the future. The population is growing and everything costs twice as much as it does in the south. It costs us more for our food and clothing. Everything has to be brought in by ship or plane. Everything has to be subsidized. Even the ordinary trapper requires a lot of money to buy food, gasoline, and everything else that he needs. At one time dog teams were in use, but now there is hardly a dog team to be seen. Skidoos and Bombardiers are now used, which use twice as much gas as cars use in the south. The oil will flow south and the gasoline will come back to us at a higher cost. People in northern communities will have to pay more for it, and the price will be in favour of the companies producing it and not for the benefit of the people living in the north.

If the pipeline goes through, construction may take three or four years, but after that few people will have a job. Only qualified people will be able to look after such installations as pumping stations. It takes five or six years to train a person, and there will not be enough trained people in the north for the various jobs. The whole matter should be looked into. We should see what the people who live in the north feel about it. We should also bear in mind the views of those who will be living there in the future. Much will have to be done before we have a pipeline built between the north and the south.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I wish to enter this debate, not as an economic or environmental expert but as one who has a profound concern for the cultural and human sensitivities of Canadians.

All cultural groups have specific feelings and aspirations, and the native Indian and Inuit are no exception. Their traditions are tied to the land, to the rivers and streams, to nature. Their aspirations are to see that their way of life is preserved, that their future generations are able to inherit these traditions.

Some think that the native Indian cultures have disappeared from our society. They have not. They have survived remarkably well compared with the pressures put on them by the moving in great numbers of the "white man" over the last 300 years or so. They are beginning again to assert their place in our society and they wish to take an active part in the decision-making for the development of this country so that they can assure themselves a respectable place under the sun.

I will not pretend to be an expert in native Canadian cultures, but I am extremely interested in these groups as they are part and parcel of the total Canadian society. They are at the same level as any other cultural community.

● (1520)

To this debate I should like to contribute a few basic general suggestions. First, this government must make a commitment to respect and protect one of this country's most fragile cultural components, that of the Yukon Indians and the Inuit people, when considering the AlCan proposal. A good proportion of my insight into the caution we must exercise as a government I have acquired through the Yukon member of the Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism, Mr. John Hoyt, as well as through a number of the Canadian native members on the same council. Over the years the northern Inuit and Indians have come to believe that southerners can only intrude, can only interfere and exploit. We do not have a very good reputation, and we are about to reap the rewards of a century of disruption of and indifference to the sensitivities of our native people.

Now in 1977, faced with the possibility of the construction of a northern pipeline, Canada finds herself in a position where once again the interests of the Inuit and the Indian may be put to a test, and it is encouraging to hear so many Canadians awakening to this problem and committing themselves to resolving it. A pipeline can be built, but this does not mean that the northern native Canadians should be forced to suffer what could be, if not a death blow to their culture, at least the undermining of their way of life.

They survived, but only with permanent injury, the onslaught that occurred during the gold rush; they are still suffering the onslaught which accompanied the construction of the Alaska highway. We must, therefore, learn from these two experiences, and along with the Americans we must show that we have learned from our previous mistakes.

A pipeline can be built if we agree from the start that the native Canadians through their representatives will be made an integral part of the pipeline construction management, and that native Canadians of the north will have a major say in the handling of the economic and social factors that may result from such a development. The development that is to take place must be compatible with the needs of the people affected.

May I close by reiterating my objective in entering this debate. We as a government must look after the well-being of every segment of Canadian society, no matter how small its size. Under the Canadian multicultural umbrella the native people figure very prominently, and as the Chairman of the Canadian Consultative Council, I will do all I can to remind Canadians of these facts.

Hon. Royce Frith: Honourable senators, I share the diffidence of Senator Smith (Colchester) at entering this debate, in the sense that he and I, I take it, agree that neither of us is a leading expert on the subject of pipelines and pipeline construction.

I only want to do two things. One is to add what I might call an Ontario footnote—I would not put it any higher than that—and then I would like to presume to make a comment on the experience I have had today in hearing this debate.

The Ontario footnote I wish to add is simply this, that many of the interventions that have been made here today have been made by experts in their various fields, and have been made from what we might call a “perspective occidentale.” The comment was not all from the west, but most of it was made in the western perspective. I cannot purport to speak for the whole of Ontario, but I can speak as an Ontario senator. Having read the reports and listened to the debate today, it seems worthwhile to add that the direction in which the country and the government seem to be going with reference to the choice of a pipeline has built into it many benefits for Ontario. It has, first, what we might call Senator Olson’s Christian perspective—I am using my own word there, my own italics, not Senator Olson’s. Alternatively, we could refer to it as an altruistic viewpoint—something that Senator Olson did not apologize for—in that we are doing a very good deed for a very good neighbour. That is the first part of my Ontario footnote. The relationship between the United States and Canada is very important in its Ontario context.

Senator Austin also pointed out the benefits that accrue in terms of an exchange and the fact that we in Ontario rely heavily on our neighbours to the south for coal to produce electrical energy. It is also clear that Ontario will benefit from the AlCan route in another way. The steel production dimension of that route is more attractive to the Canadian industry than was the other, the Mackenzie.

Senator van Roggen also pointed out the benefits, generally, to Canada and the United States in what I thought was a particularly colourful and explicit definition of the “chips” that were available on both sides and the benefits that would accrue to both sides. Certainly, it seems to me, if I understood the report and understood the debate, Ontario will in the meantime further benefit from cheaper gas and energy, which are vital to Ontario, in the form of gas delivered from Alberta’s present reserves as distinct from the more expensive frontier gas. I hope for Ontario’s sake that the government does opt for the AlCan route and that its negotiations with the United States are successful and result in the early construction of that route.

Honourable senators, my father’s definition of the incurable optimist was the woman in the front row of the church who puts her shoes back on when the minister says, “And now in conclusion.” So, in conclusion, and on this point, which is the second point I did mention, honourable senators, it has been a great experience for me to listen to this debate today. Without describing the low level of my understanding with regard to this issue when the debate began, I can say that it is at a high level of understanding by comparison, after having listened to my colleagues in their various expertise and experience develop this very, very important issue. It is a privilege for those of us in Parliament to be here at a time when this great undertaking is being considered and is about to be launched.

I want to personally thank my colleagues for an interesting, stimulating and educational experience. I want to compliment them on their participation in this debate, if they will allow me to presume to do so, and I would just like to close by saying that I am very proud to have them as fellow Canadians and as colleagues in this house.

Hon. Ann Elizabeth Bell: Honourable senators, perhaps the time has come when we should consider reconstituting the Standing Committee on Natural Resources. For several years

I have thought that this would be a valuable thing for us to do. It seems that we had such a committee until some 15 or 20 years ago. Some casual inquiries I made a while ago indicated that there really was not that much legislation with regard to mining and resource material for the Senate to deal with, so that what did come before this house was made the responsibility of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee. That committee is so inundated with work that it is pretty well impossible for it to consider some of the issues such as we have had to deal with in the last few years. As Senator Lucier says, if we are all thoroughly confused today, he does not blame us at all—with all the studies, contradictory reports, and news stories we have had coming at us about the construction of a natural gas pipeline.

● (1530)

I would be particularly happy if during our adjournment we could give this consideration. How could we man such a committee when sometimes during this past week there have been three meetings going on at once which some honourable senators should have been attending? It is impossible. If we set up another standing committee, how could we possibly cope with it?

I would plead that this be given consideration, and perhaps we could discuss the matter when we reconvene in the fall. We are a resource-based economy in Canada, and it seems very important that we have our standing committees reconstituted.

The Hon. the Speaker: As no other senator wishes to participate in this debate, this inquiry is considered as having been debated.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 4.40 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Leave having been given to revert to notices of motion:

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday, October 17, 1977, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Honourable senators, before the question is put I should point out that, as we always are, we are subject to recall. With conditions as they are with respect to the air traffic controllers, it is possible that we may be called back next week. I am sorry that I cannot give the house any more definite information in that regard, because I cannot obtain anything more definite myself.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

NOTICE OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, I should like to inform the Senate that the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications will meet on October 4 to continue its study of Bill C-41, the Maritime Code Act.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I wonder if I might ask Senator Petten if there is a possibility that, as a result of the work of that committee, the Senate might be recalled earlier than October 17.

Senator Petten: Thank you, Senator Smith. There is that possibility, and I believe the date suggested is October 12.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

CANNED TOMATO SURTAX ORDER—NOTICE OF MOTION

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate I give notice on behalf of Senator Perrault that at the next sitting of the Senate he will move:

That this House approves the Canned Tomato Surtax Order made by Order in Council P.C. 1977-335 dated 10th February, 1977, until the 30th day of June 1978.

Senator Grosart: With leave?

Senator Petten: I just gave notice, honourable senators.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, before the question is put, I take it that this is a surcharge imposed by order in council under the Customs Tariff Act which would, apparently, technically expire. Can the honourable senator give us the date when it would expire if it were not renewed or carried on automatically when Parliament is not in session?

Senator Petten: I am afraid that I cannot answer that question, but if the honourable senator wishes I can get the information and provide it later this day.

Senator Grosart: This is rather unusual in view of the fact that the motion will be moved at the next sitting of the Senate, which means that if the Senate is recalled the motion will be put, but if the Senate is not recalled, the order in council continues automatically under the original order in council and the legislation governing it.

Senator Petten: I believe so, honourable senator.

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I want to "point a moral and adorn a tale." This is a perfect example of the affirmative resolution procedure which some of us were contending for a few days ago.

● (1710)

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable R. G. B. Dickson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act respecting immigration to Canada.

An Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Customs Tariff, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

An Act to establish the Department of Employment and Immigration, the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission and the Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof.

An Act to facilitate conversion to the metric system of measurement.

An Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act respecting the establishment of marketing plans and to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act in consequence thereof.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER

Hon. William J. Petten, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(h), moved:

That, in accordance with section 19 of An Act respecting the Status of the official languages of Canada, Chapter 0-2, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, this House approves the appointment of Maxwell F. Yalden, Esquire, as Commissioner of Official Languages of Canada.

He said: Mr. Yalden, 43, is a native of Toronto, a graduate of the University of Toronto in 1952. He attended the University of Paris the following year and took graduate studies in philosophy at the University of Michigan from 1953 to 1956, receiving his doctorate in 1956. Mr. Yalden joined the Department of External Affairs in 1956, and was posted to Moscow two years later.

In 1960 he served on the Canadian delegation to the Geneva Convention on Disarmament, and for the next three years he was with the department's disarmament division in Ottawa. From 1963 to 1967 he was at the Canadian embassy in Paris as First Secretary and later as Counsellor, before returning to Ottawa as special assistant to the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs. In 1969 he was appointed to the Secretary of State Department as Assistant Under-Secretary of State in charge of Bilingualism, Development and Educational Programs. Mr. Yalden was appointed Deputy Minister of Communications in May, 1973.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I think it appropriate that a word should be said for this group on this appointment. It is an appointment to a most important post, and I think we all agree that it is appropriate that the appointment should be confirmed, as it will be under the act, by resolution of the House of Commons and of the Senate; and that, of course, is the purpose of the motion put before us by Senator Petten.

I do not know Mr. Yalden personally, but I have heard a good deal about his background. He certainly comes to this post well qualified, as he has had thorough and high level experience in the problems that arise out of questions of language in Canada. He has also had a distinguished record in the diplomatic service, and I understand that, apart from the other languages he may speak, he also speaks Russian. I am not sure that will be of any great service to him in this particular post, but I am sure we would all agree that there is a place for tri- or multi-lingualism in Canada, despite the fact that other languages may not have the same official status in Canada as the English and French languages.

We welcome the appointment and wish Mr. Yalden great success in the task before him, which, as we all know, will not be easy. It is not an easy job, but we are sure that Mr. Yalden will fill this important position with the distinction he has brought to his other positions in the public service.

Motion agreed to.

● (1720)

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, before the motion is put, may I take this opportunity to wish all honourable senators an enjoyable and satisfactory recess—with or without interruptions. One would hope, without interruptions, but, to quote a famous line from Pygmalion, I am afraid it is "not bloody likely."

I should also take this opportunity to say to Her Honour how much we appreciate the charm with which she has presided over our affairs here in what has been a long and, in some respects, difficult session. The fact that we have at no time come to blows across the aisle has, I am quite sure, been due, in large measure, to the charm and grace with which she presides here.

Apart from the important role Her Honour plays in this chamber, I think it appropriate to note that also outside of the chamber she has done much to enhance the prestige of the office of the Speaker of the Senate by her work in parliamentary committees and by her generosity in making her quarters available to us, to the government and to parliamentary committees to welcome and to entertain distinguished visitors from abroad, particularly parliamentarians. Personally, I have had many comments on the fact that often the invitations to her quarters and the fine luncheons served—and usually it is a luncheon which is given by Her Honour—are the highlight of the visits of our parliamentary colleagues from other countries.

I take this opportunity as well, honourable senators, to pay the respects of this group to the leader and deputy leader on the other side. We have not always agreed, but it is fair to say that we on this side realize that the government leader and his deputies have exercised what they regard as their responsibilities in the Senate in the way that they believe those responsibilities should be exercised. We may not always have agreed on this side, but we do respect them for the work they do. Their work takes long hours and much preparation and, above all, whatever differences we may have, we on this side are convinced that the leader has at all times the interests of the Senate at heart.

I include, as a matter of course, the chief whip of the government in that tribute. He has been a most successful chief whip, which has been perhaps the greatest frustration we have had on this side on certain occasions. Although he has had one near miss, in the 36 to 34 vote, we cannot wish him continued successes of that kind, because we hope that before long he will have a real miss; and we will do whatever we can on this side to contribute to that.

Finally, may I say just a word about my own leader, who is unavoidably absent? I think it is enough to say that all honourable senators would agree that he has made a most important contribution to the work of the Senate, that without him it might be difficult at times to know that there is a loyal opposition in the Senate. I believe the contribution he has made has been one of the most important that has been made to the Senate, not only this session but in the years that he has been leader here.

Our own whip had to leave a moment ago. I will not say too much about him because in contrast to Senator Petten he does not really have very much work to do. The group on this side is a highly disciplined one.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I regret that I was not here for the totality of the remarks just made by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition. However, I too would like to join in the note which I think he has sounded, that despite the differences which occur from time to time, inevitably and I think happily, in our democratic system, it has been a very productive period for the Senate.

I believe that our distinguished government whip has informed honourable senators that there is a chance that we shall shortly be back together in the Senate and, instead of wishing honourable senators a very happy summer recess, we may be wishing all a happy weekend.

I have attempted to obtain the latest report on the situation with respect to the air traffic controllers' statement that they intend to go on rotating strikes at midnight on Monday. I can only say that the government will not remain idle should that kind of public inconvenience be threatened, and I would hope that, if required, parliamentarians in both chambers will be prepared to take appropriate action to ensure that the public interest will be served, as well as the welfare of the workers involved.

I had hoped that at this time more specific information could have been provided. There was at least a chance earlier in the day that the other place and this chamber would be called back for discussions on this subject tomorrow. However, I think that is very unlikely. We are perhaps looking at Monday evening or Tuesday. Notices will be sent out in the usual fashion to inform honourable senators of any work which it is anticipated may be before this chamber.

I want to thank Madam Speaker for her tolerance and patience and the great qualities she has brought to this chamber in acting on behalf of us all.

I would like to thank those in the loyal opposition. I served in opposition for more years than I have served in government, and I have an exquisite understanding of some of the problems facing an opposition which may lack in numbers but certainly does not lack in its ability to analyze legislation. So I thank the honourable the Leader of the Opposition and his deputy for their good work on behalf of the parliamentary system.

I thank also my colleagues, including my deputy leader, Senator Langlois, who is unfailingly supportive and a person we are very fortunate to have working with us in this chamber; also the whip and all others associated with the work of the Senate, including the officers of the Senate, and the Hansard reporters, who must endure all our remarks and transcribe them for the record in satisfactory English and French. The period of time we have been working on legislation, I think, has been productive. A number of the measures are extremely important for this country, as we are all aware.

● (1730)

Finally, I want to say a general thank you for all the support accorded me as Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, I do not wish to introduce a discordant note into these very cordial proceedings, but I wonder if, in consideration of the matter which may result in our being called back, some thought has been given to the fact that those very activities may make it impossible for some of us to return.

Senator Perrault: I am acutely aware of that fact, honourable senators, and should that situation arise I would hope that special arrangements could be made to transport honourable senators and members of the other place back to Ottawa in order for them to attend to their responsibilities in regard to possible legislation.

Senator Greene: By dog team?

Senator Perrault: By dog team if necessary.

The Hon. the Speaker: Before putting the question, I should like to invite all honourable senators to my quarters to meet the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, October 17, 1977, at 2 o'clock.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, August 9, 1977

The Senate met at 5 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Copies of a position paper dealing with the policy implications of a proposed bill on the Coasting Trade of Canada, 1977.

Copies of Statement of the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association, dated July 15, 1977, regarding certain aspects of the Interim Report, dated June 23, 1977 of the Commission of Inquiry into Bilingual Air Traffic Services in Quebec.

Report of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 31 of the Broadcasting Act, Chapter B-11, R.S.C., 1970.

Capital Budget of the National Harbours Board for the year ending December 31, 1977, pursuant to section 70(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970, together with copy of Order in Council P.C. 1977-2111, dated July 21, 1977, approving same.

REVENUE CANADA

REMOVAL OF OFFICES FROM SAINT JOHN, NEW BRUNSWICK

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government. I wonder if he is able to provide an answer to my question regarding the possible movement of part of the offices of National Revenue from Saint John, New Brunswick?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I have received some preliminary information. However, much of it is in the nature of a policy decision which has, as yet, not been made public by the government. I understand that an official statement may be made shortly. It may be that I will be in a position to provide further information to the chamber later this day. As I have stated, however, I understand that no official announcement has yet been made. Consequently, it is not possible at this time to reply succinctly to Senator Riley's question.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

CANNED TOMATO SURTAX ORDER APPROVED

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault, pursuant to notice of motion of August 5, moved:

That this House approves the Canned Tomato Surtax Order made by Order in Council P.C. 1977-335 dated 10th February, 1977, until the 30th day of June, 1978.

He said: First, I hope that all honourable senators had a nice holiday and a joyful time!

Last Friday the government gave notice that it intended to move a motion at an appropriate time to obtain approval for the maintenance of a surtax on canned tomatoes. The government whip, the Honourable Senator Petten, addressed some remarks to this question on that date.

Senator Grosart: I think he moved it.

• (1710)

Senator Perrault: Yes, honourable senators. To make the record absolutely clear, Senator Petten did make that motion.

I now move that the Senate approve the Canada Tomato Surtax Order made by Order in Council P.C. 1977-335 dated February 10, 1977. I should like now to speak to this motion, which has been considered and approved by the other place.

This surtax order provides for a 3 cents per pound surtax on canned tomatoes imported from Taiwan. It was made under section 8 of the Customs Tariff, which authorizes the Governor in Council to impose a surtax when he is satisfied, on a report of the Minister of Finance, that imports are causing or threatening serious injury to Canadian producers. Any order made under this authority ceases to have any effect following the one hundred and eightieth day from its making, or, if Parliament is not then sitting, on the fifteenth day after Parliament reassembles, unless it is extended by the adoption of a resolution by both houses of Parliament. Thus the order will cease to have effect after today unless the motion is approved.

The Canadian tomato canning industry employs about 500 persons year round and another 3,000 on a temporary basis. Thirty-five canners packed tomatoes in 1976. Most of these are small firms who rely almost entirely on tomato canning for their income. Any decline in their activities also affects the fortunes of tomato growers who employ 1,500 to 2,000 persons to harvest tomatoes.

Imports from Taiwan were increasing very rapidly prior to the imposition of the surtax. Eleven and a half million pounds were imported in the period August, 1976, to January, 1977, compared to 4 million pounds in the same period in the previous year.

Before the surtax was applied, Canadian producers were having difficulty in moving their inventory because of the large volume of imports being offered to retailers in Canada at prices below domestic costs of production. This placed the canners in severe financial difficulty, particularly those small firms that do not have large financial resources.

As a result of the surtax, imports of canned tomatoes from Taiwan fell to 1.1 million pounds in March and April, 1977, compared to 3.6 million pounds in 1976 and 5.4 million pounds in 1975. However, because of the large inventories still on hand the domestic industry is still selling at or below costs of production.

Parliament is being asked to approve this order until June 30, 1978. This will be sufficient time to allow the Canadian processors to pack and market this year's crop. Packing will start within the next few weeks. If assistance of this type is required beyond that date, Parliament will be asked to approve a further extension. However, the government has stated its intention to consider the industry's long-term prospects, and the question of whether it needs additional protection of a more permanent nature, in connection with its examination of a report from the Tariff Board concerning the processed vegetable industry which is expected to be received later this year.

Honourable senators, I would ask your support for this measure.

Senator Grosart: Would the Honourable Leader of the Government explain more fully why this is a much longer extension than the previous one, which was 180 days? The present extension is for almost a year.

Secondly, would the leader indicate the authority under the GATT agreement for such action by the Canadian government, which, of course, is contrary to the general principles of GATT? I know there are exceptions, however, and perhaps the leader would inform us how this particular surtax stands in relation to our undertakings under the GATT agreement.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the plight of certain sectors of our agricultural industry is very difficult indeed, as the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture has stated on a number of occasions, as have other members of this chamber with experience in agriculture. This applies not only to canners of tomatoes but to canners of many other commodities, including fruit. Many senators are aware, for instance, of the dire plight facing the tree fruit industry in parts of Ontario, British Columbia and the maritime provinces. Only this morning there was a report in the press of what appears to be a looming overproduction of peaches because Canadian canners simply cannot compete with products pouring into this country from low-wage areas, where the cost of production is infinitely lower than it is in this country.

I think we all have to face the fact that a viable, productive and, yes, profitable agricultural industry, is fundamental to the welfare of this country.

The honourable senator has asked why this extension is longer than the previous one. As a result of an assessment of the competitive situation, the escalation in imports from Taiwan over the past few months and in recent years, it is evident that the protection has to be of a longer duration than previously. This is simply a judgment situation made by officials in the Department of Agriculture and officials in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

As far as the question with respect to GATT is concerned, admittedly there is a disconcerting trend in the world today. As honourable senators are aware, a great deal of lip service is given to concepts of freer trade and free-flow of commerce between and among nations, yet a number of devices have been developed by certain other countries to inhibit the export flow of Canada's manufactured products, commodities, and basic resource products.

Senator Grosart: That is not the question.

Senator Perrault: The measure under consideration is designed to provide protection for a sector of our agricultural industry. It is not going to affect our relations with those who are party to the GATT agreement.

Senator Grosart: That is not the question.

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator asked whether the surtax action with respect to tomatoes is compatible with the agreements which we have reached with other nations under GATT. I suggest to you that this type of action by the government has caused no repercussions in the past.

Senator Grosart: That is not the question. Yes or no; is it within the GATT rules? That is all I am asking.

Senator Perrault: Yes, honourable senators, my understanding is that it certainly is within the GATT rules. The government certainly is not going to be a party to any illegality. The proposal to assist this important sector of our agricultural industry is compatible with any of the agreements we have achieved under GATT.

Senator Grosart: Perhaps later this day the Leader of the Government would be good enough to be a little more explicit about this because he referred to "devices" being used. No doubt he was referring to non-tariff barriers. All I am asking is, is this within the terms of GATT, because GATT does allow for certain emergency situations? All I am asking is if Canada is resorting to what is called a "device" which is a way to get around GATT, or is this within our obligations under GATT? It may, or may not be. That is all I am asking.

Senator Perrault: The action we have taken is compatible with our GATT agreements.

Senator Grosart: It may or may not be.

Senator Perrault: In the past we have provided temporary assistance to other sectors of industry on the same basis. I want to provide that reassurance for you.

Senator Grosart: Later this day, if we are still here and the opportunity arises, would you tell us exactly which clause under the GATT agreement authorizes this, if it is so? I would be delighted to believe it is.

Senator Perrault: As far as the clauses are concerned, if the honourable senator requires further information, I will be glad to obtain further information of the kind he has requested. But I want to say the action taken by the government is not abnormal, irregular or illegal.

Senator Flynn: If you say so.

Senator Perrault: It is compatible with ascertaining where Canada's best interests lie in doing what we can to help some producers in the agricultural sector.

Senator Flynn: That is the end of it, if you say so.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, before moving that we adjourn during pleasure, I should like to say that I have just had made available to me further information with respect to canned tomatoes. I have had a note sent to me by officials about our position in this matter. It contains information which may help to answer some of Senator Grosart's questions. Because of the honourable senator's consuming interest in tomato production I want to be helpful by providing further data.

● (1720)

Canada will continue to pursue trade liberalization in multilateral trade negotiations. However, we are prepared to act in particular cases where domestic producers face serious injury. The action is only taken against Taiwan, which is not a member of GATT. However, the honourable senator's question really went beyond that. He asked whether the Canadian action is consistent with the position we have taken with respect to—

Senator Flynn: That is a very good answer. You should stay with that one.

Senator Perrault: Domestic producers claim that they can compete at the existing tariff of two cents a pound against the United States, the largest foreign supplier of canned tomatoes. Imports from other sources are either not large or are of varieties of tomatoes which do not compete with those canned in Canada.

Is that sufficient, honourable senators?

Senator Grosart: When you say Taiwan is not a member of GATT, that lets you out.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I move that the Senate do now adjourn during pleasure to reassemble at the call of the bell at approximately 8 o'clock.

At this time we are not yet aware when the bill with respect to the air traffic controllers will be over here.

Senator Flynn: Have you no report at all about how much time the other place will take to deal with the emergency legislation?

Senator Perrault: I understand that agreement has been achieved among the parties about dealing with all stages of the bill today. However, there are a number of amendments to come before the other place in Committee of the Whole. It really depends upon the attitude taken by the opposition with respect to those amendments, and, as well, possible amendments and observations made by government supporters over there.

Senator Flynn: Does the Leader of the Government not recall that in 1973 we came here on August 31 to pass some emergency legislation? The other place ended its examination of the bill and passed it at 3:30 the next morning. The Senate began sitting at 4:10 in the morning and completed the passage of the bill at 6 o'clock. It was rather confusing, because if you read the report you will see that it is for the sitting of August 31, but all our work was done on September 1. I was wondering whether the same situation might present itself tonight and tomorrow morning.

Senator Perrault: I would appreciate the views of the Leader of the Opposition on this subject. However, I believe it would certainly not be in the interests of the travelling public of Canada to have a long and lengthy delay between the time the matter is dealt with in the other place and the time action is taken in this chamber. I know that all honourable senators feel the same way about the situation.

Senator Flynn: I agree. I was just asking whether a repetition of 1973 was likely.

Senator Perrault: The deliberations in the other place could take some considerable period of time. I do not have any current assessment, but an hour ago I was present in the other place for some of the preliminary debate there. There were no indications of immediate passage. I understand that there are a number of amendments to be dealt with.

Senator Flynn: My precise question is: is there any agreement in the other place to continue with this legislation without interruption after 10 o'clock tonight?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is my understanding that no such agreement has yet been discussed. I believe the question will arise only if the debate is prolonged. However, we in this chamber should be prepared to continue through the night, if necessary, to get the Canadian people travelling again as quickly as possible.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Buckwold: May I ask a question of the leader: On the premise that this bill will be passed by both houses tonight, are arrangements being made for air transportation home tomorrow for those of us who have long distances to travel? At the moment it is very difficult to obtain seats on scheduled airline flights.

Senator Flynn: For everyone.

Senator Buckwold: I was wondering whether we would be able to get air transportation tomorrow, even if we pass the bill, or whether any arrangements are being made.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, conversations have been held with officials of the Department of National Defence and will be held with the Ministry of Transport with respect to possible transportation for parliamentarians who wish to travel to their home areas. I hope to receive a report in that regard later this day.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 12.40 a.m., August 10, the sitting was resumed.

AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL SERVICES CONTINUATION BILL

FIRST READING

The hon. the speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-63, to provide for the continuation of air traffic control services.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), moved that the bill be now read the second time.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of the bill now before the house is to require the air traffic controllers to return to work. It was introduced because the national interest is clearly at stake. The brunt of the strike has fallen upon innocent third parties, members of the travelling public caught by surprise. Many people who are workers in their own right are seriously affected economically by the strike, such as ground crews, baggage handlers, sales reservation clerks, flight crews, and so forth, all of whom are covered by collective agreements. In fact, it is hard to think of any business in this country or any sector of the Canadian economy which has not been affected by this serious work stoppage. Every hour that this strike continues results in severe inconvenience for the travelling public, as well as the employees of those companies which depend on the delivery of goods by air.

Bill C-63, which has been given approval in the other place, is not designed to take away the right to strike from CATCA. Its purpose is to end the current strike as soon as possible. CATCA was given the right to strike the day it was certified as an employee association more than 10 years ago under the Public Service Staff Relations Act. The government did not preempt the right to strike. The bill does not take away that right.

Senator Grosart: Not much!

Senator Perrault: As one of the unions in the public service, CATCA has enjoyed the right the strike since 1967. But, like any other organization in this country, whether labour or management, it must use its right to employ economic weapons wisely and responsibly. Like few other unions in the public or private sectors CATCA holds a juggernaut position on the economy. It is in a position to impose sanctions of the most severe kind on the whole country. When the controllers served notice last week that they would institute a series of rotating strikes and later opted for a total strike, they knew they were exerting a monopoly power which could bring a vital national industry to its knees. As a result of the union's action, Canada faces a serious situation this evening.

There have been various estimates as to the economic effects of this strike. Certainly, the minimum figure appears to be a cost in the order of $5 million to $6 million a day to the airlines themselves.

One of our distinguished colleagues made a speech in the Senate in 1950 when a dispute involving the railways caused great difficulty for Canadians from coast to coast. It may well be worth quoting from a speech made by Senator Hayden on August 30, 1950, in which he said:

I want honourable senators to know, as I am sure they do, that when this strike took place, the men who went on strike were not violating any law of the land in Canada, because there was no law which prohibited or prevented them from striking. Everything that has been done to date has been done in a legal and orderly way and in accordance with our Canadian laws, but it has exposed a weakness in our system.

We now find a clash of two ideologies or philosophies, or whatever you wish to call them, as to the adjustment of rights between employers and employees. The right of labour to make use of the strike as an offensive or defensive weapon against employers has been well recognized. I would be the last person in the world to say that anything should be done to take away that right in the least particular. But today a second principle stands out—the welfare and safety of the state. When you have a clash of those two great principles, then, so far as I or any true and loyal Canadian is concerned, there can be but one opinion, namely, that the safety and welfare of the state is of paramount consideration.

Collective bargaining has, I suggest, meant great advances for labour and management, and for all Canadians. It has and is a remarkably successful way of conducting negotiations for improvement in economic standards in this nation. And that is why it is with great reluctance that the government has felt it to be in the public interest to take action of the kind inherent in the provisions of Bill C-63.

I want to outline the four major areas of dispute at the time negotiations broke off so that the government's position will be well known and understood. First there is money; in changing the system by which air traffic controllers' jobs are classified, there would be automatic increases in pay. It is the government's position that the total compensation received as a result of job reclassification, even if it were to be included, as well as the negotiated increase, is subject to the maximum allowable compensation increase of 8 per cent under the Anti-Inflation Board guidelines.

I would point out to honourable senators who may have some difficulty understanding all of the issues in dispute that reclassification is not subject to the collective bargaining process under present regulations. The Public Service Staff Relations Act points this out very clearly. So, the suggestion that somehow there can be a major reclassification resulting in a substantially higher payment to those who are being reclassified, a payment which would bring the bargaining group's average increase in excess of 12 per cent, simply does not hold up to investigation and examination. CATCA, on the other hand, is demanding that pay increases that come as a result of their proposed reclassification should be treated separately from those which are negotiated under the collective agreement, and should not be subject to the Anti-Inflation Board maximum allowable increase of 8 per cent—6 per cent plus, as honourable senators are aware, the additional 2 per cent amount for increased productivity. So, the position of CATCA in the view of the government is simply this: "Give our bargaining unit, give our employees the maximum Anti-Inflation Board guideline amount of 8 per cent, and additionally we want to pyramid reclassification on top of that 8 per cent maximum." This is the question facing Parliament: what should be done in the face of the intransigent insistence on this position taken by CATCA, a position reinforced by this serious strike? In the first year alone this would have meant an additional 4.6 per cent compensation increase beyond the 8 per cent guideline.

The second issue, honourable senators, is vacations. CATCA wanted to provide its members with five weeks' vacation after 20 years of service. At present there is only CATCA and one other union with a contract which provides for five weeks' vacation after 25 years of service. This is the second demand made by CATCA—five weeks' vacation after 20 years of service. The majority of the Conciliation Board, a board made up of Tom O'Connor of Toronto, the chairman, Ed Stringer of Hamilton and Toronto, and Adrien Villeneuve, the union designate, recommended that the present vacation provisions remain in force. All other collective agreements provide for five weeks' vacation after 27 years or more.

● (0050)

The third issue is management rights. CATCA is demanding that a minimum of two controllers be on duty at all airports between the hours of 8 in the morning and 11 at night. Interestingly enough, this proposal by CATCA, along with others, was dropped over the weekend in return for a proposal that the government and the union sign an agreement to give the workers a 12.6 per cent increase and then send the collective agreement to the Anti-Inflation Board. As far as other demands were concerned, CATCA also wanted a change of work hours for non-operating controllers.

To accede to both of these demands would increase the number of controllers overall and would increase the cost of operations. More importantly, in the view of the government it is not necessary from an operational standpoint.

The fourth issue is classification. CATCA was demanding that some 100 jobs be put in higher classification than, in the view of the government, the job responsibilities merit. Of these four issues, compensation is the central one. For this reason I want to explain as clearly as possible what the government's position is and why we took it.

The anti-inflation guidelines provide several conditions upon which compensation increases for a group may be exempt from the maximum increases permitted under the guidelines. The most important of these conditions are: first, an historical relationship with another group; second, persistent and serious recruiting difficulties, such as in the matter of recruiting prison guards; third, permission to achieve an increase to a minimum of $3.75 an hour or an amount of $600 per annum increase, whichever is higher; and fourth, a commitment made prior to October 14 of 1975 to provide compensation increases to a group.

None of the first three conditions applies in the current air traffic control dispute. It is extremely important in assessing the justice of the position taken by the government to note that the fourth condition was designed to apply to collective agreements signed before October 14, 1975, which provided increases in the period following that date. It was also designed to apply to commitments made, but not formally signed, to increase a group's compensation after October 14, 1975.

The Anti-Inflation Board has made it clear that such a commitment to qualify as an exemption cannot be a simple expression of intent to increase compensation. The commitment must have been clearly identifiable and must have been capable of quantification in terms of cost.

The major issue between the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association and the Treasury Board is the status of the cost of converting air traffic controllers to a new classification plan. The conciliation board was unanimous in recommending an 8 per cent increase for this bargaining unit. The committee comprised of a chairman as well as representatives of the union and management, recommended 8 per cent. What is at issue is the status of the cost of converting certain air traffic controllers to a new classification plan. Both the timing and the terms of reference of the work on a new classification plan clearly and without question disqualify such cost from exemptions under the anti-inflation guidelines.

In June of 1976 CATCA signed its first collective agreement under AIB. AIB, as you recall, came into force in October of 1975. The first contract under AIB was signed in June of 1976 after the anti-inflation program was in effect. Significantly, there was no demand for new classifications at that time, no demand for any plan to reclassify when CATCA signed the agreement, no claim for exemption of resultant increased costs from anti-inflation guidelines. Clearly, then, none of the four criteria used by the Anti-Inflation Board, to provide grounds for an increase in excess of the Anti-Inflation Board regulations, existed.

This is the point at which we have arrived this evening. To make crystal clear its position with respect to the rights of the workers, and its desire to achieve an agreement, the government said, in effect, "All right, we want to sit with you and to sign, in effect, two agreements. We shall affix both of our names to those collective agreements: one would, in effect, express your agreement to an 8 per cent increase for your bargaining unit, and another would, in effect, put before the Anti-Inflation Board your contention that your bargaining unit merits an increase of 12 per cent.

This was not agreed to by the CATCA representatives, and negotiations were broken off. There was never a reluctance on the part of the government to have its views about the wage issue tested by the Anti-Inflation Board. It was only last weekend that CATCA representatives came to the government—perhaps largely as a result of negative public opinion—and said, “We will drop certain of our auxiliary demands if you, government, sit down and sign an agreement with us for a 12 per cent increase. Then we will go to the Anti-Inflation Board. Let them decide. Perhaps we will be rolled back. They may roll us back to 8 per cent, but we will go to the board.”

You may ask, “What is the difficulty with that kind of agreement?” First of all, the government would violate the spirit and law of the AIB by signing a collective agreement for 12 per cent, meanwhile asking the AIB for a decision. Certainly, one may speculate that CATCA—whether the 12 per cent were granted now or not—might simply say in the post-restraints period, “Well, you agreed; you signed to that 12 per cent, and now that the restraints are gone we want catch-up, we want to get all that money back that you signed for in the proposed collective agreement of August, 1977.”

There may to some appear to be but a subtle difference between the position that the government took at the time negotiations broke off and the last demand made by CATCA over the weekend, but there is a very profound difference in terms of economics and principle. If the government were to have capitulated to the CATCA demand in the face of a strike threat, the government would be condoning settlements in excess of the AIB guidelines.

Such a solution was clearly unacceptable. How seriously could any government be taken in this country which knowingly and wilfully signed a collective agreement for a 12 per cent increase, knowing full well that this year's permissible AIB maximum limit of increase is 6 per cent plus 2 per cent, a total of 8 per cent? What kind of example would it be for the Government of Canada to set for the private sector, for business and labour anywhere in this country? The government could be accused with justification of asking for restraint from business and labour in the private sector and not practising restraint in negotiations with its own employees.

The patterns which government sets in establishing wage levels for its own employees, for employees under its jurisdiction, and indirectly for employees of the crown corporations, has a profound economic effect on the whole country.

The government could allow the strike, now that it has been called, to run its course. This action might be seen by some to be compatible with free collective bargaining, for which all of us have so much respect; but should the strike last for a considerable period, even a few more days, the public would be held to ransom and the economy would be subjected to punishing damages. At this time in the history of our country, going, as it is through a difficult economic period, it would not be in the public interest to allow this strike to continue indefinitely. And so, the government has introduced this bill to end a dispute which, we believe, could only go from bad to worse.

● (0100)

The bill would require the air traffic controllers to return to work immediately. The president of the Canadian Air Traffic Controllers has stated that he will advise all the controllers to obey the law. It is a bill which, I think, most honourable senators—I hope all honourable senators—will agree is essentially fair. It sets forth, under schedule I, amounts to be paid for certain categories, ranging from A-11 to A-18 and to air traffic controllers in training, and so on, as honourable senators can see; but it also allows for a variation of the schedule. Honourable senators need only look at clause 5(4) for this where they will find the following:

(4) Where the employee organization notifies the Secretary of the Public Service Staff Relations Board in writing within ten days after the coming into force of this Act that it wishes to have any of the rates of pay specified in Schedule I reconsidered, the Chairman of that Board shall forthwith appoint an arbitrator to reconsider those rates of pay and the arbitrator may vary any such rates of pay in any manner that does not increase the aggregate compensation provided for by that Schedule and any such variation is binding on the parties to the collective agreement to which this Act applies.

It was with reluctance that Parliament had to be recalled in order to deal with this emergency bill. In the government's view it is in the national interest for the Senate to give this bill its approval so that we can get the airlines running again and thus end the difficulties which have been confronting so many Canadians in recent days and hours.

[Translation]

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, we are here at a disgraceful hour, but fortunately less disgraceful than on the occasion when railway workers were ordered back to work in 1973. I mentioned earlier that that piece of legislation had then been sent to us by the other place at 3:30 a.m. We had been waiting since 11 o'clock the previous day August 31st, and we completed the proceedings at 6 a.m. on September 1st. His Excellency the Governor General's deputy came at that hour to give royal assent. I would say that this debate is proceeding in a much more favourable environment than the former one.

I listened with much interest to the government leader's statement inviting us to give our unreserved support not only to the legislation but to the government itself. He said that the government never takes improper, illegal or unfair action. And he continued along that line. But with this kind of legislation it would have been interesting had the bill been introduced by Senator Marchand. Because I have a particular recollection of his first speech, unfortunately the last one I heard so far, and I look forward to hearing him again, maybe this evening.

Senator Marchand: Yes.

Senator Flynn: Maybe he will take part in tonight's debate. He made an excellent speech on our labour relations system. Unfortunately, the newspapers had reports concerning his attack against the CBC only, not on the substance of his speech. He had fought very hard so that hospital employees in Quebec would get the right to strike, but he had told them that if they ever exercised that right they would lose it.

This is it, boiled down more or less. Of course he will have an opportunity to clarify and further explain his views. But brutally speaking, this is what it amounted to. I suggest this is more or less what is happening now.

[English]

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, on a point of order, we are not getting any translation.

Senator Flynn: I can understand that you wish to have a translation.

Senator Grosart: The system is operating.

Senator Flynn: Senator Grosart says that he can understand me.

Senator Denis: Everybody can, in that case.

[Translation]

Senator Flynn: Anyway, my introduction was simply to urge Senator Marchand to take part in the debate because I would like him to take an interest in our problems. I am sorry to see him looking at us with a somewhat disillusioned expression at times, and if I might ask him tonight, even at this late hour to express his views on this matter, I think the Senate would appreciate it.

[Englishs]

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, that having been said, I want to deal with this problem from three different vantage points: the first is the strike and CATCA; the second is the strike and the government; the third is the strike, Parliament and the public.

With regard to CATCA, I say at the outset, without any hesitation, that I have no sympathy whatever for that association. In the present instance it has acted in a very irresponsible manner, whatever degree of provocation the ineptitude of the Minister of Transport may have constituted. Their action seems to be part of a trend that goes back to 1972, when they walked out without any reason, and to last summer when they walked out and had to be called back.

CATCA possesses the incredible power of being able to paralyze air traffic in Canada. It is a weapon out of all proportion with the interests they are trying to defend in the present instance and tried to defend on the previous occasions. I refer here to last summer. It is irresponsible for 2,200 people to paralyze the whole country as far as air traffic is concerned. Whatever their defence, whatever their frustration, they were not justified, in my opinion, to act as they did. They said that negotiations broke down, as a result of which they would begin rotating strikes last Monday evening at 12 o'clock. Normally, had they been serious and sincere they would have allowed for a much longer warning period. In any event, the Minister of Transport said, "If you go on strike, as you threaten to, Parliament will force you back to work." They decided to advance the strike from Monday night to Sunday at 4 o'clock in the morning. I would say that this was a savage thing to do.

I despise the irresponsibility of the leadership of CATCA in this present instance.

● (0110)

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: Last year we had another example, when, on the pretext that the introduction of bilingualism in the air presented a danger to security, they walked out, supported by the airline pilots association in a strike that was extremely costly, at a time when Canada was hosting the Olympic Games. Under those circumstances they were able to force upon the government—and upon the same minister, I might add—an agreement which I described at that time as the most humiliating agreement any government had ever accepted. It was a total capitulation by the government, a betrayal of its responsibility. It may be that because Mr. Lang and the government suffering such humiliation at the hands of CATCA last summer, we have today a problem more acute than it should otherwise have been.

In any event, I repeat that I cannot accept that a couple of thousand controllers, servants of the people, can impose upon the public the hardship that this group imposed on the public last summer and seeks to impose again this year. I say that if the right to strike involves that degree of power, you have to act in a responsible way, you have to exercise it with a lot of discretion—discretion that was obviously not used in the present instance.

I therefore have no hesitation in supporting the substance of this bill, which tells the controllers, "You go back to work. In this instance you have lost the right to strike." I will have something to say about the way the bill says that they should do so; that is something else.

I want now to deal with the strike and the government. It must be recognized that there was some ineptitude in the way the government handled this matter. Negotiations have gone on for nine months. The collective agreement ended on December 31, 1976. But suddenly, after the report of the conciliator, the government said, "There is nothing else for us to do. You do what you want. We can do no more."

I listened to the Leader of the Government explaining the main differences. He introduced a lot of problems that I do not think were entirely relevant to CATCA's decision to strike. The main problem is the question of reclassification, and I could not reconcile what the leader said about that with what I have read. In order properly to understand the difficulties and implications, I would say that we should have this bill referred to the Committee of the Whole and have the Minister of Labour, or the Minister of Transport for that matter, come to us and explain exactly what the difference was as far as the 4.6 per cent was concerned, the reclassification item.

As I see it, the parties were agreed upon, let us say, 7.4 per cent, or 8 per cent overall. Then the association wanted a reclassification which would cost, let us say, something in the order of 4.6 per cent. They said, "Well, if you think that it's going beyond the guidelines of the Anti-Inflation Act, let the board rule upon it." The government said no, but why it said no I do not understand. If the government was sure that its interpretation of what is permissible under the guidelines, under the act and its provisions, was correct, why did it not agree to have the board rule on the matter? However, the Leader of the Government explained it in a different manner. He said that at one time the parties were agreed to sign two agreements, but then only one agreement would have to be signed. That is rather complicated, but I do not mind the leader explaining it at this time if he wishes to do so. I am willing to yield.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, when the prospect of a serious strike loomed, the Treasury Board and other government members of the negotiating entity felt that in order to avoid public inconvenience they should devise a plan in co-operation with CATCA to have any signed collective agreement referred to the Anti-Inflation Board, the proviso being, however, that CATCA must sign an agreement to settle for an 8 per cent increase in total compensation. However, at the same time, included in the submission to the Anti-Inflation Board would be the union's proposal of settling at the higher 12.6 per cent CATCA figure. The submission to the board would include these two matters, with the AIB ruling to be accepted by both sides. The union would not accept a referral on that basis, which is a matter of record.

Senator Flynn: On two referrals, rather than one?

Senator Perrault: The referral to the Anti-Inflation Board of both the government's best offer of 8 per cent, representing the government view that this was the maximum permissible under the anti-inflation program, and also the union's demand of 12.6 per cent, with an agreement by both union and the government to accept the AIB award. This formula was not accepted by CATCA and that is when negotiations broke off.

Senator Flynn: Well, it's difficult to understand why we have had a strike. It seems to me that if the government was sure that 8 per cent was correct, it should have been equally sure that the Anti-Inflation Board would have said that it was correct. It is also my opinion that CATCA should not have feared anything with respect to this aspect of the settlement and that, in fact, the only matter that was doubtful was the reclassification problem, representing 4.6 per cent. Is the Leader of the Government suggesting that there really was only a problem of semantics between the parties?

Senator Perrault: The government took the position that as far as this bargaining unit was concerned, because that discussion regarding re-classification occurred after the anti-inflation program came into existence, while there could be some reclassification within that bargaining unit, the overall amount of money paid by way of increase to the bargaining unit must remain at the maximum figure of 8 per cent.

● (0120)

Under Anti-Inflation Board regulations, the matter of classification is not a subject of arbitration. Classification could not be broken out of the total bargaining unit of package for a pyramiding on top of the 8 per cent amount, and that is the very essence of the dispute.

Senator Flynn: If I understand the leader correctly, he is saying that under the guidelines the 8 per cent should include everything.

Senator Perrault: That is correct.

Senator Flynn: That is precisely the position the government takes in this bill, and that is especially apparent in clause 5(4), which provides for arbitration on some aspects as long as any decision "does not increase the aggregate compensation." That is the point. The government is adamant. It takes a position here which it will allow no one, not even the Anti-inflation Board, to alter.

Senator Perrault: The government position prior to the breaking off of negotiations by CATCA was that, while it was confident in its belief that 8 per cent was the allowable legal maximum under the anti-inflation guidelines, the government was willing to submit a collective agreement to the AIB that included that 8 per cent figure, as well as the union's proposal of a 12.6 per cent measure, offering at the same time to accept the union's figure if it were upheld by the Anti-Inflation Board.

There was no reluctance on the part of the government, prior to the breaking off of negotiations, to enter into a referral to the AIB. However, there is a substantial and marked difference between the terms of the submission to AIB prior to the breaking off of negotiations and the proposal of last weekend, which would have seen the government and CATCA signing an agreement to enter into a 12 per cent plus wage increase followed by a submission to the Anti-Inflation Board for approval or for a possible roll-back to 8 per cent. There is a substantial difference in the ultimate implications of the two proposals.

Senator Flynn: That may be. However, on the surface I have difficulty seeing the difference, unless it is a matter of the question being put to the Anti-Inflation Board in a different manner. What difference would it have made, had the government agreed to an increase of 7.4 per cent or 8 per cent and then asked that the Anti-Inflation Board to rule on the question of whether an additional 4.6 per cent were justified on the ground of reclassification?

Senator Perrault: In my view, that would have been the effect if the final proposal prior to the breaking off of negotiations had been accepted by CATCA. It is a matter of concern and mystification to the government as to why that proposal could not have gone forward.

Senator Flynn: I should like the minister to come before the Senate to explain that. Having listened to the debate and read all I could on this matter, it is still something of a mystery to me. The position of the government, as indicated in the bill, is probably indicative of the position the government took in the negotiations. The government states in the bill that the controllers will return to work and provides that the aggregate compensation will be 7.4 per cent. That is all there is to it. There is no room for negotiation, for correction, for adjustment, except within the aggregate compensation provided in the schedule.

[Translation]

Senator Denis: If it is the decision to—

[English]

Senator Flynn: I realize that. I am not discussing it. I am merely explaining the position of the government. If it is the decision of Parliament also, so be it.

I do not think Senator Denis can contradict me when I say we are telling these people to go back to work and that the aggregate compensation can be lowered or maintained but can never be changed to increase any amount that would be payable to them.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, may I just say that this does not preclude the payment of increases to people by way of promotion, for example. But the concept of reclassification involves, as the honourable senator may be aware, placing a higher civil service rating on work that may be basically unchanged.

Senator Flynn: Well, promotion was already provided for in the collective agreement so that was not a problem. You are not suggesting that the government is doing something other than following the collective agreement when you say that promotion will be compensated in accordance with the collective agreement.

[Translation]

Senator Marchand: That is not the problem!

[English]

Senator Flynn: In any event, I would say that in the end it would seem that the attitude of the government has been extremely rigid. The government did not try to convince the controllers that they should continue to discuss or that they should postpone the strike.

Suggestions have been made that Mr. Lang may have been trying to get even with the controllers for what they did to him and to the government last year. That may be so. It may have been a mistake on the part of the government to have Mr. Lang deal with this problem after what happened last year. The least that can be said is that the situation which has developed is in part the result of events which took place last year and previous to that, and I do not think we can compliment the government in the circumstances. It has to share in the responsibility for the serious situation which exists, involving many, many Canadians in all walks of life in a great deal of hardship, particularly at a time when large numbers of people are travelling on vacations, vacations which may be lost to them forever as a result of this strike. Apart from that there are, of course, the direct economic consequences of this strike.

I want to say a word about the strike in relation to Parliament and the public. I did not have time to check this fact for myself, but I am reliably informed that these controllers, as is the case for all other public servants, were given the right to strike ten years ago in 1967. Since then we have had several occasions during which public servants have used their right to strike, or have even decided to strike without having the right to do so. And we have had situations in which other groups have paralysed the economy of the country either by legally or illegally striking. Parliament has had to deal with such situations on many occasions.

● (0130)

I referred previously to the case of the railway employees in 1973. We had the stevedores on the west and east coasts. On the east coast we had a rather amusing experience where we had to pass a second bill to tell the stevedores to obey the law that we had passed before.

That, as I have already mentioned, was an extreme case of telling people, "We order you to obey the law; otherwise you will be penalized," as if no penalty were provided for in the first law.

The public is getting tired of strikes, legal or illegal, that are detrimental to the economy of the country and to the welfare of the public generally. It was agreed upon here before that the time had come to provide that the government should not have to call upon Parliament requesting passage of emergency legislation every time there is a strike that wreaks dire consequences upon the country, its people and its economy.

With regard to public servants in essential fields, it is imperative that something should be done along the lines of the report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service, where the government would have the right to prevent a strike by order in council, subject to the order's being submitted to Parliament for approval after a reasonable delay. That idea should be explored.

This report has been before the government for several years, but the government has done nothing. Every time we have discussed a bill of this kind, we submitted that there should be some method whereby we could at least delay a strike in order that Parliament be permitted to deal with it before it happened. In the present case, for instance, it is stupid to think that we knew last week that this strike might take place and were unable to act. CATCA declared a general strike to begin in the night of Saturday to Sunday because the minister had stated that he would have Parliament pass legislation to force them back to work.

In my opinion, that was poor logic because, in any event, this is the kind of strike that we cannot permit to go on. In three or four days it has caused countless problems. It is extremely costly to the economy and creates so many personal hardships that it is impossible for us to allow such a strike to continue. It should have been possible, however, for the government last week to have prevented this strike from starting. We have had three or four days of economic loss and hardship which could have been avoided had we had on the statute books the means whereby the government could act at least to delay this kind of strike.

In my opinion, there should also be permanent legislation covering other areas where our economy cannot support a strike allowing the government to act first—probably with the accord of Parliament—and then to have Parliament approve the conditions.

Senator Perrault, in this regard, referred to the views of Senator Hayden in 1950. What Senator Hayden said in 1950 should long since have been acted upon. Twenty-seven years have elapsed since Senator Hayden said that, and the government has done nothing about it in the meantime. Where the public interest is concerned there should be some kind of mechanism that allows the government to intervene and prevent a strike of the kind we are faced with.

I now come to the bill. The only really fundamental objection to the bill I have concerns clause 5(4). The title of the bill makes me smile a little, since it says it is an act to provide for the continuation of air traffic control services. I would say that the word should be "resumption" rather than "continuation"; but the bill was probably drafted before the strike started.

Clause 5(4) is really the crux of the problem between the government and CATCA. It says:

(4) Where the employee organization notifies the Secretary of the Public Service Staff Relations Board in writing within ten days after the coming into force of this Act that it wishes to have any of the rates of pay specified in Schedule I reconsidered, the Chairman of that Board shall forthwith appoint an arbitrator to reconsider those rates of pay and the arbitrator may vary any such rates of pay in any manner that does not increase the aggregate compensation provided for by that Schedule and any such variation is binding on the parties to the collective agreement to which this Act applies.

The government is a party to the agreement with CATCA, yet it seems to me that it is saying to Parliament, "Tell us we are right, and that the opinion of CATCA is entirely wrong."

Does the Leader of the Government seriously suggest that Parliament is able to pass that kind of judgment? Does he really think that we can say that the government is right and that CATCA is wrong, as far as this problem is concerned? Who is able to tell me—I would like to know—that the opinion of the government is entirely right, that it cannot be questioned, and that there should be no arbitration, no reference to any body that could make such a decision, such as the Anti-Inflation Board? That is what the government is asking us to do.

Senator Denis: You said yourself we could not go on with the strike.

Senator Flynn: I agree with you.

Senator Denis: You say yourself you agree with the idea of stopping the strike. It appears we are right, since you said yourself you do not want the strike to go on.

Senator Flynn: That is very typical of the Liberal majority here.

Senator Cote: Is there a majority?

Senator Flynn: I think so. I think there are two of us on this side at this time. That, however, is about the usual proportion.

Senator Godfrey: Where are the others on your side?

Senator Flynn: The same place as the others on your side.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I wonder if the honourable senator might agree that clause 5(4) really does little more than establish a ceiling beyond which there shall be no possibility of increasing the rates of pay? It is an over-all ceiling.

Senator Flynn: That is exactly what I said. It says that the rates can be varied, but let us say the amount represents $4 million or, as it probably must be, close to $7 million in comparison with the $3 million involved in the 4.6 per cent. Suppose we say, "This is the amount that we will give you. You can divide it in whatever way you like or in whatever way the arbitrator says it should be divided." The arbitrator, however, may not decide to increase this amount of $7 million by one cent. The government says, "As far as we are concerned, this is it. It is $7 million, and that is all you are going to get." And the government asks Parliament to say that that is all that the controllers are going to get. They are not entitled to one cent more.

● (0140)

Senator Lang: In aggregate.

Senator Flynn: Yes. Well, I don't accept that there is no room for accommodation, that there is no room for arbitration, not only on the amount but also on the acceptability under the guidelines of the Anti-inflation Act for part or all of what was asked for by CATCA. In any event, we are asked under this bill to tell CATCA that the opinion of its employer—an ordinary employer so far as Parliament is concerned—is right, and the association is wrong, and that is the end of it.

Senator Lang: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: Hear, hear. But I would love to have Senator Lang say the same thing when someone other than the government is the employer. We have heard praise from the Leader of the Government for the collective bargaining principle. I do not think you could reconcile that with the attitude that you are taking, Senator Lang. In any event, I think I have said enough, except that I should like to ask some questions if the bill is referred to Committee of the Whole. I have some questions with regard to sanctions. I understand the sanction would be the one applicable to any federal law that does not specifically provide a sanction.

My second question would be what happens after December 31, 1977?

These are details. I may have other questions.

On the whole, I am very much in favour of Parliament ending the strike, but I am not satisfied that the government has done everything it should have done to prevent it. I am not satisfied either that the government has provided with this bill the proper conditions or vehicle for doing so.

[Translation]

Senator Jean Marchand: Honourable senators, I regret as well as all of you, no doubt, that we have to discuss such an important matter in such bad psychological rather than physical conditions. It is almost 2 a.m. and the Leader of the Opposition mentioned that in 1973 they had gone on till 6 a.m.; if you agree; I am ready to beat the 1973 record. I think that the issue warrants it, but if we go faster it is merely because we are time conscious, but there is no doubt that it is an extremely important question which is vital not only for CATCA or CALPA but for all public or other related services throughout the country. There are several philosophies concerning negotiations between the state and civil servants. Let us say that the discussions I heard today at the other place and here indicate in the first place that many ideas are exchanged in both places but also that probably those are the worst places for collective bargaining.

Senator Flynn: Surely.

Senator Marchand: I followed the debate and I tried to understand, but I think that no one in the other place or in this house can be convinced, on the basis of his personal knowledge, that the collective agreement is really as it should be. Really, it is not up to us to make such a decision.

Why, honourable senators, are we gathered here today? It is not because we have felt that there could be something unfair in a collective agreement which should be signed between the government and the organization called CALPA. We have only met because of a strike in a service area we find essential, and as a government we cannot tolerate that the strike last forever and the public suffer from it, and perhaps also for political reasons. That is what the problem is. If we have to explain it to the public, I will try to do it as quickly as possible.

How is it that the government, or governments—not only this government, and other previous governments, and provincial governments—are the ones which have extended the right to strike to groups that work in services essential to society? So they are given the right to strike. As soon as they use it, we try to restrict, suppress or limit it. That is the problem which everybody understands, much more than the substance of the collective agreement. What is the answer to that situation? I regret, honourable senators, that we have not more time to go in depth into these concepts which are fundamental. Those are institutions which constitute the very basis of our democratic society. If our democratic society is to operate normally, we have to find adequate answers to those questions.

First of all, I do not think there is anyone in this house who would deny the government employees, the public service employees, the right to collective bargaining. I think that this is totally acquired. Those employees have the same right as any other category of employees of our country to negotiate with their employer to protect their economic and social rights, of course within the accepted jurisdictions.

Where does the problem start? In the public services. I heard a series of arguments which, in my opinion, are impressive but which are of no value or, if you want, of no importance in the circumstances. Even if the strike bothers the citizens, even if it causes damage, is it enough to stop it? Will we allow strikes only when they do not cause damage, when they can last indefinitely and the employees can starve, or suffer anonymously and in silence? Is it only when a strike is efficient that we should stop it? This is a nonsense.

Senator Flynn: It a matter of proportions.

Senator Marchand: Here again, when we speak about strikes, what are we talking about exactly? In my opinion, we are talking about a means, a tool which is in the hands of the employees but which cannot be used in the same way in all sectors. That is the problem.

Senator Flynn: Right.

Senator Marchand: That is the problem. I was told that I was in favour of the right to strike in the public service. I am in favour of the right to strike in the public service. I have been, I am and will still be in the future. However, the exercise of the right to strike in the public service is possible only provided we have institutions that are truly responsible with regard to the common good. If those institutions are not truly responsible, then we have anarchy, and our society cannot function democratically. That is true not only of collective bargaining, but also of some private activities as we know them. For instance, Bell Canada is a private company; that is common knowledge. But you know very well that it is restricted by several government regulations. Bell Canada cannot increase its rates according to its whims. The Canadian National cannot stop its services when it so wishes. Indeed, there are a lot of restrictions, price limits, terms and conditions set on production, etc. In other words, the state intervenes at some point, to protect public interest.

So, in this specific field of labour relations, why do I agree with the right to strike? I shall simply say, as someone said in answer to the question: Do you really mind growing old? I do not enjoy it but it is still better than the alternative solution.

So, I tell you that I do not like the exercise of the right to strike in public services, but I still like it better than the other solution. But what is that other solution? If we accept that all employees in the public service have the right to collective bargaining, the only other solution to the right to strike is binding arbitration.

Senator Flynn: That is it.

Senator Marchand: In my opinion, it is the worst thing in a democratic state. Why? Simply because in a society like ours, the public sector is of a vital importance not only as a body in itself but because of the impact it has on other sectors. If we determine the working conditions and the wages, and if we grant new systems or set up patterns of relations between management and labour, it automatically implies consequences on the private sector. The whole society can be changed through the public sector. Can the state—and here I mean also its legislative bodies like the House of Commons and the Senate as well as the government itself—delegate its authority? That is the easy solution. It would be simple to rely on a referee which would decide all conflicts. As legislators, or members of Parliament, are we going to let a third party which is not responsible to the public decide on matters which can have vital consequences for the whole society? What kind of government are we going to have? That is not possible. It means that there are things which cannot be left to a third party to decide, however wise he or she might be. In doing so, the state would abdicate its responsibilities and I object to that. Nobody, no judge or court can say: I am going to make decisions which will affect the whole Canadian nation without having to account to anybody.

Senator Flynn: That is what the Supreme Court does. If the referee had directives such as those the courts have stemming from the law.

Senator Marchand: Honourable senators, it is all very well to say this but it is precisely not a problem of law in 90 per cent of the cases; it is a problem of interests which are not predetermined in texts.

Senator Flynn: They can be determined.

Senator Marchand: No, they cannot. The Leader of the Opposition demonstrates that he does not know the collective agreement when he thinks that it can be determined or that some lines can be traced in advance. When I said that the worst negotiations could be made in agencies such as ours, I think that the Leader of the Opposition has just given a striking example of this.

Senator Flynn: May I suggest to Senator Marchand to read the speech the leader of the NDP, Mr. Lewis, delivered a few years ago when he said precisely that in this area we should proceed to arbitration but that with guidelines—and he had mentioned one concerning railway employees, the industrial wages index should be followed. This is what he said and Senator Forsey is going to explain it to you. You are entitled to your opinion but do not say that any other opinion is unacceptable.

Senator Marchand: I have never stated that any other opinion was unacceptable. The honourable senator has the bad habit of crediting me with all kinds of statements.

Senator Flynn: I am trying to illustrate a situation.

Senator Marchand: Let him not credit me with too many intentions because I am very bad at taking it. I am very, very bad at taking it. So he would be better off keeping what he has for himself. I simply want to say that that is the basic problem we have to reconcile; that is, not to surrender to an authority a duty and responsibility that the government itself must take—and when I say government, I mean the government and the legislative instruments—that the government must not surrender to third parties what we cannot do. At the same time, we should avoid having national disasters every time we have problems in public sectors. Think about it. Indeed, it is a fact of the land.

Take wheat, for example. You start with a strike by grain handlers at the head of the Great Lakes, for example, or elsewhere. Then, you continue with a strike by railway workers, and then you have a strike by longshoremen in Vancouver, Thunder Bay or Montreal, so that in one year you can bring the shipment of a product that is as basic as wheat to a complete standstill all across the country.

So what does that mean? That means that unions—and I want to be clearly understood on that point.

[English]

I am not opposed to the union. I am not opposed to the strike. However, the unions in Canada, and in North America generally, have a very special status inasmuch as each union in its own bargaining unit is the sole representative of all employees, and that is to be found nowhere else in the world. That is the law. However, it means that they have a special responsibility in the exercise of certain of their rights. There are many unions in Europe which, while being more radical than CALPA and CATCA, would not dare bring about a lengthy strike in the public service.

A strike in the private sector between two groups with different interests can be justified, and such disputes can result in one group completely destroying the other. That is normal. However, I cannot imagine for one second any group of private citizens in this country taking the position that unless the government agrees to its terms, it will force it to do it. If that happens, it means that there is no longer any government in the country.

● (0200)

In the second place, if the union can strike, then I think you have to admit that the purpose of the strike in public services is not to place the government in that position but is to try to draw the attention of the public to certain working conditions which the union and its membership consider unjust. That should be the purpose of the strike, and if the country is paralysed for one day or two days, we at least know what is happening and we can explain that to the news media, and if the government does not act properly, does not give decent conditions to its employees, then the penalty the government will pay will not be in a lost strike but will be at the ballot box, where the citizens will say that the government is not acting properly with its employees. And that is the only way. Do you imagine that the communist union, the CGT in France, would paralyze all transportation in Paris for a month or two? They know very well that if they ever did that they would disappear from the scene. The public there would never accept that.

No, there is only one solution. Others may have opinions which may be better than mine, but I tell you that there is no substitute for responsible institutions in a democratic country like ours. There is no substitute for that. It is useless to try to design a law to prevent disputes between a government and its employees and then come to the conclusion: "Well, we have a permanent pattern of settlement and we are over those problems forever." That is simply not true. It is not true because, as you know, there are a number of unions in this country consisting of 400 or 500 employees which can paralyze probably half of the country. It is easy to see how they can do that using rotating strikes, for example. But, you know, there are other problems we have not even discussed at all, such as employers who have a number of plants and who can switch production from one plant to another in order to destroy a union or at least prevent a union from obtaining a just contract. That is a point which must be considered, and a question the public has in mind is how we handle such a problem.

Now, this is the last point I want to raise tonight, and I know you must be happy to hear that.

Senator Riel: Continue.

Senator Marchand: You can be sure that I will return to this subject and deal with many of these points in the future. There is certainly no doubt in my mind on that score.

I wish to deal now with the problem of the responsibility of the union, because when CATCA acts in the way it has—and here I am not referring to the controllers themselves but to those who lead the union, and this applies to other unions as well—it can only be considered irresponsible. For example, last year when they made their strike it was not on a question of collective bargaining or anything of the kind, but it was actually against the law of the government of the country on the question of bilingualism. It is certainly not the business of CATCA to decide if we are going to have bilingualism in this country or not.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Marchand: It does not belong to CATCA, or to any other union, to try to make such a decision. I do not say they haven't the right to denounce the government or that they haven't the right to say to the public that certain practices are dangerous, or that they haven't the right to receive support from the rest of the labour movement or from other associations or individuals when they say that a certain practice is dangerous. Sure, they have that right. They have the right to denounce the government. They have the right to say, "We have a lousy government." But the right to strike is a weapon which was given to them for the purpose of obtaining decent collective agreements, and they do not have the right to use that as a weapon to force the government to make changes in policy, for which it is solely responsible in the eyes of the public. I say that in respect of what happened last year, and I also relate it to this occasion, because I am sure that this year there was no real reason for the controllers to strike.

I am not sure that certain leaders were not happy to avoid accepting their responsibility by saying, "Well, let us make no compromise and let the House of Commons and the Senate decide the whole thing. So we shall keep our position and regain the prestige we have lost in some other circumstance." If that is so, I say that it is not the most beautiful thing that I have seen in this country.

When I look at the agreement, I am of the opinion that there was no reason for it. Senator Flynn might say that the government is responsible, and another senator might blame the union; but when I look at the agreement I am of the opinion that there was no reason to paralyze the whole country. Why was it done? Was it because the union is irresponsible, or was it because some leaders were happy to let someone else take the responsibility which normally any labour organization should take?

[Translation]

Honourable senators, such are the basic problems we are now and will again be facing. Other negotiations will take place in the public sector. If there were a railway strike tomorrow and we let the strike go indefinitely, honourable senators on all sides of the house and members in the other place would ask what the government was doing. Wheat could no longer be distributed, products could not be sold, we would be leading the economy to a gigantic bankruptcy. Everyone would be asking for an end to that.

On the other hand the point would be made that those people have a right, and why should they be prevented from exercising it? Such is the dilemma, and I submit the only solution in the future, because we do not wish this to happen all the time, is that the institutions concerned accept their responsibilities. Otherwise, unions will finally lose the right to strike, and in my view this would be disastrous. I oppose compulsory arbitration in the public sector. I do not feel it would improve relations between the government as a whole and its employees.

As far as the government's own responsibilities are concerned, I feel we have no right to delegate them. The government's own areas of responsibility are not negotiable by definition. The government is responsible for the security of the people, through the Department of Transport which is supposed to have the expertise, the specialists, needed to regulate public safety, not only of the pilots' or controllers' safety but that of the public. I am not implying the government should not consult. It must pay attention to the views of pilots and controllers. In the area of marine transportation, pilots and shipping companies are consulted when a piece of regulation is to be enacted. But who assumes responsibility in the final analysis for determining where a channel will go? Who determines where buoys must be laid so that marine safety will be ensured? Not arbitration boards, but the Department of Transport. The mariners' views are as worthy of attention as anyone else's. Who is responsible for the safety of our routes? No judge is. The municipal or provincial authorities set the speed limits and the patterns of traffic to ensure the safety of citizens. This is how it is done everywhere. I simply state that there are some areas where the government has no right to allow anyone to be in a quandary. These are the areas in which the government must make the decisions after having obtained all possible technical advice.

Then, why are we here at 2:10 in the morning? It is because of a problem that is bothering everyone, the public generally, the unions and the employers, and this problem is what to do about strikes when they affect the public. This is the problem that we must solve and that we shall solve eventually, I hope.

We might spend many hours discussing the collective agreement, but I am not convinced that we would do much better than CATCA or the Department of Transport. I am not convinced about that, because in addition to the conflicting interests that we would have to reconcile, we would also have to reconcile our own conflicting interests.

This is not the only solution. It is the problem to which we must address ourselves. If we really face the problem, we shall eventually find, not the ultimate solution, but a solution like the one that was found in Sweden—it is not perfect, but it is still better than the situation in Canada—a solution such as was found in Germany, with the DGB, or such as was found in France. The solution found in Great Britain was not as good, but for other reasons.

In any case, I would like to close with this. I shall vote for this bill, but not because I believe in it since I consider that some people have failed to assume their responsibilities as they should have done. In my present state of mind, I would certainly not vote for a bill which took away permanently the right to strike from controllers, pilots or others, and this, for the reasons that I have stated. However, I shall support this bill because I am convinced that those responsible for negotiations, and I am not blaming the Department of Transport, have not assumed their responsibilities, and all that we are doing now is to finish the work that they did not have the courage to finish themselves.

● (0210)

[English]

Hon. Eugene A. Forsey: Honourable senators, I do not propose at this hour of the morning to detain the house for very long, but I do not feel that I can allow this legislation to pass without expressing very briefly certain opinions which I have. I do not think I shall take more than a very few minutes. I have six points down here that I want to discuss.

First of all I should like to express my concurrence in the observations which the Leader of the Opposition made on the behaviour of the union in this particular case.

Secondly, I think everyone is agreed, as far as I can discover, from what has been said here, and what I listened to in the other place, where I listened to most of the debate from the gallery, that the guidelines under the anti-inflation legislation must be observed. The conflict of opinion arises over precisely what the guidelines mean in this particular case, and there appears to be a distinct and marked difference of opinion between the union and the government. That is not surprising.

The government, however, and this is the third point I wish to make, appears to me to be arguing at cross purposes—to be saying two different things at the same time. I confess I am puzzled by this, and I am in good company—the Leader of the Opposition is puzzled by it also—so it cannot be just my individual stupidity or cloth-headedness; it must be a puzzle—ment that is a little better founded than upon my individual deficiencies.

The government argues on the one hand that it cannot accept what it describes as the 12.4, or 12.3, or 12.6, or whatever it is, per cent settlement; but it says also that it was willing to accept an Anti-Inflation Board ruling in favour of that figure, whatever it is. I do not see how the government can reconcile those two positions. It is a mystery to me. It is one of the mysteries which are really quite insoluble. Perhaps the Leader of the Government, however, when he closes the debate, will be able to enlighten me. I very much hope that he will.

However—and here is my fourth point—if the government was willing to accept an Anti-Inflation Board ruling on this point, why did it not put this in the bill? Why did it not accept the amendment moved in the other place by the New Democratic Party and supported by the Conservative Party? It could not, surely, have been a very subversive or revolutionary amendment if it secured, as I think it did, the unanimous support of the Conservative Party? I suppose one could argue that they were seduced by the dulcet words of the members of the NDP, and they became, in the words of the late M. Maurice Duplessis, “Communists without knowing it;” but I think that is a little bit far-fetched. It seems to me that the amendment proposed in the other place and supported by the two main opposition parties was a not unreasonable amendment. Now, I cannot for the life of me see why, if the government was willing, as it says it was, to accept an AIB ruling on this larger amount as being within the guidelines, it was not prepared to embody that in the legislation. I am therefore convinced that the strike should be settled—settled now—but it should be settled on the basis embodied in that amendment and not on the basis which is embodied in the bill.

I come now to my final point, which is the most important of all. Even in the time that I have been in this house, we have had a series of occasions when this type of emergency legislation is presented to us and on each occasion we have been told in effect, “This is altogether exceptional. We are in favour of free collective bargaining. This is a very exceptional case.” I, if I remember correctly, said on the last occasion, “Well, I hope this is true, but I am afraid we are going to have other occasions of this sort.” I am afraid that this is a little bit like what they do in the other place when we in this chamber make an amendment which they are unwilling to accept and they add—when they accept it in spite of that unwillingness—that this is not to be drawn into precedent. That always seems to me to be, as Hobbes said, “But words and breath and of no force to oblige a man at all.” But it goes on, and on, and on, and on. Well, similarly, with this kind of thing, we get this emergency legislation. It is an exception. It must not be taken as a precedent. It must not be regarded as a rule. But it seems to me that it is now becoming quite clear that in fact the exceptions are becoming the rule, and it seems to me equally clear that the time has come when we have to work out some permanent legislation which will deal satisfactorily with this situation.

Now that is a very difficult thing to do. It needs very careful thought. It can't be done hastily. But I think there are certain facts that we simply have to recognize, and in what I am about to say now I am not expressing a conviction which has come to me since I was appointed to this chamber, a conviction which is the result of my having gone soft, or having become anti-labour, or having denied my previous career, but a conviction which I expressed when I was still an official of the Canadian Congress of Labour, which I expressed publicly in relation to the question of strikes on the railways. I think the position I took then applies to strikes in essential services—and of course there is a problem of defining what exactly are essential services—I think it applies to essential services in general, whether they are under the auspices of the government or whether they are in private hands. It seems to me that to talk of free collective bargaining in these essential services is now completely unrealistic. There is no free collective bargaining in these services.

Senator Lang: Hear, hear.

Senator Forsey: It just is not there. No government of any stripe whatsoever is going to tolerate a prolonged strike, even a not very prolonged strike, in any of these essential services; no government of any stripe whatsoever is going to tolerate more than about a week's strike on the railways, for example; no government is going to tolerate more than a very few days' strike in a service like the one that we are discussing now, and this could apply to a number of other things, the grain handlers, the longshoremen and so forth. Well, now, that being so, as I said in a speech that I made—actually, under the auspices of the Canadian Labour Congress—that being so, it seems to me that the unions in these essential services would be well advised to sit down and try to work out with the employers and with the government some kind of system not to submit everything to one third party, as the Honourable Senator Marchand suggested was proposed—I think that is something of a straw man, if I may say so, with respect—not to some judge, not to some all-wise person, not to some philosopher king, but to some kind of joint board in which the unions would have, to use a modern term, an input, where they would have a say, where they would help to work out the standards which ought to apply. In the case of the railways, I agree, and I said long ago, on the occasion to which I refer, I agree with the Leader of the Opposition that it might well be the standard in the heavy industries. It seems to me it ought not to be beyond the wit of man—twentieth century Canadian man—to work out some kind of reasonable solution to this problem because, otherwise, what have you got? You have what the former leader of the New Democratic Party called a ritual dance; you have a thing of shreds and patches. The union in one of these essential services goes to the point where it declares a strike. The negotiations have taken place; the parties cannot agree; the union declares a strike, and inevitably the government comes along at the end of a few days and imposes, ad hoc, a specific form of arbitration, which is simply worked out pretty well on the spot by the government itself, in which the union has really very little say, if any.

● (0220)

In this particular case what is being imposed by this bill as it stands is the government's view, the government's opinion, the government's position, which may be justified. I am not arguing that; I am simply saying that this is what you get when you have this sudden, final ad hoc compulsory arbitration, or even substitute for compulsory arbitration, because there is scarcely a vestige of compulsory arbitration really here, when you get this kind of thing imposed in these circumstances.

I really think it is foolish to go on deluding ourselves into thinking that free, collective bargaining really exists in essential services when we all know in fact that it does not, and that in fact all that will happen will be that the union will be allowed to take an action which will mean a loss of wages for its members for four days, five days, a week, perhaps ten days at the outside, and disruption of the economy of the country, and they will then be told to go back on certain specific terms.

This seems to me to be a farce. It seems to me to be totally out of accord with the interests of the workers. I cannot for the life of me see why this kind of thing has not been apparent to the unions in the essential service industries.

When I made that suggestion—I have forgotten when; it must be more than ten years ago—it sank like a stone into a barrel of tar. Nobody paid the slightest attention. It just dropped slowly out of sight. If you venture to make any argument for this kind of thing now, of course, you are accused in labour circles of being a partisan of compulsory arbitration of the kind that Senator Marchand was girding at a few moments ago.

I am as much opposed to compulsory arbitration in general as anybody can be, and I think employers as well as unions, are, in general, opposed to it. But in the case of certain essential services some form of settling these disputes without these ridiculous, these paralyzing, these time-wasting, these substance-wasting strikes ought to be devised, and I think that the thing should be taken in hand promptly by the government. If you cannot get the unions to agree I suppose eventually something they don't agree to will have to be worked out, but I think the attempt ought to be made.

I am profoundly dissatisfied with this "ad hockery," as somebody once called it, this business of popping out a solution at the last minute and imposing it on people without any kind of proper preparation, and in the midst of great heat and fierce conflict of opinions.

For the reasons which I have set forth, honourable senators, I do not feel that I can vote for this bill as it stands.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, we have heard some of the stories of senators sleeping at their desks, and I am delighted to see that even the opposition is still awake. I should like to add just a few words to what has been said tonight.

Senator Flynn: It is easier for us to stay awake.

Senator Buckwold: You need some stimulation. What I have to say is really a follow-up of what I believe is really a classic speech delivered on this whole question of the responsibility of unions and its relationship to the public interest as expounded by Senator Marchand. I believe that speech will be read by students of labour relations for many years to come because it is really one of the great speeches I have heard in this chamber. I congratulate the good senator. My reason for standing is not to discuss the bill, because that has not happened to any great degree during the debate tonight, but we are all concerned with the whole process and the future. I should like to suggest that with the forthcoming cessation of the activities of the AIB I feel that there will be a resurgence of public service unions flexing their muscles and challenging the government. We may think we have had labour problems with the public service up until now, but I feel that we are looking at some very much more aggravated situations than even those we have seen to date. For this reason I draw to the attention of the Senate and, perhaps, more especially to that of the Government of Canada, the report entitled "Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service of Canada," to which my colleague, the Leader of the Opposition, was kind enough to refer. As you are aware, I had the privilege of being a co-chairman of the joint committee which submitted the report and operated for many months along with colleagues from the House of Commons, coming in with a report of 72 recommendations which would improve the atmosphere and the relationship in the public service. We started this report by saying that there are approximately 250,000 federal employees represented under the Public Service Staff Relations Act. They are represented by 14 different bargaining agents in 104 bargaining units. Overall, the evidence presented to the committee showed that the system has worked.

You would be interested in some statistics, because we hear so many comments with respect to eliminating the right to strike, that it was a wrong decision, but between the introduction of that right in 1967 and the time of this report, which was approximately one year and a half ago, there have been 449 collective agreements, 73.9 per cent by voluntary agreement, 15.1 per cent following arbitration, 8.6 per cent following conciliation and 2.4 per cent following legal strikes. In other words, during approximately a nine-year period at that time there were 11 legal strikes in the public service which, I suggest, is a fairly good record. The problem found by the committee, that which required the real attention, was that of the illegal strike, which we dealt with at some length. The committee, in fact, felt that the right to strike had been a responsibility which had been reasonably accepted by the public service. I believe that in recent months there have been some outstanding bad, egregious examples of lack of concern for the public interest. This was part of the reason for the appointment of that particular committee. One of the comments of the committee was as follows:

Your committee concluded that where the activities of the parties engaged in collective bargaining do not adversely affect the public interest, the collective bargaining process should be free to operate without government intervention. But when the public interest becomes adversely affected, Government and Parliament should be prepared to intervene.

● (0230)

I think that that, generally, is a comment that we have heard expressed during this debate. What I am trying to say, honourable senators, is that there has been an attempt to outline changes to the Government of Canada—changes that involve everything from illegal strikes, designated employees, classification, technological change and long-term lay-off, the role of pay research in collective bargaining in the public service, managerial and confidential exclusions, incompetence and incapacity and disciplinary action, union voting procedures, casual employees, and several other subjects that involve the relationship of the Government of Canada with its employees.

I suggest to the Government of Canada that, as one of its very top priority items, if we are to minimize the pressures that will be on us in the very near future, some of these recommendations be translated into law as soon as possible. This is a matter of urgency, and that is why I stand before you at this late hour. The government has had these recommendations for several months. From what I gather, legislative changes have been proposed, although none have come forward as yet. It is my hope that, in the interest of good labour relations and in the public interest, these changes will be effected as soon as possible.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, to make it clear that there was 100 per cent participation by the loyal opposition in the debate tonight, I rise to make a few comments supplemental to those made by the Leader of the Government. I want to say at the outset that I agree with everything that has been said about the importance of collective bargaining. It is here to stay. In spite of some imperfections, it is clearly the best possible device we have been able to come up with to ensure that workers receive a fair return for the product of their labour.

There also seems to be very general agreement for the proposition that there are times when, as a result of any strike, the hardships, the cost, the personal tragedies inflicted on the public are such that government intervention, or parliamentary intervention, is completely justified, notwithstanding the broader principles of collective bargaining enshrined in our law.

Occasions such as this—and we are having about one a year now—indicate that there is a gap, a vacuum, in government policy in respect of the handling of these kinds of situations. We had the statement from the minister—and the Leader of the Government repeated it tonight—that the union in this case is not being denied the right to strike. The exact words used by the minister, I believe, were: “But the right to strike is being denied for the time being.”

That, of course, to me is nonsense. Of course the union is having the right to strike taken away from it. That is the purpose of this bill—to say to the union that it cannot continue the strike. The government went farther in this particular case when the leaders of the union—and I make the same distinction as Senator Marchand between the union membership and the union leadership—when the leaders of the union announced, based, of course, on a vote indicating majority support for a strike, that there would be rotating strikes.

The government in this particular case acted as it has not acted in any other similar situation. I might say that I am not in any way condoning the action of the union leaders in this case. I agree with what has been said, that it was unwise both from the point of view of the public and from the point of view particularly of the interests of their own members. But the fact of the matter is that in this particular situation the government acted in a way entirely different—and I hope the Leader of the Government will listen to this and explain it later—in a way entirely different from the way it has acted in any other similar circumstance. In the first place, the government announced before the strike had taken place that it would introduce legislation to prevent—believe it or not—rotating strikes. I am quite sure that, when the matter was referred to the draftsmen, the government was informed that that was impossible. Obviously, a rotating strike can be the decision of any single individual deciding to withdraw his services, or of one local of a union. How it would be possible to introduce legislation to prevent that kind of action, that kind of withdrawal of services by a group of individuals, without destroying the whole concept of collective bargaining, I do not know.

In any event, that announcement by the government attracted a response which was certainly not a credit to the government, to the extent that the government's announcement that it would call Parliament to end the rotating strikes was responsible for the decision of the union to call a general strike. I think that was a bad decision. I think it was precipitate. I do not think it can be defended. But the reaction of the union in this case to say, "We will call a general strike at once." I do not defend that. I believe it was a completely irresponsible action on the part of the union, because obviously there was no notification and those who might be in a position to prepare themselves for the rotating strikes were caught in an impossible situation. Indeed, there were stories, and we have all heard them, of personal hardship and suffering. I often wonder if those who have the responsibility for making grave decisions like this hear the same stories I hear, of sons and daughters unable to attend the last minutes of the lives of their parents and so on.

I have said that the government acted in this case in a way which was different from the action taken in previous situations when it has been regarded as necessary for Parliament to intervene to end a strike. Previously, the government has brought before Parliament, and I have supported it on every occasion, back-to-work legislation. It has been traditional in these situations for the government to bring in back-to-work legislation and then, in that same legislation, to provide for arbitration. But in this case, for its own reasons, the government has not taken that course, and to me that is the essential difference between this bill and those bills we have had before in similar situations.

I think the government was quite wrong in the direction it took this time. I say that because as has been pointed out in the sections of the bill which have been read, what the government has actually done is to take sides in an industrial dispute and has asked Parliament to approve the position taken by one of the parties to an industrial dispute. I do not think there is anything clearer than that. It is a dispute between the government as an employer and the union as an employee.

● (0240)

Never in our history, unless my memory fails me, has the government done what it has done in this case. It has intervened and said "We will take sides with the employees or with the employers," and it is hard to imagine what the result would be, what the public reaction would be, if the employer in this case had been in the private sector and the government had said, "We will take the position taken in this difference of opinion between, let us say, Massey-Harris and its employees, and we will ask Parliament to pass legislation saying that the terms offered by Massey-Harris are the terms of a new collective agreement," which is exactly what this bill says.

It says quite clearly that it is imposing a collective agreement on the exact terms that were offered by the employer. I will not bother to read the sections, but it is clear. It goes beyond that. The government then says, "There is a dispute between us and the union as to the total compensation which would result from the various proposals," the 8 per cent package, as it is called, and the 4.6 per cent assessment of the compensation value of the reclassification.

The government's position is simply this: "We will agree to sign an agreement if it provides for 8 per cent and 4.6 per cent; and, if the AIB finds this within the guidelines, we will then accept it." The union has said, "If the government will only have enough sense to add the two up, to simplify this, make it 12.6 per cent"—there are problems there.

Senator Perrault: There sure are.

Senator Grosart: Of course there are problems, but are they enough to cause this kind of situation, this semantic difference between 8 per cent and 4.6 per cent and 12.6 per cent, because that is the whole issue that has brought about this situation, this strike, and the apparent necessity for Parliament to intervene? Merely that: whether it should be 8 per cent and 4.6 per cent or 12.6 per cent. There are differences, but is that enough to cause this kind of situation?

I say the government has a direct responsibility for the problem that is before us. Beyond that, what the government is really saying is, "We are going to tell the AIB what its judgment should be."

The Leader of the Government gave us four good examples of decisions by the AIB to exceed 8 per cent for various reasons. He said that none of those applied here, that the four do not apply in this situation. Did it ever occur to the government that the AIB might come up with a fifth? What business has the government saying to the AIB, "We will tell you how you interpret the AIB guidelines"?

It is merely a matter of interpretation. The union said, "We will take it." The government said, "We will take it only if you write it in our terms"; and anyone who followed the proceedings could not fail to reach the conclusion that one of the major causes of this situation is utter ineptitude on the part of the government.

We see this over and over again throughout the whole history of this sort of thing. The matter could have been resolved quite differently. Admittedly the union leaders were intransigent, yes. They were difficult. They have caused the government embarrassment before. They have caused problems in which they obviously did not have public support. But here the government is saying, "We insist that Parliament impose a collective bargaining agreement on this union." That is what we are asked to do. We are asked to impose a collective bargaining agreement, with no recourse. Certainly there is provision in clause 5(4) for arbitration, but the ceiling on any arbitration is the government's offer, and nothing else.

Senator Perrault: It is the law.

Senator Grosart: No. It is not the law yet. This is a common mistake on the other side. The AIB interprets the law, and it has interpreted the law on several occasions as allowing a higher total compensation than 8 per cent; so it is not true to say that the law says that an arithmetical 8 per cent figure is the ceiling. It is not. The whole history of the AIB decisions indicates that this is simply not so.

The government has said, "We are the judge, we are the jury, we are a party to the action." Now, as the former leader of the NDP said in the course of this debate, "And we are now asking Parliament to be the executioner." The government is asking us to execute the government's will as one party to an industrial dispute, without any suggestion whatever that in the course of the settlement of this dispute the position put forward by the union, right or wrong—and I am not saying it is either right or wrong—can have any possible further consideration.

I do not know why the government has decided to follow this route. The impression one gets is that it is the result of a culmination of personality clashes and frustrations in the negotiations. Surely, however, the sensible thing to do would have been to bring in the usual type of bill requiring the workers to go back to work, and providing for settlement by arbitration at some time in the future. The essential difference between this bill and the traditional way of handling this kind of dispute is precisely as I have outlined it. I say to the Leader of the Government that in my view—though I am not an expert in this field—it is a dangerous precedent that will come back to haunt them; because the next time there is such a dispute, where the employer is in the private sector, what will the government do? Will they ask Parliament to impose the terms offered by that employer? The Leader of the Government spoke of the importance of the precedent. He said that the government could not fail in its handling of the situation and allow any possible increase over 8 per cent, if they were to be fair to the private sector. If they are going to be fair to the private sector, and I am not advocating that, the next time they will have to say, "Well, we take the same position with that employer as we took when we were the employer. We will ask Parliament to legislate the terms of the employer." That is what is being done here. I can see no way out of it. I have read the bill, I have listened to the debates, I have read everything I can. In the end it comes down to just this, that we are now asked to pass a bill which imposes the disputed terms of only one party to an industrial dispute. I am not against the principle of insisting, in the public interest, that members of this union go back to work. I do oppose, however, this extraordinary method, this novel and dangerous method, that the government has resorted to in this case.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators—

The Hon. The Speaker: I wish to remind honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator Perrault speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

• (0250)

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, because the hour is late I shall endeavour to speak as briefly as possible.

Senator Flynn: It is early, early in the morning.

Senator Perrault: I know I echo the views of all honourable senators when I express my appreciation for the contributions which have been made to this debate by a number of honourable senators. I have listened with great interest to all of the speeches, and all have been interesting, useful and constructive.

I hope in the course of my remarks I can dispel at least some doubts which may exist in the minds of certain senators, and if there are further questions after I have finished, I would be pleased to endeavour to reply to those additional questions.

In summary, then, the essence of this dispute is a difference between the union and the employer over the money clause. The union is saying, "Look, we want a 12 per cent increase, and we think that because of the reclassification, which we believe should take place within our bargaining unit, we should get that 12 per cent." The government says that it is a matter of AIB policy, with guidelines approved and established by Parliament, that the maximum rate of increase this year shall be 8 per cent. As Senator Grosart has observed, there are some exceptions to this AIB rule of 8 per cent, but very few—for example, if it is difficult to obtain staff for certain positions, and so on. I do not want to go through that section of my speech again. The government believes that there are no valid exceptions from the AIB maximum increase rule of 8 per cent for CATCA.

We must remember that the parties were assisted in their attempts to reach a settlement by a very highly regarded three-man conciliation board, with a chairman agreed upon by both labour and management, with a union representative and a representative of the government. So, we had representatives of union, employer, and an impartial chairman. All three members of this conciliation board concurred in recommending an 8 per cent increase in total compensation. That is not in dispute. This unanimous recommendation was given after giving due consideration to Anti-Inflation Board guidelines. That is pretty fundamental—a unanimous report by the conciliation board, "Yes, we all agree it should be 8 per cent. The only questions remaining relate to the distribution of the 8 per cent increase over the bargaining unit and whether some reclassified section of that employee bargaining unit should have been exempted from the maximum AIB guidelines". It has been the usual procedure in attempts to reach settlements in disputes to go along with the conciliation board's report.

Senator Grosart: Would the honourable leader allow one question here? I am sure he has no intention of misleading the Senate. Would he not agree that the conciliation board said it would pass no judgment whatsoever on the 4.6 per cent? Would he not also agree that he has told us that that 4.6 per cent the conciliation board refused to deal with is the essence of the dispute?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I am coming to that in my summary. That is a very pertinent and useful observation, and it should be answered.

Senator Grosart: Thank you. You are in a very good mood.

Senator Perrault: Again with reference to reports of conciliation boards, there is added justification for acceptance when the board reports are unanimous. I will ask our distinguished colleague, Senator Forsey, who said he intends to vote against the bill. Here we have a unanimous conciliation board report saying that the maximum allowable under AIB this year shall be paid to this group of employees. Not all employees in this country are getting an 8 per cent increase this year. But the conciliation board in this dispute agreed that this group would get 8 per cent. We know these to be the fundamental facts.

Incidentally, one honourable senator asked, "What happens after December 31, 1977?"

Senator Flynn: Yes, I asked that.

Senator Perrault: Negotiations for a new collective agreement would commence at that point. It may well be that we shall be out of the restraints program at that time, and it may well be that on the next contract negotiated with this group of employees further and additional weighting will be given to the financial indemnity to be paid to certain of the reclassified employees within that bargaining unit. No one ever suggested that the anti-inflation program constitutes perfect justice. The Prime Minister said it is rough justice, but far better than the rough injustice of inflation which was devastating the incomes of Canadian workers in the fall of 1975.

Senator Flynn: And it still is.

Senator Perrault: Nobody has stated that there is not at least some moral claim on the part of some employees within this bargaining unit, and many other bargaining units in the country, for increases which may be beyond the established legal AIB maximums. That is not the point in dispute. The fact is that there is a law on the books that is adversely affecting employees, and maybe some employers in this country from time to time.

This is not a perfect program, but it is certainly better than the rampant inflation that we had in 1975, and the Canadian people have stated very emphatically in the public opinion polls that they think a great deal of AIB, with all its warts, imperfections and blemishes.

Senator Grosart: Much more than the government does apparently.

Senator Perrault: You know, honourable senators, the government is endeavouring in this bill to strike a reasonable balance between the interests of the workers and the public interest. Surely governments assume the responsibility to attempt to achieve balances of this kind. Senator Grosart said that the government is in an "incredible" position. How can I duplicate his eloquence? He asked quizzically, "Should the government as one party to a dispute be called upon to enforce a settlement?" What other responsibility is there for a government when the government is faced with a serious problem affecting public interest in this country? It must assume responsibility. How else are serious disputes to be resolved and crises met? Through a process of osmosis? Through someone arriving on a cloud from on high?

Again, Senator Forsey has stated that he wants to vote against this measure. I cannot recall that Senator Forsey proposed any personal alternative solution for this government tonight.

Senator Forsey: Yes, I did.

Senator Grosart: He did.

Senator Perrault: I am talking in terms of the immediate moment, at the present time, when people are sleeping in air terminals waiting for planes that never arrive.

Senator Flynn: That is unfair.

Senator Forsey: I must take exception to that statement. I distinctly stated that the thing should be settled now on the basis of the amendment moved in the other place by the New Democratic Party and concurred in by the Conservative Party. That is very specific.

Senator Perrault: May I speak to that in just a moment as well? I want to be fair, and if I have been unfair I retract what I have said. I want to say additionally, however, about Senator Forsey, when he states that we have reached the point when we have to discover or evolve better ways to settle disputes in essential services before great public dislocations take place, I am in full accord. The honourable senator has advanced some useful ideas in that regard. I would propose that we consider the establishment of a special committee of the Senate this year to undertake an investigation of this important matter. I would remind honourable senators that the Senate has inspired major reforms in this country through its report on poverty, its report on aging, its report on the parole system, and its report on the media. We may well have a valuable contribution to make to the dialogue concerning improved labour-management relations and strikes in essential services.

A number of senators may wonder why the whole agreement has not been sent to binding arbitration? Senator Grosart was the last to echo this view. The answer is relatively simple. The union in this case opted for conciliation; the majority decision of the conciliation board has been accepted by the government; indeed, the unanimous view of the conciliation board has been accepted by the government, a unanimous recommendation for an 8 per cent increase. I would remind honourable senators again that classification is not subject to collective bargaining. This is clearly set forth in the Public Service Staff Relations Act. The matter of classification is completely outside the terms of reference for any arbitrator, and what is really left to arbitrate?

• (0300)

Senator Flynn: Then why did you bargain collectively?

Senator Perrault: I wish to point out that the proposed legislation does provide for compulsory arbitration to be applied to the AIB rates. There is not any more money in the package available under the law.

Then we heard the statement that we are taking away the right to strike, that we are legislating the air traffic controllers back to work. I state the view again and—

Senator Flynn: Who said that?

Senator Perrault: Well, it is obvious that in this case the right to strike has been removed. I have made notes in that respect from the remarks of various senators.

Senator Grosart: You are taking away the right to strike, so admit it; there is nothing wrong with it.

Senator Perrault: However, in view of CATCA's refusal to settle within the AIB maximum, the government had no option but to legislate the union back to work in order to avoid a disruptive strike which would have had to be resolved in this way in any event because of CATCA's inflexible position. I agree that honourable members should have an opportunity to debate the principle of the right to strike in the public sector. However, may I say to honourable senators tonight that this will arise when the government tables amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act later this year.

Senator Flynn: Oh, that's good.

Senator Grosart: Make it sooner.

Senator Perrault: We have been told about the government's allegedly bad record in collective bargaining in this country. Well, since 1967, 388 collective agreements have been signed. Of these, 275, that is 71 per cent—

Senator Flynn: That is in your notes, but no one mentioned it.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senator, I listened with rapt attention to your remarks and I ask for the same attention from you at this early hour in the morning.

Of these, 71 per cent were voluntary settlements that did not require recourse to arbitration, a conciliation board or a strike. This is one of the best records of any country in the world. Sixty-six settlements followed binding arbitration, while 35 were negotiated following conciliation, representing 95 per cent. Finally, only 12, that is 3 per cent, of collective agreements signed to date followed strike action.

Then we come, in my opinion, to the crux of the dispute. That is whether, as the Honourable Senator Grosart pointed out, the wage increase award should be 8 per cent or 8 per cent plus 4 per cent. Allow me to attempt to answer some of the questions which have been raised under that heading. I refer to the terms of the Anti-Inflation Board Compensation Bulletin No. 1, to which I invite the attention of honourable senators who may still doubt the validity of this statement, and that board's ruling on what constitutes a commitment made prior to October 14 of 1975. The government is convinced that nothing in the actions taken prior to October 14, 1975 constitutes a prior commitment that would exempt the cost of introducing a new classification plan for CATCA from the application of the anti-inflation guidelines. That is the position of the government. At no time since the first contract signed by CATCA after the inception of the AIB guidelines was the matter of reclassification even raised. It emerged as an issue in 1976, following the contract signing in 1977. There is no way, no possible way, that any arbitrator, even if the proposal were to be accepted, could find anything different. In June of 1976 CATCA signed its first collective agreement under the anti-inflation program and, I repeat, there was no demand for a new classification plan, no claim for exemption of resultant costs from the anti-inflation guidelines.

If CATCA believed that it had a prior commitment, it would not have turned down the government's offer. Some senators have said during the course of the debate that the position of the government has not been sufficiently flexible. If that is so, why did CATCA turn down the government's offer to include CATCA's position in a signed agreement to be sent to the AIB? One has to remember that it was to be a signed agreement. In an attempt to prevent the present impasse, the government was willing to submit a signed agreement. In an attempt to prevent the present impasse, the government was willing to submit a signed agreement to the Anti-Inflation Board which included the government's offer of an 8 per cent increase in a total compensation as well as the union's proposal for a 12.6 per cent increase on the basis of reclassification.

I want to explain this. Senator Grosart, in his remarks, said that the government was being hypocritical because, on the one hand, while it said that there was a maximum under the Anti-Inflation Board of 8 per cent, it agreed to accept an increase of 12 per cent if the AIB ruled in favour of the union.

By its offer, the government was stating to the union, in effect, that it was confident that it interpreted AIB regulations correctly and was willing to put that interpretation to the test. However, it was willing to send the union's proposal to the AIB. Additionally, if it turned out that the government had misinterpreted AIB regulations, it would then accept the AIB finding. However, before undertaking such a referral, it wanted the union's signature on the line. It wanted a signed agreement for an 8 per cent increase with, in effect, a clause protecting the union should the AIB rule in favour of a 12.6 per cent increase. The union would not sign such an agreement. It would not put its signature on the line. The government took the position that it would only undertake such an unusual referral to the AIB if there were a union ballot taken across Canada. But there was no CATCA signature on that collective agreement. Given those circumstances, who was flexible and who was inflexible? Did the Government of Canada take the position that it was going to be an 8 per cent increase or nothing, that it was going to dragoon the workers of this particular bargaining unit into accepting 8 per cent? Not at all.

I want to make it quite clear that in making its offer of 8 per cent, the government was offering the maximum possible amount under the anti-inflation guidelines. It was prepared to include the union's proposal in an attempt to head off a nationwide strike with the resultant inconvenience to the travelling public and a cost of $5 million or $6 million a day.

To quote from the statement of the President of the Treasury Board; "It would have been a condition of the agreement that both parties would abide by the Anti-Inflation Board's ruling. Notwithstanding that, CATCA would not accept to sign such an agreement. CATCA broke off negotiations. It completely rejected the government's offer at that point. The futility of any other approach should be obvious."

Dealing with the other items, the government agreed to accept the majority of the recommendations of the conciliation board. It did not propose any changes in vacation or management rights. While the conciliation board expressed the hope that the parties could resolve classification differences between themselves, it had no jurisdiction in that particular area, which meets the statement made earlier by the Leader of the Opposition.

Senator Flynn: Why talk about it, then?

Senator Perrault: I want to suggest to you that in recent days CATCA abandoned all of its demands in the areas of management rights, vacations, and so forth. They were prepared to abandon most of these if the government would agree to a 12 per cent increase. Yet, it would have been illegal and wrong for the Government of Canada to have entered into that kind of collective agreement.

Following those efforts, the government concluded that there were no viable solutions in sight and took the action that resulted in today's debate.

I think most of the points have been covered. I can only say, honourable senators, that on the average day there are 35,000 to 40,000 Canadians travelling. A strike of this nature is a serious matter when one considers the number of people being inconvenienced and delayed. The cost of such a strike is enormous.

● (0310)

Senator Flynn: We are all agreed so far as that is concerned.

Senator Perrault: I am confident that Canadians generally support the government's view and the unprecedented action being proposed to end the strike, because we have an unprecedented situation, an extremely difficult situation for the country.

Honourable senators, I urge the honourable members to pass the legislation speedily so that they can relieve the economic hardship and inconvenience to both the travelling public and the business community caused by this unnecessary work stoppage.

Senator Lang: May I direct one question to the Leader of the Government in connection with clause 5 of this bill? Under that clause the bill is made applicable to the collective bargaining period which extends to December 31 of 1977. On the assumption that the anti-inflation regulations will persist into 1978, and on that assumption only, is there any reason to assume that we will not be faced with the same situation we are in tonight at the end of this year? Are there any reasons that would militate against a repetition of this phenomenon?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senator, as you may be aware, there are active efforts underway now to evolve a plan to move out of the restraint period into a period of de-control, and I think the situation may well be much different at the end of the current contract. It is hoped—

Senator Flynn: You always hope.

Senator Perrault: It is hoped, however, that the unfortunate experience which the country is undergoing at the present time may have a salutary effect on negotiations which will take place later this year.

Senator Flynn: Wishful thinking! You always hope that you will be saved by the circumstances.

Senator Grosart: Would the Leader of the Government just permit one question purely for clarification? I understood him to say that the government had agreed to send the 12.6 per cent proposal to the AIB but that the union refused. Is it not the situation that the union had agreed to send the 12.6 per cent proposal to the AIB but that the government refused?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I want to attempt to make it clear again. The proposal to refer a collective agreement for a 12.6 per cent increase to the AIB was evolved on the weekend, when public opinion of a negative variety expressed itself from coast to coast. There is a profound difference between that proposition and the one suggested by the government previously. One cannot imagine a situation involving the Government of Canada signing a 12 plus per cent collective agreement with any union in this country in the full and certain knowledge that the act is clearly illegal and not within the AIB guidelines which the government itself has set. We are never going to be a party to that kind of agreement.

Senator Grosart: Perhaps I can remind the Leader of the Government that my question was only whether the statement I made was correct or incorrect.

Senator Perrault: Yes. On the weekend the union advanced the proposition.

Senator Grosart: Is it "yes" or "no"?

Senator Perrault: It is not a matter of "yes" or "no". As the honourable senator is aware, this, in my view, was not a serious offer. This was a spurious offer designed to win public opinion.

Senator Forsey: I wonder if the Leader of the Government would permit one question. I listened to him carefully, but I do not think he answered the question I asked earlier: If the government was willing, as he has just said, to refer this matter to the Anti-Inflation Board and abide by its decision, why did it not put that in the bill?

Senator Perrault: An offer had been made earlier, as I have described, as the honourable senator is aware. The fact of the matter is that the offer was rejected by the union. At this time the government stated, "We are the Government of Canada. We are going to act on behalf of the people of this country, and we are going to resolve this dispute." In effect, I suggest, the government said as well, "We have given you an opportunity which you have rejected. Now we are going to move ahead."

Senator Flynn: "And we are not going to offer you this opportunity again." That is the position.

Some Hon. Senators: Question!

Senator Grosart: That is flexibility.

Some Hon. Senators: Question.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Perrault, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Langlois, that this bill be now read the second time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Forsey: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Perrault: With leave, I move third reading now.

Senator Flynn: Is there no minister coming to explain what the Leader of the Government's speech has failed to make clear?

An Hon. Senator: It will soon be daylight.

Senator Perrault: I had hoped that most of the questions had been answered, although perhaps inadequately in the view of the Leader of the Opposition.

Senator Flynn: In view of the late hour, we will agree to third reading as an act of faith.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Forsey: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed on division.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL

Ottawa

Government House

August 10, 1977

Madam,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable R. G. B. Dickson, LL.D., D.C.L., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber to-day, the 10th day of August, at 3.30 a.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to a Bill.

I have the honour to be,
Madam,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motion:

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday, October 17, 1977, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Senator Flynn: Subject to recall.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 3.30 a.m., August 10, the sitting was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable R. G. B. Dickson, LL.D., D.C.L., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bill:

An Act to provide for the continuation of air traffic control services.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, October 17, 1977, at 2 o'clock.

THE SENATE

Friday, October 14, 1977

The Senate met at 11 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is a great pleasure to welcome back all honourable senators and to express the hope and anticipation that this chamber will be engaging in a wide range of constructive activities in the important months to come.

THE LATE HONOURABLE G. PERCIVAL BURCHILL

TRIBUTES

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators learned with great regret last month of the death of one of our most revered senators, Senator Burchill, on August 22, just three days after he had resigned from the Senate.

Senator Burchill served this chamber with distinction for more than 32 years. It was typical of him that even when he was in failing health in latter years he still attended most of our sessions. He was a conscientious senator who will be greatly missed by his colleagues in this chamber. His loss will be felt in his home province of New Brunswick, particularly where he did much to build the lumber industry.

Percy Burchill was born at Nelson-Miramichi and lived all his life in that region. He operated the family lumber business there. He was responsible for the creation of the Maritime Lumber Bureau and served as its second president. He was president of the New Brunswick Forest Products Association for many years, and president of the Canadian Forestry Association for a period of time. A forestry graduate from the University of New Brunswick, he received an honorary Doctorate of Laws from that university, and an honorary Doctorate of Civil Laws from the University of King's College, Halifax. He was an outstanding leader in community activities in his home area. He was particularly proud of his association with the Miramichi Hospital. He was an original member of the board of that hospital and he was a member at the time of his death.

But we, his colleagues, will most remember a man who truly served the Senate well. He was fine orator and a hard-working colleague. Above all, he will be remembered as a courteous gentleman and a good man.

I know that all honourable senators will wish to join with me in expressing our deepest and heartfelt sympathy to his wife and family.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, it is a sad duty for me to rise and note the passing of our colleague, Percival Burchill, particularly because I can think of no senator in my time here whose passing has been felt more keenly as a personal loss.

He was one of our elder statesmen, unfailing in his assistance and counsel to new senators, regardless of the side of the Senate on which they sat. My own pleasantest personal memory is of his wonderful smile. Many times when I rose to speak I found encouragement when I saw Percy over there smiling at me, indicating that he might even agree with something I said. He would often go to many of his colleagues after they had spoken, and compliment them. I have had the pleasure and honour of being the recipient of that special kindness on numerous occasions. I remember that at one time I said to him, "Well, I am sure you didn't agree with me, Percy," and he replied, "No, I didn't; but you had to say it, and you said it."

That was his attitude. It was one of warm personal affection and consideration for his colleagues.

Latterly, of course, he spoke less often than in his earlier days here. On the other hand, I think we would all agree that he probably had the best all-time attendance record in this chamber.

● (1110)

The Leader of the Government has referred to his distinguished record in public life at all three levels—municipal, provincial and federal—and in the business communities of Miramichi and area. His activities in the field of community, church and social relations have been well documented and are well known, particularly to his colleagues from New Brunswick.

We think also of the warmth of his family life. His devotion to his wife, during her affliction of the last few years, is a record of husbandly love and human kindness which we should hear more of in this country.

I am sure I speak for all his colleagues when I extend our regrets and sympathy to his family and his host of friends in Canada.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, each of us has lost a friend, as well as a valued and respected colleague, in the passing of the Honourable George Percival Burchill of Nelson-Miramichi. Friendship was the coin of wealth to Percy Burchill, and the circle of his friends encompassed all parts of our nation and continent, and indeed beyond the seas.

He was the dean of New Brunswick members of both the Senate and the House of Commons, and we were all intimately aware of his respect for and dedication to the institution of Parliament.

His loyalty to the Crown was deep and above question. How proud and happy he would have been, once again, to greet and pay homage to his Queen during her current visit to Canada.

Despite the weight of his years, Senator Burchill was attentive to his duties in this house right up to the summer recess of Parliament. He attended and participated actively in the many and long meetings of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications as it studied the Maritime Code bill, which we are called upon to finalize today. He was, in fact, returning to his home from the Senate when he suffered, aboard an Air Canada flight, the attack which hospitalized him, first in Montreal and later in Newcastle, just prior to his passing.

For more than 100 years the Burchill family has been noted for its interests in the forest industry. That family has also been noted for its service to the community, the province and the nation.

In addition to those involvements mentioned by the Leader of the Government in the Senate and business interests in other areas, Senator Burchill had been president of the Boy Scouts of Canada and was one of the leading laymen of the Anglican Church in Canada. However, as honourable senators can attest, he was most attentive in serving the interests of the people of New Brunswick and, particularly, those of his beloved Miramichi River valley. He excelled and delighted in cutting away red tape in order to assist a veteran, a widow or other troubled fellow citizen.

May I say that it was a source of great comfort to the widow and family of Senator Burchill that, in addition to his fellow senators from New Brunswick, Senators John Connolly, Paul Lafond, Chesley Carter, George McIlraith and others attended the funeral services at Nelson-Miramichi.

It was my privilege to have Percy Burchill as a friend for almost thirty years, and our friendship of the last several years was close and dear to me. In common with all other honourable senators, I shall miss him very much and I join with other honourable senators in again expressing our most sincere sympathy to Mrs. Burchill and the members of their family.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, when I was appointed to the Senate, one of those who welcomed me and made my life a little easier was Senator Burchill. He was a very gentle person, in every sense a gentleman. When I came here he had already had some ten or twelve years of experience in the Senate, and he gave the impression, as others have done, that senators of long standing welcome their new colleagues and are more than willing to assist them in making a useful contribution to the work of the Senate.

My wife and I became close friends of Senator Burchill and Mrs. Burchill those many years ago, and until the tragic illness of Mrs. Burchill we saw a great deal of them together.

I cannot add much to what has been so well said by the previous speakers, other than to say that I mourn deeply the loss of a friend of some twenty-odd years standing. Of course, the additional tragic death of his granddaughter on her way home from his funeral has compounded the heavy load for the family. These events are sometimes a little hard to understand.

I would simply like to join in the well-deserved tributes that have been paid to Senator Burchill, and to express to Mrs. Burchill, to his son John and the family, my most sincere sympathy.

● (1120)

THE HONOURABLE MARTIAL ASSELIN, P.C.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators will note the absence today from the Senate of one of our distinguished and hard-working senators, Senator Asselin. I regret to inform the Senate that Senator Asselin had a health setback just a few days ago. I know all honourable senators will wish to join with me in extending to him our very warmest and best wishes for a full and speedy recovery.

AGRICULTURE

INTERIM REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON THE CANADIAN BEEF INDUSTRY TABLED

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table, in both official languages, an interim report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture on its inquiry into the desirability of long-term stabilization in the Canadian beef industry entitled: "Recognizing the Realities: A Beef Import Policy for Canada".

MARITIME CODE BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Senator Haig, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, to which was referred Bill C-41, to provide a maritime code for Canada and to amend the Canada Shipping Act and other acts in consequence thereof, presented the following report:

Thursday, October 6, 1977

The Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, to which was referred Bill C-41, intituled: "An Act to provide a maritime code for Canada and to amend the Canada Shipping Act and other Acts in consequence thereof", has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, May 18, 1977, examined the said Bill and now reports the same with the following amendments:

1. Page 1: Strike out lines 10 to 12 inclusive in clause 2 and substitute therefor the following:

"navigation and shipping and other factors that have led to a substantial increase in the use of ships for commercial recrea—"

2. Page 4: Strike out lines 1 to 5 inclusive in clause 3 of the French version, and substitute therefor the following:

"«navire» comprend toute espèce de bâtiment, bateau ou embarcation utilisé ou pouvant être utilisé, exclusi—" vement ou partiellement, pour la navigation maritime, indépendamment de son mode de propulsion ou même s'il n'en a pas;"

3. Page 4: Strike out lines 19 to 22 inclusive in clause 3 and substitute therefor the following:

"«owner», in relation to a ship, means the registered, licensed or otherwise recorded owner, if any, and, unless otherwise provided, includes a charterer by demise;"

4. Page 4: Strike out lines 45 and 46 in clause 3 of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"«passer» désigne le fait, pour un navire qui ne fait pas route vers un port canadien ou pour un navire qui ne provient pas d'un port canadien, de passer dans les eaux canadiennes;"

5. Page 5: Strike out lines 10 to 14 inclusive in clause 3.

6. Page 9: Strike out line 24 in subclause 4(5) and substitute therefor the following:

"interest therein of"

7. Page 10: Strike out line 32 in subclause 6(1) of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"immatriculé sous pavillon canadien s'il dépasse dix mètres de longueur ou, s'il ne dépasse pas dix mètres de lon-"

8. Page 11: Strike out lines 19 to 25 inclusive in subclause 6(3) of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"est, à l'égard de ce navire seulement et dès l'entrée en vigueur du Livre II du Code maritime, réputé remplir les conditions voulues pour être propriétaire d'un navire immatriculé sous pavillon canadien si le navire dépasse dix mètres de longueur ou s'il ne dépasse pas dix mètres de longueur, d'une petite embarcation immatriculée sous pavillon canadien, tout en étant réputé, pour l'application"

9. Page 11: Strike out lines 43 to 46 inclusive in subclause 7(1) and substitute therefor the following:

"of such ships."

10. Page 14: Strike out the definition "navire de la Couronne" in Item 3 of Schedule I of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"«navire de la Couronne» comprend toute espèce de bâtiment, bateau ou embarcation utilisé ou pouvant être utilisé, exclusivement ou partiellement, pour la navigation maritime indépendamment de son mode de propulsion ou même s'il n'en a pas, dont la Couronne est propriétaire ou dont elle a la possession exclusive;"

11. Pages 15 and 16: Strike out the definition "navire" in Item 7 of Schedule I of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"(g) «navire» comprend toute espèce de bâtiment, bateau ou embarcation utilisé ou pouvant être utilisé, exclusivement ou partiellement, pour la navigation maritime, indépendamment de son mode de propulsion ou même s'il n'en a pas;"

12. Page 16: Strike out the definition "navire" in Item 8 of Schedule I of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"«navire» comprend toute espèce de bâtiment, bateau ou embarcation utilisé ou pouvant être utilisé, exclusivement ou partiellement, pour la navigation maritime, indépendamment de son mode de propulsion ou même s'il n'en a pas;"

13. Page 21: Strike out line 22 in subclause BI-3(1) of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"équivalentes à des dispositions semblables du"

14. Page 21: Strike out line 38 in subclause BI-3(2) of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"paragraphe (1) ne déroge pas à la compétence"

15. Page 22: Strike out line 5 in clause BI-4 and substitute therefor the following:

"foreign registered ships or to persons, other than"

16. Page 22: Strike out line 10 in clause BI-4 and substitute therefor the following:

"a foreign registered ship is on passage through the"

17. Page 22: Strike out line 35 in clause BI-4 and substitute therefor the following:

"to foreign registered ships on passage through the terri-"

18. Page 22: Strike out line 38 in subclause BI-4(3) of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"écologique qui est expressément"

19. Pages 23 and 24: Strike out line 44 on page 23 and line 1 on page 24, in subclause BI-8(1), and substitute therefor the following:

"high seas or by an act or omission of persons on board a ship on the high seas,"

20. Page 24: Strike out lines 14 to 17 inclusive in clause BI-9 and substitute therefor the following:

"or any proceedings in respect of an offence against this Code or any other Act of Parliament are taken against the master or owner of a foreign registered ship as such master or owner, notice in writing of such proceedings shall forthwith be given to the consular officer in Canada for"

21. Page 28: Strike out lines 35 to 41 inclusive in clause BI-15 and substitute therefor the following:

"diplomatic official; or

(d) any member of any class of police officers, police constables or officers"

22. Page 29: Strike out line 5 in clause BI-16 and substitute therefor the following:

"Code has reasonable and probable grounds for believing"

23. Page 29: Strike out lines 8 to 15 inclusive in clause BI-16 and substitute therefor the following:

“(a) go on board any ship and enter any area thereof, other than private quarters or any part of such an area that is designated to be used and is being used as permanent or temporary private quarters, on board which he believes there may be evidence of such non-compliance;”

24. Page 29: Strike out lines 24 to 31 inclusive in clause BI-16 and substitute therefor the following:

“(c) require the master or any other person found on board a ship boarded by him under this section to give all reasonable assistance in his power to enable the officer or other person to carry out his duties and functions under this Code.”

25. Page 31: Strike out line 7 in subclause BI-19(5) and substitute therefor the following:

“made, the ship may, in accordance with an order of the Admiralty Court made under the authority of this subsection, be sold and the proceeds distributed in accordance with the terms of such order.”

26. Page 31: Strike out lines 8 to 38 inclusive and substitute therefor the following:

“BI-20. (1) No person who knows or who ought”

27. Page 31: Strike out line 40 in subclause BI-20(2) and substitute therefor the following:

“detained, arrested or seized shall”

28. Page 31: Strike out line 43 in subclause BI-20(2) and substitute therefor the following:

“ship has been released from arrest, detention or seizure.”

29. Page 31: Strike out line 44 and substitute therefor the following:

“(2) For the purposes of this section,”

30. Page 32: Add to clause BI-21, immediately after line 21 on page 32, the following subclause:

“(1.1) A seizure is made by serving upon a ship, the ship and cargo, or the cargo, the person in charge thereof and the person empowered to give a clearance in respect thereof a notice of seizure describing the offence alleged to have been committed, which notice of seizure shall also be filed in the Admiralty Court within ten days of the serving thereof.”

31. Page 32: Strike out line 25 in subclause BI-21(2) and substitute therefor the following:

“Admiralty Court to be held subject to adjudication by that Court.”

32. Page 33: Strike out lines 6 to 17 inclusive, subclause BI-21(5), and substitute therefor the following:

“(5) The owner of any cargo of a ship seized under subsection (1) or of any leased equipment thereon may apply to the Admiralty Court for an order requiring any person in whose custody such cargo or the proceeds of any sale thereof or any such equipment is, to deliver the cargo, proceeds or equipment to him, and the Court may make such an order where it is satisfied that the applicant is the owner of the cargo or equipment to which the application relates and that there are not reasonable grounds for believing that such cargo or equipment is subject to forfeiture.”

33. Page 33: Strike out line 20 in subclause BI-22(1) and substitute therefor the following:

“Court a judgment or order is”

34. Page 34: Strike out lines 22 to 24 inclusive in subclause BI-22(3) and substitute therefor the following:

“cargo was seized if security in an amount and form satisfactory to the Minister is given to him.”

35. Page 35: Strike out line 27 in clause BI-23 and substitute therefor the following:

“in payment of the fine; and any surplus funds arising from any such sale or realization shall be paid to the person from whom the ship or cargo was seized.”

36. Page 35: Strike out lines 32 to 34 inclusive in clause BI-24 and substitute therefor the following:

“claims an interest in the ship or cargo”

37. Page 36: Strike out lines 11 to 14 inclusive in subclause BI-24(3) and substitute therefor the following:

“subject-matter of the application of whom he has knowledge.”

38. Page 37: Strike out lines 21 to 23 inclusive in paragraph BI-25(a) of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

“document qui doit lui être signifié;”

39. Page 42: Strike out line 2 in subclause BI-36(1) of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

“article doit fixer d’une part la procédure à suivre”

40. Page 45: Strike out line 26 in clause BII-4 and substitute therefor the following:

“prohibited by this section, and specifying”

41. Page 45: Strike out lines 29 to 31 inclusive in clause BII-4 and substitute therefor the following:

“(5) Where a Canadian ship flies any colours, flag or pendant the flying of which is prohibited by this section and that is not authorized to be flown by a permit or warrant”

42. Page 47: Strike out line 16 in clause BII-8(b) and substitute therefor the following:

“(b) in the case of a foreign registered ship, uses or”

43. Page 48: Add to clause BII-9, immediately after line 25 on page 48, the following:

“(4) Where, in relation to a ship in respect of which an identification number has been issued,

(a) the ownership changes,

(b) the address of residence of the owner changes, or

(c) the specifications of the ship change, the change shall be reported to the Minister by a person whose name is recorded as owner of the ship in relation to the identification number thereof."

44. Page 48: Strike out lines 28 and 29 in subclause BII-10(1) and substitute therefor the following:

"(a) respecting the size, colour, location and design of markings on Canadian ships and the methods by which such markings are to be applied;"

45. Page 48: Strike out lines 42 and 43 in subclause BII-10(2) and substitute therefor the following:

"bers are to be made;

(b) prescribing the form and manner in which any matter required by subsection BII-9(4) to be reported to the Minister shall be reported; and

(c) prescribing the fees to be paid for"

46. Page 50: Add to clause BII-11, immediately after line 4 on page 50, the following subclause:

"(5) Any person who fails to comply with subsection BII-9(4) is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars."

47. Page 50: Strike out lines 12 to 15 inclusive in subclause BII-12(2) and substitute therefor the following:

"tion to a ship means a person entitled to be registered, licensed or otherwise recorded as an owner thereof."

48. Page 50: Add to clause BII-12, immediately after line 15 on page 50, the following subclause:

"(3) Interests arising under contract or other equitable interests may be enforced by or against owners and mortgagees of ships in respect of their interests therein in the same manner as in respect of any other personal property."

49. Page 50: Strike out line 35 in clause BII-15 and substitute therefor the following:

"registered in accordance with this Code before the ship is used in navigation."

50. Page 51: Strike out line 7 in clause BII-16 and substitute therefor the following:

"small craft in accordance with this Code before it is used in navigation."

51. Page 53: Add to clause BII-21, immediately after line 22 on page 53, the following subclause:

"(3) The Chief Officer of Customs at any port in Canada approved for the registry of ships pursuant to the Canada Shipping Act shall be a Deputy Registrar until a Deputy Registrar has been appointed pursuant to subsection (2) in respect of that port or for one year after the coming into force of this Code if at that time the Deputy Registrar has not been appointed in respect of that port."

52. Page 54: Strike out lines 1 and 2 in clause BII-23 and substitute therefor the following:

"ance with subsection BII-21(2) any powers he may exercise and any duties for which he is responsible under this Code."

53. Page 54: Strike out lines 3 to 12 inclusive in clause BII-24 and substitute therefor the following:

"BII-24. (1) A central office for the recording of such information as is prescribed relating to ships required to be registered, licensed or identified by an identification number under this Code shall be established in Canada at a place designated by the Minister.

(2) The Governor in Council shall establish by regulation such a suitable number of ports of registry as may be required to provide an efficient and accessible ship registry system throughout Canada.

(3) Section BI-13 applies with respect to any regulations that the Governor in Council proposes to make under this section."

54. Page 54: Add to clause BII-27, immediately after line 28 on page 54, the following subclause:

"(1.1) Notwithstanding subsection (1), a document that is required or authorized to be filed with the Registrar in relation to a ship in respect of which any other document has been so filed shall be produced at the office at which such other document was produced unless the Registrar consents in writing to the production thereof at any other office and the ship's registry has been transferred to such other office."

55. Page 55: Strike out lines 5 to 11 inclusive in clause BII-28 and substitute therefor the following:

"shall forthwith advise the Registrar of the time and date of filing of the document and provide him with a summary of its contents."

56. Page 55: Strike out line 14 in clause BII-29 and substitute therefor the following:

"recorded by the making and"

57. Page 55: Strike out line 18 in clause BII-29 and substitute therefor the following:

"tified by the Registrar or any person authorized to act on his behalf for such purposes is admissible in evi."

58. Page 57: Strike out lines 14 to 23 inclusive in clause BII-32.

59. Page 57: Strike out lines 24 to 46 inclusive in clause BII-33 and substitute therefor the following:

"BII-33. (1) On payment of the fees prescribed therefor by regulations made under section BII-34, any person may, during normal business hours of the registry, obtain a partial or full abstract containing information on record in that office in relation to a Canadian ship or ship under construction.

(2) On payment of the fees prescribed therefor by regulations made under section BII-34, any person may, during normal business hours of the registry or of the office of any deputy registrar, inspect the records therein in relation to any Canadian ship or ship under construction and may obtain a partial or full abstract certified by the Registrar consisting of a list of any or all documents recorded in the office in respect of the ship or ship under construction or a partial or full transcript certified by the Registrar consisting of copies of any or all documents recorded in respect of the ship or ship under construction."

60. Page 58: Strike out line 9 in clause BII-34 and substitute therefor the following:

"(c) for a partial abstract, full abstract or"

61. Page 61: Strike out line 28 in subclause BII-43(1) of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"moins que, outre qu'il réunit les conditions"

62. Page 62: Strike out lines 7 to 9 inclusive in subclause BII-43(2) and substitute therefor the following:

"the government of that state or any agency thereof, except in the case of a bona"

63. Page 62: Strike out line 9 in subclause BII-43(2) of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"celui-ci par le gouvernement de cet État ou"

64. Page 62: Strike out lines 30 and 31 in subclause BII-44(1) of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"titre de propriétaires ou de détenteurs de privilège, par laquelle elles consent"

65. Page 62: Strike out lines 40 and 41 in subclause BII-44(2) of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"demande mentionnée à ce paragraphe doit fournir au conservateur, afin de faire

66. Page 63: Strike out line 27 in clause BII-46 of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"inscrire sur le registre tout"

67. Page 64: Strike out lines 4 to 7 inclusive in clause BII-48 and substitute therefor the following:

"as a Canadian ship until the tonnage and measurements of the ship in the case of a ship that exceeds ten metres in length and the measurements of the ship in the case of a ship that does not exceed ten metres in length have been ascertained in accordance with regulations made under section BII-49."

68. Page 64: Strike out line 31 in paragraph BII-49(1)(c) of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"peuvent être perçus à l'occasion des constats"

69. Page 66: Strike out lines 5 to 11 inclusive in subclause BII-52(2) and substitute therefor the following:

"(2) No person who is a trustee for one or more owners of an interest in a ship shall be recorded by the Registrar as the owner of the ship unless the trust instrument, in prescribed form, appointing that person as such a trustee is filed with the application for registration.

(3) The Registrar shall refuse to record a bill of sale given by a trustee for one or more owners of an interest in a ship where the trustee is not expressly authorized by the trust instrument filed in the registry pursuant to subsection (2) to dispose of the interest in the ship to which the bill of sale relates."

70. Page 67: Strike out line 4 in clause BII-54 and substitute therefor the following:

"BII-54. (1) Subject to the provisions of this"

71. Page 67: Add to clause BII-54 immediately after line 8 on page 67, the following subclause:

"(2) Subject to any rights and powers appearing from the records in the registry to be vested in any other person, the registered owner of a Canadian ship or of any part interest therein as power absolutely to dispose of the ship or interest in the manner provided in this Code and to give effectual receipts for any money paid or advanced by way of consideration."

72. Page 67: Strike out line 36 in subclause BII-56(1) of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"féré doit demander l'enregistre"

73. Page 68: Strike out lines 13 and 14 in paragraph BII-56(1)(d) of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"d) si la cession résulte d'une vente judiciaire, telle preuve que la loi relative à"

74. Page 69: Strike out line 9 in subclause BII-57(1) of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"de celle-ci, soit versé à la personne y ayant droit"

75. Page 70: Strike out line 27 in subclause BII-60(1) of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"vente d'un navire ou de toute part d'intérêt dans"

76. Page 71: Strike out lines 17 to 19 inclusive in subclause BII-61(1) and substitute therefor the following:

"therein, and the Court may stay or enjoin any party from instituting or continuing any proceeding in any other court during the time specified in the order."

77. Page 71: Strike out lines 40 to 44 inclusive in subclause BII-61(4) of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"(4) A la demande de la personne qui a obtenu l'ordonnance prévue au paragraphe (1) ou de toute personne liée par elle, la Cour d'Amirauté peut toujours, après qu'avis en a été donné à toutes les personnes liées par l'ordonnance et à celle qui l'a obtenue, selon le cas,

a) la proroger jusqu'à une date donnée, avec"

78. Page 72: Add to clause BII-61, immediately after line 7 on page 72, the following subclause:

“(5) The Admiralty Court may, on application by an interested person, adjudicate on and cause to be rectified any error appearing on the face of the register or any certificate issued in respect thereof.”

79. Page 75: Strike out line 44 in clause BII-69 of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

“du conservateur suite à un ordre qu’il a donné en”

80. Page 78: Strike out line 25 in paragraph BII-72(2)(e) of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

“que le conservateur estime satisfaisante.”

Respectfully submitted,

J. Campbell Haig,
Chairman.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Haig: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(c), I move, seconded by Senator Langlois, that the report be taken into consideration later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA WEEK

PROGRAM ON PARLIAMENT HILL—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, on June 28 last Senator Smith (Colchester) asked a question related to certain ceremonies held on Parliament Hill on June 27. The question related specifically to the selection of the program and speakers, and whether it was arranged by a private organization and, if so, the name of that organization and the authority under which it operated.

The ceremonies launching Canada Week on Parliament Hill were the responsibility of the Canada Week Committee, which is a part of the Council for Canadian Unity, a private organization with headquarters in Montreal and branch offices in several provinces.

Authority to use Parliament Hill was granted to the Canada Week Committee by an interdepartmental committee which authorizes, on behalf of the Secretary of State, use of the grounds outside the Parliament Buildings by organizations.

The Secretary of State gave a grant of $450,000 to the Canada Week Committee to assist with their national program.

ATTORNEY GENERAL

POSSIBLE CHANGE OF SITE OF STAFF COLLEGE—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the following question was asked by Senator Olson on August 5 last:

Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government if he could find out whether the Attorney General intends to move his staff college from Edmonton, Alberta, to Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. If that is true, perhaps the leader could also inform the Attorney General that that college is functioning very well in Edmonton and could try to discourage him from making that move.

I have now received the following reply:

The Correctional Staff College operated by the Canadian Penitentiary Service in the City of Edmonton is using, on a rental basis, facilities owned by the Government of the Province of Alberta. The lease is due for expiration in 1979. Since it is known that the Government of Alberta is planning to use these facilities to satisfy their own correctional staff training requirements, the Canadian Penitentiary Service is at present considering plans for the development of its own correctional staff training facilities. However, at this point in time, it is too early in the planning phase of this project to define a geographical area for the location of these facilities.

The representations of the honourable member of the Senate will receive due consideration in the development of this project.

ACQUISITION OR RENOVATION OF HOMES

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE FOR SINGLE PERSONS

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, on August 1 Senator Grosart, Deputy Leader of the Opposition, asked a question concerning government assistance for single persons in respect of obtaining government assistance for the acquisition or renovation of homes. That question was answered on August 5, and at that time Senator Grosart asked a further question, which was as follows:

... under a home assistance program the assistance would not be given unless the space to be occupied was occupied by more than one person. Would that still exclude a single person?

I have been advised by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation that to meet the objectives of AHOP, in obtaining a loan under the program, at least two persons must occupy the housing unit. Regulation 97.3(1) (National Housing Loan Regulations) does not require that the two persons be married; they may be single parent and dependent child, or two single adults. To qualify for contributions under section 34.16 of the National Housing Act, not less than two persons must occupy the units, one of whom is an adult and the other a dependent child of that adult. The adult may, for example, be a single parent.

Senator Grosart: Perhaps, then, I might suggest to the Leader of the Government that he, in turn, might suggest to those who make such regulations that they should be very careful in future to make a clear distinction between a single person, in the sense of one person, and a single person in the sense of an unmarried person. This confusion has arisen, I think, because somebody was not careful enough to make that distinction in drawing up the regulations.

Senator Perrault: That information will be duly communicated, senator.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON CONCENTRATION OF CORPORATE POWER

PRESENT STATUS—QUESTION

Senator Benidickson: Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to the Leader of the Government.

On March 26, 1975, on the morning before we were to adjourn for Easter that year, I directed an inquiry to the government concerning the corporate or monopolistic combinations of Argus Corporation and Power Corporation, outlined in the morning newspapers.

During the recess the government established a commission under the chairmanship of the highly respected Mr. Robert Bryce. I should like to know what is happening on that subject at the moment. I know, to my great sorrow, that the chairman, Mr. Bryce, was forced to resign due to ill health, but I have taken an interest in this matter from the day it was first raised, and I am wondering if we could have a report which would inform us as to the present situation respecting a commission report, et cetera.

● (1130)

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I shall most certainly make inquiries with respect to that commission's study on corporate concentration, and I hope a reply can be given to the Senate next week.

MARITIME CODE BILL

REPORT OF THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications on Bill C-41, to provide a maritime code for Canada and to amend the Canada Shipping Act and other acts in consequence thereof, which was presented earlier this day.

Hon. J. Campbell Haig moved the adoption of the report.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill is divided into several books. As you know, the purpose of the act is to provide a maritime code, but certain schedules to it are called books—Book I and Book II, and two or three more that are intended to be produced.

During the course of its proceedings on Bill C-41 your committee met 23 times for a total of 51 hours and heard testimony from 15 witnesses. The bodies they represented were—not necessarily in order of importance: the Canadian Bankers' Association, who approved of the bill; the Canadian Bar Association, through its maritime law section, represented by Messrs. Gerity, Stone and Brisset; the industry, represented by Mr. Langlois—not the senator—and Mr. Barry; the Department of Transport, represented by John Mahoney; and the research division of the Library of Parliament, represented by two brilliant individuals, Grant Purves and France Biron, project officers of the research branch who assisted us greatly.

Before asking certain other members of the committee to speak, I shall just make a few remarks.

A number of factors account for the very large number of amendments contained in the report of the committee. Beginning with the second amendment, which refers to page 4, lines 1 to 5, inclusive, of the French version of the bill, you will notice a number of amendments which refer only to the French version.

Incidentally, I had nothing to do with that, it being the work of the translators assigned to the department. So if there are any mistakes in the French version, don't blame me!

These amendments arose because on close comparison of the French and English versions it was found that there was occasionally some divergence in sense between them. Before their adoption these amendments were carefully considered by members of the committee in conjunction with representatives of both the Department of Justice and the Department of Transport.

Early in its proceedings the committee became concerned about the provisions in Bill C-41 relating to enforcement officers and their powers, contained in Division B, pages 28 to 43. A number of senators commented on what might be called the criminal aspects of the bill, reasonable and probable cause, searches and seizures, and what appeared to be open warrants.

I am giving honourable senators a short resumé of the maritime code, because I, as chairman of the committee, knew nothing about the code until the committee hearings began. I then found out a good deal about it, such as how to use the flag, what was meant by arrest and seizure, and so on.

In subparagraphs BI-15(d) and BI-15(e), for example, some of the officers mentioned had been given powers beyond normal usage, powers, in fact, which, in the opinion of expert counsel, could not be exercised without a specific warrant. In this case, amendment 21 properly restricts and clarifies the type of officer empowered to enforce the code.

Later this morning Senator Bourget will discuss in some detail the amendments to section BI-20, dealing with "Arrest of a Ship," and BI-21, dealing with "Seizure and Forfeiture," because some of the amendments were a source of controversy.

The third factor which explains such a large number of amendments is that the committee decided to alter drastically the system of ship registration as set out in the bill. Although Senator Smith (Colchester), in his usual efficient manner, will provide further details regarding the ships' registry, it should be noted that the amendments to the registry provisions are the only ones which, taken together, would introduce a significant and comprehensive change in the legislation. A decentralized registry based on port registration would replace the centralized registry based in Ottawa, as provided for in the bill.

Other amendments are consequential to the decision to change the system of ship registration and to revise those sections of the bill dealing with enforcement, detention, arrest and seizure. Finally, many amendments have been made to clarify the provisions and terminology of the bill.

Throughout the final stages of determining which amendments to accept and how they should be worded, the committee was fortunate to hear experts representing the Department of Transport, the Canadian Bar Association and the interests of shipowners and insurers. Their cooperation—I repeat, their cooperation—and ability to reach a consensus greatly assisted the committee in the preparation of these amendments.

I should like also to thank the members of the committee, some of whom knew something about maritime law while others had to learn as the hearings proceeded. On balance, your committee did an excellent job of revising the provisions of this bill.

Honourable senators, with your permission, may I ask Senator Langlois to assist me by speaking to the general provisions of the bill?

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Leopold Langlois: Honourable senators, may I say at the outset of my brief remarks that I am proud to have been a member of this committee and to have had the opportunity of working with my colleagues in bringing about the amendments forming the subject matter of the report which has been introduced in this chamber.

Senator Haig mentioned that the committee sat on 23 occasions for a total of 51 hours and heard 15 witnesses. I should mention that included in the number of sittings were those which were held during the summer recess. The committee sat on Tuesday, October 4, Wednesday, October 5, and Thursday, October 6, for a total of 16 hours. Those times do not take into account the large number of hours which members of the committee spent in their private offices studying and discussing the bill now before us and the proposed amendments, which at one time totalled 132. These long hours, spent working in our private offices, are the main reason why we have attained the result that we have in returning to this chamber with an improved bill. I am sure that all members of the Senate will agree with me when I say that in doing this work the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications has brought credit to this chamber and to Parliament as a whole.

● (1140)

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, this bill is now before you in its amended form. I am sure that these amendments will be welcomed by members of the Senate and will receive your approval. This was a very technical bill, and I understand that it was quite a task for those not versed in shipping matters and admiralty law to follow and grasp the meaning of the various amendments which were proposed by expert witnesses. In this connection I wish to join Senator Haig in voicing our appreciation and thanks to all those witnesses who appeared before us and contributed so immensely to the drafting of the amendments now before you. I think it is worth mentioning also that the difficulties encountered in dealing with these amendments were further complicated in that they contained implications in relation to other acts, such as the Canada Shipping Act and the Federal Court Act. We have had to consider these implications thoroughly and see to it that nothing contained in this amended bill was in contradiction of the provisions contained particularly in the Federal Court Act, to which I have just referred.

Since Senator Haig has covered the ground so well in making general comments on the amendments proposed by the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, I do not think I should take any more of the time of the house in dealing with this aspect of today's debate. I wish, however, to repeat that we have a bill which is in a much better form than before and is a much better piece of legislation, thanks to the work done by our committee. I wish also to repeat that not only has our committee brought credit to the Senate and to Parliament as a whole, but it has also performed a great service for the entire country by working in the way it has to improve the bill as it was originally introduced in Parliament.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. George I. Smith: Honourable senators, with your leave I would like to make a few comments on this bill and on the amendments which the report of the committee now proposes.

At the very beginning I would like to say how happy I am to be able to join in what has been said by the chairman and by Senator Langlois. While one should not anticipate what somebody else is going to say, I think that when we have heard Senator Bourget I shall also be able to agree heartily with his comments.

It has indeed been a most interesting and satisfying experience to spend so much time with so many colleagues whose interest simply was to produce legislation which would be better for the public of Canada, and also to see how much time, effort and joint knowledge all were prepared to expend in this work. In thinking of this work, we should not confine ourselves to members of the committee. We should think also of many other members of the Senate who, although not members of the committee, from time to time sat in on, and took part in, the proceedings.

I would like to join, too, in the comments about the high calibre of the witnesses who appeared before the committee, and the extremely useful representations they made in terms of testimony as to facts, in terms of advice as to the law, and in terms of their own opinions as to the practicality of some of the things which were suggested. I do not wish to engage in the naming of names, because that would be, I suppose, somewhat invidious and unusual. Since, however, the names have been placed before the house, I just want to say how much and how warmly I concur in what has already been said. Perhaps one might, however, make a special comment about the representatives of the Canadian Bar Association, people who obviously have the very great ability and experience which comes from many years of practice in maritime law in its many aspects, and who were perfectly prepared to devote whatever time was necessary—and it was a great deal of time—to help the committee put together the many suggestions which were made and the many amendments which were proposed.

My task here is to deal—and I hope you will think, very briefly and perhaps usefully—with the change, already mentioned, with regard to the proposal for the registration of ships. In case there are some honourable senators who are not familiar with it—though I doubt this, since it is of such great importance throughout Canada—perhaps I might be permitted to say that currently the registration of ships, other than small craft—and for the moment I am concerned only with ships—is carried out in local ports. It is carried out in the customs ports throughout the coastal areas of this great country. It is essentially a port system of registry and is a system which has, for a great many years indeed, been used not only in Canada and throughout the Commonwealth but in many other maritime countries as well.

As a development of history it has one anomaly which I certainly think should be removed. Due to the way our registration system has developed, a Canadian ship is now not registered primarily as a Canadian ship but as a British ship registered in Canada. Certainly, the committee has no objection, and nothing but commendation, for the change in this bill which makes registry of such a nature that the registry is that of a Canadian ship, registered in Canada. By way of explanation, however, I might say that the centre of all registry in the Commonwealth is located at Cardiff, Wales, and has been for many years. There is a system of port registry in Commonwealth ports whereby each chief officer of customs acts as a registrar. This is also true in Canada now. If you wish to register a ship, you do your documentation at the local customs office, wherever it may be. The material is eventually forwarded to a central office in Ottawa and, in due course, to the Commonwealth Chief Registrar in Cardiff, Wales.

● (1150)

Official numbers for ships are assigned in blocks to all Commonwealth countries so that there is a more or less integrated system throughout the Commonwealth. This bill changes that. I shall deal with that in a little more detail in a moment.

It might be interesting for honourable senators to know that, according to the information given to the committee, during the last fiscal year, 1976-77, there was a total of 16,138 registration transactions carried out in Canada, of which 13,954, or approximately 86 per cent, were carried out at 16 principal ports of registry. It might be appropriate to place upon the record the names of those 16 principal ports, and the number of registrations at each. They are: Vancouver, 5,705; Victoria, 1,150; St. John's, 991; Halifax, 772; Toronto, 705; Prince Rupert, 589; Nanaimo, 562; Shelburne, 516; Yarmouth, 481; Saint John, 400; Digby, 398; Charlottetown, 361; Montreal, 347; Sorel, 332; Sydney, 325; and Cap Aux Meules, Quebec, 320.

By grouping some of those into regions, it will at once be noted that a preponderance of all registration—more than half—occurred in British Columbia. If my addition is correct, there were 8,006 registrations in British Columbia; in Nova Scotia there were 2,492; in Quebec there were 999, and in Ontario there were 705. In the whole Atlantic region, if one were to consider it as the four provinces, there were almost 4,000.

The remaining 2,184 registry transactions of the total of 16,138 I mentioned were performed at 41 other customs locations in the country. It is worth noting, too, that although the ship registries are located in many ports throughout Canada, a ship is described in respect of registration in two ways—that is, by the name of the ship, and by the port of registry. International law requires that each ship bears its name in large letters on its bow and its port of registry on its stern and, therefore, it is an easy matter to determine where the ship's documentation is located.

The bill, as it was introduced in the Senate, provided for a substantial change to this system. In addition to providing a system which would result in ships of Canadian registry being registered as Canadian ships, which I mentioned before, it would do away with the system of port registration throughout all the coastlines of the country, including the inland coastlines. The proposal, as it was explained by departmental witnesses in the early stages of the committee's hearings, indicated that what was in the minds of those who drafted the bill was that there should be one central registry in the country, namely, Ottawa, and that there should be five or six offices in the whole of the country to which people could go to deposit documents relating to the registry of the ship, encumbrances on the ship, or matters relating to ships, which in any way would have to be registered. From these five or six local offices the documents would be forwarded to Ottawa, the central registry, and the actual registry would take place there.

One of the essential features of the present system is not only that registration can take place locally in these 57 places I mentioned throughout Canada, but the actual search of title, or search of registry documents, to determine the ownership of a ship and to determine what encumbrances there may be against it, if any, can be carried out at each of those ports. Therefore, it can be a local transaction, dealt with by local people—local financial people, for instance, if it is mortgage, or local shipowners, local solicitors and local bankers. It would be an entirely local transaction, convenient to those who are shipowners and to all who have reasons to be interested in ships from a financial standpoint. It would also be of substantial convenience to anyone who has to make a search of title.

It seemed to the committee that this system, having these two advantages among many others, had certainly served the shipping industry well. It had also served well all those whose activities led them to be concerned with shipping.

There were some reasons advanced, of course, by those who wished to change to a central registry. One reason was the consolidation of records in one place. However, it seemed to the committee, having regard to the convenience of the public, that these reasons were not at all persuasive and that, in so far as it was practicable to do so, the present system should be retained, at least in its essential features.

● (1200)

So, after many hours of discussion—and I suppose one could also say debate—the committee came to what I believe to be its unanimous conclusion, that the essential features of the present system would serve the public better than the system proposed in the bill. The amendments numbered from 53 to 60 in the report were therefore agreed to by the committee. The essential feature of these is that there will continue to be local registries, but the number will be substantially reduced because the great majority of all transactions is carried out in a relatively small number of ports throughout Canada. In fact, 86 per cent of them were carried out in 16 ports in 1976-77.

The basic amendment is that numbered 53. The general effect of this is that there shall be a central registry in Ottawa, but it shall be a place for gathering statistics, for keeping records, although something more than mere archives, because it is intended that frequent reference can be made thereto for any information that is desired. However, the actual registration will be carried out in a number of local ports.

I draw attention particularly to the amendment to which I have just referred, and to the second subsection thereof:

The Governor in Council shall establish by regulation such a suitable number of ports of registry as may be required to provide an efficient and accessible ship registry system throughout Canada.

The reasoning behind that amendment is that it may be that we do not require as many ports as we have now, but the intention is that there should be a local registry system and that there should be sufficient registry ports to provide an efficient and accessible registry system throughout the country—that is, reasonably accessible to those whose business requires them to use the facilities of a registry port.

As a further safeguard—that is perhaps not the right word, but I will use it in any event—to compliance with the subsection I have just read, subsection (3) has been added, saying with respect to the subsection I have just read that the clause which requires publication of proposed regulations by the Governor in Council shall apply to any regulations setting out the identity of ports of registry in Canada. That means that when the Governor in Council decides to designate the number of ports and their locations, the regulations, before becoming effective, will have to be published in the Canada Gazette, and the public will have an opportunity to file objections. If objections are filed, hearings to determine the validity of those objections must be heard before the regulations become effective.

I think that gives the substance of the changes with regard to registration. I repeat, the central feature is that, whereas the bill as introduced proposed doing away with local registration, except for the deposit of documents for transmission to Ottawa in some five or six places in the country, the amendment provides for the continuance of local registration, with the central registry in Ottawa being simply a place for keeping records from which information may in due course be obtained.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I wonder if Senator Smith would permit a question? Would he comment on subsection (1) of amendment 53, to which he has just alluded? I am particularly wondering what the status of the central office is. A search can be made in respect of the official record of a certain vessel at the local office, but is any legal status given to the record that is kept in the central office? If there is a discrepancy between the record in the central office and the record in the local office, is it correct to say that the record in the local office prevails?

Senator Smith (Colchester): I believe the answer to that question is that the legal significance lies in the records at the local office. That is the office where the search is made, and that is the office where the search can be completed. What you find there is what has the legal effect in any matter I can think of—at the moment, in any event. The status of the central office is intended to be simply that of a place where records are filed, but nothing more active than that. If, for instance, the Department of Transport wanted information about all the ships registered in Canada, it could turn to the central office and get that information. As far as title goes, as I understand it, the intent of the committee, and certainly my intent when I voted for this amendment, was that the whole legal effect should be at the local office.

Senator Langlois: The central office is merely an information office.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Yes.

Senator Langlois: May I ask a question of Senator Smith for the information of the house? I know the honourable senator has done extensive work on this bill, and has taken a great interest in it, particularly in the part dealing with the registration of ships. Can he tell me, as a result of his research, whether I am right in assuming that the large number of ships registered in the maritime provinces and in British Columbia is accounted for by the fact that there is a large number of fishing boats that operate out of those provinces?

● (1210)

Further, if his answer is in the affirmative, can the honourable senator say that this change was made in the proposed new system in order to preclude the necessity of the owners of smaller boats having to go to the expense of coming to Ottawa to register their ships, or to research documents having to do with ship transactions?

Senator Smith (Colchester): The answer to both questions is yes. I am very grateful to Senator Langlois for having brought this point forward, because it is one which I should have made.

Senator McElman: Honourable senators, in addition to the central registry serving as an informational point at which data is brought together from the several regional, district or local registry offices, it is my understanding that the central office can also serve as a point of original registration, and will do so in a minority of cases, and in those cases it will be the point of search. However, for registrations taking place at local offices it is only an informational office.

Hon. J. J. Greene: Honourable senators, I should like to make some small contribution, if I may, to the debate. First of all, as a non-member of the committee, I should like to take the liberty and presume to compliment the committee and its chairman on the work they have done in connection with this bill. To my mind, during the short time I have had the honour of being a member of this Senate, this is an example of the Senate at its best. Last spring I felt that we saw the Senate at its worst when some alleged theory of complete independence of each senator and a denial of the party affiliation of senators was put forward, with which I disagree most violently. In my opinion, the party system gives stability to the processes of government, and I thought it very bad that the Senate tried to assert its independence of the other place and of the government merely for the joy of beating its breast and showing that it is independent. I do not believe that was a particularly edifying example of the best work of the Senate. It is conversely, in my opinion, the bipartisan system which will work in a chamber the members of which do not have to be re-elected every four or five years, as the case may be.

So in a case such as this fine revision of this code, I do think senators have a great deal of independence from the party line in their efforts to improve the legislation, and not in voting for or against government measures. I do not think we need to show the government, in a general vote of the Senate, that there is independence in the revision and improvement of legislation by the Senate. In my opinion, this is a very good example.

It would seem to me that this bill, in its original form, brought forth a legislative monstrosity beyond the wildest imagination of those concoctors of horrors, whether they be Conrad, Edgar Allan Poe, whoever conceived Frankenstein or any other monster as the creation of literary genius in that direction. I believe that reference was made to some 132 mistakes in the legislation, and if God ever created an offspring with 132 defects we would consider it to be a monster and it would be characterized as such.

In my opinion, the committee, by its diligence, patience and hard work, together with the degree of talent apparent among its members, in addition to that of the witnesses who appeared before it, have improved that monster to the degree that it is now a reasonably presentable legislative creation which can be of service to those engaged in the maritime commerce and industry of Canada. I am sure that in revising such legislation, in that sense, it has been of very great service to the country as a whole and the maritime community in particular.

In the first instance, among those 132 errors were a very great number in the translation, which is a point I wish to make as strongly as I possibly can. I took the liberty of attending the committee, although I am not a member, to question the translators with respect to this very point. They had first envisaged some theory of translation which I found to be most abhorrent. That was that they translated in some general sense and could not be explicit in the translation in every case and in every word. As the translators very honestly admitted, they are not experts in this esoteric field. They are given a bill to translate, but they are not experts in maritime law. Therefore, they translate it in a general rather than a specific and exact manner.

I can think of nothing more reprehensible, in light of the sensitive state of our constitutional balance at the present time, than to have inexact and imprecise translations which create one right and one responsibility in one language and, perhaps, a different right and a different responsibility in the other language. In other words, if a case were tried in the French language one decision might result, and in the English language there might be another result. I can think of nothing worse that could be done at the federal level at this time than to allow such a possibility to exist. The committee has in this bill rectified, I believe, each and every one of those shortcomings on the part of the original translators.

However, I believe there is more to it than that. It is not sufficient to leave it each time, hopefully, to a wide-awake and diligent Senate committee to correct these errors. In my opinion, clearly inherent in what has happened in this case is that our translation system needs some refurbishing if we are truly to live up to the spirit of the Official Languages Act and make exactly the same legislation applicable throughout Canada. The translators must have time to become expert in the subject matters which they translate in order that there be no possibility that they will create laws which lead to differing results in either of our official languages.

One very general conclusion is to be drawn from the errors which the committee has rectified in this case. A much more sophisticated system of translation is needed if we are to achieve the effect that each bill passed by the Parliament of Canada results in exactly the same meaning in either language in order that every court would find the same result, whether the trial be in the French language or in the English language.

• (1220)

I hope that the government, taking notice of the fact that this committee, through its work, has pulled its chestnuts out of the fire in this instance, will take a very careful look at its system of translation and the translation facilities available so as to make sure that never again will a bill come before Parliament with as many errors in translation as occurred in the original draft of this bill—errors which could result in differing legal consequences.

While I support the work of the committee and wholeheartedly endorse its conclusions, that does not mean that I agree in every particular with the ultimate result. I think the committee did a noble work and as effective a work as any human institution could possibly have done. That does not mean, however, that in the judgment of each and every one of us we achieved perfection. I am still concerned with the provision respecting stay of proceedings contained in section BII-61. Under that section the power to stay proceedings still remains with the Admiralty Court, which is the Federal Court under the new definition. That section states:

The Admiralty Court may, on application by an interested person, by order prohibit, for a time specified in the order, any dealing with a ship or any part interest therein, and the Court may stay any proceedings pending in any other court in relation to the ship or any interest therein.

The power of the Federal Court to stay proceedings in any other court troubles me. As the committee did not see fit to delete that section, I can only express the hope that the Federal Court will resist the temptation of intervening in properly instituted proceedings before any of the various courts of the provinces. We must remember that some of the subject matters deal with private property and civil rights, and each of the provinces has its own code of practice respecting such actions. There are Rules of Procedure of the Supreme Court of Ontario, for example, and it would be invidious if the Federal Court were to intervene in a properly instituted action before the Supreme Court of Ontario and stay those proceedings. Such a step would be an unwarranted intrusion in our court system, which has evolved over the years into one of the pillars of our Constitution.

If the Federal Court is to achieve its ultimate destiny of being a useful complement to our judicial system, and not a supplement to the present courts, it must strongly resist the temptation to intrude into jurisdictions which have properly been conferred on the superior, county and district courts of the various provinces. To have the Federal Court evolve into a court which could at any time suck in matters which to that time had properly been within the jurisdiction of the provinces would be doing a great disservice, not only to the judicial system as a whole but to the ultimate utility of the Federal Court within the very sensitive bounds of our federal Constitution.

I regret that section BII-61 has not been deleted altogether. I can only urge the Federal Court to deny any application to stay proceedings that have been properly instituted under the respective rules of any of the provinces. I can think of nothing that would be less likely to help our present sensitive constitutional position vis-à-vis the Province of Quebec than to have the Federal Court stick its nose into proceedings properly initiated in Quebec and dealing with matters of property or civil rights within that province. To have the Federal Court stay such proceedings, notwithstanding the fact that they are perfectly within the constitutional responsibility of the province, would result in a great disservice to the very tender situation existing in our federal-provincial constitutional relationship at the present time.

It is an unfortunate section, and I trust that the Federal Court will use it very gingerly, if at all. It would have been a great blessing had it been deleted altogether. Notwithstanding the fine work the committee has done, I do not think any committee can achieve all things for all men. Certainly, the committee's report as a whole is entirely commendable, and I intend to support it. I only regret that it did not go a little further and delete section BII-61.

Senator Ewasew: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might direct a question to Senator Smith (Colchester) regarding the effect of amendment 53. The proposed amendment states:

A central office for the recording of such information as is prescribed—

And the word "recording" is underlined, whereas the original draft reads:

A central office for the filing—

Should there be a discrepancy between the documents on file at the central office and those on file at the port of registry, which would prevail?

Senator Smith (Colchester): I am not sure that I understand the honourable senator's question. If it relates to a discrepancy between documents on file at the central office and those on file at the port of registry, there is absolutely no doubt in my mind that the documents at the port of registry would prevail.

● (1230)

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Bourget: Honourable senators, I would like at the outset to join our chairman, Senator Haig, and Senator Langlois and Senator Smith, in thanking the staff who have helped us study this legislation. It can be said that without their help, co-operation and the many hours they have spent working on this bill, we would have been unable to do such a good job. This does not mean, as Senator Greene remarked a moment ago, that the legislation as amended by us is now perfect, but I do think the committee members have managed to improve the initial bill after many hours of work and with the assistance, as I said earlier, of the research office, the committee's secretary and our Law Clerk.

I wish to say also that throughout our study, the openness of mind of all committee members has been remarkable. As a matter of fact, we were given a rare example of that spirit this morning when two opposition and two government members spoke on the report. It means that throughout our study all politics were cast aside and committee members really tried to bring forward the best legislation possible.

This morning I shall confine my remarks to such amendments, which are of a legal nature, even though I am not a lawyer, as I have learned a lot about maritime law in the few weeks I have sat on that committee.

I have therefore been asked to comment on the amendments to clauses BI-20 and BI-21, dealing with the provisions concerning arrest, seizure and forfeiture of a ship.

The new provisions introduced by the proposed maritime code for Canada under the heading "Arrest of a ship" (clause BI-20) are in conflict with the formal and procedural provisions already written in the Federal Court Act. As this act sets out in detail the jurisdiction of the Federal Court in admiralty procedures, and as section 43 of the said act provides for the procedures to be followed in this regard, the committee was of the opinion that paragraph 1 of clause BI-20 of the legislation should not include any such provisions. The witnesses representing private interests and the special committee of the Canadian Bar were unanimous in making such a recommendation to the committee. The committee therefore concluded that the government should now consider that problem and decide whether the Federal Court Act should be amended accordingly.

The committee therefore proposes that clause BI-20 only provide a link-up with the provisions concerning the detention, seizure and forfeiture of a ship and set only a minimum obligation for those people authorized to give clearance to a ship involved in such procedures.

So that amendment to clause BI-20 reads as follows:

No person who knows or who ought reasonably to know that a ship has been detained, arrested or seized, shall give clearance in respect of that ship unless he has reasonable grounds to believe that the ship has been released from arrest, detention or seizure.

As to clause BI-21 dealing with the seizure and forfeiture here is what the committee decided.

That part of Bill C-41 dealing with the seizure and forfeiture to be found in clause BI-21 came under strong discussion, particularly subclause (5) dealing with leased equipment on board and the passage of a new provision providing for a notice of seizure.

So the new subclause reads as follows:

BI-21 (1.1) A seizure is made by serving upon a ship, the ship and cargo, or the cargo, the person in charge thereof and the person empowered to give a clearance in respect thereof a notice of seizure describing the offence alleged to have been committed, which notice of seizure shall also be filed in the Admiralty Court within ten days of the serving thereof."

This amendment aims at enabling the people concerned to be informed that a ship has been seized and confiscated and about the nature of the infraction because of which such action was taken, and this as soon as possible. The main objective is therefore to protect the right of the accused and the third parties involved to contest the seizure and forfeiture and to take all other conservation action required in such circumstances.

The amplitude of the economic results of a ship being immobilized for any period whatsoever and consequently the importance for those whose interests are involved to be informed of the charges against them so as to be able to obtain the required legal assistance as soon as possible are at the basis of this amendment. This is why the committee insisted on the need for an official document constituting a notice of seizure and describing the infraction involved to be served to the person in charge of the ship at the time of the seizure.

Under the same heading, the committee has also decided to amend subclause 5 of clause BI-21 of the bill by striking out lines 6 to 17 inclusive and substituting therefor the following:

(5) The owner of any cargo of a ship seized under subsection (1)—

—and the following are underscored because of their importance—

—or of any leased equipment thereon may apply to the Admiralty Court for an order requiring any person in whose custody such cargo or the proceeds of any sale thereof or any such equipment is, to deliver the cargo, proceeds or equipment to him, and the Court may make such an order where it is satisfied that the applicant is the owner of the cargo or equipment to which the application relates and that there are not reasonable grounds for believing that such cargo or equipment is subject to forfeiture.

The amendment to clause BI-21 dealing with ship seizure exempts leased equipment. It is well known in specialized circles, as stated in committee, that small boat or trawler owners can seldom afford to pay cash for ship equipment, and therefore the committee wanted to protect those who lease it or sell it on terms so it would not be seized.

In view of the variety of items involved in seizure cases, the amendment is broad enough to include such pieces of equipment as sonar for instance, which was referred to and which is quite expensive according to Senator Langlois, an expert in such matters. This example was given to illustrate the need to protect those who sell such equipment on credit or lease it to shipowners. There was also reference to cargo containers which are quite costly as honourable senators are aware. This is why we wanted to protect the owners of such equipment. The committee therefore recognized that it will be left to the courts to determine the scope of the provision.

Honourable senators, such were my comments on those two questions. I hope you have grasped the meaning of this legal language with which I had difficulty at certain times in committee. I would say once more that the committee's work was excellent, and it was a pleasure to work with all committee members.

● (1240)

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Haig, seconded by the Honourable Senator Langlois, that this report be now adopted. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill, as amended, be read the third time?

Senator Cook: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill, as amended, be now read the third time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill, as amended, read third time and passed.

NATIONAL PAROLE SERVICE

STATISTICS—INQUIRY ANSWERED

Senator Hastings inquired of the government pursuant to notice of May 12, 1977:

1. What was the number of individuals under the supervision of the National Parole Service and other agencies as of March 31, 1972, and March 31, 1977, detailed as to region, as follows:

- (a) parole from federal institutions,
- (b) parole from provincial institutions,
- (c) day parole community correction centres,
- (d) day parole from other federal institutions,
- (e) day parole from provincial institutions,
- (f) mandatory supervision federal institutions, and
- (g) mandatory supervision provincial institutions?

2. What was the total authorized complement, detailed as to headquarters and region, as of March 31, 1972, and March 31, 1977, of

- (a) the National Parole Board, and
- (b) the National Parole Service?

3. What was the actual complement, detailed as to headquarters and region, as of March 31, 1972, and March 31, 1977, of

- (a) the National Parole Board, and
- (b) the National Parole Service?

Senator Petten: Answered.

Canadian Penitentiary Service and National Parole Service: 1. March 31, 1972: (a, b, d, and e) Pacific, 654; Prairies, 886; Ontario, 1615; Quebec, 1440; Atlantic, 469.

NOTE: A breakdown of figures is not available as the records of the National Parole Board were not kept in a manner so as to permit the extraction of such information for provincial and federal institutions separately.

(c) Community Correction Centres not in operation for parolees;

(f) Pacific, 29; Prairies, 24; Ontario, 52; Quebec, 42; Atlantic, 24;

(g) Mandatory Supervision applies to federal inmates only.

December 31, 1976:

NOTE: December 31, 1976 is the last quarter for which figures are available. a, b—Pacific, 347; Prairies, 600; Ontario, 971; Quebec, 856; Atlantic, 329.

NOTE: The records of the National Parole Service are not kept in a manner that would enable this agency to provide a breakdown of figures for provincial and federal institutions.

c—Pacific, 45; Prairies, 105; Ontario, 29; Quebec, 54; Atlantic, 27;

d, e—Pacific, 90; Prairies, 46; Ontario, 109; Quebec, 156; Atlantic, 60.

NOTE: The records of the National Parole Service are not kept in a manner that would enable this agency to provide a breakdown of figures for provincial and federal institutions.

f—Pacific, 256; Prairies, 413; Ontario, 455; Quebec, 396; Atlantic, 185;

g—Mandatory Supervision applies to federal inmates only.

2. (a) To be answered elsewhere (NPB).

(b) March 31, 1972: The National Parole Service was under the National Parole Board in 1972. No information on authorized complement for 1972 is available in this agency (CPS & NPS).

March 31, 1977: Headquarters: 53; Atlantic: 94; Quebec: 172; Ontario: 194; Prairies: 168; Pacific: 106; Total, 787.

3. (a) To be answered elsewhere (NPB).

(b) March 31, 1972: The National Parole Service was under the National Parole Board in 1972. No information on actual complement for 1972 is available in this agency (CPS & NPS). March 31, 1977: Headquarters, 44; Atlantic, 84; Quebec, 172; Ontario, 201; Prairies, 184; Pacific, 105; Total 790.

National Parole Board: 1. To be answered elsewhere (CPS). 2. (a) March 31, 1972: Headquarters: 116; Regions: Nil. Total authorized complement: 116.

March 31, 1977: Headquarters: 110; Regions: 110; Pacific, 20; Prairies, 23; Ontario, 25; Quebec, 24; Atlantic, 18. Total authorized complement: 220.

(b) March 31, 1972: Headquarters: 54; Regions: 305; Pacific, 46; Prairies, 74; Ontario, 82; Quebec, 73; Atlantic, 30. Total authorized complement: 359.

March 31, 1977: To be answered elsewhere (CPS).

3. (a) March 31, 1972: Headquarters: 110; Regions: Nil. Total actual complement: 110

March 31, 1977: Headquarters: 122; Regions: 99; Pacific, 22; Prairies, 20; Ontario, 20; Quebec, 21; Atlantic, 16. Total actual complement: 221.

(b) March 31, 1972: Headquarters: 49; Regions: 288; Pacific, 44; Prairies, 70; Ontario, 75; Quebec, 70; Atlantic, 29. Total actual complement: 337.

March 31, 1977: To be answered elsewhere (CPS).

NOTE: In 1972, there was no NPB separate from the NPS, and regionalization had not yet been instituted. For the purpose of this reply, therefore, case preparation, case investigation, parole supervision and police liaison complement at headquarters was ascribed to NPS and the district offices complement to NPS regions. These figures were deducted from the totals to arrive at the NPB figures.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, I wonder if I could ask the Leader of the Government if he would be good enough to indicate to us the proposed program for the sittings of the Senate for the remainder of this week and also for next week so that we may make whatever arrangements are necessary.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, in view of the expeditious progress made this morning, the proposal is to adjourn today—in just a few moments—and to call honourable senators back for prorogation at three o'clock on Monday afternoon.

Of course, Her Majesty the Queen will be arriving in Ottawa at 3.05 this afternoon, and the highlight of Her Majesty's Silver Jubilee visit to Canada, which all of us await with keen anticipation, will be Her Majesty's presence in this chamber on Tuesday, at which time she has graciously consented to open Parliament at 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

With respect to this chamber, the opening of Parliament on Tuesday will be followed on Wednesday with speeches by the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, and then on Thursday there will be speeches by the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the Government.

It is proposed that we adjourn then on Thursday afternoon to reassemble on the following Tuesday evening.

Senator Riley: Assuming the House of Commons passes Bill C-41 as amended, will it not be necessary to have royal assent before prorogation?

Senator Perrault: It will be possible to have royal assent immediately prior to prorogation. That poses no difficulty.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, in response to the appropriate reference by the Leader of the Government to the presence of Her Majesty and her visit to Canada, which will be commencing shortly, may I join with him on behalf of this group in indicating the pride and pleasure we feel in the fact that she will be honouring us with the royal presence once again.

● (1250)

Perhaps it is appropriate on this occasion to remind ourselves of the great distinction—and perhaps even renewal—of the concept of constitutional monarchy that Her Majesty has brought to that great institution. It is of special interest to us that she will honour this chamber with her presence, and I am sure that honourable senators share with me the pride that we traditionally feel when we have the honour of seeing, in actual personal terms, the presence of the Crown in Parliament.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motion:

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday, October 17, 1977, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, October 17, 1977, at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, October 17, 1977

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that she had received the following Communication:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

October 4, 1977

Madam,

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Honourable Bora Laskin, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber at 3.15 p.m., approximately, on Monday, October 17th, for the purpose of proroguing the Second Session of the Thirtieth Parliament of Canada.

I have the honour to be,
Madam,

Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable

The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Langlois tabled:

Report of the Agricultural Products Board for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 7 of the Agricultural Products Board Act, Chapter A-5, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Agricultural Stabilization Board for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 14 of the Agricultural Stabilization Act, Chapter A-9, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Atomic Energy Control Board of Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 20(1) of the Atomic Energy Control Act, Chapter A-19, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Amended Statement of the Canadian Forces Supplementary Retirement Benefit Account, which forms part of the Report on the administration of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 28 of the said Act, Chapter C-9, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Report of the Auditor General of Canada on the examination of the accounts and financial statements of the Custodian of Enemy Property for the year ended December 31, 1976, pursuant to section 3 of the Trading with the Enemy (Transitional Powers) Act, Chapter 24, Statutes of Canada, 1947.

Report of the Economic Council of Canada, including its financial statement certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 21(1) of the Economic Council of Canada Act, Chapter E-1, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Auditor General of Canada on the examination of the accounts and financial statements of the National Battlefields Commission for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 12 of An Act respecting the National Battlefields at Quebec, Chapter 57, Statutes of Canada, 1907-08, and sections 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

National Capital Fund Budget of the National Capital Commission for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 70(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970, as approved by Order in Council P.C. 1977-2263, dated August 4, 1977.

Report on operations under the Regional Development Incentives Act for the month of January 1977, pursuant to section 16 of the said Act, Chapter R-3, R.S.C., 1970.

Capital Budget of the Royal Canadian Mint for the year ended December 31, 1976, pursuant to section 70(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970, together with copy of Order in Council P.C. 1976-1557, dated June 22, 1976.

Capital Budget of the Royal Canadian Mint for the year ending December 31, 1977, pursuant to section 70(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970, together with copy of Order in Council P.C. 1977-1277, dated May 5, 1977.

Report on Actuarial Examination of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (Dependants) Pension Fund as at March 31, 1976, together with Treasury Board Order, dated August 24, 1977, pursuant to sections 56(3) and 57(3) of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Pension Continuation Act, Chapter R-10, R.S.C., 1970.

Statement of expenditures and financial commitments made under the Veterans' Land Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 49 of the said Act, Chapter V-4, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Reports of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, respecting certain compensation plans, as follows:

1. The Alberta Government Telephones, Edmonton, Alberta and the group of its traffic employees, represented by the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 348. Order dated September 19, 1977.

2. Arborg Memorial Hospital, Arborg, Manitoba and its executive group, dated September 12, 1977.

3. Canadian Carborundum Company Ltd., Niagara Falls, Ontario and the group of its salaried bargaining unit employees, represented by the United Steelworkers of America, Local 5953. Order dated August 10, 1977.

4. Canadian Carborundum Company Ltd., Niagara Falls, Ontario and the group of its hourly bargaining unit employees, represented by the United Steelworkers of America, Local 4151. Order dated August 10, 1977.

5. Charterways Company Ltd., Mississauga, Ontario and the group of its air terminal transport drivers, represented by the Teamsters Union, Local 352. Order dated August 15, 1977.

6. Collingwood Shipyards, Collingwood, Ontario, Division of Canadian Shipbuilding and Engineering Limited and the group of its office employees, represented by the United Steelworkers of America, Local 8234. Order dated August 22, 1977.

7. Perolin-Bird Archer Limited, Cobourg, Ontario and the group of its plant hourly employees, represented by the United Steelworkers of America, Local 7175. Order dated September 13, 1977.

8. Richelieu Raceways Inc., Montreal, Quebec and the group of its pari-mutuel employees represented by Local 1999, Teamsters, Brewery, Soft Drink and Miscellaneous Workers, formerly represented by the Construction and Supply Drivers and Allied Workers, Teamsters Local 903. Order dated August 10, 1977.

9. St. Boniface School Division No. 4, Winnipeg, Manitoba and the group of its executive employees. Order dated September 19, 1977.

10. Silverwood Industries Ltd. and the group of its Toronto plant and driver personnel, represented by the Canadian Union of Operating Engineers, Local 101. Order dated August 24, 1977.

11. Souris Valley School Division, No. 42, Souris, Manitoba and the group of its teachers represented by the Souris Valley Division Association No. 42 of the Manitoba Teachers' Society. Order dated August 18, 1977.

12. Trailways of Canada Limited, Thornhill, Ontario and the group of its full-time drivers, represented by the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers, Local 305. Order dated August 11, 1977.

13. The Regional Municipality of Waterloo, Ontario and the group of its regional police executives. Order dated September 6, 1977.

14. Wellesley Hospital, Toronto, Ontario and the group of its nurses represented by the Ontario Nurses Association. Order dated August 29, 1977.

15. The City of Winnipeg, Manitoba and the group of its firefighters, represented by the United Fire Fighters of Winnipeg, Local 867 of the International Association of Fire Fighters. Order dated August 24, 1977.

Report of operations under the Canada Water Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 36 of the said Act, Chapter 5 (1st Supplement), R.S.C., 1970.

Auditor General's Report to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration on the accounts and financial statements of the Unemployment Insurance Commission for the year ended December 31, 1976, pursuant to section 138 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, Chapter 48, Statutes of Canada, 1970-71-72.

Report of the Department of National Revenue containing Tables and Statements relative to Customs, Excise and Taxation for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 5 of the Department of National Revenue Act, Chapter N-15, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of Uranium Canada, Limited, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended December 31, 1976, pursuant to sections 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Robichaud: Honourable senators, may I ask the deputy leader what the seating arrangements will be for the opening of the new session of Parliament tomorrow?

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, the seating arrangements in this house will be the same tomorrow as they are today. We shall be using these benches and we shall be sitting in the same order as for regular sittings of the Senate.

Senator Denis: May I ask the deputy leader for information with respect to Bill C-41?

An Hon. Senator: It will be back in the next session.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, Bill C-41 is now before the House of Commons and we shall have to wait until we receive a message from that place to know what its disposition will be.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

PROROGATION SPEECH

The Right Honourable Bora Laskin, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Right Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the Second Session of the Thirtieth Parliament with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

The Second Session of the Thirtieth Parliament opened on October 12, 1976. In the 370 days since then, the Senate has held 103 sittings and the House of Commons has held 175 sittings. Of the 64 bills brought before Parliament by the Government in this session, 44 have been enacted. In addition, 13 bills proposed by private members have been passed into law.

Members of the House of Commons:

During this session you took the decision to permit the television and radio broadcasting of your proceedings. Citizens in every corner of Canada will now have regular opportunities to see and hear you transact the business of the nation. Their response to what they observe will provide great incentive to you to organize your business in a manner that reflects the needs and interests of contemporary Canadians.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

During this session, Canadians have focussed their attention more sharply on the future of Confederation. The Government of Canada has appointed a Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations and created a Task Force on Canadian Unity. You have approved the appointment of a new Commissioner of Official Languages and enacted a new Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act and Established Programs Financing Act. The development of our federal system, however, will continue to be evaluated and, perhaps, altered in the next several years and Canadians in every province and territory will have to exercise great understanding and reason as they plan their future together.

The Canadian economy has been in this session, as in all, an area of major interest. The program of controls of prices and incomes has been extended through its second year while the Government has engaged in discussions with the provinces, with labour and with industry about the removal of controls and the guidance of the economy afterward.

You have enacted measures to restrain government expenditures and to give greater authority to the Auditor General. The Government has appointed a Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability.

The less fortunate people in society have not been forgotten in this session. You have created a new Department of Employment and Immigration and a Canada Employment and Immigration Commission which together will assist Canadians in finding employment, assist those who cannot and administer the new Immigration Act, passed in this session. You have also enacted a Canadian Human Rights Act and have amended the Old Age Security Act and the Canada Pension Plan to improve benefits under those programs.

Canada has continued to attempt to bring together the rich and the poor nations of the world so that all may agree on a system of organizing the international economy so that all nations may share prosperity and live in peace. The Conference on International Economic Co-operation was chaired by Canada and our country played leading roles at the Commonwealth Conference of Heads of Governments and at the economic summit conference of the seven greatest industrial countries.

Many other actions of great importance have been undertaken during this session.

Members of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the provision you have made for the public services in the previous and in the current fiscal year.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

May Divine Providence continue to bless our country.

● (1510)

The Honourable the Speaker of the Senate then said:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

It is the will and pleasure of the Right Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General that this Parliament be prorogued until four o'clock in the afternoon tomorrow, Tuesday, the 18th day of October, 1977, to be here holden; and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued until four o'clock in the afternoon tomorrow, Tuesday, the 18th day of October, 1977.

Abbreviations

1r, 2r, 3r	= First, second, third reading
amds	= amendments
com	= committee
div	= division
m	= motion
neg	= negated
ref	= referred
rep	= report
r.a.	= royal assent

Acts passed during the Session

PUBLIC ACTS

Chapter		Bill No.
	Assented to October 22, 1976
1. Port of Halifax Operations Act		C-14
	Assented to December 15, 1976
2. Appropriation Act No. 5, 1976		C-28
	Assented to December 22, 1976
3. Government Expenditures Restraint Act		C-19
	Assented to February 24, 1977
4. Statute law, an Act relating to income tax		C-22
5. Customs Tariff Act (No. 1) amendment		C-15
6. Excise Tax Act amendment		C-21
	Assented to March 29, 1977
7. Appropriation Act. No. 1, 1977		C-44
8. Appropriation Act. No. 2, 1977		C-45
9. Old Age Security Act amendment		C-35
	Assented to March 31, 1977
10. Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977		C-37
	Assented to May 12, 1977
11. Unemployment Insurance Entitlements Adjustment Act		C-52
12. Advance Payments for Crops Act		C-2
13. Pension Act amendment		C-11

Acts passed during the Session - Continued

PUBLIC ACTS - Continued

Chapter	Bill No.
Assented to June 16, 1977
14. Customs Tariff Act (No. 2) amendment	C-55
15. Excise Tax Act (No. 2) amendment	C-54
16. Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act amendment	C-39
17. Export Development Act amendment	C-47
18. Financial Administration Act amendment and repeal of Satisfied Securities Act	C-8
19. Motor Vehicle Safety Act amendment	C-36
20. Historic Sites and Monuments Act amendment	C-13
21. Railway Act amendment	C-207
Assented to June 29, 1977
22. Appropriation Act No. 3, 1977	C-58
23. Farm Improvement Loans Act, Small Businesses Loans Act and Fisheries Improvement Loans Act amendment	C-48
24. Government Organization (Scientific Activities) Act, 1976	C-26
25. Judges Act amendment and amendments to other Acts in respect of judicial matters	C-50
26. Aeronautics Act and National Transportation Act amendment	C-46
27. Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act amendment	C-3
28. Miscellaneous Statute Law Amendment Act, 1977	C-53
29. Income Tax conventions between Canada and the countries of Morocco, Palestine, Singapore, Philippines, Dominican Republic and Switzerland, an Act respecting	C-12
30. Canada Lands Surveys Act amendment	C-4
31. Diplomatic and Consular Privileges and Immunities Act	C-6
Assented to July 14, 1977
32. James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement Act	C-9
33. Canadian Human Rights Act	C-25
34. Auditor General Act	C-20
35. Fisheries Act and Criminal Code amendment	C-38
36. Canada Pension Plan Act amendment	C-49
37. Bretton Woods Agreements Act amendment	C-18
38. Currency and Exchange Act amendment and consequential amendments to other Acts	C-5
39. Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act and Foreign Insurance Companies Act amendment	S-3
40. Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Beauharnois-Salaberry)	C-283
41. Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Blainville-Deux-Montagnes)	C-427
42. Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Brampton-Georgetown)	C-392
43. Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Cochrane)	C-433
44. Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Huron-Bruce)	C-394
45. Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Kootenay East-Revelstoke)	C-406
46. Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Laval)	C-418
47. Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Lethbridge-Foothills)	C-405
48. Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (London-Middlesex)	C-422
49. Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Saint-Jacques)	C-428
50. Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Saint-Léonard-Anjou)	C-429
51. Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe)	C-393

Acts passed during the Session - Concluded

PUBLIC ACTS - Concluded

Chapter	Bill No.
Assented to August 5, 1977
52. Immigration Act, 1976	C-24
53. Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1977	C-51
54. Employment and Immigration Reorganization Act	C-27
55. Statute Law (Metric Conversion) Amendment Act, 1976	C-23
56. Canadian Wheat Board Act and Western Grain Stabilization Act amendment	C-34

Assented to August 10, 1977

57. Air Traffic Control Services Continuation Act	C-63
---	------

LOCAL AND PRIVATE ACTS

Assented to July 14, 1977

58. Continental Bank of Canada Act	C-1001
--	--------

Adams, Hon. Willie (Introduced in the Senate Apr. 26/77)

- Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline, 1284-5
- Costs of gas to northerners, 1285
- Mackenzie Valley route, 1285
- Native people's land claims, 1284-5
- Yellowknife Assembly concerns, 1285

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne

- Consideration of Speech from the Throne, 6; termination date of Address in reply, 9; engrossing and presenting of Address to His Excellency the Governor General, 120
- Motion for Address in reply, Hon. Paul H. Lucier, 10-13; seconded, Hon. Augustus Irvine Barrow, 13-17

Speakers: Senators

Asselin, Martial, 89-93	Inman, F. Elsie, 98-99
Austin, Jack, 118-20	Laird, Keith, 36-38
Barrow, A. Irvine, 13-17	Lucier, Paul H., 10-13
Buckwold, Sidney L., 32-36	Macdonald, John M., 39-41
Carter, Chesley W., 115-18	Perrault, Raymond J., 24-31
Connolly, John J., 41-44, 51	Quart, Josie D., 87-90
Desruisseaux, Paul, 81-84	Rowe, Frederick William, 53-57
Flynn, Jacques, 19-21, 22-24	Smith, George I., 99-103
Forsey, Eugene A., 103-10	Stanbury, Richard J., 57-61
Fournier, Edgar E., 61-62	Walker, David J., 76-81
Graham, B. Alasdair, 112-15

Address to Queen Elizabeth II

- Address of congratulations on completion of twenty-fifth year of reign; address to Governor General re transmission of message, 306-07; message from Commons, 374; acknowledgment from the Queen, 395

Adjournments of the Senate

Christmas, 267-8, 272
 Easter, 629-30
 Summer, 1288-9, 1311 (Parliament recalled Aug. 9/77)

Advance payments for crops

Administrative costs, 644
 Agriculture acts, consolidation suggested, 652
 Applications, 645, 651
 Defaults in payments, 644
 Delivery restrictions, 643
 Financial risk to organization, 653
 Grains covered for advance payments, 643, 653
 Maximum advance to individual, 644
 Organization, definition of, 652
 Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act background, 656
 Repayment guarantee, 643, 644, 652
 Requirements for, 644, 652
 Services supplied by organization, 653, 655-6
 'Significant portion of the crop', 655
 Storable crops, 643-4, 651

Speakers: Senators

Connolly, John J., 653
 Ewasew, John, 652-3
 Macdonald, John M., 645, 651-2
 Molgat, Gildas L., 643-5, 653, 655-6

Advance Payments for Crops bill C-2. 1r, 637; 2r, 643-5, 651-3, 655-6; ref to com, 656; rep without amdt, 673;
 3r, 679; r.a., 703

Aeronautics and national transportation

Approval of Governor in Council for transfer of stock of air carrier or for issuance of licence, 937
 Canadian Transport Commission authority, 973
 Control of airlines by federal-provincial governments, 973
 Pacific Western Airlines, Supreme Court decision re, 937, 972, 973
 Penalty, 937

Speakers: Senators

Flynn, Jacques, 972-3
 Haig, J. Campbell, 972
 Lang, Daniel, 937, 973

Aeronautics and National Transportation bill C-46. 1r, 874; 2r, 937, 972-3; ref to com, 973, rep without amdt,
 975; 3r, 985; r.a., 1031

Agreements, conventions and treaties

Constitution of Canada, patriation of
 Correspondence between the Prime Minister and the Premier of Alberta, 69-71
 Letters from the Prime Minister to Provincial Premiers and draft resolution respecting the Constitution,
 297-303
 Economic Community-Canada Trade Agreement, 152-3, 159-60
 Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, Canada-US, 808, 983-4
 Helsinki Agreement
 Motion that Senate of Canada support principles of Helsinki Declaration, 962
 USSR violation of terms, 428-9

Agreements, conventions and treaties - Concluded

- James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement, 673, 679-82, 717-21, 739-40, 958-9, 1006-25, 1038-49, 1053-67, 1092-7, 1098, 1161
- Nuclear supplies, 960, 1126-7
- Offshore mineral rights, Federal-Provincial Memorandum of Understanding and Joint Communiqué between Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, 304-5
- RCMP, federal-provincial agreements for use or employment of, 686, 757-8
- Wheat Agreement, 1005, 1165, 1182

Agriculture

- Advance payments for crops, 637, 651-3
- Beef industry, 198, 482, 1140, 1313
- North American Beef Congress, 963
- Tomato industry, 1287, 1290-2
 - Employee statistics, 1290
 - Surtax order, 1287, 1290-2
 - Date of extension, 1291, 1292
 - GATT provisions, 1291, 1292
- Taiwan imports, 1290-1
- United States imports, 1292

Agriculture

- Kent County can be Saved*, rep of Agriculture Committee, 143, 197-200, 480-3
- Agricultural potential for economic activity and employment, 482
- Beef industry, 198, 482
- Bilingualism, difficulties of French-speaking farmers, 199
 - Enrolment of French-speaking students at Laval University, 199
- Conclusions and recommendations of committee, 199-200
- FAFAM, letters from chairman, 481
- Gleaner*, Fredericton, article titled 'A Valuable Study', 482
- L'Evangeline*, Moncton, reports on committee work, 480, 481
- Maritime Cooperative Services Ltd., brief presented to com by general manager, 482
- NewStart Inc., comment from director, 483
- Production costs in relation to land, fertilizer, machinery, 199
- Reduction in agricultural acreage, 198
- Rural deterioration in Kent County, 481-2
- Times*, Moncton, article titled 'Act on the Report', 482
- Speakers: Senators
 - Argue, Hazen, 143, 197-200
 - Michaud, Herve J., 480-3

Agriculture, Standing Senate Committee

- Expenses, 143
- Meetings during Senate sittings, 237, 374, 434-5, 478, 544, 588, 678, 805
- Reports
 - Advance Payments for Crops bill C-2, rep without amdt, 673
 - Beef industry, 1140, 1313
 - Canadian Wheat Board and Western Grain Stabilization bill C-34, rep with recommendation that bill be not proceeded with, 1152-3, 1175-80, 1183-95, 1214-18, neg, 1218
 - Kent County can be Saved*, 143, 197-200, 480-3
- Terms of reference, 145

Air traffic control services continuation

- Anti-Inflation Board guidelines and recommendations, 1294, 1297, 1303, 1306-07, 1308, 1309-10
- Areas of dispute, 1293-4
 - Classification plan, 1295, 1309
 - Management rights, 1294
 - Reclassification and pay increases, 1293-4, 1296, 1297
 - Vacation time, 1294
- Breakoff of negotiations, 1295, 1297
- Collective bargaining, 1305, 1306, 1309
- Compulsory arbitration, 1300-01, 1308-09
- Conciliation Board's recommendations, 1294-5, 1307, 1308, 1310
- Economic and other effects of CATCA strike, 1293, 1298
- Emergency legislation precedents, 1303
- Free collective bargaining, non-existence of, 1303-04
- Government role in dispute, 1301, 1302, 1308
- Monopoly power of CATCA, 1293
- Railway and other strikes in essential services, 1303-04
- Rates of pay (effective Jan. 1/77), 1295
 - Reconsideration by arbitrator, 1295, 1297, 1299
- Recommendations of Committee on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service, 1304-05
- Responsibility of unions in protection of public interest, 1296, 1300, 1301, 1304
- Right to strike, 1293, 1300, 1302, 1303, 1305
- Right to strike and CATCA, 1296
 - Irresponsibility in use of power, 1296
- Right to strike and the government, 1296-7, 1299
 - Government negotiations, 1296-7
- Right to strike, Parliament and the public, 1296, 1298
 - Prevention of strikes by order in council, 1298-9
- Rotating strikes, 1305-06
- Special Senate committee to deal with labour disputes, suggestion, 1308
- Third party negotiations, 1304
- Union leaders, irresponsibility of, 1302, 1303, 1304
- Unions status, 1301
- Speakers: Senators
 - Buckwold, Sidney L., 1304-05
 - Flynn, Jacques, 1295-9, 1301, 1311
 - Forsey, Eugene A., 1303-04, 1308, 1310
 - Grosart, Allister, 1305-07, 1309
 - Lang, Daniel A., 1310
 - Marchand, Jean, 1299-1303
 - Perrault, Raymond J., 1293-5, 1297, 1298, 1307, 1308-11

Air Traffic Control Services Continuation bill C-63. 1r, 1293; 2r, 1293-1311; 3r, 1311; r.a., 1311

Air transport

- Air Canada, 53
- Air traffic controllers service continuation, 1293-1300
- Atlantic provinces, subsidy, 203
- Bilingual air communications, 1970 report, question re, 257, 276, 1114
 - Possibility of air traffic controllers' strike, question, 1265-6
- Canadian Pacific Airlines, international and domestic routes, 243
- Transportation by land, air and sea, regional differences, 201-03, 240-3, 246-9, 396-402, 430-2

Alberta

- Constitution of Canada, correspondence between Prime Minister and Alberta Premier, 69-71
- Gas reserves, 1280, 1281, 1282
- Maintenance of domestic oil price, 226

Amendments, observations or recommendations in or re committee reports

- Canadian and British Insurance Companies, Foreign Insurance Companies bill S-3, rep with amdts, 476, 490
- Canadian Wheat Board bill C-34, 1152-3, 1175-80, 1183-95, 1214-18, 1246-8
- Government Organization (Scientific Activities) bill C-26, 959, 971-2, 976-7, 999
- Immigration bill C-24, 1244, 1248-56
- James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 958-9, 1006-12, 1019-25, 1038-49, 1053-67, 1092-8
- Maritime Code bill C-41, 1313-18, 1319-25
- Petroleum Corporations Monitoring bill S-4, 970-1, 977-8, 985
- Solar Energy Application bill C-309, 759-65, 790-6, 809-11, 845-8

Andras, Hon. Robert, P.C., President of Treasury Board

- Appropriation bill No. 1, 1977 C-44, 574-84
 - Amdts to other legislation through appropriation bills, 575, 576, 580, 581, 582-3
 - Authority of government to meet commitments, 579
 - Dollar items, 575
 - Projection of figures in dollars only, 583-4
 - Statutory items, 579
 - Time schedule for passage of bill, 580
 - Title of bill, confusion in calendar year notation, 575
 - Transfer payments to provinces, 578

Anti-inflation program, 13, 20-21, 26-31, 49

- Air traffic controller's refusal of AIB guidelines and recommendations, 1293-1311
- Business profits, 29
- Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Transport and General Workers, speech of president, 28-29
- Commodity prices, 29
- Detrimental effects of, 20-21
- Employment increase, 29-30
- Government responsibility, 31
- Inflation, statistics re, 27-28
 - Other countries, 28
- Labour-management disputes, 27
- Port of Halifax longshoremen and other employees refusal of AIB guidelines, 64-68

Appendixes

- Banking legislation, rep of Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, see Debates of June 28/77
- Borrowers and depositors protection, rep of Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee on subject matter of Bill C-16, see Debates of July 11/77
- Canada-United States, Inter-Parliamentary Group, Victoria meeting, 1225-42
- Canadian Parliamentarians visit to Mexico, 713-14
- Clerestory of the Senate Chamber, rep of com, 852-61
- Competition Policy, rep of Banking, Trade and Commerce Com, See Debates of July 13/77
- Constitution of Canada, patriation of
 - Correspondence between Prime Minister and Alberta Premier, 69-71
 - Letters from Prime Minister to provincial Premiers and copy of draft resolution respecting the Constitution, 297-303
- Estimates, Manpower Div., Dept. of Manpower and Immigration, rep of review of com recommendations, 512-30

Appendixes - Concluded

- Estimates year ending Mar. 31/77
 - Supplementary (B), rep of com, 217-21
 - Supplementary (C), rep of com, 221
 - Supplementary (D), rep of com, 484-8
- Estimates year ending Mar. 31/78, rep of com, 923-7
- Federal-Provincial Conference of Finance Ministers, Notes for remarks by Federal Finance Minister, 308, 370-3
- Foreign affairs, loans to foreign countries, 1077-91
- Income tax, rep of com on subject matter of Bill C-22, 213-16
- Mexico-Canada Interparliamentary meeting
 - Address by Senator Belisle, 872-3
 - Joint Communiqué of Canadian delegation, 713-14
- National unity, statement by Vancouver Board of Trade, 786
- North Atlantic Assembly, Twenty-second Annual Assembly, Williamsburg, Virginia, see Debates of Feb. 1/77
- Northern affairs, government policy report, 1257-63
 - Northwest Territories, Special Government Representative for Constitutional Development, 1257-58
 - Yukon Territory, constitutional development, 1262-3
- Offshore mineral resources, Federal-Provincial Memorandum of Understanding and Joint Communiqué, 304-05
- Prime Minister Trudeau's address at joint meeting of United States Congress, see Debates of Feb. 22/77
- Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, second report of committee, 315-69
- Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, third report of committee, 694-7

Appropriation bill No. 5, 1976 C-28. 1r, 224; 2r, 225-6, 230-3; 3r, 237-8; r.a., 243

Appropriation bill No. 1, 1977 C-44. 1r, 552-3; 2r, 558-60, 563-6; ref to Committee of the Whole, 566; bill committed to Committee of the Whole, Hon. Alan A. Macnaughton in the Chair, Hon. Robert Andras, President of the Treasury Board, taking part in debate, 574-84; rep without amdt, 584; 3r, 588-9; r.a., 600

Appropriation bill No. 2, 1977 C-45. 1r, 574; 2r, 585-6, 589-91; ref to Committee of the Whole, 591; bill committed to Committee of the Whole, Hon. Alan A. Macnaughton in the Chair, 592-4; rep without amdt, 594; 3r, 594; r.a., 600

Appropriation bill No. 3, 1977 C-58. 1r, 975; 2r, 978, 1012-15; 3r, 1025; r.a., 1031

Argentina

United Nations Water Conference, 587-8

Argue, Hon. HazenAgriculture

Kent County can be Saved, 197-200

Beef industry, 198

Bilingualism, difficulties of French-speaking farmers; enrolment of New Brunswick French-speaking students at Laval University, 199

Conclusions and recommendations of committee, 199-200

Production costs in relation to land, fertilizer, machinery, 199

Reduction in agricultural acreage, 198

Agriculture, Standing Senate Committee

Expenses, 143

Argue, Hon. Hazen - Concluded

Agriculture, Standing Senate Committee - Concluded
Reports

- Beef industry, authorization to publish and distribute report, 1140; report tabled, 1313
- Canadian Wheat Board and Western Grain Stabilization bill C-34, recommendation that bill be not proceeded with, 1152-3, 1175-80, 1183-95, 1214-18, 1247-8
- Kent County can be Saved*, report tabled, 143; discussion, 197-200, 480-3

Terms of reference, 145

Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization bill C-34, 962-4, 1152-3, 1175-80

- Agricultural produce, definition, 1176
- Canadian Wheat Board pooling system, 963-4
- Excerpts from speeches of senators in committee, 1176-7
- Feeds bill amdt by Senate cited, 1178
- Initial payment, 1176
- Marketing of rapeseed and other grains through Board, 964
- Merits of legislation questioned, 963-4
- Necessity of bill, question of, 1176
- Permit book endorsation, 1178
- Voluntary pooling, objections, 1177
- Witnesses invited to appear before committee, 1177, 1179-80

North American Beef Congress, 963

Seal hunt, resolution of US House of Representatives protesting event, 553-4

Senate

- Committee meeting during Senate sitting, 806
- Lack of press coverage, 963

Solar Energy Application bill C-309, 763-4

- Referral of subject matter to com, 763-4

Steuart, Hon. David Gordon, 223

Yuzyk, Hon. Paul, felicitations on degree of Doctor of Laws, University of Saskatchewan, 789-90

Asselin, Hon. Martial, P.C.

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 89-93

Air transport

- Bilingual air communications, 1970 report, question re, 257, 276
- Quebec pilots, bilingualism, 92

Constitution of Canada, 92-93

Economic problems, 90-91

- DREE, assistance to Quebec, 91-92
- Lack of coordination with Canada Manpower, 91-92
- Government objectives, 91
- Housing costs, 91
- IBM, government grant to, 91
- Legislation for alleviation of, 90

Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing bill C-37, 612-15

- Constitution of Canada, report of joint committee, 613

Minority report on behalf of Quebec, 613

Decentralization, 613-14

National unity, 612-15

Parti Québécois, 612, 613

Quebec pilots, French language rights, 612-13

Immigration bill C-24, 1206-08, 1254

- Appeals, 1207-08
- Contributions to social security programs by temporary workers, 1208
- Conviction of crime abroad, 1206
- Deportation orders, 1206, 1207

Asselin, Hon. Martial, P.C. - ConcludedImmigration bill C-24 - Concluded

- League for Human Rights, 1207
- National security, 1207
- Parkdale Community Legal Aid Service, 1206
- Powers of Governor in Council, 1206, 1208, 1254
- Urban Alliance on Race Relations, 1207
- Violation of civil liberties, 1208

James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 682, 717-21, 1009-10

- Injunction filed by Indians to have recognition of rights, 717-18
- Parliamentary oversight of amending agreements, 718-19
- Political problems of agreement, 718
- Rights of native non-signatories, 719-21, 1009-10
 - Letter from M. Narvey, Manitoba University, to Premier Lévesque, 719-30
- Safeguarding of rights of third parties, 719
- Statement of Mount-Royal representative, 718
- Statement of Premier Lévesque re negotiations, 719
- Witnesses appearing before Commons committee, 719, 720

National Capital Region, reconstitution of joint committee, 229

National unity

- Joint Committee on the Constitution, question re consideration of report, 664
- Proposed committee on regional interests, question, 149-50, 641
- Senate participation in debate on, 92, 93, 278

Personality disorders and criminal behaviour, 238-40

- Anthropologist's findings, 239
- Anti-social behaviour and depression, 239-40
- 'Modern Perspective in International Child Psychiatry', 239
- Recommendations of task force on role of services in field of criminal justice, 240
- Research, suggestions re, 240
- Social and family relationships, 239
- Stress during pregnancy, 239
- Violence in society, 238-9

Quebec

- Constitutional crisis, 92-93
- Separatism, 93

Radio-Canada, proposed appearance before Senate committee of CBC President and commentators, 419

Solar Energy Application bill C-309, 845-6

- Incorporation as private institute, 845
- Parliamentary process of bill vs letters patent, question of, 845-6
- Referral of bill to Banking, Trade and Commerce Com, question of, 845-6

Upper Volta visitors, Mr. and Mrs. Abdulaye Dicko, 700

Atlantic provinces

Atlantic Provinces Transportation Program, 772

DREE, 100

East Coast Marine and Ferry Service, 242

Energy, benefits from lower-than-international price of oil, 157

Fisheries, 200-mile zone, 16

Lumber industry, tariff on importation of softwood plywood, effect on Canadian industry, 189-90, 478-80, 556-8

New Brunswick, Kent County can be saved, 143, 197-200, 480-3

Regional disparities, 100-01

Transportation, land, air and sea, regional differences, 201-03, 240-3, 246-9, 396-402, 430-2

Transportation problems, 15-16, 101

User-pay concept, 101

Veterans Affairs Dept. personnel, move to PEI, 99

See names of individual provinces

Attorney General's staff college, change of site from Edmonton to Saskatoon, 1264, 1318

Auditor General

- Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Polysar, 1116
- Crown corporations, auditors for, 1050, 1068
- Employees of Auditor General's office, status of, 1114-15
 - Letter from Chairman of Public Commission, 1115
- Government finances, lack of control of, 1115
- Printing Bureau costs, exposé by Public Accounts Committee, 1068
- Report of Auditor General, examination by Senate committee, 1116-17
- Responsibility of Auditor General, study re, 1049-50
- Senate role in relation to Auditor General's office, 1116
- Submission of reports and estimates to Commons only, 1050, 1116-17
- Value of money concept, 1050

Speakers: Senators

- Barrow, Irvine, 1049-51
- Benidickson, W. M., 1115-16, 1117
- Grosart, Allister, 1114-15, 1116-17
- Walker, David J., 1068

Auditor General bill C-20. 1r, 1032; 2r, 1049-51, 1067-8; ref to com, 1068-9; rep without amdt, 1106; 3r, 1114-17; r.a., 1161

Austin, Hon. Jacob

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 118-20
- British Columbia
 - Confederation, financial contribution of British Columbia, 640
 - Railwest rolling stock facility, 1141
- Canada-United States relations
 - Diversion of water from Lake Michigan, 237, 309, 391, 435-6
 - Question re discussions between US President and Prime Minister of Canada, 391, 435-6
 - Ross Dam, Skagit Valley flooding, 787-9
- Energy
 - Acquisition of oil supplies from Mexico, 651, 770
 - Atlantic provinces, benefits from lower-than-international price of oil, 157
 - Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), proposed increase in prices, 157, 229
 - Petroleum and Natural Gas Administration Act, implementation, 98, 150
- Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline, 1268-71, 1276
 - Alaska Natural Gas Transportation Act (US), 1269
 - Canada-US relations, 1270-1
 - Exchange of reserves, 1271
 - Costs and benefits, 1268
 - Indian land claims, 1276
 - Maritimes, energy supplies and costs, 1271
 - Exploration needs, 1271
 - Oil spills potential, 1268
 - Studies and recommendations:
 - AlCan, 1270
 - Arctic Gas Pipeline, 1269, 1270, 1276
 - Berger Commission, 1269
 - El Paso, 1268
 - Foothills Pipe Lines (Yukon), 1269, 1270
 - Mackenzie Valley route, 1269, 1270

Austin, Hon. Jacob - Continued

- Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline - Concluded
 - US pipelines supplying needs in Canada, 1271
 - Interprovincial Pipeline, 1271
 - Portland Oil Pipeline, 1271
 - Trans-Canada Gas Pipeline, 1271
- Environment, construction of coal-fired power plant in Saskatchewan, US representations re, 1016, 1180
- Grain, provision of rail cars to Peace River, 125-6
- Labour
 - Bank branches as bargaining agents, 976, 1017-18
 - Worker representation on boards of directors of corporations, 279, 376-7
- Mackenzie Valley pipeline
 - Representations from NWT Council re Berger report, 757
 - Study of Berger report by Transport and Communications Committee, 678, 686-7
- Monarchy, The, 118
 - Excerpt from speech of Queen Elizabeth at Olympic Games, 118
- National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions, 778-83, 786
 - British Columbia, 779-80
 - Brief from South Cariboo Labour Council of Williams Lake to federal Liberal caucus, 780
 - British Colonist*, Victoria, article of 1871 re BC joining Confederation, 781
 - Statement by Vancouver Board of Trade, 780, 786
 - Statement of Attorney General in BC Legislature, 781
 - Economic prosperity and future of Canada, 779
 - Prime Minister's statement (Nov. 24/76), 781
 - Quebec separatism, 779-80
 - Misunderstandings, 780
 - Regional grievances, 779
 - Senate role, 779
 - Suggestion that debates be published in documentary form, 779
 - Yukon and Northwest Territories, political development, 781
 - Dene and Inuit, 782-3
 - Native communities and rights, 782-3
 - Northern Frontier, Northern Homeland*, by Mr. Justice Berger, 781-3
- Northern affairs, government policy report, 1182, 1245-6
 - Political residency test, 1246
 - See Appendix to Debates*, 1257-63
- Oil or gas pipeline corridors, Canada-United States, 1165
- Oil transshipments to Pacific coast ports, public hearings re environmental aspects, 308-09, 390-1
- Prairie provinces, drought conditions, 654-5
 - Beef cattle production, 654-5
 - Current situation with respect to water, 654
 - Grain prices, 654
 - Grain quantities on 1977 crop year, 654
 - Prospective conditions for grain growing and agricultural crops, 654
- Rules of the Senate
 - Pecuniary interest of senator in matter ref to com, 910
 - Report re changes in Rules, 910
- Saskatchewan, construction of coal-fired power plant on Poplar River, 1016
- Senate
 - Appointments, question re Hon. Robert Stanfield, 687-8
 - Use of Senate chamber by Commons, request for, 1154
 - Western Canada representation, 120
- Separatism, excerpt from report of meeting of Committee for Western Independence, 119

Austin, Hon. Jacob - Concluded

- Solar Energy Application bill C-309, 726-9, 760-1, 762, 764, 765, 792, 795, 847
 - Citizen* article re, 727
 - Energy crisis, 727
 - Incorporation as private institute, 761
 - Legal aspects, 728
 - Members and organization of institute, 761
 - Non-renewable energy resources, 727
 - Principle of bill, 760-1, 792
 - Referral of subject matter to com, 764, 765, 792
 - Research expenditures, Canada and US, 727, 728; PEI, Manitoba, BC, 727
- Transportation
 - CNR link with Fairbanks, Alaska, 977, 1126
 - Pacific Coast subsidized services, 111, 157-8
 - Pacific Western Air Lines, judgment of Supreme Court of Canada, 436-7, 442-4, 457-8
- Western European Union Assembly, Paris conference, 391-4
 - Assembly functions, 393
 - Cyprus, Greece and Turkey, 403-04
 - Continental shelf in Aegean Sea, 403-04; oil prospecting, 404
 - Defence of Western Europe, 392, 393, 402-04
 - Anti-submarine warfare, 404
 - British Army of the Rhine, 403
 - Canadian contribution, 403, 404
 - Conflicts between US and European nations, 402
 - NATO Pact vs Warsaw Pact, 403
 - Strategic Arms Limitation Talks, 404
 - USSR power, 402, 403, 404
 - Warsaw Pact countries, 402
 - Weapons standardization, 402-03; research in, 402-03
 - Energy supplies, 404-05
 - Oil moving to Western Europe through Mediterranean, 405
 - USSR ships in area of Indian Ocean, 405
 - European Common Market, 393
 - European Parliament, 392-3, 406
 - Helsinki Agreement, 404-06
 - Lebanon, 404
 - Mediterranean problems, 403
 - National unity in Canada, 393
 - Quebec separatism, questions in relation to NATO, 403

Baltic Honorary Consuls, visitors to Senate, 463

Bank Act

See Competition policy, 670-2, 1146-51 and Appendix to Debates of July 13/77

Bank Act and Quebec Savings Banks

- Background of bills related to banking, 731-2
- Collusion among banks, 732
- Consumer loan rates, 732-3
- Dicennial revision, reasons for delay, 675
- Explanatory notes re bill as passed by Commons, lack of, 731
- Extension of date of power to do business, 675, 679
 - Precedents, 675
- Immobility of interest rate on consumer loans, 732
- Personal loans by chartered banks, statistics on, 733
- Statement of Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, 732

Bank Act and Quebec Savings Banks - ConcludedSpeakers: Senators

Benidickson, W. M., 731-3
 Choquette, Lionel, 733
 Flynn, Jacques, 679
 Macnaughton, Alan A., 675-6

Bank and Quebec Savings Banks bill C-39. 1r, 653; 2r, 679, 731-3; 3r, 738; r.a., 941

Banking legislation, 86, 110, 120-1, 122-4, 126-36, 1000-04, 1018-19, 1142-4, see also Debates of June 28/77

Canadian Payments Association, 1000-01, 1002-03

Chartered bank's reserves, 1000, 1001-02

Citicorp, 1003-04

Conflict of interest, resignation of committee members, 122-4, 126-36

Costs of committee study, 126-36

Financial leasing and factoring, 1003

Foreign banks, 1003-04

Incorporation of banks by letters patent, 1004

Pecuniary interest

Excerpt from Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, 135

Excerpt from Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, 134-5

Excerpt from May's Parliamentary Practice, 134

Excerpt from Senate and House of Commons Act, 134

Residential mortgages, 1003

Resumé of discussion on Bank Act (1967), 133

Right of provincial governments to shareholding in new banks, 1000

Speakers: Senators

Connolly, John J., 1143-4
 Croll, David A., 110, 122, 124, 126-30
 Flynn, Jacques, 122-3, 126, 1018, 1142-3
 Greene, John J., 131-2
 Hayden, Salter A., 120-1, 133-6, 1000-04, 1018-19
 Macnaughton, Alan A., 122
 Molson, Hartland de M., 130-1, 132
 Perrault, Raymond J., 122
 Rowe, Frederick William, 132
 Smith, George I., 123-4
 van Roggen, George C., 132, 133
 Walker, David, J., 128, 130

Banking, Trade and Commerce, Standing Senate CommitteeBanking legislation

White Paper on the Revision of Canadian Banking Legislation, motion to authorize com to make study,
 86, 110, 120-1, 122-4, 126-36; agreed, 136

Temporary resignation of certain members of committee, 122-4, 126-36

Competition policy, authorization to examine and report on subject matter of Bill C-42, 670-2

Expenses, 148

Income tax, authorization to examine and report on subject matter of Bill C-22, 143-4

Meetings during Senate adjournments, 156

Meetings during Senate sittings, 173, 193, 276, 471-2, 544, 561, 685, 730, 756, 807, 863, 944, 1016, 1052

Members, 52, 144

Protection of borrowers and depositors, authorization to examine and report on subject matter of Bill
 C-16, 144

Banking, Trade and Commerce, Standing Senate Committee - Concluded

Reports

- Banking legislation, 1000-04, 1018-19, 1142-4, see Appendix to Debates of June 28/77
- Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation bill C-3, rep without amdt, 958
- Canadian and British Insurance Companies, Foreign Insurance Companies bill S-3, rep with amdts, 476, 490-1
- Customs Tariff bill C-15, rep without amdt, 448-9
- Customs Tariff bill C-55, rep without amdt, 787
- Excise Tax bill C-54, rep without amdt, 829
- Export Development bill C-47, rep without amdt, 845
- Farm Improvement Loans, Small Businesses Loans, Fisheries Improvement Loans bill C-48, rep without amdt, 975
- Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing bill C-37, rep without amdt, 624
- Fisheries bill C-38, rep without amdt, 1126
- Income tax, rep on subject matter of Bill C-22, 204, 213-16
- Petroleum Corporation Monitoring bill C-4, rep with amdts, 970-1, 977-8, 985
- Protection of borrowers and depositors, rep on subject matter of Bill C-16, 1106, 1120-5, 1144-51, see Appendix to Debates of July 11/77

Terms of reference, 86, 110, 120, 670

Barrow, Hon. Augustus Irvine

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 13-17
- Anti-inflation program, 13
- Atlantic provinces
 - Fisheries, 200-mile zone, 16
 - Transportation problems, 15-16
- Auditor General bill C-20, 1049-51
 - Crown corporations, auditors for, 1050
 - Independence of office, 1050
 - Responsibilities of Auditor General, study re, 1049-50
 - Special reports to Commons, 1050
 - 'Value of money concept', 1050
- Bilingualism, 13-14
- Excise Tax bill C-21, 312-14, 379
 - Air conditioners for motor vehicles, 313, 379
 - Energy conservation, 312-13
 - Items used in development of energy sources, 313
 - Licensed wholesalers, 313
 - Manufacturer's exemption, 313-14
 - Weight limits of motor vehicles, 313, 379
- Labour disputes and strikes, 16-17
- Nova Scotia
 - Canstel project, Cape Breton Island, 15
 - Electrical energy costs, 14
 - Energy conservation and alternate power sources, 14
 - Oil prices, 14
 - Regional economic disparities, 15
 - Subsidy request, 14-15
- Petroleum Corporations Monitoring bill S-4, 721-2, 752, 765-6, 977-8
 - Authority of minister, 765
 - Crown corporations, 752, 765
 - Default penalty, 752
 - Disclosure of information, 977

Barrow, Hon. Augustus Irvine - *ConcludedPetroleum Corporations Monitoring bill S-4 - *Concluded

Energy crisis, 721-2

Energy Strategy for Canada, 721

Husky Oil Operations Ltd., 978

Penalties for non-compliance, 722

Reporting of financial and statistical information, 721, 722

Return of documents, records, etc., 978

Revenues for further exploration, 765

Statutory form to be completed, 752

Senate role, 13

Small businesses and free enterprise system, 13

Basha, Hon. Michael G. (Resigned Nov. 18/76 - Deceased Nov. 26/76)

Tributes, 168-9

Beef Industry, report of Agriculture Committee

Authorization to publish and distribute report, 1140; report tabled, 1313

Beetz, Hon. Jean, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada

Royal assent, 68, 243, 703, 940, 1161

Belisle, Hon. Rheal

Historic Sites and Monuments bill C-13, 864-5

Board composition and functions, 864

Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories representation, 864

Sites designated, persons and events commemorated, 864

Mexico, Interparliamentary meeting Canada-Mexico, 869-71, 872-3

Address at meeting, 872-3

Canadian-Mexican trade, 870

Energy resources, utilization and research, 870

Foreign investment laws of Mexico, 870

International relations, 870-1

Nuclear weapons, Treaty of Tlatcloclo, 871

Political background of Mexico, 869

Tourism, 870

Old Age Security bill C-35, 536-40

Background of old age pension legislation, 537

Date of proclamation, 538

International reciprocal agreements, 538

Single eligibility requirement, 537-8

Spouses benefits, cessation upon death of receiver, 501-02, 539-40

Statute Law (Metric Conversion) Amendment bill C-23, 1203-05

Acts amended:

Consumer packaging and labelling, 1204

Gas inspection, 1204

Grain, 1204

Oil and gas protection and conservation, 1203

Regional development incentives, 1204

Weights and measures, 1204

Wheat Board, 1203

Difficulty of adapting to new system, 1204

International system, 1205; US, 1205

Metric Commission, 1203

Metric equipment costs, 1204

Price profiteering from new packaging, 1204, 1205

Belisle, Hon. Rheel - Concluded

- Western European Union Assembly, Paris conference, 186-9
 - Armaments control, 187
 - Brussels Treaty Organization, 186-7
 - Civil and military technological and scientific cooperation, 187
 - Europe's dependence on US for protection and economic prosperity, 188
 - Security and defence, 187-8
 - USSR defence expenditures, 188-9
- Yuzyk, Hon. Paul, felicitations on degree of Doctor of Laws, University of Saskatchewan, 790

Bell Canada

- Alexander Graham Bell Museum, 183
- American Telephone and Telegraph Co., 185, 195
- Ancillary and incidental powers, 182
- Capital structure, borrowing powers, 181, 182, 183-4, 195
- Charter amendments, 181, 182
- CRTC, 181, 194-5
- Employees, 182, 184
 - Bell Northern Research Ltd., 182
 - Northern Telecom Ltd., 182
- Letters patent, 182
- Microsystems, 183
- Parliamentary control, 195, 196
- Research projects, 184, 194
- Shareholders and directors, 181, 195

Speakers: Senators

- Buckwold, Sidney L., 197
- Choquette, Lionel, 183
- Deschatelets, Jean-Paul, 181-2, 183, 184, 185, 195-6, 197
- Greene, John J., 185
- Grosart, Allister, 183, 184-6, 194-5, 196, 197
- Hicks, Henry D., 183-4, 186
- McIlraith, George J., 196
- Perrault, Raymond J., 197

Bell Canada bill S-2. 1r, 178; 2r, 181-6, 194-7; ref to com, 197; rep without amdt, 227; 3r, 237

Bell, Hon. Ann Elizabeth

- Criminal Law Amendment bill C-51, 1248
- Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline, 1286-7
 - Natural Resources Committee, reconstitution suggested, 1286-7
- Lumber industry, effect of tariff on importation of softwood plywood, 478-9, 480
 - Investment improvements, 478-9
 - Plywood demonstrations in Japan, 479
 - Problems of high taxes, production and transportation costs, 478, 480
 - Tariff differential Canada-US, 478, 479
 - US imports, 478
 - Wastewood chips, 479
- Senate, welcome to new senators, 240
- Swine influenza, question re confirmed diagnoses in Canada or United States, 125, 150-1

Bell, Hon. Ann Elizabeth - Concluded

- Transportation, land, sea and air, 240-3
 - BC coastal communities, difficulties of, 242-3; Malibu Princess, 242
 - BC ferry service between Victoria and San Francisco, federal financing of, 242
 - BC subsidies, withdrawal of, 242
 - BNA Act provisions re provincial jurisdiction of transportation, 241
 - Canadian Pacific Airlines, 243
 - Competition in rail transports, 241
 - East Coast Marine and Ferry Service, 242
 - Ferry subsidies, Vancouver Province article re, 242
 - Illegal strikes, 243
 - National policy, 241, 242
 - Railway passenger and freight services, abandonment of, 243
 - Shipping between Canadian ports by Canadian vessels, 241
 - Transport Dept. annual report, implementation of recommendations, 241
 - Transport ministry, Vancouver Sun article re, 241

Benidickson, Hon. W. M., P.C.

- Agriculture Committee report, 1153
- Auditor General bill C-20, 1115-16, 1117
 - Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Polysar, 1116
 - Government finances, lack of control of, 1115
 - Senate role in relation to Auditor General's office, 1116
 - Submission of estimates to Commons only, 1116, 1117
- Bank bill and Quebec Savings Banks bill C-39, 731-3
 - Background on bills related to banking, 731-2
 - Collusion among banks, 732
 - Consumer loan rates, 732-3
 - Explanatory notes re bill as passed by Commons, lack of, 731
 - Immobility of interest rate on consumer loans, 732
 - Personal loans by chartered banks, statistics on, 733
 - Statement of Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, 732
- Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization bill C-34, 1153
- Carter, Hon. Chesley W., retirement, 1138
- Committee meetings during adjournments of the Senate, 1160
- Crown corporations, responsibility of ministers and boards of directors, 1114
- Customs Tariff bill C-15, 289-93, 311-12, 450
 - British preferential tariff on compressor sets and electricity generating sets, 290-1
 - Canned herring, 290
 - Foods and other consumer goods, 312
 - Goods produced by prison labour, 291
 - Miscellaneous tariff reductions, 290-1
 - Non-consumer goods, 312
 - Quotas from other countries, 312
 - Scientific items for hospitals and other institutions, 290, 291, 292
 - Scientific Preparations Remission Order, 450
 - Temporary tariff legislation, 290, 311
 - Withholding of temporary reduction of duty, 291
- Employment and Immigration Reorganization bill C-27, 1201-02
- Income Tax bill C-22, 454-5, 456
 - Charitable organizations, 455
 - RRSP, 455
- Legislation, amendments omitted in reprinting of bills, 456, 731
- Regulations and other statutory instruments, 388
- Royal Commission on Concentration of Corporate Power, resignation of Chairman Robert Bryce, 678, 687, 1319
- Senate, parking space for senators' cars, 944

Bilingualism, biculturalism and multiculturalism, 57, 99, 114

Air Canada pilots in Quebec, 92, 257, 268, 276

Tabling of report re, 1114

Education in a Free Society, 56

Multiculturalism, 1285-6

National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions, 698, 707-12, 733-7, 741-4, 752-4, 767-9, 772-4, 778-83, 799-802, 811-13, 825-8, 837-9, 866-9, 914-15, 949-57, 985-8, 1005, 1117-19, 1132-5, 1141-2, 1154-8

School training, 56, 57

Bills, general data

Committee recommendation that Bill C-34 be not proceeded with, 1152-3, 1175-80, 1183-95, 1214-16; m that rep be ref back to com, 1216-17, neg, 1217-18; m that rep with recommendation be adopted, 1218, neg, 1218

Commons amdt to Senate bill S-3, 996-9, 1072-4

Explanatory notes and amdts omitted in reprinting of bills, 456, 731

Omnibus bills

Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization C-34, 887, 939-40, 947-8, 962-5, 1152-3, 1175-80, 1183-95, 1214-18, 1246-8, 1288

Criminal Law C-51, 1162, 1165-7, 1196-7, 1243, 1248, 1288

Income Tax Conventions C-12, 829, 880-2, 900, 932-6, 945, 1031

Miscellaneous Statute Law Amendment C-53, 820, 865-6, 908-09, 928, 945, 1031

Order brought forward, Bill C-49, 1159-60

Private member's public bill for which no petition has been received, 790-1

Excerpt from May's Parliamentary Practice re, 790-1

Votes

Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization bill C-34, 1217, 1218

Immigration bill C-24, 1155-6

James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 1097-8

Solar Energy Application bill C-309, 794, 796

Bills, Numerically, Commons

C-2 Advance Payments for Crops

C-3 Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation

C-4 Canada Lands Surveys

C-5 Currency and Exchange

C-6 Diplomatic and Consular Privileges and Immunities

C-8 Financial Administration and Satisfied Securities

C-9 James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement

C-11 Pension

C-12 Income Tax Conventions

C-13 Historic Sites and Monuments

C-14 Port of Halifax Operations

C-15 Customs Tariff (No. 1)

C-18 Bretton Woods Agreements

C-19 Government Expenditures Restraint

C-20 Auditor General

C-21 Excise Tax (No. 1)

C-22 Income Tax

C-23 Statute Law (Metric Conversion) Amendment

C-24 Immigration

C-25 Canadian Human Rights

C-26 Government Organization (Scientific Activities) 1976

C-27 Employment and Immigration Reorganization

C-28 Appropriation No. 5, 1976

Bills, Numerically, Commons - Concluded

C-34	Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization
C-35	Old Age Security
C-36	Motor Vehicle Safety
C-37	Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing
C-38	Fisheries
C-39	Bank and Quebec Savings Banks
C-41	Maritime Code
C-44	Appropriation No. 1, 1977
C-45	Appropriation No. 2, 1977
C-46	Aeronautics and National Transportation
C-47	Export Development
C-48	Farm Improvements, Small Businesses, Fisheries Improvement Loans
C-49	Canada Pension Plan
C-50	Judges
C-51	Criminal Law Amendment
C-52	Unemployment Insurance Entitlements Adjustment
C-53	Miscellaneous Statute Law Amendment 1977
C-54	Excise Tax (No. 2)
C-55	Customs Tariff (No. 2)
C-58	Appropriation No. 3, 1977
C-63	Air Traffic Control Services Continuation
C-207	Railway
C-256	Criminal Code (counterfeit of rare coins and notes)
C-283	Electoral Boundaries Readjustment (Beauharnois-Salaberry)
C-309	Solar Energy Application
C-392	Electoral Boundaries Readjustment (Brampton-Georgetown)
C-393	Electoral Boundaries Readjustment (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe)
C-394	Electoral Boundaries Readjustment (Huron-Bruce)
C-405	Electoral Boundaries Readjustment (Lethbridge-Foothills)
C-406	Electoral Boundaries Readjustment (Kootenay East-Revelstoke)
C-418	Electoral Boundaries Readjustment (Laval)
C-422	Electoral Boundaries Readjustment (London-Middlesex)
C-427	Electoral Boundaries Readjustment (Blainville-Deux-Montagnes)
C-428	Electoral Boundaries Readjustment (Saint-Jacques)
C-429	Electoral Boundaries Readjustment (Saint-Léonard-Anjou)
C-433	Electoral Boundaries Readjustment (Cochrane)
C-1001	Continental Bank of Canada

Bills, Numerically, Senate

S-1	Railways (pro forma)
S-2	Bell Canada
S-3	Canadian and British Insurance Companies, Foreign Insurance Companies
S-4	Petroleum Corporations Monitoring

Bills, Private and Local, Commons

Continental Bank of Canada C-1001. 1r, 983; 2r, 1025-7; ref to com, 1027-8; rep without amdt, 1032; 3r, 1038; r.a., 1161

Bills, Private and Local, Senate

Bell Canada S-2. 1r, 178; 2r, 181-6, 194-7; ref to com, 197; rep without amdt, 227; 3r, 237

Bills, Private Member's (Public), Commons

Solar Energy Application C-309. 1r, 638; 2r, 726-9, 740-1, 745-7, 759-60, m in amdt that bill be not read second time but that subject matter be ref to com, 760-5; Speaker's ruling on point of order, 790-1; m in amdt neg, 791-4; m to ref bill to com, m in amdt, 794-6, 809-11, 845-8; ref to Banking, Trade and Commerce Com, 848

Bills, Public, Commons

Advance Payments for Crops C-2. 1r, 637; 2r, 643-5, 651-3, 655-6; ref to com, 656; rep without amdt, 673; 3r, 679; r.a., 703

Aeronautics and National Transportation C-46. 1r, 874; 2r, 937, 972-3; ref to com, 973; rep without amdt, 975; 3r, 985; r.a., 1031

Air Traffic Control Services Continuation C-63. 1r, 1293; 2r, 1293-1311; 3r, 1311; r.a., 1311

Appropriation No. 5, 1976 C-28. 1r, 224; 2r, 225-6, 230-3; 3r, 237-8; r.a., 243

Appropriation No. 1, 1977 C-44. 1r, 552-3; 2r, 558-60, 563-6; ref to Committee of the Whole, 566; bill committed to Committee of the Whole, Hon. Alan A. Macnaughton in the Chair, Hon. Robert Andras, President of the Treasury Board, taking part in debate, 574-84; rep without amdt, 584; 3r, 588-9; r.a., 600

Appropriation No. 2, 1977 C-45. 1r, 574; 2r, 585-6, 589-91; ref to Committee of the Whole, 591; bill committed to Committee of the Whole, Hon. Alan A. Macnaughton in the Chair, 592-4; rep without amdt, 594; 3r, 594; r.a., 600

Appropriation No. 3, 1977 C-58. 1r, 975; 2r, 978, 1012-15; 3r, 1025; r.a., 1031

Auditor General C-20. 1r, 1032; 2r, 1049-51, 1067-8; ref to com, 1068-9; rep without amdt, 1106; 3r, 1114-17; r.a., 1161

Bank and Quebec Savings Banks C-39. 1r, 653; 2r, 679, 731-3; 3r, 738; r.a., 941

Bretton Woods Agreements C-18. 1r, 996; 2r, 1028-9, 1102-04; 3r, 1108; r.a., 1161

Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation C-3. 1r, 874; 2r, 900-02; ref to com, 902; rep without amdt, 958; 3r, 971; r.a., 1031

Canada Lands Surveys C-4. 1r, 887; 2r, 948-9, 965-6; 3r, 971; r.a., 1031

Canada Pension Plan C-49. 1r, 1111; 2r, 1111-13, 1127-32; ref to com, 1132; rep without amdt, 1152; 3r, 1159-60; r.a., 1161

Canadian Human Rights C-25. 1r, 820; 2r, 840-4, 876-8, 887-93; ref to com, 893; rep without amdt, 1052; m for 3r, 1098, 1107-08; 3r, 1108; r.a., 1161

Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization C-34. 1r, 887; 2r, 939-40, 947-8, 962-5; ref to com, 965; rep with recommendation that bill be not proceeded with, 1152-3, 1175-80, 1183-95, 1214-16; m that rep be ref back to com, 1216-17, neg, 1217-18; m that rep with recommendation be adopted, 1218, neg, 1218; 3r, 1246-8; r.a., 1288

Criminal Code (counterfeit of rare coins and notes) C-256. 1r, 1036; 2r, 1098-9, 1108-10; ref to com, 1110

Criminal Law Amendment C-51. 1r, 1162; 2r, 1165-7, 1196-7; ref to com, 1197; rep without amdt, 1243; 3r, 1248; r.a., 1288

Currency and Exchange C-5. 1r, 996; 2r, 1029-30, 1069-72; 3r, 1098; r.a., 1161

Customs Tariff (No. 1) C-15. 1r, 273; 2r, 289-93, 309-12; ref to com, 312; rep without amdt, 449-50; 3r, 458; r.a., 462

Customs Tariff (No. 2) C-55. 1r, 715; 2r, 766-7, 775-8; ref to com, 778; rep without amdt, 787; 3r, 809; r.a., 940

Diplomatic and Consular Privileges and Immunities C-6. 1r, 874; 2r, 902-06; ref to com, 906; rep without amdt, 959; 3r, 971; r.a., 1031

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment C-283 (Beauharnois-Salaberry). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment C-427 (Blainville-Deux-Montagnes). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment C-392 (Brampton-Georgetown). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment C-433 (Cochrane). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment C-394 (Huron-Bruce). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment C-406 (Kootenay East-Revelstoke). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161

Bills, Public, Commons - Concluded

- Electoral Boundaries Readjustment C-418 (Laval). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161
- Electoral Boundaries Readjustment C-405 (Lethbridge-Foothills). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161
- Electoral Boundaries Readjustment C-422 (London-Middlesex). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161
- Electoral Boundaries Readjustment C-428 (Saint Jacques). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161
- Electoral Boundaries Readjustment C-429 (Saint Leonard-Anjou). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161
- Electoral Boundaries Readjustment C-393 (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161
- Employment and Immigration Reorganization C-27. 1r, 1163; 2r, 1167-71, 1197-1203; ref to com, 1203; rep without amdt, 1213; 3r, 1246; r.a., 1288
- Excise Tax (No. 1) C-21. 1r, 273; 2r, 312-14, 376-9; ref to com, 379; rep without amdt, 390; 3r, 396; r.a., 462
- Excise Tax (No. 2) C-54. 1r, 738; 2r, 747-9, 796-9; ref to com, 799; rep without amdt, 829; 3r, 840; r.a., 941
- Export Development C-47. 1r, 787; 2r, 821-3, 829-34; ref to com, 834; rep without amdt, 845; 3r, 864; r.a., 941
- Farm Improvement, Small Businesses, Fisheries Improvement Loans C-48. 1r, 887; 2r, 931-2, 945-6; ref to com, 946-7; rep without amdt, 975; 3r, 985; r.a., 1031
- Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing C-37. 1r, 561; 2r, 594-600, 602-18; m to ref bill to Banking, Trade and Commerce Com, 618-20; m in amdt that bill be ref to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Com, neg, 620-2; bill ref to Banking, Trade and Commerce Com, 622; rep without amdt, 624; 3r, 624-8; r.a., 636
- Financial Administration and Satisfied Securities C-8. 1r, 820; 2r, 836-7; 3r, 840; r.a., 941
- Fisheries C-38. 1r, 1016; 2r, 1033-5, 1099-1102; ref to com, 1102; rep without amdt, 1126; 3r, 1141; r.a., 1161
- Government Expenditures Restraint C-19. 1r, 250; 2r, 253-6, 257-65; ref to com, 265; rep without amdt, 267; 3r, 268-70; r.a., 272
- Government Organization (Scientific Activities) 1976 C-26. 1r, 820; 2r, 848-51; 879-80, 893-900; ref to com, 900; rep with amdt, 959, 971-2; 3r, 976-7; Commons agreement to amdt, 999; r.a., 1031
- Historic Sites and Monuments C-13. 1r, 820; 2r, 851, 864-5; 3r, 876; r.a., 941
- Immigration C-24. 1r, 1163; 2r, 1174-5, 1206-11; ref to com, 1211; rep without amdt but with statement re powers of Governor in Council, 1244; m for 3r, 1248-9, m in amdt, 1249-55, neg, 1255-6; 3r, 1256; r.a., 1288
- Income Tax C-22. 1r, 407; 2r, 408-09, 419-25; ref to com, 425; rep without amdt, 451-7; 3r, 458; r.a., 462
- Income Tax Conventions C-21. 1r, 829; 2r, 880-2, 900, 932-6; 3r, 945; r.a., 1031
- James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement C-9. 1r, 673; 2r, 679-82, 717-21, 739-40; ref to com, 740; rep with comments but without amdt, 958-9; m for 3r, 1006-08, m in amdt, 1008-12, 1019-25, 1038-49, 1053-67, 1092-7, m neg, 1097; 3r, 1098; r.a., 1161
- Judges C-50. 1r, 787; 2r, 823-5, 834-6, 882-6; ref to com, 886; rep without amdt, 928; 3r, 945; r.a., 1031
- Maritime Code C-41. 1r, 677; 2r, 701-03, 722-6; ref to com, 726; rep with amdts, 1313-18, 1319-25; 3r, 1325-6
- Miscellaneous Statute Law Amendment 1977 C-53. 1r, 820; 2r, 865-6, 908-09; ref to com, 909; rep without amdt, 928; 3r, 945; r.a., 1031
- Motor Vehicle Safety C-36. 1r, 874; 2r, 906-08, 913-14; 3r, 930; r.a., 941
- Old Age Security C-35. 1r, 489; 2r, 499-504, 536-40; ref to com, 540; rep without amdt, 561; 3r, 574; r.a., 600
- Pension C-11. 1r, 637-8; 2r, 645-6, 665-9; ref to com, 669; rep without amdt, 677-8; 3r, 678; r.a., 703
- Port of Halifax Operations C-14. 1r, 64; 2r, 64-67; 3r, 67; r.a., 68
- Railway C-207. 1r, 704; 2r, 731, 771-2; 3r, 775; r.a., 941
- Solar Energy Application C-309. 1r, 638; 2r, 726-9, 740-1, 745-7, 759-60; m in amdt that bill be not read second time but that subject matter be ref to com, 760-5; Speakers's ruling on point of order, 790-1; m in amdt neg, 791-4; m to ref bill to com, m in amdt, 794-6, 809-11, 845-8; ref to Banking, Trade and Commerce Com, 848
- Statute Law (Metric Conversion) Amendment C-23. 1r, 1163; 2r, 1171-4, 1203-06; 3r, 1214; r.a., 1288
- Unemployment Insurance Entitlements Adjustment C-52. 1r, 677; 2r, 688-90; 3r, 700-01; r.a., 703

Bills, Public, Senate

- Canadian and British Insurance Companies, Foreign Insurance Companies S-3. 1r, 434; 2r, 458-60, 468-9; ref to com, 469; rep with amdts, 476, 490; 3r, 499; Commons amdts, 996-9, 1072-4; r.a., 1161
- Petroleum Corporations Monitoring S-4. 1r, 700; 2r, 721-2, 749-52, 765-6; ref to com, 766; rep with amdts, 970-1, 977-8, 985; 3r, 1006
- Railways S-1 (pro forma). 1r, 6

Blois, Hon. Frederick M. (Resigned October 12/76)

- Tributes, 72-74

Bonnell, Hon. M. Lorne

- Mexico, Interparliamentary meeting Canada-Mexico, 1104-05
 - Developing countries, economic activity and living standards, 1104-05
 - Discussion subjects, 1104
 - International Economic Cooperation, conference on, 1105
 - International relations, 1104
- Personality disorders and criminal behaviour, 505-06
- Transportation, land, air, sea, regional differences in Canada, 201-03, 396, 430-2
 - Air fare, Charlotte Islands to British Columbia, 431
 - Atlantic provinces, dependence on transportation services, 201-03
 - Federal assistance in relation to regional differences, 201-02
 - Freight rates and freight assistance, 203
 - Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, 201, 431
 - Ice-breaking ferry, 431
 - Shipments of potatoes and other perishables, 431
 - Statement of Hon. Otto Lang to PEI Tourist Assoc. and Restaurant Assoc., 201, 430
 - Subsidies, 202-03; Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, 202-03
 - Tourism, increased ferry rates, 202
 - Commission appointed by federal and Newfoundland governments, 430-1
 - User-pay policy, 201, 430, 431
 - Question, 396

Borrowers and depositors protection, 1220-5, see appendix of July 11/77Bosa, Hon. Peter (Introduced in the Senate Apr. 26/77)

- Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline, 1285-6
 - Yukon Indians and Inuit, preservation of culture, 1285-6
 - Gold rush and Alaska Highway effects, 1286
- Immigration bill C-24, 1211, 1256
- James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 1049
- Multiculturalism, 1256, 1285-6
- National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions, 664, 767-9
 - Bilingualism and biculturalism, 767-8
 - Air pilots' strike, Quebec, 767
 - Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism, 767-8
 - Misunderstandings by Quebecers, 768
 - Multiculturalism, 768
 - Senate public relations, 769
- Railway bill C-207, 731
 - Reactivation of lines, abandonment of lines or expansion, announcement of, 731

Bourget, Hon. Maurice

- James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 679-82, 721, 739-40
 - Agreement between Crees, Inuit, federal and provincial governments, 680-1. 739-40
 - Injunction to stop James Bay project, 680
 - Monetary compensation to Northern Quebec natives, 681

Bourget, Hon. Maurice - Concluded

James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9 - Concluded

Native participation in Territory administration, 681-2

Non-signatory Indians or Inuit rights, 681, 721, 739

Obligations and jurisdiction re native land settlement claims, 680, 740

Quebec Boundaries Extension Act, 680

Maritime Code bill C-41, 1324-5

Senate committee meeting during Senate sitting, 806

Speaker pro tem, 650, 770, 775, 829

Bretton Woods Agreements

Exchange rate system, 1029

Gold, status in exchange between countries, 1029, 1103

International Bank for Construction and Development, 1028

International Monetary Fund, 1028, 1103, 1104

Subscriptions to IMF and World Bank, 1028-9, 1103, 1104

Surveillance powers of IMF, 1029

US currency and gold holdings, 1028

US Monetary and Financial Conference (1944), 1102-03

Excerpt from speech of Secretary Morgenthau, 1102-03

World Bank, 1103, 1104

Speakers: Senators

Everett, Douglas D., 1028-9

Smith, George I., 1102-04

Bretton Woods Agreements bill C-18. 1r, 996; 2r, 1028-9, 1102-04; 3r, 1108; r.a., 1161

British Columbia

Financial contribution to Confederation, 640

Grain, provision of rail cars to Peace River district, question, 125

National unity, 709, 779-8, 786

Oil transshipments to Pacific coast ports, public hearings re environmental aspects, 308-09

Railwest rolling stock facility, question, 1141

Transportation problems

BNA Act provisions re jurisdiction of transportation, 241

Canadian Pacific Airlines, 243

Coastal communities, 242-3; Malibu Princess, 242

Competition in rail transport, 241

Ferry service, Victoria-San Francisco, federal financing of, 242

Province article by Norman Hacking re subsidies, 242

Illegal strikes, 243

Railways, abandonment of passenger and freight services, 243

Transport ministry, Sun article by Paul St. Pierre re, 241

See Transportation by land, air and sea, regional differences, 201-03, 240-3, 246-9, 396-402, 430-2

Buckwold, Hon. Sidney L.

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 32-36

Air Traffic Control Services Continuation bill C-63, 1304-05

Recommendations of Committee on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service, 1304-05

Responsibility of unions in protection of public interest, 1304

Right to strike, 1305

Bell Canada bill S-2, 197

Buckwold, Hon. Sidney L. - Concluded

- Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization bill C-34, 1179, 1180, 1189-90, 1192
 - Endorsation of permit books, 1190
 - Necessity of bill, question of, 1190
 - Rapeseed producers, 1190
- Confederation, separatist appeal to NB French minority, 447
- Diefenbaker, Olive E., the late, 271
- Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service, Special Joint Committee
 - Expenses, 148
- James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 1044
 - Extinguishment of claims, 1044
- Lapointe, Hon. Renaude, Speaker of the Senate, tribute to, 32
- National unity, role of Senate, questions re, 277-8
- Prairie provinces, drought conditions, 674
- Public service, collective bargaining system, 33, 36
 - Illegal strikes, 34-36; penalties for, 35, 36
 - Public Service Staff Relations Board, Chairman Jacob Finkleman, 33
 - Recommendations of Committee on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service, 34
 - Right to strike, 34
- Saccharin, m that Health, Welfare and Science Com inquire into proposed ban on, 623, 630, 631-3, 682-4, 690-2; agreed to, 692
 - Dental caries, 691
 - Diabetics, 691
 - Genetic effects, 633
 - Precautionary measures to be taken by government, 631, 691-2
 - Precipitous action of government in enforcement of ban, 632-3, 691
 - Protests on ban, 691
 - Scientific comments as result of study on ban, 632-3
 - Globe and Mail*, 633
 - International convention of toxicologists, 632
 - Time* magazine, 633
 - United Press* dispatch, Washington, 632
- Saskatchewan, grain crop, 33
- Senate business, 1292
- Steuart, Hon. David Gordon, 223
- Transportation
 - Possibility of air traffic controllers' strike, 1265-6, see 1304-05
- Transportation by land, air and sea, regional differences in Canada, 246-9
 - Crowsnest Pass, 248
 - Freight rates, regional differences, 247
 - Grain shipments, Saskatchewan, 247-8
 - Statement issued by Saskatchewan government, 247-8
 - Rail service in western Canada, Hall Inquiry, 247
 - Snaveley Commission on transportation, 248-9
 - Costs and revenues of moving grain, 248-9
 - Railway costing procedures, 249

Budget Speech

- Accommodation for senators in Senate gallery of Commons, 624

Burchill, Hon. G. Percival (Deceased Aug. 22/77)

Air Canada service during closing of Ottawa airport, 551

Lumber industry

Tariff on importation of softwood plywood, effect on Canadian industry, 189-90

Globe and Mail article 'Dropping Behind Against World Competition', 189

Unemployment in lumber plants, 189-90

US imports, 189

Tributes, 1312-13

Veniot, Hon. Clarence Joseph, the late, 463-4

Cameron, Hon. Donald

Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline, 1271

Prowse, J. Harper, the late, 8

Canada Day

Celebration program, arrangements by National Unity Council, 1005

Parliament Hill celebration, parking for senators' cars, 1033

Canada deposit insurance corporation

Corporation members, 902

Coverage, increase suggested, 902

Debentures or securities payable outside Canada, 901

Deposits, definition of, 901

Expenses of liquidator of member institution, 901

Losses, 901

Premium on insured deposits, 900

Purpose and history of act, 900-01

Quebec plan, 901

Rebates of premiums, 901

Repayment to government of original capital, 901

Speakers: Senators

Macnaughton, Alan A., 900-02

Walker, David J., 902

Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation bill C-3. 1r, 874; 2r, 900-02; ref to com, 902; rep without amdt, 958; 3r, 971; r.a., 1031

Canada lands surveys

Application for commission or certificate, 949

Dominion land surveyor, change of name, 949, 965

Land surveyor's monument, 949

Public lands, 949

Quadrilateral township lands, 949

Torrens system of land registration, 965, 966

Speakers: Senators

Haig, J. Campbell, 965-6

Riley, Daniel, 948-9, 966

Canada Lands Surveys bill C-4. 1r, 887; 2r, 948-9, 965-6; 3r, 971; r.a., 1031

Canada Pension Plan

Administrative amdt, 1113

Background of Plan, 1111

Children's benefits, 1113

Canada Pension Plan - Concluded

Contributions, provincial borrowing of, 1128, 1131
 Contributory period stipulations, 1112
 Drop-out provision, 1112, 1129, 1132
 Equality credits for spouses upon breakup of marriage, 1111-12, 1127-31
 Funding of Plan, 1127-8, 1131
 Ontario power of veto, 1112, 1129-30
 Payments to Advisory Committee members, 1113, 1130, 1132
 Quebec Pension Plan, 1113, 1129
 Recognition of women who work in home, 1130-2
 Retroactivity for late applications, 1112, 1130
 Survivors benefits, 1112

Speakers: Senators

Carter, Chesley W., 1111-13, 1132
 Flynn, Jacques, 1131
 Macdonald, John M., 1130-1
 Smith, George I., 1127-30

Canada Pension Plan bill C-49. 1r, 1111; 2r, 1111-13, 1127-32; ref to com, 1132; rep without amdt, 1152; 3r, 1159-60; r.a., 1161

Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, Victoria meeting, 1213, 1225-42

Automotive trade, 1231-2
 Beaufort Sea, 1228-30, 1237
 Champlain-Richelieu flood control, 1230
 Coastal pollution, 1226-7
 Cross-border workers, 1234-5
 Delegations, Canada and United States, 1225
 Dickey-Lincoln dam project, 1230
 Energy issues and multilateral concerns, 1235-6
 Environmental issues, 1226-31
 Flathead River, water degradation, 1230
 Gas pipeline, 1236
 Great Lakes, 1237
 Non-tariff barriers, 1233
 Oil pipeline, 1236-7
 Remarks at Opening Plenary Session, by Martin O'Connell, M.P., 1239-42
 St. Lawrence Seaway tolls, 1233-4
 Security and cooperation in Europe, 1237
 South Africa, 1237-8
 Tourist trade, 1232-3
 Trade and economic issues, 1231-5
 Trident submarine base, 1227
 Two-hundred mile fishing limit, 1230-1

Speaker: Senator

Lang, Daniel A., 1213, 1225-42

Canada-United States relations

Diversion of water from Lake Michigan, question, 237, 309, 391, 435-6
 Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, 808, 983-4
 Implementation of terms of agreement, 983-4
 Review of agreement, 984
 Pipeline construction, 1270-1, 1273, 1279, 1283-4
 Ross Dam, Skagit Valley flooding, 787-9
 Trade competition, 212

Canada Week

Parliament Hill program, question, 1005, 1318

Canadian and British Insurance Companies, Foreign Insurance Companies

Acquisition costs of life insurance, 459
 Amalgamations, 490
 Assets for deposit by British company to cover Canadian liabilities, 490
 Audit requirements, 460
 Calculation of actuarial reserves, 459, 1073
 Capital and surplus requirements for property and casualty insurance companies, 460, 461
 Conduct of business ancillary to insurance, 460
 Definition of British company, 460
 Investment powers, 460, 490, 1072-3
 Jurisdiction over insurance companies, 468-9
 Excerpt from Revised Statutes (1970), 469
 Question ref to Privy Council, 469
 Reserves, 490
 Shares and changing of values, 490
 Valuation of assets, 459-60, 468, 1073
Speakers: Senators
 Flynn, Jacques, 468-9
 Godfrey, John M., 458-61, 469, 1072-4
 Grosart, Allister, 1073, 1074
 Hayden, Salter A., 476, 490

Canadian and British Insurance Companies, Foreign Insurance Companies bill S-3. 1r, 434; 2r, 458-60, 468-9; ref to com, 469; rep with amdts, 476, 490; 3r, 499; Commons amdts, 996-9, 1072-4; r.a., 1161

Canadian Armed Forces

Participation in and costs of international peacekeeping, question, 143, 285-6
 Retired personnel, alleviation of hardships, question, 971, 984
 Senate Chamber paintings depicting World War I and World War II, 1158, 1219-23
 Canadian achievements and sacrifices in field of battle, 1219-20
 Poetic tributes to Canadians who died in service, 1222

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Accountability to Parliament, 675
 CRTC inquiry into CBC activities, 489, 499, 533-6
 Documentary program The Fifth Estate re McCain Foods, 229-30
 Questions re, 245-6, 280-1, 286, 465-8
 Proposed appearance before Senate Committee of CBC President and commentators, 419
 Radio Canada
 Freedom of information, 414
 Lack of professional ethics in reporting, 414
 Role in promoting national unity, 470
 Salary of former employee, 467-8, 675
 Request for further answer to question, 771, 808-09

Canadian Flag, see Flag, Canadian

Canadian human rights

Appeals, decision of Privacy Commissioner, 1108
 Bill of Rights, 841, 877

Canadian human rights - Concluded

- Canadian identity and the Constitution, excerpts from report of Committee on the Constitution of Canada, 876-7, 878
- Complaints, procedure for dealing with, 843
- Equal pay formula, 842
- Exemptions to right of information, etc., 1108
- Freedom from discrimination, 841-2, 844, 890
- Human Rights Commission, members and powers, 842-3, 877, 891
- Indian women, loss of rights on marriage to white men, 878, 892
- International covenants on human rights, 877
- Labour Code, provisions against discrimination, 841
- Language rights, 878, 884, 891-2
- Ministerial powers, 887-9, 1107-08
- Physically handicapped persons, 892
- Political beliefs discrimination, 888-90, 891
 - Senate appointments, 890
- Privacy Commissioner, 877
- Privileged communications between lawyer and client, 888, 889
- Prohibited grounds of discrimination, 842
- Racism and discrimination, 841-2, 878
- Regulation and guideline, definition of, 888, 889
- Sexual orientation, 891
- Subdelegation on recommendation of Commission, 888
- Tribunal hearings, 889

Speakers: Senators

- Flynn, Jacques, 891, 1107-08
- Forsey, Eugene A., 878, 887-9
- Goldenberg, H. Carl, 840-4, 890-3, 1108
- Greene, John J., 844
- Hicks, Henry D., 890
- Molson, Hartland de M., 844
- Smith, George I., 889-90, 891, 892
- van Roggen, George C., 890
- Yuzyk, Paul, 876-8, 892

Canadian Human Rights bill C-25. 1r, 820; 2r, 840-4, 876-8, 887-93; ref to com, 893; rep without amdt, 1052; m for 3r, 1098, 1107-08; 3r, 1108; r.a., 1161

Canadian Parliamentary Guide, 273-4

- Corrections, time limit for, 273
- Review of contents, suggestion for, 273

Canadian Wheat Board, western grain stabilization

- Administration of Wheat Board operations, 1194-5
- Agricultural produce, definition, 1176
- Canadian Wheat Board pooling system, 963-4, 965, 1177, 1184, 1185
 - Costs and administration of, 1185-6, 1189
- Excerpts from com rep and of speeches of senators in com, 1176-7, 1193-4
- Feeds bill amdt by Senate cited, 1178
- Initial payments guarantee agreement, 939, 1176
- Levies from marketing pools, 939
- Marketing of rapeseed and other grains through Board, 964
- Marketing plans, submission of proposal for, 948

Canadian Wheat Board, western grain stabilization - Concluded

- Marketing pools for producers of rapeseed and other grains, 939, 964
- Merits of legislation questioned, 963-4
- Obligation of producers to complete crop year with pool, 940, 947-8, 964
- Permit book endorsement, 1187, 1190, 1192-3, 1194
- Rapeseed industry, 947, 1189, 1190, 1214-15
 - Markets, 1214-15
 - Prices, 1184, 1215
- Recovery of losses, 939, 964
- Reversal of vote for pooling, possible effect of, 1194
- Selling outside pool, 964, 1184, 1194
- Voluntary pools, 939, 940, 947, 963, 1177, 1184, 1185
- Witnesses invited to appear before committee, 1177, 1179-80, 1184-5, 1191-2, 1216-17

Speakers: Senators

- Argue, Hazen, 962-4, 1152-3, 1175-80
- Benidickson, W. M., 1153
- Buckwold, Sidney L., 1179, 1180, 1189-90, 1192
- Flynn, Jacques, 1153, 1246-7
- Forsey, Eugene A., 1188
- Greene, John J., 1153, 1186, 1188, 1189, 1247
- Grosart, Allister, 1187-8
- Hays, Harry, 1187, 1214-15, 1216
- Molson, Hartland de M., 1184
- Olson, Horace Andrew, 939-40, 964-5, 1183-7, 1216-17
- Perrault, Raymond J., 1188, 1217, 1247
- Sparrow, Herbert O., 1191-4
- Steuart, David G., 1194-5, 1216
- Yuzyk, Paul, 947-8, 1188-9, 1217

Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization bill C-34. 1r, 887; 2r, 939-40, 947-8, 962-5; ref to com, 965; rep with recommendation that bill be not proceeded with, 1152-3, 1175-80, 1183-95, 1214-16; m that rep be ref back to com, 1216-17, neg, 1217-18; m that rep with recommendation be adopted, 1218, neg, 1218; 3r, 1246-8; r.a., 1288

Carter, Hon. Chesley W. (Retired July 13/77)

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 115-18
- Baltic Honorary Consuls, visitors to Senate, 463
- Basha, Hon. Michael G., the late, 168-9
- Canada Pension Plan bill C-49, 1111-13, 1132
 - Administrative amends, 1113
 - Background of Plan, 1111
 - Children's benefits, 1113
 - Contributions, provincial borrowing of, 1131
 - Contributory period stipulations, 1112
 - Drop-out provision, 1112, 1132
 - Equality credits for spouses upon breakup of legal marriage, 1111-12
 - Funding of Plan, 1131
 - Ontario power of veto, 1112
 - Payments to Advisory Committee members, 1113, 1132
 - Quebec Pension Plan, 1113
 - Recognition of women who work in home, 1132
 - Retroactivity for late applications, 1112
 - Survivors benefits, 1112

Carter, Hon. Chesley W. - Continued

- Clerestory of the Senate Chamber, 1158-9
 - Pictures depicting World War I, 1158
 - Traditional dress of Speaker, officials and pages, 1159
 - Unity theme, 1158-9
 - Evidence of Dr. Jacques Monet, Canadian Historical Association, 1159
 - Walls, 1158
 - Windows, 1158
- Confederation, 437-41
 - Newfoundland-Labrador boundaries, 439
 - Boundaries of Canada* (1964), 439
 - Encyclopedia Canadiana*, excerpt re Labrador boundaries, 439
 - Senate role in inquiry into Confederation and separatism, 438-40
 - Defining of democracy, 440
 - Fact finding, 438-9
 - Promotion to counter-ideology, 439
 - Provincial awareness, 440
 - Separatism, 437-41
 - Defence aspects, 439
 - Economic aspects, Citizen article by D. Fullerton, 440
 - Federal responsibility to native peoples, 439
 - Newfoundland, consideration of separatism and possible joining with US (1948-49), 438
 - Other provinces, 438
 - Quebec, 437-9; Parti Quebecois, 438
- Constitution of Canada, 116
- Freedom, erosion of, 116
- Free enterprise and free democracy, 116-17
- Government Expenditures Restraint bill C-19, 255
- Government Organization (Scientific Activities) bill C-26, 848-51, 898, 899, 959, 971, 972, 976-7
 - Act of Creation*, 899
 - Budgets of councils, 850, 899, 976-7
 - Coordination of council granting policies and budgets, 849-50
 - Defence Research Council, 850
 - Dictionary of Canadian Biography*, 848
 - Lobster hatchery research, 899
 - Medical Research Council, 849, 850
 - MIT study, 898
 - National Research Council, 850, 898
 - Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, 849, 850
 - Objectives of councils, 849
 - Separation of granting powers from existing councils, 898
 - Social Sciences and Humanities Council, 849, 850
 - Technology Transfer: Government Laboratories to Manufacturing Industry*, 850
 - University projects, 848, 850-1
 - Report of Professor Symons, 848
- Government policies and plans, 115
 - Excerpt from press release of Chamber of Commerce re, 115
- Health, Welfare and Science Committee
 - Reports
 - Government Organization (Scientific Activities) bill C-26, rep with amdt, 959, 971-2, 976-7
- Helsinki Agreement, motion that Senate support principles of, 962
- Manpower and Immigration Dept., Manpower Division, 136-8

Carter, Hon. Chesley W. - Concluded

National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions, 825-8

Education, 827

Indians, derogatory history teachings re, 827

Indoctrination of political view through media, 827-8

Provincial jurisdiction, 827

Student unemployment, 828

Teacher training, 827

Excerpt of letter from Dr. Paul Campbell (Moral Re-Armament), 828

Human dignity, 826-7, 828

Misunderstandings, 826

Newfoundland, 826

Disappearance of culture, historic sites and monuments, 826

Lack of federal capital, 826

Public debt, 826

Resource limitations, 826

Senate role, 825-6

Pension bill C-11, 645-6, 667-9

Background of pension legislation, 645

Backlog of claims, 646

Categories of pension and percentages granted, 668

Cessation of pension upon death, 668

Correlating of former medical reports with present disability, 669

Entitlement Board, 645

Medical officers of Pension Commission, 668

Newfoundland veterans, 667-8

Pension Commission, 667

Personality disorders and criminal behaviour, 251-2

Background of previous study by committee, 251

Deprivation in background of criminals, 252

Financial aspect of crime, 252

Globe and Mail article re mentally ill babies, 252

Research, suggestions re, 252

Quebec province, area and boundary, 267, 468

Senate business, 268

Social values and luxury spending, 117

Solar Energy Application bill C-309, 792

Referral of subject matter to com, 792

Transportation, 116

Tributes, 1137-9, 1161

Reply, 1139

World hunger, 115

Childhood experiences as causes of criminal behaviour

See Personality disorders and criminal behaviour, 190-2, 206-09, 238-40, 249, 251-2, 265-6, 496-7, 505-06, 547-9, 554-6

Choquette, Hon. Lionel

Bank bill and Quebec Savings Banks bill C-39, 733

Bell Canada bill S-2, 183

Microsystems, 183

Competition policy, 672

Fisheries bill C-38, 1100

Hopkins, E. Russell, the late, former Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel of the Senate, 170-1

Choquette, Hon. Lionel - Concluded

- National unity, 1033
- Parliament, reintroduction of legislation in next session, 757

Citizenship

- Contradictory information emanating from Dept. of Secretary of State, 109
- Statement from Prime Minister's office re the late Lord Thomson, 109

Clerestory of the Senate Chamber, recommendations of committee and discussion on, 878-81, 1158-9, 1218-24

- Artists for renovation projects, 857
- Furnishings, 1136
- Galleries, 980
- Jurisdiction and authority for suggested changes, 853
- Locus of Parliament, 853, 1219
- Pictures depicting World War I, 1158, 1219-23
 - Canadian achievements and sacrifices in field of battle, 1219-20
 - Poetic tributes to Canadians who died in service, 1222
 - Significance of war on Canada's history and industry, 1220-3
- Throne area, 858, 981, 1219
- Unity theme, 1158-9
- Walls, 854-7, 979-80, 1219, 1223
- Windows, 854, 856, 979, 1222

Clerestory of the Senate Chamber, Special Senate Committee

- Appointment, 465, 483
- Members, 532
- Reports
 - First report, 840, 852-61, 978-81, 1135-6, 1158-9, 1218-24
- Terms of reference, 465, 483

Clerk of the Senate

- Receipts and disbursements (1976-77) ref to com, 770

Combines investigation

- See* Competition policy, 670-2, 1146-51 and Appendix to Debates of July 13/77

Commissions, inquiries, etc.

- Berger Inquiry on gas pipeline from western Arctic to southern Canada and continental United States, 1269, 1276, 1277
- Concentration of Corporate Power, 678, 687
- Hall Inquiry on rail service in western Canada, 247
- Lysyk Report on gas pipeline from western Arctic to southern Canada and continental United States, 1272, 1273, 1276-9, 1283
- MacPherson Commission on Transportation, 247, 396-8
- Skeoch-McDonald Commission, report titled Dynamic Change and Accountability in the Canadian Market Economy, 1148
- Snavelly Commission on Transportation, 248-9

Committee of Selection

Appointment, 6

Members, 6

Reports

Standing Committees, members, 51-52; report, as amended, adopted, 84; question re membership, 85

Committee of the Whole

Appropriation bill No. 1, 1977 C-44, Hon. Alan A. Macnaughton in the Chair, Hon. Robert Andras, President of Treasury Board, taking part in debate, 574-84

Appropriation bill No. 2, 1977 C-45, Hon. Alan A. Macnaughton in the Chair, 592-4

Committee on Orders and Customs of the Senate and Privileges of Parliament

Appointment, 6

Committees, general data

Agriculture

Expenses re study of Kent County, 143

Banking, Trade and Commerce

Budget, 756, see Journals

Expenses, five-year period, 128-9

Expenses, special, re study of legislation, 148

Resignation of certain members due to possible conflict of interest, 122-4, 126-36

Committee meetings during Senate sittings, 374-6, 805-07, 1211-12

Committee of the Whole

Appropriation bill C-44, 575-84

Appropriation bill C-45, 592-4

Confederation, special Senate committee proposed, 275, 293-6, 437-41, 444-7, 566-73

Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service

Expenses, special, 148

Foreign Affairs

Expenses re study of Canada-US relations, 124

Health, Welfare and Science

Budget, 673, see Journals

Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration

Organization meeting, 85

Salary revisions, 673

Sub-committee on classifications, 87

Labour disputes, special Senate committee proposed, 1308

Legal and Constitutional Affairs

Expenses, special, re study of Bill S-19, 148

Members, see Journals

National Finance

Expenses re examination of legislation and other matters, 124

National unity, proposed special Senate committee, 149-50

Natural Resources

Reconstitution of committee, suggestion for, 1286-7

Organized crime, proposed joint committee, 912-13

Reading of committee report in English only, 1153

Recommendations of Senate committees accepted by government, 424

Regulations and other Statutory Instruments

Expenses, special, 143

Science Policy

Budget, 673, 756, see Journals

Senate committees role in amending legislation, 1249-55

Committees, Joint, Standing

- Library of Parliament
- Printing of Parliament
- Regulations and other Statutory Instruments
- Restaurant of Parliament
- See Journals for information respecting membership*

Committees, Senate, Special

- Clerestory of the Senate Chamber
- Science Policy
- See Journals for information respecting membership*

Committees, Senate, Standing

- Agriculture
- Banking, Trade and Commerce
- Foreign Affairs
- Health, Welfare and Science
- Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration
- Legal and Constitutional Affairs
- National Finance
- Orders and Customs of the Senate and Privileges of Parliament (Committee of Privileges)
- Rules and Orders
- Selection
- Transport and Communications
- See Journals for information respecting membership*

Commonwealth Parliamentary Association

- Secretary General Sir Robin Vanderfelt, visitor to Senate, 730

Communism

- Euro-communists, 235, 282

Competition policy, com authorized to study subject matter of Bill C-42, 670-2; rep of com, 1146-51

- Action for damages, 1149
- Air travel industry, 1146-7
- Appeals, limitations on, 1148-9
- Civil remedies, mergers and monopolies, 670
- Class actions, 1149-50
- Competition in world and domestic markets, 1150-1
- Competition Policy Advocate, powers of, 1147
- Compulsory licensing re trade marks, 1149
- Conscious parallelism, 1148, 1151
- Dynamic Change and Accountability in the Canadian Market Economy*, report of Skeoch-McDonald Commission, 1148
 - Letter from Dr. Skeoch, 1148
- Joint monopolization, 1148
- National Transportation Act, extract from, 1147
- Regulated industries, 1146-7
- Withdrawal of Bill C-42 and status as white paper, 671-2, 1146

Competition policy - ConcludedSpeaker: Senators

Deschatelets, Jean-Paul, 1151

Ewasew, John, 1149-50

Greene, John J., 1150

Hayden, Salter A., 670, 671-2, 1146-51

*See Appendix to Debates of July 13/77Concentration of Corporate Power, Royal Commission

Resignation of Chairman Robert Bryce, 678, 687

Confederation

Financial contribution of British Columbia, question, 640

Montreal Star report of speech by Senator Forsey, question of privilege, 376

Confederation, proposed special joint committee to examine matters of interest to all Canadians, 275, 293-6,
437-41, 444-7, 566-73

Bilingualism 445-7

Airline pilots, 447

Bigotry and lack of understanding of French and English cultures and aims, 445-6

NB Telephone Company incident, 446

Professional and educational fields, 445-6

Consent of provinces for changes to BNA Act, 567

Exploitation by 'Englishocracy', 445

Flexibility and decentralization in arrangements, 570-2

Globe and Mail article on economic costs of decentralization, 572-3

Jurisdiction in provincial matters, 446-7, 571-2

Cablevision, 446

Communications, 571

Immigration, 571

Licences for buses and trucks, 446; Winner case, 446

Urban affairs, 571

Legality of separation of any province, 566

Minority rights, 447

Montreal Star report of speech by Senator Forsey, question of privilege, 376

National unity, 572

Negotiation problems in event of Quebec separation, 567-70

Boundaries, 568-9

Corridor to link Atlantic provinces to western Canada, 569

Economic questions, 569-70

National assets and debt, 567-8

St. Lawrence Seaway, 567

New Brunswick, 445-7

Acadians, 445; merchant exploitation of, 445

Educational opportunities, 445-6

Moncton University, 445

Program instituted by former Premier Robichaud, 445

Separatist minority, 445

Newfoundland, ownership of Labrador, 293-4, 439, 444-5, 447

Boundaries of Canada (1964), 439

Churchill Falls hydro development, Quebec contract re, 294

Quebec profits, 294

Termination of contract in event of Quebec status as foreign power, 294

Confederation - Concluded

Newfoundland, ownership of Labrador - Concluded

Encyclopedia Canadiana, excerpt re Labrador boundaries, 439

'Power Play in Labrador', article in Globe and Mail, 293

Referral of question to Court of International Justice, requirement of Nfld's consent for, 293-4

Terms of Union, excerpt from BNA Act, 293

Secession by act of Parliament, 566-7

Senate role in inquiry into Confederation and separatism, 438-40

Defining of democracy, 440

Fact finding, 438-9

Promotion to counter-ideology, 439

Provincial awareness, 440

Separatism, 294-5, 447

Communication by land, air or water, 295

Joint parliamentary committee to study matter, suggestion for, 296

Quebec status, 294-5

Questions re assets, obligations, boundaries, communication, currency, etc., 296

Treaty of Paris (1763), 295

Speakers: Senators

Buckwold, Sidney L., 447

Carter, Chesley W., 437-41

Cook, Eric, 275, 293-6

Desruisseaux, Paul, 441

Forsey, Eugene A., 566-73

Riley, Daniel, 444-7

See National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions, 698, 707-12, 733-7, 741-4, 752-4, 767-9, 772-4, 778-83, 799-802, 811-13, 825-8, 837-9, 866-9, 914-15, 949-57, 985-9, 1005-06, 1117-19, 1132-5, 1141-2, 1154-8

Conferences

Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, Victoria meeting, 1213, 1225-42

Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, 813-19

European Parliament, 151-5, 158-62, 173-4

Federal-Provincial Conference of Finance Ministers, 308, 370-3

Federal-Provincial Conference of First Ministers, 173, 181, 193-4, 205-06, 225, 228

Mexico-Canada Interparliamentary meeting, 705-07, 713-14, 869-71, 872-3, 1104-05

North American Beef Congress, 963

North Atlantic Assembly, Williamsburg, Virginia, 233-6, 281-5, see appendix to Debates of Feb. 1/77

United Nations Water Conference, Argentina, 587-8

Western European Union Assembly, Paris conference, 186-9, 391-4

Conflict of interest

Banking legislation, resignation of committee members on discussion of, 122-4, 126-36

Income tax, Bill C-22, question, 143-4

Pecuniary interest

Excerpt from Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, 135

Excerpt from Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, 134-5

Excerpt from May's Parliamentary Practice, 134

Protection of borrowers and depositors, 144

Connolly, Hon. John J., P.C.

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 41-44, 51
- Question of privilege re omission of intended remarks, 51
- Advance Payments for Crops bill C-2, 653
 - Services supplied by organization, 653
- Air Traffic Control Services Continuation bill C-63, 1299
- Appropriation bill No. 1, 1977 C-44, 577
- Banking legislation, 1143-4
- Carter, Hon. Chesley W., retirement, 1138
- Clerestory of the Senate Chamber, recommendations of committee and discussion on, 978-81, 1223-4
 - Artists for renovation project, 857
 - Galleries, 980
 - Jurisdiction and authority for suggested changes, 853
 - Locus of Parliament, 853
 - Significance of war on Canada's history depicted in pictures, 1223
 - Style, composition and treatment for decor, 853-4
 - Throne area, 858
 - Walls and pictures, 854-7, 979-80, 1223
 - Windows, 854, 856, 979, 1222
- Clerestory of the Senate Chamber, Special Senate Committee
 - Appointment, 465, 483
 - Members, 532
 - Report, 840, 852-61, 978-81, 1135-6, 1158-9, 1218-24
 - Terms of reference, 465, 483
- Continental Bank of Canada bill C-1001, 1025-7
- Criminal Code (counterfeit of rare coins and notes) bill C-256, 1098-9, 1109-10
 - Definition of counterfeit money, 1098
 - Hobbies Protection Act, US, 1098
 - Minting of copies of coins of numismatic interest, foreign countries, 1098
 - Offences, 1098-9
- Estimates, transfer payments, 577
- Export Development bill C-47, 821-3, 833-4
 - Borrowers of large amounts, 833
 - Export credits insurance, 822-3
 - Ceiling on, 822-3
 - Increase in Canadian program, 822
 - Guarantees made by Canadians abroad and risks covered, 823
 - Liability of corporation or of government, 823
 - Loans to foreign buyers of Canadian capital goods and services, 821-2, 833-4
 - Default and rescheduling, 834
 - Interest rate, 822, 834
 - Powers of corporation, 821
 - Retained earnings of corporation, 823
 - Statistics on earnings, exports of Canadian GNP, etc., 823
- Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing bill C-37, 599
 - Levelling adjustments, 599
 - Tax collection agreements, 599
- Illness of, 120, 150; return to Senate, 463
- James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 720, 721
- Judges Act and other Acts in Respect of Judicial Matters bill C-50, 884-5
 - Attorney General and Minister of Justice, 884-5
- Lapointe, Hon. Renaude, Speaker of the Senate, tribute to, 42
- Leonard, Hon. Thomas D'Arcy, the late, 755
- Maritime Code bill C-41, 1322

Connolly, Hon. John J., P.C. - Concluded

Olympics

Canadian and International Olympic Committees, 43

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation coverage, 44

Mayor of Montreal and Premier of Quebec, efforts on behalf of Games, 42-43

Record-breaking athletes, 43-44

Withdrawal of African teams, 42

Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip, visit to Canada and United States, 42

Senate, television appearance of senators, 42

Constitution of Canada, 76-78, 92-93, 104-06, 116

Equalization payments, 102-03

Newfoundland, formula for assistance to, 103

Provincial conferences (1968), 102

Provincial veto, 104-05

Quebec, 104-05

Regional disparities, 102

See Confederation,

National unity.

Constitution of Canada, patriation ofCorrespondence between Prime Minister and Premier of Alberta, 63-64; appended to Debates, 69-71

Correspondence from Prime Minister to provincial premiers, 276-7, 280, 287-9, 297-303

Continental Bank of Canada bill C-1001. 1r, 983; 2r, 1025-7; ref to com, 1027-8; rep without amdt, 1032; 3r, 1038; r.a., 1161Cook, Hon. Eric

Basha, Hon. Michael G., the late, 168

Confederation, proposed special joint committee to examine matters of interest to all Canadians, 275, 293-6

Newfoundland, ownership of Labrador, 293-4

Churchill Falls hydro development, Quebec contract re, 294

Quebec profits, 294

Termination of contract in event of Quebec status as foreign power, 294

Excerpt from BNA Act re Terms of Union, 293

'Power Play in Labrador', article in Globe and Mail, 293

Referral of question to Court of International Justice, requirement of Nfld's consent for, 293-4

Separatism, 294-5

Communication by land, air or water, 295

Joint parliamentary committee to study matter, suggestion for, 296

Quebec status, 294-5

Questions re assets, obligations, boundaries, communication, currency, etc., 296

Treaty of Paris (1763), 295

Fisheries bill C-38, 1034-5, 1102

Destruction of fish, 1034

Minister's consultation with provinces, 1034

Peace officers, 1034

Poachers' activities, 1034

Pollution, 1034

Sealing regulations, 1034

Income Tax bill C-22, 408-09

Capital gains on principal residence, 409

Charitable organizations, 409

Child care expenses, 409

Cook, Hon. Eric - *Concluded*Income Tax bill C-22 - Concluded

Exploration expenses, 409

Individual surtax, 408

Registered retirement savings plans, 408-09

Retroactive effect, 409

Small business deduction limits, 409

Social insurance numbers on ownership certificates, 409

Maritime Code bill C-41, 701-03

Administrative and other improvements, 703

Canadian registry, 703

Canadian shipowners N.M. Paterson and Sons, 702

Canadian ships in foreign waters, foreign ships in Canadian waters, 702

Detention of ships, 702

Load lines, 702

National character and status of ship, 703

Offences and penalties, 702

Ownership provisions, 703

National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions, 799-802

Newfoundland and Labrador, 799-801

Economic prospects, 800

Excerpt from speech of Nfld. Finance Minister, 800

Fisheries, 801

Government expenditures, provincial and federal, 800

Hydro and oil potential, 800, 801

Industries, depletion of, 799-800

Labrador Mining and Exploration Company and other private enterprises, 800-01

Social welfare and standard of living benefits, 800

Quebec, question of separatism, 801-02

Economic relationship, 801

Parti Québécois, 802

Problems of negotiation settlement, 801-02

Boundaries, 801-02

National and minority rights, 801

National assets and debt, etc., 801

Transportation and right of access, 801

Terms of separation, 801

Treaty of Paris (1763), 802

Corporate power, Royal Commission on concentration of, 678, 687, 1319Côté, Hon. Jean-Pierre, P.C.

Port of Halifax Operations bill C-14, 67

Cottreau, Hon. Ernest George

National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions, 772-4

Heirs of Lord Durham, report re anglicizing of French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec, 773

Nova Scotia

Acadians, 773-4

Bilingualism, 773

Economic life, 774

Ferry services, 774

Fishing industry, 774

Intermarriage of French and English, 774

Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Strasbourg meeting, 813-19

- Background of Council, 814
- Canadian delegation, 813
- Czechoslovakian refugees, 814
- Estonians imprisoned, 816-17
- Excerpt from speeches of MP Herbert Breau, 815, 819
- Excerpt from speech of Rt. Hon. David Owen, UK, 819
- Excerpt from speech of US Congressman re USSR repressions, 817
- Flow of information, 816
- Helsinki Agreement, implementation of, 813-14
- Humanitarian and other fields, cooperation in, 816
- Hungary invasion, 814, 815
- Imprisonment of Lithuanian girl, 817
- Karlovy Vary Declaration, 815
- Military manoeuvres, advance notification of, 816
- Peaceful settlement of disputes, 815
- Principles on human rights, 815
- Ukrainians in Mordovia, 814, 816
- USSR occupations and ill-treatment of dissidents, 813-17
 - Customs duty on parcels to relatives in USSR, 816
 - Disregard of Helsinki Agreement terms, 815-17
 - Treaty violations, 817
- Warsaw Pact, 816
- Western solidarity re principles of freedom, 818
- Speakers: Senators
 - Rowe, Frederick William, 817
 - Thompson, Andrew, 813-19

Counterfeit of rare coins and notes

- See* Criminal Code (counterfeit of rare coins and notes) bill C-256, 1036, 1098-9

Crime

- Administration of justice and law enforcement, 55
- Organized crime, proposed joint committee to inquire into, question, 912-13
- Personality disorders and criminal behaviour, 190-2, 206-09, 238-40, 249, 251-2, 265-6, 496-7, 505-06, 547-9, 554-6
- Rape, 55

Criminal Code (counterfeit of rare coins and notes)

- Definition of counterfeit money, 1098
- Hobbies Protection Act, US, 1098
- Minting of copies of coins of numismatic interest, foreign countries, 1098
- Offences, 1098-9, 1108, 1109
- Reproduction of original, second edition or second issue, 1109
- Speakers: Senators
 - Connolly, John J., 1098-9, 1109-10
 - Grosart, Allister, 1108-09

Criminal Code (counterfeit of rare coins and notes) bill C-256. 1r, 1036; 2r, 1098-9, 1108-10; ref to com, 1110Criminal law

- Custody and release of inmates, 1166
- Dangerous offenders, 1166-7, 1248

Criminal law - Concluded

- Electronic surveillance, 1166, 1196-7, 1248
 - Admissibility of evidence, 1197
- Firearms control, 1165-6, 1196, 1248
 - Acquisition certificate, 1165
 - Careless handling, 1165
 - Long guns, 1248
 - Possession of firearms during commission of offence, 1166, 1196
 - Seizure of firearms, 1165
 - Weapons other than for sports use, 1165
- Parole Board members, 1166
- Prisons and reformatories, administration of, 1166

Speakers: Senators

- Bell, Ann Elizabeth, 1248
- Flynn, Jacques, 1195-6, 1248
- Godfrey, John M., 1166-7
- McIlraith, George J., 1165-6, 1167

Criminal Law Amendment bill C-51. 1r, 1162; 2r, 1165-7, 1196-7; ref to com, 1197; rep without amdt, 1243; 3r, 1248; r.a., 1288

Croll, Hon. David A.

- Appropriation bill No. 2, 1977 C-45, 593
- Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee
 - Expenses of committee (5 yr. period), 128-9
- Carter, Hon. Chesley W., 1137
- Conflict of interest
 - Resignation of members of BT&C Committee on discussion of banking legislation, 124, 126-30
- Hopkins, E. Russell, the late, former Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel of the Senate, 169-70
- James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 1059-61
 - Extinguishment of claims, 1059-61
 - Quebec undertaking to negotiate, 1060
- Old Age Security bill C-35, 501-04
 - Guaranteed income
 - Excerpt from speech of Health and Welfare Minister, 501-02
 - Recommendations of Poverty Committee, 501-04
 - Poverty line updated, 502
 - Spouse's benefits, cessation upon receiver's death, 501
 - Statistics Canada poverty report, 501-02
- Prowse, Hon. J. Harper, the late, 7-8
- Senate
 - Simultaneous interpretation, 6, 9
 - Special committees, 503-04
- Solar Energy Application bill C-309, 793
 - Expenditures, provision for, 793
 - Parliamentary process of bill vs letters patent, question of, 793
 - Referral of subject matter to com, 793

Crown corporations, responsibility of ministers and boards of directors, 1114

Crown revenues, casual or any other not provided by Parliament, 75, 984, 1038

Currency and exchange

- Assets modification and valuation of Exchange Account, 1030, 1070
- Auditing of account, 1030, 1070-1
- Bretton Woods Agreement and International Monetary Fund Agreement, 1029, 1030, 1069, 1070
- Special drawing rights, 1030, 1069-70
- Value of Canadian dollar, 1071
- Speakers: Senators
 - Grosart, Allister, 1069-72
 - Lang, Daniel A., 1029-30, 1072

Currency and Exchange bill C-5. 1r, 996; 2r, 1029-30, 1069-72; 3r, 1098; r.a., 1161

Customs tariff

- Canned tomato surtax, motion that Senate approve order re, 1287, 1290-2; agreed, 1292
 - Date of extension of surtax and authority for, 1291, 1292
 - GATT provisions in relation to, 1291, 1292
 - Taiwan imports, 1290-1
 - Tomato industry employees, 1290
 - United States imports, 1292

Customs tariff (Bill C-15)

- British preferential tariff on compressor sets and electricity generating sets, 290-1, 311
- Canned herring, 290
- Delay in implementation of legislation, 309-10
- Foods and other consumer goods, 312
- GATT, 310
- Goods produced by prison labour, 291
- Miscellaneous tariff reductions, 290-1
- Non-tariff barriers, 311
- Overruling of Tariff Board decisions, 310
- Quotas from other countries, 312
- Scientific items for hospitals and other institutions, 290, 291, 292, 310, 449-50
- Scientific Preparations Remission Order, 449-50
- Temporary tariff legislation, 290, 311
- Withholding of temporary reduction of duty, 291

Speakers: Senators

- Benidickson, W.M., 289-93, 311-12, 450
- Forsey, Eugene A., 450
- Grosart, Allister, 309-11
- Hayden, Salter A., 449-50
- Hicks, Henry D., 292

Customs Tariff bill (No. 1) C-15. 1r, 273; 2r, 289-93, 309-12; ref to com, 312; rep without amdt, 449-50; 3r, 458; r.a., 462

Customs tariff (Bill C-55)

- Action of Senate committee in rectifying over-correction in legislation, 777, 778
- Agricultural produce, 777, 778
- Cameras, 776-7
- Concessions to Third World countries following international negotiations, 777, 778
- Cost-benefit assessment of legislation, 775-6
- Effect of tariffs on prices and employment, 775-6, 777
- GATT renegotiations, Tokyo Round, 776
- Machinery and equipment, 776

Customs tariff (Bill C-55) - Concluded

Miscellaneous amendments, 766, 776
 Products of interest to developing countries, 766
 Protection vs free trade, 778
 Refined sugar, 766
 Scientific apparatus, preparations for industrial use, 767
 Temporary tariff reductions, 766
 Tropical products, 766, 776

Speakers: Senators

Frith, Royce, 766-7, 778
 Greene, John J., 777, 778
 Grosart, Allister, 775-8

Customs Tariff (No. 2) C-55. 1r, 715; 2r, 766-7, 775-8; ref to com, 778; rep without amdt, 787; 3r, 809; r.a., 940

Cyclamates, 664, 678-9

See Saccharin

Davey, Hon. Keith

Toronto Sun articles re interest in racing business, question of privilege, 942-4

Deaths

Basha, Hon. Michael G., 168-9
 Burchill, Hon. G. Percival (Aug. 22/77)
 Diefenbaker, Olive E., wife of Rt. Hon. John Diefenbaker, 271
 Hopkins, E. Russell, former Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel of the Senate, 169-71
 Petten, Marjorie, mother of Hon. W. J. Petten, 544
 Prowse, Hon. J. Harper, 7-9
 Veniot, Hon. Clarence Joseph, 463-4

Denis, Hon. Azellus, P. C.

Electoral boundaries readjustment bills, 1105
 James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 1046
Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, bilingual format, 181
 Personality disorders and criminal behaviour, 191-2, 252
 Seal hunt protestors, 554

Deschatelets, Hon. Jean-Paul, P.C.

Bell Canada bill S-2, 181-2, 183, 184, 185, 195-6, 197
 American Telephone and Telegraph Company, 195
 Ancillary and incidental powers, 182
 Capital increase, 181-2
 CRTC, 181, 196
 Employment potential, 182
 Letters patent, 182
 Parliamentary control, 195, 196
 Shareholders and directors, 181, 195
 Canada-United States relations, 212
 Clerestory of the Senate Chamber, 981
 Competition policy, 1151
 Conscious parallelism, 1151
 Customs Tariff bill C-15, 292

Deschatelets, Hon. Jean-Paul, P.C. - Concluded

- Estimates year ending Mar. 31/77, supplementary (C), 212
- Labour-intensive projects, 212
- Government Organization (Scientific Activities) bill C-26, 851
- Haiti, assistance to relieve shortage of food and drinking water, 808, 1017
- Income Tax Conventions bill C-12, 936
- National Capital Region, Special Joint Committee, reconstitution of, 193
- Personality disorders and criminal behaviour, 191-2, 266
- Rules of the Senate, suspension of rule re 2r of bill, 184, 185
- Science policy, hiring of personnel for scientific research, 174
- Solar Energy Application bill C-309, 765, 791, 792
 - NRC role, 791
 - Parliamentary process of bill vs letters patent, question of, 791
 - Principle of bill, 791
 - Referral of subject matter to com, 791, 792
 - Research, 791

Desruisseaux, Hon. Paul

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 81-84
- Canadian Armed Forces, international peacekeeping, 143, 285-6
- Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, role in promoting national unity, 470
- Confederation, 441
 - National unity, 441
 - Privy Council, London, decision re territorial rights (1927), 441
 - Quebec-Labrador boundaries, 441
- Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline, 1276-7
 - Economic advantages, 1276
 - Heritage Fund, 1277
 - NWT native people's reaction, 1277
 - Studies and recommendations:
 - Berger Commission, 1276, 1277
 - Lysyk Report, 1276, 1277
 - National Energy Board, 1277
- Foreign affairs, loans to foreign countries, question, 875, 1052-3, 1077-91, 1265
- Government policies in economic areas, 82-83
- Labour relations, effects on Canadian economy, 469-71
- National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions, 914-15
 - Quebec aspirations, 914-15
 - Ban on Canadian history, flag and national anthem, 915
 - Teaching of Marxism in Quebec schools, 915
 - Senate role, 914, 915
- Olympic Games, 83-84
 - Costs and compensation in alleviation of unemployment and welfare payments, 83
 - Mayor Drapeau's role, 83-84
 - Withdrawal of African teams, 83
- Quebec, 470-1
 - Égalité ou Indépendance*, by Daniel Johnson, excerpts from, 470-1
 - Option Quebec*, by Premier Rene Levesque, 471
- Textile industry, 82
- Unemployment, 82

Dickson, Hon. R.G.B., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada

- Royal assent, 462, 635-6, 1287-8, 1311

Diefenbaker, Olive E., the late, wife of Rt. Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, P.C., 271

Diplomatic and consular privileges and immunities

- Common law jurisdictions, 903, 904
- Commonwealth representatives, 904
- Consular convention, 904
- Diplomatic and consular relations, articles re, 903-04
- International law based upon custom, 903
- Provincial jurisdictions, 904, 906
- Quebec legislation, 905
- Reciprocal implementation of provisions, 904
- Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, 903

Speakers: Senators

- Grosart, Allister, 906
- Smith, George I., 904-05
- Thompson, Andrew, 902-04, 905-06

Diplomatic and Consular Privileges and Immunities bill C-6. 1r, 874; 2r, 902-06; ref to com, 906; rep without amdt, 959; 3r, 971; r.a., 1031

Discrimination

See Canadian Human Rights bill C-25, 820, 840-4, 876-8, 887-93, 1052, 1098, 1107-08, 1161

Documents tabled, see Journals of the Senate

Dominican Republic

Income Tax Conventions bill C-12, 829, 880-2, 900, 932-6

Duggan, Hon. James

Ferry service between North Sydney, NS. and Port-aux-Basques, Nfld., 699, 789

Economic conditions and prospects

- DREE, assistance to Quebec, 91-92
- Economic growth of principal nations, Fortune article re, 60
- Government objectives, 91
- Growth, Employment and Price Stability*, study of Canadian economy, 45
- Housing costs, 91
- IBM, government grant to, 91
- Legislation for alleviation of, 90

Economy of Canada, unemployment and failure of government to deal with problem, 919-22

- Canada Works and Young Canada Works programs, 922
- Cape Breton Post article re Statistics Canada report on unemployment, 920
- Costs of welfare and UIC benefits, 921
- Decline in export markets, 921
- Nova Scotia, 920
- Problems of seeking employment, 920, 921
- Regional statistics, 921
- Unemployment record, 920
- Women in work force, 922

Speaker: Senator

Phillips, Orville H., 919-22

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment bill C-283 (Beauharnois-Salaberry). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment bill C-392 (Brampton-Georgetown). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment bill C-393 (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment bill C-394 (Huron-Bruce). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment bill C-405 (Lethbridge-Foothills). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment bill C-406 (Kootenay East-Revelstoke). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment bill C-418 (Laval). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment bill C-422 (London-Middlesex). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment bill C-427 (Blainville-Deux-Montagnes). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment bill C-428 (Saint-Jacques). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment bill C-429 (Saint-Léonard-Anjou). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment bill C-433 (Cochrane). 1r, 1036; 2r, 1105; 3r, 1105; r.a., 1161

Emergency legislation

Air Traffic Control Services Continuation bill C-63, 1293-1311

Port of Halifax Operations bill C-14, 64-68

Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service, Special Joint Committee

Expenses, 148

Employment and immigration reorganization

Atlantic provinces, difficulties of seasonal-work employees, 1198

Employment and Advisory Council, 1167, 1168, 1198, 1202

Regional and local advisory boards, 1168

Employment and Immigration Commission, 1167-8

Field offices, 1168

Improvements in service to the public, 1167

Unemployment insurance program amdts, 1168-9, 1198-9

Appeals by individuals, 1171

Developmental use of fund, 1170, 1171, 1199, 1202

Disincentives to work, 1169

Government contribution to fund, 1199, 1203

Regional extended benefits, 1169

Three-phase benefit structure, 1168-9

Variable entrance requirement, 1169-70, 1200-01, 1203

Work-sharing arrangements, 1170-1, 1202

Unemployment statistics, 1197-1200, 1201

Cape Breton, 1199

Government role in providing employment, 1200-01

Weekend Magazine article, 1199

Speakers: Senators

Benidickson, W.M., 1201-02

Everett, Douglas D., 1198

Forsey, Eugene A., 1201

Hicks, Henry D., 1167-71, 1202-03

Employment and immigration reorganization - *ConcludedSpeakers: Senators - *Concluded

Macdonald, John M., 1199-1201

Phillips, Orville H., 1197-9

Rowe, Frederick William, 1201

Employment and Immigration Reorganization bill C-27. 1r, 1163; 2r, 1167-71, 1197-1203; ref to com, 1203; rep without amdt, 1213; 3r, 1246; r.a., 1288

Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline from western Arctic to southern Canada and continental United States, 1266-87

Administration agency, 1279

Canada's gas reserves, 1277-8, 1280-2

Alberta, 1280, 1281, 1282

Exchange, Canada-US, 1271, 1277-8, 1280, 1281

Economic impact, 1268, 1273, 1274-5, 1276, 1281, 1284

Construction material supplies, 1281

Employment, 1281

Environmental aspects, 1267-8, 1283

Maritimes, energy supplies and costs, 1271

Exploration needs, 1271

Native people's land claims, 1268, 1272, 1273, 1276, 1278, 1280, 1284-5

Excerpt from the National Indian, 1268

Northwest Territories

Gas costs to northerners, 1285

Mackenzie Valley route, 1285

Native people's reaction, 1277

Yellowknife Assembly concerns, 1285

Ontario benefits, 1286

Quebec-Maritime pipeline, 1277, 1280, 1281

Studies and recommendations:

AlCan, 1273, 1274, 1275, 1279

Arctic Gas, 1269, 1270, 1272, 1275, 1276

Berger Commission, 1269, 1276, 1277

El Paso, 1268, 1274

Foothills Pipe Lines (Yukon), 1269, 1270, 1272

Lysyk Report, 1272, 1273, 1276-9, 1283

Mackenzie Valley route, 1269-70, 1274, 1278-9, 1281, 1285

National Energy Board, 1269, 1275-7, 1278

US pipelines supplying needs in Canada:

Interprovincial Pipeline, 1271

Portland Oil Pipeline, 1271

Trans-Canada Gas Pipeline, 1271

Valdez, liquefied natural gas line to US, 1284

Yukon

Council of Yukon Indians, participation as advisers and observers, 1282

Employment for Indians, 1283

Environmental, social and economic disruption, 1273

Heritage Fund, 1272, 1274, 1277

Yukon administration of, 1272

Hydro potential, development needs, 1272

Indian land claims, 1268, 1272, 1273, 1276, 1278, 1280, 1282, 1284-6

Talingets, 1282

Energy - ConcludedSpeakers: Senators

Adams, Willie, 1284-5
 Austin, Jack, 1268-71, 1276
 Bell, Ann Elizabeth, 1286-7
 Bosa, Peter, 1285-6
 Cameron, Donald, 1271
 Desruisseaux, Paul, 1276-7
 Forsey, Eugene A., 1284
 Frith, Royce, 1286
 Greene, John J., 1279-80, 1283-4
 Grosart, Allister, 1267-8
 Lucier, Paul Henry, 1271-3
 Olson, Horace Andrew, 1280-2
 Paterson, Norman McL., 1273
 Perrault, Raymond J., 1266-7
 Smith, George I., 1277-9, 1280
 van Roggen, George C., 1273-6, 1282
 Walker, David J., 1275, 1276
 Williams, Guy, 1282-3, 1284

Energy resources

Acquisition of oil supplies from Mexico, 651, 770
 Atlantic provinces, benefits from lower-than-international price of oil, 157
 Mackenzie Valley pipeline, implications arising from Berger Commission report, 915-19, 1266
 Northern pipeline, 1037, 1183-4, 1266-87
 Nuclear power, 61, 107
 Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), proposed increase in prices, 157, 229
 Petroleum and Natural Gas Administration Act, question re implementation of, 98, 150
 Solar energy application, 638
 Transshipments of oil to Pacific coast ports, 209, 290-1

Environment

Protection of coastal waters and shorelines from oil pollution, 699, 944-5, 1016
 Construction of coal-fired power plant in Saskatchewan, question, 1016
 Oil tankers en route from Alaska to US ports, 944, 945
 Risks caused by oil tankers in area of Strait of Juan de Fuca, 944-5
 Territorial waters, territorial sea, definition of, 944

Eskimos

See Indians, Eskimos and Inuit

Estimates (Appropriation bill C-28)

Alberta, maintenance of domestic oil price, 226
 Assurance that passage of Appropriation bill will not preclude further discussion of estimates, 237-8
 Budgetary and non-budgetary items, 226
 Contracting out payments and fiscal transfers to provinces, 226
 Government expenditures and control of, 231-3
 Auditor General's report, 230-3
 Treasury Board President's report, 232
 Housing, 226
 Indian and Eskimo affairs, 226
 Labour-intensive projects, 226

Estimates (Appropriation bill C-28) - Concluded

Language education, 226
 Local initiatives programs, 226
 Manpower training, 226
 Swine flu immunization, 226

Estimates (Appropriation bill C-44)

Amdts to other legislation through appropriation bills, 565, 575-6, 580-3
 Authority of government to meet commitments, 578-9
 Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, 580
 Dollar items, 564-5, 575, 579, 583
 Government restraints, 564
 Motion to delete items 52b and L116d, 583; defeated, 584
 Projection of figures in dollars only, 583-4
 St. Lawrence Seaway Authority debt, 565, 583, 589
 Statutory items, 579
 Time schedule for passage of bill, 579-80
 Title of bill, confusion in calendar year notation, 575
 Transfer payments, 565, 577-8
 VIA Rail Canada Inc., 565, 583, 588

Estimates (Appropriation bill C-45)

Borrowing authority, 585-6, 590-1, 593
 Communications, 592-3
 External affairs, 593
 Government contingencies, centrally financed programs, student summer and youth employment, 592, 594
 Governor General's warrants, 590
 Great Lakes Pilotage Authority, 592
 Heavy water plant purchase, 592
 Municipal grants, 592, 593
 Regional economic expansion, 592
 Time schedule for passage of bill, 591
 Title of bill, confusion in calendar year notation, 592
 Varying percentages of votes, 585, 590-1

Estimates (Appropriation bill C-58)

Atomic Energy of Canada, 1013-14
 CNR bonds, 1015
 Energy, Mines and Resources, 1013, 1014-15
 Pickering Airport, 1014

Estimates referred to National Finance Committee

Year ending Mar. 31/75, Manpower Div., Dept. of Manpower and Immigration, rep of com, 44-50; authority to review com recommendations, 477; rep of com, 498, 512-30
 Year ending Mar. 31/77, main, 97
 Supplementary (B), 144; rep of com, 209-12, 217-21
 Supplementary (C), 173; rep of com, 209-12, 217-21
 Supplementary (D), 465; rep of com, 477, 484-8, 491, 549-51
 Year ending Mar. 31/78, main, 429; rep of com, 911, 923-7, 937-9, 966-7

Estimates year ending Mar. 31/75, Manpower Div., Dept. Manpower and Immigration, 44-50, 93-95, 136-9, 477, 498, 512-30

Comments on conclusions and recommendations of Senate report, 515-30
 Editorials re report, 47
 Education and training, 46-47, 95, 514

Estimates year ending Mar. 31/75 - Concluded

- Excerpt from statement of Hon. Robert Andras, 47
- NewStart Program, 137
- On-the-job training, 137
- Role as employment agency, 46, 50, 94, 95, 136
- Statement by Minister of Manpower and Immigration, 512-15
 - Divergent views on report, 514-15
 - Employment service, 513-14
 - Job creation, 514
 - Manpower training, 514
- Welfare assistance, 47

Estimates year ending Mar. 31/77, 97

- Supplementary (B) and (C), 209-12, 217-21
 - Dollar items, 211, 218-21
 - Expenditures vs Gross National Product, 210, 217-18
 - Explanation of requirements, 209, 211, 217
 - Housing, 210, 217
 - Indian land claims, 210, 217
 - Labour-intensive projects, 210-11, 212
 - Local initiatives programs, 210, 211, 217
 - Non-discretionary programs, 217
 - Professional and special services, 210, 218
 - Public Service restraints, 210, 218
 - Public Works, 212
 - Supplementaries, decrease in, 210, 217
 - Swine flu immunization, 210, 217
- Supplementary (D), 484-8, 491, 549-51
 - Agriculture, 485
 - Dollar items, 484-5, 491, 550
 - Energy, Mines and Resources, 485-6, 487
 - External Affairs, 486
 - Fiscal transfer payments program, 549-50
 - Government expenditures, inadequate control of, 550
 - Health and Welfare, 486
 - Industry, Trade and Commerce, 487
 - Post Office, 487
 - Public Works, 487
 - Secretary of State, 486
 - Senate role in examination of estimates, 550-1
 - Supply and Services, 486, 487
 - Transport, 486, 488
 - Veterans Affairs, 488

Estimates year ending Mar. 31/78, 911, 923-7, 937-9, 966-7

- Bank of Canada concerns, 938
- Budgetary and non-budgetary estimates by type of authority, 923
- Deficit projected, 938
- Growth, main estimates, 924, 937
- Hiring of consultants, 938
- Loans to corporations and control of spending, 938
- Man-years growth, 924, 937-8
- Monetary policy and expanding budget, 938
- National income and expenditures and their % of GNP by level of government, 927, 938
- Statutory payments in main estimates, 923-4

European Parliament, Luxembourg conference, 151-5, 158-62, 173-4

- Agricultural policy of Community, 152, 159, 160, 162
- Budget, 159
- Conference on international economic cooperation, 152, 159-60
- Control of Commission and Council of Ministers, 151, 152
- Delegates to conference, 151
- Economic Community-Canada Trade Agreement, 152-3, 159-60
 - Access to raw materials, 159
 - Foreign investment in Canada, 160
 - Newsprint, 159
 - Non-tariff barriers, 152, 159
 - Potash, Saskatchewan, 152, 159-60
- Economic disparities, 174
- Election of members to European Parliament, 151, 154, 155, 159, 160
- Energy discussions, 161
- GATT, 152, 153
- Helsinki Agreement, 152
- International political organizations, 173-4
 - Liberal International, 173, 174
- Joint Cooperation Committee, 153, 161
- Political instability, 174
- Problem differences of nations, 174
- Speakers: Senators
 - Smith, George I., 158-61, 162
 - Stanbury, Richard J., 173-4
 - van Roggen, George, 151-5

Everett, Hon. Douglas D.

- Bretton Woods Agreements bill C-18, 1028-9
 - Exchange rate system, 1029
 - Gold, status in exchange between countries, 1029
 - International Bank for Construction and Development, 1028
 - International Monetary Fund, 1028
 - Subscriptions to IMF and World Bank, 1028-9
 - Surveillance powers of IMF, 1029
 - US currency and gold holdings, 1028
- Employment and Immigration Reorganization bill C-27, 1198
- Estimates year ending Mar. 31/75, 44-50
 - Finance Committee study of Canadian economy, Growth, Employment and Price Stability, 45
 - Finance Committee study of Information Canada, 45, 48
 - Finance Committee study of Manpower Div., Dept. Manpower and Immigration, 44-50, 477, 498, 512-30
 - Comments on conclusions and recommendations of Senate report, 515-30
 - Control of training expenditures, 47
 - Editorial comments in various newspapers, 47
 - Excerpt from statement by Hon. Robert Andras re report, 47
 - Expenditures on training and basic education, 47
 - Role as unemployment agency, 46, 50
 - Statement by Minister of Manpower and Immigration, 512-15
 - Divergent views, 514-15
 - Employment service, 513-14
 - Job creation, 514
 - Manpower training, 514
 - Training activities, 46-47
 - Welfare assistance, 47

Everett, Hon. Douglas D. - Continued

- Estimates year ending Mar. 31/77, 97
- Estimates year ending Mar. 31/77, supplementary (B) and (C), 209-12, 217-21
 - Dollar items, 218-21
 - Consumer and Corporate Affairs, 219
 - External Affairs, 219
 - Indian Affairs and Northern Development, 218, 220, 221
 - Industry, Trade and Commerce, 200, 221
 - Justice, 219
 - Labour, 219
 - National Film Board, 220
 - National Health and Welfare, 220
 - National Revenue, 220
 - Public Works, 218
 - Regional Economic Expansion, 220
 - Secretary of State, 218-19, 220
 - Transport, 221
 - Urban Affairs, 219
 - Expenditures vs Gross National Product, 210, 217-18
 - Explanation of requirement, 209, 217
 - Growth, Employment and Price Stability*, 212
 - Housing, 210
 - Indian land claims, 210, 217
 - Labour-intensive projects 210, 211, 212, 222
 - Local Initiatives Program, 210, 211, 217, 222
 - Non-discretionary programs, 217
 - Professional and special services, 210, 218
 - Public Service restraints, 210, 218
 - Public Works, 212
 - Supplementaries, decrease in, 210, 217
- Estimates year ending Mar. 31/77, supplementary (D), 477, 484-8, 491, 549-51
 - Agriculture, 485
 - Dollar items, 484-5, 491, 550
 - Energy, Mines and Resources, 485-6, 487
 - External Affairs, 486
 - Fiscal transfer payments program, 549-50
 - Government expenditures, inadequate control of, 550
 - Health and Welfare, 486
 - Industry, Trade and Commerce, 487
 - Post Office, 487
 - Public Works, 487
 - Secretary of State, 486
 - Senate role in examination of estimates, 550-1
 - Supply and Services, 486, 487
 - Transport, 486, 488
 - Veterans Affairs, 488
- Estimates year ending Mar. 31/78, 911, 923-7, 937-9, 966-7
 - Bank of Canada concerns, 938
 - Budgetary and non-budgetary estimates by type of authority, 923
 - Deficit projected, 938
 - Growth, main estimates, 924, 937
 - Hiring of consultants, 938
 - Loans to crown corporations and control of spending, 938
 - Man-years growth, 924, 937-8
 - Monetary policy and expanding budget, 938

Everett, Hon. Douglas D. - Concluded

Estimates year ending Mar. 31/78 - Concluded

National income and expenditure accounts, % of GNP by level of government, 927, 938

Statutory payments in main estimates, 923-4,

Information Canada, 45, 48

National Finance Committee

Reports

Employment and Immigration Reorganization bill C-27, rep without amdt, 1213

Estimates year ending Mar. 31/75, Manpower Division of Dept. of Manpower and Immigration, 44-50, 93-95, 136-9; report on review of committee recommendations, 498-9, 512-30

Estimates year ending Mar. 31/77

Supplementary (B), 209-12, 217-21

Supplementary (C), 209-12, 221

Supplementary (D), 484-8, 491, 549-51

Estimates year ending Mar. 31/78, 911, 923-7, 937-9, 966-7

Terms of reference, 97

Senate

Committee meeting during Senate sitting, 807

Committee work, role in examination of federal expenditures and estimates, 44-45

Ewasew, Hon. John (Introduced in the Senate Dec. 20/76)

Advance Payments for Crops bill C-2, 652-3

Financial risk to organization, 653

Grains covered for advance payments, 653

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Salary of former employee, request for further answer to question, 771, 808-09

Canadian Press coverage of Senate proceedings and attendance of senators, 375

Carter, Hon. Chesley W., retirement, 1139

Committee meeting during Senate sitting, 375

Competition policy, 1149-50

Class actions, 1149-50

Haiti, assistance during shortages of food and drinkable water, 808, 1017

Duvalier family, 1019

Immigration, persons living in Canada under deportation orders or contrary to court rulings, question, 563, 640, 650-1

James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 1061-2, 1096-7

Extinguishment of claims, 1061-2, 1096

Quebec Boundaries Extension Act, 1061, 1096

Kingsmere residence of the late Prime Minister MacKenzie King, terms of last will and testament or of other documents relating to, 976, 984

Maritime Code bill C-41, 1324

Organized crime, 912-13

Senate

Appointments, 993, 994

Taking of photographs of chamber, 911

Excise tax (Bill C-21)

Air conditioners for motor vehicles, 313, 377, 378, 379, 396

Energy conservation, 312-13, 377-8

Items used in development of energy sources, 313

Licensed wholesalers, 313

Manufacturer's exemption, 313-14, 377

Omnibus aspect of legislation, 377

Weight limits of motor vehicles, 313, 379

Excise tax (Bill C-21) - ConcludedSpeakers: Senators

Barrow, Augustus Irvine, 312-14, 379
 Flynn, Jacques, 378, 396
 Grosart, Allister, 376-8
 Hicks, Henry D., 378

Excise Tax bill (No. 1) C-21. 1r, 273; 2r, 312-14, 376-9; ref to com, 379; rep without amdt, 390; 3r, 396; r.a., 462

Excise tax (Bill C-54)

Aids for handicapped, 749
 Air transportation tickets, 749
 Extension of period for recovery of tax, 747-8
 Flaws in provisions re oil, 748
 Gasoline and diesel fuel, 748
 Retail industry and small manufacturers, 748-9

Speakers: Senators

Godfrey, John Morrow, 747-9, 799
 Grosart, Allister, 796-8
 Manning, Ernest C., 798-9

Excise Tax bill (No. 2) C-54. 1r, 738; 2r, 747-9, 796-9; ref to com, 799; rep of com, 829; 3r, 840; r.a., 941

Export development

By-passing of Parliament by supplementary estimates, 830-1
 Competition from other countries, 830
 Deficit in semi-finished products, 830
 Export credits insurance, 822-3
 Ceiling on, 822
 Increase in Canadian program, 833
 Liability of corporation or of government, 823
 Loans to foreign buyers of Canadian capital goods and services, 821-2, 831-4
 Ceiling, 822
 Countries behind Iron Curtain and satellite countries, 831, 832, 833
 Default and rescheduling, 834
 Interest rate, 822, 832, 834
 Lending and insurance credits to large firms, 831-2
 Powers of corporation, 821
 Retained earnings of corporation, 823
 Statistics on earnings, exports of Canadian GNP, etc., 823

Speakers: Senators

Connolly, John J., 821-3, 833-4
 Flynn, Jacques, 833
 Grosart, Allister, 823, 829-33
 Hayden, Salter A., 845
 Langlois, Léopold, 834
 Perrault, Raymond J., 832, 833

Export Development bill C-47. 1r, 787; 2r, 821-3, 829-34; ref to com, 834; rep without amdt, 845; 3r, 864; r.a., 941

External affairs

See Foreign affairs

Farm improvement, small businesses, fisheries improvement loans

- Costs of business maintenance, 946
- Fisheries, 946
- Interest rate, 931, 946
- Lending period and ceiling on loans, 932
- Loan statistics, 931, 946
- Repayments, 946

Speakers: Senators

- Phillips, Orville H., 945-6
- Stanbury, Richard J., 931-2

Farm Improvements, Small Businesses, Fisheries Improvement Loans bill C-48. 1r, 887; 2r, 931-2, 945-6; ref to com, 946-7; rep without amdt, 975; 3r, 985; r.a., 1031

Federal by-elections, results of, question, 39

Federal-Provincial Conference of Finance Ministers, 308, 370-3

- Decontrol and post-control - Notes for remarks by Finance Minister, 370-3
 - Factors influencing the nature and time of decontrol, 370
 - Methods of decontrol, 371
 - Nature of post-control arrangements, 371-2
- Economic and fiscal outlook, summary of remarks, 373

Federal-Provincial Conference of First Ministers

- Agenda of conference, 225, 228
- Exclusion of press, 225
- Fiscal policy and state of economy, 228
- Patriation of the Constitution, question, 205-06
- Reply from Quebec Premier re, 173, 181, 193-4

Federal-provincial conferences, 114, 173, 181, 193-4, 205-06, 225, 228, 308, 370-3

Federal-provincial fiscal arrangements and established programs financing

- Constitution of Canada, report of joint committee, 613
 - Minority report on behalf of Quebec, 613
- Decentralization, 607, 613-14
- Discretionary powers of minister, 615, 617-18
- Equalization formula, 595-6, 607-08, 611-12, 626-7
 - Provincial distributions per capita, 596
- Established programs financing, 597-8, 617
- Fiscal stabilization programs, 596
- Hospital insurance, medicare, health care programs, 595, 597, 598, 611, 626
- Legislation, draftsmanship questioned, 602-05, 616
- Levelling adjustments, 598-9, 607
- Natural resource revenues, 596-7
 - Ceiling on, 596
- National unity, 612-15
 - Parti Québécois, 612, 613
 - Quebec pilots, French language rights, 612-13
- Post-secondary education and health programs, 598, 608-09, 611, 617
 - Flexibility in use of funds, 608-09
 - Policy discussions, 609
 - Projections to 1981/82, 608
- Provincial agreements, 600, 605-06, 610-11, 617, 626

Federal-provincial fiscal arrangements and established programs financing - Concluded

Provincial enterprises, influence on equalization entitlement, 596

Provincial jurisdiction and responsibility, 626

Provincial tax revenue guarantee payments, 597

Quebec, 597

Reciprocal tax agreements with provinces, 598, 599-600, 617

Referral of bill to appropriate committee, 618-22

Regulations and recovery, 598

Tax abatement, 598

Transfer payments in respect of income tax, 597, 611

Indexing, question of, 611

Speakers: Senators

Asselin, Martial, 612-15

Connolly, John J., 599

Flynn, Jacques, 617, 619, 620, 624-7, 628

Forsey, Eugene A., 615-16, 618, 622

Grosart, Allister, 619-20

Hicks, Henry D., 608-09

Langlois, Léopold, 618, 619

Neiman, Joan, 620

Perrault, Raymond J., 620, 621, 627-8

Phillips, Orville H., 609-12, 620

Smith, George I., 598, 599, 600, 602-08, 618, 619, 621-2 628-9

Thompson, Andrew E., 594-600, 616-18

Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing bill C-37. 1r, 561; 2r, 594-600, 602-18; m to ref bill to Banking, Trade and Commerce Com, 618-20; m in amdt that bill be ref to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Com, 620-2, neg, 622; bill ref to Banking, Trade and Commerce Com, 622; rep without amdt, 624; 3r, 624-8; r.a., 636

Felicitations

Senators, new

Marchand, Hon. Jean, P.C., 223-4

Steuart, Hon. David Gordon, 223-4

Sullivan, Hon. Joseph A., election as Fellow Emeritus of American Otological Society, 638

Williams, Hon. Guy, Doctor of Laws, Simon Fraser University, 790

Yaremko, Hon. John, Honorary Doctorate in Political Science, 151

Yuzyk, Hon. Paul, Doctor of Laws, University of Saskatchewan, 789-90

See also Tributes

Finance Committee

See National Finance, Standing Senate Committee

Financial Administration Act

Crown corporations not subject to audit, question, 674, 715-17, 770-1

Agency crown corporations audited by Auditor General, 716

Crown corporations audited privately, 716-17

Departmental crown corporations audited by Auditor General, 715-16

Proprietary crown corporations audited by Auditor General, 716

Financial administration and satisfied securities

Discharge granted to Indian, 836-7

Discharge of securities taken in form of liens, etc., 836

Financial administration and satisfied securities - *ConcludedSpeakers: Senators

McElman, Charles, 836, 837

Walker, David A., 836-7

Financial Administration and Satisfied Securities bill C-8. 1r, 820; 2r, 836-7; 3r, 840; r.a., 941Fisheries, violations of coastal jurisdiction, 674, 758Fisheries (Bill C-38)

Budworm spray program, effect of salmon run, 1101

Decrease in fishery officers, 1101

Destruction of fish, 1034, 1100

Powers of minister re, 1100

Marine plants, licence for harvesting of, 1101

Minister's consultation with provinces, 1034, 1101

Peace officers, 1034, 1101

Poachers, 1034, 1099, 1100

Pollution, 1034, 1100-01

Production, 1099

Sealing regulations, 1034

Speakers: Senators

Choquette, Lionel, 1100

Cook, Eric, 1003-05, 1102

Phillips, Orville H., 1099-1101

Fisheries bill C-38. 1r, 1016; 2r, 1033-5, 1099-1102; ref to com, 1102; rep without amdt, 1126; 3r, 1141; r.a., 1161Flag, Canadian

Distribution of flags and lapel pins to members of Parliament, 407-08, 422, 457-8, 588

Flynn, Hon. Jacques, P.C., Leader of the Opposition in the Senate

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 19-21, 22-24

Aeronautics and National Transportation bill C-46, 972-3

Canadian Transport Commission authority, 973

Control of airlines by federal-provincial governments, 973

Pacific Western Airlines, 972

Air Traffic Control Services Continuation bill C-63, 1295-9, 1301, 1311

Anti-Inflation Board guidelines and recommendations, 1297

Economic consequences of CATCA strike, 1298

Rates of pay, reconsideration by arbitrator, 1297

Reclassifications, 1296, 1297

Right to strike and CATCA, 1296

Irresponsibility in use of power, 1296

Right to strike and the government, 1296-7, 1299

Government negotiations, 1296-7

Right to strike, Parliament and the public, 1296, 1298

Prevention of strikes by order in council, 1298-9

Air transportation, bilingual air communications, 1970 report, question, 268

Anti-inflation program, detrimental effects of, 20-21

Appropriation bill No. 1, 1977 C-44, 552, 553, 574, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 582, 584

Appropriation bill No. 2, 1977 C-45, 589-91, 592, 593

Argentina, United Nations Water Conference, 545, 587, 588

Bank and Quebec Savings Banks bill C-39, 679

Extension of date of power to do business, 679

Flynn, Hon. Jacques, P.C. - Continued

- Banking legislation, 122-3, 126, 1018, 1142-3
- Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee
 - Banking legislation, com study of, 122-3, 126
 - Temporary resignation of certain members of committee, 123, 124
- Basha, Hon. Michael G., the late, 168
- Bilingualism, 23, 268
- Canada Pension Plan bill C-49, 1131
- Canada-United States relations, agenda for discussions between US President and Prime Minister of Canada, 391
- Canada-Venezuela relations, 390
- Canadian and British Insurance Companies, Foreign Insurance Companies bill S-3, 468-9
 - Jurisdiction over insurance companies, 468-9
 - Excerpt from Revised Statutes (1970), 469
 - Question ref to Privy Council, 469
 - Valuation of assets, 468
- Canadian Human Rights bill C-25, 891, 1107-08
 - Appeals, decision of Privacy Commissioner, 1108
 - Exemptions to right of information, etc., 1108
 - Ministerial discretion, 1107-08
- Canadian Parliamentary Guide, suggestion for review of contents, 273
- Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization bill C-34, 1153, 1246-7
- Carter, Hon. Chesley W., retirement, 1137-8
- Committee report, reading of English version only, question, 1153
- Competition policy, 670-1, 672
 - Withdrawal of Bill C-42, status as white paper, 671
- Conflict of interest
 - Income Tax bill C-22, 143, 144
 - Protection of borrowers and depositors, question re Bill C-16, 144
 - Resignation of members of Banking Trade and Commerce Committee upon discussion of banking legislation, 122-3
- Constitution of Canada
 - Correspondence from Prime Minister to provincial premiers, 276, 277, 279, 280, see 287-9, 297-303
- Criminal Law Amendment bill C-51, 1195-6, 1248
 - Dangerous offenders, 1248
 - Electronic surveillance, 1196-7
 - Admissibility of evidence, 1196
 - Firearms control, 1196, 1248
 - Long guns, 1248
 - Possession of firearms during commission of offence, 1196
- Diefenbaker, Olive E., the late, 271
- Economic facts related to government policies, 20
- Electoral boundaries readjustment bills, 1105
- Estimates (Appropriation bill C-44)
 - Amdts to other legislation through appropriation bills, 581, 582
 - Authority to meet commitments, 578, 579
 - Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, 580
 - Statutory items, 579
 - Title of bill, confusion in calendar year notation, 575
 - Transfer payments to provinces, 577, 578
- Estimates (Appropriation bill C-45)
 - Borrowing authority, 590, 593
 - Governor General's warrants, 590
 - Time schedule for passage of bill, 591
 - Varying percentages of votes, question re, 590

Flynn, Hon. Jacques, P.C. - Continued

- Estimates year ending Mar. 31/77, supplementary (D), 549-51
 - Dollar items, 550
 - Fiscal transfer payments program, 549-50
 - Government expenditures, inadequate control of, 550
 - Senate role in examination of estimates, 550-1
- Estimates year ending Mar. 31/78, 966-7
- Excise Tax bill C-21, 378, 396
 - Air conditioners, 378, 396
- Export Development bill C-47, 833
- Federal by-elections results, question, 39
- Federal-Provincial Conference of Finance Ministers, 308
- Federal-Provincial Conference of First Ministers
 - Agenda of conference, 225, 228
 - Exclusion of press, 225
 - Reply from Quebec Premier re, question, 173, 181, 193-4
- Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing bill C-37, 617, 619, 620, 621, 622, 624-7, 628
 - Equalization formula, 625-7
 - Hospital care, medicare, post-secondary education, 626
 - Jurisdiction and responsibilities of provinces, 626
 - Provincial agreements, 617, 626
 - Referral of bill to appropriate committee, 619, 620, 621
 - Motion to amend m to ref bill to Banking, Trade and Commerce Com, 620, 621, 622; neg, 622
- Flag, Canadian, distribution to members of Parliament, 407-08, 442
- Government Expenditures Restraint bill C-19, 253, 256, 257-61, 264, 265, 268-9, 270
 - Auditor General's statements re government expenditures and control of, 258, 260
 - Suggestion re appointment of comptroller general, 258, 260
 - CBC, Air Canada, CNR, Atomic Energy of Canada, potential for restraints, 260
 - Glassco Commission recommendations, lack of implementation of, 258
 - Government expenditures, growth limit to 14%, 258, 260-1
 - Control of, 260-1
 - Prolongation of debate in the other place, 268
- Reduction in expenditure commitments, 257-61, 265, 269
 - Adult occupational training, 258, 269
 - Company of Young Canadians, 259, 269
 - Crown corporations, 257, 258
 - Family allowances, 256, 259, 265, 269
 - Industrial research development, 259
 - Information Canada, 259, 269
 - Public Service, 257
 - Salaries of judges, 257
 - Transportation subsidies, 260
 - Western grain stabilization, 259-60, 269
- Suggestions re imposing of new regulations, from Canadian Economic Policy Committee, C. D. Howe
 - Research Institute and Fraser Institute, 260
- Government spending, 21, 22
- Immigration bill C-24, 1249, m to amend bill, 1249-55, neg, 1255-6
 - Powers of Governor in Council, 1249
 - Senate committee role in amending legislation, 1249, 1254-5
- Income Tax bill C-22, 143, 144, 422-3, 425
 - Conflict of interest, question re, 143, 144
 - Hayden formula for committee study of legislation, 423
 - Question re possibility of amdt to clause 75 in Committee of the Whole, 425
 - Recommendation of committee, non-acceptance by Commons, 422
 - Social insurance numbers, use on ownership certificates, 423

Flynn, Hon. Jacques, P.C. - Continued

- James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 1006-08, 1010, 1021, 1022, 1048, 1049, 1092-6, 1097
 - Excerpt from com report, 1006
 - Extinguishment of claims, 1007-08, 1092-6
 - Quebec undertaking to negotiate, 1008
- Judges Act and other Acts in respect of Judicial Matters bill C-50, 834-6
 - Additional appointments of judges, 835
 - Commissioner for Federal Judicial Affairs, 835-6
 - Salaries, 835
 - Workload of courts, 835
- Labour-management relations, 24
- Lapointe, Hon. Renaude, tribute to, 19-20
- Lefrançois, Hon. J. E., resignation from the Senate, 141
- Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, meeting during Senate sitting, 1211
- Leonard, Hon. Thomas D'Arcy, the late, 755
- Mackenzie Valley pipeline, Berger Commission report, 686, 687
- Marchand, Hon. Jean, 223-4
- National unity
 - Proposed committee on regional interests, 149
 - Role of Senate, 278, 279
- Northern pipeline, National Energy Board decision, 1037
- Organized crime, 912
- Pacific Western Air Lines, judgment of Supreme Court of Canada, 443, 444
- Parliament, prolongation of session, 23
- Private enterprise, 23
- Protection of borrowers and depositors, (Bill C-16), 144, 1144-5
 - Committee work on subject matter, 1144-5
 - Conflict of interest in bill, question re, 144
 - Federal-provincial authority, question of, 1145
- Prowse, Hon. J. Harper, the late, 7
- Radio-Canada, proposed appearance before Senate Committee of CBC President and commentators, 419
- Regulations and other statutory instruments, 692-3, 911, 1030-1
 - Confidentiality of lawyer-client relationship re commenting on certain regulations, 693
 - Conflict of interest of minister, possibility of, 693
 - Counsel general for continuous review of regulations, suggestion for appointment, 693
 - Subordinate legislation, 692-3
- Rules of the Senate
 - Comment upon result of vote, 1247
 - Point of order re reading of committee report in English only, 1153
 - Printing or publishing of anything relating to the proceedings of the Senate, 279, 280, 288
 - Referral of Bill C-37 to appropriate committee, 619, 620, 621
- Senate
 - Business, 97, 156, 181, 245, 267, 268, 757, 864, 1033, 1106, 1140, 1162, 1292
 - Committee work, 23, 1144-5
 - Methods for dealing with legislation, 1144-5
 - Taking of photographs of Senate Chamber, 968
 - Vacancies, 20
- Senate, appointment of senators, 659-63
 - Alberta Senate appointments, article by Paul Jackson, 661
 - Canadian Press report re opposition representation, 661
 - Discussions and correspondence with Prime Minister and Senate government leader, 659-62
 - Political imbalance in appointments, 659, 662
 - Prime Minister's comments during 1974 Throne Speech and at press conference, 660, 662
 - Requirement for opposition to submit names to Prime Minister, 660, 661
 - Voluntary retirement, 661-2

Flynn, Hon. Jacques, P.C. - Concluded

- Solar Energy Application bill C-309, 747, 759, 760, 762, 763, 764-5, 795, 796, 846
- Draftmanship of bill, 746, 759
- Referral of bill to Banking, Trade and Commerce Com, m in amdt, 795, 796
- Referral of subject matter to com, 762
- Steuart, Hon. David Gordon, 223
- Unemployment, 20
- Unemployment Insurance Entitlements Adjustment bill C-52, 690, 700-01
 - Delay in passage of bill, 700-01
 - Extract from Bill C-27, 690, 700
 - Termination of claims for persons 65 yrs. and over, 700
- USSR delegation, visitors to the Senate, 21
- Wheat, crop year start, question, 1182

Foreign affairs

- Argentina, United Nations Water Conference, 587-8
- Arrest of Soviet dissidents, motion to convey message of concern to government of Soviet Union, 428-9; agreed, 429
- Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, Victoria meeting, 1213, 1225-42
- Canada-United States relations, 86, 124, 391
 - Agenda for discussions between US President and Prime Minister of Canada, 391
- Canada-Venezuela relations, 390
- Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Strasbourg meeting, 813-19
- European Parliament, visit of Canadian Parliamentarians to, 151-5, 158-62, 173-4
- Haiti, assistance to, 808
- Helsinki Agreement
 - Customs duty on gifts to relatives in USSR, 745, 808
 - Discussions at European Parliament, Luxembourg Conference, 152
 - Discussions at North Atlantic Assembly, Williamsburg Conference, 282, 283-4, 475
 - Human, cultural, educational and information obligations, implementation of, 282, 283-4
 - Implementation of, question, 704-05, 930
 - Interpretations by different nations, 475
 - Printed information, distribution of, 715
 - Review Conference, Canadian delegation to, 1004-05
- Holy Land Commissioner, Reverend Father George Germain, visitor to Senate, 86
- Ireland, efforts to promote understanding and reconciliation, 126-7
- Loans to foreign countries, question, 875, 1052-3, 1077-91, 1265
- Mexico, visit of Canadian Parliamentarians, 705-07, 713-14, 869-71, 872-3
- North Atlantic Assembly Conference, Williamsburg, Virginia, 233-6, 281-5, 473-7, 491-6, 540-3, 545-7; see appendix to Debates of Feb. 1/77
- Nuclear supplies, negotiations with other countries, 686, 959-60
- Nuclear weapons, supply of CANDU reactors to Rumania, 960
- Oil or gas pipeline corridors, Canada-United States, 1165
- Seal hunt, resolution of US House of Representatives protesting event, 553-4
- Sengalese Parliament and International Association of French-speaking Parliaments, member Mr. Christian Valentin, visitor to Senate, 189
- USSR delegation, visitors to Senate, 21
- Western European Union Assembly, Paris conference, 186-9, 391-4

Foreign Affairs, Standing Senate Committee

- Canada-United States relations, com authorized to make study, 86
- Expenses re study of Canada-United States relations, 124
- Meetings during Senate sittings, 205, 928-9, 1213

Foreign Affairs, Standing Senate Committee - Concluded

Reports

Immigration bill C-24, rep without amdt but with statement re powers of Governor in Council, 1244, 1248-56

Terms of reference, 86

Forestry, see Lumber industryForsey, Hon. Eugene A.

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 103-10

Air Traffic Control Services Continuation bill C-63, 1303-04, 1308, 1310

Anti-Inflation Board guidelines and recommendations, 1303, 1310

Emergency legislation precedents, 1303

Free collective bargaining, non-existence of, 1303-04

NDP proposal for amdt to bill, 1303, 1308

Railway and other strikes in essential services, 1303-04

Third party negotiations, 1304

Union leaders and government conflict, 1303

Appropriation bill No. 1, 1977 C-44, 576, 582, 583

Bureaucracy of government, 108-09

Canadian Armed Forces, international peacekeeping, 286

Canadian Human Rights bill C-25, 878, 887-9

Ministerial powers, 887-9

Privileged communications between lawyer and client, 888, 889

Regulation and guideline, definition of, 888, 889

Subdelegation on recommendation of Commission, 888

Tribunal hearings, 889

Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization bill C-34, 1188

Citizenship

Contradictory information emanating from Dept. of Secretary of State, 109

Statement from Prime Minister's office re the late Lord Thomson, 109

Confederation, Montreal Star report of speech to Canadian Club, question of privilege, 376

Confederation, proposed special joint committee to examine matters of mutual interest to all Canadians, 566-73

Consent of provinces to changes to BNA Act, 567

Flexibility and decentralization in arrangements, 570-2

Globe and Mail article on economic costs of decentralization, 572-3

Jurisdiction of provincial legislatures, 571-2

Communications, 571

Immigration, 571

Urban affairs, 571

Legality of separation of any province, 566

National unity, 572

Negotiation problems in event of Quebec separation, 567-70

Boundaries, 568-9

Corridor to link Atlantic provinces to western Canada, 569

Economic questions, 569-70

National assets and debt, 567-8

St. Lawrence Seaway, 567

Constitution of Canada

Correspondence between Prime Minister and Premier of Alberta, 63-64, 69-71

Correspondence from Prime Minister to provincial premiers, 276-7, 287-9, 297-303

Provincial veto, 104-05

Quebec, 104-05

Consultative agencies of government, 108

Forsey, Hon. Eugene A. - Continued

- Crown revenues, casual or other not provided by Parliament, question, 75, 984, 1038
- Customs Tariff bill C-15, 450
 - Scientific Preparations Remission Order, 450
 - Validity of retroactive effect of, 450
- Customs tariff, canned tomato surtax, 1287
- Dominion Day, change of name to Canada Day, question, 1033
- Employment and Immigration Reorganization bill C-27, 1201
 - Variable entrance requirement for unemployment insurance, 1201
- Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline, 1284
 - Indian land claims, 1284
- Energy resources, 107
- Estimates (Appropriation bill C-44)
 - Dollar items, 565, 583
 - Enacting of substantive legislation by supply bills, 565
 - Motion to delete items 52b and L116d, 583; defeated, 584
 - St. Lawrence Seaway Authority debt, 565, 583
 - VIA Rail Canada Inc., 565, 583
- Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing bill C-37, 615-16, 618, 622
 - Discretionary powers of minister, 615
 - National unity, 615
- Government Organization (Scientific Activities) bill C-26, 897-8
- Hopkins, E. Russell, the late, former Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel of the Senate, 170
- Immigration bill C-24, 1208-10, 1252
 - Arbitrary powers of immigration officers, 1210
 - Delay in submission of bill to Senate, 1208-09
 - National security, 1210
 - Powers of Governor in Council, 1209
 - Refugees, 1210
- Income Tax bill C-22, 425, 456-7
 - Nil assessment, 456-7
 - Question of submission of amdt to clause 75 to Committee of the Whole, 425
 - Social insurance numbers, use on ownership certificates, 425, 457
 - Trust in favour of wife, 457
- Indian land claims, 108
- James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 1025, 1046, 1047, 1048
- Judges Act and other Acts in Respect of Judicial Matters bill C-50, 885
- Justice Department, Director of Information Services, qualifications of, question, 98, 150
- Labour-management relations, 106
- National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions, 949-57
 - Dene nation, 950
 - Draft agreement between Dene people and Canadian government, 950
 - Ownership of lands and other rights, 950
 - Special status, 950
 - Education, 950-7
 - Canadian history, lack of knowledge of, 950-7
 - English constitutional law, 952
 - Gazette* article by Quebec Minister of Culture, 953
 - Letter in reply, 953
 - Globe and Mail* article and excerpts from letters re history teaching, 952
 - Le Devoir* article by former cabinet minister re Senate, 951
 - Le Devoir* article by Professor Rothney on language education, 953-4
 - Maclean's* article by Professor Verney, 952
 - Letter in reply, 953
 - Quebec misunderstandings, 955-6

Forsey, Hon. Eugene A. - ConcludedNational unity - *Concluded*Education - ConcludedSo Little for the Mind, by Professor Hilda Neatby, 951

Statistics on provincial French-speaking populations, 954-5

Forum for Young Canadians, 956

New Brunswick, 957

Nuclear weapons, 107

Personality disorders and criminal behaviour, 496-7, 631

Postal workers' union, 106-07

Private enterprise vs federal programs, 106

Queen Elizabeth II, Her Majesty

Silver Jubilee celebrations, 86-87, 228-9, 279-80

Regulations and other statutory instruments, 315-69, 379-89, 988-90

Affirmation and disallowance of statutory instruments by Houses of Parliament, 384-5, 388

Bill of Rights, status as law of Canada, 384

Definition of statutory instrument, 382

Distribution of reports of Regulations and other Statutory Instruments Committee, 389

Enacting of substantive legislation by appropriation acts, 384

Illegalities cited:

Acts of indemnity, 385

Grain disposal, 386

Navigable Waters Protection Act, 384

Parole Board, 383-4

Post Office lottery, 385

Public Service regulations, 385, 386, 387

Inconsistencies in instruments, 382-3

Legal opinions, 381-2

Parliamentary powers, encroachment of, 989

Power to dispense with provisions of law, 383-4

Publishing of information in Canada Gazette, 388Question of vires, 381, 382, 385, 386, 388

Recourse to courts, 386-7

Retroactive effect of subordinate legislation, 387-8

Sub-delegation, 383

Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, Standing Joint Committee

Expenses, 143

Reports

First report, quorum, engagement of services, power to meet, 140

Second report, 307, 315-69, 379-89, 425-7, 506-11, 646-9, 783-5, 821, 910

Third report, 685, 690, 694-7, 988-90

Fourth report, 1004

Terms of reference, 140

Royal Emblems, removal from Governor General's private railway cars, 643, 655

Rules of the Senate

Committee power to act in referral of any subject matter for study, 631

Committee report recommending that bill be not proceeded with, 1188

Precedents cited, 1188

Referral of bill C-37 to appropriate committee, 622

Saccharin, ban on, 631

Senate

Appointments, lack of opposition members, 108, 993

Business, 139

Transportation, 107

Regional airlines, Eastern Provincial airlines, 458, 473

Fournier, Hon. Edgar E.

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 61-62
 Inflationary trends, 61-62
 Labour unrest, 61
 Nuclear power, 61
 World hunger, 61

Fournier, Hon. Michel

National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions, 1132-5
 Acadians, 1132, 1134
 Inequities in bilingualism and biculturalism 1133-5
 New Brunswick official languages education, 1134
 University of New Brunswick, 1134
 Quebec, 1133-4
 Senate role, 1133

Fournier, Hon. Sarto

Canada-United States relations, address by Prime Minister to United States Congress, 435
 National unity, Quebec concerns, 665

Frith, Hon. Royce (Introduced in the Senate Apr. 26/77)

Bretton Woods Agreements bill C-18, 1104
 Customs Tariff bill C-55, 766-7, 778
 Action of Senate committee in rectifying over-correction in legislation, 778
 Agricultural produce, 778
 Concessions to Third World countries following international negotiations, 778
 Lighting fixtures, 766
 Miscellaneous amendments, 766
 Products of interest to developing countries, 766
 Refined sugar, 766
 Scientific apparatus, preparations for industrial use, 767
 Temporary tariff reductions, 766
 Tropical products, 766
 Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline, 1286
 Canada-US relations, 1286
 Ontario benefits, 1286
 Immigration bill C-24, 1252
 Powers of Governor in Council, 1252
 Senate committee role in amending legislation, 1252
 James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 1021-2, 1045-6, 1048
 Extinguishment of claims, 1021-2, 1045
 Quebec undertaking to negotiate, 1022
 National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions, 741-4, 812, 839
 Bilingualism and biculturalism, excerpt from preliminary report on, 742
 French Academy, 741
 Minority rights, 742, 744
 Participation of Canadians in politics, 741-2
 Partisan political activity, 743-4
 Excerpt from speech of Hon. Robert Stanfield, 743-4
 Property rights, 742
 Provincial rights, 742, 744
 Rail networks, implementation of Hall Commission recommendations, 812
 Richelieu custom of transforming secret to public, 741
 Senate's role in crisis, 742, 743
 Separatism, 744

Garrison Dam, proposed diversion of water, promulgation of information re, 436

Godfrey, Hon. John M.

- Canadian and British Insurance Companies, Foreign Insurance Companies bill S-3, 458-61, 469, 1072-4
 - Acquisition costs of life insurance, 459
 - Audit requirements, 460
 - Calculation of actuarial reserves, 459
 - Capital and surplus requirements for property and casualty insurance companies, 460, 461
 - Conduct of business ancillary to insurance, 460
 - Definition of British company, 460
 - Investment powers, 460, 1072-3
 - Valuation of assets, 459-60, 1073
- Criminal Law Amendment bill C-51, 1166-7
 - Dangerous offenders, 1166-7
 - Possession of firearms during commission of offence, 1166
- Excise Tax bill (No. 2) C-54, 747-9, 799
 - Aids for handicapped, 749
 - Air transportation tickets, 749, 799
 - Extension of period for recovery of tax, 747-8
 - Flaws re oil, 748
 - Gasoline and diesel fuel, 748
 - Retail industry and small manufacturers, 748-9
- Immigration bill C-24, 1244-5
 - Nominated relatives, 1244-5
- National Ballet of Canada, twenty-fifth anniversary, 145-7
- National Gallery of Canada, original paintings owned by Gallery, 700-01, 1053
- Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, 425-7
 - Definition of statutory instrument, 427
 - Enabling statute, 426
 - Excerpt from provisions of Statutory Instruments Act re examination of legislation, 426
 - Illegality cited, 427
 - Parole Board, 427
 - Publication of regulations in Canada Gazette, 426
 - Question of intra vires or ultra vires, 426, 427
- Solar Energy Application bill C-309, 760, 761, 764
 - Members of institute, 761
 - Motion that subject matter be ref to com, 760, 764
 - Principle of bill, 760

Goldenberg, Hon. H. Carl

- Canadian Human Rights bill C-25, 840-4, 890-3, 1108
 - Bill of Rights, 841
 - Complaints, procedure for dealing with, 843
 - Equal pay formula, 842
 - Freedom from discrimination, 841-2, 844, 890
 - Human Rights Commission, members and powers, 842-3, 891
 - Indian woman, loss of rights on marriage to white man, 892
 - Labour Code, provisions against discrimination, 841
 - Language rights, 844, 891-2
 - Physically handicapped persons, 892
 - Political beliefs discrimination, 891
 - Privacy of individuals and right of access to records, 841, 843
 - Prohibited grounds of discrimination, 842
 - Racism and discrimination, 841-2
 - Sexual orientation, 891

Goldenberg, Hon. H. Carl - Concluded

James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 1010, 1047-8

Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee

Expenses, 148

Reports

Canadian Human Rights bill C-25, rep without amdt, 1052

James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, rep with comments but without amdt, 958-9

Regulations and other statutory instruments, 386

Government

Bureaucracy in government, 108-09, 114

Consultative agencies in government, 108-09

Economic facts related to government policies, 20

Government expenditures, 21, 22, 49, 230-1, 233

Anti-Inflation Board, 49

Auditor General's statements re, 230-1, 233

Glassco Commission report, 232, 233

Legislation, complexity and proliferation of, 38

Local Initiatives Program, 41

Policies and plans, 115

Excerpt from press release of Chamber of Commerce, 115

Role of, 5-6

Government expenditures restraint

Auditor General's statements re government expenditures and control of, 258, 260, 265

Suggestions re appointment of comptroller general, 258, 260

CBC, Air Canada, CNR, Atomic Energy of Canada and other crown corporations, potential for restraints, 260, 264

Company of Young Canadians, 256, 262

Consumer prices, increase in, 263; other countries, 263

Glassco Commission recommendations, lack of implementation of, 258

Government expenditures, growth limit to 14%, 253, 258, 260-1

Control of, 260-1

Government expenditures (1968-76), statistics re, 255

Government expenditures vs GNP, 262-3, 265

Inflation, 261, 263

IRDIA, 262

Reduction in expenditure commitments, 253-6, 257-61, 262, 269

Adult occupational training, 253, 254, 256, 258, 259

Aid to granting councils, 253

Building expenditures, 253

Company of Young Canadians, 253, 254, 256, 259, 269

Crown corporations, 257, 258

DREE, 253

External Affairs postings, 253

Family allowances, 253, 254, 256, 259, 262, 265, 269

Foreign aid, 253

Industrial research and development incentives, 254-5, 259

Information Canada, 253, 254, 256, 259, 269

Language training, 253

Loans to crown corporations and others, 253

Opportunities for Youth, 253

Public Service, 253, 259

Retroactive clauses, 262

Government expenditures restraint - Concluded

Reduction in expenditure commitments - Concluded

- Salaries of judges and high-salaried public servants, 253, 257
- Subsidies and other transfers, 264
- Suggestions re imposing of new regulations, from Canadian Economic Policy Committee, C.D. Howe Research Institute and Fraser Institute, 260
- Supply and Services, 255
- Transportation subsidies, 253, 260, 264
- Uncontrollable expenditures, 261
- Western grain stabilization, 255, 259-60, 269

Speakers: Senators

- Carter, Chesley W., 255
- Flynn, Jacques, 253, 255, 256, 257-61, 268-9, 270
- Grosart, Allister, 256, 261-2, 263, 264, 265, 270
- Perrault, Raymond J., 253-6, 262-5, 269, 270

Government Expenditures Restraint bill C-19. 1r, 250; 2r, 253-6, 257-65; ref to com, 265; rep without amdt, 267; 3r, 268-70; r.a., 272

Government organization (scientific activities)

- Act of Creation*, 899
- Budgets, 850, 879, 899, 976-7
- Canada Council, 879
- Coordination of council granting policies and budgets, 849-50
- Defence Research Council, 850, 879-80, 896-7
- Departmental and ministerial responsibilities, 897
- Dictionary of Canadian Biography*, 848
- Government and Council expenditures, 894, 897
- Inter-Council Coordinating Committee, 880
- Lobster hatchery research, 899
- Medical Research Council, 849, 850, 897
- MIT study, 898
- MOSST, 895
- National Research Council, 850, 878, 894, 896, 898
- Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, 849, 850
- Natural Sciences and Humanities Research Council, 895, 896
- Objectives of councils, 849
- Separation of granting powers from existing councils, 895, 898
- Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council, 849, 850, 895, 896
- Structure of, 896
- Technology Transfer: Government Laboratories to Manufacturing Industry*, 850
- University projects, 848, 850-1, 893, 894
- Report of Professor Symons, 848

Speakers: Senators

- Carter, Chesley W., 848-51, 898, 899, 959, 971, 972, 976-7
- Deschatelets, Jean-Paul, 851
- Forsey, Eugene A., 897-8
- Grosart, Allister, 893-7, 976
- Hicks, Henry D., 879-80, 898-9
- Norrie, Margaret, 880

Government Organization (Scientific Activities) bill C-26 1976. 1r, 820; 2r, 848-51, 879-80, 893-900; ref to com, 900; rep with amdt, 959, 971-2; 3r, 976-7; Commons agreement to amdt, 999; r.a., 1031

Governor General, His Excellency the Right Honourable Jules LegerDeputy

- Beetz, Hon. Jean, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada
 - Royal assent, 68, 243, 703, 940, 1161
- Dickson, Hon. R.G.B., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada
 - Royal assent, 462, 635-6, 1287-8, 1311
- Judson, Hon. Wilfred, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada
 - Royal assent, 1031
- Laskin, Rt. Hon. Bora, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada
 - Royal assent, 272
 - Speech from the Throne at prorogation, 1330
- Spence, Hon. Wishart F., O.B.E., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada
 - Royal assent, 600-01
- Opening of Second Session of Thirtieth Parliament
 - Communication from Secretary to Governor General, 1
 - Speech from the Throne, 1-6
- Prorogation of Second Session of Thirtieth Parliament
 - Communication from Secretary to Governor General, 1328
 - Speech from the Throne, 1330
- Queen Elizabeth II, message from Senate and Commons for transmission to the Queen re Silver Jubilee, 374; acknowledgment from the Queen, 395

Graham, Hon. B. Alasdair

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 112-15
- Bilingualism, 114
- Bureaucracy in government, 114
- Federal-provincial conferences, 114
- Housing, 114
- National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions, 1154-8
 - Acadians, 1155-6
 - Atlantic provinces, 1155-7
 - Federal-provincial assistance plans, 1156-7
 - History teaching, deficiencies in, 1156
 - Individual responsibility, 1157-8
 - Language policy in Canada, 1155
 - Quebec, 1155-6, 1157
- Nova Scotia
 - Canstel, 113
 - Coal industry, Cape Breton Island, 113
 - Sydney Steel and Hawker-Siddeley Steel Works, 113
 - Transportation, user-pay concept, 113-14

Grain

- Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization bill C-34, 887, 939-40, 947-8, 962-5, 1152-3, 1175-80, 1183-95, 1214-18, 1288
- Costs and revenues from grain shipments, 248
- Crowsnest Pass, 247, 248
- Freight rates, statement issued by Saskatchewan government, 247-8
- Provision of rail cars to Peace River district, question, 125-6
- Snaveley Commission on Transportation, 248-9

Greene, Hon. John J., P.C.

- Banking legislation, referral to Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, 131-2
 - Resignation of committee members upon consideration of, 131-2
- Bell Canada bill S-2, 185
 - American Telephone and Telegraph Co., 185
- Canadian Human Rights bill C-25, 844

Greene, Hon. John J., P.C. - Concluded

- Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization bill C-34, 1153, 1186, 1188, 1189, 1247
 - Necessity of bill, question of, 1189
- Committee report, reading of English version only, question, 1153
- Competition policy, 1150, 1151
 - Competition in world markets, 1150
- Customs Tariff bill C-55, 777, 778
- Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline, 1279-80, 1283-4
 - Canada-US relations, 1283-4
 - Economic impact, 1284
 - Quebec-Maritimes pipeline, 1279
 - Valdez, liquefied natural gas pipeline to US, 1284
- European Economic Community, agricultural policy, 161-2
- Government Expenditures Restraint bill C-19, 260
- James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 1046-7, 1059
- Maritime Code bill C-41, 1323-4
- Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate*, error in English text of, 10
- National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions, 1117-19
 - Historical facts related to the Constitution, 1118
 - Parliamentary responsibility, 1117-18; Senate role, 1117
 - Public service participation, 1118; CBC, 1118
 - Quebec election results, effect of, 1118
- Oil pollution, protection of coastal waters and shorelines, 699, 944, 945
- Regulations and other statutory instruments, 989
- Rules of the Senate
 - Comment upon result of vote, 1247
 - Point of order re quoting incorrectly of senator's remarks, 1188
 - Point of order re reading of committee report in both languages, 1153
 - Suspension of rule re 2r of Bill S-2, 185
- Senate, Progressive Conservative senators, question re attendance, 19

Grosart, Hon. Allister, Deputy Leader of the Opposition in the Senate

- Air Traffic Control Services Continuation bill C-63, 1305-07, 1309, 1310
- Anti-Inflation Board guidelines, 1306-07, 1310
- Collective bargaining, 1305, 1306
- Right to strike, 1305
- Rotating strikes, 1305-06
- Appropriation bill No. 5, 1976 C-28, 230, 233
- Appropriation bill No. 1, 1977 C-44, 560, 574, 575-7, 578, 579-80, 581, 582, 583, 584
- Appropriation bill No. 2, 1977 C-45, 585-6
- Appropriation bill No. 3, 1977 C-58, 1012-14
- Auditor General bill C-20, 1114-15, 1116-17
 - Employees of Auditor General's office, status of, 1114-15
 - Letter from Chairman of Public Service Commission, 1115
 - Estimates, examination by Senate committee, 1116-17
- Bell Canada bill S-2, 183, 184-6, 194-5, 197
 - Capital increase, 195
 - CRTC, 194-5
 - Research and development, 194
- Blois, Hon. Frederick M., resignation from the Senate, 72-73
- Burchill, Hon. G. Percival, the late, 1312
- Canada-United States relations
 - Address by Prime Minister before United States Congress, 435
 - Garrison Dam, proposed diversion of water, 436
- Canadian and British Insurance Companies, Foreign Insurance Companies bill S-3, 1073, 1074

Grosart, Hon. Allister - Continued

- Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization bill C-34, 1187-8
- Committee meetings during Senate sittings, 375-6
- Criminal Code (counterfeit of rare coins and notes) bill C-256, 1108-09
 - Offences, 1108, 1109
 - Reproduction of original, second edition or second issue, 1109
- Currency and Exchange bill C-5, 1069-72
 - Assets, modifications and valuation of Exchange Account, 1070
 - Auditing of account, 1070-1
 - Bretton Woods Agreement and International Monetary Fund Agreement, 1069, 1070
 - Special drawing rights, 1069-70
 - Value of Canadian dollar, 1071
- Customs Tariff bill C-15, 292, 309-11
 - British preferential tariff, 311
 - Delay in implementation of legislation, 309-10
 - GATT, 310
 - Non-tariff barriers, 311
 - Overruling of Tariff Board decisions, 310
 - Scientific items for hospitals and other institutions, 310
- Customs Tariff bill C-55, 775-8
 - Action of Senate committee in rectifying over-correction in legislation, 778
 - Agricultural produce, 777
 - Cameras, 776-7
 - Concessions to Third World countries following international negotiations, 777
 - Cost-benefit assessment of legislation, 775-6
 - Effect of tariffs on prices and employment, 775-6
 - GATT renegotiations, Tokyo Round, 776
 - Machinery and equipment, 776
 - Miscellaneous amendments, 776
 - Protection vs free trade, 776
 - Tropical products, 776
- Customs tariff, canned tomato surtax, 1287, 1291
- Diefenbaker, Olive E., the late, 271
- Diplomatic and Consular Privileges and Immunities bill C-6, 906
- Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline, 1267-8
 - Environmental aspects, 1267-8
 - Government policy, lack of statement re, 1267
 - Indian land claims, 1268
 - Excerpt from the National Indian, 1268
- Estimates (Appropriation bill C-28)
 - Government expenditures, 230-1
 - Auditor General's statements re, 230-1, 233
 - Glassco Commission report, 233
- Estimates (Appropriation bill C-44)
 - Amnds to other legislation through appropriation bills, 575, 576, 580, 581, 582, 583
 - Authority to meet commitments, 579
 - Dollar items, 564-5, 575, 579
 - Government restraints, 564
 - Time schedule for passage of bill, 579-80
 - Transfer payments, 565
- Estimates (Appropriation bill C-45)
 - Borrowing authority, 585-6
 - Title of bill, confusion in calendar year notation, 592

Grosart, Hon. Allister - Continued

- Estimates (Appropriation bill C-58)
 - Atomic Energy of Canada, 1013-14
 - Energy, Mines and Resources, 1013
 - Pickering airport, 1014
- Estimates year ending Mar. 31/77, Supplementary (B) and (C), 209, 211-12
 - Dollar items, 211
 - Explanation of requirement, 211
 - Labour-intensive projects, 211
 - Public Service restraints, 210
- Excise Tax bill C-21, 376-8
 - Air conditioners for motor vehicles, 377, 378
 - Energy conservation, 377-8
 - Manufacturers' exemption, 377
 - Omnibus aspect of legislation, 377
- Excise Tax bill C-54, 796-8
 - Aids for handicapped, 798
 - Air transportation tickets, 797
 - Gasoline and diesel revenues, 797-8
 - Retail industry and small manufacturers, 798
 - Revenue percentages from various tax sources, 797
 - Trade-offs between Excise Tax and Customs Tariff, 796-7
- Export Development bill C-47, 823, 829-33
 - By-passing of Parliament by supplementary estimates, 830-1
 - Competition from other countries, 830
 - Deficit in semi-finished products, 830
 - Export credits insurance, 830
 - Liability of corporation or of government, 823
 - Loans to foreign buyers of Canadian capital goods and services, 831-3
 - Countries behind the Iron Curtain and satellite countries, 831, 832, 833
 - Interest rate, 832
 - Lending and insurance credits to large firms, 831-2
- Federal-Provincial Conference of First Ministers, 194
 - Patriation of the Constitution, 205-06
- Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing bill C-37, 619-20, 627
- Financial Administration Act, crown corporations not subject to audit, 674, 715-17, 770-1
- Foreign affairs, nuclear supplies, negotiations with other countries, 686, 959-60
- Government Expenditures Restraint bill C-19, 256, 261-2, 263
 - Company of Young Canadians, 256, 262
 - GNP vs government spending, 261
 - IRDIA, 262
 - Reduction in expenditure commitments, 261, 262
 - Family allowances, 262
 - Uncontrollable expenditures, 261
 - Western grain stabilization, 262
 - Retroactive clauses, 262
- Government Organization (Scientific Activities) bill C-26, 893-7, 976
 - Budgets, 976
 - Defence Research Board, 896-7
 - Departmental and ministerial responsibilities, 897
 - Government and Council expenditures, 894, 897
 - Medical Research Council, 897
 - MOSST, 895
 - National Research Council, 894, 896

Grosart, Hon. Allister - ContinuedGovernment Organization (Scientific Activities) bill C-26 - Concluded

Natural Sciences and Humanities Research Council, 895, 896

Science Policy Committee, work of, 893-4

Separation of granting powers from existing council, 896

Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council, 895, 896

University projects, 893, 894

Haig, Hon. J. Campbell, 638

Housing, acquisition or renovations of homes, government assistance for single persons, 1164, 1246, 1265, 1319

Immigration bill C-24, 1250-1, 1252, 1253

Powers of Governor in Council, 1250-1, 1252

Senate committee role in amending legislation, 1251

Income Tax bill C-22, 204, 213-16, 423-5, 453-4, 456

Social insurance numbers, use on ownership certificates, 454

Income Tax Conventions bill C-12, 932-6

Creation of new standing orders for Houses of Parliament, 933, 934-5

Disadvantages to nationals re withholding tax and tax credit rates, 933

Exchange of information, 935-6

Swiss bank accounts, 935

Law of nations vs law of Canada, 933-4

Omnibus bill, question of, 934

Provincial jurisdictions, Vienna Convention provision re, 934

Referral of bill to proper committee, 936

Ireland, peace movement leaders visitors to Senate, 180

James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 1019-21, 1022, 1046

Extinguishment of claims, 1019-21, 1046

Quebec undertaking to negotiate, 1021

Legislation, amendments omitted in reprinting of bills, 456

National Gallery, original paintings lost or unaccounted for, 701

Official Languages Commissioner Keith Spicer, reappointment of, 635

Official Languages Commissioner Maxwell F. Yalden, appointment of, 1288

Oil pollution, territorial or international waters definition, 699, 944-5

Omnibus bills, 1187-8

Pension bill C-11, 669

Petroleum Corporations Monitoring bill S-4, 749-51, 752

Authority of minister, 750-1

Corporations engaged in exploration, etc., 750

Crown corporations, 751

Default penalty, 751

Petro-Canada, 750

Provision of legislative authority to collect statistics on industry, 749-50

Revenues for further exploration, 751

Statutory form to be completed, 751

Regulations and other statutory instruments

Speech of Senator Langlois, question, 821

Rules of the Senate

Committee power to act in referral of any subject matter for study, 630, 631

Discussion of ruling by Commons Speaker, 576-7

Motion to adjourn debate, 795

Point of order re closing of debate, 183

Referral of Bill C-37 to appropriate committee, 619-20

Second reading of bills, principle accepted, question of, 1187-8

Suspension of rule re 2r of Bill S-2, 184-6

Grosart, Hon. Allister - Concluded

- Saccharin, ban on, 630, 631, 634-5
- St. Patrick's Day, 531
- Science Policy Committee
 - Appointment of, 176-7
 - Atomic energy, 177
 - Crisis in scientific research, 176
 - SCITEC, 177
- Senate
 - Business, 167, 562, 563
 - Summer adjournment, 1288-9
 - Committee meetings during Senate sittings, 805, 806
 - Committees, role in amending of legislation, 453-4
 - National Finance Committee achievements, 211
- Senate appointments, lack of opposition members, 1076
- Solar Energy Application bill C-309, 728, 729, 745-7, 761-2, 763, 809-10, 811
 - Draftmanship of bill, 746
 - Incorporation of all areas of renewable energy, 746
 - NRC role and involvement or other government depts., 746
 - Objectives of institute and jurisdiction of, 746, 761
 - Principle of bill, 810
 - Referral of bill to Banking, Trade and Commerce Com, question of, 809, 810, 811
 - Research and experiments, 747
- Sullivan, Hon. Joseph A., election as Fellow Emeritus of American Otological Society, 638
- Sullivan, Hon. Joseph A., illness of, 179
- Tourist visitors to Parliament Buildings, greeting by guides, 1243
- Transportation, Canadian National Railway, criticisms of, 401
- Unemployment Insurance Entitlements Adjustment bill C-52, 701

Haig, Hon. J. Campbell

- Aeronautics and National Transportation bill C-46, 972
 - Control of airlines by federal-provincial governments, 972
 - Pacific Western Airlines, Supreme Court decision re, 972
- Canada Lands Surveys bill C-4, 965-6
 - Dominion land surveyor, change of name, 965
 - Torrens system of land registration, 965
- Maritime Code bill C-41, 1313-18, 1319-20
- Motor Vehicle Safety bill C-36, 913-14
 - Offensive drivers, 913
 - Statistics on accidents, 913
- Queen Elizabeth II, visit to Canada during Silver Jubilee, question, 829
- Transport and Communications Committee
 - Reports
 - Aeronautics and National Transportation bill C-46, rep without amdt, 975
 - Maritime Code bill C-41, rep with amdts, 1313-18, 1319-20
- Transportation, obstruction of access to airport by transport company, 961

Haiti

- Assistance during shortages of food and drinkable water, 808, 1017, 1019
- Duvalier family, 1019

Halifax

- Longshoremen's strike and economic loss as result of, 64-67
- See Port of Halifax Operations bill C-14, 64-68

Hastings, Hon. Earl A.

- Parole service, statistics on, 1326-7
- Prowse, Hon. J. Harper, the late, 8

Hayden, Hon. Salter A.

- Banking legislation, 120-1, 133-6, 1000-04, 1018-19
 - Canadian Payments Association, 1000-01, 1002-03
 - Chartered banks' reserves, 1000, 1001-02
 - Citicorp, 1003-04
 - Financial leasing and factoring, 1003
 - Foreign banks, 1003-04
 - Incorporation of banks by letters patent, 1004
 - Pecuniary interest, 134-5
 - Excerpt from Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, 135
 - Excerpt from Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, 134-5
 - Excerpt from May's Parliamentary Practice, 134
 - Excerpt from Senate and House of Commons Act, 134
 - Residential mortgages, 1003
 - Resignation of committee members on discussion of White Paper, 133-6
 - Resumé of discussions on Bank Act (1967), 133
 - Right of provincial government to shareholding in new banks, 1000
- Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee
 - Banking legislation, White Paper on, authorization to study, 86, 120-1, 133-6
 - Competition policy, authorization to study subject matter of Bill C-42, 670-2
 - Expenses, discussion re, 133
 - Expenses, 148
 - Income tax, Bill C-22, an Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax, authorization to study subject matter of, 143-4
- Reports
 - Banking legislation, 1000-04, 1018-19, see appendix to Debates of June 28/77
 - Borrowers and depositors protection, subject matter of Bill C-16, 1106, 1120-5, 1144-51, see appendix to Debates of July 11/77
 - Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation bill C-3, rep without amdt, 958
 - Canadian and British Insurance Companies, Foreign Insurance Companies bill S-3, rep with amdts, 476, 490
 - Competition policy, subject matter of Bill C-42, 1106, 1146-51, see appendix to Debates of July 13/77
 - Continental Bank of Canada bill C-1001, rep without amdt, 1032
 - Customs Tariff bill C-15, rep without amdt, 489-50
 - Export Development bill C-47, rep without amdt, 845
 - Farm Improvement Loans, Small Businesses Loans, Fisheries Improvement Loans bill C-48, rep without amdt, 975
 - Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing bill C-37, rep without amdt, 624
 - Fisheries bill C-38, rep without amdt, 1126
 - Income Tax bill C-22, 204, 213-16, 423-5, rep without amdt, 451-7
 - Petroleum Corporation Monitoring bill C-4, rep with amdts, 970-1, 977-8, 985
- Borrowers and depositors protection, 1120-5, see appendix to Debates of July 11/77
 - Assumption of carriage of proceedings, 1124
 - Credit charge rate, 1121, 1123, 1124-5
 - Banks, 1124-5
 - Lending transaction, 1122
 - Loan sharking and criminal credit charges, 1122
 - Prepayment provisions, 1123-4
 - Mortgages, 1123
 - Purchase and acquisition of income tax returns, 1122

Hayden, Hon. Salter A. - Concluded

- Canadian and British Insurance Companies, Foreign Insurance Companies bill S-3, 476, 490
 - Amalgamations, 490
 - Assets for deposit by British company to cover Canadian liabilities, 490
 - Investment of government bonds in foreign country, 490
 - Reserves, 490
 - Shares and changing of values, 490
- Competition policy, 670, 671-2, 1146-51
 - Action for damages, 1149
 - Air travel industry, 1146-7
 - Appeals, limitations on, 1148-9
 - Civil remedies, mergers and monopolies, 670
 - Class actions, 1149, 1150
 - Competition in world and domestic markets, 1150-1
 - Competition Policy Advocate, powers of, 1147
 - Compulsory licensing re trade marks, 1149
 - Conscious parallelism, 1148, 1151
 - Dynamic Change and Accountability in the Canadian Market Economy*, report of Skeoch-McDonald Commission, 1148
 - Letter from Dr. Skeoch, 1148
 - Joint monopolization, 1148
 - National Transportation Act, extract from, 1147
 - Regulated industries, 1146-7
 - Withdrawal of Bill C-42 and status as white paper, 671-2
 - See Appendix to Debates of July 13/77*
- Customs Tariff bill C-15, 449-50
 - Scientific items for hospitals and other institutions, 449-50
 - Scientific Preparations Remission Order, 449-50; statutory authority for, 450
- Export Development bill C-47, rep without amdt, 845
- Income Tax bill C-22, 204, 213-16, 423-5, 451-3, 455-6, 457
 - Appeal against assessment, 452
 - Charitable organizations, 214, 215, 424
 - Child care expenses, 214
 - Deduction for children of taxpayers living together, 215, 452-3
 - Deferred compensation plans, 213-14
 - Disability deduction, 215
 - Excerpt from letter of National Revenue Minister, 423-4
 - Exploration expenses, 214
 - Individual surtax, 214
 - Medical expenses for full-time attendant, 215
 - Nil assessment, 216, 423, 451, 452, 457
 - Principal residence, 214
 - Recommendations of committee accepted by government, 424
 - Registered retirement savings plans, 213-14, 452
 - Retroactive legislation, 215, 452-3
 - Small business deduction limits, 214
 - Social insurance numbers on ownership certificates, requirement for, 216, 453
 - Withholding tax, 425
- Petroleum Corporation Monitoring bill C-4, 970-1
- Senate committees
 - Recommendations of committees accepted by government, 424

Hays, Hon. Harry, P.C.

- Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization bill C-34, 1187, 1214-15, motion that bill be ref back to committee, 1216, neg, 1217
- Rapeseed producers, 1214-15
 - Markets, 1214-15
 - Prices, 1215
- Statistics on Canada's grain industry, 1215
- Witnesses invited to appear before committee, 1216, 1217
- Prowse, Hon. J. Harper, the late, 8-9

Health and welfare

- Cyclamates, non-restricted use of, 664
- Health and social security programs, 41
- Medical and hospital insurance, post-secondary education, financial and administration arrangements re, 101-02
- Saccharin, government ban on, 623, 630-5, 641-2, 646, 656-9, 682-4, 690-2
- Social services, 107-08
- Swine influenza immunization
 - Confirmed diagnoses in Canada and United States, 125, 150-1
 - Estimates for, 226
 - Immunization clinic, 224
 - Intentions of government re, 98, 125

Health, Welfare and Science, Standing Senate Committee

- Budget, 673
- Personality disorders and criminal behaviour, authorization to make study of, 190-2, 206-09, 238-40, 249, 251-2, 265-6, 496-7, 505-06, 547-9, 554-6
- Reports
 - Canada Pension Plan bill C-49, rep without amdt, 1152
 - Government Organization (Scientific Activities) bill C-26, rep with amdt, 959, 971-2, 976-7, 999
 - Old Age Security bill C-35, rep without amdt, 561
 - Pension bill C-11, rep without amdt, 677-8
- Saccharin, ban on, authorization to make study, 623, 630-5, 641-2, 646, 656-9, 664, 678-9, 682-4, 690-2
- Point of order, 630-1
- Terms of reference, 190

Helsinki Agreement

- Customs duty on gifts to relatives in USSR, 745, 808, 816
- Discussions at European Parliament, Luxembourg Conference, 152
- Discussions at North Atlantic Assembly, Williamsburg Conference, 282, 283-4, 475
- Human, cultural, educational and information obligations, implementation of, 282, 283-4
- Implementation of Agreement, 704-05
- Interpretations by different nations, 475
- Printed information, distribution of, 715, 960-1, 1015
- Reunification of families, statistics, 961
- Review Conference, Canadian delegation, 1004-05, 1092
- See Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly meeting at Strasbourg, 813-19

Hicks, Hon. Henry D.

- Bell Canada bill S-2, 183-4, 186
 - Alexander Graham Bell Museum, 183
 - Capital increase, 183
 - Electronic research laboratories, 184
 - Employment potential, 184
- Canadian Human Rights bill C-25, 890

Hicks, Hon. Henry D. - Concluded

- Customs Tariff bill C-15, 291-2
 - Scientific preparations for hospitals and other institutions, 292
- Employment and Immigration Reorganization bill C-27, 1167-71, 1202-03
 - Employment and Advisory Council, 1167, 1168, 1202
 - Regional and local advisory boards, 1168
 - Employment and Immigration Commission, 1167-8
 - Field offices, 1168
 - Improvement in service to the public, 1167
 - Unemployment insurance program amdts, 1168-9
 - Appeals by individuals, 1171
 - Developmental use of fund, 1170, 1171, 1202
 - Disincentives to work, 1169
 - Government contribution, 1203
 - Regional extended benefits, 1169
 - Three-phase benefit structure, 1168-9
 - Variable entrance requirement, 1169-70, 1203
 - Work-sharing arrangements, 1170-1, 1202
- Excise Tax bill C-21, 378
 - Air conditioners, 378
- Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing bill C-37, 608-09
 - Post-secondary education and health programs, 608-09
 - Flexibility in use of funds, 608-09
 - Policy discussions, 609
 - Projection to 1981/82, 608
- Government Organization (Scientific Activities) bill C-26, 879-80, 898-9
 - Budgets, duplication in, 879
 - Canada Council, 879
 - Defence Research Board, 879-80
 - Inter-Council Coordinating Committee, 880
 - National Research Council, 879
 - University projects, 880
- Income Tax Conventions bill C-12, 880-2, 900
 - Canadian citizens in Pakistan, interest and dividends received, 900
 - Capital gains, 881
 - Double taxation relief, 882
 - Non-discrimination on basis of nationality, 881
 - OECD, 881
 - Pensions and annuities, 882
 - Royalties, 881
 - Taxation of dividends, 881
 - Teachers, 881-2
- Queen Elizabeth II, Silver Jubilee commemorative stamps, 228
- Rules of the Senate
 - Referral of Bill C-37 to appropriate committee, 620
 - Suspension of rule re 2r of Bill S-2, 186
- Solar Energy Application bill C-309, 740-1
 - Diminishing of NRC responsibilities in research, 741
 - Institute establishment, 740, 741
 - Members and Board of Directors, 741
 - Research, 740
 - Revenues for operations, 740

Historic buildings, proposed demolition of historic house in St. Jean, Quebec, 1164, 1213-14

Historic sites and monuments

Board composition and functions, 851, 864

Special committees, 851

Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories representation, 851, 864

Sites designated, persons and events commemorated, 851, 864

Speakers: Senators

Belisle, Rheal, 864-5

Steuart, David G., 851

Historic Sites and Monuments bill C-13. 1r, 820; 2r, 851, 864-5; 3r, 876; r.a., 941

Holy Land, Commissioner of

Father George Germain, visitor to Senate, 86

Hopkins, E. Russell, the late, former Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel of the Senate

Tributes, 169-71

Housing, acquisition or renovations of homes, government assistance for single persons, 1164, 1246, 1265, 1318-19

Human rights

See Canadian Human Rights bill C-25, 820, 840-4, 876-8, 887-93, 1052, 1098, 1107-08, 1161

Immigration

Illustrated London News article, 55

Persons living in Canada under deportation orders or contrary to court rulings, question, 563, 640, 650-1

See Employment and Immigration Reorganization bill C-27, 1163, 1167-71, 1197-1203, 1213, 1246, 1288,

Immigration bill C-24, 1163, 1174-5, 1206-11, 1244, 1248-56, 1288.

Immigration (Bill C-24)

Appeals, 1174-5, 1207-08

Right to fair hearing, 1175

Arbitrary powers of immigration officers, 1210

Contribution to social security programs by temporary workers, 1208

Conviction of crime abroad, 1206

Deportation orders, 1175, 1206, 1207

Immigration Policy, Green Paper on (1973), 1174

League for Human Rights, 1207

Management of immigration flow, 1174

Multiculturalism 1256

National security, 1174, 1175, 1207, 1210

Objectives of Canada's immigration policy, 1174

Parkdale Community Legal Aid Service, 1206

Powers of Governor in Council, 1206, 1208, 1209, 1244, 1249-55

Refugees, 1210

Senate committee role in amending legislation, 1249-55

Terrorists and hijackers, 1174, 1175

Urban Alliance on Race Relations, 1207

Violation of civil liberties, 1208

Speakers: Senators

Asselin, Martial, 1206-08, 1254

Bosa, Peter, 1211, 1256

Flynn, Jacques, 1248-9, 1254-5

Forsey, Eugene A., 1208-10, 1252

Immigration (Bill C-24) - ConcludedSpeakers: Senators - Concluded

Frith, Royce, 1252
 Godfrey, John M., 1244-5
 Grosart, Allister, 1250-1, 1252, 1253
 McElman, Charles, 1252-3, 1254
 McIlraith, George, 1251-2
 Riley, Daniel, 1174-5, 1211
 Smith, George I., 1250
 van Roggen, George C., 1244, 1249-50

Immigration bill C-24. 1r, 1163; 2r, 1174-5, 1206-11; ref to com, 1211, rep without amdt but with statement re powers of Governor in Council, 1244; m for 3r, 1248-9, m in amdt, 1249-55, neg, 1255-6; 3r, 1256; r.a., 1288

Income tax

Appeal against assessment, 456
 Capital gains on principal residence, 214, 409
 Charitable organizations, 214, 215, 309, 421, 455
 Child care expenses, 214, 409, 421
 Deduction for children of taxpayers living together, 215, 452-3
 Deferred compensation plans, 213-14
 Disability deduction, 215
 Exploration expenses, 214, 409, 421
 Hayden-formula for committee study of legislation, 423
 Individual surtax, 214
 Medical expenses for full-time attendant, 215
 Nil assessment, 216, 421-3, 451, 452, 456-7
 Question re amdt to clause 75 of bill in Committee of the Whole, 425
 Recommendations of Senate committee, consideration by Commons, 422-3
 Registered retirement savings plans, 213-14, 408-09, 421-3, 452, 455
 Retroactivity, 215, 409, 421, 452-3
 Small business deduction limits, 214, 409, 421
 Social insurance numbers on ownership certificates, requirement for, 216, 409, 423, 425, 453, 454, 457
 Transfers to spouses and spousal trusts, 215
 Trust in favour of wife, 457

Speakers: Senators

Benidickson, W. M., 454-5, 456
 Cook, Eric, 408-09
 Flynn, Jacques, 422-3, 425
 Forsey, Eugene A., 425, 456-7
 Grosart, Allister, 453-4, 456
 Hayden, Salter A., 204, 213-16, 423-5, 451-3, 455-6, 457
 Smith, George I., 420-2

Income tax, an act to amend the statute law relating to income tax, authorization to study subject matter of Bill C-22, 143-4; rep of com, 204, 213-16

Income Tax bill C-22. 1r, 407; 2r, 408-09, 419-25; ref to com, 425; rep without amdt, 451-7; 3r, 458; r.a., 462

Income tax conventions

Canadian citizens in Pakistan, interest and dividends received, 881, 900
 Capital gains, 881
 Creation of new standing orders for Houses of Parliament, 933, 934-5

Income tax conventions - Concluded

- Disadvantages to nationals re withholding tax and tax credit rates, 933
- Double taxation relief, 882
- Exchange of information, 935-6
 - Swiss bank accounts, 935
- Law of nations vs law of Canada, 933-4
- Non-discrimination on basis of nationality, 881
- OECD, 881
- Omnibus bill, question of, 934
- Pensions and annuities, 882
- Provincial jurisdiction, Vienna Convention provision re, 934
- Referral of bill to proper committee, 936
- Royalties, 881
- Teachers, 881-2

Speakers: Senators

- Deschatelets, Jean-Paul, 936
- Grosart, Allister, 932-6
- Hicks, Henry D., 880-2, 900
- Inman, F. Elsie, 882
- Langlois, Léopold, 936
- Rowe, Frederick William, 882

Income Tax Conventions bill C-12. 1r, 829; 2r, 880-2, 900, 932-6; 3r, 945; r.a., 1031

Indians, Eskimos and Inuit

- Council of Yukon Indians, 11
- Education and social assistance, 226
- Energy, construction of northern pipeline, 1266-87
- Government policy report re Northwest Territories and Yukon Territory, 1182, 1245-6, 1257-63
- Indian organizations, 11
- James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 679-82, 717-21, 739-40, 958-9, 1006-12, 1019-25, 1038-49, 1053-67, 1092-7, 1098
- Land claims, 108; estimates for, 210, 217, 226
- National unity, 782-3, 950
- See appendix to Debates, 1257-63*

Industry

- Canstel, Cape Breton Island, 100, 113
- Coal, Cape Breton Island, 113
- IBM, government grant to, 91
- Private enterprise vs federal program, 106
- Small businesses and free enterprise system, 13, 23, 59-60
- Sydney Steel and Hawker-Siddeley Steel Works, 113

Inflation

- Income and price controls, 40-41
- Inflationary trends, 61-62
- Unemployment, cost of living, 99
- See Anti-inflation program,*
Unemployment.

Information Canada, 45, 48

Inman, Hon. F. Elsie

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 98-99
- Bilingualism and biculturalism, 99
- Diefenbaker, Olive E., the late, 271
- Income Tax Conventions bill C-12, 882, 900
- Inflation, unemployment, cost of living, 99
- Judges Act and other Acts in respect of Judicial Matters bill C-50, 825
- Manpower and Immigration Dept., Manpower Division, 50
- National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions, 1141-2
 - Prince Edward Island, 1141-2
 - Confederation conference, 1141-2
 - Quebec, 1142
- Prince Edward Island
 - Energy costs, 99
 - Veterans Affairs Dept. personnel, move to PEI, 99

Inquiries, calling the attention of the Senate to matters of national and international interest

- Confederation, 275, 293-6, 437-41, 444-7, 566-73
- Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, 813-19
- Economy of Canada, unemployment and failure of government to deal with problem, 919-22
- Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline from western Arctic to southern Canada and continental United States, 1266-87
- European Parliament, Luxembourg conference, 151-5, 158-61, 173-4
- Labour relations, effects on Canadian economy, 410-18, 469-71
- Lumber industry, 189-90, 478-80, 556-8
- Mackenzie Valley pipeline, implications arising from Berger Commission report, 915-19, 1266
- Mexico, visit of Canadian Parliamentarians and address by Senator Belisle, 869-71, 872-3
- National unity
 - Economic and cultural aspirations of various regions, 698, 707-12, 733-7, 741-4, 752-4, 767-9, 772-4, 778-83, 799-802, 811-13, 825-8, 837-9, 866-9, 914-15, 949-57, 985-8, 1105-06, 1117-19, 1132-5, 1141-2, 1154-8
- North Atlantic Assembly, Twenty-second Annual Session, Williamsburg, Virginia, 233-6, 281-5, 473-7, 491-6, 540-3, 545-7; see also appendix to Debates of Feb. 1/77
- Personality disorders and criminal behaviour, 190-2, 206-09, 238-40, 249, 251-2, 265-6, 496-7, 505-06, 547-9, 554-6
- Saccharin, proposed ban on, 623, 630-5, 641-2, 646, 682-4, 690-2
- Senate appointments, lack of opposition members, 659-63, 990-4, 1074-6
- Transportation by land, air and sea, regional differences in Canada, 201-03, 240-3, 246-9, 396-402, 430-2
- Western European Union Assembly, 186-9, 391-4, 402-06

Inquiries, general

- Construction of coal-fired plant in Saskatchewan, US representations re, 1016, 1180
- Parole service, 1326-7
- Quebec province, area and boundary, 267, 497
- See Questions*

Interest

- Borrowers and depositors protection, rep of com on subject matter of Bill C-16, 1106, 1120-5, 1144-51, see also appendix to Debates of July 11/77

Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, Standing Senate Committee

- Authority to sit during adjournments, 140
- Budgets of committees
 - Agriculture, 204
 - Banking, Trade and Commerce, 204, 756
 - Foreign Affairs, 204
 - Health, Welfare and Science, 673
 - National Finance, 204
 - Science Policy, 204, 673, 756
- Salary revisions, 673
- Subcommittee on classifications, notice of meeting, 87

International Women's Year

- Conference organized by Hon. Marc Lalonde on principle of equality becoming reality, 88
- Law Reform Commission, brief presented by Quebec women, 87, 89
- Mexico conference, 87-88
- National Organization for Women in the United States, call for strike, 89
- Toronto Star article re, 88
- Unemployed women, statistics (1976), 88
- Wife-husband role in sharing of workload, 88

Ireland

- Efforts to promote understanding and reconciliation in Northern Ireland, 162-7
- Peace Movement leaders, visitors to Senate, 180

James Bay and Northern Quebec Native claims settlement

- Agreement between Crees, Inuit, federal and provincial governments, 679-82, 717-21, 739-40, 958-9, 1006-12, 1019-25, 1038-49, 1053-67, 1092-7, 1098
 - Aboriginal rights, 1064
 - Compulsory expropriation and compensation, 1055-6, 1058, 1065
 - Deficiencies in bill, 1022
 - Excerpt from com report re claims, 1006, 1020
 - Extinguishment of claims, 1006-12, 1019-25, 1038-49, 1053-67, 1092-7
 - Indians of Schefferville, negotiations with, 1041, 1066
 - Injunction to stop Quebec hydro project, 680, 717-18, 1054, 1062
 - Language rights, 740
 - Minority rights, excerpt from The Unreformed Senate of Canada, 1043-4
 - Monetary compensation to Northern Quebec natives, 681
 - Native participation in Territory administration, 681-2
 - Obligations and jurisdiction re native land settlement claims, 680, 719, 740
 - Parliamentary oversight in amending agreements, 718-19
 - Political problems of agreement, 718
 - Provision for reservations, assurance from dept., 1022
 - Quebec Boundaries Extension Act, 680, 1023, 1039-40, 1096
 - Quebec undertaking to negotiate, 1008, 1010-12, 1021, 1022, 1024, 1042, 1054-5, 1057, 1060
 - Revenues, disbursement of, 1022, 1048
 - Rights of native non-signatories, 691, 719-21, 739
 - Letter from M. Narvey, Manitoba University, to Premier Levesque, 719-20
 - Signatories to agreement, 1039
 - Statement of Mount-Royal representative, 718
 - Statement of Premier Levesque re negotiations, 719
 - Witnesses appearing before Commons committee, 719, 720

James Bay and Northern Quebec Native claims settlement - *ConcludedSpeakers: Senators

Asselin, Martial, 682, 717-21, 1009-10
 Bosa, Peter, 1049
 Bourget, Maurice, 679-82, 721, 739-40
 Buckwold, Sidney L., 1044
 Connolly, John J., 720, 721
 Croll, David A., 1059-61
 Denis, Azellus, 1046
 Ewasew, John, 1061-2, 1096-7
 Flynn, Jacques, 1006-08, 1010, 1021, 1022, 1048, 1049, 1064, 1065, 1066, 1092-6, 1097
 Forsey, Eugene A., 1025, 1046, 1047, 1048
 Frith, Royce, 1021-2, 1045-6, 1048
 Goldenberg, Carl, 1010, 1047-8
 Greene, John J., 1046-7, 1059
 Grosart, Allister, 1019-21, 1022, 1046
 Laird, Keith, 1008-09
 Lang, Daniel A., 1049
 Langlois, Leopold, 1062-7
 Marchand, Jean, 1044, 1045, 1094
 McElman, Charles, 1041-5, 1047, 1097
 Neiman, Joan, 1022-5, 1048-9
 Perrault, Raymond J., 1010-12, 1045
 Robichaud, Louis J., 1038-41
 Smith, George I., 1053-9
 Thompson, Andrew E., 1048
 van Roggen, George C., 1096
 Williams, Guy, 740, 1022, 1048, 1062

James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9. 1r, 673; 2r, 679-82, 717-21, 739-40; ref to com, 740; rep with comments but without amdt, 958-9; m for 3r, 1006-08, m in amdt, 1008-12, 1019-25, 1038-49, 1053-67, 1092-7, m neg, 1097; 3r, 1098; r.a., 1161

Judges

Appointment of additional judges, 825, 835, 885
 Attorney General and Minister of Justice, 883, 885-6
 Canadian Judicial Council, 883, 884
 Commissioner of Federal Judicial Affairs, 824, 835-6, 883
 County court judges, 824
 Judicial Council, 824, 885
 Registrar, Supreme Court of Canada, 824, 885
 Residence requirement, 825
 Responsibility of Justice Department, 824
 Salaries, 824-5, 835, 883-4, 945
 Supremacy of law, 824
 Workload of courts, 824, 835

Speakers: Senators

Connolly, John J., 884-5
 Flynn Jacques, 834-6
 Forsey, Eugene A., 885
 Lang, Daniel A., 836, 882-4, 885
 Lawson, Edward M., 945
 McIlraith, George, 823-5, 885-6, 945

Judges bill C-50. 1r, 787; 2r, 823-5, 834-6; 882-6; ref to com, 886; rep without amdt, 928; 3r, 945, r.a., 1031

Judson, Hon. Wilfred, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada
Royal assent, 1031

Justice Department, director of Information Services, qualifications of, question, 98, 150

Kingsmere residence of the late Prime Minister Mackenzie King, terms of last will and testament or of other documents relating to, 976, 984

Labour

- Bank branches as bargaining agents, 976, 1017-18
- Bullock Report, UK royal commission, 279
- Illegal strikes and penalties for, 36
- International Longshoremen's Assoc., Halifax Local 269, strike, 64-65
 - Conciliation efforts, 64-65
 - Economic loss as result of, 64
- Labour disputes and strikes, 16-17, 27, 61
- Labour-intensive projects, 210-11, 212, 222
 - Termination date, 222
- Labour-management relations, 24, 106
- Leadership of unions, 36-37
- Postal workers' union, 106-07
- Worker representation on boards of directors of corporations, 279, 376-7
- See* Air Traffic Control Services Continuation bill C-63, 1293-1311,
 - Port of Halifax Operations bill C-14, 64-68.

Labour relations, effect on Canadian economy, 410-18, 469-71, 653

- Asbestos workers strike, 413
- Binding arbitration, 415
- Canadian Labour Congress, call for general strike, 412
- Exploitation of union members, 413-15
- Freedom of the majority, 412-13
- Front Commun, bargaining agent, 413, 416
- General strikes, aspects of, 416-17
- Labour movement history, 412-13
- Other countries, 413, 415
- Public Service, 415
- Strikes in public and semi-public sectors, 411-12
- Teachers, 415, 416
- Union security, 413
- Unions, QTA, CNTU, ELFO, QFL, CALPA, CATCA, 412-13, 415, 416
- Wagner Act (US) cited, 412
- Writings of Senator Forsey on labour movement in Canada, 412
- Speakers: Senators
 - Desruisseaux, Paul, 469-71
 - Marchand, Jean, 410-18

Labrador

See Newfoundland and Labrador

Lafond, Hon. Paul C.

- North Atlantic Assembly, Williamsburg conference, 540-3
- Canadian Armed Forces, statistics of personnel, 542-3
- Canadian unity, 541
- Defence aspects of NATO, 541, 542
- Defence committee of Senate and Commons, question of, 542-3
- Science and Technology Committee, 540-2
 - Address by Director of House Information Systems (US), 541
 - Future of parliamentary systems, 541
 - Narcotic control, technological development, unemployment and other resolutions, 542
 - Satellite technology, 542
 - Science and arms race, 542
- Regulations and other statutory instruments, 647-9
 - Commitments from departments on future procedures, 649
 - Committee recommendations, 648-9
 - Designated instruments officers, 648
 - Diaries of a Cabinet Minister*, by Richard Crossman, 647
 - Elective Dictatorship*, comments of Lord Hailsham published in The Listener, 647
 - Justice Minister's letter re explanation to committee on policy and legal position, 648
 - Subordinate legislation, editorial in Financial Post by Sir Harold Wilson, 647
- Regulations and other Statutory Instruments Committee
 - Report tabled, 685, printed as appendix, 690, see 694-7
- Tourist visitors to Parliament Buildings, greeting by guides, 1243

Laird, Hon. Keith

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 36-38
- Bilingualism, 37
- Government bureaucracy, 37-38
- Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, Standing Senate Committee
 - Reports, budgets
 - Agriculture, 204
 - Banking, Trade and Commerce, 204, 756
 - Foreign Affairs, 204
 - Health, Welfare and Science, 673
 - National Finance, 204
 - Science Policy, 204, 673, 756
 - Subcommittee on classifications, notice of meeting, 87
- James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 1008-09
 - Title or claim of third parties, 1008-09
- Labour, leadership of unions, 36-37
- Legislation, complexity and proliferation of, 38
- Senate committee work, 38
- Yukon, 36-37
 - Provincial status, adverse aspects of, 37

Lamontagne, Hon. Maurice, P.C.

- Rules of the Senate
 - Printing or publishing of anything relating to the proceedings of the Senate, 280
- Science policy
 - Recommendations of committee implemented by government, 175
 - Budgetary procedure, 175
 - Reorganization of granting councils, 175
 - Recommendations of committee not implemented by government, 175-6
 - Expenditures related to research and development, 175
 - Scientific manpower immobility, 175, 176
 - Secondary manufacturing industries, 175
 - Transfer of older researchers to private and public sectors, 175

Lamontagne, Hon. Maurice, P.C. - Concluded

Science Policy Committee

Authorization to publish and distribute Vol. 4 of report, 1264

Budget, 673

Expenses, 148

Meetings during Senate adjournment, 175

Meetings during Senate sittings, 504-05

Notice of motion for appointment of special committee of the Senate, 149

Organization meeting, 178

Report

Quorum of committee, 193

Terms of reference, 149, 175

Solar Energy Application bill C-309, 761

Incorporation as private institute, 761

Land surveys*See* Canada Lands Surveys bill C-4, 887, 948-9Lang, Hon. Daniel A.

Aeronautics and National Transportation bill C-46, 937, 973

Approval of Governor in Council for transfer of stock of air carrier or for issuance of licence, 937

Canadian Transport Commission authority, 973

Control of airlines by federal-provincial governments, 973

Pacific Western Airlines, Supreme Court decision re, 937, 973

Penalty, 937

Air Traffic Control Services Continuation bill C-63, 1310

Appropriation bill No. 1, 1977 C-44, 583

Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, Victoria meeting, 1213, 1225-42

Automotive trade, 1231-2

Beaufort Sea, 1228-30, 1237

Champlain-Richelieu flood control, 1230

Coastal pollution, 1226-7

Delegations, Canada and United States, 1225

Dickey-Lincoln dam project, 1230

Energy issues and multilateral concerns, 1235-6

Environmental issues, 1226-31

Flathead River, water degradation, 1230

Gas pipeline, 1236

Great Lakes, 1237

Non-tariff barriers, 1233

Oil pipeline, 1236-7

Remarks at Opening Plenary Session, by Martin O'Connell, M.P., 1239-42

St. Lawrence Seaway tolls, 1233-4

Security and cooperation in Europe, 1237

Tourist trade, 1232-3

Trade and economic issues, 1231-5

Two-hundred mile fishing limit, 1230-1

Currency and Exchange bill C-5, 1029-30, 1072

Assets, modification and valuation of Exchange Account, 1030

Auditing of account, 1030

Bretton Woods Agreements, 1029, 1030

Special drawing rights, 1030

Estimates (Appropriation bill C-44)

Projection of figures in dollars only, 583

Lang, Hon. Daniel A. - Concluded

- Foreign affairs, nuclear weapons, supply of CANDU reactors to Rumania, 960
- James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 1049
- Judges Act and other Acts in Respect of Judicial Matters bill C-50, 836, 882-4, 885
 - Attorney General and Minister of Justice, 883, 885
 - Canadian Judicial Council, 883, 884
 - Commissioner of Federal Judicial Affairs, 883
 - Salaries, 883-4
- National unity
 - Media coverage of speech by Senator Molson, question of privilege, 1005-06
 - Role of Senate, 277
- Petroleum Corporation Monitoring bill S-4, 985
 - Draftmanship of bill, 985
- Regulations and other statutory instruments, 386, 507-11
 - Bureaucratic authority beyond powers granted by Parliament, 509
 - Canadian Bar Journal* article by corporate lawyer re federal and provincial statutes, 507
 - Forbes* magazine article re economic waste in defective regulations, 507
 - Globe and Mail* article re unnecessary legislation, 507
 - Minister of Justice and Attorney General, status and function of, 509-10
 - New Depotism*, by Lord Hewart, 508
 - Recorded messages, 510
 - Scrutiny of bills, role of Senate committees, 510
 - Spectator*, London, excerpt from editorial re subordinate legislation, 506-07
 - Star*, Toronto, article by E.M. Howse, former United Church moderator, 511
 - Supremacy of Parliament and rule of law, disregard of, 509

Langlois, Hon. Leopold, Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate

- Agriculture Committee
 - Meetings during Senate sittings, 237, 374, 434-5, 544, 588, 678, 805
- Appropriation bill No. 5, 1976 C-28, 225-6, 231-3
- Appropriation bill No. 1, 1977 C-44, 552-3, 558-9, 576, 577-8, 584
- Appropriation bill No. 2, 1977 C-45, 585, 586, 591, 592-3, 594
- Appropriation bill No. 3, 1977 C-58, 978, 1014-15
- Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee
 - Meetings during Senate adjournments, 156
 - Meetings during Senate sittings, 173, 276, 471-2, 544, 561, 685, 730, 756, 807, 863, 944, 1016, 1052
- Blois, Hon. Frederick M., resignation from the Senate, 72
- Canada Day celebrations on Parliament Hill, parking for senators' cars, 1033
- Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, CRTC inquiry into CBC activities, 489, 499, 533-6
- Committee of Selection, appointment, 6
- Committee on Orders and Customs and Privileges of Parliament, appointment, 6
- Crown revenues, casual or other not provided by Parliament, 75
- Estimates (Appropriation bill C-28)
 - Alberta, maintenance of domestic oil price, 226
 - Assurance that passage of bill will not preclude further discussion of estimates, 237-8
 - Canada Assistance Plan, 226
 - Contracting-out payments and fiscal transfers to provinces, 226
 - Government expenditures and control of, 231-3
 - Auditor General's statements re, 231, 233
 - Glassco Commission report (1967), 232
 - Treasury Board President's report, 232, 233
- Housing, 226
- Indian and Eskimo affairs, 226
- Labour-intensive projects, 226
- Language education, 226

Langlois, Hon. Leopold - Continued

- Estimates (Appropriation bill C-28) - Concluded
 - Local Initiatives Programs, 226
 - Manpower training, 226
 - Swine flu immunization, 226
- Estimates (Appropriation bill C-44)
 - Transfer payments, 577-8
- Estimates (Appropriation bill C-45)
 - Borrowing authority, 585, 586, 591, 593
 - Communications, 592-3
 - External Affairs, 593
 - Government contingencies, centrally financed programs, student summer and youth employment, 592, 594
 - Great Lakes Pilotage Authority, 592
 - Heavy water plant purchase, 592
 - Municipal grants, 592, 593
 - Regional economic expansion, 592
 - Varying percentages of votes, 585, 591
- Estimates (Appropriation bill C-58)
 - CNR bonds, 1015
 - Energy, Mines and Resources, 1014-15
 - Pickering airport, 1014
- Estimates ref to com
 - Year ending Mar. 31/77
 - Supplementary (B), 144
 - Supplementary (C), 173
 - Supplementary (D), 465
 - Year ending Mar. 31/78, 429
- Export Development bill C-47, 834
- Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing bill C-37, 618, 619
- Foreign Affairs Committee
 - Meetings during Senate sittings, 205, 928-9
- Immigration, persons living in Canada under deportation orders or contrary to court rulings, 563
- Income Tax Conventions bill C-12, 936
- Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration Committee
 - Meetings during adjournments, 140
 - Organization meetings, 85
- James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 1062-7
 - Aboriginal rights, 1064
 - Extinguishment and compensation, crown authority for, 1065
 - Extinguishment of claims, 1062, 1064-7
 - Indians of Schefferville, negotiations with, 1066
 - Injunction to stop Quebec hydro project, 1062
 - Non-signatories, 1066-7
 - Statements of Indians' legal counsel, 1063
- Lefrançois, Hon. J. E., resignation from the Senate, 141
- Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee
 - Meetings during adjournments, 1160
- Library of Parliament Committee
 - Members, Senate, 84
- Maritime Code bill C-41, 1320, 1322

Langlois, Hon. Leopold - Concluded

- Miscellaneous Statute Law Amendment bill C-53, 865-6
 - Errors in Statutes, correction of, 866
 - Hospital insurance and diagnostic services, 865
 - National Library, 865
 - National tire safety mark, 866
 - Trade marks registrar, 866
- National Finance Committee
 - Meetings during Senate sittings, 144-5, 805-07
- Official languages, reappointment of Commissioner, 635
- Personality disorders and criminal behaviour, 192
- Printing of Parliament Committee
 - Members, Senate, 84
- Regulations and other statutory instruments, 783-5
 - Authority for statutory instruments, 784
 - Postal rates, authority for increase, 784-5
 - Procedural problems, 784
 - Statutory instrument, definition of, 784
 - Ultra vires*, question of, 784
 - Withholding of information from committee, 784
- Regulations and other Statutory Instruments Committee
 - Members, Senate, 84-85
- Restaurant of Parliament Committee
 - Members, Senate, 84
- Rules of the Senate
 - Discussion of ruling by Commons Speaker, 576
 - Referral of Bill C-37 to appropriate committee, 618
- Science Policy Committee
 - Meeting during Senate sitting, 374
- Seal hunt, resolution of US House of Representatives protesting event, 554
- Selection Committee
 - Appointments, 936
 - Report, amdt to, 84
- Senate
 - Business, 19, 52-53, 139, 167, 180, 181, 203, 205, 267, 307, 395, 429, 461, 475, 477, 533, 561-3, 629-30, 650, 673-4, 698-9, 730-1, 756-7, 807-08, 829, 833, 863-4, 875, 929-30, 975-6, 1032-3, 1106-07, 1160, 1287, 1311
 - Easter adjournment, 629-30
 - Summer adjournment, 1311
- Solar Energy Application bill C-309, 810-11
 - Referral of bill to Banking, Trade and Commerce Com, question, 810-11
- Speech from the Throne at opening of session, commencement of consideration, 6; termination of debate, 9
- Transport and Communications Committee
 - Meetings during Senate adjournments, 1245
 - Meetings during Senate sittings, 1140
- Unemployment Insurance Entitlements Adjustment bill C-52, 688, 689-90, 700-01
 - Extract from Bill C-27, 701
 - Termination of claims for persons 65 yrs. and over, 688
 - Appeals, 688, 689
 - Interest on payments claimed, 690, 701
 - Payments to estates, 689-90, 701
- Violence in the communications industry, report of Royal Commission, 930, 944

Lapointe, Hon. Renaude, Speaker of the Senate

Arrest of Soviet dissidents

Message to Government of Soviet Union conveying concern of Government of Canada, 428

Budget Speech, accommodation for senators in Senate gallery of Commons, 624

Canadian Parliamentary Guide, time limit for corrections, 273

Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization bill C-34

Motion (Senator Argue) that bill be not proceeded with, 1218, neg, 1218

Motion (Senator Hays) that bill be ref back to com, 1216, neg, 1217

Carter, Hon. Chesley W., retirement of, 1161

Clerk's receipts and disbursements (1976-77) ref to com, 770

Constitution of Canada, correspondence from Prime Minister to provincial premiers, 279, 280, 287-9

Helsinki Agreement

Motion that Senate of Canada support principles of Helsinki Declaration, agreed to, 962

Immigration bill C-24, 1249

Library of Parliament, report (1975-76), 244

Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate

Omission of names of senators in attendance at Senate sitting, 96

Official languages, report of Commissioner, 602

Opening of session, 1

Prorogation of session, 1328, 1330

Queen Elizabeth II, Her Majesty

Address of congratulations to Her Majesty the Queen on completion of twenty-fifth year of reign, 306-07;
address to Governor General re transmission of message, 306-07; message from Commons, 374;
acknowledgment from the Queen, 395

Rules of the Senate

Motion in amdt to motion for 2r, 794

Motion to adjourn debate, 795, 796

Printing or publishing of anything relating to the proceedings of the Senate, 279, 280, 287-9

Rulings and statements

Printing of letters re patriation of the Constitution as appendix to Debates, 287-9

Private bill from Commons for which no petition has been received, 790-1

Excerpt from May's Parliamentary Practice re, 790-1

Saccharin, study by Senate com on ban on, 631

Suspension of rule re 2r of Bill S-2, 185

Senate

Broadcasting of Senate proceedings in corridors during Senate sitting, 910

Simultaneous interpretation, 9

Senators, new, introduced in the Senate

Adams, Hon. Willie, 637

Bosa, Hon. Peter, 637

Ewasew, Hon. John, 250

Frith, Hon. Royce, 637

Marchand, Hon. Jean, P.C., 204

Olson, Hon. Horace Andrew (Bud), P.C., 637

Rizzuto, Hon. Pietro, 273

Steuart, Hon. David Gordon, 223

Solar Energy Application bill C-309, 790-1, 794, 795, 796, 797, 847, 848

Swine influenza immunization clinic, 224

Tributes to Speaker, 19-20, 25, 32, 42, 53, 57

Visitors

Commissioner of the Holy Land, Reverend Father George Germain, 86

Commonwealth Parliamentary Association Secretary General Sir Robin Vanderfelt, 730

Senegalese Parliament and International Association of French-speaking Parliaments, member Mr.
Christian Valentin, 189

Thailand, Their Excellencies Prince and Princess Prem Purachatra, 820

USSR delegation, 21

Venezuela parliamentary delegation, 390

Laskin, Rt. Hon. Bora, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada

Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General

Royal assent, 272

Speech from the Throne at prorogation of Second Session of Thirtieth Parliament, 1330

Law Reform Commission, 87, 89

Brief presented to Commission by Quebec women, 87, 89

Lawson, Hon. Edward M.

Judges bill C-50, 945

Salaries, 945

Labour, illegal strikes and penalties for, questions, 36

Leader of the Government in the Senate

Perrault, Hon. Raymond J., P.C.

Deputy

Langlois, Hon. Leopold

Leader of the Opposition in the Senate

Flynn, Hon. Jacques, P.C.

Deputy

Grosart, Hon. Allister

Legal and Constitutional Affairs, Standing Senate Committee

Expenses, 148

Meetings during Senate adjournments, 1160

Meetings during Senate sittings, 840, 1211-12

Members, 52

Reports

Canadian Human Rights bill C-25, rep without amdt, 1052

Criminal Law Amendment bill C-51, rep without amdt, 1243, 1248

James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, rep with comments but without amdt, 958-9

Judges bill C-50, rep without amdt, 928

Miscellaneous Statute Law Amendment bill C-53, rep without amdt, 928

Leger, Rt. Hon. Jules, His Excellency the Governor General of Canada

Speech at Opening of Session (read by Madam Leger), 1-6

Leonard, Hon. Thomas D'Arcy, the late

Tributes, 755-6

Library of Parliament, Standing Joint Committee

Librarian's report (1975-76), 244

Meeting during Senate adjournments, 457

Members, Senate, 84

Lucier, Hon. Paul Henry

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 10-12

Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline from western Arctic to southern Canada and continental United States, 1271-3

Lucier, Hon. Paul Henry - Concluded

Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline - Concluded

Studies and recommendations by:

Arctic Gas, 1272

Berger Inquiry, 1272

Foothills Pipe Lines (Yukon), 1272

Lysyk Report, 1272

National Energy Board, 1269

Yukon native groups, 1272

Yukon, 1272-3

Environmental, social and economic disruption, 1273

Heritage Fund, 1272; Yukon administration of, 1272

Hydro potential, development needs, 1272

Indian land claims, 1272

Personality disorders and criminal behaviour, 249

Yukon Territory, 10-13

Alaska Highway, 10

Council of Yukon Indians, 11

Dawson City, 10

Gas pipeline Alaska-Yukon-Alberta, proposal for, 12-13

Indian organizations, 11

Provincial status for Yukon, adverse aspects of, 12, 37

Territorial government role, in settlement of Indian land claims and other problems, 11

Tourism, 11

Lumber industry

Tariff on importation of softwood plywood, effect on Canadian industry, 189-90, 478-80, 556-8

Burchill lumber company, 556

Canadian Forestry Assoc. publication, excerpt from, 557

Forest industry potential, 557

Globe and Mail article 'Dropping Behind Against World Competition', 189

Investment improvements, 478-9

National Forest Week, 557

Plywood demonstrations in Japan, 479

Problems of high taxes, production and transportation costs, 478, 480

Reforestation, 557

Research requirements, 556-7

Tariff differential Canada-US, 478, 479

Terms of reference for study, suggestions, 557-8

Building codes, 558

Control factor and provincial jurisdiction, 557

Equipment renewal, 557

Log transportation, 557

Metric system, 558

Tariffs, 557

Unemployment in lumber plants, 189-90

US imports, 189, 478

Wastewood chips, 479

Speakers: Senators

Bell, Ann Elizabeth, 478-9, 480

Burchill, G. Percival, 189-90

Robichaud, Louis-J., 556-8

van Roggen, George C., 479-80

Macdonald, Hon. John M., Chief Opposition Whip in the Senate

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 39-41
- Advance Payments for Crops bill C-2, 645, 651-2
 - Agriculture acts, consolidation suggested, 652
 - Applications, 651
 - Organization, definition of, 652
 - Repayment guarantee, 652
 - Storable crops, 651
- Blois, Hon. Frederick M., resignation from the Senate, 73
- Canada Pension Plan bill C-49, 1130-1
 - Equality credits for spouses upon breakup of marriage, 1130-1
 - Recognition of women who work in home, 1130-1
- Clerestory of the Senate Chamber, 981, 1135-6
 - Furnishings, 1136
 - Walls and pictures, 1135-6
 - Windows, 1135
- Employment and Immigration Reorganization bill C-27, 1199, 1201
 - Unemployment statistics, 1199-1200, 1201
 - Cape Breton, 1199
 - Government role in providing employment, 1200-01
 - Weekend Magazine* article, 1199
 - Unemployment insurance qualifying period, 1200-01
- Health and social security programs, 41
- Income and price controls, 40-41
- Interprovincial visiting of young people, 41
- Local Initiatives Program, 41
- Nova Scotia
 - Canstel project, 40
 - Electrical energy costs, 40
 - Government-owned industry, 40
- Pension bill C-11, 667
 - Cessation of pension upon pensioner's death, 667
- Railway bill C-207, 771-2
 - Atlantic Provinces transportation program, 772
 - Notice of intention to expand or change existing line, 771-2
- Senate appointments, lack of opposition members, 1076
- Speaker pro tem, 63
- Unemployment, 41
- Yuzyk, Hon. Paul, felicitations on degree of Doctor of Laws, University of Saskatchewan, 789

Mackenzie Valley pipeline, Berger Commission report, 678, 686-7, 757, 915-19

- Implications arising from report, 915-19, 1266
 - Energy crisis, 916-19
 - Alberta reserves, 917
 - Canadian consumption of resources, 916
 - Exploration needs, 918
 - Hydrocarbon fuels, 916, 918
 - National energy conservation program, 917
 - Potential in offshore development, Athabasca tar sands, Canadian Arctic, 917
 - Statistics, 916-17
 - US congressional report re, 916
 - Environmental concerns, 918, 919
 - Expenditures re commission, native claims and environmentalists, 915-16
 - Native cultures, 918

Mackenzie Valley pipeline - Concluded

- Implications arising from report - Concluded
 - Representations from NWT Council, 757
 - Rights of minority vs majority, 919
 - Ten-year delay, proposal questioned, 918
- See Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline from western Arctic to southern Canada and continental United States, 1266-87

Macnaughton, Hon. Alan A., P.C.

- Appropriation bill No. 1, 1977 C-44 (Chairman, Committee of the Whole), 574-84
- Appropriation bill No. 2, 1977 C-45 (Chairman, Committee of the Whole), 592-4
- Bank Act and Quebec Savings Banks bill C-39, 675-6
 - Dicennial revision, reasons for delay, 675
 - Extension of date of power to do business, 675
 - Precedents, 675
- Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation bill C-3, 900-02
 - Debentures or securities payable outside Canada, 901
 - Deposits, definition of, 901
 - Expenses of liquidator of member institution, 901
 - Losses, 901
 - Premium on insured deposits, 900
 - Purpose and history of act, 900-01
 - Quebec plan, 901
 - Rebates of premiums, 901
 - Repayment to government of original capital, 901
- Conflict of interest
 - Resignation of members of Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee upon discussion of banking legislation, 122
- Diefenbaker, Olive E., the late, 271
- Income tax, subject matter of Bill C-22, rep of com, 204, 213-16

MacPherson Commission on Transportation, 247, 396-8

- Extracts from report re Newfoundland problems and requirements, 397-8
- Lack of federal implementation of recommendations, 398

Manitoba, Garrison Dam, proposed diversion of water, 436Manning, Hon. Ernest C., P.C.

- Excise Tax bill C-54, 798-9
 - Air transportation tickets, 798
- Mackenzie Valley pipeline, implications arising from Berger Commission report, 915-19
 - Energy crisis, 916-18
 - Alberta reserves, 917
 - Canadian consumption, 916
 - Exploration needs, 918
 - Hydrocarbon fuels, 916, 918
 - National energy conservation program, 917
 - Potential in offshore development, Athabasca tar sands, Canadian Arctic, 917
 - Statistics, 916-17
 - US congressional report re, 916
 - Environmental concerns, 918, 919
 - Expenditures re commission, native claims and environmentalists, 915-16
 - Native cultures, 918
 - Rights of minority vs majority, 919
 - Ten-year delay, proposal questioned, 918

Manning, Hon. Ernest C., P.C. - Concluded

- National unity, 669
- Prowse, Hon. J. Harper, the late, 8
- Royal Canadian Mounted Police, agreements between Government of Canada and provincial governments, 686, 757-8

Manpower and Immigration Department

- Manpower Division, rep of Finance Committee, 44-50, 93-95, 136-9, 498-9, 512-30
 - Comments on conclusions and recommendations of Senate report, 515-30
 - Editorial comments in various newspapers, 47
 - Excerpt from statement by Hon. Robert Andras, 47
 - Expenditures on training and basic education, 46-47, 95
 - Listing of job vacancies with Manpower Div., 95
 - Private placement agencies, 94-95
 - Professional and executive placement services, 95
 - Role as unemployment agency, 46, 50, 94
 - Statement by Minister of Manpower and Immigration, 512-15
 - Divergent views, 514-15
 - Employment service, 513-14
 - Job creation, 514
 - Manpower training, 514
 - Welfare assistance, 47

Marchand, Hon. Jean, P.C. (Introduced in the Senate Dec. 9/76)

- Air Traffic Control Services Continuation bill C-63, 1299-1303
 - Binding arbitration, 1300-01
 - Employers negating of union rights, 1301
 - Government role in dispute, 1301, 1302
 - Responsibility of union in protection of public interest, 1300, 1301
 - Right to strike, 1300, 1302, 1303
 - Union leaders, irresponsibility of, 1302, 1303
 - Unions' status, 1301
- Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Radio Canada, 414
 - Freedom of information, 414
 - Lack of professional ethics in reporting, 414
- James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 1044, 1045, 1094
 - Extinguishment of claims, 1044
- Labour relations, effects on the Canadian economy, 410-18
 - Asbestos workers strike, 413
 - Binding arbitration, 415
 - Canadian Labour Congress, call for general strike, 412
 - Exploitation of union members, 413-15
 - Freedom of the majority, 412-13
 - Front Commun, bargaining agent, 413, 416
 - Labour movement history, 412-13
 - Public Service, 415
 - Strikes in public and semi-public sectors, 411-12, 416-17
 - Teachers, 415, 416
 - Union security, 413
 - Unions, QTA, CNTU, ELFO, QFL, CALPA, CATCA, 412-13, 415, 416
 - Wagner Act (US) cited, 412
 - Writings of Senator Forsey on labour movement in Canada, 412

Marchand, Hon. Jean, P.C. - Concluded

Quebec

- Budget increase, 418
- Linguistic problem, 417
- Misunderstandings, 418
- Problems prior to provincial election, 411
- Separatism, 411
- Unity in Canada, 417-18; regional differences, 417

Maritime code

- Administration and policy, 703
- Builder's mortgage, 703
- Canadian registry, 703
- Canadian shipowners N.M. Paterson and Sons, 702
- Canadian ships in foreign waters, foreign ships in Canadian waters, 702
- Coasting trade, 724
- Detention of ships, 702
- Load lines, 702
- National character and status of ship, 703, 725
- Offences and penalties, 702, 724
- Ownership provisions, 703
- Phasing out of Canada Shipping Act, 723
- Registration of mortgage or of ship, 724
- Regulatory power, 725
- Structure of act, 702

Speakers: Senators

- Bourget, Maurice, 1324-5
- Cook, Eric, 701-03
- Greene, J. J., 1323-4
- Haig, J. Campbell, 1313-18, 1319-20
- Langlois, Leopold, 1320, 1322
- Phillips, Orville H., 725-6
- Smith, George I., 722-5, 1320-2, 1323, 1324

Maritime Code bill C-41. 1r, 677; 2r, 701-03, 722-6; ref to com, 726; rep with amdts, 1313-18, 1319-25; 3r, 1325-6

McCain Foods, Florenceville, New Brunswick

- CBC documentary program re, 229-30
- Questions re, 245-6, 280-1, 286

McDonald, Hon. A. Hamilton

- Flag, Canadian, distribution to members of Parliament, 442
- North Atlantic Assembly, Williamsburg conference, 473-5, 492-6
 - Canadian Armed Forces, statistics on personnel, 496
 - Defence committee of Senate and Commons, question of, 495-6
 - Energy supplies, 494
 - European Defence Cooperation, subcommittee report, 492
 - Helsinki Agreement, 475
 - Military equipment, standardization and interoperability of, 492-3
 - Military tour of various countries, 495
 - NATO forces, disparities in strength of, 493-4
 - Nimitz* warship, 495
 - Nuclear weapons, 493
 - Suez Canal, statistics on use of, 494-5
 - Technical missiles, research and development of, 492
 - USSR, 474, 475, 476, 493-4
 - Warsaw Pact, 474, 492, 494
- Oil shipments to Western Europe, 405
- Rules of the Senate
 - Committee power to act in referral for study of any subject matter, 630-1

McDonald, Hon. A. Hamilton - Concluded

- Saccharin, ban on, 630, 631, 641-2
 - Diabetics affected by ban, 642
 - Inaccuracies in cancer research testing, 641-2
- Western European Union Assembly, Paris conference, 405

McElman, Hon. Charles

- Burchill, Hon. G. Percival, the late, 1312-13
- Electoral boundaries readjustment bills, 1105
- Financial Administration and Satisfied Securities bill C-8, 836, 837
 - Discharge of securities taken in form of liens, etc., 836
- Immigration bill C-24, 1252-3, 1254
 - Senate committee role in amending legislation, 1252-3
- James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 1041-5, 1047, 1097
 - Extinguishment of claims, 1042-3, 1044-5, 1047, 1097
 - Minority rights, excerpt from The Unreformed Senate of Canada, 1043-4
 - Quebec undertaking to negotiate, 1042
 - Senate responsibility, 1043-4
- Maritime Code bill C-41, 1323
- North Atlantic Assembly, Williamsburg conference, 233-6
 - Articles and comments re North Atlantic Assembly, 235
 - Assembly publication, 235
 - President of Assembly (1974), 235
 - Washington Star, 235
 - Canadian delegates, 233-4
 - Communism, 235; Euro-Communists, 235
 - Economic Committee, 235-6
 - Energy, oil prices and security of supply, 236
 - OPEC, 236
 - Italian government, 234-5
 - Le Parti Quebecois election, 236
 - NATO member nations, 234
 - North Atlantic defence shield, 234
 - Soviet bloc, economic war, 236
 - UK currency crisis, 234
- Senate
 - Broadcasting of Senate proceedings in corridors during Senate sitting, 810
 - The Unreformed Senate of Canada*, excerpt re minority rights, 1043
- Solar Energy Application bill C-309, 764, 810

McGrand, Hon. Fred A.

- Personality disorders and criminal behaviour, motion that Health, Welfare and Science Committee report on, 190-1, 554-6
 - Acadia University study on Springhill medium-security penitentiary, 554
 - Birth Without Violence*, by Dr. Leboyer, 191
 - Brain damage at birth, 191
 - Canadian Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children, 191
 - Children with learning problems, article in Ottawa Citizen, 191
 - Conference on learning disabilities, Ottawa (Oct./77), 555
 - Correspondence from persons in professional fields and other areas, 190, 554
 - Death penalty for young offenders, justification questioned, 555
 - Globe and Mail* article re committee visit to British Columbia penitentiary, 555
 - Minimal brain dysfunction, The First Three Years of Life, by Dr. Burton White, 554-5
 - Preventive criminology, 555
 - Research at Johns Hopkins Hospital, 191
 - Senate role in study, 555-6
 - Tree Foundation, research needs, 555

McIlraith, Hon. George J., P.C.

- Bell Canada bill S-2, 196
- Constitution of Canada, correspondence from Prime Minister to provincial premiers, 277, 288
- Criminal Law Amendment bill C-51, 1165-6, 1167
 - Custody and release of inmates, 1166
 - Dangerous offenders, 1166
 - Electronic surveillance, 1166
 - Firearms control, 1165-6
 - Acquisition certificate, 1165
 - Careless handling, 1165
 - Possession of firearms during commission of offence, 1166
 - Seizure of firearms, 1165
 - Weapons other than for sports use, 1165
 - Parole Board members, 1166
 - Prisons and reformatories, administration of, 1166
- Immigration bill C-24, 1251-2
 - Powers of Governor in Council, 1251-2
- Judges Act and other Acts in respect of Judicial Matters bill C-50, 823-5, 885-6, 945
 - Appointment of additional judges, 825, 885
 - Commissioner of Federal Judicial Affairs, 824
 - County court judges, 824
 - Judicial Council, 824, 885
 - Registrar, Supreme Court of Canada, 824, 885
 - Residence requirement, 825
 - Responsibility of Justice Department, 824
 - Salaries and conference allowances, 824-5
 - Supremacy of law, 824
 - Workload of courts, 824
- Senate
 - Appointments, lack of opposition members, 1075
 - Business, 244

Metric Conversion

- Statute Law (Metric Conversion) Amendment bill C-23, 1163, 1171-4, 1203-06, 1214, 1288

Mexico

- Interparliamentary meeting, Canada and Mexico, 705-07, 713-14, 869-71, 872-3, 1104-05
 - Address by Senator Belisle, 872-3
 - Canadian delegates and Mexican participants, 706, 714
 - Canadian-Mexican trade, 870
 - Developing countries, economic activity and living standards, 1104-05
 - Discussion subjects, 1104
 - Energy resources, utilization and research, 870
 - Foreign investment laws of Mexico, 870
 - Industrial cooperation, 707
 - International Economic Cooperation, Conference on, 1105
 - International relations, 705-06, 870-1, 1104
 - Joint communique, 713-14
 - Nuclear weapons, Treaty of Tlatcloclo, 871
 - Political background of Mexico, 869
 - Tourism, 870
 - Trade imbalance, 707
- Speakers: Senators
 - Belisle, Rheal, 869-71, 872-3
 - Bonnell, Lorne, 1104-05
 - Molgat, Gildas L., 705-07, 713-14

Michaud, Hon. Herve J.

Agriculture

Kent County can be Saved

Agricultural potential for economic activity and employment, 482

Beef industry, 482

FAFAM, letters from chairman of, 481

Gleaner, Fredericton, article titled 'A Valuable Study', 482

L'Evangeline, Moncton, reports on committee work, 480, 481

Maritime Cooperative Services Ltd., brief presented by general manager, 482

NewStart Inc., comment from director of, 483

Rural deterioration in Kent County, 481-2

Times, Moncton, article titled 'Act on the Report', 482

National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions, 837-9

Language poll, 839

New Brunswick, 837-9

Acadians, 837-9

Education and religious communities, 838

Government employment, English-French, 839

Historical foundation, 837-8

Parti Acadien, 839

Statistics, 837, 838

Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate

Bilingual format, 181

Omission of names of senators in attendance at Senate sitting, 96

Speech from the Throne, errors in English and French texts, 9-10

Miscellaneous statute law

Errors in Statutes, correction of, 866

Hospital insurance and diagnostic services, 865

National library, 865

National tire safety mark, 866

Trade marks registrar, 866

Speakers: Senators

Langlois, Leopold, 865-6

Walker, David A., 908-09

Miscellaneous Statute Law Amendment bill C-53. 1r, 820; 2r, 865-6, 908-09; ref to com, 909; rep without amdt, 928; 3r, 945; r.a., 1031

Molgat, Hon. Gildas L.

Advance Payments for Crops bill C-2, 643-5, 653, 655-6

Administrative costs, 644

Applications, 645

Defaults in payments, 644

Delivery restrictions, 643

Grains covered for advance payments, 643

Maximum advance to individual, 644

Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act background, 656

Repayment guarantee, 643, 644

Services supplied by organization, 653, 655-6

'Significant portion of the crop', 655

Storable crops, 643-4

Molgat, Hon. Gildas L. - Concluded

- Mexico, Canadian Parliamentarians visit to, 705-07, 713-14
 - Canadian delegates and Mexican participants, 706, 714
 - History of association of Canada with Mexico, 705-06
 - Industrial cooperation, 707
 - Joint communique, 713-14
 - Trade imbalance, 707
- Statute Law (Metric Conversion) Amendment bill C-23, 1171-4, 1205-06
 - Acts amended:
 - Consumer packaging and labelling, 1173
 - Gas inspection, 1173
 - Oil and gas production and conservation, 1173
 - Regional development incentives, 1173
 - Weights and measures, 1173
 - Educational and public awareness campaign, 1173
 - Grain handling industry, 1172-3
 - International system (SI), 1172; US, 1172
 - Metric Commission, 1172
 - Metric Conversion in Canada, White Paper on (1970), 1171, 1172
 - National program of guideline dates, 1172

Molson, Hon. Hartland de M.

- Banking legislation, referral to Banking, Trade and Commerce Com, 130-1, 132
 - Conflict of interest of committee members, 130-1, 132
- Burchill, Hon. G. Percival, the late, 1313
- Canadian Human Rights bill C-25, 844
 - Language rights, 884
- Canadian Press coverage of Senate proceedings and attendance of senators, 374-5
- Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization bill C-34, 1184
- Committee meetings during Senate sittings, 374-5, 806-07
- Historic building in St. Jean, Quebec, proposed demolition of, 1164, 1213-14
- Leonard, Hon. Thomas D'Arcy, the late, 755
- National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions, 986-8, 1005-06
 - Media coverage of speech, question of privilege, 1005-06
 - Quebec, 986-8
 - 'A National Understanding — The Official Languages of Canada', 986
 - Downgrading of Anglophone community, 987-8
 - Excerpt from newspaper article re language instruction in schools, 986-7
 - Excerpt from speech of Abraham Lincoln on equality, 988
 - Excerpt from speech of Sir Wilfrid Laurier re question of Canada breakup (1894), 988
 - Heritage of Molson family in Quebec, 986, 988
 - Misunderstandings, 987-8
 - Statistics re English-French population, 986
- Public Works Department, Langevin Building renovations, 53
- Rules and Orders, Standing Senate Committee
 - Report re changes in Rules, 862-3, adopted, 909-10; date of coming into force, 910
- Rules of the Senate
 - Pecuniary interest of senator in matter ref to com, 909, 910
 - Question and inquiry, definition of, 909-10
 - Question of privilege, participation of Speaker in discussion, 909
 - Question placed on Order Paper, 910
 - Question, supplementary, 909-910
 - Quoting from Commons Hansard, 1184

Molson, Hon. Hartland de M. - Concluded

- Solar Energy Application bill C-309, 763, 764
 - Point of order re ref of subject matter to com, 763, 764
- Standing committees membership, question, 85
- Team Canada
 - Organization for future international hockey tournaments, question, 686
 - Performance at World Hockey Tournament in Vienna, 641

Monarchy, The

- Excerpt from speech of Queen Elizabeth at Olympic Games, 118
- See* Queen Elizabeth II

Morocco

- Income Tax Conventions bill C-12, 829, 900, 932-6

Motor vehicle safety

- Compliance with standards, self-certification by manufacturers and importers, 906-07
- Manufacture, motor vehicle, safety standards, definitions of, 907
- National safety mark, 907
- Notices of defect, 907, 908
- Offensive drivers, 913
- Penalties, 908
- Safety standards, enforcement of, 906
- Seat belts, 907
- Statistics on road safety since proclamation of 1971, 907, 913
- Speakers: Senators
 - Haig, J. Campbell, 913-14
 - Riley, Daniel A., 906-08

Motor Vehicle Safety bill C-36. 1r, 874; 2r, 906-08, 913-14; 3r, 930; r.a., 941National Ballet of Canada, twenty-fifth anniversary, 145-7*National Capital Region, Special Joint Committee

- Reconstitution of committee, question, 193, 229

National Finance, Standing Senate Committee

- Authorization to review com recommendations on Manpower Div., Dept. Manpower and Immigration, 477
- Estimates, authority to examine and report on
 - Year ending Mar. 31/75, 44-50, 93-95, 136-9
 - Year ending Mar. 31/77, 97
 - Supplementary (B), 144
 - Supplementary (C), 173
 - Supplementary (D), 465
 - Year ending Mar. 31/78, 429
- Expenses re examination of legislation and other matters, 124
- Meeting during Senate sitting, 144-5

National Finance, Standing Senate Committee - Concluded

Reports

- Employment and Immigration Reorganization bill C-27, rep without amdt, 1213
- Estimates Mar. 31/75, Dept. Manpower and Immigration, 44-50, 93-95, 136-9, 498-9, 512-30
- Estimates year ending Mar. 31/77
 - Supplementary (B) and (C), 204, 209-12, 217-21
 - Supplementary (D), 477, 484-8, 491
- Estimates year ending Mar. 31/78, 911, 923-7
- Government Expenditures Restraint bill C-19, rep without amdt, 267
- Terms of reference, 97
- Work of committee, 93-94, 211

National Gallery of Canada

- Original paintings owned by Gallery, questions re, 700-01, 1053

National Symbols, see Flag, CanadianNational unity

- Equality of opportunity, 2-3
- Federal-provincial relations, 119
- Individual freedoms, 5
- Joint Committee on the Constitution, consideration of report, 665
- Proposed committee on regional interests, question, 149-50, 641
- Proposed debate, question, 644-5
- Quebec concerns, 665
- Senate participation in debate on, 93
- Senate role in, questions re, 277-9
- Separatism, 118-19
- See following item*

National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions, 698, 707-12, 733-7, 741-4, 752-4, 767-9, 772-4, 778-83, 799-802, 811-13, 825-8, 837-9, 866-9, 914-15, 949-57, 985-8, 1005-06, 1117-19, 1132-5, 1141-2, 1154-8

Acadians, 773-4, 837-9, 957, 1132, 1134, 1155-6

Areas of concern, 711

Beef industry inquiry, 811-12

Bilingualism and biculturalism, 734-8, 742, 753, 767-8, 868, 869

Air pilots' strike, Quebec, 767

Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism, 767-8

Excerpts from report of Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, 742

British Columbia, 709, 779-81, 786

Brief from South Cariboo Labour Council of Williams Lake to BC federal Liberal caucus, 780

British Colonist, Victoria, article of 1871 upon BC joining Confederation, 781

Statement of Attorney General in BC Legislature, 781

Statement from Vancouver Board of Trade, 780, 786

Canadian citizenship, 734

Confederation costs, 710-11

Constituency contacts at six-week intervals, proposal, 711-12

Constitutional reform, 711

Dene and Inuit, 782-3, 950

Draft agreement between Dene people and Canadian government, 950

Native communities and rights, 782-3

Northern Frontier, Northland Homeland, by Mr. Justice Berger, 781-3

Ownership of lands and other rights, 950

Special status, 950

National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions - Continued

Economic prosperity and future of Canada, 779

Education

Canada Studies Foundation, 868-9

Canadian history books of note, 867

Canadian history, lack of knowledge of, 736, 737, 753, 867, 950-7

Derogatory teaching re Indians, 827

English constitutional law, 952

Gazette article by Quebec Minister of Culture, 953

Letter in reply, 953

Globe and Mail article and excerpts from letters re history teaching, 952

Indoctrination of political views through media, 827-8

Le Devoir article by former cabinet minister re Senate, 951

Le Devoir article by Professor Rothney on language education, 953-4

Maclean's article by Professor Verney, 952

Letter in reply, 953

Manitoba ban on French language in schools, 868

Provincial departments of education, preparation of curricula, 867

Provincial jurisdiction, 827

Quebec ban on Canadian history, flag and national anthem, 915

Quebec ban on 'O! Canada' game, 868

Quebec Teachers' Corporation, 753

So Little for the Mind, by Professor Hilda Neatby, 951

Statistics on provincial French-speaking population, 954-5

Student unemployment, 828

Teacher training, 827, 867

Teaching of Marxism in Quebec schools, 915

What Culture? What Heritage?, excerpt from 868

Excerpt from letter from Dr. Paul Campbell (Moral Re-Armament), 828

Excerpt from speech by Harry Boyle, 712

Excerpt from speech by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, 710

French Academy traditions, 741

Heirs of Lord Durham, report re anglicizing of French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec, 773

Human dignity, 826-7, 828

Immigration policy, 735-6

Individual responsibility, 1157-8

Language poll, 839

Media coverage of speech by Senator Molson, 1005-06

Minority rights, 753-4

Multiculturalism, 768, 955-6

Myths regarding Canada, 709

National crisis, 742

New Brunswick, 837-9, 957

Acadians

Education and religious communities, 838

French population, 957

Government employment, English-French, 839

Historical foundation, 837-8

Parti Acadien, 839

Statistics, 837, 838

Newfoundland and Labrador, 709, 799-801, 826

Disappearance of culture, historic sites and monuments, 825

Economic prospects, 800

Excerpt from speech of Nfld. Finance Minister, 800

Fisheries, 801

National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions - ContinuedNewfoundland and Labrador - Concluded

- Government expenditures, provincial and federal, 800
- Hydro and oil potential, 800, 801
- Industries, depletion of, 799-800
- Labrador Mining and Exploration Company and other private enterprises, 800-01
- Lack of federal capital, 826
- Public debt, 826
- Resource limitations, 826
- Social welfare and standard of living benefits, 800

Nova Scotia Acadians, 773-4

- Bilingualism, 773
- Economic life, 774
- Ferry service, 774
- Fishing industry, 774
- Intermarriage of French and English, 774

Participation of Canadians in politics, 741-2

Partisan political activity, 743-4

- Excerpt from speech of Hon. Robert Stanfield, 743-4

Prime Minister's statement (Nov. 24/76), 781

Prince Edward Island, 1141-2

- Confederation Conference, 1141-2

Property rights, 742

Provincial rights, 742, 744

Provincial school systems and teaching of French language, 736

Quebec Act of 1774, BNA Act and Official Languages Act, 735

Quebec, 708, 744, 779-80, 801-02, 955-6, 986-8, 1133-4, 1142, 1155-6, 1157

- A National Understanding — The Official Languages of Canada*, 986

Economic relationship, 801

- Excerpt from newspaper article re language instruction in schools, 986-7

- Excerpt from speech of Abraham Lincoln on equality, 988

- Excerpt from speech of Sir Wilfrid Laurier re question of Canada breakup (1894), 988

- Heritage of Molson family in Quebec, 986, 988

- Misunderstandings, 768, 780, 955-6, 987-8

- Parti Quebecois, 734, 737, 802

Problems of negotiation settlement, 801-02

- Boundaries, 801-02

- National assets and debt, etc., 801

- Native and minority rights, 801

- Transportation and right of access, 802

Statistics re English-French population, 986

Treaty of Paris (1763), 802

Rail Networks, implementation of Hall Commission recommendations, 812-13

Regional Disparity and Living Together, 812

Richelieu custom of transforming secret to public, 741

Saskatchewan, 734-5, 736

- Immigrants, 736

- School system and language training, 734-5, 736

Senate role in study, 708, 742, 743, 769, 812, 825-6, 1117, 1133

Suggestion that debate on National Unity be published in documentary form, 779, 866

Yukon and Northwest Territories, political development, 781

National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions - Concluded

Speakers: Senators

Austin, Jack, 778-83, 786
 Bosa, Peter, 767-9
 Carter, Chesley W., 825-8
 Cook, Eric, 799-802
 Cottleau, Ernest G., 772-4
 Desruisseaux, Paul, 914-15
 Forsey, Eugene A., 949-57
 Fournier, Michel, 1132-5
 Frith, Royce, 741-4, 812, 839
 Graham, B. Alasdair, 1154-8
 Greene, J.J., 1117-19
 Inman, F. Elsie, 1141-2
 Lang, Daniel A., 1005-06
 Michaud, Herve J., 837-9
 Molson, Hartland de M., 986-8
 Olson, Horace A., 811-13
 Perrault, Raymond J., 698, 707-12
 Riley, Daniel A., 957
 Rizzuto, Pietro, 752-4
 Stanbury, Richard J., 866-9
 Steuart, David G., 733-7

See Confederation, proposed special joint committee to examine matters of interest to all Canadians, 275, 293-6, 437-41, 444-7, 566-73

Neiman, Hon. Joan

Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing bill C-37, 620
 James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 1022-4, 1048-9
 Extinguishment of claims, 1023
 Non-status Indians, 1023-4
 Quebec Boundaries Extension Act, 1023
 Quebec undertaking to negotiate, 1023, 1024
 Rules of the Senate
 Referral of Bill C-37 to appropriate committee, 620

New Brunswick

Acadians, 837-9
 CBC documentary program The Fifth Estate re McCain Foods, 229-30, 245-6, 280-1, 286
 Kent County, report entitled Kent County can be Saved, 143, 197-200, 480-3
 Offshore mineral rights
 Federal-Provincial Memorandum of Understanding and Joint Communiqué between Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, 289, 304-05
See National unity

Newfoundland and Labrador

Boundaries of Canada (1964), 439
 Canadian National Railway, 398-400
 Hotel accommodation, 399-400
 Substitution of bus service, 399
 User-pay principle, 400
 Churchill Falls hydro development, Quebec contract re, 294
 Quebec profits, 294
 Termination of contract in event of Quebec status as foreign power, 294

Newfoundland and Labrador - Concluded

- Come Home Year, 400
- Encyclopedia Canadiana*, excerpt re Labrador boundaries, 439
- Ferry service and effect of strike, 401
- National unity, 707-12, 799-801, 826
- Newfoundland Railway, takeover by federal government, 398
- Ownership of Labrador, 293-4
- Referral of question to Court of International Justice, requirement of Nfld's consent for, 293-4
- 'Power Play in Newfoundland', article in Globe and Mail, 293
- Quebec claims, 293-4, 439, 444-5, 447
- Roads to Resources program, 398
- Seal hunt, resolution of US House of Representatives protesting event, 553-4
- Secretary of State for External Affairs, appt. of Newfoundlander to position, 54
- Terms of Union, excerpt from BNA Act re, 293, 398-9
- Tourism, 400
- Transportation by land, air and sea, regional differences, 201-03, 240-3, 246-9, 396-402
 - Air transportation, 203
 - Extracts from MacPherson Commission report on problems and requirements, 397-8
 - Ferry rates, 202; subsidy, 203
 - Freight rates and assistance for, 203
- See* National unity

Newspapers, periodicals, speeches, interviews, etc., excerpts from

- Albertan*, Calgary, article re Finance Committee study of Manpower Division, Dept. of Manpower and Immigration, 48
- Barker, Dr. E.T., remarks made before Health, Welfare and Science Committee re personality disorders and criminal behaviour, 208
- Boundaries of Canada* (1964), cited as to Labrador boundaries, 439
- Bulletin*, Edmonton, comment re column 'The Road Ahead' written by the late Hon. J. Harper Prowse during his journalistic career, 7
- Canadian Press*, coverage of Senate proceedings and attendance of senators, 374-6
- Citizen*, Ottawa, article by Charles Lynch re Finance Committee on Manpower Division, Dept. of Manpower and Immigration, 47
- Citizen*, Ottawa, article by D. Fullerton re economic aspects of separatism, 440
- Citizen*, Ottawa, article re solar energy, 727
- Diaries of a Cabinet Minister*, by Richard Crossman, 647
- Dynamic Change and Accountability in the Canadian Market Economy*, report of Skeoch-McDonald Commission, 1148
- Letter from Dr. Skeoch, 1148
- Effective Dictatorship*, comments of Lord Hailsham published in The Listener, 647
- Encyclopedia Canadiana*, excerpt re Labrador boundaries, 439
- Energy Strategy for Canada*, 721
- Excerpt from speech by Harry Boyle, re National unity, 712
- Excerpt from speech by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, re National unity, 710
- Financial Post*, article re Finance Committee study on Manpower Division, Dept. of Manpower and Immigration, 48
- Financial Post*, editorial re subordinate legislation, 647
- Free Press Publications*, Ottawa, article by Margaret Piton re Finance Committee study on Manpower Div., Dept. of Manpower and Immigration, 47
- Free Press*, Winnipeg, article re Finance Committee study on Manpower Division, Dept. of Manpower and Immigration, and on Information Canada, 47-48

Newspapers, periodicals, speeches, interviews, etc. - Concluded*Globe and Mail*, Toronto

- Article entitled 'Power Play in Newfoundland', 293
- Article re committee visit to BC Penitentiary, 555
- Article re equalization grants to Nova Scotia, 9
- Article re Finance Committee study on Manpower Div., Dept. of Manpower and Immigration, 48
- Article re forestry industry entitled 'Dropping Behind Against World Competition', 189
- Article re life stories of vicious criminals, 191
- Article re mentally ill babies, 252
- Article re saccharin and use of cyclamates, 633, 657
- Article re temporary resignation of members of Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, 122
- Article re unemployment on closing of MacMillan Bloedel mills, 189

Guardian, Charlottetown, statement of Transport Minister re transportation subsidies, 201-02

Illustrated London News, article by Sir Arthur Bryant re immigration problems, 55

International convention of toxicologists, Toronto, article on saccharin ban, 632

Justice Minister's letter re explanation to committee on policy and legal position, 648

La Presse, Montreal, article re bilingual air communications, 1970 report, 257

Letter from M. Narvey, Manitoba University, to Premier Levesque re James Bay and Northern Quebec Native claims settlement, 719-20

Media coverage of speech on National Unity by Senator Molson, 1005-06

North Atlantic Assembly President, speech re role of Assembly, 235

Parti Quebecois, statement by Premier Levesque re Canada's state of disunity, 118

Province, Vancouver, article entitled 'It's no lunatic fringe', report of meeting of Committee for Western Independence, 118-19

Queen Elizabeth, excerpt from speech at Olympic Games opening, re Canada's constitutional differences, 118

Star, Montreal, report of speech by Senator Forsey to Canadian Club, question of privilege, 376

Star, Toronto, article re International Women's Year, 88

Star, Washington, comment re North Atlantic Assembly, 235

Statement of Mount-Royal representative re James Bay and Northern Quebec Native claims settlement, 718

Statement of Premier Levesque re negotiations of James Bay and Northern Quebec Native claims settlement, 719

Sun, Toronto

- Article re interest of Senator Davey in racing business, 942-4
- Article re remarks of MP from Central Nova re Hydroculture Luwassa, 943

Sun, Vancouver

- Article by Paul St. Pierre re Transport Dept., 241
- Report on Senate by John Sawatsky, 376

Telegraph Journal, Saint John, article re membership of Finance Committee, 48

The Fifth Estate, documentary program re McCain Foods, 229-30

Time magazine, article on saccharin ban, 633

Tribune, Winnipeg, editorial tribute to Finance Committee members, 47

United Press dispatch, Washington, article on saccharin ban, 632

United States Commission on Education, report entitled 'Education in a Free Society' 56

White, Dr. Burton, The First Three Years of Life, 554-5

Norrie, Hon. Margaret

Blois, Hon. Frederick M., 74

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Documentary program The Fifth Estate re McCain Foods, 229-30

Questions re, 245-6, 280-1, 286, 465-7

Government Organization (Scientific Activities) bill C-26, 880

Norrie, Hon. Margaret - Concluded

- Personality disorders and criminal behaviour, 206-09
 - Daycare for young children, neglect of, 207
 - Excerpt from remarks of Dr. E.T. Barker before Health, Welfare and Science Committee, 208
 - Illiteracy, Nova Scotia statistics, 207, 208-09
 - Learning disabilities, 207
 - Liquor advertisements in Maclean's magazine, 208
 - Transposition of words and phonetic spelling problems, 207
 - Working mothers of children under 14 yrs. of age, statistics, 207
 - 'Youth in Trouble', conference of BC and Vancouver Assoc. of Canadian Learning Disabilities, 206

North Atlantic Assembly, Williamsburg conference, 233-6, 281-5, 473-5, 491-6, 540-3, 545-7; see also appendix to Debates of Feb. 1/77

- Articles and comments re North Atlantic Assembly, 235
 - Assembly publication, 235
 - President of Assembly (1974), 235
 - Washington Star, 235
- Canadian Armed Forces, statistics on personnel, 496, 542-3, 546
- Canadian delegates, 233-4, 281
- Canadian unity, 541
- Communism, 235; Euro-Communists, 235, 282
- Defence aspects of NATO, 541, 542
- Defence committee of Senate and Commons, question of, 495-6, 542-3, 546
- Education, Cultural Affairs and Information Committee, 281-2
- Energy supplies, 235, 494
- European Defence Cooperation, subcommittee report, 492
- Free flow of information, 282
- Helsinki Agreement, 282, 283-4, 475
- Italian government, 234-5
- Le Parti Quebecois, 235
- Military equipment, standardization and interoperability of, 492-3, 545-6
- Military tour of various countries, 495
- NATO forces, disparities in strength of, 493-4
- NATO member nations, 234
- Nimitz* warship, 495
- North Atlantic defence shield, 234
- Nuclear weapons, 493, 546-7
- Science and Technology Committee, 540-2
 - Address by Director of House of Information Systems (US), 541
 - Future of parliamentary democracy, 541
 - Landsat program, 541-2
 - Narcotic control, technological development, unemployment and other resolutions, 542
 - Satellite technology, 542
 - Science and the arms race, 542
- Suez Canal, statistics on use of, 494-5
- UK currency crisis, 234
- Universal Declaration of Human Rights, 284-5
- USSR, 236, 283-4, 474, 475, 476, 493-4
 - Military forces and arms buildup, 236
 - Passports for Soviet citizens, 284
 - Persecution in religious areas, 284
 - Pledges re human rights, disregard of, 284-5
- Warsaw Pact, 474, 492, 494

North Atlantic Assembly - Concluded

Speakers: Senators

- Lafond, Paul C., 540-3
- McDonald, A. Hamilton, 473-5, 492-6
- McElman, Charles, 233-6
- Smith, George I., 545-7
- Yuzyk, Paul, 281-5

Northern affairs, government policy report, 1182, 1245-6

- Political development in the Northwest Territories, 1246
- Political residency test, 1246
- Special Government Representative for Constitutional Development in the Northwest Territories, 1245
- Yukon Territory, 1262-3
- See appendix to Debates, 1257-63*

Northern pipeline

- AlCan and Mackenzie Valley routes, question, 1037
- National Energy Board decision, question, 1037
- Senate debate on, question, 1183-4
- See Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline from western Arctic to southern Canada and continental United States, 1266-87*

Northwest Territories

- Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline, 1266-87
 - Costs of gas to northerners, 1285
 - Mackenzie Valley route, 1285
 - Native people's land claims, 1284-6
 - Yellowknife Assembly concerns, 1285
- Political development, 1246
- Political residency test, 1246
- Special Government Representative for Constitutional Development in NWT, 1245
- See appendix to Debates, 1257-63*

Nova Scotia

- Canstel project, Cape Breton Island, 15, 40, 100, 113
- Coal industry, Cape Breton Island, 113
- Electrical energy costs, 15, 40
- Energy conservation and alternate power sources, 14
- Energy costs, 100, 112-13
- Equalization grants, 9, 87, 125
- Government-owned industry, 40
- Offshore mineral rights
 - Federal-Provincial Memorandum of Understanding and Joint Communique between Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, 289, 304-05
- Oil prices, 14
- Port of Halifax operations, 64-68
- Regional economic disparities, 15
- Sydney Steel and Hawker-Siddeley Steel Works, 113
- Transportation problems
 - Freight rates and assistance for, 203
 - Subsidies, 203
 - Tourism, 202
 - User-pay policy, 113-14, 201
- See National unity,

 - Transportation by land, air and sea, regional differences.*

Nuclear supplies

- CANDU reactors supplied to Rumania, 960, 1127
- Improved control of materials supplied by Canada, 960, 1126-7
- Negotiations with other countries, 686, 959-60
 - Agreements, availability of copies, 960, 1126-7

Official languages

- Commissioner Keith Spicer, reappointment of, 635
- Commissioner Maxwell F. Yalden, appointment of, 1288
- Report of Commissioner, 602

Offshore mineral resources

- Federal-Provincial Memorandum of Understanding and Joint Communiqué between Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, 289, 304-05

Oil pollution

- Transshipments to Pacific coast ports, public hearings re environment aspects of, 308-09
- See Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline

Old age security

- Background of old age pension legislation, 537
- Compensation for reduction in Canada Pension Plan benefits, 501
- Date of proclamation, 538
- Family allowance exemption, 501
- Guaranteed income supplement, recommendations of Senate Committee on Poverty, 501-04
 - Excerpt from speech of Health and Welfare Minister, 501-02
- International reciprocal agreements, 500-01, 538
- Partial pensions, 500, 538
- Poverty line updated, 502
- Single eligibility requirement, 537-8
- Spouses, cessation of benefits on receiver's death, 501-02, 539-40
- Statistics Canada poverty report, 501-02
- Speakers: Senators
 - Belisle, Rheal, 536-40
 - Croll, David A., 501-04
 - Rowe, Frederick William, 499-501, 539, 540

Old Age Security bill C-35. 1r, 489; 2r, 499-504, 536-40; ref to com, 540; rep without amdt, 561; 3r, 574; r.a., 600

Olson, Hon. Horace Andrew (Bud), P.C. (Introduced in the Senate Apr. 26/77)

- Attorney General's staff college, change of site from Edmonton to Saskatoon, 1264, 1318
- Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization bill C-34, 939-40, 964-5, 1183-7, 1188, 1216-17
 - Administration and costs of pooling system, 1185-6
 - Canadian Wheat Board pooling system, 965
 - Initial payments, 939
 - Levies from marketing pools, 939
 - Marketing pools for producers of rapeseed and other grains, 939, 1187
 - Necessity of bill, question of, 1183-4, 1186
 - Obligation of producers to complete crop year with pool, 940, 964
 - Permit books, 1187
 - Prices and option of year-averaging, 1184
 - Recovery of losses, 939, 964
 - Selling outside pools, 964

Olson, Hon. Horace Andrew (Bud), P.C. - Concluded

- Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization bill C-34 - Concluded
 - Voluntary pools, 939, 940
 - Witnesses invited to appear before committee, 1184-5, 1216-17
- Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline from western Arctic to southern Canada and continental United States, 1280-2
 - Canada's gas reserves, 1280, 1281; Alberta, 1280, 1281, 1282
 - Exchange arrangements, Canada-US, 1280, 1281
 - Dempster-Mackenzie Valley, 1281
 - Economic factors, 1281
 - Construction materials, 1281
 - Employment, 1281
 - Quebec-Maritime pipeline, 1281
 - Yukon Indian land claims, 1280
- National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions, 811-13
 - Beef industry inquiry, 811-12
 - Rail networks, Hall Commission study, 812-13
 - Regional Disparity and Living Together*, 812
 - Senate role in study, 812
- Northern pipeline, 1037, 1183
- Nuclear supplies, improved control of material from Canada, 960, 1126
 - Agreements with other countries, availability of copies, 960, 1126-7
- Rules of the Senate
 - Quoting from Commons Hansard, 1184
 - Second reading of bill, principle accepted, question of point of order, 1183, 1188
- Wheat agreement, international, 1005, 1165, 1182
 - Price negotiations, 1182

Olympics

- Canadian and International Olympic Committees, 43
- Canadian Broadcasting Corporation coverage, 44, 53
- Costs and compensation in unemployment and welfare payments, 83
- Mayor of Montreal and Premier of Quebec, efforts on behalf of Games, 42-43, 83-84
- Real estate assets, 43
- Record-breaking athletes, 43-44
- Speech by Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth, 118
- Withdrawal of African teams, 42, 83

Opening of Second Session of Thirtieth Parliament

- Communication from Governor General's Secretary, 1
- Speech from the Throne, 1-6
- See* Address in reply to Speech from the Throne

Orders and Customs of the Senate and Privileges of Parliament Committee

- Appointment, 6
- Members, 6

Pacific Western Air Lines, judgment of Supreme Court of Canada, question, 436-7, 442-4, 457-8

Pakistan

- Income Tax Conventions bill C-12, 829, 880-2, 900, 932-6

Parliament

- Legislation, reintroduction in next session, question, 757
- Prolongation of First Session of Thirtieth Parliament, 23
- Recalled to deal with
 - Air Traffic Control Services Continuation, 1293-1311
 - Port of Halifax operations, 64-68

Parliament Buildings

- Tourist visitors, greeting by guides, question of privilege, 1243
- Use of Senate Chamber by Commons, request for, 1154

Parliament Hill

- Beating Retreat ceremony, 1266
- Canada Day celebrations, 1005, 1033, 1318

Parliamentary democracy, 57-60

- Decline of Parliamentary Democracy*, 58
- Discontent and insecurity of populace, 57-58
- Government policies, excerpt from Prime Minister's speech, 59
- Legislation to alleviate discrepancies in government administration, 58
- Public Service of Canada, 58-59
- The Way Ahead*, 59
- Watergate, 58

Parole

- Criminal Law Amendment bill C-51, 1162, 1165-7, 1196-7, 1243, 1248, 1288
- Parole services, statistics, 1326-7

Paterson, Hon. Norman McL.

- Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline from western Arctic to southern Canada and continental United States, 1273
- Founding of shipping company, N.M. Paterson & Sons, Ltd., 702

Pawnbrokers

- Borrowers and depositors protection, 1106, 1120-5, 1141-51, see also appendix to Debates of July 11/77

Penitentiaries

- Criminal Law Amendment bill C-51, 1162, 1165-7, 1196-7, 1243, 1248, 1288

Pension

- Background of pension legislation, 645
- Backlog of claims, 646, 666
- 'Benefit of the doubt' clause, 665-6
- Categories of pensions and percentages granted, 666, 668
- Cessation of pension upon pensioner's death, 667, 668
- Correlating of former medical reports with present disability, 669
- Entitlement Board, 645
- Medical officers of Pension Commission, 666, 668
- Pension Commission, unnecessary functions of, 666, 667
- Pension Review Board, 646, 668, 669
- Newfoundland veterans, 667-8

Pension - ConcludedSpeakers: Senators

Carter, Chesley W., 645-6, 667-9
 Phillips, Orville H., 665-7, 668
 Macdonald, John M., 667
 Smith, George I., 667, 668, 669

Pension bill C-11. 1r, 637-8; 2r, 645-6, 665-9; ref to com, 670; rep without amdt, 677; 3r, 688; r.a., 703

Pensions

Canada Pension Plan bill C-49, 1111-13, 1127-32, 1152, 1159-60, 1161
 Pension bill C-11, 637-8, 645-6, 665-9, 670, 677, 688, 703

Perrault, Hon. Raymond J., P.C., Leader of the Government in the Senate

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 24-31

Air Traffic Control Services Continuation bill C-63, 1293-5, 1297, 1298, 1307, 1308-11

Anti-Inflation Board guidelines and recommendations, 1294, 1297, 1307, 1308, 1309-10

Areas of dispute, 1293-4, 1295, 1309

Classification plan, 1295, 1309

Management rights, 1294

Reclassification and pay increases, 1293-4

Vacation time, 1294

Breakoff of negotiations, 1295, 1297

Collective agreements, 1309

Compulsory arbitration, 1308-09

Conciliation Board's recommendations, 1294-5, 1307, 1308, 1310

Economic and other effects of strike, 1293

Government role in dispute, 1308

Monopoly power of CATCA, 1293

Rates of pay (effective Jan. 1/77), 1295

Reconsideration by arbitrator, 1295

Right to strike, 1293, 1308

Special Senate committee to deal with labour disputes, suggestion, 1308

Air transport, bilingual air communications, 1970 report, 257, 1114

Anti-inflation program, 26-31

Business profits, 29

Appropriation bill No. 5, 1976 C-28, 230

Argentina, United Nations Water Conference, 587-8

Attorney General's staff college, change of site from Edmonton to Saskatoon, 1264, 1318

Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee

Meeting during Senate sitting, 193

Temporary resignation of certain members of committee, 122, 123

Basha, Hon. Michael G., the late, 168

Bell Canada bill S-2, 197

Bilingualism, 25-36, 257

British Columbia holly, 246

British Columbia, Railwest rolling stock facility, 1141

Burchill, Hon. G. Percival, the late, 1312

Cabinet solidarity, 640

Perrault, Hon. Raymond J., P.C. - Continued

- Canada-United States relations
 - Address by Prime Minister to United States Congress, 425, see appendix to Debates of Feb. 22/77
 - Agenda for discussions between US President and Prime Minister of Canada, 391
 - Diversion of water from Lake Michigan, question, 237, 309, 435-6
 - Communication from Secretary of State for External Affairs, 435
 - Garrison Dam, proposed diversion of water, 436
 - Great Lakes Quality Agreement, 808, 983-4
 - Ross Dam, Skagit Valley flooding, 787-9
- Canada-Venezuela relations, 390
- Canada Week, Parliament Hill program, 1005, 1318
- Canadian Armed Forces, retired personnel, alleviation of hardships, 971, 984
- Canadian Broadcasting Corporation
 - Accountability to Parliament, 675
 - CRTC inquiry into CBC activities, 489, 499, 533-5
 - Documentary program The Fifth Estate re McCain Foods, 245-6, 280-1, 286, 465-8
 - Salary of former CBC employee, 467-8, 675
 - Request for further answer to question, 771, 808-09
- Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Transport and General Workers, speech of president, 28-29
 - Excerpt from letter of CLC union official, 28
- Canadian Parliamentary Guide, 274
- Canadian Press coverage of Senate proceedings and attendance of senators, 375, 376
- Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization bill C-34, 1188, 1217, 1247
- Carter, Hon. Chesley W., retirement, 1137
- Committee meetings during Senate sittings, 375, 376
- Commodity prices, 29
- Confederation, financial contribution of British Columbia, 640
- Conflict of interest re banking legislation, 122, 123
- Connolly, Hon. John J., 120, 227; return to Senate after illness, 463
- Constitution of Canada, patriation of
 - Correspondence between Prime Minister and Premier of Alberta, 63; appended to Debates, 69-71
 - Correspondence from Prime Minister to provincial premiers, January 1977, 276, 277, 279
- Côté, Hon. Jean-Pierre, 237
- Crime, organized, proposed joint committee to inquire into, 912
- Crown corporations, responsibility of ministers and boards of directors, 1114
- Crown revenues or other revenues not provided by Parliament, 75, 984, 1038
- Customs tariff, canned tomato surtax, motion that Senate approve order re, 1287, 1290-2; agreed, 1292
- Cyclamates, non-restricted use of, 664, 678-9
- Diefenbaker, Olive E., the late, 271
- Duggan, Hon. James A., 638
- Employment increase, 29-30
- Energy
 - Acquisition of oil supplies from Mexico, 651, 770
 - Atlantic provinces, benefits from lower-than-international price of oil, 157
 - Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), proposed increase in oil prices, 157, 229
 - Petroleum and Natural Gas Administration Act, question re implementation of, 98, 150
- Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline from western Arctic to southern Canada and continental United States, 1266-7
- Environment, construction of coal-fired power plant in Saskatchewan, 1016
- Export Development bill C-47, 832, 833
 - Loans to countries behind the Iron Curtain and Brazil, Argentina, Chile, 832, 833
- Federal by-elections, results, 39

Perrault, Hon. Raymond J., P.C. - Continued

- Federal-Provincial Conference of First Ministers
 - Agenda of conference, 225, 228
 - Exclusion of press, 225
 - Patriation of the Constitution, question, 205-06
 - Reply from Quebec Premier re, 173, 181, 193-4
- Federal-Provincial Conference of Ministers of Finance, 308, 370-3
- Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing bill C-37, 618, 619, 620, 621, 627-8
 - Decentralization, 627-8
 - Government policies, commendation of, 627
 - Hospital care, medicare, welfare, communication links, etc., 627
- Financial Administration Act, crown corporations not subject to audit, 674, 715-17, 770-1
 - Agency crown corporations audited by Auditor General, 716
 - Crown corporations audited privately, 716-17
 - Departmental crown corporations audited by Auditor General, 715-16
 - Proprietary crown corporations audited by Auditor General, 716
- Fisheries, violations of coastal jurisdiction, 674, 758
- Flag, Canadian, distribution of flags and lapel pins to members of Parliament, 408, 442, 457-8, 588
- Foreign affairs
 - Loans to foreign countries, 875, 1052-3, 1077-91, 1265
 - Nuclear weapons, 686, 959-60
- Forsey, Hon. Eugene A., 227
- Government Expenditures Restraint bill C-19, 253-6, 262-5, 269, 270
 - Auditor General, 265
 - Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and other crown corporations, 264
 - Consumer prices, increase in, 263; other countries, 263
 - Government expenditures, growth limit to 14%, 253
 - Government expenditures (1968-76), statistics re, 255
 - Government expenditures vs GNP, 262-3, 265
 - Inflation, 263
 - Prolongation of debate in Commons, 255-6
 - Reduction in expenditure commitments
 - Adult occupational training, 253, 254, 256, 269
 - Aid to granting councils, 253
 - Building expenditures, 253
 - Company of Young Canadians, 253, 254, 256
 - DREE, 253
 - External Affairs postings, 253
 - Family allowances, 253, 254, 256
 - Foreign aid, 253
 - Industrial research and development incentives, 254-5
 - Information Canada, 253, 254, 256
 - Language training, 253
 - Loans to crown corporations and others, 253
 - Opportunities for Youth, 253
 - Public Service, 253
 - Salaries of judges and high-salaried public servants, 253
 - Salaries of Senate and Commons members, 253
 - Subsidies and other transfers, 264
 - Supply and Services, 255
 - Transportation subsidies, 253, 264
 - Western grain stabilization, 255
- Government responsibility in economic conditions, 31
- Grain, provision of rail cars to Peace River district, 125-6

Perrault, Hon. Raymond J., P.C. - Continued

- Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, 808
- Greene, Hon. John J., 715
- Haig, Hon. J. Campbell, 638
- Haiti, assistance to, 808, 1017
 - Duvalier family, 1019
- Health and welfare
 - Swine influenza
 - Confirmed diagnoses in Canada and United States, 125, 150-1
 - Immunization, intentions of government re, 98, 125
- Helsinki Agreement
 - Customs duty on gifts to relatives in USSR, 745, 808
 - Implementation of, 704-05, 960
 - Printed information, distribution of, 715, 960-1, 1015
 - Reunification of families, statistics, 961
 - Review Conference, Canadian delegation, 1004-05, 1092
- Historic building in St. Jean, Quebec, proposed demolition of, 1164, 1213-14
- Hopkins, E. Russell, the late, former Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel of the Senate, tributes, 169-71
- Housing, acquisition or renovation of homes, government assistance for single persons, 1164, 1246, 1265, 1318
- Immigration, persons living in Canada under deportation orders or contrary to court rulings, 640, 650-1
- Inflation, statistics re, 27-28
 - Other countries, 28
- James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9; 1011-13, 1045
 - Extinguishment of claims, 1011
 - Quebec undertaking to negotiate, 1012
- Justice Department, Director of Information Services, qualifications of, 98, 150
- Kingsmere residence of the late Prime Minister MacKenzie King, terms of last will and testament or of other documents relating to, 976, 984
- Labour
 - Bank branches as bargaining agents, 976, 1017-18
 - Labour-management disputes, 27
 - Worker representation on boards of directors of corporations, 279, 376-7
- Lapointe, Hon. Renaude, Speaker of the Senate, tribute to, 25
- Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, meeting during Senate sitting, 1211-12
- Legislation, amendments omitted in reprinting of bills, 456
- Mackenzie Valley pipeline, Berger Commission report, 678, 686-7, 757
- Marchand, Hon. Jean, P.C., 224
- McDonald, Hon. A. Hamilton, 237
- National Capital Region, Special Joint Committee, reconstitution of, 193, 229
- National Gallery, original paintings owned by, 700-01, 1053
- National unity
 - Joint Committee on the Constitution, consideration of report, 665
 - Proposed committee on regional interests, 149-50, 641
 - Proposed debate, question, 664-5
 - Role of Senate, questions, 277, 278-9
- National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions, 698, 707-12
 - Areas of concern, 711
 - British Columbia, 709
 - Confederation costs, 710-11
 - Constituency contacts at six-week intervals, proposal, 711-12
 - Constitutional reform, 711
 - Excerpt from speech by Harry Boyle, 712
 - Excerpt from speech by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, 710
 - Myths regarding Canada, 709

Perrault, Hon. Raymond J., P.C. - Continued

- National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions - Concluded
 - Newfoundland, 709
 - Quebec referendum for separation, 708
 - Senate role in study, 708
- Northern affairs, government policy report, 1182, 1245-6
 - Government Representative for Constitutional Development in the Northwest Territories, 1245
 - Political development in the NWT, 1246
 - Political residency test, 1246
 - See appendix to Debates*, 1257-63
- Northern pipeline
 - AlCan route, 1037
 - Debate on, question, 1183-4
 - National Energy Board decision, 1037
- Nova Scotia, equalization grants, 9, 87, 125
- Nuclear supplies
 - Agreements re, availability of copies, 960, 1126-7
 - CANDU reactors to Rumania, 960, 1127
 - Improved control of materials supplied by Canada, 960, 1126-7
 - Negotiations with other countries, 686, 959-60
- Offshore mineral resources, Federal-Provincial Memorandum of Understanding and Joint Communique, 289, 304-05
- Oil or gas pipeline corridors, Canada-United States, 1165
- Oil pollution
 - Juan de Fuca Strait, 699, 944-5
 - Protection of coastal waters and shorelines, 699
 - Territorial and international waters, definition of, 699
 - Transshipments to Pacific coast ports, public hearings re environmental aspects, 309, 390-1
- Parliament, reintroduction of legislation in next session, 757
- Port of Halifax Operations bill C-14, 64-66, 67
 - Conciliation efforts, 64-65
 - Date of incorporation of rules of dispatch, 66, 67
 - Economic loss as result of strike, 64, 65
 - Industrial inquiry commissioner, 66
 - Maritime Employers Assoc. rejection of proposals, 65
 - Negotiating commissioner Judge Nathan Green, 64
 - Terms of tentative agreement re rules of dispatch, 65-66
- Prairie provinces, drought conditions, 654-5
 - Beef cattle production, 654-5
 - Current situation with respect to water, 654
 - Grain prices, 654
 - Grain quantities in 1977 crop year, 654
 - Prospective conditions for grain growing and agricultural crops, 654
- Prowse, Hon. J. Harper, the late, 7
- Public Works Department, Langevin Building renovations and costs, 53, 97
- Quebec, area and boundary, 267, 497
- Queen Elizabeth II, Her Majesty, 87, 228-9, 306-07
 - Address of congratulations to Her Majesty on completion of twenty-fifth year of reign, 306; address to Governor General re transmission of message, 306-07
 - Commemorative medal, competition for design of, 228, 289
 - Commemorative stamps, 228
 - Invitation to visit Canada during Silver Jubilee, question, 829
- Radio Canada, proposed appearance before Senate committee of CBC President and commentators, 419
- Regulations and other statutory instruments, speech of Senator Langlois, 821
- Revenue Canada, removal of offices from Saint John, NB., 1245, 1290

Perrault, Hon. Raymond J., P.C. - Concluded

- Royal Canadian Mounted Police, agreements between federal government and provincial governments, 686, 757-8
- Royal Commission on Concentration of Corporate Power, resignation of Chairman Robert Bryce, 678, 687, 1319
- Royal Emblems, removal from Governor General's private railway cars, 643, 655
- Rules of the Senate
 - Committee report recommending that bill be not proceeded with, 1188
 - Referral of bill C-37 to appropriate committee, 618, 619, 620, 621
 - Report re changes in Rules, 910
- St. John the Baptist Day, 982
- Senate
 - Air conditioning system, 999
 - Appointments of opposition members, 638, 990-5, 1075-6
 - Excerpts from Prime Minister's speech and letter to opposition leader, 991
 - Procedure upon opposition resignations or deaths, 638, 991
 - Submission of names to Prime Minister, 991, 992
 - Business, 9, 62, 63, 97, 139, 156, 157, 180-1, 244, 267-8, 864, 995, 1140-1, 1162, 1181, 1224, 1289, 1292, 1327
 - Summer adjournment, 1289
 - Minutes of the Proceedings*, error in French text, 9-10
 - Parking space for senators' cars, 944
 - Role of, 25
 - Initiation of legislation, 25
 - Representation of regional interests, 25
 - Taking of photographs of chamber by the public, 876, 967-8, 969
 - Travel arrangements for senators, 875, 876
 - Use of Senate chamber by Commons, request for, 1154
 - Vancouver Sun report on Senate by John Sawatsky, 376
- Solar Energy Application bill C-309, 759-60, 762, 793, 794, 846
 - Principle of bill, 759-60, 762
 - Referral of subject matter to com, 793
- Stewart, Hon. David Gordon, 224
- Sullivan, Hon. Joseph A., 227, 638
- Team Canada
 - Organization for future international hockey tournaments, question, 686
 - Performance at World Hockey Tournament in Vienna, 641
 - Taxpayers' contribution to, 641
- Tourist visitors to Parliament Buildings, greeting by guides, 1243
- Transportation
 - CNR link with Fairbanks, Alaska, 977, 1126
 - Ferry service between North Sydney, NS. and Port-aux-Basques, Nfld., 699, 789
 - Obstruction of access to airport by transport company, 961-2
 - Pacific Coast subsidized services, 111, 157-8
 - Pacific Western Airlines, judgment of Supreme Court of Canada, 436-7, 443-4, 457-8
 - Possibility of air traffic controllers' strike, question, 1265-6
 - Regional airlines, Eastern Provincial airlines, 458, 473
 - User-pay policy, 396
- Transport Dept., car rental booths at airports, 150
- Unemployment, budget for job creation, 685
- Unemployment insurance, statistics as of Mar. 31/77, 758-9
- Wheat agreement, international, negotiations re, 1005, 1165, 1182
 - Price negotiations, 1182
- Williams, Hon. Guy, felicitations on degree of Doctor of Laws, Simon Fraser University, 790
- Yuzyk, Hon. Paul, felicitations on degree of Doctor of Laws, University of Saskatchewan, 790

Personality disorders and criminal behaviour, 190-2, 206-09, 238-40, 249, 251-2, 265-6, 496-7, 505-06, 547-9, 554-6

- Acadia University study on Springhill medium-security penitentiary, 554
- Anthropologist's findings, 239
- Anti-social behaviour and depression, 239-40
- Background of previous study by committee, 251
- Birth Without Violence*, by Dr. Leboyer, 191
- Brain damage at birth, 191
- British Columbia correctional system, 548
- Canadian Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children, 191
- Children with learning disabilities, 191, 207, 549
 - Conference on (Oct./77), 555
 - Ottawa Citizen article, 191
- Correspondence from persons in professional fields, 190
- Costs of reformatory maintenance, 191, 252, 547-8
- Daycare for young children, neglect of, 207
- Death penalty for young offenders, justification questioned, 555
- Deprivation in background of criminals, 252
- Excerpt from remarks of Dr. E.T. Barker before Health, Welfare and Science Committee, 208
- Globe and Mail* article re committee visit to BC penitentiary, 555
- Globe and Mail* article re mentally ill babies, 252
- Historical facts of harsh punishments, 548
- Illiteracy, Nova Scotia statistics, 207, 208-09
- Incorrigibles, lack of understanding of, 548-9
- Liquor advertisements in Maclean's magazine, 208
- Minimal brain dysfunction, The First Three Years of Life, by Dr. Burton White, 554-5
- Modern Perspective in International Child Psychiatry*, 239
- Parental influence on unborn child, 252
- Preventive criminology, 555
- Recommendations of task force on role of services in field of criminal justice, 240
- Research at Johns Hopkins Hospital, 191
- Research, suggestions re, 191, 240, 252
- Senate role in study, 548, 555-6
- Social and family relationships, 239
- Stress during pregnancy, 239
- Transposition of words and phonetic spelling problems, 207
- Tree foundation, research needs, 555
- Violence in society, 238-9
- Working mothers of children under 14 yrs. of age, statistics, 207
- 'Youth in Trouble', conference of BC and Vancouver Assoc. of Canadian Learning Disabilities, 206

Speakers: Senators

- Asselin, Martial, 238-40
- Bonnell, M. Lorne, 505-06
- Carter, Chesley W., 251-2
- Denis, Azellus, 252
- Deschatelets, Jean-Paul, 191-2, 266
- Forsey, Eugene A., 496-7
- Langlois, Leopold, 192
- Lucier, Paul H., 249
- McGrand, Fred A., 190-1, 554-6
- Norrie, Margaret, 206-09
- Rowe, Frederick William, 208
- Thompson, Andrew E., 547-9

Petroleum corporations monitoring

- Authority of minister, 750-1, 765
- Corporations engaged in exploration, etc., definition of, 750

Petroleum corporations monitoring - Concluded

Crown corporations, 751, 752, 765
 Default penalty, 722, 751, 752
 Draftmanship of bill, 985
 Energy crisis, 721-2
Energy Strategy in Canada, 721, 765-6
 Petro-Canada, 750
 Provision of legislative authority to collect statistics on industry, 749-50
 Reporting of financial and statistical information, 721, 722
 Revenues for further exploration, 751, 765
 Statutory form to be completed, 751, 752

Speakers: Senators

Barrow, Augustus Irvine, 721-2, 752, 765-6, 977-8
 Grosart, Allister, 749-51, 752
 Hayden, Salter A., 970
 Lang, Daniel A., 985

Petroleum Corporations Monitoring bill S-4. 1r, 700; 2r, 721-2, 749-52, 765-6; ref to com, 766; rep with amdts, 970-1, 977-8, 985; 3r, 1006

Petten, Hon. William J., Chief Government Whip in the Senate

Basha, Hon. Michael G., the late, 168
 Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, documentary program on McCain Foods, 286
 Carter, Hon. Chesley W., retirement, 1138
 Customs tariff, canned tomato surtax, 1287
 Electoral boundaries readjustment bills, 1105
 Official Languages Commissioner, appointment of Maxwell F. Yalden, 1288
 Parole service, statistics, 1326-7
 Selection Committee
 Reports
 Members of Senate Standing Committees, 51-52; report, as amended, adopted, 84
 Science Policy Committee members, 178
 Senate Standing Committees, question re membership, 85
 Senate business, 68, 96-97

Philippines

Income Tax Conventions bill C-12, 829, 880-2, 900, 932-6, 945, 1031

Phillips, Hon. Orville H.

Cabinet solidarity, question, 640
 Economy of Canada
 Unemployment and failure of government to deal with problem, 919-22
 Canada Works and Young Canada Works programs, 922
 Cape Breton Post article re Statistics Canada report on unemployment, 920
 Costs of welfare and UIC benefits, 921
 Decline in export markets, 921
 Nova Scotia, 920
 Problems of seeking employment, 920, 921
 Regional statistics, 921
 Students, 921
 Unemployment records, 920
 Women in work force, 922

Phillips, Hon. Orville H. - Concluded

- Employment and Immigration Reorganization bill C-27, 1197-9
 - Atlantic provinces, difficulties of seasonal-work employees, 1198
 - Employment and Advisory Council, 1198
 - Senate study on Manpower Div., Dept. Manpower and Immigration, 1198
 - Unemployment insurance program amdts, 1198-9
 - Cape Breton protests, 1199
 - Developmental use of fund, 1199
 - Government contribution to fund, 1199
 - Unemployment statistics, 1197-8
- Farm Improvement Loans, Small Businesses Loans, Fisheries Improvement Loans bill C-48, 945-6
 - Costs of business maintenance, 946
 - Fisheries, 946
 - Interest rate, 946
 - Loan statistics, 946
 - Repayments, 946
- Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing bill C-37, 609-12, 620
 - Equalization formula, 611-12
 - Post-secondary education and health programs, 611
 - Provincial agreements, question of, 610, 611
 - Transfer payments in respect of income tax, 611
 - Indexing, question of, 611
- Fisheries bill C-38, 1099-1101
 - Budworm spray program, effect on salmon run, 1101
 - Decrease in fishery officers, 1101
 - Destruction of fish, powers of minister re, 1100
 - Marine plants, licence for harvesting of, 1101
 - Minister's consultation with provinces, 1101
 - Peace officers, 1101
 - Poachers, 1099-1100
 - Pollution, 1100-01
 - Production, 1099
- Maritime Code bill C-41, 725-6
- Pension bill C-11, 665-7, 668
 - Backlog of claims, 646
 - 'Benefit of the doubt' clause, 665-6
 - Categories of pensions and percentages granted, 666
 - Cessation of pension upon pensioner's death, 667
 - Medical officers of Pension Commission, 666
 - Pension Commission, unnecessary functions of, 666
- Rules of the Senate
 - Point of order re committee power in referral of any subject matter for study, 630, 631
 - Referral of bill C-37 to appropriate committee, 620
- Saccharin, ban on, 630, 631, 635
- Unemployment, budget for job creation, question, 685
- Unemployment Insurance Entitlements Adjustment bill C-52, 688, 689, 690
 - Termination of claims for persons 65 yrs. and over, 689
 - Appeals, 688
 - Interest on payments claimed, 689
 - Notification of persons affected by Bill C-52, 689
 - Payments to estates of deceased, 689
- Unemployment insurance, statistics as of Mar. 31/77, 758-9

Point of order

- Comment on result of vote, 1247
- Motion to adjourn debate, 795
- Quoting incorrectly of senator's remarks, 1188
- Reading of committee report in English only, 1153
- See Rules of the Senate

Port of Halifax operations

- Date of incorporation of rules of dispatch into collective agreement, 66, 67
- Delay in government action to terminate dispute, 67
- Industrial inquiry commissioner, 66
- International Longshoremen's Assoc., Halifax Local 269, strike and economic loss as result of, 64-67
- Maritime Employers Assoc. rejection of proposals, 65
- Negotiating commissioner Judge Nathan Green, 64
- Terms of tentative agreement re rules of dispatch, 65-66

Speakers: Senators

- Côté, Jean-Pierre, 67
- Perrault, Raymond J., 64-66, 67
- Riley, Daniel A., 66
- Smith, George I., 66-67

Port of Halifax Operations bill C-14. 1r, 64; 2r, 64-67; 3r, 67; r.a., 68

Prairie provinces

- Drought conditions, 654-5, 674
 - Beef cattle production, 654-5
 - Grain prices, 654
 - Grain quantities in 1977 crop year, 654
 - Prospective conditions for grain growing and agricultural crops, 654
- See Transportation by land, air and sea, regional differences, 201-03, 240-3, 246-9, 396-402, 430-2

Prime Minister of Canada

- See Trudeau, Rt. Hon. Pierre Elliott, P.C.

Prince Edward Island

- Energy costs, 99
- Offshore mineral rights
 - Federal-Provincial Memorandum of Understanding and Joint Communiqué between Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, 304-05
- Transportation problems
 - Dependence of province on transportation, 201
 - Ferry service, 201-02
 - Railway refrigerator cars, lack of, 202
 - Statement of Hon. Otto Lang to PEI Tourist Assoc. and Restaurant Assoc., 201
 - Subsidies, 202
 - Terms of union, 201-02; federal jurisdiction, 202
 - Tourism, 202
- Veterans Affairs Dept. personnel, move to PEI, 99
- See Transportation by land, air and sea, regional differences, 201-03, 240-3, 246-9, 396-402, 430-2

Printing of Parliament, Standing Joint Committee

- Members, Senate, 51

Prisons and reformatories

Criminal Law Amendment bill C-51, 1162, 1165-7, 1196-7, 1243, 1248, 1288

Privacy of individuals

Canadian Human Rights bill C-25, 820, 840-4, 876-8, 887-93, 1052, 1098, 1107-08, 1161

Private bills

See Bills, Private and Local, Commons,
Bills, Private and Local, Senate.

Privilege, question of

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Documentary program The Fifth Estate re McCain Foods, 229-30, 245-6, 280-1, 286, 465-8

Media coverage of speech by Senator Molson on national unity, 1005-06

Montreal Star report of speech by Senator Forsey to Canadian Club, 376

Omission of remarks intended during Address in reply to Speech from the Throne (Senator John J. Connolly), 51

Senate business, resumption of sittings on short notice, 63

Toronto Sun article re interest of Senator Davey in racing business, 942-4

Toronto Sun article re remarks of MP from Central Nova re Hydroculture Luwassa, 943

Tourist visitors to Parliament Buildings, greeting by guides, 1243

Privileges and immunities

Diplomatic and Consular Privileges and Immunities bill C-6, 874, 902-06

Prorogation of Second Session of Thirtieth Parliament

Communication from Secretary to Governor General, 1328

Speech from the Throne, Rt. Hon. Bora Laskin, P.C., 1330

Protection of borrowers and depositors (Bill C-16)

Authorization to committee to study subject matter, 144

Carriage of proceedings, minister's assumption of, 1124

Credit charge rate, 1121, 1123, 1124-5

Banks, 1124-5

Federal-provincial authority, question re, 1145

Lending transaction, 1122

Loan sharking and criminal credit charges, 1122

Prepayment provisions, 1123-4

Mortgages, 1123

Purchase and acquisition of income tax returns, 1122

Speakers: Senators

Flynn, Jacques, 1144-5

Hayden, Salter A., 1120-5

See appendix to Debates of July 11/77

Prowse, Hon. J. Harper (Deceased Sept. 28/76)

Tributes, 7-9

Public bills

See Bills, general data,
Bills, Public, Commons,
Bills, Public, Senate.

Public Service

- Collective bargaining system, 33-36
- Illegal strikes, 34-36; penalties for, 35-36
- Public Service Staff Relations Board, Chairman Jacob Finkleman, 33
- Recommendations of Committee on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service, 34
- Right to strike, 34
- See Emergency legislation

Public Works Department, renovation of Langevin Building, costs of, 53, 97

Quart, Hon. Josie D.

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 87-90
- Canadian Broadcasting Corporation
 - Documentary program The Fifth Estate re McCain Foods, 230
- Clerestory of the Senate Chamber, 981
- International Women's Year, 87-89
 - Conference organized by Hon. Marc Lalonde on principle of equality becoming reality, 88
 - Law Reform Commission, brief presented by Quebec women, 87, 89
 - Mexico conference, 87-88
 - National Organization for Women in the United States, call for strike, 89
 - Toronto Star article re, 88
 - Unemployed women, statistics (1976), 88
 - Wife-husband role in sharing of workload, 88
- Selection Committee report on members of Special Senate Committee on Clerestory of Senate Chamber, 532

Quebec

- Area and boundary, inquiry, 267, 497
- Bank and Quebec Savings Banks bill C-39, 705
- Comments made at North Atlantic Assembly re Le Parti Quebecois election, 236
- Constitutional crisis, 92-93, 104-105, 470-1
- Egalite ou Independance*, by Daniel Johnson, excerpts from, 470-1
- Federal government assistance to, 91-92
- James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 679-82, 717-21, 739-40, 958-9, 1006-12, 1019-25, 1038-49, 1053-67, 1092-8, 1161
- National unity, referendum for separation, 708
- Olympics, 42-43, 83-84
- Option Quebec*, by Premier Levesque, 471
- Separatism, 93, 294-6, 411, 417-18, 437-41
 - Defence aspects, 439
 - Economic factors, 440
 - Federal responsibility to native peoples, 439
 - Questions re assets, obligations, boundaries, communication, currency, etc., 296
 - Treaty of Paris (1763), 295
- United Nations Water Conference, statement of Quebec representative at Argentina meeting, 587-8
- See National unity

Queen Elizabeth II, Her Majesty

- Address of congratulations to Her Majesty the Queen on completion of twenty-fifth year of reign, 306-07;
 - address to Governor General re transmission of message 306-07; message from Commons, 374; acknowledgment from the Queen, 395
- Silver Jubilee celebrations, 86-87, 228-9, 279-80, 829
 - Celebration arrangements, 86-87, 228-9
 - Commemorative medals, competition for design of, 228-9, 289
 - Commemorative stamps, 228, 279-80
 - Visit to Canada during Silver Jubilee, question re, 829

Queen Elizabeth II, Her Majesty - Concluded

- Speech at Olympic Games, 118
- Visit with Prince Philip to Canada and United States, 42

Questions

- Air Transport, report of 1970 on bilingual air communications, 257, 268, 276, 1114
- Attorney General's staff college, change of site from Edmonton to Saskatoon, 1264, 1318
- British Columbia, Railwest rolling stock facility, 1141
- Cabinet solidarity, 640
- Canada-United States relations, diversion of water from Lake Michigan, 237, 309, 391, 435-6, 787-9, 808, 983-4
 - Garrison Dam, proposed diversion of water, 436
 - Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, 808, 983-4
 - Ross Dam, Skagit Valley flooding, 787-9
- Canada Week, Parliament Hill program, 1005, 1318
- Canadian Armed Forces, international peacekeeping, 143, 285-6, 409-10
 - Retired personnel, alleviation of hardships, 971, 984
- Canadian Broadcasting Corporation
 - Accountability to Parliament, 675
 - CRTC inquiry into CBC activities, 489, 499, 533-6
 - Documentary program The Fifth Estate re McCain Foods, 229-30, 245-6, 280-1, 286, 465-7
 - Salary of former employee, 467-8, 675, 771, 808-09
- Confederation, financial contribution of British Columbia, 640
- Constitution of Canada, patriation of
 - Correspondence from Prime Minister to provincial premiers, 276-7, 279, 287-8, 297-303
- Crime, organized, proposed joint committee to inquire into, 912-13
- Crown corporations, responsibility of ministers and boards of directors, 1114
- Crown revenues, casual or other not provided by Parliament, 75, 984, 1038
- Cyclamates, non-restricted use of, 664, 678-9
- Dominion Day, change of name to Canada Day, 1033
- Energy
 - Acquisition of oil supplies from Mexico, 651, 770
 - Atlantic provinces, benefits from lower-than-international price of oil, 157
 - Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), proposed increase in prices, 157, 229
 - Petroleum and Natural Gas Administration, implementation of, 98, 150
- Federal-Provincial Conference of First Ministers
 - Agenda, 225, 228
 - Exclusion of press, 225
 - Patriation of the Constitution, 205-06
 - Reply from Quebec Premier re, 173, 181, 193-4
- Financial Administration Act, crown corporations not subject to audit, 674, 715-17, 770-1
- Fisheries, violations of coastal jurisdiction, 674, 758
- Flag, Canadian, distribution of flags and lapel pins to members of Parliament, 407-08, 442, 457-8, 588
- Foreign affairs, loans to foreign countries, 875, 1052-3, 1077-91
- Grain, provision of rail cars to Peace River district, 125
- Haiti, assistance during shortages of food and drinkable water, 808, 1019
- Health and welfare, swine influenza
 - Confirmed diagnoses in Canada and United States, 125, 150-1
 - Immunization, intentions of government re, 98, 125
- Helsinki Agreement
 - Canadian Agreement, Canadian delegation at Review Conference in Belgrade, 1004-05
 - Customs duty on gifts to relatives in USSR, 745, 808
 - Implementation of, 704-05, 960
 - Printed information, distribution of, 715, 960-1, 1015
 - Reunification of families, statistics, 961

Questions - Continued

- Historic building in St. Jean, Quebec, demolition of, 1164, 1213-14
- Housing, acquisition or renovation of homes, government assistance for single persons, 1164, 1246, 1265, 1318-19
- Immigration, persons living in Canada under deportation orders or contrary to court rulings, 563, 640, 650-1
- Justice Department, Director of Information Services, qualifications of, 98, 150
- Kingsmere residence of the late Prime Minister MacKenzie King, terms of last will and testament or of other documents relating to, 976
- Labour
 - Bank branches as bargaining agents, 976, 1017-18
 - Worker representation on boards of directors of corporations, 279, 376
- Mackenzie Valley pipeline, Berger Commission report, study by Transport and Communications Committee, 678, 686-7
- Representations from NWT Council, 757
- National Capital Region, reconstitution of joint committee, 193, 229
- National Gallery, original paintings lost or unaccounted for, 701, 1053
- National unity
 - Joint Committee on the Constitution, consideration of report, 665
 - Proposed committee on regional interests, 149-50, 641
 - Proposed debate, 664-5
 - Role of Senate, 277-9
- Northern affairs, government policy report, 1182, 1245-6
 - See appendix to Debates*, 1257-63
- Northern pipeline
 - AlCan route, 1037
 - Debate on, 1183-4
 - National Energy Board decision, 1037
- Nova Scotia, equalization grants, 9, 87, 125
- Nuclear supplies
 - Agreements with other countries, availability of copies, 960, 1126-7
 - CANDU reactors to Rumania, 960, 1127
 - Improved control of material supplied by Canada, 960, 1126-7
 - Negotiations with other countries, 686, 959-60
- Oil or gas pipeline corridors, Canada-United States, 1165
- Oil pollution
 - Juan de Fuca Strait, 699
 - Oil transshipments to Pacific coast ports, public hearings re environmental aspects, 308-09
 - Protection of coastal waters and shorelines, 699
 - Territorial waters or international waters, definition of, 699
- Parliament, reintroduction of legislation in next session, 757
- Parole services, statistics, 1326-7
- Prairie provinces, drought conditions, 654-5
 - Beef cattle production, 654-5
 - Grain prices, 654
 - Grain quantities in 1977 crop year, 654
 - Prospective conditions for grain growing and agricultural crops, 654
- Public Works Department, Langevin Building renovations and costs, 53, 97
- Quebec province, area and boundary, 267, 497
- Queen Elizabeth II, Silver Jubilee celebrations, 86-87, 228-9, 279-80, 289, 829
 - Commemorative medals, competition for design of, 228-9, 289
 - Commemorative stamps, 228, 279-80
 - Invitation to visit Canada during Silver Jubilee, 829
- Radio-Canada, proposed appearance before Senate Committee of CBC President and commentators, 419
- Regulations and other statutory instruments, speech of Senator Langlois, 821
- Revenue Canada, removal of offices from Saint John, New Brunswick, 1245, 1290

Questions - Concluded

Royal Canadian Mounted Police, agreements between federal government and provincial governments, 686, 757-8

Royal Commission on Concentration of Corporate Power, 678, 687, 1319

Royal Emblems, removal from Governor General's private railway cars, 643, 655

Seal hunt, resolution of US House of Representatives protesting event, 553-4

Senate

Absence of Conservative senators, 19

Appointments, question re Hon. Robert Stanfield, 687-8

Parking space for senators' cars, 944

Simultaneous interpretation, 6, 9

Standing Committees, membership of, 85

Taking of photographs of Senate Chamber by public, 876, notice of motion re, 911, motion withdrawn, 930; further notice of motion, 930

Travel arrangements for senators, 875-6

Use of Senate Chamber by Commons, request for, 1154

SportsTeam Canada

Organization for future international hockey tournaments, 686

Performance at World Hockey Tournament in Vienna, 641

Taxpayers' contribution to, 641

Transportation

CNR link with Fairbanks, Alaska, 977, 1126

Ferry service between North Sydney, NS. and Port-aux-Basques, Nfld., 699, 789

Obstruction of access to airport by transport company, 961-2

Pacific Coast subsidized services, 111, 157-8

Pacific Western Air Lines, judgment of Supreme Court of Canada, 436-7, 442-4

Regional airlines, Eastern Provincial airlines, 458, 473

User-pay policy, 396

Transport Dept., car rental booths at airports, 150

Unemployment insurance, statistics as of Mar. 31/77, 758-9

Violence in the communications industry, report of Royal Commission, 930, 944

Wheat agreement, international, negotiations re, 1005, 1164, 1182

See also Inquiries, general

Radio-Canada, proposed appearance before Senate committee of CBC President and commentators, 419

Railway (Bill C-207)

Reactivation of lines, abandonment of lines, or expansion, announcement of, 731, 771-2

Atlantic Provinces Transportation Program, 772

Speakers: Senators

Bosa, Peter, 731

Macdonald, John M., 771-2

Railway bill C-207. 1r, 704; 2r, 731, 771-2; 3r, 775; r.a., 941

Railways

Canadian National Railway, Newfoundland

Hotel accommodation, 399-400

Substitution of bus service, 399

User-pay principle, 400

Competition in rail transport, 241

Crowsnest Pass, 248

Freight rates and freight assistance, 203, 247

Grain shipment, Saskatchewan, 247-8

Statement issued from Saskatchewan government, 247-8

Railways - Concluded

- Rail service in western Canada, Hall inquiry, 247
- Railway passenger and freight services, abandonment of, 243
- Snively Commission on Transportation, 248-9
 - Costs and revenues re moving of grain, 248-9
 - Railway costing procedures, 249

Railways bill S-1 (pro forma). 1r, 6Regulations and other statutory instruments, 315-69, 379-89, 425-7, 506-11, 646-9, 692-3, 783-5, 821, 911, 988-90, 1030-1

- Affirmation and disallowance of statutory instruments by Houses of Parliament, 384-5, 388
- Authority for statutory instruments, 784
- Bill of Rights, status as law of Canada, 384
- Bureaucratic authority beyond powers granted by Parliament, 509
- Canadian Bar Journal*, article by corporate lawyer re federal and provincial statutes, 507
- Commitments from department on future procedures, 649
- Committee recommendations, 648-9
- Confidentiality of lawyer-client relationship re commenting on certain regulations, 693
- Conflict of interest of minister, possibility of, 693
- Counsel general for continuous review of regulations, suggestion for appointment of, 693
- Definition of statutory instrument, 382, 427
- Designated instruments officers, 648
- Diaries of a Cabinet Minister*, by Richard Crossman, 647
- Distribution of reports of Regulations and other Statutory Instruments Committee, 389
- Elective Dictatorship*, comments by Lord Hailsham published in The Listener, 647
- Enabling statute, 426
- Enacting of substantive legislation by appropriation acts, 384
- Examination of legislation, excerpt from provisions of Statutory Instrument Act, 426
- Forbes* magazine article re economic waste in defective regulations, 507
- Globe and Mail* article re unnecessary legislation, 507
- Illegalities cited:
 - Acts of indemnity, 385
 - Grain disposal, 386
 - Navigable Waters Protection Act, 384
 - Parole Board, 383-4, 427
 - Post Office lottery, 385
 - Public Service regulations, 385, 386, 387
- Inconsistencies in instruments, 382-3
- Justice Minister and Attorney General, status and function of, 509-10
- Justice Minister's letter re explanation to committee on policy and legal position, 648
- New Despotism*, by Lord Hewart, 508
- Postal rates, authority for increase, 784
- Procedural problems, 784
- Publishing of information in Canada Gazette, 388, 426
- Question of vires and ultra vires, 381, 382, 385, 386, 388, 426, 427, 784
 - Recourse to courts, 386-7
- Recorded messages, 510
- Retroactive effect of subordinate legislation, 387-8
- Scrutiny of bills, role of Senate committees, 510
- Spectator*, London, excerpt from editorial re subordinate legislation, 506-07
- Speech of Senator Langlois, question, 821
- Star*, Toronto, article by E.M. Howse, former United Church moderator, 511
- Statutory instrument, definition of, 784
- Sub-delegation, 383

Regulations and other statutory instruments - Concluded

Subordinate legislation, editorial in Financial Post by Sir Harold Wilson, 647, 692-3
 Supremacy of Parliament and rule of law, disregard of, 509
 Withholding of information from committee, 784

Speakers: Senators

Benidickson, W.M., 388
 Flynn, Jacques, 692-3, 911, 1030-1
 Forsey, Eugene A., 315-69, 379-89, 988-90, 1030, 1031
 Godfrey, John Morrow, 425-7
 Lafond, Paul, 647-9
 Lang, Daniel A., 386, 506-11
 Langlois, Leopold, 783-5
 Robichaud, Louis-J., 387
 Rowe, Frederick William, 388-9

Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, Standing Joint Committee

Co-chairman and law counsel, 379-80
 Expenses, 143
 Members, Senate, 51, 84-85
 Reports
 First report, quorum, engagement of services, power to meet, 140
 Second report, 307, 315-69, 379-89, 425-7, 506-11, 646-9, 783-5, 821, 910
 Third report, 685, printed as appendix, 690, 694-7, 988-90
 Fourth report, 1004, 1030-1
 Terms of reference, 140

Restaurant of Parliament, Standing Joint Committee

Members, Senate, 51, 84

Revenue Canada offices, removal from Saint John, New Brunswick, question, 1245, 1290

Riley, Hon. Daniel A.

Canada Lands Surveys bill C-4, 948-9, 966
 Applications for commission or certificate, 949
 Dominion land surveyor, change of name, 948-9
 Torrens system of land surveying, 966
 Land surveyors' monument, 949
 Public lands, 949
 Quadrilateral township lands, 949
 Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, salary of former employee, 467-8, 675
 Confederation
 Bilingualism, 445-7
 Airline pilots, 447
 Bigotry and lack of understanding of French and of English cultures and aims, 445-6
 NB Telephone Company incident, 446
 Professional and educational fields, 445-6
 Exploitation by 'Englishocracy', 445
 Jurisdiction in provincial matters, 446-7
 Cablevision, 446
 Licences for buses and trucks, 446; Winner case, 446
 Minority rights, 447
 Quebec-Labrador boundary, 444-5, 447
 Flag, Canadian, distribution of flags and lapel pins to members of Parliament, 407, 442, 457-8, 588

Riley, Hon. Daniel A. - Concluded

- Immigration bill C-24, 1174-5, 1211
 - Appeals, 1174-5
 - Right to fair hearing, 1175
 - Deportation orders, 1175
 - Immigration Policy, White Paper on (1973), 1174
 - Management of immigration flow, 1174
 - Objectives of Canada's immigration policy, 1174
 - Terrorists and hijackers, 1174, 1175
- Motor Vehicle Safety bill C-36, 906-08
 - Compliance with standards, self-certification by manufacturers and importers, 906-07
 - Manufacture, motor vehicle, safety standards, definitions of, 907
 - National safety mark, 907
 - Notice of defect, 907, 908
 - Penalties, 908
 - Safety standards, enforcement of, 906
 - Seat belts, 907
 - Statistics on road safety since proclamation of 1971 act, 907
- National unity, 957
 - New Brunswick French population, 957
- Port of Halifax Operations bill C-14, 66
- Revenue Canada, removal of offices from Saint John, NB., 1245, 1290
- Senate
 - Taking of photographs of Senate Chamber by the public, 876; notice of motion re, 911, withdrawn, 930; further notice of motion, 930, withdrawn, 967-9
- Venoit, Hon. Clarence Joseph, the late, 464

Rizzuto, Hon. Pietro (Introduced in the Senate Feb. 1/77)

- National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions, 752-4
 - Education, 753
 - Bilingualism, 753
 - History, 753
 - Quebec Teachers' Corporation, 753
 - Minority rights, 753-4

Robichaud, Hon. Louis-J., P.C.

- Canada-United States relations, Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, 808, 983-4
- James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill-C-9, 1038-41
 - Indians of Schefferville, negotiations with, 1041
 - Quebec Boundaries Extension Act, 1039-40
 - Renouncing of claims by Cree and Inuit, 1023, 1039
 - Signatories to agreement, 1039
- Lumber industry
 - Tariff on importation of softwood plywood, effect on Canadian industry, 556-8
 - Burchill lumber company, 556
 - Canadian Forestry Assoc. publication, excerpt from, 557
 - Forest industry potential, 557
 - National Forest Week, 557
 - Reforestation, 557
 - Research requirements, 556-7
 - Terms of reference for Senate study, suggestions, 557-8
 - Building codes, 558
 - Control factor and provincial jurisdictions, 557
 - Equipment renewal, 557
 - Log transportation, 557
 - Metric system, 558
 - Tariffs, 557

Robichaud, Hon. Louis-J., P.C. - Concluded

- Regulations and other statutory instruments, 387
- Solar Energy Application bill C-309, 793, 795
 - Point of order re m to adjourn debate, 795
 - Referral of subject matter to com, 793

Ross Dam, Skagit flooding, 787-9

- Announcement of Washington State Governor, 788
- Consultations with British Columbia, 788
- Legality of proposed new construction, 788
- Policy of Canadian government re, 788

Rowe, Hon. Frederick William

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 53-57
- Air Canada, 53
- Banking legislation, 132
 - Conflict of interest and resignation of committee members upon consideration of, 132
- Basha, Hon. Michael G., the late, 169
- Bilingualism, 56-57
 - Education in a Free Society*, 56
 - National unity, 57
 - School training, 56, 57
- Constitution of Canada
 - Equalization payments to provinces, 103
 - Newfoundland, formula for assistance to, 103
- Council of Europe, Bulgarian political situation, 817
- Criminal assaults, 55
- Employment and Immigration Reorganization bill C-27, 1201
- Government administration, unrest re, 53-54
- Immigration, 54-55
 - Illustrated London News* article, 55
- Income Tax Conventions bill C-12, question, 882
- Information Canada, 48
- Lapointe, Hon. Renaude, Speaker of the Senate, tribute to, 53
- Law-enforcement agencies, priorities of, 55-57
 - Child abuse, 55
 - Criminals at large, 56
 - Loan-sharking, extortion and intimidation, 55-56
- Manpower and Immigration Dept., Manpower Division, 48
- Old Age Security bill C-35, 499-501, 539, 540
 - Compensation for reduction in Canada Pension Plan benefits, 501
 - Family allowance exemption, 501
 - Guaranteed income supplement, 501
 - International reciprocal agreements, 500-01
 - Partial pensions, 500
 - Residence requirement, 500
 - Spouses' benefits, cessation on receiver's death, 501
- Olympic Games, CBC coverage of, 53
- Personality disorders and criminal behaviour, 208
 - Illiteracy, Nova Scotia statistics, 208
- Petten, Marjorie, the late, mother of Senator W. J. Petten, 544
- Prowse, Hon. J. Harper, the late, 53
- Regulations and other statutory instruments, 388-9

Rowe, Hon. Frederick William - Concluded

- Saccharin, ban on, 633-4
 - Inaccuracies in cancer research testing, 634
 - Precipitous action of government in enforcement of ban, 634
- Secretary of State for External Affairs, appt. of Newfoundlander to position, 54
- Senate, travel arrangements for senators, 876
- Transportation, land, air and sea, regional differences in Canada, 396-402
 - MacPherson Commission on Transportation, 396-8
 - Lack of federal implementation of recommendations, 398
- Newfoundland
 - Canadian National Railway, 398-400
 - Hotel accommodation, 399-400
 - Substitution of bus service, 399
 - User-pay principle, 400
 - Come Home Year, 400
 - Extracts from MacPherson report re problems and requirements, 397-8
 - Ferry service and effect of strike, 401
 - Terms of Union, 398-9; takeover of Newfoundland Railway by federal government, 398
 - Trans-Canada highway, 398
 - Roads to Resources program, 398
- Women, status of, 55
 - Advisory Council report on, 55

Royal assent, 68, 243, 272, 462, 600-01, 635-6, 703, 940, 1031, 1161, 1287-8, 1311

- Beetz, Hon. Jean, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, 68, 243, 703, 940, 1161
- Dickson, Hon. R. G. B., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, 462, 635-6, 1287-8, 1311
- Judson, Hon. Wilfred, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, 1031
- Laskin, Rt. Hon. Bora, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, 272
- Spence, Hon. Wishart F., O.B.E., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, 600-01

Royal Canadian Mounted Police, agreements between federal government and provincial governments, question, 686, 757-8Royal Commissions

- Concentration of Corporate Power, resignation of Chairman Robert Bryce, 678, 687, 1319
- Mackenzie Valley pipeline, Berger Commission, 678, 686-7
- Violence in the Communications Industry, Ontario Commission, 930, 944

Royal Emblems, removal from Governor General's private railway cars, 643, 655Rules and Orders, Standing Senate Committee

- Report recommending certain changes in Rules of the Senate, 862-3, 909-10

Rules of the Senate

- Comment on result of vote, 1247
- Committee report recommending that bill be not proceeded with, 1188
- Discussion of ruling by Commons Speaker, 576-7
- Pecuniary interest of senator in matter ref to com, 909, 910
- Permission to append documents to Debates, by unanimous consent, 308
- Point of order
 - Committee power to act in referral of any subject matter for study, 630-1
 - Question of point of order in discussion re acceptance of principle of bill on second reading, 1183, 1187-8
 - Reference of subject matter of Bill C-309 to com, 763, 764
- Printing or publishing of anything relating to the proceedings of the Senate, 279, 280, 287-9

Rules of the Senate - Concluded

- Private bill received without petition, 763, 764
- Question and inquiry, definition of, 909-10
- Question of privilege, participation of Speaker in discussion, 909
- Question placed on Order Paper, 910
- Question, supplementary, 909-10
- Quoting from Commons Hansard, 1184
- Quoting incorrectly from senator's remarks, 1188
- Reading of committee report in English only, 1153
- Suspension of rule re 2r of Bill S-2, 183-6

Rulings by the Speaker

See Lapointe, Hon. Renaude, Speaker of the Senate

Saccharin

- Motion that com inquire into proposed ban of, 623, 630-5, 641-2, 646, 656-9, 664, 678-9, 682-4, 690-2; motion agreed to, 692
- American Cancer Society report, 657
- Availability for dietary reasons, 684
- Credibility of scientific community, question of, 634
- Cyclamates
 - Globe and Mail* article on, 657
 - Non-restricted use of, 664, 678-9
- Dental caries, 691
- Diabetics affected by ban, 642, 691
- Extreme administration of saccharin in testing, 634
- Genetic effects, 633, 683
- Globe and Mail* reports, 633, 657
- Inaccuracies in cancer research testing, 634, 641-2
- Non-Nutritive Sweeteners and Human Bladder Cancer: Preliminary Findings*, by director of Research at Johns Hopkins University, 657
- Opinions of prominent Canadian scientists, 658-9
- Precautionary measures to be taken by government, 631, 691-2
- Precipitous action of government in enforcement of ban, 632-3, 634, 656-7, 658, 691
- Public reaction to food additives, 683
- Research 'climate' and government reaction to, 683
- Risk, benefit and acceptability, 683-4
- Scientific comments as result of study on ban, 632-3
 - Globe and Mail*, 633
 - International convention of toxicologists, Toronto, 632
 - Time* magazine, 633
 - United Press*, Washington, 632
 - US Office of Technology Assessment, 658

Speakers: Senators

- Buckwold, Sidney L., 623, 630, 631-3, 690-2
- Flynn, Jacques, 692
- Forsey, Eugene A., 631
- Grosart, Allister, 630, 631, 634-5
- McDonald, A. Hamilton, 630, 631, 641-2
- Perrault, Raymond J., 664, 678-9
- Phillips, Orville H., 630, 631, 635
- Rowe, Frederick William, 634
- Smith, George I., 633, 664, 678-9
- Stanbury, Richard J., 682-4
- Sullivan, Joseph A., 642, 646, 656-9

St. John the Baptist Day, 982

St. Patrick's Day, 531-2

Saskatchewan

Grain crop, 33

Potash industry, 152, 159-60

Science policy

Atomic energy, 177

Crisis in scientific research, 176

Meetings of committee during Senate adjournment, 175

Recommendations of committee implemented by government, 175

Budgetary procedure, 175

Reorganization of granting councils, 175

Recommendations of committee not implemented by government, 175-6

Expenditures related to research and development, 175

Transfer of researchers to private and public sectors, 175

Scientific manpower immobility, 175, 176

SCITEC, 177

Secondary manufacturing industries, 176

Science Policy, Special Senate Committee

Authorization to publish and distribute Vol. 4 of report, 1264

Budget, 673

Expenses, 148

Meetings during Senate sittings, 374-6

Members, 178

Notice re motion for appointment of special committee of the Senate, 149

Motion agreed to, 175-7

Organization meeting, 178

Reports

Quorum of committee, 193

Terms of reference, 149, 175

Scientific Activities

See Government Organization (Scientific Activities) bill C-26, 820, 848-51, 879-80, 893-900, 959, 971-2, 976-7, 999, 1031

Securities

See Financial Administration and Satisfied Securities bill C-8, 820, 836-7, 840, 941

Selection Committee

Appointment, 6

Members, 6

Reports

Clerestory of the Senate Chamber Committee, members, 532

Science Policy Committee, members, 178

Standing Committees, members, 51-52, report as amended adopted, 84; question re membership, 85

Senate

Absence of Conservative senators, question, 19

Air conditioning system, 999

Ambassadorial appointments, 80

Appointment of opposition members, 638, 659-63, 990-5, 1074-6

Appointments, question re Hon. Robert Stanfield, 687-8

Senate - Concluded

- Broadcasting of Senate proceedings in corridors during Senate sitting, 810
- Business, 9, 19, 52-53, 62, 63, 68, 97, 139, 180-1, 203, 205, 244, 267-8, 307, 395, 429, 461, 475, 477, 533, 561-3, 629, 650, 673-4, 698-9, 730-1, 756-7, 807-08, 829, 833, 852-3, 875, 975-6, 1032-3, 1106-07, 1140-1, 1160, 1162, 1181, 1224, 1287, 1288-9, 1311, 1327
- Easter adjournment, 629-30
- Summer adjournment, 1288-9, 1311
- Canadian Press coverage of Senate proceedings and attendance of senators, 374-6
- Clerestory of the Senate Chamber, 465, 483, 532, 840, 852-61, 978-81, 1135-6, 1218-23
- Clerk's receipts and disbursements (1976-77) tabled and ref to com, 770
- Committee work, 23, 38, 44-45, 49, 78
 - Role in examination of federal expenditures and estimates, 44-45, 49, 1249-55
- Imbalance of government and opposition parties representation, 76
- Lack of press coverage, 963
- Maxims regarding Senate, 81
- Minutes of the Proceedings*, error in English and French text of Speech from the Throne, 9-10
- National Finance Committee achievements, 211
- National unity, role in study, 278-9, 708, 742, 743, 769, 779, 812, 825-6
- Opposition membership, 108
- Parking space for senators' cars, question, 944
- Power in passage of legislation, 78-79
- Privy Councillors and other members of prominence, 76, 77
- Provincial appointments, 81
- Question of privilege, 63, 229
- Role of, 13, 25, 44-45, 49, 77-79
 - Initiation of legislation, 25
 - Representation of regional interests, 25
 - Role as protector of minorities, 77-79
- Salaries of senators, 79
 - Widows' allowances, 79
- Simultaneous interpretation, 6, 9
- Supreme Court of Canada judges, appointment of, 80
- Taking of photographs of the Senate Chamber by the public, question, 876; notice of motion re, 911; motion withdrawn, 930; further notice of motion, 930; motion withdrawn, 967-9
- Television appearance of senators, 42, 57
- Term of office, 79
- Travel arrangements for senators, question, 875
- Use of Senate Chamber by Commons, request for, 1154
- Vacancies, 20, 76
- Vancouver Sun report on Senate by John Sawatsky, 376
- Veto power, 80
- Western Canada representation, 120

Senate, appointment of senators, 638, 659-63, 990-5, 1074-6

- Alberta Senate appointments, article by Paul Jackson, 661
- Canadian Press report re opposition representation, 661
- Discussions and correspondence with Prime Minister and Senate government leader, 659-62
- Excerpts from Prime Minister's speech and letter to opposition leader, 991
- Political imbalance in appointments, 659
- Present distribution of parties, 659
- Prime Minister's comments during 1974 Throne Speech debate, 660
- Prime Minister's statement at press conference, 662
- P.C. appointments since 1968, 662
- Requirement for opposition to submit name to Prime Minister, 660, 661, 991, 992
- Voluntary retirement, 661-2

Senate, appointment of senators - *ConcludedSpeakers: Senators

Ewasew, John, 993, 994
 Flynn, Jacques, 659-63
 Grosart, Allister, 1076
 Perrault, Raymond J., 638, 990-5, 1075-6
 Smith, George I., 992, 994-5, 1074-5, 1076

Senators, deceased

Basha, Hon. Michael G. (Nov. 26/76), 168-9
 Burchill, Hon. G. Percival (Aug. 22/77), 1312-13
 Prowse, Hon. J. Harper (Sep. 28/76), 7-9
 Venoit, Hon. Clarence Joseph (Mar. 7/77), 463-4

Senators, new

Adams, Hon. Willie (Apr. 26/77), 637
 Bosa, Hon. Peter (Apr. 26/77), 637
 Ewasew, Hon. John, (Dec. 20/76), 250
 Frith, Hon. Royce (Apr. 26/77), 637
 Marchand, Hon. Jean, P.C. (Dec. 9/76), 204
 Olson, Hon. Horace Andrew (Bud), P.C. (Apr. 26/77), 637
 Rizzuto, Hon. Pietro (Feb. 1/77), 273
 Steuart, Hon. David Gordon (Dec. 13/76), 223

Senators, resignations

Blois, Hon. Frederick M. (Oct. 12/76), 72-74

Senators, retirements

Basha, Hon. Michael G. (Nov. 18/76)
 Carter, Hon. Chesley W. (July 29/77), 1137-9, 1161
 Lefrançois, Hon. J. E. (Nov. 5/76), 141

Separatism

Committee on Western Independence, excerpt from report of meeting, 119
 Quebec, 93, 294-5, 403
 Churchill Falls hydro development, termination of contract in event of Quebec status as foreign power, 294
 Communication by land, air or water, 295
 Joint parliamentary committee to study matter, suggestion for, 296
 Questions in relation to NATO, 403
 Questions re assets, obligations, boundaries, currency, etc., 296
 Treaty of Paris (1763), 295
 See National unity

Singapore

Income Tax Conventions bill C-12, 829, 880-2, 900, 932-6

Small loans

Borrowers and depositors protection, rep of com on subject matter of Bill C-16, 1106, 1120-5, 1144-51, see also appendix to Debates of July 11/77

Smith, Hon. George Isaac

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 99-103
- Air transport, tabling of report re bilingualism, 1114
- Appropriation bill No. 1, 1977 C-44, 588-9
- Atlantic provinces
 - DREE, 100
 - Regional disparities, 100-01, 102
 - Transportation problems, 101
 - User-pay concept, 101
- Blois, Hon. Frederick M., resignation from the Senate, 73-74
- Bretton Woods Agreements bill C-18, 1102-04
 - Contributions to IMF and World Bank, 1103, 1104
 - Gold status, 1103
 - International Monetary Fund, 1103, 1104
 - US Monetary and Financial Conference (1944), 1102-03
 - Excerpt from speech of Secretary Morgenthau, 1102-03
 - World Bank, 1103, 1104
- Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation bill C-3, 902
- Canada Pension Plan bill C-49, 1127-30
 - Contributions, provincial borrowing of, 1128
 - Drop-out provision, 1129
 - Equality credits for spouses upon breakup of legal marriage, 1127, 1128-9
 - Funding of Plan, 1127-8
 - Ontario power of veto, 1129-30
 - Payments to Advisory Committee members, 1130
 - Retroactivity for late applications, 1130
- Canada Week, Parliament Hill program, 1005, 1318
- Canadian Armed Forces, retired personnel, alleviation of hardships, 971, 984
- Canadian Broadcasting Corporation
 - Accountability to Parliament, 675
 - CRTC inquiry into CBC activities, 489
- Canadian Human Rights bill C-25, 889-90, 891, 892
 - Ministerial powers, 889
 - Political beliefs discrimination, 889-90
 - Senate appointments, 890
- Clerestory of the Senate Chamber, 1136, 1218-22
 - Locus of parliament, 1219
 - Throne area, 1219
 - Walls, and pictures depicting World War I, 1219
 - Canadian achievements and sacrifices in field of battle, 1219-20
 - Poetic tributes to Canadians who died in service, 1222
 - Significance of war on Canada's history and industry, 1220-2
- Conflict of interest, resignation of committee members on discussion of banking legislation, 123-4
- Constitution of Canada, 102-03
 - Equalization payments, 102-03
 - Provincial conferences (1968), 102
 - Regional disparities, 102
- Crown corporations not subject to audit, 717
- Diplomatic and Consular Privileges and Immunities bill C-6, 904-05
 - Common law jurisdictions, 904
 - Consular convention, 904
 - Foreign diplomats accused of breaking Canadian law, 905
 - Provincial legislation, 904

Smith, Hon. George Isaac - Continued

- Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline, 1277-9, 1280
 - Administration agency, 1279
 - Canada-US exchange of reserves, 1277-8
 - Canada-US relations, 1279
 - Indian land claims, 1278
 - Quebec-Maritime pipeline, 1277, 1280
 - Studies and recommendations:
 - AlCan, 1279
 - Lysyk Report, 1278-9
 - Mackenzie Valley, 1278, 1279
 - National Energy Board, 1278
- Estimates (Appropriation bill C-44)
 - St. Lawrence Seaway Authority debt, 589
 - VIA Rail Canada Inc., 588-9
- European Parliament, Luxembourg conference, 158-61, 162
 - Agricultural policy of Community, 159, 160, 162
 - Budget, 159
 - Economic Community-Canada Trade Agreement, 159-60
 - Access to raw materials, 159
 - Foreign investment in Canada, 160
 - Newsprint, 159
 - Non-tariff barriers, 159
 - Potash, Saskatchewan, 159-60
 - Election of members to European Parliament, 159, 160
 - Energy discussions, 161
 - Functioning of and problems in Community, 161
 - Joint Cooperation Committee, 161
 - Nuclear safeguards, 161; CANDU, 161
 - Parliamentary links, Canada and Community, 160
 - Powers of Parliament, 159
- Federal-Provincial Conference of Finance Ministers, 308
- Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing bill C-37, 598, 599, 600, 602-08, 618, 619, 621-2, 625, 628-9
 - 'Decentralization', 607
 - Equalization formula, importance of, 607-08
 - Federal income tax reduction, 604
 - Legislation, objections to draftsmanship of, 602-05
 - Levelling adjustments, 598, 599, 600
 - Provincial agreement, question of, 605-06
 - Chronicle Herald* article 'Financial Talks Deadlocked', 606
 - Citizen* article re agreements, 606
 - Comments of NS Finance Minister, 606-07
 - Gazette* article 'Quebec gypped in new revenue deal: Levesque', 606
 - Quebec separatism, 628
 - Reference of bill to appropriate committee, 618, 621-2
 - Unemployment statistics, 628
- Fisheries, violations of coastal jurisdiction, 674, 758
- Government expenditures, 49
 - Anti-Inflation Board guidelines, 49
- Immigration bill C-24, 1250

Smith, Hon. George Isaac - Continued

- Income Tax bill C-22, 420-2
 - Charitable organizations, 421
 - Child care expenses, 421
 - Exploration expenses, 421
 - Nil assessment, 421-2
 - Registered retirement savings plans, 420-1
 - Retroactive effect, 421
 - Small businesses, 421
 - Social insurance numbers, use on ownership certificates, 422
- James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 1053-9
 - Compulsory expropriation and compensation, 1055-6, 1058
 - Excerpt from Canadian Human Rights bill, 1058-9
 - Extinguishment of claims, 1055, 1056-8
 - Injunction to halt Quebec hydro project, 1054
 - Quebec undertaking to negotiate, 1054-5, 1057
- Mackenzie Valley pipeline, Berger Commission report, 687
- Manpower and Immigration Dept., Manpower Division, 49-50
- Maritime Code bill C-41, 722-5, 1320-2, 1323, 1324
 - Builder's mortgage, 723
 - Coasting trade, 724
 - Enforcement officers and powers of, 724, 725
 - National character and status of ship, 725
 - Offences and penalties, 724
 - Phasing out of Canada Shipping Act, 723
 - Registration of ship or of mortgage, 724
 - Regulatory power, 725
- Medical and hospital insurance, post-secondary education, financial and administrative arrangements re, 101-02
- National unity, Joint Committee on the Constitution, consideration of report, 665
- North Atlantic Assembly, Williamsburg conference, 545-7
 - Canadian Armed Forces, statistics on personnel, 546
 - Defence committee of Senate and Commons, question of, 546
 - Military equipment, standardization and interoperability of, 545-6
 - Nuclear weapons, 546-7
- Nova Scotia
 - Energy costs, 100
 - Equalization grants, 9, 87, 125
 - Steel industry, 100
 - Canstel project, Cape Breton Island, 100
- Oil pollution, territorial waters or territorial sea, definition of, 699, 944-5
- Parliament Hill ceremony of Beating Retreat, 1266
- Pension bill C-11, 667, 668, 669
 - Correlating of former medical reports with present disability, 669
 - Pension Review Board, 668, 669
- Port of Halifax Operations bill C-14, 66-67
 - Delay in government action to terminate dispute, 67
 - Economic loss as result of strike, 66
- Rules of the Senate
 - Questions asked of government leader, 909
 - Referral of bill C-37 to appropriate committee, 618, 620, 621-2
- Saccharin, ban on
 - Cyclamates, non-restricted use of, 664, 678-9
 - Genetic effects, 633

Smith, Hon. George Isaac - *ConcludedSenate

- Appointments, lack of opposition members, 992, 994-5, 1074-5, 1076
- Business, 995
- Committee work, role in examination of federal expenditures and estimates, 49
- Question of privilege, 63
- Resumption of sittings on short notice, 63
- Taking of photographs of Senate Chamber, 968
- Travel arrangements for senators, 875
- Solar Energy Application bill C-309, 729, 847, 848
 - Referral of bill to Banking, Trade and Commerce Com, question of, 847
- Team Canada, taxpayers' contribution to, 641
- Transportation
 - Obstruction of access to airport by transport company, 961, 962
 - Pacific Western Airlines, judgment of Supreme Court of Canada, 436-7, 444
 - Possibility of air traffic controllers' strike, 1265-6
 - Transport Dept., car rental booths at airports, 150

Social standards

- Freedoms, erosion of, 116
- Social values and luxury spending, 117
- Unequal distribution of wealth, 117
- World hunger, 61, 115

Solar energy application

- Citizen article re, 727
- Diminishing of NRC responsibilities in research, 741
- Draftmanship of bill, 746, 759
- Energy crisis, 727
- Incorporation as private institute, 746, 761, 845
- Institute establishment, 740, 741, 746, 761
 - Members and Board of Directors, 741
- Legal aspects, 728
- NRC role and involvement of other government depts., 746, 791
- Non-renewable energy resources, 727, 746
- Parliamentary process for bill vs letters patent, 791, 793, 845
- Principle of bill, 760-1, 791, 792, 810
- Referral of subject matter to com, 760, 762, 763-4, 765, 791, 792, 793, 795, 796, 809, 810-11, 845-6, 847
- Research expenditures, Canada and US, 727, 728, 740, 747, 791; PEI, Manitoba, BC, 727
- Revenues for operations, 740, 793

Speakers: Senators

- Argue, Hazen, 763-4
- Asselin, Martial, 845-6
- Austin, Jack, 726-9, 760-1, 762, 764, 765, 792, 795, 847
- Carter, Chesley W., 792
- Croll, David A., 793
- Deschatelets, Jean-Paul, 765, 791-2
- Flynn, Jacques, 747, 759, 760, 762, 763, 764-5, 795, 796, 846
- Godfrey, John M., 760, 761, 764
- Grosart, Allister, 728, 729, 745-7, 761-2, 763, 809-10, 811
- Hicks, Henry D., 740-1
- Lamontagne, Maurice, 761
- Langlois, Leopold, 810-11
- Lapointe, Renaude, 790-1, 795, 796, 797, 847, 848

Solar energy application - *ConcludedSpeakers: Senators - *Concluded

McElman, Charles, 764, 810
 Molson, Hartland de M., 763, 764
 Perrault, Raymond J., 759-60, 762, 793, 794, 846
 Robichaud, Louis-J., 793, 795
 Smith, George I., 729, 847, 848

Solar Energy Application bill C-309. 1r, 638; 2r, 726-9, 740-1, 745-7, 759-60, m in amdt that bill be not read second time but that subject matter be ref to com, 760-5; Speaker's ruling on point of order, 790-1; m in amdt neg, 791-4; m to ref bill to com, m in amdt, 794-6, 809-11, 845-8; ref to Banking, Trade and Commerce Com, 848

Sparrow, Hon. Herbert O.

Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization bill C-34, 1191-4
 Endorsement of permit books, 1192-3, 1194
 Excerpts from committee report, 1193-4
 Necessity of bill, question of, 1191, 1192
 Reversal of vote pooling, possible effects of, 1194
 Witnesses invited to appear before committee, 1191-2
 Diefenbaker, Olive E., the late, 271
 Estimates year ending Mar. 31/75, Manpower Div., Dept. of Manpower and Immigration, 93-95, 477
 Listing of job vacancies with Manpower Div., 95
 Private placement agencies, 94-95
 Professional and executive placement services, 95
 Role as unemployment agency, 94
 Training expenditures, 95
 Estimates year ending Mar. 31/77, Supplementary (D), 477, 484-8, 491
 Agriculture, 485
 Dollar votes, 484-5, 491
 Energy, Mines and Resources, 485-6, 487
 External Affairs, 486
 Health and Welfare, 486
 Industry, Trade and Commerce, 487
 Post Office, 487
 Secretary of State, 486
 Supply and Services, 486, 487
 Transport, 486, 488
 Veterans Affairs, 488
 National Finance Committee
 Authorization to review com recommendations on Manpower Div., Dept. of Manpower and Immigration, 477
 Expenses re examination of legislation and other matters, 124
 Reports
 Government Expenditures Restraint bill C-19, rep without amdt, 267
 Work of committee, 93-94
 Rules of the Senate
 Printing or publishing of anything relating to the proceedings of the Senate, 280

Speaker of the Senate*Pro tem*

Bourget, Hon. Maurice, 650, 770, 775, 829
 Macdonald, Hon. John M., 63

See Lapointe, Hon. Renaude

Speech from the Throne

- Opening of Second Session of Thirtieth Parliament, 1-6
- Consideration, commencement of, 6; termination of debate, 9
- See* Address in reply to Speech from the Throne

Spence, Hon. Wishart F., O.B.E., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada
 Royal assent, 600-01

Sports

- Team Canada
 - Organization for future international hockey tournaments, question, 686
 - Performance at World Hockey Tournament in Vienna, 641
 - Taxpayers' contribution to, 641

Stanbury, Hon. Richard J.

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 57-61
- Economic growth of principal nations, Fortune article re, 60
- European Parliament, Luxembourg conference, 173-4
 - Economic disparities, 174
 - International political organizations, 173-4
 - Liberal International, 173, 174
 - Political instability, 174
 - Problem differences of nations, 174
- Farm Improvement, Small Businesses, Fisheries Improvement Loans bill C-48, 931-2
 - Interest rate, 931
 - Lending period and ceiling on loans, 932
 - Loan statistics, 931
- Lapointe, Hon. Renaude, Speaker of the Senate, 57
- National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of certain regions, 866-9
 - Addresses on national unity, suggestion for publication in booklet form, 866
 - Education
 - Bilingualism, 868, 869
 - Canada Studies Foundation, 868-9
 - Canadian history books of note, 867
 - History, 867
 - Manitoba ban on French language in schools, 868
 - Provincial departments of education, preparation of curricula, 867
 - Quebec ban on 'O! Canada' game, 868
 - Teacher training, 867
 - What Culture? What Heritage?*, excerpt from, 868
- Parliamentary democracy, 57-58
 - Decline of Parliamentary Democracy, conference on, 58
 - Discontent and insecurity of populace, 57-58
 - Government policy, excerpt from Prime Minister's speech, 59
 - Legislation to alleviate discrepancies in government administration, 58
 - Public Service of Canada, 58-59
 - The Way Ahead*, 59
 - Watergate, 58
- Saccharin, ban on, 682-4
 - Availability for dietary reasons, 684
 - Genetics effects, 683
 - Public reaction to food additives, 683
 - Research 'climate' and government reaction to, 683
 - Risk, benefit and acceptability, 683-4

Stanbury, Hon. Richard J. - Concluded

Senate

- Canadian Broadcasting Corporation television appearance of senators, 57
- Small businesses, 59-60
- Trade agreements, 60

Statute law (metric conversion)

Acts amended:

- Consumer packaging and labelling, 1173, 1204
- Gas inspection, 1173, 1204
- Oil and gas protection and conservation, 1173, 1203
- Regional development incentives, 1173, 1204
- Weights and measures, 1173, 1204
- Wheat Board, 1203
- Difficulty of adapting to new system, 1204
- Educational and public awareness campaign, 1173
- Grain handling industry, 1172-3
- International system (SI) 1172, 1205; US, 1172, 1205
- Metric Commission, 1172, 1203
- Metric Conversion in Canada, White Paper on (1970), 1171, 1172
- Metric equipment costs, 1204
- National program of guideline dates, 1172
- Price profiteering from new packaging, 1204, 1205

Speakers: Senators

- Belisle, Rheel, 1203-05
- Molgat, Gildas L., 1171-4, 1205-06

Statute Law (Metric Conversion) Amendment bill C-23. 1r, 1163; 2r, 1171-4, 1203-06; 3r, 1214; r.a., 1288

Steuart, Hon. David Gordon (Introduced in the Senate Dec. 13/76)

- Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization bill C-34, 1194-5, 1216
 - Administration of Wheat Board, 1194-5
 - Voluntary pooling, 1184, 1185
- Diefenbaker, Olive E., the late, 271
- Historic Sites and Monuments bill C-13, 851
 - Board composition and functions, 851
 - Special committees, 851
 - Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories representation, 851
 - Sites designated, persons and events commemorated, 851
- National unity, economic and cultural aspirations of various regions, 733-7
 - Bilingualism, 734-7
 - Canadian citizenship, 734
 - History education, 736, 737
 - Immigration policy, 735-6
 - Parti Quebecois, 734, 737
 - Provincial school systems and teaching of French language, 736
 - Quebec Act of 1774, BNA Act and Official Languages Act, 735
 - Saskatchewan, 734-5, 736
 - Immigrants, 736
 - School system and language training, 734-5, 736
- Violence in the communications industry, report of Royal Commission, 930, 944

Sullivan, Hon. Joseph A.

- American Otological Society, election as Fellow Emeritus, 638
- Illness of, 179
- Saccharin, ban on, 642, 646, 656-9
 - American Cancer Society report, 657
 - Globe and Mail* report re cyclamates, 657
 - Non-Nutritive Sweeteners and Human Bladder Cancer: Preliminary Findings*, by Director of Research at Johns Hopkins University, 657
- Opinions of prominent Canadian scientists, 658-9
- Precipitous action of government in enforcement of ban, 656-7, 658
- US Office of Technology Assessment statement, 658

Supply bills

- See Appropriation bills,
Estimates.

Switzerland

- Income Tax Conventions bill C-12, 829, 880-2, 900, 932-6, 945, 1031

Thailand

- Prince and Princess Prem Purachatra, visitors to Senate, 820

Thompson, Hon. Andrew

- Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Strasbourg meeting, 813-19
 - Background of Council, 814
 - Canadian delegation, 813
 - Czechoslovakian refugees, 814
 - Estonians imprisoned, 816-17
 - Excerpt from speeches of MP Herbert Breau, 815, 819
 - Excerpt from speech of Rt. Hon. David Owen, UK, 819
 - Excerpt from speech of US Congressman re USSR repressions, 817
 - Flow of information, 816
 - Helsinki Agreement, implementation of, 813-14
 - Humanitarian and other fields, cooperation in, 816
 - Hungary invasion, 814, 815
 - Imprisonment of Lithuanian girl, 817
 - Karlovy Vary Declaration, 815
 - Military manoeuvres, advance notification of, 816
 - Peaceful settlement of disputes, 815
 - Principles of human rights, 815
 - Ukrainians in Mordovia, 814, 816
 - USSR occupations and ill-treatment of dissidents, 813
 - Customs duty on parcels to relatives in USSR, 816
 - USSR statement re concession to Agreement terms, 815
 - Disregard of terms, 815-17
 - Treaty violations, 817
 - Warsaw Pact, 816
 - Western solidarity re principles of freedom, 818
- Crime, CBC broadcasts re, 912
- Diplomatic and Consular Privileges and Immunities bill C-6, 902-04, 905-06
 - Common law jurisdictions, 903
 - Commonwealth representatives, 904
 - Diplomatic and consular relations, articles re, 903-04
 - Foreign diplomats accused of breaking Canadian law, 905-06

Thompson, Hon. Andrew - ConcludedDiplomatic and Consular Privileges and Immunities bill C-6 - Concluded

- International law based upon custom, 903
- Provincial jurisdictions, 906
- Quebec legislation, 905
- Reciprocal implementation of provisions, 904
- Vienna convention on Diplomatic Relations, 903

Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing bill C-37, 594-600, 616-18

- Discretionary powers of minister, 617-18
- Education, 617
- Equalization formula, 595-6, 616-17
 - Provincial distributions per capita, 596
- Established programs financing, 597-8, 617
- Fiscal stabilization programs, 596
- Hospital insurance, medicare, health care programs, 595, 597, 598
- Legislation, draftsmanship of, 616
- Levelling adjustments, 598-9
- Natural resource revenues, 596-7
 - Ceiling on, 596
- Post-secondary education, 598
- Provincial agreement, 600, 617
- Provincial enterprises, influence on equalization entitlement, 596
- Provincial tax revenue guarantee payments, 597
 - Quebec, 597
- Reciprocal tax agreements with provinces, 598
- Regulations and recovery, 598
- Tax abatement, 598
- Tax collection agreements, 597, 599-600, 617
- Transfer payments in respect of income tax, 597

Helsinki Agreement

- Customs duty on gifts to relatives in USSR, 745, 808
- Implementation of, 704-05, 930, 960
- Printed information, distribution of, 715, 930, 960-1, 1015

Ireland

- Efforts to promote understanding and reconciliation in Northern Ireland, 162-7
- Leaders of peace movement, visitors to Senate, 180

James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 1048

Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, 813-19

Personality disorders and criminal behaviour, 547-9

- British Columbia correctional system, 548
- Crime costs, 547-8
- Historical facts of harsh punishments, 548
- Incorrigibles, lack of understanding of, 548-9
- Senate role in study, 548
- Spelling difficulties, 549

St. Patrick's Day, 531-2

Yaremko, Hon. John, felicitations on Honorary Doctorate in Political Science, 151

Tomato industry

See Agriculture, 1287, 1290-2

Trade

- Economic Community-Canada Trade Agreement, 152-3, 159-60
- European Parliament, Luxembourg conference, 151-5, 158-61
- Tomato industry, surtax order, 1287, 1290-2
- Trade agreements, 60

Transport and Communications, Standing Senate Committee

Meetings during Senate adjournments, 1245

Meetings during Senate sittings, 1140, 1164

Reports

Aeronautics and National Transportation bill C-46, rep without amdt, 975

Bell Canada bill S-2, rep without amdt, 227

Maritime Code bill C-41, rep with amdts, 1313-18, 1319-25

Transportation

Air Canada service during closing of Ottawa airport, 551

Air Traffic Control Services Continuation bill C-63, 1293-1311

Atlantic Provinces transportation program, 772

CNR line with Fairbanks, Alaska, question, 977, 1126

Car rental booths at airports, question, 150

Ferry service between North Sydney, NS. and Port-aux-Basques, Nfld., question, 699, 789

Licensing of buses and trucks, jurisdiction re, 446

Winner case, 446

Obstruction of access to airport by transport company, 961-2

Pacific coast, 111, 157-8

Federal-provincial policies re assistance for freight, passenger and water transportation, 157

Freight operations, Rivtow Straits, 157

Pacific Western Air Lines, judgment of Supreme Court of Canada, question, 436-7, 442-4, 457-8

Passenger service to Namu, Stewart and other ports, 157

Queen Charlotte Islands, 157

Possibility of air traffic controllers' strike, question, 1265-6

Regional airlines, Eastern Provincial airlines, 458, 473

User-pay concept, 101, 113-14, 396

Transportation, land, air, sea, regional differences in Canada, 201-03, 240-3, 246-9, 396-402, 430-2

Air fare from Charlotte Islands to British Columbia, 431

Atlantic provinces, dependence on transportation services, 201-03

Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, 201

Regional differences, federal assistance in relation to, 201-02

Shipments of potatoes and other perishables, 431

Statement of Hon. Otto Lang to PEI Tourist Assoc. and Restaurant Assoc., 201, 430

Subsidies, 202-03; PEI, 202; Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, 203

Air transportation and bus service, 203, 430-1; freight rates and freight assistance, 203

Tourism, increased ferry rates, 202

BC coastal communities, difficulties of, 242-3; Malibu Princess, 242

BC ferry service between Victoria and San Francisco, federal financing of, 242

BC subsidies, withdrawal of, 242

BNA Act provisions re provincial jurisdiction of transportation, 241

Canadian Pacific Airlines, 243

Commission appointed by agreement of federal and Nfld. governments, 430-1

Competition in rail transport, 241

Crowsnest Pass, 248

East Coast Marine and Ferry Service, 242

Freight rates, regional differences, 247

Grain shipments, Saskatchewan, 247-8

Statement issued by Saskatchewan government, 247-8

Ice-breaking ferry, PEI and New Brunswick, 431

Illegal strikes, 243

National policy, 241, 242

Rail service in western Canada, Hall inquiry, 247

Transportation, land, air, sea - Concluded

- Railway passenger and freight services, abandonment of, 243
- Shipping between Canadian ports by Canadian vessels, 241
- Snively Commission on transportation, 248-9
 - Costs and revenues re moving of grain, 248-9
 - Railway costing procedures, 249
- Transport Dept. annual report, implementation of recommendations, 241
- User-pay policy, 201, 430
- Vancouver Province, article by Norman Hacking re ferry subsidies, 242
- Vancouver Sun, article by Paul St. Pierre, re transport ministry, 241

Speakers: Senators

- Bell, Ann Elizabeth, 240-3
- Bonnell, M. Lorne, 201-03, 396, 430-2
- Buckwold, Sidney L., 246-9
- Rowe, Frederick William, 396-402

Transshipments of oil to Pacific coast ports, public hearings re environmental aspects, 308-09Tributes

- Basha, Hon. Michael G., the late, 168-9
- Burchill, Hon. G. Percival, the late, 1312-13
- Carter, Hon. Chesley W., resignation from the Senate, 1137-9, 1161
- Diefenbaker, Olive E., the late, wife of Rt. Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, 271
- Hopkins, E. Russell, the late, former Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel of the Senate, 169-71
- Lefrançois, Hon. J.E., resignation from the Senate, 141
- Prowse, Hon. J. Harper, the late, 7-9

Trudeau, The Rt. Hon. Pierre Elliott, P.C., Prime Minister of Canada

- Address by Prime Minister before United States Congress, 435, see appendix to Debates of Feb. 22/77
- Constitution of Canada, patriation of, exchange of correspondence between Prime Minister and Premier of Alberta, 63-64, 69-71
- Constitution of Canada, patriation of, letter from Prime Minister to provincial Premiers and copy of draft resolution respecting the Constitution, 280, 287-9, 297-303

Unemployment, 20, 41, 82

- Budget for job creation, question, 685
- Cape Breton, 1198, 1199
- Employment and Immigration Reorganization bill C-27, 1163, 1167-71, 1197-1203, 1213, 1246, 1288
- Failure of government to deal with problem, 919-22
- Unemployment Insurance Entitlements Adjustment bill C-52, 677, 688-90, 700-01, 703
- Unemployment insurance, statistics as of Mar. 31/77, question, 758-9
- See* Economic conditions and prospects,
 - Economy of Canada, unemployment and failure of government to deal with problem, 919-22.

Unemployment insurance entitlements adjustment

- Delay in passage of bill, 700-01
- Employment and Immigration Reorganization bill C-27, 1163, 1167-71, 1197-1203, 1213, 1246, 1288
- Extract from Bill C-27, 690, 700, 701
- Termination of claims for persons 65 yrs. and over, 688, 689, 689-90, 700-01
 - Appeals, 688, 689
 - Interest on payments claimed, 689, 690, 701
 - Notification of persons affected by Bill C-52, 689
 - Payments to estates of deceased, 689-90, 701

Unemployment insurance entitlements adjustment - *ConcludedSpeakers: Senators

Flynn, Jacques, 690, 700-01
 Langlois, Leopold, 688, 689-90
 Phillips, Orville H., 688-9, 690

Unemployment Insurance Entitlements Adjustment bill C-52. 1r, 677; 2r, 688-90; 3r, 700-01; r.a., 703

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics

Arrest of Soviet dissidents, motion to convey message of concern to government of Soviet Union, 428-9;
 agreed, 429

United Nations Water Conference, Argentina, 587-8

United States

Address by Prime Minister Trudeau before United States Congress, 435; see appendix to Debates of Feb. 22/77

Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, Victoria meeting, 1213, 1225-42

Diversion of water from Lake Michigan, question, 237, 309, 435-6

Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip, visit to, 42

van Roggen, Hon. George C.

Banking legislation, resignation of committee members on consideration of, 132, 133

Canadian Human Rights bill C-25, 890

Committee meeting during sitting of Senate, 1212

Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline, 1273-6, 1282

Canada-US exchange of reserves, 1275, 1282

Canada-US relations, 1273

Costs and benefits, 1274-5

Economic impact, 1273

Heritage Fund, 1274

Indian land claims, 1273

Studies and recommendations:

AlCan, 1273, 1274, 1275

Arctic Gas, 1275

El Paso, 1274

Lysyk Report, 1273

Mackenzie Valley route, 1274

National Energy Board, 1275-6

Environment, construction of coal-fired power plant in Saskatchewan, 1016

European Parliament, Luxembourg conference, 151-5

Agricultural policy of Community, 152

Conference on international economic cooperation, 152

Control of Commission and Council of Ministers, 151

Delegates to conference, 151

Economic Community-Canada Trade Agreement, 152-3

Non-tariff barriers, 152

Potash, Saskatchewan, 152

Election of members to European Parliament, 151, 154, 155

GATT, 152, 153

Helsinki Agreement, 152

Joint Cooperation Committee, 153

Meeting areas of European Parliament, 154-5

Parliamentary links, Canada and Community, 151, 155

Role of elected members, 152

van Roggen, Hon. George C. - Concluded

Foreign Affairs Committee

Canada-United States relations, com authorized to make study, 86

Expenses re, 124

Meeting during Senate sitting, 929

Reports

Diplomatic and Consular Privileges and Immunities bill C-6, 959

Immigration bill C-24, rep without amdt but with statement re powers of Governor in Council, 1244, 1248-56

Helsinki Agreement, 1004

Immigration bill C-24, 1244, 1249-50

Nominated relatives, 1244

Provisions on regulations, 1244

James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 1096

Lumber industry

Tariff on importation of softwood plywood, effect on Canadian industry, 479-80

Western European Union Assembly, 406

European Parliament, universal elections, 406

Venezuela

Canada-Venezuela relations, 390

Parliamentary delegation visitors to Senate, 390

Veniot, Hon. Clarence Joseph, the late

Tributes, 463-4

Veterans

Pensions, 637-8, 645-6, 665-9, 670, 677, 688, 703

Violence in the communications industry, Royal Commission, 930

Recommendations, question re, 930, 944

Visitors

Baltic Honorary Consuls, 463

Commissioner of the Holy Land, Father George Germain, 86

Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, Secretary General Sir Robin Vanderfelt, 730

Northern Ireland peace movement leaders, Lady Patricia Fisher, Mrs. Joan Robins and Mr. Pat Martin, 180

Senegalese Parliament and International Association of French-speaking Parliaments, member Mr. Christian Valentin, 189

Thailand, Their Excellencies Prince and Princess Prem Purachatra, 820

Upper Volta, Mr. and Mrs. Abdulaye Dicko, 700

USSR delegation, 21

Venezuela parliamentary delegation, 390

Votes

Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization bill C-34, 1217, 1218

Constitution of Canada, correspondence from Prime Minister to provincial Premiers, 288-9

Immigration bill C-24, 1255-6

James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 1097-8

Solar Energy Application bill C-309, 794, 796

Walker, Hon. David, P.C.

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 76-81
- Auditor General bill C-20, 1068
 - Crown corporations, auditors for, 1068
 - Independence of office, 1068
 - Printing Bureau costs, exposé by Public Accounts Com, 1068
- Banking legislation, referral to Banking, Trade and Commerce Com, 128, 129, 130
- Resignation of committee members upon discussion of, 128, 130
- Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation bill C-3, 902
 - Corporation members, 902
 - Coverage, increase suggested, 902
- Canada Week, Parliament Hill program, 1005
- Competition policy, 672
- Constitution of Canada, 76-78
- Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline, 1275, 1276
- Financial Administration and Satisfied Securities bill C-8, 836-7
 - Discharge granted to Indian, 836-7
- Human Rights Charter, 81
- James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 740, 1022, 1048
- Miscellaneous Statute Law Amendment bill C-53, 908-09
- Senate
 - Ambassadorial appointments, 80
 - Committee work, 78
 - Imbalance of government and opposition parties representation, 76
 - Maxims regarding Senate, 81
 - Power in passage of legislation, 78-79
 - Privy Councillors and other members of prominence, 76, 77
 - Provincial appointments, 79
 - Role of, 77-79
 - Salaries of senators, 79
 - Widows' allowances, 79
 - Supreme Court of Canada judges, appointment of, 80
 - Term of office, 79
 - Vacancies, 76
 - Veto power, 80

Western Africa Upper Volta visitors to Senate, 700Western European Union Assembly, Paris conference, 186-9, 391-4, 402-06

- Armaments control, 187
- Assembly functions, 393
- Brussels Treaty Organization, 186-7
- Civil and military technological and scientific cooperation, 187
- Cyprus, Greece and Turkey, 403-04
 - Continental shelf in Aegean Sea, 403-04; oil prospecting, 404
- Defence of Western Europe, 187-8, 392, 393, 402-04
 - Anti-submarine warfare, 404
 - British Army of the Rhine, 403
 - Canadian contribution, 403, 404
 - Conflicts between US and European nations, 402
 - Strategic arms limitation talks, 404
 - USSR power, 187-8, 402, 403, 404, 405
 - Warsaw Pact countries, 402
 - Weapons standardization, 402-03; research in, 402-03

Western European Union Assembly - Concluded

- Energy supplies, 404-05
 - Oil moving to Western Europe through Mediterranean, 405
 - USSR ships in area of Indian Ocean, 405
- European Common Market, 393
- European Parliament, 392-3, 406
- Europe's dependence on US for protection and economic prosperity, 188
- Helsinki Agreement, 405-06
- Lebanon, 404
- Mediterranean problems, 403
- National unity in Canada, 393
- Quebec separatism, questions in relation to NATO, 403
- Speakers: Senators
 - Austin, Jack, 391-4, 402-06
 - Belisle, Rheal, 186-9

Western grain stabilization

- Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization bill C-34, 887, 939-40, 947-8, 1152-3, 1175-80

Wheat agreement, international

- Negotiations re, question, 1005, 1164, 1182

Whips

- Chief Government Whip in the Senate, Hon. William J. Petten
- Chief Opposition Whip in the Senate, Hon. John M. Macdonald

Williams, Hon. Guy

- Doctor of Laws, Simon Fraser University, 790
- Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline, 1282-3, 1284
 - Environmental problems, 1283
 - Lysyk Report, 1283
 - Yukon Territory concerns re aboriginal rights and customs, 1282-3 1284
 - Council of Yukon Indians, participation as advisers and observers, 1282
 - Employment for Indians, 1283
 - Talingets, 1282
- James Bay and Northern Quebec Native Claims Settlement bill C-9, 740, 1022, 1048, 1062
 - Deficiencies in bill, 1022
 - Extinguishment of claims, 1022
 - Lack of financial revenue to Indians, 1022, 1048
 - Language rights, 740
 - Provision for reservations, assurance from dept., 1022
 - Quebec undertaking to negotiate, 1022
 - Rights under Indian Act, 740
- Oil pollution, protection of Juan de Fuca Strait, 699, 944-5
- Queen Elizabeth II, Silver Jubilee, competition for design of commemorative medal, 228, 289

Women, status of

- Advisory Council report on, 55
- International Women's year, Toronto Star article re, 88
- Mexico conference, 87-88
- National Organization for Women in the United States, call for strike, 89
- Wife-husband role in sharing of workload, 88

World War I and World War II

- Senate Chamber pictures depicting World War I, 1158, 1219-23
 - Canadian achievements and sacrifices in field of battle, 1219-20
 - Poetic tributes to Canadians who died in service, 1222
 - Significance of war on Canada's history and industry, 1220-3
- World War II, 1221-2
 - Canadian officers, 1221-2

Yaremko, Hon. John

- Felicitations on Honorary Doctorate in Political Science, 151

Yukon Territory

- Alaska Highway, 10
- Constitutional development, 1262-3
- Council of Yukon Indians, 11
- Dawson City, 10
- Energy, construction of natural gas pipeline from western Arctic to southern Canada and continental United States, 12-13, 1266-87
 - Council of Yukon Indians, participation as advisers and observers, 1282
 - Employment for Indians, 1283
 - Environmental, social and economic disruption, 1273
 - Heritage Fund, 1272, 1274, 1277
 - Yukon administration of, 1272
 - Hydro potential, development needs, 1272
 - Indian land claims, 1272, 1273, 1276, 1278, 1280
 - Talingets, 1282
- Indian organizations, 11
- Territorial government role in settlement of Indian land claims and other problems, 11
- Tourism, 11
- See appendix to Debates*, 1257-63

Yuzyk, Hon. Paul

- Arrest of Soviet dissidents, motion to convey message of concern to government of Soviet Union, 428-9; agreed, 429
- Canadian Human Rights bill C-25, 876-8, 892
 - Bill of Rights, 877
 - Canadian identity and Constitution, excerpts from report of Committee on the Constitution of Canada, 876-7, 878
 - Human Rights Commission, member and powers, 877
 - Indian women married to white men, loss of reservation rights, 878
 - International covenants on human rights, 877
 - Language rights, 878
 - Privacy Commissioner, 877
 - Privacy of individuals and right of access to records, 877
 - Racism and discrimination, 878
- Canadian Wheat Board, Western Grain Stabilization bill C-34, 947-8, 1188-9, 1217
 - Marketing plans, submission of proposal for, 948
 - Necessity of bill, question of, 1189
 - Obligation to producers to complete crop year with pool, 947-8
 - Rapeseed industry, 947, 1189
 - Voluntary pools, 947, 1189
 - Administration of, 1189
- Carter, Hon. Chesley W., retirement, 1138-9
- Doctor of Laws, University of Saskatchewan, 789-90

Yuzyk, Hon. Paul - Concluded

- Helsinki Agreement, 405
 - Reunification of families, statistics, 961
 - Review Conference, Canadian delegation, 1004-05, 1092
- North Atlantic Assembly, Williamsburg conference, 281-5; see appendix to Debates of Feb. 1/77
 - Citizenship education, 282
 - Delegates from Senate and Commons, 281
 - Education, Cultural Affairs and Information Committee, 281-2
 - Euro-communism, 282
 - Free flow of information, 282
 - Helsinki Agreement, 282, 283-4
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights, 284-5
 - USSR, 283-4
 - Passports for Soviet citizens, 284
 - Persecution in religious areas, 284
 - Pledges re human rights and disregard of, 284-5
- Western European Union Assembly, Paris conference, 405

